The measure of punishment is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court of Session. Queen v. Iswanchunder Ghose, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 53.

To warrant a sentence awarding an additional punishment, under Section 75 of the Penal Code, as on a second conviction, the evidence that there was a previous conviction against the accused under the Penal Code must be clear and precise. Queen v. Naimuddi Sheikh, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 7.

Upon a prosecution under Section 318 of the Penal Code, a person cannot be convicted of concealing the birth of a child in the case of a mere fetus four months old. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul., LXIII.

Section 317 of the Penal Code was intended to prevent the abandonment or desertion by a parent of his or her children of tender years in such a manner that the children, not being able to take care of themselves, may run the risk of dying or being injured. Felayi Hariani, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 12.

The prisoner was convicted of perjury by wilfully making a false statement in a verified petition presented under Section 19 of the Income Tax Act (Act IX of 1869) to a Tahsildar. Held that the Tahsildar was not an officer competent to receive such a petition, and that no offence was committed. Mooneapha Oodian, prisoner, Subraya Oodian, prisoner, 5 Mad. Rep., 326.

The accused being entrusted to put a proper amount of stamps on a letter and return such as might not be required, did not return them, but misappropriated stamps to the value of two annas, and was convicted and punished under Section 49 of the Indian Post Office Act XIV of 1866, instead of under the Penal Code for Criminal Breach of Trust. CRIMINAL LAW—ABDUCTION. 339

Court could not, under Section 426 of Code of Criminal Procedure, reverse or alter the sentence, pointing out at the same time that this was one of those cases in which it was a mistake to look at the smallness of the amount misappropriated rather than to the gravity of the offence. Robin Chunder Dutt, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 50.

Placing tannans in a public thoroughfare is an offence under Section 34 of Act V of 1861. But Sub-Magistrate not competent of his own motion to institute the prosecution. Queen v. Ameer and Jelal-ood-deen, 2 N. W. R., 5.

Conviction and sentence under Section 186 of the Indian Penal Code reversed, as the conduct of the accused, refusing to accompany a measuring clerk, employed under Act I of 1865 (Bombay) to his (the accused) house, and permit it to be measured, did not constitute the offence of obstructing a public servant in discharging his public functions. Queen v. Ameer and Jelal-ood-deen, 2 N. W. R., 5.

Where there is no provision in the Penal Code, and any other law (such as the Breach of Trust Law, Act XIII of 1850) provides punishment for an offence, any person committing such offence may be tried under that law. Watson and Co. v. By Kantnath Dass, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 80.

Being in possession of salt earth, from which salt may be manufactured, with the object of making salt is an offence under the salt laws. 4 Mad. Rep., 53.

Where a labourer contracted with the manager of a silk factory for a money-consideration to work at the factory for four months in a year for a period of three years, and broke the terms of his contract, he was held liable to a prosecution under Act XIII of 1859, and the order of the Magistrate holding that such a contract was an unreasonable one, and therefore one which ought not to be enforced by him, was set aside. Koonjehary Lal v. Rajah Dookey, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 29.

If salt exceeding 5 seers is found within the limits of a town or village, under Act XII of 1865, unpunished by a rowannah, as required under Sections 13 and 15, the salt must be held as contraband under Section 16. The power of a Magistrate under Section 29 to confiscate salt not protected by a rowannah in a prohibited district is not affected because there was no attempt or intention to sell the salt within the prohibited district. Queen v. Akkowilah, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 21.

Where several persons knowingly harbour, keep, or conceal a parcel of smuggled opium, one penalty of double the value of such opium and of double the amount of duty leviable upon it only is recoverable, under Reg. XXI of 1827, Section 4. Reg. v. Showdar Ghener et al., 7 Bom. Rep., Cr. R., 39.

According to Section 38, Act XXI of 1856, no conviction can be had under Section 30 against a person whose license has not been recalled. Queen v. Dobra Duka, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 56.

No person is liable to any penalty under Section I, Act VII of 1865, except a person who without a license uses a place or building as a slaughter-house, either by letting it out for such purpose, or by employing servants and others for the purpose of killing cattle therein, but a person who may be the mere servant of a butcher killing cattle in a particular slaughter-house, or a butcher resorting accidentally or occasionally to a slaughter-house for the purpose of killing, and killing an ox or sheep there, does not use the place as a slaughter-house within the meaning of Section 1I, Act VII of 1865 (Bombay). The Municipal Commissioners for the Suburbs of Calcutta v. Zamir Shaikh, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 4.

In construing Section 83 of the Penal Code, the capacity of doing that which is wrong is not so much to be measured by years as by the strength of the offender's understanding and judgment. The circumstances of a case may disclose such a degree of malice as to justify the application of the maxim malitia supplet etatem. Queen v. Musamat Ahmood, 1 W. R., Cr., 43.

Held by Glover, J., that incendiary having, on several occasions, occurred in a village, produced by a ball of rag with a piece of burning charcoal within it, and the prisoner one evening being discovered to have a ball of that description concealed in his dhoti, which contained burning charcoal, he is, under Section 511 of the Penal Code, guilty of an attempt to commit mischief by fire. The possession of the instrument to commit mischief by fire, and the going about of the person with it, are sufficient to raise a presumption that he intended to commit the act, and had already begun to move towards the execution. These facts are sufficient to constitute an attempt. Held by Mitter, J., that the possession of a fire-ball and moving about with it cannot support a conviction under Sections 436 and 511 of the Penal Code. These facts are not sufficiently indicative of an intention to destroy a building used for human dwelling. To constitute an offence under Section 511 of the Penal Code, it is not only necessary that the prisoner should have done an overt act towards commission of the offence, but that the act itself should have been done in the attempt to commit it. Queen v. Doyal Bawri, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 55.

2.—ABDUCTION.—(See KIDNAPPING.)

The conviction of a procourress charged from abduction to enticing, the woman alleged to have been abducted having been of mature age and a free agent. Queen v. Srimotee Poddu, 1 W. R., Cr., 45.

A conviction of abduction quashed, no force or deceit having been practised on the person abducted. Queen v. Komul Doss, 2 W. R., Cr., 7.

The abduction of a minor girl under 16 years of age out of the custody of her lawful guardian is punishable under Section 361 of the Penal Code. It is not necessary to such a conviction that the abduction be proved to have been forcible. Queen v. Modhoo Paul, 3 W. R., Cr., 9.

The abduction of a girl under 16 years of age, with intent to marry, without the consent of her lawful guardian, is punishable under Sections 363 and 366 of the Penal Code. The consent of the girl is immaterial, nor is it necessary to show that the enticing or taking away was by force or fraud. Queen v. Kourand Singh and Mohan Singh, 3 W. R., Cr., 15.

The prisoners having been sentenced for abortion of a woman under Sections 109 and 498 of the Penal Code, and for wrongful confinement of her under Section 343,—Held that both sentences could not stand, and that as the essence of the case was abduction, the prisoners, as abetors therein, should be punished for it alone. Queen v. Ishwar Chandra Jogee, W. R., 1864, Cr., 21.

3.—ABETMENT.

There can be no conviction for abetment of murder without proof of murder. Queen v. Askur, W. R., 1864, Cr., 12.

Where, of several persons constituting an unlawful assembly, some only are armed with sticks, and A., one of them, is not so armed, but picks up a stick and uses it, B. (the master of A.), who gives a general order to beat, is guilty of abetting the assault made by A. Queen v. Rosoo Koollah, 12 W. R., C. R., 51.

The prisoner asked a witness to suppress certain facts in giving his evidence against the prisoner before the Deputy Magistrate on a charge of defamation,—Held that this was abetment of giving false evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, and was triable before a Court of Session only. Queen v. Trre Audy Chetty, 2 Mad. Rep., A. C., 438.

Knowing of a design to commit a dacoity, and voluntarily concealing the existence of that design, with the knowledge that such concealment would facilitate the commission of the dacoity, does not amount to an abetment of the dacoity. Queen v. Thugroo, 4 W. R., Cr., 2.

The mere issue of a hookumnamah (to collect statistical information) by a police officer is no legal ground for a conviction of abetment of cheating or of extortion. Queen v. Meajan and Ohboy Churn Doss, 4 W. R., Cr., 5.

Persons punished as principals cannot also be punished for abetment of the same offence. Queen v. Jeelo Chowdry, 4 W. R., Cr., 23; Queen v. Ramnarain Josh, 4 W. R., Cr., 37.

How a Judge should charge the Jury in a case of abetment, while present, of the forgery of a valuable document. Queen v. Ichan Buksh, 5 W. R., Cr., 68.

The prisoners having abetted an assault, and murder having been committed,—Held, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that they were guilty of abetment of grievous hurt, but not of abetment of murder. Queen v. Goluck Chung, 5 W. R., Cr., 75.

The conviction of certain prisoners changed from abetting wrongful concealment under Section 368 of the Penal Code to abetment under Section 116. Queen v. Srimotee Poddu, 1 W. R., Cr., 10.

The conviction of a police inspector for having abetted the bringing of a false charge of murder quashed, because it was not distinctly shown that he preferred the charge mald-ide. Queen v. Muthoorapeshad Panday, 2 W. R., Cr., 10.

A person can only be convicted of abetment of theft under the 1st Explanation of Section 107 of the Indian Penal Code, if he has procured or attempted to procure the commission of the theft. Mere subsequent knowledge of the offence is insufficient. Queen v. Shumerudddeen, 2 W. R., Cr., 40.

Charge of abetment of the issue of a false certificate of summons. The intention of the prisoner being the gist of the offence, and it being probable that he (a stranger in the village) had been himself deceived, he was acquitted. Queen v. Hissamudden, 3 W. R., Cr., 37.

Where a prisoner, who appealed to the Commissioner from an order of an assessor under Act XXI of 1867, filed stamp paper for a copy of the assessor's decision after the period of appeal had elapsed, but on appeal averred that he filed the stamp paper before the time for appealing had elapsed, and fraudulently obtained a certificate to that effect which was antated, it was held that he was guilty of having abetted the commission of forgery of a document within Section 463, and Clause 1, Section 464, of the Penal Code. Queen v. Sookhy Ghose, 10 W. R., Cr., 23.

The Excise Act of 1856 contains no provision for the punishment of abetment. Queen v. Kulumodeen, 7 W. R., Cr., 53.

Act XIV of 1866 does not provide for the punishment of abetment of an offence under that Act. Under Section 109 of the Penal Code the abetment must be of an offence punishable under that Act, and not of an offence punishable under a distinct and special law. Queen v. Ramlugun Lall Moonshee and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 54.

Where A. ordered B. and C. to seize and forcibly take D. in the contemplation of an assault upon D., and D. was so beaten and tortured as to have died in consequence,—Held that A. was guilty at least of abetting the commission of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. Queen v. Doorgessor Surmih, 7 W. R., Cr., 97.

Held that the prisoners having abetted the suicide were rightly convicted by the Judge for that offence. The sentence was mitigated under the circumstances. Government v. Copaul Singh, 1 Agra Rep., Cr., 21.

A prisoner who consented to form one of a party who committed theft, and resiled from his agreement, but was present at the commission of theft, does not come within Clause 1, Section 109, Penal Code, and ought not to have been convicted of the theft, but of the abetment thereof, under Clause 2, Section 107, Penal Code, read together. Queen v. Boodhun Mooshur, 8 W. R., Cr., 78.

In order to bring a prisoner within Section 114 of the Penal Code it is necessary first to make out the circumstances which constitute abetment, so that "if absent" he would have been liable to be punished as an abettor, and then to show that he was also present when the offence was committed. Queen v. Musamut Niruni and Montroodeen, 7 W. R., Cr., 49.

Under Section 94, Act XX of 1866, an abettor may be punished more severely than his principal can be. Queen v. Gopalprosad Sein and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 16.

Prisoner was present at a murder without being aware that such an act was to be committed. Through fear he not only did not interfere to prevent the commission of the crime, but joined the murderers in concealing the body. Held that he was guilty, not of abetment of murder, but of causing the disappearance of evidence of a crime under Section 201 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Goburdhun Bera, 6 W. R., Cr., 80.

There was a murder with W. R., 186.

Where, on murder with A., one of the attendants, uses its general or individual amount to facilitate the commission of the crime, A., one of the attendants, uses its general or individual amount to facilitate the commission of the crime.

The prisoner, voluntarily and without necessity, with the knowledge and consent of the attendants, uses its general or individual amount to facilitate the commission of the crime.

The motive for the murder was the agitation of the legal group or of the Churn Di Person.

charged of mischief by fire, the prisoner admitted that he was an abettor and that he was present at the time the offence was committed. Queen v. Peer Mahomed, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 52.

An omission to give information that a crime has been committed does not, under Section 107 of the Penal Code, amount to abetment, unless such omission involves a breach of a legal obligation. A private individual is not bound by any law to give information of any offence which he has seen committed. Queen v. Khadim Sheikh, 4 B. L. R., A. Cr., 7.

According to Section 114 of the Penal Code, if the nature of the act constitutes abetment, the abettor if present is to be deemed to have committed the offence, though in point of fact another actually committed it. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXVII.

Where a prisoner accused of adultery sets up in defence a Nātrā contracted with the woman with whom he is alleged to have committed adultery, in accordance with the custom of his caste, the question the Court has to determine is whether or not the accused honestly believed at the time of contracting the Nātrā that the woman was the wife of another man. Reg. v. Minohar Rāji, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 17.

The power given to Magistrates to permit complainants to withdraw their complaints is confined to cases falling for disposal under Chapter XV of the Criminal Procedure Code. Consequently a charge of adultery cannot be withdrawn by a complainant with the Magistrates' consent. Queen v. Gumthēer, 2 N. W. R., 234.

The death of the husband does not necessarily put an end to a prosecution for adultery under Sec. 497 of the Penal Code. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. LV.

Where the husband of a woman with whom the accused was alleged to have committed adultery professed himself unwilling to proceed with the prosecution, and the Assistant Judge thereupon ordered the accused to be discharged, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, declined to interfere. Reg. v. Rāmlōjérī, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 27.

4.—ASSAULT.

An unpremeditated assault, ending in an affray in which death is caused, committed in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel, comes within Exception 4 of Section 300 of the Penal Code. It is immaterial which party offered the provocation or committed the first assault. Queen v. Zālim Ray, 1 W. R., Cr., 33.

In a case of assault, a sentence inflicting a fine of Rs. 50 and awarding imprisonment for one month in default of payment of the fine is illegal, with reference to Sections 65 and 352 of the Penal Code. Jehun Buksh, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 42.

5.—ATTEMPT TO MURDER.

In order to constitute the offence of attempt to murder, under Section 307 of the Indian Penal Code, the act committed by the prisoner must be an act capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of events.

After under Section 511 taken in connection with Sections 299 and 300.

A peon of the Collector's Court, who received no fixed pay from the Government, but was remunerated by fees whenever employed to serve any process, and was placed on the register of supernumerary peons, had been ordered by the Magistrate to do duty on a particular day at the office of the special sub-Registrar, where he was detected receiving an eight-anna piece from a person, and was prosecuted for receiving an illegal gratification as a public servant. Held that the peon was a public servant under the definition in the 9th Clause of Section 21 of the Penal Code, and the trial of the charge against him must be proceeded with. Queen v. Ram Krishna Das, 7 B. L. R., 446; and 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 27.

On a conviction of taking illegal gratification, a simple order to refund the money taken is quite inadequate to the gravity of the offence. Although no appeal lay in such a case, yet the High Court upon a reference, having power to interfere, quashed the conviction. Mutty Lali Chatterdhy, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 74.

7.—CHEATING.

The prisoner having passed himself off as a police officer, and cheated several villagers out of money, was held guilty of cheating and falsely personating a public servant. Queen v. Sodamundi Das, 2 W. R., Cr., 29.

To induce a person to pay his father's debts, by fraudulent inducement, is guilty of cheating. Queen v. Ramnarain Chowkedar, 3 W. R., Cr., 32.

The mere taking money one day, and dishonestly running away without paying the next day, is not necessarily cheating. There must be an intention to deceive and defraud at the time of taking the money, and the subsequent conduct of the prisoner would only be evidence to show the previous dishonest intention. Queen v. Heeramun Hulvoy, 5 W. R., Cr., 5. See also 1 Ind. Jur., 97.

Case of conviction of cheating by inducing a man to part with his money and contract marriage with a girl under the false impression that she was a Brahminie. Appeal rejected. Queen v. Puddomonie Boistober, 5 W. R., Cr., 98.

A person hiring certain property for use at a wedding, paying a portion of the hire, and giving a written promise to pay the balance of the hire, and to restore the property after the wedding, he being well aware that there was to be no wedding, and intending when he got the property to apply for its attachment in a civil suit in respect of an alleged claim, is guilty of cheating. Queen v. Kadir Bus, 3 N. W. R., 16.

The prisoners received a Government promissory note, promising to return certain jewels pledged to them, but not intending to do so, and they subsequently claimed to retain the note for another debt alleged to be due to them by the sender, —at the time that they cashed the note. Queen v. Shrodurshun Dass, 3 N. W. R., 17.

The defendant was convicted of cheating. He applied to the Tahsildar for a specified quantity of land on cowle tenure free of tax for five years, and falsely represented that the land was waste land. Held, a good conviction. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XII.

Where the accused secretly entered an exhibition building without having purchased a ticket, and was there apprehended, it was held that such act did not amount to the offence of cheating, under Section 415 of the Penal Code. Such entry, when unaccompanied by any of the intents specified in Section 441 of the Penal Code, does not amount to criminal trespass or any other criminal offence. Reg. v. Mehervanji Bejanji, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr., Ca., 6.

8.—CONTEMPT.

A person is guilty of contempt under Section 185, Penal Code, who bids for the lease of a ferry sold by public auction by a Magistrate without intending to perform the obligation under which he lays himself by such bidding. Queen v. Reasoodeen, 3 W. R., Cr., 33.

In consequence of the default of appearance by the person bailed, the surety was compelled to pay the penalty mentioned in the recognizance. The Deputy Magistrate applied for and received the permission of the District Magistrate to try the accused under Section 174 of the Penal Code. Held that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case, it not having been referred to him "either on complaint preferred directly to the Magistrate or on the report of a police officer." Held also that, notwithstanding Section 219 of Act XXV of 1861, the accused might have been proceeded against under Section 174 of the Penal Code. The Queen v. Tajumdar Lahory, 1 B. L. R., A. Cr., 1; 10 W. R., Cr., 4.

A warrant addressed to a police officer to apprehend an offender and bring him before the Magistrate is not a "summons, notice, or order" within the meaning of Section 172 of the Penal Code, and the offence of absconding by an offender against whom a warrant has been so issued is not punishable under that section. Queen v. Womesh Chunder Ghose, 5 W. R., Cr., 71.

Before a conviction can be had under Section 188, Penal Code, it must be proved that the accused knew that an order had been promulgated by a public servant directing such accused person to abstain from a certain act. The Queen v. Ramtoonoo Singh, 12 W. R., Cr., 49.

A Magistrate issued an order warning owners of cattle to take proper care of them; and that in case of disobedience or neglect they would be punished according to law; and did punish them for disobedience, under Section 188 of the Penal Code.

Held that the Magistrate was not competent, under Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to pass such an order. The order contemplated under this section is in the nature of an injunction, and such an order passed by a Magistrate would not be legal. That the conviction under Section 188 of the Penal Code was illegal. In the matter of Amiraddi, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 45; 12 W. R., Cr., 36.

An order in writing under Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is necessary to sustain a charge under Section 188 of the Penal Code.

Queen v. Bhuggobutty Dassee v. Mobin Chunder Bose and Mahtab, 8 W. R., Cr., 32.

An officer before whom, whilst acting in a particular capacity, an offence under Section 228 of the Indian Penal Code is committed, cannot, in another capacity, take up and try the offence. The Queen v. Chunder Sekur Roy, 12 W. R., Cr., 18.

A barrister, offended by the use of a strong expression on the part of a Judge while sitting in Court, sends an officer to the Judge’s private residence upon a pacific errand to ask for an explanation. Held, by nine Judges out of eleven, that the party sending the message and the party conveying it are guilty of contempt of Court. In the matter of C. Piffard and E. G. Francis, 1 Hyde’s Rep., 79.

A High Court, as a Court of Record, has the power of summarily punishing for contempt. The High Court, as a Court of Record, has the power of summarily punishing for contempt.

So also any person who offers or gives such present is guilty of a contempt of Court. In re Abdool and Maita, 9 W. R., Cr., 32.

Where, in punishing for contempt of Court, the summary procedure sanctioned by Section 163 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is followed, the Court must sit as the Court before which the offence was committed, and not in any other capacity, and is bound to take cognizance of the contempt on the day on which it was committed, In such a case imprisonment cannot be added to fine as a punishment. In a case in which it was dealt with in a summary manner, the offence must, under Section 163, be tried by an officer other than the person before whom the contempt was committed. The Queen v. Chunder Sekur Roy, 12 W. R., Cr., 18.

A High Court, as a Court of Record, has the power of summarily punishing for contempt. The High Court, as a Court of Record, has the power of summarily punishing for contempt.

An order striking off a case on account of the little prospect of bringing the guilty parties to trial, cannot dispose of the question of contempt of Court arising out of the fact of the accused having absconded to evade justice. Queen v. Madhoosurun, 7 W. R., Cr., 49.

Under Section 163 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, if a Court before which the offence of contempt, under Section 179 of Penal Code, is committed, considers that a sentence of imprisonment is called for, it should record a statement of the facts constituting the contempt, and the statement of the accused, and forward the case to a Magistrate. Queen v. Ruttun Sahoo, 11 W. R., Cr., 49.

During the pendency of a suit for rent the plaintiff procured an attachment of the growing crops; and afterwards and without authority, and before the suit was determined, carried off some of the crops. Held that, although this was an act properly punished by the Court below as a contempt with a fine, it was no ground for dismissing the suit. Chuttoonath Singh v. Soobon Singh, Marsh., 21.

A barrister, offended by the use of a strong expression on the part of a Judge while sitting in Court, sends an officer to the Judge’s private residence upon a pacific errand to ask for an explanation. Held, by nine Judges out of eleven, that the party sending the message and the party conveying it are guilty of contempt of Court. In the matter of C. Piffard and E. G. Francis, 1 Hyde’s Rep., 79.

When a person is in custody for contempt of Court, any application for release should be made to the same Judge. It is advisable, but not necessary, to limit the period of commitment to a fixed time. In the matter of Sittaram Atmarn, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 23.

Land belonging to N. B. had been seized by the Sheriff under a writ of fieri facias, which expressly directed him to take that particular land; while in possession his officers were turned out by A., who came and took them away. Held that the turning out of the Sheriff’s officers was a contempt of the High Court. Sreemuthy Bhuggobutty Dassee v. Nobin Chunder Bose and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 99.

The High Court, as a Court of Record, has the power of summarily punishing for contempt. The High Court, as a Court of Record, has the power of summarily punishing for contempt.

Any officer of the High Court who asks for or accepts a present from any person, in whose favour judgment is pronounced by the Court, is guilty of a gross breach of duty and a contempt of Court.
regarded as in contempt, and the Court will not entertain any application on his behalf. Queen v. Bisser, 4 N. W. R., 75.

The Magistrate convicted the defendant of contempt of Court under Section 163 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 10, or in default two days' imprisonment. Held, that the Magistrate had not exceeded his powers. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XVI.

The defendant was convicted of contempt of Court under Section 163 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for having refused to sign a deposition given by him as a witness in the course of a revenue inquiry. The High Court set aside the conviction. 3 Mad. Rep., Rul. XIV.

Before convicting a person under Section 174 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to prove that he had notice to appear at a certain time and place, and that he did not do so. Shib Pershad Chuckerbally, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 38.

Where a writ of attachment for contempt was issued by the Court against a party to a suit in that Court,—Held, he could not claim privilege from arrest while proceeding to Court for the purpose of attending the hearing of his suit. John v. Carter, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 90.

A Criminal Court inflicting a fine for contempt of Court should specifically record its reasons and the facts constituting the contempt, with any statement the offender may make, as well as the finding and sentence. Where this course was not adopted, the High Court set aside the order inflicting a fine. Panchenadac Tamberein, 4 Mad. Rep., 229.

An appeal lies against an order of the Session Court imposing a fine upon a witness under Section 228 of the Penal Code for intentional insult to the Session Judge sitting in a stage of a judicial proceeding. Where the High Court were satisfied that the witness did not intend to insult the Judge, the order was set aside. Queen v. Chappu Menon, 4 Mad. Rep., 146.

On the 17th of December, 1869, a rule nisi for the attachment, for contempt of Court, of the defendants U., G. & T., was granted. The rule, owing to one of the defendants keeping out of the way, was not drawn up and served until the month of April following, when it was served upon the defendants in the territories of the Gāikvād of Baroda, the consent of the Gāikvād's Minister to serve the document must be of the nature mentioned in Section 467 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Dājigovind, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 102.

10.—Counterfeiting.

The passing off a one-anna stamp as a one-rupee stamp, is not counterfeiting a one-rupee stamp. Queen v. S. V., 2 S. W. R., Cr., 65.

Section 239 of the Indian Penal Code is directed against a person other than the coiner, who procures, or obtains, or receives counterfeit coin, and not to the offence committed by the coiner. Queen v. Sheobhu alias Sheopersad, 3 N. W. R., 150.

In order to a conviction under Section 475 of the Penal Code, the document which the accused has in his possession must have some counterfeit device or mark upon it, and it must be proved that the accused has the document in his possession with the intent of using such device or mark for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to the document. The document must be of the nature mentioned in Section 467 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Kughoonundun Puttronwoses, 15 S. W. R., Cr., 19.

11.—Criminal Breach of Trust.

A refusal to give up land alleged to have been mortgaged, the mortgage being denied, cannot be treated as a dishonest misappropriation of the documents of title amounting to a criminal breach of trust under Section 405 of the Penal Code. Reg. v. Jeffer Naik and another, 2 Bom. Rep., 133.

A servant who receives money for a specific purpose, and does not use it for that purpose, and on being called on to account for the money, falsely says that he used it for that purpose, is guilty of criminal breach of trust under Section 408 of the Penal Code. Watson and Co. v. Golab Khan, 10 W. R., Cr., 281.

The accused was convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of the value of goods which had been entrusted to him to sell. It was urged before the High Court that the conviction could not be sustained, as the accused was a partner with the prosecutor. Held, by Jackson, J., that the finding of the Magistrate and Sessions Judge on the evidence was to the effect that the prisoner was not a partner but a servant; that such finding could not be interfered with by the High Court as a Court of Revision, unless there was a mistake in law; that the finding was correct in law; that the defence of the prisoner could not be taken to mean to say that he was a partner, but merely that he claimed a small share in the profits, and that such claim did not make him a partner, an agent's remuneration being a share in the profits not constituting the agent a partner. Held, by Kemp and Mitter, JJ. (releasing the prisoner), that, though the allowance of a portion of the profits or goods does not destroy the relation of master and servant, the accused in this case distinctly pleaded he was a partner, and not only that, he was entitled to a share in the profits; that the lower Courts did not specifically decide that the accused was a servant; and that the prosecutor's remedy was a civil suit for an account. In the case of Lal Chand Roy, 9 W. R., Cr., 37.

The making away with property of which a person has been put in lawful possession by superior authority is not theft, but criminal breach of trust. Bharut Chunder Christian, appellant, 1 W. R., Cr., 2.

The prisoners were charged with having stolen a sum of money shut up in a box, and placed in the Police treasury buildings, over which they were placed in guard. Held that the charge should have been made under Section 381 of the Penal Code (Theft by Servant in Possession of Property) and not under Section 409 (Criminal Breach of Trust by Public Servant). Queen v. Jugurmath Singh and others, 2 W. R., Cr., 55.

A constable who dishonestly misappropriates to his own use the pay of his tahannah police entrusted to him, is guilty of criminal breach of trust. Queen v. Subdar Meeth, 3 W. R., Cr., 44.

The mere fact of there being a large deficit of salt, without distinct proof of criminal misappropriation, is not sufficient to convict the Salt Darogah in charge of the solahs of criminal breach of trust under Section 409 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Brimbhadur Putnath, 5 W. R., Cr., 21.

A Nazir is the head of an important department, and must be responsible for the truth of what he reports or admits. He cannot be permitted to avoid responsibility by urging that his mohurril deceived him. Queen v. Tofuzzal Ayl, 7 W. R., Cr., 109.

Where a Court Inspector improperly delegated to a constable the custody, &c., of Government moneys (taking from him private security to save himself from loss in case of defalcation), and the constable dishonestly converted the money to his own use, although he afterwards restored it, the case was held to fall under Section 408, and not Section 409, of the Penal Code, and the sentence reduced from 10 years' transportation and a fine of Rs. 500 to one year's rigorous imprisonment without fine. Queen v. Banez Madhub Ghose, 8 W. R., Cr., 1.

A person acquitted of criminal breach of trust may, on the same evidence, be convicted of dishonest misappropriation of the property. Queen v. F. F. Rekhaline, 4 W. R., Cr., 21.

A person who pleads what is pledged to him may be guilty of criminal breach of trust. There are two elements—(1) the disposal, in violation of any direction of law or contract, expressed or implied, prescribing the mode in which the trust ought to be discharged; (2) such disposing dishonestly. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXVIII.

To constitute the offence of criminal breach of trust there must be dishonest misappropriation by a person in whom confidence is placed as to the custody or management of the property in respect of which the breach of trust is charged. Isser Chunder Ghose v. Prinrimohan Paulit, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 39.

12.—Criminal Misappropriation.

Held that Section 404 of the Indian Penal Code (relating to the misappropriating or conversion of "property" left by a deceased person) does not apply to immovable property.

A Sessions Judge ought not to call for a report from the Magistrate of the district in any case in which it is not competent to such Sessions Judge to call for the record and proceedings, e.g., in the case of a person tried by a Subordinate Magistrate who has appealed to the District Magistrate.

In trials by the Magistrate of the District, or Magistrate F. P. in which the Sessions Judge can call for the record and proceedings, he has power also to call for a report. Reg. v. Girdhar Dhar, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 33.

A person may commit the offence of dishonest misappropriation of property possessed by a deceased person at the time of his death (Section 404 of Penal Code) by dishonestly misappropriating the money entrusted to him, although he does not bring such money to his own use. Enayet Hossein, petitioner, 11 W. R., Cr., 1.

A servant who retains in his hands money which he was authorized to collect, and which he did collect, from the debtor of his master, because money due to him as wages, is guilty of criminal misappropriation. Queen v. Bisew Roj, 11 W. R., Cr., 51.

To bring a prisoner within Section 403 of the Penal Code, there must be actual conversion of the thing appropriated to the prisoner's own use. Where, therefore, the accused found a thing, and merely retained it in his possession, he was acquitted of criminal misappropriation under the section referred to. Queen v. Abdoo, 10 W. R., Cr., 23.

Held that it is not necessary for a conviction for dishonest misappropriation of property possessed by a deceased person at the time of his death, under Section 404 of the Penal Code, that the accused should misappropriate to his own use.

Held, by Markby, J., that, under Section 404, all the elements are required to constitute the offence which would be required to constitute the offence of criminal misappropriation in respect of a person who is alive. Queen v. Nobin Chunder Sikar, 12 W. R., Cr., 39.

This was considered to be a matter of trade between the prosecutrix and the prisoner, who took certain hides from the former but refused to pay for them, and was held not guilty of dishonest misappropriation under Section 403 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Beystum Moocha, 17 S. W. R., Cr., R., 11.

Section 409 of the Penal Code does not limit the mode in which a trust arises, whether by specific order or by reason of its being part of the proper duty of a public functionary. Where, therefore, it was proved that the Head Clerk of an office entrusted the management of stamps, with the knowledge and sanction of his superiors, to one of his assistants, the latter was held to be guilty of criminal misappropriation by a public servant, within the meaning of Section 409, when he made away with the stamps. Queen v. Ram Dheu-Dey, 13 S. W. R., Cr., R., 77.

Where money is paid to a person by mistake, and such person, either at the time of the receipt of the money, or at any time subsequently before its refund, discovers the mistake and determines to appropriate the money, he is guilty of criminal mis-13.—CRIMINAL TRESPASS AND HOUSE-BREAKING.

Theft is the sequel of, and cannot be separated from, housebreaking. A cumulative sentence of three years' imprisonment was held to be illegal in such a case. Mussahur Daudh, 6 W. R., Cr., 92.

If a man break into a dwelling-house at night, and steal property therefrom, the crime is in its nature one single and entire offence, and should be treated accordingly. Queen v. Tonaokoch, 2 W. R., Cr., 93.

Effecting an entrance into a house at night by scaling a wall constitutes housebreaking by night under Section 445 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Emad Ally, 2 W. R., Cr., 65.

When the door of a shop was found broken open, Held that the conviction should have been for house-breaking by night, and not simply lurking house-trespass by night. Queen v. Kenaram Bosee, 4 W. R., Cr., 19.

A person convicted of house-breaking followed immediately by theft, is punishable only under Section 457 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Chytun Bowra, 5 W. R., Cr., 45.

Section 71 of the Penal Code applies to the case of a person charged with "house-breaking" under Section 457, and "theft" committed under Section 380. Ram Ghomol Singh, petitioner, 6 W. R., Cr., 59.

The entry by one man on another's property, accompanied by the cutting down of trees in that property, is criminal trespass. Queen v. Jemnil Beber, 1 W. R., Cr., 46.

A Deputy Magistrate should adjudicate on charges of criminal trespass, unlawful assembly, and mischief, instead of referring the case, under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to the Magistrate. Queen v. Ootum Mal, 2 W. R., Cr., 2.

In order to convict of criminal trespass, under Section 441 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that the property was in the possession of the proprietor, and that the entry was made with intent to "commit an offence, or to intimidate, insult, or annoy any person in possession of the property." In the case of Kalinath Nag Chowdhry, 9 W. R., Cr., 1; and see Queen v. Chooramoney Sant, 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXV.

Semble, Criminal trespass is a part of the offence of mischief committed upon land, as well as of house-breaking by night. Queen v. Laloo Singh and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 54.

Held, by Jackson, J. (setting aside the order of the Magistrate, Markby, J., dissenting), that a Magistrate ought not to decline to go into a case of criminal trespass under Section 441 of the Penal Code because the complainant did not make out his title to the land: the offence may be committed in respect of property in a person's possession, even though such possession may not have originated in right. Queen v. Surwan Singh and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 11.

A person who forcibly enters upon property in the possession of another, and erects a building thereon, or does any other act with intent to annoy the person so in possession, is guilty of criminal trespass within the meaning of Section 441 of the Penal Code, without reference to the question in whom the title to the land may ultimately be found. Queen v. Ram Dyal Mundla, 7 W. R., Cr., 28.

Accused was Eajm of complainant's family. Complainant obtained a decree setting aside an alienation made by accused. In execution, complainant obtained possession from the alienee. The accused entertained on this land. Held, that he had not committed the offence of criminal trespass. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XIX.

Defendant was convicted of criminal trespass for having enclosed and commenced to cultivate a portion of a burial-ground. Held, that the conviction was right. The person (corporate) in possession of the burial-ground is the portion of the public entitled to use the burial-ground, and the act of ploughing up the burial-ground was evidence of intent to annoy such person, the defendant not being one of the portion of the public entitled to its use. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXVI.

Mere neglect on the part of an owner of cattle to keep them from straying into fields, is not causing cattle to enter a compound within the meaning of Section 457 of the Penal Code. That section requires that, before the owner is convicted of the offence, it must be proved that he actually caused the cattle to enter, knowing that by so doing he is likely to cause damage. Forbes, Mejjo v. Girish Chundra Bhuttachurjee, 6 B. L. R., Aq. 3; and 14 S. W. R., Cr., Rul. 31.

Where the trespass (if any) was not committe with the intent to commit an offence, or intimidat inault, or annoy the persons in possession, but to having enclosed in his own land a portion of a public foot-path, Held, that as the public generally were entitled to the use of the foot-path, there was no illegal entry by the defendant on property in the possession of another with intent to annoy the person in possession, and consequently that the defendant was wrongly convicted. 6 Mad. Rep. Rul. XXVI.

Where a person in possession, under the authority of such warrant, he is guilty of house-trespass, by putting such person in fear of wrongful restraint, under Section 452 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Nundmoh Sircar, 12 W. R., Cr., 33.

A person who, in the commission of lurking house-trespass by night, voluntarily attempts cause grievous hurt to the owner of the house with the intent to capture him, is punishable under Section 460, and not under Sections 457 and 324 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Lukhun Doss, 2 W. R., Cr., 52.

under Sections 454 and 380 is legal for lurking house-trespass and theft. Queen v. Mussamut Mina Nuggarhatun and Luckhea, 3 W. R., Cr., 119.

The accused were convicted of criminal trespass under Section 443 of the Indian Penal Code for driving their carts across an open green in violation of an order issued by the Municipal Commissioners. Held, that there was nothing to show that the Municipal Commissioners had authority to issue such an order, and that the breach of it was not criminally punishable. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXVIII.

14.—CULPABLE HOMICIDE.

The wife of the prisoner had been forcibly taken to the house of the deceased, a native physician, who alleged that her presence was necessary to the due performance of certain incantations. The prisoner, armed with a sword, and watching from the roof of the house, saw his wife being actually violated by the deceased. He jumped down from the roof, and struck deceased with his sword in several places, from the effects of which he died. Held that the prisoner's conviction for murder could not be sustained. The offence committed was culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The Queen v. Ramtahal Kihan, 2 B. L. R., A. Cr., 33.

In a case of riot in which a man was killed, the whole of the members of the unlawful assembly, as well the victorious as the worsted, were held equally guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Mana Singh and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 103.

Where a person snatches up a log of heavy wood, and strikes another with it on a vital part, with so much force and vindictiveness as to cause that person's death almost on the spot, the act must be held to have been done with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death; but if done without premeditation, in the heat of passion on a sudden quarrel, the offence committed is culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Rajo Ghose and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 106.

The prisoner was convicted and sentenced separately for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and for being a member of an unlawful assembly. The two offences, however, being held to be one (the latter being only part of the evidence of the former), the conviction and sentence for the second offence were quashed. Queen v. Rubbeeoolkab, 7 W. R., Cr., 13.

Causings death by branding a thief without the knowledge that the act was so imminently dangerous that it would in all probability cause death, or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, is punishable under Section 304 of the Penal Code as culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Khedun Misser, 7 W. R., Cr., 54.

The Judge having convicted the prisoners of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, after having found that the act by which death was caused was undoubtedly done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the conviction was quashed as illegal, because inconsistent with the finding, and a new trial ordered. Queen v. Soumber Gwala, 4 W. R., Cr., 32.

The prisoners found the deceased lying in the same bed with their sister and ill-treated him, from the effects of which ill-treatment he died. Held that the provocation was sufficiently grave to justify a conviction of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Kasemmoodeen and others, 4 W. R., Cr., 38.

When a man of full age (i.e., above 18 years) submits himself to emasculation, performed neither by a skilful hand, nor in the least dangerous way, and dies from the injury, the persons concerned in the act are guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Baboolun Hijrah, 5 W. R., Cr., 9.

Two prisoners confessed that having caught the deceased in the act of having sexual intercourse with the wife of one of them, they then and there killed him. Held that the grave provocation given reduced the crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Gour Chand Polie and Dwarkie Poli, 1 W. R., Cr., 17.

The prisoner having struck the deceased a hasty but fatal blow with a stick in his hand at the time for abusing his mother, was held guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Susem Sheikh, 1 W. R., Cr., 23.

When the corpus delicti is not established, there can be no conviction for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, nor for intentional omission to give notice of an offence which has not been proved to have been committed. Queen v. Ram Ruchea Singh, 4 W. R., Cr., 29.

Certain snake-charmers, professing themselves able to cure snake-bites, induced several persons to let themselves be bitten by a poisonous snake. From the effect of the bite three of these persons died. Held that the offence was murder under Clauses 2 and 3 of Section 300 of the Penal Code, unless it could be brought within the 5th Exception to that section. If the prisoners, really believing themselves to have the powers they professed to have, induced the deceased to consent to take the risk of death, the offence would be culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The Queen v. Purnai Pathama, 3 B. L. R., Cr., 25; S. C., 12 W. R., Cr., 7.

Culpable homicide not amounting to murder is when a man kills another on being deprived of self-control by reason of grave and sudden provocation. But when the act is done after the first excitement had passed away, and there was time to cool, it is murder. Queen v. Yasin Sheikh, 4 B. L. R., A. Cr., 6; 12 S. W. R., Cr. R., 68.

When a body of men attack and plunder a house, the mere fact of the proprietor's family having been able to make their escape a few minutes before the robbers forced an entrance does not take that offence out of the purview of Section 395 of the Penal Code. It is sufficient, for the application of the section, that the robbers cause or attempt to cause the fear of instant hurt or of instant wrongful restraint. Queen v. Kissoree Pater and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 35.

Section 511 of the Penal Code does not apply in a case of dacoity. Where a prisoner was found guilty of an attempt at dacoity under that section, and of causing grievous hurt in such attempt under Criminal Law—Defamation.

Section 397, and a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment was passed on him, the finding was amended by striking out "Sections 397 and 311," and substituting "Section 395." Queen v. Koonoo, 7 W. R., Cr., 48.

If the act by which death is caused does not in itself constitute the crime of murder, it does not constitute murder because it is coupled with dacoity. Queen v. Ram Coomar Chung, 1 Ind. Jur., O S., 108.

If a person convicted of and sentenced for dacoity, cannot also be convicted of and sentenced for receiving or retaining the stolen property thereby acquired (dissentiente Loch, J.). Dhrub Seal v. Koober Chung, W. R., 1864, Cr., 27.

If a person concerned in a dacoity unintentionally commits murder, he is liable to punishment under Section 396 of the Penal Code. But he cannot be separately convicted of murder under Section 302, and of committing dacoity under Section 395. Queen v. Rughoo, W. R., 1864, Cr., 30.

When men armed were discovered committing an act of house-breaking by night. One of the party was engaged in cutting a hole through the wall while the others stood on guard. When the alarm was given the neighbours ran up, and one of the robbers cut down one of the villagers. Held that the crime of which they were guilty was house-breaking by night, and not dacoity. Queen v. Rewat Rajwar, W. R., 1864, Cr., 39.

The evidence of an approver, for whose appearance at the trial there was not the slightest reason, and the mere fact that in the houses of each of the four prisoners only one article of the stolen property was found was held insufficient, under the circumstances of this case, where the best witnesses were not examined, to support a conviction of the prisoners on a charge of dacoity. Queen v. Ram Sagor and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 57.

A sentence of fine only is illegal in a case of dacoity. Queen v. Bhojiah and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 54.

In a case of dacoity a sentence of 14 years' transportation, under Section 395 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Ramchand Punjah, 6 W. R., Cr., 88.

Severe sentence of transportation for life in a case of aggravated dacoity confirmed, as required by the state of the district. Queen v. Khooda Sonthal and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 9.

When stolen property is found in the possession of dacoits, the offence of "knowingly having in possession" is to be considered as included in the original one of dacoity, unless there are circumstances clearly separating the one crime from the other, e.g., length of time or distance. Queen v. Aboot Hossein and others, 1 W. R., Cr., 48.

Case of a prisoner who, after having committed dacoity attended with murder, absconded to Bhootan. On the annexation of the Bhootan Dooars by the British Government he was arrested, and, after conviction, was sentenced to transportation for life. Queen v. Roopa, 2 W. R., Cr., 49.

The Sessions Judge should record under what section, and on what grounds, he orders a portion of the fines inflicted on prisoners convicted of dacoity to be made over to the complainant. Queen v. Bissonath Mundle and others, 2 W. R., Cr., 58.

When persons are found within six hours of the commission of a dacoity with portions of the plundered property in their possession, the presumption of law is that they are participators in the dacoity, and not merely receivers. Queen v. Cassey Mul, 3 W. R., Cr., 10.

The definition of dacoity in the Penal Code is so wide as to extend to what would have been treated as cases of plunder under the old law. Queen v. Khoyrat Ally Beg, 3 W. R., Cr., 60.

When a prisoner is apprehended eight days after the commission of a dacoity with part of the plunder in his possession, there is as good ground for charging him with the dacoity as with having received or retained with guilty knowledge, and he ought to be charged in the alternative form. Queen v. Motel Jolaha, 5 W. R., Cr., 66.

On an application to the High Court of revision to discharge an order made by a Sessions Judge, under Section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, for the committal of certain accused persons for trial on a charge of dacoity,—Held that an all that was done was done under a claim of right in good faith entertained by the accused, however erroneously, the charge could not be sustained. Karaka Nachiar, petitioner, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 254.

A sentence of fourteen years' imprisonment cannot be passed for dacoity under Section 395 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Huroo Rijuwar, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 27.

Merely being seen getting on board a boat with four persons who have on their own admissions been committed with part of the plunder, is not sufficient evidence against those so seen.

To make an admission of guilty knowledge of the means by which money supposed to have been acquired by dacoity was obtained, evidence under Section 150 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it must be shown that the admission was antecedent to the discovery of the money. Queen v. Kamal Fukur, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 51.

The gomastah of a guru or priest was convicted of defamation for having published an order of his master excommunicating the complainant from his caste. The letter publishing the excommunication was a statement that complainant disobeyed some one and treated him with disrespect. Held that the letter contained no expressions defamatory per se. If the person so treated was in a position enabling him to demand submission, and to make non-submission an offence, then that position would render the communication privileged, and if not, then the mere statement that the complainant did not obey one whom he was not bound to obey was not a defamatory imputation. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLVII.

A pleader or mookhtear relying upon the statements of his client, and in good faith introducing into a pleading a defamatory averment, will be protected from liability for defamation by the 9th exception to Section 500 of the Indian Penal Code, but the case is otherwise if the pleading be prepared by a person who has no such employment, and does not act in good faith. duty and as the result of an order from his superior which contained sweeping imputations against others,—imputations which did not appear from the report to be made recklessly or unjustifiably,—does not amount to defamation, and is covered by the 9th Exception to Section 499 of the Penal Code. *Y, 4 Mad. Rep., 153.

The act of filing in Court a petition containing imputations concerning a person calculated to harm his reputation, with the intention that it should be read by other persons, amounts to making and publishing the imputation within the meaning of Section 499 of the Penal Code. The criminal law of this country with regard to defamation depends on the construction of Section 499 of the Penal Code, and not on what may be the English law on the same subject. *Greene v. Delanney, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 42.

The act of publishing the imputation within the meaning of Sections 499 of the Penal Code makes no distinction between written and spoken defamation. *Queen v. Mohunt Parsonar Doss, 2 W. R., Cr., 36.

To escape from custody under civil process is not a criminal offence within the meaning of Section 8 of the Presidency Towns Police Amendment Act of 1850.

Query.— Whether such an escape without force is a misdemeanour at Common Law. *Reg. v. Ichen Connon, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr., Ca., 15.

To constitute the offence of escaping from transportation, under Section 226 of the Penal Code, it is essential that the convict should have been actually sent to a penal settlement and have returned before his term of transportation had expired or been remitted. Where a prisoner had escaped from custody whilst on his way to undergo sentence of transportation,—Held that he had committed an offence punishable under Section 224 and not under Section 226 of the Penal Code. *Queen v. Ramnarain Bose, 4 W. R., Cr., 22.

18.—EXTORTION.

To amount to the offence of extortion, property must be obtained by intentionally putting a person in fear of injury and thereby dishonestly inducing him to part with his property. *Queen v. Meajan and Obhoy Churn Doss, 4 W. R., Cr., 5.

A chowkeedar who obtains money from another person, either by fraudulent inducement or dishonesty or by putting that person in fear of injury, is punishable under Section 417 of the Penal Code for cheating, or under Sections 383 and 384 for extortion. *Queen v. Ramnarain Chowkeevar, 3 W. R., Cr., 32.

Held that it is not necessary in a case of extortion under the Indian Penal Code, that the threat should be used and the property received by one and the same individual, nor that the receiver should be charged with abetment, although that might be done. *Reg. v. Shoukar Bhogavat, 2 Bom. Rep., 417.

A conviction of extortion by a full-power Magistrate, and an order on a Sessions Judge rejecting an appeal therein, reversed by the High Court under Section 404 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as there was no such fear of injury as is contemplated by Section 383 of Indian Penal Code, nor was the delivery of money by the complainants thereby induced, nor did it appear from the evidence that the money was obtained dishonestly by the prisoner who might have demanded it, believing in good faith that he was entitled to it. *Reg. v. Abdul Kadar, 3 Bom. Rep., Cr., 45.

The terror of a criminal charge is a fear of injury within the meaning of those words in Section 383 of the Penal Code. Extortion may be equally committed whether the charge threatened is true or false. *Queen v. Mobarick and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 28.

19.—FALSE CHARGE.

Where a person is charged under Section 211 of the Penal Code with having, with intent to injure, falsely charged another with an offence knowing that there is no just and lawful ground for the same, the party accused should be allowed to show the information on which he acted, and the Judge ought not only to be satisfied that the facts alleged as the ground for making the charge are in themselves untrue and insufficient, but also that they were known to be such to the accused when the charge was made by him. *Reg. v. Neavalutavadl Umdeamal, 3 Bom. Rep., C. A., 16.

A person may in good faith institute a charge which is subsequently found to be false, or he may with intent to cause injury to an enemy institute criminal proceedings against him, believing there are good grounds for them, but in neither case has he committed an offence under Section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. To constitute this offence it must be shown that the person instituting criminal proceedings knew there was no just or lawful ground for such proceedings. The averment that the accused knew that there was no lawful ground for the charge instituted is a most material one. Queen v. Chidda, 3 N. W. R., 327.

It is not a sufficient ground for a charge, under Section 211 of the Penal Code, that a person to whom a wrong has been done, or who conceives that a wrong has been done to him, makes a charge or complaint upon evidence or a statement which is not or ought not to be sufficient to satisfy a reasonable mind, if in truth he did not know at the time he made the complaint that there was no just and lawful grounds for making it. Queen v. Pran Kishen Bid, 6 W. R., Cr., 15.

Under Section 211, Indian Penal Code, "instituting a criminal proceeding" may be treated as an offence in itself apart from "falsely charging" a person with having committed an offence. Where a person is charged with instituting a criminal proceeding, with intent to cause injury, knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for such proceeding, it is for the prosecution to make out a distinct case against him; not for the police in the first instance to show that he had just or lawful grounds. Queen v. Nobokisto Ghose, 8 W. R., Cr., 87.

To prefer a complaint to the police, in respect of an offence which they are competent to deal with, and thereby to set the police in motion, is to institute a criminal proceeding within the meaning of Section 211 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Bonomally Sohali, 5 W. R., Cr., 32.

Where a man burns his own house and charges another with the offence of doing so, he should be convicted and sentenced under Section 211 (and not under Section 195) of the Penal Code. Queen v. Bhuywan Ahir, 8 W. R., Cr., 65.

Sections 182 and 211 of the Penal Code distinguished. The latter held to apply to a case of false charge in which the accused in the present case had appeared before the police, and charged the new complainant with having caused the death of the accused's child by poisoning. Raffee Mahomed v. Abbas Khan, 8 W. R., Cr., 67.

To constitute the offence of preferring a false charge, under Section 211 of the Penal Code, the charge need not be made before a Magistrate. Nor need the charge have been fully heard and dismissed; it is enough if it is not pending at the time of trial. The Queen v. Subanna Gaundan and others, 1 Mad. Rep., 30.

The false charge referred to in Section 211 of the Penal Code must not necessarily be made before an officer exercising magisterial powers; it may be made before the proper police officer. To support an indictment under this section, it is not essential to show that the alleged false charge has been finally disposed of; it is sufficient to show that the charge was not pending at the time of the trial, which may also be assumed. The Queen v. Toofance Gaundan, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 136.

20.—False Evidence.

Upon a prosecution for giving false evidence, the law does not require proof of a corrupt intention. It is sufficient that there is proof of intention, and if the statement was false, and known by the accused to be false, it may be presumed that, making it, the accused intentionally gave false evidence. Queen v. Amere Abi Khan, 3 N. W. R., 133.

Where a witness was at the beginning of the day solemnly affirmed once for all to speak the truth in all the cases coming before the Court that day,— Held that he might be convicted, under Section 193 of the Penal Code, of giving false evidence in a suit which came on on that day, although he was not sworn to speak the truth in that suit after it was called on for hearing, and the names of the cases in the day's list were not mentioned when the affirmation was administered. Queen v. Venkataramal Pillai and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 43.

Held by a Full Bench (Campbell, J., dissenting) that to establish a charge of perjury the evidence of one witness not corroborated as to the falseness of the statement on which the perjury is assigned is insufficient. Queen v. Lalichand Kowura, Chowkidar, and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 83; S. C., 5 W. R., 23.

The Sessions Judge has no power to commit a man for having given false evidence before the Magistrate, but he can commit him for having given false evidence in his own Court. In the trial of a prisoner for murder, a witness stated on oath before the Sessions Court that another had committed the murder, whereas before the Magistrate he had stated, as was the fact, that the prisoner had committed the murder. Held that such witness was guilty under Section 193, and not under Section 194, of the Penal Code, as he did not know that he would cause a conviction for murder. The Queen v. Hardyal, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 35.

In cases of giving false evidence, a separate charge against each prisoner must be framed, and separate trial held of each charge. Anonymous, 3 Mad. Rep., Ap., 32.

A charge of giving false evidence should specify the false evidence which the prisoners are supposed to have given. Queen v. Pusul Meera, 5 W. R., Cr., 71.

An enquiry by an Assistant Magistrate, with a view to tracing the writer of an anonymous letter addressed to him charging certain persons with murder, and without reference to the truth or otherwise of the charge of murder, is not a stage of a judicial proceeding in which the giving of false evidence is punishable under Section 193 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Dylwunt Nath Banerjee, 5 W. R., Cr., 72.

In trying a prisoner charged with giving false evidence, a Sessions Judge rejected facts which were proved by the evidence of certain witnesses, because a medical officer gave it as his opinion that what the witnesses deposed to could not be true. Held that it was not the proper way to try a case to rely on mere theories of medical men or skilled witnesses of any sort against facts positively proved.

The true rule in a case of giving false evidence is that a man can be convicted of such off except on proof of facts which, if accepted as show not merely that it is incredible, but the impossible that the statements of the party made on oath can be true. Queen v. Ahm and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 25.

In a case of false evidence it is neces:
prove the deposition alleged to contain the false statement. Queen v. Bhakoo Tulee, 7 W. R., Cr., 13.

Where a prisoner produced as evidence an account book, one page of which had been fraudulently abstracted and another substituted for it,—

_Held_ that he was not guilty of the offence of attempting to use, as genuine, fabricated evidence, unless he knew of the forgery, and intended to use the forged evidence for the purpose of affecting the decision on the point at issue when the book was tendered._ Queen v. Modhaasooden Shaw, 7 W. R., Cr., 23.

A deliberate misstatement made in a Court of justice, whether it tends to endanger the life and property of others or to defeat and impede the progress of justice, is not an offence which should be lightly passed over. But for a simple misstatement from which no such inferences can be drawn a comparatively light sentence will suffice, particularly where the prisoner pleads guilty, and throws himself on the mercy of the Court._ Queen v. Gurgoon Aker, 7 W. R., Cr., 37.

A conviction for false evidence was upheld in a case where the false statement was to stop the prosecution of certain Brahmans on a charge of riot or dacoity and murder.

The commitment and trial of several persons on separate charges, each man's statement forming a distinct offence, approved. Queen v. Bhaloo Misser and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 51.

The offence of making a false charge, and the offence of intentionally giving false evidence, are not cognate offences or parts of the same offence, but may be punished separately._ Queen v. Abdool Asees, 7 W. R., Cr., 59.

The term of imprisonment for attempting to fabricate false evidence for the purpose of being used in a stage of judicial proceeding cannot extend beyond one-half of seven years. Queen v. Soonder Patnaick, 3 W. R., Cr., 59.

A charge of false evidence is held unproved until evidence is recorded to prove that the prisoner's statement on which the charge is founded was given on solemn affirmation under Act V of 1840, instead of on oath. Queen v. Munwar Khan, 4 W. R., Cr., 24.

Section 177 of the Penal Code does not apply to the case of any person who is examined by a police officer making a false statement, but to cases where, by law, landholders or village watchmen are bound to give information, and to other analogous cases of the same description. _The Queen v. Luchme Singh, 12 W. R., Cr., 23._

In a case of giving false evidence by making contradictory statements, one of which the accused knew to be false, it is not sufficient to support the falseness of either story by the other deposition, but there must be independent evidence of the falseness of either story. _The Queen v. Kula, 12 W. R., Cr., 66._

A conviction of false evidence for perjury, where the evidence was balanced as to numbers, and where the story for the prosecution was improbable, reversed._

The discretion vested in a Civil Court under Section 169, Code of Criminal Procedure, of sanctioning a criminal charge of perjury, is one that should be most carefully exercised.
which the accused is put upon his trial; and only so much of the prisoner's statement ought to be set out as is necessary in order to show the particular false statements relied on by the prosecution.

The mere fact that a person has made a statement which contradicts a previous statement, is not itself necessarily sufficient to bring him within Section 193, Penal Code. The circumstances under which, and the intention with which, the particular statement relied on by the prosecution is made, must in each case be considered before it is can be held that the offence has been committed. Queen v. Soondur Moohuree, 9 W. R., Cr., 25.

Where C. falsely represented himself to be U., and the writer of a document signed by U., and T. knowing that C. was not U., and had not written such document, added C. as U., and as the writer of that document,—Held that T. ought to have been convicted on a charge of abetting the giving of false evidence. Queen v. Chundi Churn Naith and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 5.

Discussion as to the extent of punishment to be passed on certain ryots who, in a case of criminal trespass, brought by an indigo planter, falsely swore that cotton, and not indigo, had been raised on the land in question during the past year.
Punishment reduced. Seton-Karr, J., would have reduced the punishment still more for reasons given. *Queen v. Dhurmuni Dutt Rai and others,
8 W. R., Cr., 7.*

The making of a false return of service of summons is an offence punishable, not under Section 181, but under Section 193 of the Penal Code, and is cognizable by the Court of Session alone. *Queen v.
Shama Churn Roy, 8 W. R., Cr., 27.*

In charges of false evidence under Section 193, Penal Code, the charge should specifically state what words or expressions the accused is charged with having uttered, and in what respect they are supposed to be false. *Dowlut Mooshee, appellant,
8 W. R., Cr., 95.*

A general sanction by a Judge to a prosecution for giving false evidence, under Section 193 of the Penal Code, and for false verification is not sufficient. The exact words upon which the prosecution is based, and the exact offences with which the Magistrate is to investigate, should be pointed out. The verification of an application filed in the Civil Court, in which it was stated that the applicant did not sign an alleged deed of compromise, does not subject him to punishment for giving false evidence.
Such an application falls, not under Section 120, Act VII of 1859, but under Section 209 of that Act, and need not therefore be verified. Queen v. Kgartick Chunder Haldar, 9 W. R., Cr., 58.

In a case of false evidence, reading extracts from the alleged conflicting statements of the prisoner is not sufficient to enable the Jury to form a fair opinion on the question. The whole of the depositions given on each occasion ought to be laid before the Jury. *Queen v. Kally Churn Gangooley, 6 W. R.,

It is essential, in order to sustain a charge, under Section 193 of the Penal Code, that it should be proved that there was a judicial proceeding, and that the false statement alleged to have been made in the course of that proceeding was made. A charge under this section should specify not only the judicial proceeding in the course of which the prisoner is accused of having made the false statement, but the particular stage of the proceeding in which the statement was made.

The knowledge by the Sessions Judge of the handwriting of the judicial officer before whom the statement was made, is no evidence of the statement having been made before that officer. *The
S. C., 10 W. R., Cr., 37.*

There is nothing in Section 169 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which gives a Judge, not sitting in appeal, any original jurisdiction to entertain a charge of giving false evidence before another Court. No other Court than that before which false evidence is given can direct a prosecution in respect thereof. In a prosecution for false evidence, there must be some specific charge of making some particular and specific false statement, and some direct evidence that such specific statement was false. *Ranee Asmed Koonwar v. W. Taylor,
W. R., 1864, 15.*

A Moonsiff sent a witness before a Magistrate, in order that the latter might hold a preliminary investigation on a charge of giving false evidence, under Section 193 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate, without completing the investigation, sent the case back to the Moonsiff, who finally committed the prisoner. Held that, while the Moonsiff could have committed the prisoner himself, under Section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code, without sending him before the Magistrate to conduct the preliminary investigation on a charge of giving false evidence, the Magistrate had acted irregularly in not himself completing the enquiry. Case remanded to the Magistrate accordingly. *The

In an attempt to establish the offence of perjury, the charge should distinctly state the false statement of which the offence consisted. But the omission is not material if the accused is not prejudiced thereby. Queen v. Bhutto Laljee and Sshipoo, 2 W. R., Cr., 51.

Corrupt intention in giving false evidence may be inferred from circumstances. Queen v. Bhuttem Ran, 2 W. R., Cr., 63.

Discussion as to the propriety of a conviction on a charge of false evidence, one of the statements charged having been made to the police under compulsion. Queen v. Nogena Oorut, 3 W. R., Cr., 6.

In a case where it was impossible to decide which of the prisoners' contradictory statements was false, and which was true, the prisoners were convicted on the alternative charge. *Queen v.
Narain Doss, 1 W. R., Cr., 15.*

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try, but must commit to the Sessions, a case of perjury commited before him in the course of a proceeding taken under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. *Queen v. Buloram and another, 7
W. R., Cr., 104.*

An alternative finding under Section 381 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should not be resorted to until both committing officer and the Sessions Judge are satisfied that no reliable evidence is procurabl in support of one or other of the charges; and such a finding cannot be based in a case of giving false evidence upon two statements which are not absolutely contradictory, the one of the other, nor when in one of them the accused gives only hearsay evidence. Every presumption in favour of the possible reconciliation of the statements must be made. Queen v. Bedoo Noshyo, 12
W. R., Cr., 11.

In a case of giving false evidence by making contradictory statements, a Court of Session cannot, without making further enquiry, commit a person to trial under Section 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when both contradictory statements are not made before it. By the words
"under its own cognizance" in that section, it is meant to provide for a case where it is brought under the notice of the Court of Session in the course of a judicial proceeding that the crime with which the party is to be charged has been committed by him. Queen v. Nomul, 12 W. R.,
Cr., 69.

The provision of the Penal Code (Section 196) against using false evidence is not ordinarily intended to apply to subornation of perjury. To establish an offence under Section 196, it must be shewn that the accused made some use of the false evidence after it was in existence. Queen v.
Sheikh Sufuruddde, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 122.

A Magistrate making a commitment for giving false evidence, in respect of any offence enquired into under Chapter XII or XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, must set out the precise words recorded as used by the accused, containing the statement which he undertakes to prove false, and not stated the effect of those words. Queen v.
Boodhun Ahir, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 32.

A person who is called upon to answer to a charge of giving false evidence should know exactly what is the false evidence imputed to him.
A charge “that he on or about the 15th April, 1871, gave false evidence,” is not sufficiently specific. Although the verification of plaints containing false statements is punishable according to the provisions of the law for the time being in force for the punishment of giving or fabricating false evidence, still it is not quite the same thing as giving false evidence. Three separate offences should not be lumped together in a single charge, but each offence should form a separate head of charge, with reference to which there should be a distinct finding and a distinct sentence. Queen v. Boodhun Churn, 3 N. W. R., 314.

The making of any number of false statements in the same deposition is one aggregate case of giving false evidence. Charges of false evidence cannot be multiplied according to the number of false statements contained in the depositions. 6 Mad.
Rep., Rul. XXVI.

To establish the offence of giving false evidence, direct proof of the falsity of the statement on which the perjury is assigned is essential. But, as legitimate evidence for this purpose, the law makes no distinction between the testimony of a witness directly falsifying such statement and the contradictory statement of the person charged, although not made on oath. Such a statement when satisfactorily proved is quite as good evidence in proof of the charge as the criminatory statement of a person charged with any other offence, and on precisely the same ground,—that it is an admission of the accused person inconsistent with his innocence.

As to the weight to be given to contradictory statements, the sound rule is that a charge of perjury is not maintainable upon proof of one such statement not on oath, or more than one if proved by a single witness only, except supported by confirmatory evidence tending to show the falsity of the statement in the charge. With respect to the kind or amount of confirmatory proof required, it must be considered in each case whether the particular evidence offered is sufficient to induce a belief in the truth of the contradictory statement or

Where a person makes two contradictory statements in the course of a judicial proceeding, he may be tried and convicted of giving false evidence on a single charge, if there is evidence to show which statement is false. Reg. v. Gangoji bin Panaji, 5 B. R., Cr., 49.

To constitute the offence of giving false evidence under Section 191 of the Indian Penal Code, it is not necessary that the false evidence given should be material to the case in which it is given. Alter under Section 192.

Where the senior Assistant Sessions Judge, without taking evidence, acquitted the accused after calling upon him to plead, the prosecutor being able to say that the alleged false statements of the accused were material to the trial on which they were made, the High Court reversed the order of acquittal, and directed the trial to be proceeded with. Reg. v. Damodhar Ram Chandra Kalkarni, 5 Bom. R., Cr., 68.

In a case of giving false evidence under Section 193 of the Penal Code, the statement which the accused is charged with having made before the Magistrates should be clearly proved to have been made by him. The procedure in the case of a charge under this section pointed out. Queen v.
Siddhoo, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 56.

Proof of contradictory statement on oath, or solemn affirmation, without evidence as to which of them is false, is sufficient to justify a conviction, upon an alternative finding, of the offence of giving false evidence, under Section 72 of the Indian Penal Code, Sections 242, 381, and 382 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The English law upon the subject stated. Queen v. Palany Chetty, 4 Mad.
Rep., 51.

A conviction may be had for giving false evidence under Section 193, Penal Code, even if the evidence given by the accused in matters not judicial (such as before the Collector acting in his fiscal capacity under Regulation XIX of 1814), but it must be proved that the false statement was made under the sanction of the 21.—FALSE PERSONATION.

It is necessary to a conviction for false person-ation, under Section 265 of the Penal Code, that the accused should have assumed the name and character of the person he is charged with having personated. The fact that he presented a petition in Court in the name of that individual held, under the circumstances of the case, to be insufficient to show any intention of falsely personating such

A vendor proceeded, in company with three persons, to Dacca to register her deed of sale.
Falling ill on the way, the three companions went to the Registrar's office; one of them there proceeded to personate the vendor, and got registry of the deed. She was convicted of cheating by false personation, and the other two of abetting that offence. Held on revision that, as there was no intention apparent on the part of the accused to injure or defraud any one, the convictions should have been under Sections 92 and 94 of the Registration Act, and not under the Penal Code. The Queen v. Luttee Behra, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 26.

Fraudulent gain or benefit to the offender is not an essential element of the offence of false personation under Section 205 of the Penal Code, and a conviction for such offence may be upheld even where the personation is with the consent of the person personated. Ex-parte Suppkbon and others, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 123.

To establish a charge under Section 211 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to show that the accused knew or had reason to believe that an offence had been committed. Until before 205 of the Penal Code it is criminal to personate an imaginary person. Queen v. Bitoo Kahar, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 123.

To constitute the offence of false personation under Section 205 of the Penal Code, it is not enough to show the assumption of a fictitious name, it must also appear that the assumed name was used as a means of falsely representing some other individual. Reg. v. Bhitto Kular (1 Indian Jurist, 123) dissented from. Queen v. Kadar Raouttan and Ayangamun Raouttan, 4 Mad. Rep., 18.

To constitute the offence of forgery the simple making of a false document is sufficient. It is not necessary that the document should be published or made in the name of a really existing person.

A writing which is not legal evidence of the matter expressed may yet be a document within the meaning of Section 29 of the Penal Code, if the parties framing it believed it to be, and intended it to be, evidence of such matter. The Queen v. Shijas Aly, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 12; 10 W. R., Cr., 61.

A specially registered bond was presented before the Small Cause Court Judge for execution, under Section 53, Act XX of 1866, and a decree passed upon it in usual form. Subsequently the Registrar sanctioned the prosecution of the decree-holder, on the ground that the bond was a forgery. The Small Cause Court Judge thereupon, on application made, without taking any evidence, or making further enquiry, set aside the decree, and sanctioned the prosecution under Section 170 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held that he was justified in sanctioning the prosecution, but not in setting aside the decree. The Queen v. Navab Singh, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 9.

When a Civil Court sends a prisoner before a Magistrate on a charge of forgery, it is competent to the Magistrate to commit the prisoner for trial on a charge either of forgery or of using as genuine a false document or of abetting forgery. Queen v. Mohesh Chunder Acharjee and another, 6 W. R., Cr., 20.

Criminal Law—forgery.

A Court has power, under the 171st Section of Act XXV of 1861, to order that the Magistrate shall investigate whether forgery has been committed with reference to a particular document offered in evidence before such Court; and such order is good notwithstanding it does not particularise any individual as the suspected person, or require that the Magistrate should enquire whether forgery was committed by a particular person.

The offence of forgery within the definition of the 453rd Section of Act XXV of 1861, is committed by a person who fabricates a false document purporting to be a copy, for the purpose of the same being given in evidence. Esahau Chunder Dut and others v. Pratnauth Chowdhry, Marsh., 270, and W. R., F. B., 171.

It must be proved that the accused practised deception, so as to prevent a person from knowing the nature of the document before the accused can be found guilty under Section 464 of the Penal Code of making a false document. The Queen v. Nujebutollah, 9 W. R., Cr., 209.

There must be a fraudulent and dishonest use of a document as genuine before a conviction can be had under Section 471 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Taka Bux, 8 W. R., Cr., 81.

Where an intention to use a forged document, if necessary, was inferred from the facts of the case, and from the conduct of the prisoner. Queen v. Hatim Moonsher, alias Mahomed Hatim, 8 W. R., Cr., 11.

A conviction may be had for using as genuine a forged document purporting to have been made by a public servant in his official capacity, notwithstanding the illegibility of the seal and signature thereon. Queen v. Prosno Bose, 5 W. R., Cr., 96.

A person may be convicted of using as genuine a document which he knew to be forged, though he in the first instance produced only a copy of it. Queen v. Nujum Ali, 6 W. R., Cr., 41.

The term “fabrication,” in Section 193, refers to the presentation of false documentary evidence to be used in a suit, so that to convict under this section it is essential to aver and to prove that the fabricated documents were intended for that purpose. The illegal concealment, by act or omission, contemplated by Section 120 of the Code, has reference to the existence of a design on the part of third persons to fabricate evidence. Queen v. Rajoomar Bannesjaa, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 104.

Where a forged document is put in evidence before the Collector, the power of commitment rests with the revenue authorities, and does not under any circumstances extend to the Magistrate. Government v. Hungessur Sein, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 11.

A deed of divorce is a “valuable security” within the meaning of Section 30 of the Penal Code. The presenting of a forged document of such a nature for registration, and obtaining registration, would be “using” within Section 471 of that Code. Queen v. Abhay Pramanick, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 15.

The prisoner made certain entries in his ledger, which consisted of rough loose sheets, showing that certain sums of money had been repaid to the prosecutor, which, in fact, had not been repaid.

 Held that the prisoner was guilty of forgery under Section 464 of the Penal Code.

Simply the omission of a count in the charge is a defect in the charge, and the Appellate Court may confirm a conviction under a different section of the Penal Code from that upon which the prisoner was tried and convicted, provided the prisoner has not been prejudiced or injured by the substitution of one section for another. Anonymous, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 46.

The accused was charged with two others with criminal breach of trust. Evidence was taken in support of the charge of embezzlement; but considering that there was no evidence to convict him under Section 408 of the Penal Code, the Assistant Magistrate charged him under Section 208. Five days afterwards he was charged with forgery, and called upon to plead to that charge, but no separate grounds of commitment were drawn up. The High Court agreed with the Sessions Judge that the commitment in its present state was incomplete, and should be quashed. Queen v. Mooktaram Chatterjee, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 44.

The forging of a document which purports on the face of it to be a copy only, and which, even if a genuine copy, would not authorize the delivery of moveable property, is not punishable under Section 467 of the Indian Penal Code.

The High Court will not alter a conviction by a Sessions Court, aided by a Jury, on a charge only triable by a Jury, to one of a nature not triable by such a tribunal, but will annul the proceedings, and leave the prosecution to take fresh proceedings against the prisoner on any other charge it may be advised. Reg. v. Noro Gopal, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 56.

Where prisoner, to screen his own negligence, altered an office report, such conduct does not fall within the definition of forgery in the Indian Penal Code. Queen v. Lal Gamul, 2 N. W. R., 11.

Where several seals of different descriptions were found in the possession of the accused with intent to commit forgery, it was held that under Section 473 of the Penal Code there was a complete and separate offence committed in respect of every seal found, and that prisoners could be legally convicted of a separate offence in regard to each seal, notwithstanding it appeared that several such seals in their possession were for the purpose of committing one particular forgery. Queen v. Goluck Chunder and Teluck Chunder, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 16.

To support a conviction of the offence under Section 471 of the Penal Code, there must be a using of a document by a person who knows or has reason to believe that it is forged. Queen v. Bhoylay Pramanick, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 32.

The offence of altering one part of a document executed in two parts for the mutual security of both the parties concerned deserves to be severely punished. Queen v. Kishoree Mohun Dutt, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 58.

The prisoner was charged, under Section 471 of the Indian Penal Code, with fraudulently using as genuine a forged document, and, having been tried before a Sessions Judge and Jury, was convicted of that offence.

The Sessions Judge, considering the forged document to be of the nature of those specified in Section 467, sentenced the prisoner to ten years' transportation. On appeal, the High Court held that the charge should have distinctly set forth the offence as that of using a forged document of the. nature of those specified in Section 467, and that that not having been done, the trial by jury was illegal. The conviction and sentence were therefore annulled, and it was directed that the prisoner should be re-tried. Reg. v. Gangaram Malji, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 43.

23.—GAMBLING.

Gambling is not ordinarily punishable as an offence; it is only so punishable when carried on in a common gaming-house, or in a public street or place. Queen v. Sheorunkur Singh, 3 N. W. R., 1.

Common gaming-houses are houses in which instruments of gambling are kept or used for the profit or gain of the owner or occupier, whether by way of charge for the use of the instrument of gambling, or of the house, or otherwise howsoever. Queen v. Suffud Ali, 3 N. W. R., 134.

To authorize an entry or search of a house, under Section 5 of Act III of 1867, there must be credible information before the Magistrate or police officer, who may take action under such section, that the house is a common gaming-house.

Unless a house is entered or searched under the provisions of Section 5, the finding of cards, dice, &c., therein will not be prima-facie evidence for the purposes mentioned in Act III of 1867. Queen v. Subsook and others, 2 N. W. R., 476.

The gist of the offence, under Section 4 of Act III of 1867, consists in the fact that the house in which the gambling takes place is “a common gaming-house.” The gist of the offence under Section 13 is “the gambling in a public street or place.”

Gambling in a private house is not an offence under the Act.

A common gaming-house is one which is kept or used for profit or gain, and may constitute a public nuisance; but it cannot be held, in the absence of evidence of any actual annoyance to the public, that every person who admits gamblers into his house, and all persons who game therein, are guilty of a public nuisance within the meaning of Section 268 of the Indian Penal Code. Reg. v. Hau Naji, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 74.

24.—HURT AND GRIEVOUS HURT.

Causing hurt on grave and sudden provocation, without any intention of causing grievous hurt, or knowledge that such hurt was likely to be caused, is punishable under Section 335 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Umbica Tantinte, 4 W. R., Cr., 24.

The prisoner entered a house for the purpose of committing an assault, and, in carrying out that intention, caused grievous hurt. In convicting and punishing him for the substantive offence (grievous hurt),—Held that it was not necessary to pass a separate sentence for the offence of house-trespass. Queen v. Basso Rannah, 2 W. R., Cr., 29.

The offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt is punishable, not by fine alone, but by imprisonment, the offender being also liable to fine. Queen v. Sharoda Peshagur, 2 W. R., Cr., 32; Queen v. Menasoodin, 2 W. R., Cr., 33.

When there is neither intention, knowledge, nor likelihood that the injury inflicted in an assault will or can cause death, the offence is not culpable homicide, but grievous hurt. Queen v. Megha Meeah, 2 W. R., Cr., 39.

When the result of a joint attack by several persons on one man is the fracture of his arm, the offence committed is grievous hurt, and not assault. Queen v. Ramloke Singh, 5 W. R., Cr., 12.

When bone fractures are caused, in addition to other injuries, the offence committed is grievous hurt, triable by a Court of Session, and not hurt cognizable by a Magistrate. Queen v. Ramto/zul Singh, 5 W. R., Cr., 65.

A man who, by a single blow with a deadly weapon, killed another man who, at dead of night, was entering his room for the purpose of having criminal intercourse with his wife, was held guilty of causing grievous hurt on a grave and sudden pro-

vocation. Queen v. Chullundee Foramanick, 3
W. R., Cr., 55.

The amount of punishment for cutting off a wife's nose for intriguing with another man, depends on the time of the commission of the grievous hurt, whether it was at the instant the husband found himself dishonoured, or long afterwards. Queen v.
Sutamut Russooa, 4 W. R., Cr., 17.

Where a wife died from a chance kick in the spleen inflicted by her husband on provocation given by the wife, the husband not knowing that the spleen was diseased, and showing by the blow itself and by his conduct immediately afterwards that he had no intention or knowledge that the act was likely to cause hurt endangering human life,—Held that the husband was guilty of an offence under Sections 319 and 321 of the Penal Code, and not an offence under Sections 320 and 322. Queen
v. Bysagoo Noshyo, 8 W. R., Cr., 29.

Where, in a case of robbery attended with death, there was no intention of causing death, or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the conviction was altered from voluntarily causing hurt in committing robbery. Queen v. Chakor Huree and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 16.

A disability for twenty days constitutes grievous hurt. A disability for a fortnight is punishable for voluntarily causing hurt. Queen v. Bishnooram Surma, 1 W. R., Cr., 9.

There must be evidence to prove that hurt, as described in Section 320 of the Penal Code as grievous hurt, has been caused before a conviction can be had under Section 320 of that Code. Queen

Defendant was convicted under Section 338 of the Indian Penal Code of causing grievous hurt. The evidence shewed that the defendant was being driven in a carriage to her house through the streets of the town, between the hours of 7 and 8 p.m.; that the carriage was being driven at an ordinary pace, and in the middle of the road; that the night was dark, and the carriage without lamps, but that the horsekeeper and coachman were shouting out to warn foot passengers; that the defendant's car-rriage came into contact with the complainant's father, an old deaf man, and that complainant's father was thereupon knocked down, run over, and killed. Held upon a reference that the question for the Court was whether there was any evidence that the death of the deceased was induced by an act negligently and rashly directed by the accused, and that there was no such evidence. The conviction was accordingly quashed. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul.
XXXI.

25.—KIDNAPPING AND SLAVERY.

The subject of an independent State, though not amenable to the British Court on a charge of culpable homicide committed out of British territories, may be so amenable on a charge of kidnapping from those territories. Queen v. Dhurmonarain Moito and others, 1 W. R., Cr., 39.

The consent of a kidnapping person is immaterial, and it is not necessary for a conviction, under Section 361, Penal Code, that the taking or enticing should be shown to have been by means of force or

The consent of a girl under 16 years of age, kidnapped or abducted to compel her marriage, does not affect the offence, nor is it necessary to prove the taking or enticing away to have been by force or fraud. Queen v. Angod Bugeah, 2 W. R., Cr., 61.

To bring a case under Section 361 of the Penal Code, there must be a taking or enticing of a child out of the keeping of its lawful guardian, without his consent. Queen v. Gunder Singh, 4 W. R., Cr., 6.

A person who carries off, without the consent of her guardian, a girl to whom he had been betrothed by her father after the father had changed his mind and broken off the marriage, is guilty of kidnapping punishable under Section 363 of the Penal Code.

Queen v. Grooroodass Rajbunsee, 4 W. R., Cr., 7.

The maximum sentence prescribed for the offence of kidnapping should only be awarded in a case of the most aggravated nature. Queen v. Mussamut Bhoodea, 8 W. R., Cr., 3.

Section 368 of the Penal Code refers to some other party who assists in concealing any person who has been kidnapped, and not to the kidnappers.

Queen v. Sheikh Oojeer, 6 W. R., Cr., 17.

The offence described in Section 363 of the Penal Code is included in that described in Section 369, the kidnapping and the intention of dishonestly taking property from the kidnapped child being included in the latter section. Queen v. Shama Sheikh, 8 W. R., Cr., 35.

Under Section 361 of the Penal Code (kidnapping from lawful guardianship), the consent of a minor is immaterial, nor do force and fraud form elements of the offence. Queen v. Sookee, 7 W. R., Cr., 36.

When a girl of 11 years of age was taken out of the custody of her lawful guardian by the first prisoner, and offered for sale in marriage to another, and the second prisoner illegally concealed her,
the conviction of the former was upheld under Section 363 of the Penal Code only, and of the latter under Section 368 only, while the separate conviction of both under Section 366 was quashed. Queen v.
Iseee Pandey and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 56.

An enticing away of a child playing on a public road is kidnapping from lawful guardianship.
Queen v. Mussamut Oojeerun, 7 W. R., Cr., 98.

The evidence of a kidnapped girl, if thoroughly credible, is legally sufficient for a conviction for kidnapping.

There is nothing illegal in passing separate sentences for kidnapping and for selling for purposes of prostitution. Queen v. Doogra Doss and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 104.

To support a conviction for kidnapping under Sections 361 and 363 of the Penal Code, it must be shown that the accused took or enticed away from lawful guardianship the person kidnapped. Queen
v. Neela Bibee and another, 10 W. R., Cr., 33.

A husband, or those who aided him, cannot be convicted of kidnapping for taking away his own wife, but they are guilty of rioting if they take possession of her by force and violence and in the darkness of night. Queen v. Asken, W. R., 1864, Cr., 12.

If knowing a girl has been kidnapped, a person wrongfully confines her, and subsequently detains her as a slave, he is guilty of two separate offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code.

Slavery is a condition which admits of degrees, and a person is treated as a slave if another asserts an absolute right to restrain his personal liberty, and to dispose of his labour against his will, unless that right is conferred by law, as in the case of a parent, or guardian, or a jailer. Queen v. Mirza Sikandur Bakhut, 3 N. W. R., 146.

The Sessions Judge was held bound to try the accused upon his commitment by the Deputy Magistrate on a charge, under Section 370, Penal Code, of having detained a woman against her will as a slave. Queen v. Firman Ali, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 73.

To constitute the offence of kidnapping, under Section 363 of the Indian Penal Code, it must be shown that the person was abducted from lawful guardianship, and lawful guardianship is a guardianship by a person who is lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of a minor. Queen v. Buldeo, 2 N. W. R., 286.

There can be no conviction of the offence of kidnapping under Section 366 of the Penal Code, unless it is proved that the accused has taken the girl out of the keeping or custody of her lawful guardian without her consent.

Where the accused represented to the prosecutor that a girl was a Brahmin, and thereby induced him to part with his money in consideration of the marriage of the girl to his brother, when the girl really was of the Sudra caste, it was held that he was guilty of cheating by false personation under Section 416 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Mehim Chunder Sil, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 42.

26.—MISCHIEF.

The authority vested in the Criminal Court of punishing persons for acts of mischief is one which must be exercised with great caution, and it must be very clear, before conviction, that the accused has brought himself within the meaning of Section 425 of the Penal Code. Ram Ghomam Singh, petitioner, 6 W. R., Cr., 59.

Section 425 of the Penal Code supposes that the destruction was caused with the intention to cause wrongful loss or damage, and does not apply to cases of mere carelessness; and Section 17, Act 1 of 1857, supposes the mischief (cattle trespass) was done intentionally, and not by negligence. Case of Araz Swcare, 10 W. R., Cr., 29.

The defendants were convicted of mischief under Section 427 of the Indian Penal Code for grazing their cattle upon waste lands without payment of certain capitation fees, to which the prosecutor was entitled. Held, that there was no evidence that the defendants caused mischief. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXV.

The accused were convicted of mischief. The acts were, that whilst the accused were employed in floating timber through a bridge, some of the logs struck against the arch of the bridge. Held, that the conviction was bad. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XL.

The mere fact of allowing cattle to stray, whereby damage is caused to the complainant, affords no evidence to support a conviction on the charge of mischief. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXVII.

To constitute the offence of mischief according to the Penal Code, the act done must be shown to have caused destruction of some property or such a change in the property, or the situation of it, as destroys or diminishes its value or utility, or affects it injuriously. The probable consequential damage to other property would not of itself constitute mischief. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XVI.

Without evidence that the accused intended or knew that he was likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to the complainant, the offence of mischief under Section 425 of the Penal Code was held not made out. Katra Nath Ghose v. Dinobundho Myler, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 72.

27.—MURDER.

The words "or other thing" in Section 328 of the Penal Code must be referred to the preceding words, and be taken to mean "unwholesome or other thing," and not "other thing" simply. Jatcut Ghorae, appellant, 1 W. R., Cr., 7.

 Held by the majority of the Court (disentente Seton-Karr, J.) that the offence of administering deleterious drugs without endangering life is punishable under Section 328 of the Penal Code, and not under Section 326 as grievous hurt. Queen v. Jogypal, 4 W. R., Cr., 4.

Capital sentence should be pronounced on a conviction for murder even if the accused be pregnant, although the execution of the sentence should be deferred till after delivery. Queen v. Panhee Armut, 15 S. W. R., Cr., 66.

When the law gives the alternative punishments of death, transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment extending to ten years, a sentence of fourteen years' transportation is illegal. If the Judge thinks it proper to pass a sentence of transportation short of life, he should pass a sentence of imprisonment for the term fixed by law, and then under Section 59, change it to transportation for that period. Queen v. Rugchoo, W. R., Cr., 30.

In order to convict a person of murder arising out of grievous hurt, it is indispensable that the death should be clearly and directly connected with the act of violence. Queen v. Mahomed Hossein, W. R., Cr., 31.

A conviction for murder was held to be wrong in a case when a prisoner, taking advantage of an incident which occurred in what till then had been a fair fight, struck his opponent and knocked him over, thereby causing his death. Queen v. Kewal Dosad, W. R., Cr., 36.

Prisoner found deceased in act of house-breaking by night in his house, and killed him with a kodali which he had called for, as he admitted, for that purpose. He was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge. The sentence being referred to the High Court for confirmation, was held that the prisoner on the legally convicted of murder, that he had intentionally done to the deceased more harm than was necessary for any purpose of defence, and that not whilst deprived of power of self-control. But the sentence was mitigated to transportation for life, than which, it was held, no less sentence could be legally passed.

The Judge, however, in a letter to Government, suggested the mitigation of the punishment, which was accordingly reduced to imprisonment for six months. Regina v. Durwan Geer, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 253.

When a poisonous drug was administered to a woman to procure miscarriage, and death resulted, it was held, no less sentence could be legally passed. The sentence was accordingly reduced to imprisonment for six years. Queen v. Akulpattie Gosain, 3 W. R., Cr., 58.

A Judge was held to have exercised a proper discretion in not passing sentence of death in a case in which the dead body was not found. Queen v. Bunderooen, 11 W. R., Cr., 20.

Where an accused killed a man, A, whom he had no intention of killing, by a blow with a highly lethal weapon intended to kill B, he was held guilty of the murder of A. Queen v. Phomonee Ahum, 8 W. R., Cr., 78.

In this case the prisoner was convicted of murder, but the intention of causing death not being fully established, the sentence of death was commuted to transportation for life. Queen v. Shobha Sheikh Gorman, W. R., 1864, Cr., 2.

In a case of murder committed in a drunken squabble, it was held that voluntary drunkenness, though it does not palliate any offence, may be taken into account as throwing light on the question of intention. Queen v. Ram Sahoy Bhar, W. R., 1864, Cr., 24.

Section 380 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not authorize a Sessions Judge to sentence a prisoner convicted of murder to anything less than transportation for life, and it requires the Judge, if he sentence such prisoner to transportation for life instead of capital punishment, to assign his reasons for so doing. If there are circumstances which render expedient or advisable a mitigation of the sentence required by the law to be passed in such cases, the Judge may record these circumstances and submit them for the consideration of the Government, and the Government may, under Section 54, act as to it seems proper. Queen v. Dabee, W. R., 1864, Cr., 27.

Held that where, from the circumstances, it appeared that a child had been exposed by the prisoner died, but that death was not caused except very remotely by the exposure, the prisoner, though guilty under Section 317 of the Penal Code, could not be convicted of murder. That section contemplates cases in which death is caused from cold or some other result of exposure. The Queen v. Khodabux Fakir, 10 W. R., Cr., 52.

To bring a case under Clause 4, Section 300 of the Penal Code must be proved that the accused, in committing the act charged, knew that it must in all probability be likely to cause death, or that it would bring about such bodily injury as would be likely to cause death. Held that a case in which the accused person pursued after a thief, and killed him after the house-trespass had ceased, did not fall within the 2nd Exception to Section 300 of the Penal Code; the right of private defence of property continuing, under Clause 5, Section 105 of that Code, only so long as the house-trespass continues. Queen v. Balakrudh Das, 5 W. R., Cr., 19.

Intoxication is no excuse for a man throtting to death another and a weaker man, who was also intoxicated. The Assessors having brought the case within Exception 4 of Section 300 of the Penal Code without any good evidence or substantial ground, the Sessions Judge was held to have correctly overruled their verdict, and found the prisoner guilty of murder. Queen v. Akulpattie Gosain, 3 W. R., Cr., 58.

Held by the majority of the Court, that when a person wilfully and deliberately killed a man who was endeavouring to escape after having been detected in the act of house-breaking by night for the purpose of theft, the sentence commuted to murder. Queen v. Durwan Geer, 5 W. R., Cr., 73.

A person who beats another brutally and continuously, so that death results, is guilty of murder, or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, according as there may or may not have been grave provocation. Queen v. Tepra Fakker, 5 W. R., Cr., 78.

When prisoners confess in the most circumstantial manner to having committed a murder, the finding of the body is not absolutely essential to a conviction. Queen v. Petta Gazi, 4 W. R., Cr., 19.

The offences of murder and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder both suppose an intention to cause death, or knowledge that the injury inflicted was likely to cause death. In the absence of such intention or knowledge the offence committed may be that of causing grievous hurt. Queen v. Bhadoo Poramanick, 4 W. R., Cr., 23.

Held by the majority, that when two members of an unlawful assembly use spears and deliberately pierce another man through the chest and abdomen, with the knowledge that death is likely to ensue, although without proof of any intention to cause death, all the members of the unlawful assembly are jointly guilty of murder. Queen v. Nasoor Fakir, 4 W. R., Cr., 26.

Held by the majority, that when four men beat another at intervals so severely as to cause death, they must be presumed to have known that by such acts they were likely to cause death, and that when such acts were done without any grave or sudden provocation, or sudden fight or quarrel, the offence was murder, and was not reduced to culpable homicide not amounting to murder by the absence of intention to cause death. Queen v. Pooshoo and Hurrah, 4 W. R., Cr., 33.

The prisoner kicked several times a man who was in his charge (who, having been severely beaten, had fallen senseless on the road) and thereby caused his death, the prisoner was found guilty of murder, and sentenced to transportation for life. Queen v. Nilmadhub Sircar, 3 W. R., Cr., 22.

Sentence of transportation for life in a case of murder instead of capital punishment, there being some reason to suppose that at the time of the murder both the deceased and the prisoners were drunk, and that the murdered man excited the prisoner's passion by calling him a thief. Queen v. Ram Nath Gwala, 3 W. R., Cr., 27.

guilty of striking the deceased with the knowledge that the act was likely to cause death,—in other words, guilty of murder,—convicted and punished them for culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The case was remanded for a new trial. Queen v. Beria Bazikur, 3 W. R., Cr., 38.

The absence of premeditation will not reduce a crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Mahomed Elim Abdool Kureem, 3 W. R., Cr., 40.

The prisoner was convicted of murder and sentenced to death; but before confirming the sentence, as doubts were entertained of his sanity, the case was referred to the Sessions Judge with instructions for further enquiry. Queen v. Azoo Beee, 2 W. R., Cr., 33.

When murder is committed in the commission of a dacoity, every one of the persons concerned in the dacoity is liable to be punished with death. Queen v. Ruchee Ahen, 2 W. R., Cr., 39.

The prisoners detected a weak, half-starved old woman stealing their rice, and so used their right of private defence that she died from the injuries they inflicted. The prisoners were held guilty by the majority of the Court of murder (dissentient, Campbell, J.). Queen v. Gokool Bowree, 5 W. R., Cr., 33.

It is not murder if a person kills another without intending to take his life, and if the acts done were not such as conclusively indicated an intention to cause such injury as was likely to cause death. Queen v. Sheik Salim, 5 W. R., Cr., 41.

Under the Penal Code no constructive, but an actual intention to cause death is required to constitute murder. Thus, when a boy of fifteen years old, in the heat of discovering the deceased in the act of adultery with the wife of a near relative, and, without the use of any weapon, joined that relative in committing an assault upon the deceased which caused his death, the offence committed was held to have been culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Goreeboollals, 5 W. R., Cr., 42.

A Judge should clearly acquit a prisoner of murder when so charged, and not merely find him guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

When a Judge acquits a prisoner of murder, the High Court cannot, either as a Court of Appeal or as a Court of Revision, find that, according to the evidence, the prisoner caused death with the knowledge mentioned in Clause 4, Section 300 of the Penal Code; nor can the High Court, however wrong it may think the Judge to have been in acquitting of murder, or however inadequate it may think the sentence to be, correct the error or enhance the sentence. Queen v. Toyab Sheikh, 5 W. R., Cr., 2.

The punishment of transportation for life inflicted instead of capital punishment, in a case where there was no intention to cause death, but a reckless assault with a deadly weapon which inflicted an injury likely in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Queen v. Khoaj Sheikh, 5 W. R., Cr., 20.

When a Judge acquits a prisoner of intention to kill, but admits that the prisoner struck the deceased with a highly lethal weapon, with the knowledge that the act was likely to cause death, the conviction should be of murder, and not of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Sobeel Mahee, 5 W. R., Cr., 32.

Muder by poison. A man and a dog die a few hours after eating the same food, but no traces of poison are found in their bodies or in the possession of the accused. The mode of investigation by the police and by the Magistrates in such cases fully laid down. Chutto Chumar, appellant, 1 W. R., Cr., 3.

Two prisoners confessed that having caught the deceased in the act of having sexual intercourse with the wife of one of them, they then and there killed him. Held that the grave provocation given reduced the crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen v. Gour Chund Pol, t W. R., Cr., 17.

A capital sentence mitigated in a case of murder committed while under the influence of provocation caused by an intrigue with the wife of the prisoner. Queen v. Bheke, alias Sheikh Auser, 1 W. R., Cr., 46.

Though the evidence was held to be sufficient to convict the accused of murder, yet as the evidence gave rise to doubts as to the precise part taken by the prisoner, it was thought safer to remit the capital sentence and pass one of transportation for life. Queen v. Lall Min, 1 W. R., Cr., 48.

When two persons take an active part in a murder they become principals in the first degree, though one of them only may have been the actual killer. If one stood by while the crime was being committed he would be an abettor. Queen v. Jan Mahomed and Kamoo Gaze, 1 W. R., Cr., 49. Held, in a case of murder, that the Judge had not given a proper direction to the Jury in telling them that it was for them to consider whether the evidence of the accomplice was strictly corroborated as to the prisoners, that it was not enough that the evidence should disclose a state of facts consistent with the possibility of the truth of the accomplice's story; and that the Judge ought to have gone through the history of the crime as detailed by the accomplices, to point out any independent evidence proving facts showing that the prisoners were or must have been present at or cognizant of the murder. The Queen v. Karoo, Runmee, and Nundoo Khettree, 6 W. R., Cr., 44.

The sentence of death reduced to transportation for life in a case of murder committed rather by way of retaliation for injury than under the influence of any worse passion. Queen v. Tenoo and another, 6 W. R., Cr., 46.

A sentence of death was commuted into one of the Grand Assizes, if the murder was committed under sentence of transportation for life, in the belief that the deceased was a wizard and the cause of the child's illness, and that by killing the deceased the child's life might be saved. Queen v. Oram Sonura, 6 W. R., Cr., 82.

A sentence of transportation for life in the case of a prisoner who was acting with a common intent. Queen v. Hyder Folaha, 6 W. R., Cr., 83.

A sentence of transportation under Section 308 of the Penal Code, if the murder was committed under sentence of transportation for life, the High Court reduced the sentence to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment, to be made in the Union. Queen v. Bani Dass, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 2.

On a conviction for murder, the only punishments that can legally be awarded are death or transportation for life. Queen v. Bani Dass, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 2.

The High Court has no power, even where there is ground for doing so, to mitigate a sentence of transportation for life passed on persons found guilty of murder. Queen v. Jamal, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 75.

28.—OFFENCES AGAINST THE PUBLIC HEALTH, SAFETY, &C.

To sustain a charge under Section 289 of the Indian Penal Code there should be evidence not only of negligence, but also that such negligence would probably lead to danger to human life or of grievous hurt. Anonymous, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 33.

In a case of public nuisance, under Section 290 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that injury, danger, or annoyance has been caused, either in regard to the enjoyment of property or the exercise of a public right on the part of a portion of the community or of any particular class of people. Onosomal v. Lamesor, 9 W. R., Cr., 70.

The accused was fined by the Magistrate for not having closed the drain in pursuance of the verbal order of the Magistrate. Held that the Magistrate should have proceeded under Chapter XX, Act XXV of 1861, inasmuch as the nuisance was not one from which immediate danger was apprehended, and not under Section 62, which empowers the Magistrate to put an immediate determination to the continuance thereof. A written order not having been given the procedure was faulty, and therefore quashed. Only Magistrates of a district or division can act under Chapter XX, Section 308.

When a case falls both under Section 62 and under Section 308 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the order of the Magistrate ought not to be absolute in the first instance: he should give the defendant an opportunity to show cause against the order.

Seemle,—Whether a case comes under either of these two sections or under both, the order of the Magistrate ought to contain a clear statement of the facts upon the basis of which the Magistrate has made the order. In the matter of Hurimohan Manto and the Queen v. Jayakrishna Mookerjee, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 20; S. C., 10 W. R., Cr., 53.

Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint under Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it was held that it was competent for him to pass an order under Section 62 of that Code in the same case, provided he called on the defendant to show cause why Section 62 should not be applied. Kalidas Bhattacharjee v. Mokhendro Chatterjee, 12 W. R., Cr., 269.

Section 311 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the other Sections of Chapter XX of that Code refer to public thoroughfares, and not to private roads over which a right of way has been established. Gooroo Churn Goon and others v. Gunga Gobind Chatterjee, 8 W. R., 269.

Where a Magistrate, acting within his jurisdiction, orders a nuisance to be removed under Act XXI of 1841, the remedy of a person aggrieved is by appeal from the order; and he cannot afterwards, notwithstanding the order may have been informal, maintain a suit to have the order set aside, and the land restored to its former state. Solum Patuck v. Omooola Koovur, Marsh., 7.

Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure refers to nuisances in a thoroughfare or public place, and has nothing to do with the interior of private houses, and therefore does not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in a suit brought to set aside an order of a Deputy Magistrate restricting some of the owners and occupiers of a house from the free use of their own portion of joint property. Full Bench Ruling of Keer Bejoy Kesuk Roy v. Shama Sondary Dassee; Eskan Chunder Banerjee and others v. Nund Coomar Banerjee and others, 8 W. R., 239.

A Deputy Magistrate should proceed, under Chapter XX of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for the removal of an unlawful obstruction from a thoroughfare, and not under Section 320, which relates to disputes concerning use of land or water. Barodapersad Mustafse v. Madhoooodun Birwas, 5 W. R., F. C., 5.

A Magistrate ought not to direct a party to restore a road and canal to their former state, and to show cause why he should not enter into recognizances to keep the peace, without hearing such party. Queen v. Mahomed Afsul and another, 7 W. R., Cr., 59.

No suit will lie in a Civil Court to set aside an order duly made by a Magistrate, under Chapter XX, Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, relating to nuisances or to restrain him from carrying such order into effect. Ujalmay Dasi v. Chandrakumar Negoji, 4 B. L. R., F. B., 24; S. C., 12 W. R., F. B., 18.

A Magistrate cannot, under Section 62, Code of Criminal Procedure, in general terms forbid two parties to use any musical instrument in the neighbourhood of each other's house, though he may forbid their doing so for the purpose of mutual annoyance. Ram Chunder Geer Gossain and another, petitioners, 6 W. R., Cr., 40.

The omission of a person to keep his ponies from straying is not a public nuisance punishable under Section 290 of the Penal Code. Joymath Mundul and others v. Jamal Sheikh and another, 6 W. R., Cr., 71.

The occupier who suffers the land to be in a filthy state is the person liable for the penalty. Queen v. Brojo Lal Mittra, 8 W. R., Cr., 45.

Where persons who were served with notice, under Section 313 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to remove a nuisance showed cause before the Magistrate, but did not ask him to take evidence or to summon a Jury, the High Court declined to interfere with the order passed by the Magistrate under Section 308 to remove the nuisance, as there appeared no illegality in the order. The Magistrate should, however, in these cases, fully record the grounds on which he acts, and his reasons for rejecting the objections made to the removal of the nuisance. Queen v. Alah Buksh, 12 W. R., Cr., 24.

Where a Magistrate has commenced proceedings under Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he is not at liberty to proceed otherwise than in conformity with the rules laid down in Chapter XX of the Code. Queen v. Pitti Singh, 8 W. R., Cr., 37.

A Magistrate ordered the rival holders of two huts to abstain from holding their huts on the same day on adjacent pieces of ground, as he apprehended a continuance of riots and affrays, and annoyance or injury to persons lawfully employed in them. Held that the order was strictly within the provisions of Section 61 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the High Court accordingly refused to interfere with it. Re Kalipershand, 11 W. R., Cr., 5.

Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not authorize a Magistrate summarily to direct the owner of a tank in a dry bed of a river to destroy the banks, on the ground that they are an obstruction to the public in the lawful enjoyment of the river, and that the stopping of the water interferes with the health of the public. In re Golam Durbash, 10 W. R., Cr., 36.

The order of a Magistrate under Section 308, Code of Criminal Procedure, should be confined to a direction to remove the nuisance complained of. In the case of a tank, the Magistrate cannot order the proprietor to excavate it. The proprietor ought to have the discretion allowed him as to the mode in which he will remove the nuisance caused by the tank. If a Magistrate is compelled to direct the excavations of the tank, the actual cost of excavation can alone be charged against the proprietor, at whose disposition the soil taken out in the course of excavation must be placed. In the case of Paul Doss, 10 W. R., Cr., 51.

Held that a Magistrate cannot proceed to pass an order for the removal of a nuisance, under Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, without calling on the party to show cause why the order should not be passed against him, and without hearing the objections, even if they are filed after the time fixed for their presentation, but before he takes up the case.

A Magistrate's power to fill up a tank is by Section 308 limited to having it fenced in; but where the tank is proved to be injurious to the community he may under that section treat it as a public nuisance, and cause it to be filled up. Case of Bistor Chum Chuckerbutty, 10 W. R., Cr., 27.

Section 314 of the Code of Criminal Procedure authorizes the Magistrate to take immediate measures to prevent imminent danger, pending the enquiry of a Jury, but not when no Jury has been appointed, and after the danger has passed away. Queen v. Raja Indoobshooshun Deb Roy, 1 W. R., Cr., 8.

The Magistrate of a district issued an order, under Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, calling upon the petitioner to remove a building, on the ground that it was unlawful obstruction upon a high road. A Jury of five persons was appointed by the Magistrate's successor, under Section 310, to report within fifteen days whether the order was reasonable and proper. The Jurors, being without instruction, took different views as to the performance of their duties; but four of them visited the premises, and were unanimous in finding that the building complained of was not on the high road at all. Five days after receiving reports to this effect the Magistrate issued another order to the petitioner, requiring him to pull down his house within fifteen days, as the Jurors had made no report within the time prescribed. The petitioner showed cause under Section 313, but without effect, and the order was repeated. The Sessions Judge meanwhile, upon application of the petitioner, called for the proceedings under Section 434; but the Magistrate wrote questioning the Judge's authority to interfere; and without waiting for the reply proceeded to try the petitioner for disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a public servant, and sentenced him to twenty-five days' imprisonment, under Section 188 of the Penal Code. His house was also pulled down. The proceedings were ultimately forwarded to the Sessions Judge, whose successor in office returned them with the remark that the order to pull down the house was not reasonable and proper. Held that the petitioner had shown sufficient cause to satisfy the Magistrate, under Section 313, that the order to pull down the house was not reasonable and proper.

The condition and the conduct of an old-established slaughter-house were proved to be, in fact, an offensive nuisance and dangerous to the health of neighbours; but the evidence did not show it was in a worse condition than at any time since its establishment; the occupiers, when summoned, refused to ask for a Jury under Section 310, Criminal Procedure Code. Held, the Magistrate was justified in supressing the "trade or occupation" under Section 308. No length of enjoyment can legalize a public nuisance. Municipal Commissioners of the Suburbs of Calcutta v. Mahomed Ali, 7 B. L. R., 499, and 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 6.

No suit will lie in a Civil Court to enforce an order duly made by a Magistrate under Chapter XX, Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, relating to nuisances, or to restrain him from carrying such order into effect. Ujalamaji Das v. Chundra Kumar Neogi, 4 B. L. R., F. B., 24, and 12 S. W. R., F. B., 18.

29.—OFFENCES UPON THE HIGH SEAS.

In prosecuting a British subject for an offence committed on board a British ship upon the high seas.—Held, 1 (dubtante, Phear, J.), that he must be charged with an offence under English law; 2, That the punishment must be according to English law; 3, That the trial must be according to the procedure of the local Court.

Therefore where a British subject was charged before the High Court with having committed an offence under 7 William IV, and 1 Vict., c. 85, s. 82, on board a British ship upon the high seas, within the Admiralty jurisdiction of the Court, and found guilty of an offence under 14 and 15 Vict., c. 5, Held that the petitioner was rightly punished with "rigorous imprisonment which is defined by Section 53 of the Indian Penal Code to be imprisonment with hard labour," and that the trial had been rightly proceeded with under Act XIII of 1865. Queen v. Thompson, 1 B. L. R., O. Cr., 1.

The substantive law applicable to a British-born subject tried in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay for destroying a British ship on the high seas, at a distance of more than three miles from the shores of British India, is the English Law, and second the Penal Code, notwithstanding the provisions of Statute 30 and 31 Vict., c. 124, s. 11. The same substantive law is applicable to prisoners who conspire together in Bombay to destroy such ship on the high seas, and such ship is so destroyed in consequence. The procedure applicable in such cases is the ordinary criminal procedure of the High Court. The question whether the Indian Legislature has power to legislate with reference to offences committed on the high seas considered. There is not any Act of the Indian Legislature now in force which provides for the offence of destroying a ship, when committed at a greater distance than three miles from the coast, or for the abetment in British India of such an offence so committed. Reg. v. Elmstone Whitewell, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 89.

30.—OFFENCES RELATING TO MARRIAGE.

In a charge under Section 498 of the Penal Code, the words of the section, "conceals or detains," must be taken to extend to the enticing or inducing a wife to withhold or conceal herself from her husband, and assisting her to do so, as well as to physical restraint or prevention of her will or action. Depriving the husband of proper control over his wife for the purpose of illicit intercourse is the gist of the offence, and a detention occasioned such deprivation may be brought about simply by the influence of allurements and blandishments. Queen v. Sundara Dass Tevan, 4 Mad. Rep., 20.

A woman who does not use all reasonable means in her power to inform herself of the fact of her first husband's alleged demise, and contracts a second marriage within 16 months after conviction with her first husband, without disclosing the fact of the former marriage to her second husband, is liable to enhanced punishment under Section 495 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Enai Beebee, 4 W. R., Cr., 25.

A person convicted of adultery under Section 497 of the Penal Code need not be convicted also under Section 498, especially when there is no taking or enticing away of the woman. Queen v. Pochun Chung, 2 W. R., Cr., 35.

The Appellate Court will not uphold a conviction for adultery when the husband has shown that he has condoned the offence. Strict proof of marriage is necessary. Queen v. G. R. Smith, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 8; S. C., 4 W. R., Cr., 31.

A putwaaaee taking grain as a consideration for showing favour to the giver in the discharge of his functions as putwaaaee, should be convicted under Section 161, and not Section 165 of the Indian Penal Code. Queen v. Nudodooddeen, 2 N. W. R., 148.

A conviction for non-attendance in obedience to an order from a public servant, under Section 176 of the Penal Code applies to persons upon whom an obligation is imposed by law to perform certain information to public servants, and the penalty which the law provides is intended to apply to parties who commit an intentional breach of such obligation. CRIMINAL LAW—RAPE—REBELLION.

Sexual intercourse by a man with a woman without her free consent—i.e., a consent obtained without reciprocal freedom of choice or against her will—amounts to rape, and the Judge should leave the question to the jury, and not direct them to find that the woman's consent after a considerable struggle renders the charge of rape nugatory. Queen v. Akbar Kajee, 1 W. R., Cr., 21.

 Held to be physically impossible that a girl of under age should be killed by rape and not show any external signs of violence. Queen v. Banee Madhub Moukerjee, 1 W. R., Cr., 29.

The measure of punishment in a case of rape should not depend on the social position of the party injured, but on the great fear or less atrocity of the crime, the conduct of the criminal, and the defenceless and unprotected state of the injured female. Queen v. Jhantah Noshye, 6 W. R., Cr., 59.

A was convicted of an attempt to commit rape, and was sentenced by the Judge to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, which he commuted, under Section 59 of the Penal Code, to transportation for the same term. Held that, under Sections 376 and 511 of the Penal Code, a sentence of imprisonment for the offence committed could not be for a longer term than five years, and such sentence could not be commuted, under Section 59, to transportation for a longer term. Queen v. Joseph Meeriam, 1 B. L. R., A. C. 5; 10 W. R., 10.

The punishment for a prisoner convicted of waging war with an Asiatic Power in alliance with the Queen must, under the Penal Code, be either transportation for life or imprisonment of either description which may extend to seven years. Where such a prisoner was sentenced to ten years' transportation the sentence was held to be illegal. Queen v. Keifa Singh, 3 W. R., Cr., 16.

Application for pardon or mitigation of punishment for a political offence (e.g., for waging war against a Power in alliance with the Queen) should not be made to the Executive Government. Queen v. Sejowpah, 7 W. R., Cr., 100.

Where N. and M. were convicted of rebellion under Act XI of 1857, Section 1, and sentenced, the former to be transported for life, and to have all his property confiscated, and the latter to have all his property confiscated, the sentence of confiscation was held to be absolute, and not to depend upon the amount of punishment, and the fact of the punishment being remitted by the Governor-General does not restore the property.

The Government having left the property of the convicts in the hands of the Administrator-General as administrator to the estate of the convicts' father whence it was derived, in whose hands it was allowed to accumulate pending a separate litigation in respect of that estate, while it asserted its right by virtue of the confiscation to other property of the convicts, the title to which was undisputed, it was held that the Government had sufficiently declared and acted upon its intention to enforce the confiscation. The Queen's proclamation of amnesty (November, 1858) coming after the conviction and confiscation, had not the effect of re-vesting in the convicts the property confiscated.

Held also that the property in question being Government paper was liable to confiscation; and lastly, that N.'s widow was not entitled to maintenance out of the property confiscated by the State.

Held that the prisoner, who having received stolen property concealed it in his house, could not... be charged and convicted for two offences, viz., of having dishonestly received stolen property under Section 411, Indian Penal Code, and of assisting in the concealment of stolen property under Section 414, which applies to persons whose dealing with the stolen property is not of such a kind as to make them guilty of dishonestly receiving or retaining it. Government v. Mussamat Nowula, Agra Rep., Cr., 9.

In order to sustain a conviction, under Section 412 of the Penal Code, of receiving property stolen at a dacoity, it is necessary to prove that the prisoner knew, or had reason to believe, that dacoity had been committed, or that the persons from whom he acquired the property were dacoits. Queen v. Yogeshur Bandee and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 109.

A prisoner cannot be convicted, under Section 411 of the Indian Penal Code, for dishonestly receiving or retaining stolen property in respect of property which he himself has been convicted, under Section 409, Indian Penal Code, of having obtained possession by committing criminal breach of trust. Queen v. Shunkur, 2 N. W. R., 213.

Where property sufficiently identified to be the property of one person is found to be in the possession of another person without leave or license or any legal permission of the owner, it is for the party in whose possession the property is found guilty to account for its possession, and unless he can so do a jury may fairly infer in such circumstances that it was with a guilty knowledge that the prisoner took that which he knew to be not his own. Queen v. Shurrufaaddeen, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 26.

In a case in which the accused is charged with receiving stolen property, it must be clearly proved that he retained the property with guilty knowledge. Meer Yar Ali, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 70.

35.—RIOTING.

Conviction and sentence both for rioting and for grievous hurt upheld, the punishment being on the whole not more severe than might properly have been awarded if the conviction had been for grievous hurt only.

A person convicted of rioting should not be convicted of hurt or grievous hurt caused to himself. Queen v. Azgur, 5 W. R., Cr., 19.

Held by the majority of the Court (dissentients, Seton-Karr, J.) that an attack made in the morning by an unlawful armed assembly, with the object of rescuing two thieves who had been captured during the night, and in which murder was committed, was a premeditated attack for which all concerned were liable to conviction for riot attended with murder. Queen v. Bhunjum Pauray, 4 W. R., Cr., 8.

A zemindar ought not to be made liable, under Section 155, Penal Code, for a sudden and unpremeditated riot, which there was no reason to infer he could have anticipated. Queen v. Hurnauth Roy, 3 W. R., Cr., 54.

There cannot be a conviction both of "rioting" and of "being members of an illegal assembly." The greater charge includes the less, and to punish under both sections of the Penal Code would be cumulative and illegal. Meelan Khalifa v. Dwarakanath Googo, 1 W. R., Cr., 7.

The Court has no power to enhance a sentence (though it may consider it too lenient) on persons convicted under Sections 143 and 148 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Mullookram Doss, 1 W. R., Cr., 13.

An assembly, lawful in its inception, may become unlawful by its acts. If force is used, the higher offence of rioting is committed. Queen v. Khem Singh, 4 W. R., Cr., 19.

It is not necessary that there should be a conviction of rioting in order to admit of a Magistrate taking recognizances to keep the peace. Queen v. Sattaram Hasara, 1 W. R., Cr., 45.

Where the evidence in a case failed to establish anything like an unlawful assembly, the conviction was reduced from rioting and being members of an unlawful assembly to one for affray, although grievous hurt from which death resulted was caused to one of the persons. Queen v. Phoolli Mitter, 12 W. R., Cr., 72.

The prisoners having been part of an assembly of more than five persons, whose common object, as apparent from their acts, was, by means of criminal force, to recover possession of their cattle seized for trespass (whether properly pounded or not), and who made use of such force and took away their cattle, were held guilty of rioting, and liable to conviction under Section 147 of the Penal Code, and not under Section 11, I. C. Act V of 1857. Queen v. Bokoo Sheik and others, W. R., 1864, 21.

The offence of rioting, armed with deadly weapons, and stabbing a person on whose premises the riot takes place, are distinct offences, and punishable as separate offences under Sections 148, 149, and 324 of the Penal Code,—Section 149 being read as a proviso to Section 148. Queen v. Kalla Chand and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 60.

In a case of rioting with deadly weapons, the one side found guilty of using them and causing grievous hurt are properly punishable more severely than the men of the other side. Queen v. Moorlal Mah and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 11.

A dismissal by one Court of a charge of riot against A. may be a bar to A.'s trial by another Court on the same charge, but it does not extend to other persons not then before the Court which ordered the dismissal.

The dismissal by one Court of the charge of riot instituted by the police is no bar to the trial by another Court of a charge of criminal trespass instituted by a third person, although the two charges may substantially refer to the same occurrences. Queen v. Morti Sheik, 6 W. R., Cr., 51.

Persons found guilty of rioting may, if the circumstances warrant it, be convicted of the several offences of rioting armed with deadly weapons, culpable homicide, and grievous hurt. Queen v. Hurgobind, 3 N. W. R., 174.

The prisoners who, in resisting a sudden attack made upon them by certain persons, for the purpose of cutting their crop, and when they had no time to complain to the police, inflicted a wound on one of them with a bamboo, from the effects of which the man died, were convicted by the Sessions Judge, under Sections 148 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code.

The High Court acquitted the prisoners, holding that the force used, or the injuries inflicted, were not such as to exceed their rights of private defence.

CRIMINAL LAW—ROBBERY—SUICIDE—THEFT.

Where the accused were convicted under Section 147 of the Penal Code of robbing, and also under Section 353 of using criminal force to a constable who went to arrest them, the High Court set aside the conviction under the former section. Nilotton Sein, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 45.

36.—ROBBERY.

On conviction for theft in a dwelling under Section 380 of the Penal Code, fine cannot be substituted in lieu of imprisonment, though it may be added to imprisonment. Sheikh Dulloow Zaniah Bebee, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 17.

When a person through fear offers no resistance to the carrying off of his property, but does not deliver any of the property to those who carry it off, the offence committed is robbery, and not extortion. Queen v. Dabelooddeen Sheikh, 5 W. R., Cr., 19.

When in committing a theft there is an intention and an attempt to cause hurt, the offence is robbery. Queen v. Teekai Bheer, 5 W. R., Cr., 95.

Discussion as to the distinction between robbery and theft. Queen v. Ruhman Khan, 3 W. R., Cr., 14.

The two offences of robbery and of voluntarily causing hurt, when combined, are punishable under Section 394 alone, and not under Sections 393 and 394. Queen v. Mooth Kodara Kora, 2 W. R., Cr., 11.

Theft with violence is robbery. A conviction, under Section 397 of the Penal Code, of using a deadly weapon whilst engaged in the commission of robbery or dacoity, is equally good whether the number of thieves be five or under. Queen v. Dwaraka Ahee, 2 W. R., Cr., 49.

A person convicted of robbery or theft cannot be also convicted of dishonestly receiving in respect of the same property. Queen v. Sheikh Muddun Ally, W. R., 1864, Cr., 27.

A charge of robbery, under Section 392 of the Penal Code, is, under Act VIII of 1866, triable only by the Court of Session, or by the Magistrate of the District, but not by a Deputy Magistrate. Madhub Ghose v. Bully Meeta and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 11.

Where persons are committed on three separate and distinct charges for three separate and distinct robberies committed on the same night in three different houses, they must be tried separately on each of the three charges.

Remarks on the irregularities in the investigation of the present case. Queen v. Ishwree Dome and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 33.

By the infliction of grievous hurt, theft becomes robbery, and all parties concerned in the offence are liable to punishment. Queen v. Hushrut Sheikh, 6 W. R., Cr., 85.

The accused was convicted of robbery, but the Magistrate found that the property taken was not taken with any dishonest intention.—Held that the conviction was bad. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXIX.

37.—SUICIDE.

A prisoner found guilty under Section 309 of the Indian Penal Code of an attempt to commit suicide, must be sentenced to some imprisonment, and not merely to payment of a fine. Reg. v. Chenoweth, 3 Bom. Rep., 4.

The English law of forfeiture of the personal property of persons committing suicide, if ever applied to Europeans in India, is not applicable to Natives.

Queen v. Whether the law ever had existence as regards Europeans in India. Advocate-General of Bengal v. Ranee Surnameyee, 1 W. R., P. C., 14.

Evidence that a woman prepared herself to commit suicide in the presence of the accused, that they followed her to the pyre and stood by her, her step-sons crying “Ram, Ram,” and one of the accused admitting that he told the woman to say “Ram, Ram, and she would become suetee,” proves active connivance and unequivocal countenance of the suicide by the accused, and justifies the inference that they had engaged with her in a conspiracy for the commission of the suetee. Queen v. Mohit Pandey, 3 N. W. R., 316.

38.—THEFT.

The term “dishonest” in the Penal Code is applied to a person who does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss. Queen v. Freo Nath Banerjee, 5 W. R., Cr., 68.

Theft is defined (Section 376 of the Penal Code) to be a dishonest taking of any movable property out of the possession of any person without that person’s consent. Queen v. Madaee, Chowkeedar, 3 W. R., Cr., 2.

Theft by constables of property from the house they were employed to guard is punishable under Section 380, and not Section 409, Penal Code. Queen v. Boldonath Singh, 3 W. R., Cr., 29.

Whipping may be substituted for any other punishment for the offence of theft in a dwelling-house. Queen v. Janghoo Khan, 3 W. R., Cr., 36.

A person can be convicted of abetment of theft under the first explanation of Section 107 of the Indian Penal Code only if he either procure or attempts to procure the commission of the theft. Mere subsequent knowledge of the offence is insufficient. Queen v. Shumeerudddeen, 2 W. R., Cr., 40.

The offence of a person who makes away with property which has been placed in his charge and possession is not theft, but criminal breach of trust. Bharut Chunder Christian, appellant, 1 W. R., Cr., 2.

Held by the majority of the Court, that the omission of the Judge to enter into details regarding the identification of stolen property does not amount to a misdirection to the Jury. Queen v. Madhub Mal and others, 1 W. R., Cr., 22.

The prisoners were charged with having stolen a sum of money shut up in a box and placed in the Police Treasury buildings, over which they, as burkundauzes, were placed in guard. Held that the charge should have been made under Section 381 of the Penal Code (theft by servant in possession of property), and not under Section 409 (criminal breach of trust by public servant). Queen v. Tuggurnath Singh, 2 W. R., Cr., 55.

Amends cannot be awarded for a false charge of theft. Queen v. Gogun Sein, 2 W. R., Cr., 57.

The theft and the taking and retention of stolen goods form one and the same offence, and cannot be punished separately. Queen v. Sreemun Adupa, 2 W. R., Cr., 63.

Housebreaking by night and theft form a single and entire offence, and cannot be punished separately. Queen v. Tanaokoch, 2 W. R., Cr., 63.

Although Section 270 of the Code of Criminal Procedure forbids compensation to a person falsely and vexatiously charged with theft, yet the law does not prevent a Magistrate from fining an unjust accuser. Chidie Choudlee v. Bhawany and Jhaw, 1 W. R., Cr., 1.

A prisoner may be convicted of theft in a building and of housebreaking by night with intent to commit theft, though if the Judge considers the punishment for the first offence sufficient, he need not award any additional sentence for the second. Queen v. Timcouree, W. R., 1864, Cr., 31.

A Deputy Magistrate has no power to convict of theft (Section 380, Penal Code), where the offence charged is lurking house-trespass by night with aggravating circumstances (Sections 458 and 459, Penal Code), but must commit on the latter charge. Puran Telee v. Bhutto Dome, 9 W. R., Cr., 5.

A person acting under a claim of right (however ill-founded such claim may be) is not guilty of theft by asserting it. Queen v. Ram Churn Singh, 7 W. R., Cr., 57.

A hired boatman does not come within the definition of a clerk or servant under Section 381 of the Penal Code. Theft by such a person on board a boat comes under Section 380. Queen v. Barrow Manjee, 8 W. R., Cr., 32.

A double sentence for theft and mischief is illegal and improper. Bichuk Aheer v. Au hacking Bhoonee, 6 W. R., Cr., 5.

The prisoner acting bond fide in the interests of his employers, and finding a party of fishermen poaching on his master's fisheries, took charge of the nets, and retained possession of them, pending the orders of his employers. Held that the prisoner was not guilty of theft. Queen v. Nobeen Chunder Holbar, 6 W. R., Cr., 79.

The prisoner was convicted of theft on his own confession. The charge to which the prisoner pleaded did not allege the taking out of the possession of some person dishonestly, and there was no evidence of such taking. Held that the conviction was bad. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXVII.

The moving by the same act which effects the severance may constitute a theft. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXVII.

A boat may be the subject of theft. Although under Section 442 of the Penal Code it is for certain purposes classed with houses, it does not cease to be moveable property under Section 378. Queen v. Mahar Dowalal, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 63.

39.—TORTURE.

Where several prisoners were all concerned in a case of torture, and were prosecuting a common object, each was held guilty as a principal, and not as an abettor of others. Queen v. Tarinee Churn Chuttopadhya and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 3.

Exposition of a police officer's power of arrest and detention of accused persons and witnesses, with a view to the suppression of the practice of torture. Queen v. Behary Singh and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 3.

40.—UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY.

Where house-trespass and mischief were not separate offences, but were included in the gravest offence of being members of an unlawful assembly, armed with deadly weapons, separate convictions and sentences are not requisite. Queen v. Surroop Nati, 7 W. R., Cr., 54.

Case of an unlawful assembly, the members of which were held guilty of an offence under Section 402 of the Penal Code, on their own admission that they not only knew that the assembly was an assembly for the purpose of committing dacoity, but also that all the persons (including themselves) constituted the assembly lived on the proceeds of dacoity, and had no other means of living. Queen v. Kendra Kutar and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 97.

Where persons join an unlawful assembly for the purpose of committing an assault, and instead of preventing those armed from using their weapons encourage them to do so, they are in the same position as those members of the unlawful assembly who struck the blows. Queen v. Dushruth Roy and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 58.

Held that the owner or occupier of land on which an unlawful assembly is held cannot be convicted under Section 154 of the Penal Code, unless there is a finding that the riot was premeditated.

Where two opposite factions commit a riot it is irregular to treat both parties as constituting one unlawful assembly, and to try them together, inasmuch as they do not have “one common object” within the meaning of Section 141 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Surroop Chundra Pali, 12 W. R., 75.

In order to convict of the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly it must be shown that the accused were actuated by a common object, and that the acts done by them were of such a nature as to make them guilty under Section 141 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Dinnobunho Rai and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 19.

A large body of men belonging to one faction waylaid another body of men belonging to a second faction, and a fight ensued, in the course of which a member of the first-mentioned faction was wounded, and retired to the side of the road, taking no further active part in the affair. After his retirement a member of the second faction was killed. Held (by Norman, J., whose opinion prevailed) that the wounded man had ceased to be a member of the unlawful assembly when he retired wounded, and that he could not, under Section 149 of the Penal Code, be made liable for the subsequent murder. Held by Jackson, J., that he remained a member of the unlawful assembly. Queen v. Kabil Cazesee, 3 B. L. R., A., Cr., 1.

Where a person was killed by a member of an unlawful assembly, in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, the common object being the abduction of that person's mother,—Held that all those who were members of the assembly at the time such person was killed, were guilty of the offence of killing her. In the matter of Golam Arfin, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 47.

The Deputy Magistrate adjourned the case to the 21st, on which day he ordered the case to be dismissed for non-attendance of the complainant; but on the following day cancelled that order, and revived the case on the ground of his having dismissed it by mistake in ignorance of the complaint having petitioned for an adjournment by reason of sickness. The Magistrate on appeal reversed the order of the Deputy Magistrate. As the order of the Deputy Magistrate was manifestly wrong, the High Court set aside the whole of the proceedings, and restored the case to the position in which it stood before the 21st. Queen v. Ram Narain Ghose, 8 W. R., Cr., 5.

Where a prosecution of an offence under Chapter X of the Penal Code is instituted by an inferior ministerial servant under sanction of the authority of his official superior, the provisions of Section 168 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are complied with. Queen v. Ram Gholam Singh and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 22.
A Deputy Magistrate has no authority to acquit a prisoner of an offence under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure for which he had not regularly put him upon his trial. He must proceed according to Section 250 of that Code.

That a Magistrate has acted without proper discretion in ordering a prosecution is no ground for reversing his order. Eman Ali v. Sudderoodeen and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 18.

Where there is a prima-facie case (of abduction in this instance) made out, a Magistrate should send for the witnesses, and form his opinion on the evidence, and not merely on the strength of the police report reject the complainant's petition and refer him to the Civil Court. Barodakant Mookerjee v. Kali Shuttacharree and others, 9 W. R., C. R., 21.

The Court quashed the evidence which was passed upon a prisoner who had not been asked if he had any witness to call, although he was tried at the same time with others who had been so asked. Bhugwan and others v. Doyal Gope, 10 W. R., Cr., 7.

When a Judge has recorded his finding of facts in an unintelligible manner, and has left the country, the Court will order a new trial. The Queen v. Gorachand Gope and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 177.

In a case falling under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Deputy Magistrate has no power to dismiss a complaint on account of the non-attendance of complainant, even if a summons, being prejudiced in his civil remedy. Queen v. Szauekram Bukoolee, 2 W. R., Cr., 32.

A case of perjury or forgery alleged to have been committed in a case before a Civil Court before January 1, 1862, can be dealt with only under the old Procedure Law (Act 1 of 1848), according to which the sanction of the Court before which the offence is alleged to have been committed is necessary before criminal proceedings can be instituted. Radhajeebun Mascattie, 5 W. R., Cr., 8.

In deciding a dispute as to a right of water, the Magistrate must follow strictly the course pointed out by Chapter XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Ramnath and others, 7 W. R., C. R., 45.

Where a person is charged (Section 218, Indian Penal Code) with framing a report incorrectly, or (Section 201, Indian Penal Code) giving false information, with intent to save offenders from punishment, the issue to be tried is, whether such alleged offenders were in fact guilty or not, but merely the belief and intention of the prisoner in respect to their guilt. Queen v. Hurdat Surma, 8 W. R., Cr., 668.

A former trial set aside on the ground of want of jurisdiction and illegality is not a bar to a second trial. Queen v. Muthooraperishad Panday, 2 W. R., Cr., 10.

Where two prisoners were charged with distinct offences in the same indictment, the calling of evidence on behalf of one does not give the Crown a right of reply upon the other. Reg. v. Sheik Abbas and Munneeroodeen, 2 Hyde's Rep., 247.

A Sessions Judge must allow a prisoner whose conviction he has affirmed to execute a vakedsutnama to appeal. Queen v. Vayapuri Gaundan, 1 Mad. Rep., 4.

An order made by a Magistrate under Section 316 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be founded upon proof in the same proceedings, and not upon knowledge acquired by him in some other case. Lopotee Dommasiey Tikha Moolai, 8 W. R., Cr., 67.

Civil proceedings do not constitute a bar to a prosecution in a Criminal Court. Madhub Kyertho v. Keshub Singh and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 22.

Court peons may pursue into the yard of a lodging-house, the door leading into which is open, a prisoner who has escaped from their custody. Dukhoo Peon v. Chundo Kant Chowdhy, 3 W. R., Cr., 68.

Taking the statements of both parties without recording evidence in proof of either is not an "enquiry." Queen v. Sonaoollah, 2 W. R., Cr., 44.

A person who is admittedly a subject of the British Government is liable to be tried by the Courts of this country for acts done by him, whether wholly within or wholly without, or partly within and partly without, the British territories in India, provided they amount to an offence under the Penal Code. Queen v. Mullove Ahmedoollah, 2 W. R., Cr., 60.

The fact that there is a special law to meet a particular offence (in this case, cattle trespass) does not prevent the punishment of the offenders under the Penal Code, if an offence which could have been rightly punished under the Penal Code was established. Onooram v. Lamsor, 9 W. R., Cr., 70.

Before a person can be legally punished for refusal to remove and reconstruct roof drains, evidence ought to be taken whether the party has disobeyed the Magistrate's order, and whether such disobedience has produced, or is likely to produce, harm. Queen v. Skabuckram Bukoolee, 2 W. R., Cr., 32.

Section 152 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to cases in which there has not been a continuous detention of 24 hours. Indrobow, appellant, 1 W. R., Cr., 5.

A charge properly laid under the Penal Code should be the course pursued even if the case be one in which a civil action will lie. Khasal Singh v. Toolsee Chowdhry and others, 10 W. R., Cr., 40.

Cases instituted and tried under Chapter 14 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be struck off the file at the request of the complainant, or for want of prosecution on his part. The Magistrate must proceed in such cases in the manner prescribed by that Chapter, notwithstanding the complainant may desire to withdraw his complaint. Queen v. Jugroop Ugruba and others, 3 N. W. R., 341.

Until the finding is recorded the trial is incomplete. If before the finding is recorded the presiding officer of a Court is removed, the successor cannot pass judgment upon consideration of the evidence recorded by the predecessor. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLIII.

Following the Queen v. Gora Chand Ghopa the Court set aside an order of acquittal passed by a Deputy Magistrate in a case which he tried, not on evidence taken before himself in the case, but entirely on evidence in another case before another officer (the joint Magistrate). Tukheyai Rai v. Tupssee Kooyer, 15 S. W. R., Cr., R., 23.

An accused should plead by his own mouth and not through his counsel or pleader, though his counsel or pleader may at the proper time address the Court on his behalf. Queen v. Roopa Gowalla, 15 S. W. R., Cr., R., 42.

The mere assertion of a fair claim of property or right, or the mere existence of a doubt as to right, is not sufficient to justify an acquittal in a case of plunder of crops. The claim to the property must be proved by evidence to be fair and good. Nasib Chowdry v. Nannoo Chowdry, 15 S. W. R., Cr., R., 47.

In a case in which the accused was charged under the Penal Code with an offence which was committed before the Penal Code came into operation, it was held that, having regard to Section 4, Act XVII of 1862, and Section 420 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the error of procedure was not sufficient to vitiate the conviction so long as the punishment awarded as under the Penal Code did not exceed that which was the legal penalty for the offence before the Penal Code became law. Mohabeer Singh, 15 S. W. R., Cr., R., 48.

No legal conviction can take place unless the opinion of the assessors is taken on the whole of the evidence in a case. Queen v. Bhugwan Lall, 15 S. W. R., Cr., R., 3.

The High Court declined to interfere in four cases of dismissal by the Magistrate and Deputy Magistrate referred by the Judge: the first, because the Judge considered that mere persistence in demand of rent did not amount to trespass justifying the right of private defence as held by the Magistrate. The second, because the Judge considered that the Magistrate’s reasons, viz., (1) want of explanation of the cause of complainant’s presence on the spot where the alleged assault was committed, (2) want of explanation of delay in making, and (3) want of material evidence in the shape of bruises, were not sufficient in law to justify a summary dismissal. The third, because the Judge considered that the mere assertion of a claim to land by the accused did not justify the dismissal of the criminal charge as to theft of its produce, and that the Deputy Magistrate should be directed to hold a proper enquiry and dispose of the case after recording evidence. And the fourth, because the Judge considered that delay in making complaint was not of itself a legal ground for dismissal, particularly where an explanation of the delay is tendered. Mahomed Jan v. Khadi Sheik, Hrunautur D. Khaskhiki v. Joygopal De Sarkur, Harris Chunder Das v. Bolair Audhcur, Sheik Ahmuddi v. Annund Mohun Mojoomder, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 75.

The Deputy Magistrate’s order dismissing a case for default (after repeated unnecessary adjournments and after the accused was put on his defence) upon a day to which no legal adjournment was made, was set aside as illegal. Mahomed Aium v. Sheik Akil, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 68.

There is no necessity, under Section 198, Code of Criminal Procedure, for making use of a regularly sworn interpreter to interpret his evidence to a party making a statement. Queen v. Madan Mundle, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 71.

When a written defence is tendered in a case tried under Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate is not bound to take down the defence of the accused by personally examining him. Dila Mundul v. Kally Sahee, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 63.

Section 193 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies also to cases under Chapter XV of that Code, and a Magistrate cannot dispose of a case under that chapter without examining the witnesses called for the prosecution. Kishore Sahai v. Mungeri Sahai, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 48.

Remarks upon the objectionable practice of permitting police officers to conduct prosecutions in the Sessions Court. Queen v. Ram Chunder Sircar, 13 S. W. R., Cr., R., 18.

The practice of dividing the facts which constitute parts of one offence into several minor offences condemned. Queen v. Sahibut Sheikh, 13 S. W. R., Cr., R., 42.

All applications from Judges and Magistrates for bringing into operation the provisions of Section 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be made through the High Court. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. IX.

In a case within Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which also falls within the scope of Section 308 of the same Code, a Magistrate must conform to the more particular directions of the latter section, not to those of the former. Khan Chand v. The Collector of Boolundshahur, 1, 7 N. W. R., 110.

A Court cannot take cognizance of a bargain to abstain from the prosecution of a person who has committed such an offence as that of willfully giving false evidence. Queen v. Balkishen, 3 N. W. R., 166.

A deaf and dumb prisoner was convicted of an offence. Upon the trial, no attempt was made to communicate with the prisoner respecting the charge against him. The High Court quashed the conviction. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. VII.

There is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for a review of judgment. Queen v. Tiloke Chand and another, 3 N. W. R., 275.

Trial on a Sunday. Irregularity of proceeding, Criminal Procedure Code, Act XXV of 1861.

To enter up findings on every head of charge is not only not illegal but the most convenient course. Where the acts constituting the offence are founded on one single continuous transaction, sentence should only be passed for the principal offence. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLVIII.

After complainant's preliminary examination the case was referred to the Police for report, and complainant had notice that the 6th November to hear the report. On 31st October the Assistant Magistrate dismissed the case upon the report of the Police officer without giving complainant an opportunity to show cause against the dismissal. His order was set aside by the High Court, and he directed to conform to Circular 5 A., dated 7th September, 1868. Bulu Singh v. Kannai Chowdhur, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 2.

As a general rule, one of two parties to an impending suit ought not to put the Criminal Law in motion as against the other in matters connected with the suit; or if he does do, the hearing of the criminal case ought to be postponed until the suit is concluded. But although that is a good ground for questioning the propriety of a prosecution, it is not a ground for questioning the legality of a conviction. Queen v. Achert Lall, 17 S. W. R., Cr., R., 46.

The Deputy Magistrate censured for his precipitancy in dismissing a complaint of a deliberate attempt at extortion, supported as it was by evidence, that there was not sufficient evidence on the record to support the conviction of the accused on either of the charges laid against him. Quere,— (by Mitter, J.) whether the High Court, sitting as a Court of Revision under Section 404 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, can enter into the question whether the view of the evidence taken by the lower Appellate Court is correct or not. Gour Mohun Ghose v. Mohindro Nauth Chatterjee, 13 S. W. R., Cr., R., 78.

In this case the Court declined to say that as a matter of law the Magistrate acted illegally in calling upon complainant to produce proof ex-parte to justify the issue of process, and upon default of such proof in dismissing the charge. Shibu Manja v. Noshee Mookerjee, 17 S. W. R., Cr., R., 3.

The not examining a complainant and not reducing his examination into writing is not such an irregularity as to require the interference of the High Court in a trivial case, unless it appears probable (of which there was no suggestion in the present case) that a fresh investigation would produce a different result. Kabi Nusyo Pyada v. Baharutta, 17 S. W. R., Cr., R., 37.

Application for revision by the High Court of an order passed in appeal by a Sessions Judge must be by motion. Sheikh Hasari v. Chundi Churn Chuckerbutty, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 72.

In a case apparently coming under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, where the complainant has deposed on solemn affirmation, the mere denial of the accused proves nothing. The complainant's witnesses should be examined and the investigation proceeded with. Jungio Khan v. Nuru Chunder Rai, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 63.

A Judge should not refuse to try a prisoner brought up in chains to stand his trial, but the Judge may direct the removal of the fetters, unless satisfied by a representation from the proper officer that they are necessary. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. LXIX.

An accused charged with voluntarily causing hurt and with abetment of that offence was acquitted by the Magistrate of the former offence and convicted of the latter. On appeal to the Sessions Judge, that officer, professing to act under Section 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, convicted the accused of causing hurt, and acquitted him of the abetment. *Simba,—(Phear, J.) that Section 426 is in its terms confined in its operation to cases where error or defect either in the charge or in the proceedings is the foundation on which the alteration of the finding or sentence is brought; and the finding a prisoner guilty without evidence upon one charge, and acquitting him of another charge, against which the evidence is really directed, is not an error or defect in the charge or in the proceedings. Held, (by Mitter, J.) that as the prisoner appealed to the Sessions Judges on the ground that the evidence did not warrant his conviction, and not on the ground of any error or defect in the charge or proceedings, Section 426 did not apply, and the Sessions Judge was not competent under that section to convict the prisoner of an offence of which he had been acquitted by the Magistrate. Held, (by Phear, J.), on a consideration of the evidence, that there was not sufficient evidence on the record to support the conviction of the accused on either of the charges laid against him. Quere,— (by Mitter, J.) whether the High Court, sitting as a Court of Revision under Section 404 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, can enter into the question whether the view of the evidence taken by the lower Appellate Court is correct or not. Gour Mohun Ghose v. Mohindro Nauth Chatterjee, 13 S. W. R., Cr., R., 78.

In a case under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in which the accused had full opportunity given him to answer the case which was made against him, the High Court felt itself precluded by Section 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure from interfering with the judgment of the lower Court, even if it found that there was an irregularity in the proceedings in consequence of the absence of a formal charge. Queen v. Ramdyal Singh, 15 S. W. R., Cr., R., 3.

A private prosecutor cannot move a Court of Sessions under Section 419 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in a case which is not before that Court in appeal, though he may do so under Section 435 of that Code in cases in which the Court of Sessions can interfere. A private prosecutor has no right to be heard before the High Court in a case in which he could not be heard in the Sessions Court. Suduruddun Sircar v. Ramjoo Mosomder, 14 S. W. R., Cr., R., 51.

The plain intention of the Legislature in Section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code was that the Court before which an offence was committed and by which the preliminary enquiry was made should not be the Court to investigate, try, or commit for trial. Queen v. Taraprosad Sahoo, 15 S. W. R., Cr., R., 88.

Where a Magistrate convicted under certain repealed sections of law, the High Court refused to set aside the conviction, having regard to Section
The words "order the attachment of any movable or immoveable property," in Section 184 of the Criminal Procedure Code, are enabling and not restrictive, and the Magistrate may attach both kinds of property. But he must issue his warrant of attachment simultaneously with the proclamation, if he resorts to attachment at all. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLVIII.

Offences punishable under the Penal Code with more than six months' imprisonment are not triable under Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and consequently do not fall within the provisions of Section 271 of that Code. Anonymous case, 4 B. L. R., F. B., 41.

Held, with reference to the provisions of Sections 445A and 445B of Act XIll of 1850, that the chief executive officer of a non-Regulation Province is bound to proceed under the provisions of Act XXV of 1861 in the trial of offences punishable by a Court of Sessions, and that he must try the prisoners with a jury or assessors, even if one of the counts of the charge against the prisoners be in respect of an offence not triable by a Court of Sessions. Queen v. Kishorram Dass, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 59.

Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not applicable where a private individual charges the public with committing a nuisance in the exercise of an admitted right. Becharam Ghoree v. Boisubhnanth Bhooryian, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 177.

A Civil Court may, under Section 171 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, transfer a case to the Criminal Court for investigation, without specifying the particular officer by whom it is to be investigated, and the deposition of the Civil Court officer setting forth the charge on which he transferred the case to the Criminal Court is a sufficient complaint. Queen v. Madhub Chunder Misser, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 45.

No charge for the offence (of keeping a lottery office) under Section 10, Act XXVII of 1870, 294A, can be entertained without the authority of the local government. Queen v. Ngia Cho, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 98; and 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 2.

Under Section 372 of the Code of Criminal Procedure an accused should be called upon to enter upon his defence and to produce his evidence when the case for the prosecution has been brought to a close. Where, therefore, one witness for the prosecution was re-called after the prisoner had made his defence, and the prisoner had no opportunity of calling evidence with reference to the evidence of that witness, the High Court quashed the conviction and ordered a new trial. Queen v. Assanoollah, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 15.

The jurisdiction given by Section 320 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to decide for a time the right to enjoyment of property, should not be exercised except on clear and satisfactory proof. Where the only evidence is that of user, it should be such as to show satisfactorily acts of enjoyment exercised as a matter of right and permitted uninterruptedly for some considerable length of time. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXVI.

Section 273 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is inapplicable to a case referred to a Magistrate under Section 171. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLII.

Circumstances may exist in which a special order of the nature contemplated in Section 152 of the Criminal Procedure Code may properly be passed: for instance, if, in the case into which the police are inquiring, the suspected or confessing parties have voluntarily offered to conduct the police to a place where the stolen property will be found, and such offer cannot be carried into execution within the limited period of twenty-four hours, the power which the above-mentioned section confers on a Magistrate may be rightly exercised.

But to return accused persons to the Police, that they may be forced to give a clue to the stolen property, is to abuse the provisions of Section 152, with a view to the breach of the injunctions of Section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Queen v. Kugnath Pershad, 3 N. W. R., 275.

The actual possession intended by Chapter XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, does not include the occupancy of a mere trespasser. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XII.

Section 270 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies only when a complaint of an offence, triable under Chapter XV of the Code, is dismissed. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLIX.

A Magistrate, proceeding under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is bound to examine any witnesses tendered in support of the respective claims to actual possession of the land in dispute before passing an order. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. IV.

The offences specified in Sections 411 and 414 of the Penal Code cannot be considered as two distinct offences, so as to allow of the procedure of Section 46 of the Criminal Procedure Code being adopted. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XIV.

Where a Judicial Officer from over-anxiety for the due administration of justice in his Court makes a mistake in taking steps against parties whose conduct appears to obstruct the Court of Justice, somewhat too hastily and without due circumspection, it is not to be presumed that he had acted vexatiously in the sense of Section 270 of the Criminal Procedure Code, or otherwise than in perfect good faith. Anonymous, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 506.

2.—RULINGS UNDER SPECIAL ACTS.

A Magistrate has no power under Section 25, Act IX of 1869, to sentence to imprisonment in default of the payment of fine imposed for not paying Income Tax. Queen v. Nodiar Chand Koondro, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 70.

No appeal lies to a Sessions Judge from the order of a Magistrate fining a defaulter under Section 25 of the Income Tax Act IX of 1869. Queen v. Madhoo Dutt, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 71.

The prisoners were sentenced to fines under Sections 21 and 22 of Madras Act III of 1866, and in default of payment of fine to rigorous imprisonment. Held, that as fine in these cases was the only assignable punishment, and, by Sections 30, 31 and 32 a specified procedure is laid down for the levy of the penalty, Section 64 of the Penal Code had no application. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XL.

A sentence of flogging cannot be carried out after the expiry of the limit of 15 days from date of sentence provided in Section 9 of Act VI of 1864. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXVII.

A Railway watchman was charged before a Head Assistant Magistrate with an offence under Section 26 of Act XVIII of 1854. That charge was dismissed, but the Sessions Judge ordered a fresh trial. Held, that in so doing the Sessions Judge acted without jurisdiction. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLII.

Section 34 of Act XVIII of 1854 prescribes the mode in which fines levied under that Act are to be recovered. It is only on the return of the warrant of distress unsatisfied, or on the Magistrate being otherwise satisfied that no sufficient distress exists, that imprisonment can be imposed. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXVII.

On the construction of Section 2 of Act XIII of 1859, Section 47 of that Act is held to be valid and silver money given to an artificer as raw material therewith to make the article contracted for, is an "advance of money" within the meaning of the section. Held also, that a sentence of imprisonment should not be announced beforehand in the order directing performance of the contract, but should follow on a complaint of non-compliance. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIV.

The provisions of Section 61 of the Criminal Procedure Code do not apply to fines imposed under Act XXI of 1856; such fines cannot be levied by distress and sale of the offender's property. Queen v. Jungli Beldar, 8 B. L. R., Ap., 47.

There is no appeal from a conviction under Section 11, Act XIV of 1868, for a registered prostitute neglecting to appear for examination. Re Mukta Bibee, 17 S. W. R., Ct. R., 11.

Held that the committal of the accused to the Court of Session by a Magistrate for trial on a charge under Section 91 of the Indian Registration Act (Act XXI of 1866) was legal. The Session Court was accordingly directed to try the accused. Reg. v. Ravlojiirdv bin Hummunlrdzl, 5 Born. Rep., Cr., 7.

A Subordinate Magistrate has jurisdiction to try a prisoner for an offence under Section 47 of the Indian Post Office Act (Act XIV of 1866). Reg. v. Vithu bin Mdllu, 5 Rom. Rep., Cr., 36.

A Magistrate is not empowered to try an European British subject under Clause 5, Section 83 of Act I of 1859 (the Merchant Shipping Act). 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIII.

The only acts or omissions over which a Magistrate has jurisdiction under Act I of 1858, are those specified in the 1st Section. Cases under Section 6 of the Act are not cognizable by a Magistrate. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXI.

It ought to appear upon the face of a charge that it had been delivered to the Clerk of the Crown by a Justice of the Peace or a Magistrate, but its not so appearing is a formal defect only, to which objection can only be taken under Section 41 of Act XVIII of 1852, before the Jury has been sworn, and it is not ground for arrest of judgment. The Queen v. Thompson, 1 B. L. R., O. Cr., 1.

Where the High Court could have directed the preliminary investigation of a charge against N, by the Deputy Magistrate of Serampore, but it did not appear in the caption of the charge or in evidence that the Court had so directed it.—Held that it was no ground for arrest of judgment, but the objection might have been raised before the Jury was sworn, under Section 41 of Act XVIII of 1852. Queen v. Nabardwp Goswami, 1 B. L. R., O. Cr., 15.

Where it is sought to recover the penalty described in Section 17, Act IX of 1868, from any person who omits to take out a certificate, the Collector, as the person who might have granted the certificate, should prefer a complaint before a Magistrate, and the Collector cannot prefer the complaint before himself in his capacity of Magistrate. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. LXII.

A sentence of rigorous imprisonment under conviction for an offence under Section 48, Act XXIV of 1859, is illegal. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXV.

Certain persons were convicted under Section 13, Act XI of 1857, and sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment and a fine, or in default imprisonment for the term of seven days. No provision is made in the Act for awarding imprisonment in default of payment of fine, but the prisoners were liable under the section to six months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500. The High Court refused to interfere with the sentence passed. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXI.

Where a Magistrate sentenced a person, who had neglected to take out a licence, under Act XXI of 1867, Section 15, and Act XXIX of 1867, Section 3, to pay a fine of ten rupees, and in default of payment to suffer seven days' simple imprisonment, the High Court reversed so much of the sentence as awarded imprisonment, as the trying Magistrate had under the Act no power to make such an order. Reg. v. Chendppa Valad Nagppa, 5 Born. Rep., Cr., 44.

Held that an order passed by a Mamlatdar under Act V of 1864 (Bombay) directing the accused to keep open a right of way to a privy, being in reality an injunction to refrain from disturbing the possession of the parties, was, therefore, within the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar. Reg. v. Krishnasett bin Narayanshet, 5 Born. Rep., Cr., 46.

Imprisonment in default of payment of a fine inflicted under Act (Bombay) VII of 1867, Section 31, ought to be simple not rigorous. Reg. v. Bechar Khushal, 5 Born. Rep., Cr., 43.

Bombay Act VII of 1867, Section 31, became at once operative in all places where a Magistrate was resident, without having been specifically extended thereto by Government notification. Reg. Kru bin Ramzhe, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr. C. P., 100.

The word "Magistrate" in Section 62 of Act XXII of 1855 includes a Subordinate Magistrate; such Magistrate has, therefore, power to try the master of a vessel for an offence committed against Section 46 of that Act. Reg. v. Tungd Tuhd, 5 Born. Rep., Cr., 14.

Conviction and sentence for disobeying an order made by a Mamlatdar, under Bombay Act V of 1864, directing the accused to keep a gateway open, reversed, as the Mamlatdar was not empowered under that Act to make the order. Reg. v. Khandoji bin Tanjaji, 5 Born. Rep., Cr., 21.

Magistrates of all grades are, under Madras Act I of 1865, competent to try persons charged with offences under Section 26 of the Railway Act XXIII of 1856. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. IX.

Recruiters of emigrants charged under Section
By virtue of Section 21 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Subordinate Magistrate of the first class has jurisdiction to try an offence under Section 18 of Act III of 1857 (Cattle Trespass Act), there being no provision in that Act as to the authorities by which offence committed under it are to be tried.

3.—EUROPEAN BRITISH SUBJECT.

The prisoner pleaded that he was a British born subject, and therefore not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge of Tellichery, by whom the prisoner had been convicted of criminal misappropriation.

The evidence showed that the prisoner was the legitimate great-grandson of John Turnbull, said to have been a sergeant in the service of the King or of the East India Company, but was insufficient to establish a lawful marriage between him and a native Christian woman by whom he had a son, and the evidence as to his nationality was also incomplete.

 Held that the plea to the jurisdiction was not made out. T. N. Turnbull, 6 Mad. Rep., 7.

Mode of procedure by a Magistrate with regard to European British subject accused of an offence. Queen v. Robert Sheriff, 6 W. R., Cr., 13.

Whether or not an accused is a European British subject is a matter of fact to be determined judicially by the Court of Session on the evidence, in the event of the prisoner raising that question. Joseph Parks, petitioner, 10 W. R., Cr., 6.

A Deputy Magistrate ought to give an opportunity to a prisoner to plead that he is a European British subject.

The mere statement of a prisoner that he is a European British subject, made before the Deputy Magistrate after the trial was completed, cannot be acted on. Clark v. W. Beane, 5 W. R., Cr., 53.

Where a Magistrate, being also a Justice of the Peace, convicted a British-born subject of mischief under Section 426 of the Indian Penal Code, the High Court annulled the conviction and sentence, and directed the accused to be committed to take his trial before the High Court, unless the complainant withdrew the charge, under Section 271 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Reg. v. Wells, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr., 1.

A Magistrate being also a Justice of the Peace, has no jurisdiction to try a British-born subject under the Penal Code. His jurisdiction in the trial of such subjects is governed and limited by 53 Geo. III, c. 155, s. 105, and Act VII of 1853, neither of which gives him power to award imprisonment in default of payment of a fine. Reg. v. Dixon, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr., 14.

The prisoner was committed to a Criminal Sessions of the High Court for supplying liquor without a license, an act made punishable by Madras Act No. I of 1866.— Held that the High Court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the Act which creates the offence declares it to be punishable by a Magistrate. Holloway, J., dissented from the judgment.

Query.—Whether the Local Legislature has power to enact that a European British subject... shall be punishable by a Magistrate on summary conviction for an offence newly created by the Local Legislature. Regina v. Donoghue, 5 Mad. Rep., 277.

4.—POWERS OF HIGH COURT—(See COURTS AND THEIR OFFICERS.)

The defendant, a European British subject, was charged with having committed three offences at Bangalore, punishable under the Penal Code. Held that the High Court has the same criminal jurisdiction which the late Supreme Court had, and that Bangalore being within the territories of the Maharajah of Mysore, a Native Prince in alliance with the Government of Madras, the defendant was subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court in respect of criminal offences committed in the territory of Mysore. William Dillon Shallard v. James Watkins, 2 Mad. Rep., 444.

The High Court has no jurisdiction to quash the proceedings of a Sessions Judge, and to declare that the Judge acted illegally in making observations upon the Magistrate's order and giving an opinion upon the evidence, while at the same time he admitted that he had no power to interfere. Pel Charrier and others, 5 W. R., Cr., 2.

The High Court cannot interfere with the failure of Judge and Assessors to convict a prisoner of the graver of the two charges against him, however well that graver charge is supported by the evidence. Queen v. Sobul Maker, 5 W. R., Cr., 32.

The High Court (like the Sessions Judge) cannot nullify the verdict of a Jury by interfering to lessen the punishment. Section 405 refers to cases where the offence is proved, but where the punishment inflicted is held to be too severe, and not to cases where the conviction itself is considered improper. Queen v. Bissonath Mitra, 6 W. R., Cr., 6.

The High Court of Madras has no jurisdiction to try offenders for crimes committed in the province of Coorg. William Dillon Shallard v. James Watkins, 2 Mad. Rep., 448.

Under Section 405, Code of Criminal Procedure, the High Court cannot mitigate or remit a sentence passed by a Magistrate, and confirmed in appeal by the Sessions Judge, when there is no error of law in the conviction. Ramdhone Mundul, appellant, 4 W. R., Cr., 15.

Held that there was nothing in the manner in which the district of North Canara was detached from the Madras Presidency and annexed to the Presidency of Bombay, to prevent the Code of Criminal Procedure from operation therein as if it were a part of the Presidency of Bombay, or to deprive a convict, found guilty by the Sessions Judge of the district on the 18th September, 1862, of the right of appeal which he then would have had to the High Court, in virtue of Section 408 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and of 24 & 25 Vict., c. 104, and the Letters Patent (1862) Clause 26. The power given by 16 & 17 Vict., c. 95, to alter the distribution of territories among the presidencies was vested by 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106, in the Secretary of State for India, by whose Order of 28th of February, 1862, North Canara was annexed, the new arrangement of territory to take effect from such date as the Governor-General of India in Council should by proclamation appoint for the purposes of Indian Council's Act, 1861, which Act has reference solely to the constitution and functions of the Legislative Councils, and does not purport to affect in any way the exercise of the general powers of Government, or the administration of justice, and the jurisdiction and authority of the Courts of Justice, the annexation for those purposes being made by the Secretary of State, and not being qualified or controlled by the proviso in Section 47 of 24 & 25 Vict., c. 67, which cannot be construed as a substantive enactment, or as qualifying or restraining the power vested in the Secretary of State.

Meaning of the term "Sudder Court" as defined by Act VIII of 1862, and by Section 19 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Giving an appeal to the High Court under the Criminal Procedure Code is not subjecting a district to the Regulations within the meaning of Regulation II of 1827, Section 16, Clause 2. Reg. v. Vyankatsavm, 2 Bom. Rep. 112.

Held that proceedings under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV of 1861) are judicial proceedings within the meaning of Section 404 of that Act, and that therefore the High Court has power to interfere with an order passed by a Magistrate under such section. Under Section 318 a Magistrate is bound to enquire who is in actual possession, without regard to the question who is legally entitled to possession of the premises in dispute. Bdpur Jyagirvan v. The Magistrate of Kella, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 153.

When an application has been made to a Magistrate for the removal of a wall, under Sections 308 and 320, Code of Criminal Procedure, as affecting the public convenience, the High Court will not compel the Magistrate to proceed under Section 320, and enquire whether the land on which the wall was built was open to the use of the complainant's people. Ram Lall Mookerje, petitioner, 5 W. R., Cr., 66.

In the Sessions Court the prisoners were convicted and sentenced. On appeal to the High Court, the senior Judge held that the case against the prisoners was not proved, and the junior Judge held that there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction. As the two Judges differed in opinion, the conviction was, with reference to Section 36 of the Letters Patent, set aside, and the prisoners released. Queen v. Sheikh Shobhan and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 88.

The drunkenness of a guard or under-guard in charge of a railway train, or any part thereof, is an offence included in Section 35 of Act XVIII of 1862; but the High Court has no jurisdiction to try a prisoner charged with such offence where he was removed from his post at a place outside the local limits, although the train thereupon proceeded with him to Madras. The Queen on the prosecution of the Madras Railway Company v. Jones, 1 Mad. Rep., O. C., 193.

The High Court being a Court of superior jurisdiction, the want of jurisdiction is not to be presumed, but the contrary.

Where the High Court had jurisdiction to try a prisoner for the offence committed, if a charge had been made against him by a person authorized to
The High Court does not exercise its powers of transfer in a case of forgery or perjury solely on the ground that the judge who is to try the case has been prejudiced; that the evidence for the prosecution and such appealable to the judicial Commissioner; that the proper form of the order in such a case was that the woman should return to her husband and live with him; and that the only way in which such an order could be enforced was by imprisonment of the wife and attachment of her property, or both, under Section 205, Act VIII of 1854. This power conferred by Section 224, being one which can only be exercised in cases which come within the terms of that section.

When there is evidence to be considered and weighed by the Court which is called upon to determine whether a person charged with an offence or offences is guilty or not guilty, an error as to the probable force and effect of the evidence is one of fact, and not open to correction except on appeal, in the case of conviction. Where the prisoners were charged with culpable homicide amounting to murder, and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and the Sessions Court convicted the latter offence, and the High Court were of opinion that the evidence established the charge of culpable homicide amounting to murder,—held that the High Court had not the power as a Court of Revision, under Section 405 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to order a new trial. 5 Mad. Rep. Rul. X.

The High Court does not exercise its powers of transfer in a case of forgery or perjury solely on the ground that the Judge is to try the case has formed an opinion that the document has been forged or the perjury committed. But when the transfer can be made without risk of any improper interference with the course of justice, and without much inconvenience to the parties and witnesses, the transfer would be proper, not only as a fair concession to the accused person, but as a means of relieving the Judge from a position which he would himself desire to avoid. Armachalla Reddi, 5 Mad. Rep., 212.

The severity of a sentence is not of itself a ground on which the High Court can call for the record of a trial or other judicial proceedng, under the general power of revision, given by Section 404 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Narapureddy, Rumarddy, and Vakkala Adanna, 4 Mad. Rep., 242.

The High Court, as a Court of Revision, has jurisdiction to set aside a finding of acquittal by a cession to the accused person, but as a means of relieving the Judge from a position which he would find it necessary to avoid. Reg. v. Dhona Bhoojee, 5 B. L. R., 658; 14 S. W. R., Cr., 33.

Held that no appeal lies where the sentence of imprisonment, and of further imprisonment in default of payment of a fine, does not in the aggregate exceed the term of one month. Reg. v. Shankar Venkaji and another, 3 Bom. Rep., Cr., 15.

A Sessions Judge, in trying an appeal, has to look to the offence, as charged, of which the accused has been found guilty, and to determine whether it is proved or not. He has nothing to do with the form the offence may take owing to subsequent events. A conviction for an offence for which the accused was tried will not prevent his conviction, if guilty, of another distinct offence subsequently committed. Ramjee Dos v. Messejan Sheik, 9 W. R., Cr., 65.

Held (Markby, J., dissenting) that no appeal lies from the order of a Magistrate under Section 316 of Act XXV of 1861, directing a man to pay a monthly allowance for the support of his illegitimate child. Reg. v. Golam Hassein Chowdhry, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 88; 7 W. R., Cr., 10.

The High Court has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from a conviction and sentence by the Superintendent of Cachar in his capacity of Magistrate of the district. Queen v. Radhakishen Sein, W. R., 1864, Cr., 18.

In a case of dismissal of complaint by a Deputy Magistrate it was held that a prosecutor had no right of appeal, but ought to have moved the Magistrate to procure, under Section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a reversal by the High Court of the order of dismissal. Lyall and Co. v. Sam Mundle, W. R., 1864, Cr., 23.

A person tried by a Jury is entitled to an appeal on the facts, if the offence was committed before the passing of the Penal Code. Queen v. Girish Chunder Bundoo, 6 W. R., Cr., 1.

There is no right of appeal because the united sentences in three separate cases amount to more than a month’s imprisonment. Queen v. Morly Sheik, 6 W. R., Cr., 51.

No appeal upon the merits can be entertained from a conviction which was based on no legal evidence, and which was absolutely bad in law. Queen v. Poorno Chunder Doss and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 59.

In a case tried by a Jury, unless the parties who appeal point out in what respect the law has been contravened, the appeal should be rejected. Queen v. Gopat Bhorewalla, 1 W. R., Cr., 21.

Objections to the sufficiency of evidence are not a ground of appeal. The deposition of a single credible witness is sufficient in law. Queen v. Mud-dun Sirdar and others, 2 W. R., Cr., 3.

Pleas that the prosecutor is at feud with the prisoner, and the prisoner's confession was given at the instance of the police, are not grounds of appeal. Queen v. Gopal Doss, 2 W. R., Cr., 5.

Petitions of appeal to the High Court must be presented within 60 days. Queen v. Sreemutty Surno, 4 W. R., Cr., 31.

Convictions under the Police Act V of 1861 are appealable like other convictions. Where the appellants are convicted by an officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate, and sentenced to imprisonment exceeding the limit prescribed by Section 411 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the appeal lies to the Sessions Court. Thakoor Doss v. Godi Sheikh, 5 W. R., Cr., 22.

An appeal preferred out of time, and without any explanation of the delay, may be rejected at once, under Section 415 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Hulldhor Ghose, 5 W. R., Cr., 40.

There is no right of appeal to the Privy Council in Criminal cases. Jaykissen Mookerjee, petitioner, 1 W. R., P. C., 13.

The order of a Sessions Judge under Section 354 of the Code of Criminal Procedure fining an Assessor is not appealable, nor liable to be interfered with by the High Court under Section 404 of that Code. Gour Suran Dass, petitioner, 8 W. R., Cr., 83.

In computing the time within which it is competent to a defendant to appeal against the sentence of a Magistrate, the number of days taken by the Court to prepare a copy of the sentence should be omitted. Toti Chengun, 6 Mad. Rep., 349.

Upon an appeal from a sentence passed by a Magistrate, the Sessions Judge remanded the case for the purpose of additional evidence being taken by the lower Court. Such evidence having been taken by the Magistrate, the case was returned to the Appellate Court. The Sessions Judge then disposed of the case in the manner prescribed by Section 419 of the Criminal Procedure Code. On an application by the prisoner to the High Court to be allowed to appeal on the merits of the case under Section 408, Act XXV of 1861,—Heled, no appeal lay to the High Court on the merits. Dhanobor Ghose, in the matter of the petition of, 6 B. L. R., 483, and 15 S. W. R., Cr., 33.

Every facility should be allowed to prisoners to enable them to prepare their petition of appeal. Nitto Gopaul Pawlit, Dinnobundoo Surmoker, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 69.

No appeal lies to the High Court, under Act XXXVII of 1865, from a conviction by the Deputy Commissioner of the Sonthal Pergunnahs. Queen v. Boydonauth Mookerjee, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 11.

Criminal appeals to the High Court may be disposed of by single Judges. No second petition of appeal can be allowed to be considered after a first one has been rejected by a single Judge. Queen v. Chandra Joogi, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 47.

In disposing of an appeal the Magistrate at first reversed the Sub-Magistrate's decision and directed the release of the appellant; subsequently he recalled this order and confirmed the Sub-Magistrate's decision. Heled that the second order of the Magistrate ought to be set aside, and the original order restored. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. VII1.

When an Appellate Court directs further evidence to be taken by a Subordinate Court under Section 422 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is competent to the Subordinate Court before which such evidence is given, if any offence against public justice, as described in Section 169, is committed before such Court by a witness whose evidence is being recorded therein, to send the case for investigation to a Magistrate under the provisions of Section 419 of the Code. The words "whether for the decision of such cases in the first instance or an appeal, or for commitment to any other Court or officer," in Section 11 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, are not an exhaustive enumeration of the functions of Criminal Courts. Queen v. Baktiar Maifazar, 6 B. L. R., 698, and 15 S. W. R., Cr., 64.

Appeals from convictions on trials by Jury, where illegal evidence has been admitted, should be dealt with on the same principles as appeals in which there has been a misdirection by the Judge, or an omission on his part to give the Jury proper directions.

The Appellate Court, where it finds that illegal evidence has been admitted, should consider whether it is such as is likely to have exercised prejudicial influence on the minds of the Jury, and if the Court be of opinion that it is so, it will treat the case as if it had been tried by a Sessions Judge with the aid of assessors. If the evidence (after omitting that portion of it which should not have been admitted) is sufficient to sustain the verdict, the conviction will be upheld.

In exceptional cases, where the evidence is of such a character as to suggest the consideration that its real value cannot fairly be appreciated except by a Court which has heard that evidence given, a new trial will be directed. Reg. v. Ramsami Madliar, 8 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 47.

Where several persons were tried together and convicted under Section 147 of the Indian Penal Code of rioting, and two of them were sentenced to pay each a fine of Rs. 50, or in default of payment to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a month, and the others were sentenced to a severer punishment, the Sessions Judge entertained an appeal by all the prisoners, being of opinion that the test, under Section 411 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as to whether a case is appealable, is the maximum sentence passed in it.

The High Court annulled the order of the Sessions Judge passed with reference to those of the accused who had been only fined Rs. 50, and restored the original sentences passed upon them. Reg. v. Kálubhái Meghálhái et al. 7 Bom Rep., Cr., 35.

An appeal from a sentence passed by an officer in a Non-Regulation District invested with the powers mentioned in Section 445A, Act VII1 of
7. - POWERS OF SESSIONS JUDGES.

The Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to annul a conviction, and order a commitment for an offence triable by a Magistrate. Section 435, Act VIII of 1869, relates to offences triable by the Sessions Judge. In the case of Waizur Singh, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 65; S. C., 12 W. R., Cr., 48. The point referred on an appeal to the Sessions Court by Section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure extends only to offences not triable by a Magistrate, and regarding which the accused has been discharged by the Magistrate. Queen v. Jesteun Khan and another, 11 W. R., Cr., 45.

A Sessions Judge cannot, on appeal from a Magistrate's decision, inflict a term of imprisonment in commutation of a fine longer than that which the Magistrate himself could have inflicted. Reg. v. Hasrul, 1 Pet. Rep., 139.

A lower Court has no power to quash its own conviction, though illegal. Banowree Bhobea and Thandeo, 6 W. R., Cr., 70.

A Sessions Judge is competent, under Section 435, Code of Criminal Procedure, to order the committal of a person accused of giving false evidence after the discharge of such person by the Magistrate, Section 359 notwithstanding (dissentient, Kemp, J.). Queen v. Bhosian Mahatoon, W. R., 1864, Cr., 3.

It is only when a Court subordinate to a Court of Session convicts a person of an offence not triable by such Court, that the Court of Session can annul the conviction and sentence.

If the prisoner is guilty of an offence beyond the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Court, the Court of Session should refer the case to the High Court. Queen v. Ichabur Dobey, 4 W. R., Cr., 11.

A Sessions Judge has no authority to enhance a sentence on appeal. Queen v. Baloram Doss, 4 W. R., Cr., 26.

A Sessions Judge is quite competent on appeal to reverse a conviction by a Deputy Magistrate, if he thinks that the evidence is insufficient to establish a criminal offence against the prisoner. Punchanum Bistwals, 5 W. R., Cr., 56.

A Sessions Judge has discretion to order the commitment to the Court of Session of any accused person discharged by the Magistrate. The non-exercise of such discretion cannot be interfered with by the High Court. Queen v. Sheelaram Chowdhry, 2 W. R., Cr., 44.

The offence of giving false evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding is not cognizable by an Assistant Magistrate. A Sessions Judge in appeal can quash an illegal conviction by an Assistant Magistrate in such a case. Queen v. Heeramun Singh, 8 W. R., Cr., 30.

 Held that a Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the order of a Magistrate, under Section 319, Chapter XXII of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the object of the Chapter is to prevent breaches of the peace likely to be occasioned, and not the adjudication of title. Dutt Ram Misr, petitioner, 1 Agra Rep., Cr., 29.

The Sessions Court has jurisdiction to hear appeals from the sentences of a Justice of the Peace acting under the Merchant Seamen's Act (No. 1 of 1859). William Martin Evans and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 473.

The Sessions Court of Bellary has no jurisdiction under the Penal Code to try native subjects of the Zagirdar, or Rajah, of Sundoor for offences committed in the plateau of Ramandoorg upon native inhabitants of the village of Ramandoorg. Ramandoorg is a portion of the territory of Sundoor, and the Rajah is in the position of a native chief or ruler.

A treaty entered into by the late Rajah of Sundoor with the Government of Madras contained the following stipulation —

"It being probable that, as European officers take up their residence on the said hill, many servants, tradesmen, private persons, and others will reside there, I have relinquished to the Company's Government the police and magisterial functions of maintaining peace, and trying and punishing offences committed by such people, such as violence, petty crimes, theft, murder, &c. The Collector is to have jurisdiction in such matters."

 Held that this treaty did not give the Sessions Court of Bellary jurisdiction, but it surrendered exclusive criminal jurisdiction over a limited class of persons, namely, Europeans and their servants, and all other resident persons, not native subjects of the Rajah, and left the Government unfettered to provide in the way they deemed right for the trial and punishment of offences committed by such persons. The Queen v. Vencanna and Narasara, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 354.

The Civil Judge made an order, under Sections 170 and 171 of the Penal Code, directing the Magistrate to investigate whether certain documents used before the Sudder Ameen were forged, and if so by whom. Held that he had jurisdiction to make the order, notwithstanding the Sudder Ameen had been applied to and had refused to make a similar order. Radhanath Banerjee v. Kungates Mullath and others, Mad. Cr., 456.

A Sessions Judge ought not to refer to the High Court, under Section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the case of a prisoner who has appealed to him, but should decide it himself. Sreekishen v. Jughul and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 5.

The Assistant Magistrate having decided a case without examining the witnesses for the defence named by the prisoners, the Sessions Judge, on appeal, ordered the evidence of those witnesses to be taken by the Assistant Magistrate. Their depositions having been returned to him, the Sessions Judge proceeded to deal with the case under Section 422 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and, convicting all the prisoners, confirmed the judgment and sentence passed by the Assistant Magistrate.

 Held that the judgment of the Sessions Judge (though in form confirming the Assistant Magistrate's judgment and sentence) was in substance an original judgment, and that under Section 408 an appeal lay from it to the High Court upon the merits. Queen v. Mohesh Chunder Chuttophadha and others, 2 W. R., Cr., 13.

A Judge is bound to state in his judgment the evidence on which he convicts. Queen v. Ishur Manjeet, 5 W. R., Cr., 17.

Under Sections 379 and 382, Code of Criminal Procedure, a Sessions Judge should sum up the evidence on both sides, and record the ground of his decision, and the sentence, when passed, should be recorded in a certain specified form. Queen v. Arv Kailash, 4 W. R., Cr., 18.

The grounds of a Sessions Judge's decision should be given in English, and a memorandum recorded, in accordance with Section 382, Code of Criminal Procedure, setting forth the precise offence of which the prisoner is convicted. Queen v. Bhokaneshkur Gossamy, 4 W. R., Cr., 19.

It is the duty of a Sessions Judge to explain to the Jury the legal construction to be put upon a document adduced in evidence. Queen v. Setul Chunder Bagchash, 3 W. R., Cr., 69.

Where an accused was charged before the Sessions Judge under both Section 409, Penal Code, and under the Special Law, Section 29, Act V of 1862, and was acquitted under the former section, it was held that the Sessions Judge could not convict under the latter law, that the Magistrate alone had jurisdiction to convict under that law. Bhobab Singh, prisoner, 9 W. R., Cr., 36.

A Sessions Judge has no authority under the law to interfere with the order of a Magistrate allowing a prosecution for false evidence. Gopal Mazumdar v. Hurro Soondery Boisnatee, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 69.

In a case in which the prisoner was charged with murder, and he made a confession that he did strike the deceased with a stick, the Sessions Judge, after considering the evidence, discredited the confession and the evidence except that of the medical officer and discharged the prisoner, not considering it necessary that the case should go before a Jury. Held that the Sessions Judge had no right to pronounce his own judgment on the credibility of the evidence, and to withdraw the consideration of the due weight to be given to the evidence to the Jury. Queen v. Hurro Saha, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 20.

Where a Magistrate has convicted and sentenced a prisoner of an offence which such Magistrate was competent to try, and the Sessions Judge considered the case so gross that it should not have been disposed of summarily.—Held that such Sessions Judge was not competent to direct the Magistrate to commit the prisoner to the Sessions Court for trial upon the same charge. Queen v. Huddan Khan, 2 N. W. R., Cr., 285.

The Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to try a case of abetting false personation of a witness before a Registrar of Assurances, under Section 95 of the Registration Act (XX of 1866). The word "instituted" in that section should be construed to mean "commenced." Queen v. Shegolam Dass, 6 B. L. R., 692, and 15 S. W. R., Cr., 58.

Held that a Sessions Judge has no power to quash a sentence passed by an Assistant Judge, and by him submitted for confirmation, and to direct a new sentence to be passed, even supposing the sentence of the Assistant Sessions Judge to be illegal. Held, also, when more than one offence is proved, it is not proper to convict only of one and to acquit of the other, although the offence may be cognate. Reg. v. Marár Srikam, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 3.

The Sessions Court at Patna was held to have jurisdiction to try the offence of abetment of waging war against the Queen, though the waging of war did not take place in Patna, the rule of law as to abetment being that, when parties concert together and have a common object, the act of one of the parties done in furtherance of the common object and in pursuance of the concerted plan is the act of the whole.

The jurisdiction of the Sessions Court at Patna was not affected by the erroneous statement in the charge of the abetment having taken place at Calcutta, when the evidence was sufficient to show the abetment at Patna; such erroneous statement being an error or defect in the charge which is cured by Section 496 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The issue of a warrant of commitment by the Governor-General in Council, under Regulation III, 1818, cannot be treated in the nature of a conviction of the person so placed under personal restraint, so as to give immunity to the person so committed and afterwards discharged from all political offences committed before that period, on the ground that he has already been tried, convicted, and punished. Queen v. Ameer Khan, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 75.

A Court of Session has no power to interfere under Section 435 of Act XXV of 1861 with an order of a Magistrate permitting a prosecution under Section 163 of Act XXV of 1861. Gopal Mazumdar v. Haro Sundari Baistam, 8 B. L. R., Apr., 20.

Where the Sessions Judge is of opinion that a Subordinate Magistrate has convicted the defendant of an offence which the Subordinate Magistrate has no power to try, the Sessions Judge may, under Section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, annul the conviction and direct the committal of the accused for trial. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXII.

8.—POWERS OF MAGISTRATES.

(a) Magistrate of the District.

Held that the Magistrate of a district, to whom a case has been sent for investigation by a Civil Court, has no power to refer it to a Magistrate, F. P., and the latter has therefore, under such circumstances, no jurisdiction to take up the case without complaint made to him. Reg. v. Dip Chand Khusal, 4 Bom. Rep. Q. C. J., 30.

A case originating with a Magistrate of the district must, under Section 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, be disposed of by the Magistrate himself, and cannot be referred to a Subordinate Magistrate. Hossein Manjeet, prisoner, 9 W. R., Cr., 70.
382 CRIMINAL COURTS—POWERS OF MAGISTRATES.

Government may by proclamation declare and direct that an Assistant Collector in charge of the Collectorate during the absence of the Collector shall be, during that period, "the officer in charge with the executive administration of the districts in criminal matters;" and such officer being, within the meaning of Section 14 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate of the district, may hear appeals from Subordinate Magistrates under Section 412 of the Code. Reg. v. Bhaishankar Hariram, 3 Bom. Rep., C.A., 18.

On a reference by a Sessions Judge, circulars issued by a District Magistrate forbidding all the Subordinate Magistrates from taking up cases, if they thought they should have to act under the provisions of Section 277 of the Criminal Procedure Code, were annulled as beyond the competence of the District Magistrate, and based on a misunderstanding of Section 277. Reg. v. Gaunbin Raguk and others, 3 Bom. Rep., C.A., 29.

A Deputy Magistrate examined the report of a police officer, cannot, under Section 273 of the Criminal Procedure Code, refer such case to a Magistrate F.P. Reg. v. Krishnad Parashram & Co., 5 B. R., Cr. R., 69.

A Magistrate of the District has no power to direct a Subordinate Magistrate to commit for trial in the Sessions Court accused persons who have been discharged by the Subordinate Magistrate, and such committal when made by the Subordinate Magistrate is illegal. The Sessions Court is the only authority empowered by law to direct a committal, 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXI.

The power which a Magistrate of a division of a district, has to issue a summons, without any complaint, is not affected by the circumstance that the offence with which the accused was charged came to the knowledge of the Magistrate, otherwise than through a petition which was presented against the accused. Bisseshur Roy v. Harpurshud Singh and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 1.

Held that, under the provisions of Section 23 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate, F.P., is, for the purposes of Section 434, immediately subordinate to the Magistrate of the District, and not to the Court of Session. Reg. v. Kesavusket et al., 6 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 74.

The temple of Pandharupur, a public temple, is visited at certain periods of the year by a large concourse of pilgrims. With a view to prevent the dangers arising from overcrowding, and to improve the ventilation, the Magistrate, F. P., by a written order, under Section 62 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directed the hereditary priests of the temple to widen and heighten the doorway,—Held that such order was legal under the above section.

Seems,—That the case would have been the same had the temple been private property; and also that the power of Magistrates to issue orders under the section in question is entirely discretionary. Reg. v. Ram Chandra Ek Nath et al., 6 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 36.

A Magistrate, F.P., is not immediately subordinate to the Sessions Court, and therefore a Sessions Judge has no concurrent jurisdiction with the Magistrate of the District, under Section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. His proper course, if he thinks that an illegal sentence or order has been passed by a Magistrate, F. P., is to make a report to the High Court, which will then, if it thinks fit, call for the proceedings, under Section 404. Reg. v. Sghabodep, 7 Bom. Rep. Cr. Ca., 73.

Held that a Magistrate F. P., though empowered to hear appeals, is not thereby placed in the position of the Magistrate of the District, and that, therefore, subordinate Magistrates should not refer cases, under Section 276 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to such Magistrate, but to the Magistrate of the District, to whom alone they are subordinate. Reg. v. Bhagulam Sghabbaj, 5 B. R., Cr. R., 47.

Held that the power conferred upon the Magistrate F. P., at Broach, to hear appeals, does not exclude the jurisdiction which the Magistrate of the District has by law, and that the proceedings in any case in which a prisoner has appealed from the decision of a Subordinate Magistrate to the District Magistrate, must be forwarded to the latter. Reg. Umsgh Rughndh, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 8.

Per Ainslie, J.—A Magistrate as an executive officer, is not bound to attend to a Judge's extra-judicial observation not warranted by law. Gommenee and others, 17 S. W. R., Cr., R., 59.

Under Section 273 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a full-power Magistrate may refer for enquiry to a Subordinate Magistrate (criminal cases, that is, prima facie, any criminal case). The reference may be for enquiry or for trial by the Sub-Magistrate, or with a view to commitment either to a Court of Session or the High Court. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XL.

The Sessions Judge on appeal reversed a conviction passed by a Magistrate, F. P., of an offence under Section 182 of the Penal Code (which the Magistrate, F. P., was competent to try), and directed the Magistrate, F. P., to institute proceedings against the accused under Section 211; considering that, on the complaint which had been made to him, the Magistrate, F. P., was bound to institute proceedings under the latter section. The High Court reversed that part of the order of the Sessions Judge which directed the Magistrate, F. P., to institute proceedings, as the case did not fall within Section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and there was no provision of law giving the Judge jurisdiction to make such an order. Reg. v. Gopal Lakshman and Gunput Beihajji, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 25.

(c) Magistrates and Joint Magistrates.

Under Section 66, Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate is bound to examine the complainant and record his deposition, and then to pass orders for summons or otherwise as may be necessary. Nilmony Bhuttacharjee on the part of Kaminie Soodoory Debey, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 68.

A Magistrate ought not to use a lithographed stamp of his signature. Queen v. Dedar Nushyo, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 81.

A Magistrate to whom the case of a person charged with giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding is transferred for investigation, cannot commit to the Sessions without himself recording evidence and examining the complainant and his witnesses in the presence of the accused. Queen v. Ramdhone Singh, 11 W. R., Cr., 22.

Where a false statement is made in a stage of a judicial proceeding before a Magistrate, he ought not to convict under Section 181 of the Penal Code, but should commit to the Sessions under Section 193 of that Code. Where an appeal is preferred to a Sessions Judge from the order of a Magistrate which he considers illegal, the Sessions Judge should himself deal with the case, instead of referring it to the High Court under Section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Nusseeroodeen Shasufal, 11 W. R., Cr., 14.

Although a Civil Court acted irregularly in sending to the Magistrate for investigation a case of using or attempting to use false evidence when no suit was pending in that Court, yet as the Court had given its sanction to the prosecution of the offence,—Held that it was in the competency of the Magistrate, under Section 68 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, even without a charge or complaint, to proceed to investigate, and, if necessary, to commit for trial to the Sessions Court. Queen v. Doorag Nath Roy and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 9.

In the case of a prosecution under Act XX of 1866, a Magistrate has full power to entertain and finally adjudicate on the charge, and is not bound to commit to the Sessions. The words in Section 95 of that Act, "all prosecutions under this Act shall be instituted before a person exercising the powers of a Magistrate," being interpreted to mean that the whole of a criminal trial from complaint to adjudication shall be carried out before and by the same person. In re Askanoollah and others, petitioners, 10 W. R., Cr., 21.

A Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence under Section 174, Penal Code, committed against his own Court. Queen v. Gugun Misser, 8 W. R., Cr., 61.

A Magistrate cannot, under Section 62, Criminal Procedure Code, interfere with the civil right of a landowner to establish huts within his estate, and to hold them on any day most convenient to him. Sheeb Chunder Bhuttacharjee v. Saadut Ally Khan, 4 W. R., Cr., 13.

A Magistrate only, and not a Sessions Judge, has power to try cases under Section 29, Act V of 1861. Indrohrn Thaba, appellant, 1 W. R., Cr., 5.

A Magistrate can maintain a chowkeedar in the possession of his chakeran land (i.e., land set apart for his subsistence by his zemindar). Any such order of the Magistrate is appealable to the Superintendent of Police. Queen v. Zemindar of Colong, 1 W. R., Cr., 12.

Where a Magistrate made an order for the removal of a shed as being an obstruction to a thoroughfare under Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the owner of the shed on disobeying that order was fined under Section 291 of the Penal Code,—Held that no suit would lie in the Civil Court to establish the owner's right to keep up the shed. Bakas Ram Shahoo v. Chunnum Ram, 7 W. R., 11.

Bhola Das, 1 W. R., 324.
Under the Code of Criminal Procedure a Magistrate has only jurisdiction to entertain a criminal charge, either when a complaint is made before him by a person properly qualified to complain and prosecute, or when he himself of his own knowledge and discretion starts the proceedings in cases in which he has such power given him.
Where, therefore, a Registrar, under Act XX of 1866, transferred a complaint made before him to the Magistrate’s Court, and afterwards himself, sitting as Magistrate, ordered the matter to be made over to the Police, it was held that this did not the Criminal Procedure Code. In the matter of

On a reference by a Sessions Judge in reviewing the monthly magisterial returns,—Held that a conviction and sentence recorded by a Magistrate under Section 50 of Act XVII of 1854 (corresponding with Section 48 of the Act of 1866) were illegal, as the Magistrate had no jurisdiction finally to dispose of the case, but was bound to commit it for trial before the Court of Sessions. Reg. v. Atenaram
If a complaint is duly made before a Magistrate,

W. R., Cr., 1.
The discretion of a Magistrate, under Section 202, Code of Criminal Procedure, to ask questions of an accused, is entirely unfettered, though an examination under that section should not be of an inquisitorial nature, and a Magistrate should inform the accused that he is not bound to answer. Answers to questions under that section are admissible in evidence, even if the Magistrate has omitted to warn the accused he need not answer. Queen v.

The power of a Magistrate to delegate the re-

Under Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a Magistrate has no power to issue an order ex parte to cut down trees, on the representation of a party, supported by the report of the police that the existence of the trees was a nuisance. Queen v. Ram Chandra Mookerjee, 5 B. L. R., 131.

The head of a village is within the definition of a Magistrate as defined in Section 15 of the Criminal Procedure Code. *4 Mad. Rep., Rul. 11.

Under Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a Magistrate cannot pass a prohibitory order without having previously issued a rule to show cause why the order should not be passed. Queen v. Rai Lachnipat Singh, 5 B. L. R., Ap., 81; 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 17.

A Magistrate has no power under Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to issue any order which is by its very nature irrevocable. All that he has power to compel the owner of property to do, is to take certain order with it. Such power does not extend to an order to cut down a large quantity of trees. Uttam Chunder Chatterjee v. Ram Chunder Chatterjee, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 72.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a sum of money, deposited under Section 228 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for the refund of which an application was made, to be credited to Government. *6 Mad. Rep., Rul. IX.

The prisoner was convicted under Section 475 of the Penal Code, and having been previously convicted of an offence punishable under Chapter XVII of the Code, the Magistrate sentenced him to four years' rigorous imprisonment. Held, that the Magistrate had power to pass sentence of two years' imprisonment only. *6 Mad. A Magistrate has no power to seize the property of a person convicted, has not been directed to pay a fine; nor has a Magistrate power to take property from one defendant and give it to another defendant. *4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXVIII.

On receipt of a petition from the complainant, the Magistrate, without examining him, and reducing his examination into writing, and obtaining his signature thereto, or appending his own signature as Magistrate, referred the petition to a Deputy Magistrate for trial. *The Deputy Magistrate tried and convicted the accused. On a reference from the Session Judge, on the ground that the proceedings were irregular, under Section 66, Act XXV of 1861, and that therefore the order of the Deputy Magistrate was without jurisdiction,—Held that the petition was sufficient, and that the Magistrate was justified in making over the petition to a Deputy Magistrate, who had the full powers of a Magistrate for enquiry and trial. Queen v. Umeschandra Chowdry, 5 B. L. R., 160, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 1.

(d) Assistant and Subordinate Magistrates.

A Subordinate Magistrate of the 1st Class has no power, under Section 45 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to award any greater sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine than six weeks in the case of persons convicted of being members of an unlawful assembly. Phoolman Tewary v. Satram Ojha and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 51.

A Deputy Collector having committed an agent for false verification of a plaint, the Assistant Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in taking security from the agent for the appearance of his principals before obtaining the sanction of the Deputy Collector to proceed against the principal. In re Indro Chunder Bose, 4 W. R., Cr., 7.

*Semble,—When a charge is dismissed by a Subordinate Magistrate without enquiry, a Magistrate has no power, under Section 435 of Act VIII of 1869, to order a trial before another Magistrate, but can only order a commitment to the Court of Session. Queen v. Hiralal Singh, 5 B. L. R., Ap., 48; 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 8.

Where the proceedings of an Assistant Magistrate are submitted to the Magistrate under Section 277 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the prisoner has a right to be present at the proceedings before the Magistrate under that section, and to be heard in his defence. *Queen v. A Subordinate Magistrate has no power to try an offence punishable under Section 174 of the Penal Code committed against his own Court, but is bound, under Section 171 of the Code of Cri-
An objection was taken before the Sessions Judge in the hearing of an appeal that the Head Assistant Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case, he having a distinct local jurisdiction which did not include the town where the offence was committed. It appeared that the Head Assistant Magistrate had received general instructions from the Magistrate of the district, as a temporary arrangement, to take up criminal cases arising within the limits of the said term, which was not within his division. Held, upon these facts, that the Head Assistant Magistrate had no jurisdiction. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XIX.

A Subordinate Magistrate has no power to order a recognizance executed by a prosecutor before a police-station officer, binding himself to appear before the Subordinate Magistrate to be forfeited on the failure of the prosecutor to appear. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XVIII.

The legality or formality of the mode of attachment allowed by a Civil Court is not a matter for a Deputy Magistrate's consideration. Where a Deputy Magistrate, considering that the attachment of a carriage in execution of a decree of a Civil Court was illegal, because it was placed in the custody of the judgment-debtor's husband, and that the husband had acted fraudulently in recovering and concealing the wheels and axles of the carriage on its subsequent dismantling for arrears of municipal tax, convicted him of an offence under Section 424 of the Penal Code, the conviction was set aside. Queen v. Brojo Kishore Dutt, 8 W. R., Cr., 57.

Where a charge was preferred before a Deputy Magistrate against certain persons of having come armed with swords and with large reinforc and torches, and of having entered the complainant's house by night and carried off thence a large amount of property, the Deputy Magistrate on the evidence convicted the parties of house-trespass under Section 448 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Shadry, 1 W. R., Cr., 34.

Where a charge was preferred before a Deputy Magistrate against certain persons of having come armed with swords and with large reinforc and torches, and of having entered the complainant's house by night and carried off thence a large amount of property, the Deputy Magistrate on the evidence convicted the parties of house-trespass under Section 448 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Shadry, 1 W. R., Cr., 34.
Held that the Deputy Magistrate had neither convicted nor discharged any person of an offence not triable by him; that he had jurisdiction to try the offence charged; and that the sentence passed was within his competency. Pakhee Singh and Bajnath Singh, 6 W. R., Cr., 70.

A Deputy Magistrate has no jurisdiction under Section 320 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to order a ditch which was once a pathway, but afterwards filled up, to be opened out, and a wall to be pulled down, which had been built upon it before any complaint was made about filling up the ditch.

Even if he had jurisdiction, no such order should be passed without legal proof that the ditch and pathway had been open to the use of the public and of the prosecutor. Sreekrunto Duklon v. Ramchand Aduck, 5 W. R., Cr., 57.

A Deputy Magistrate cannot try a case which includes a complaint of wrongful confinement and extortion, but should follow the rule laid down in Section 276 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Chamoosunder Ghosal, 3 W. R., Cr., 28.

A Magistrate may direct a Deputy Magistrate, vested with the full powers of a Magistrate, to pass proper orders in a case of disputed possession of land decided by him under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, but he cannot withdraw the case from the file of the Deputy Magistrate, and, instituting a fresh case, dispose of it himself. Queen v. Jugjogundoo Sircar and John Stevenson, 3 W. R., Cr., 53.

A Deputy Magistrate exercising the full powers of a Magistrate has jurisdiction, under Section 29, Act V of 1861, to fine police officers for violation of duty. Anonymous, 4 W. R., Cr., 2.

Where a Deputy Magistrate has once made an order transferring a case for trial to the Magistrate, he has no power to cancel the order, and replace the case on his own file. The Queen v. Chunder Shekur Roy, 12 W. R., Cr., 18.

A Deputy Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try and convict, as for theft, persons whose offence is in reality that of dacoity. He can only commit them to the Sessions. Shekur Roy v. Ajzal Aheer and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 49.

The jurisdiction of a Deputy Magistrate competent to try the offence charged is not affected by the previous conviction of the prisoner. In re Shekhi Booluck, 5 W. R., Cr., 53.

S. T. brought a charge of theft against B. before a Magistrate. The case was made over to the Deputy Magistrate, on whose suggestion the Magistrate ordered that there should be a Police enquiry. The Police Superintendent reported that in his opinion the charge was false, and that the plaintiff should be summoned for bringing a false charge; and the Magistrate, while declaring that he would not encourage charges of "false complaint," said that the injured party might swear an information if she chose. S. T. then petitioned to be allowed to call witnesses in support of her charge of theft, and objected to the Police proceedings; and that the sentence passed was within his competency. Pakhee Singh and Bajnath Singh, 6 W. R., Cr., 70.

A Deputy Magistrate, who without reason causes delay in proceeding with the trial of persons whom he keeps in jail, is liable, notwithstanding Act XVII of 1850, to an action for damages if the prisoners are eventually acquitted. By Section 22 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate may, by a written order, from time to time adjourn an enquiry for a period not exceeding fifteen days. Queen v. Shakhon and another, 11 W. R., Cr., 19.

A Magistrate has no power, under Section 273 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to refer a case of grievous hurt for trial to a Deputy Magistrate, having only the powers of a subordinate Magistrate of the second class. Gobinda Chunder Daswar v. Hem Chandra Barder, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 115.

A Deputy Magistrate should adjudicate on charges of criminal trespass, unlawful assembly, and mischief, instead of referring the case to the Magistrate.

A Deputy Magistrate vested with the powers of a Subordinate Magistrate of the second class cannot institute proceedings under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Queen v. Ootum Mal, 2 W. R., Cr., 2.

A Deputy Magistrate cannot commit a person for forgery under Section 170 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when the Civil Court has sanctioned the prisoner's committal under Section 169, unless with the express sanction of that Court. Queen v. Dwarakanath Bose, 2 W. R., Cr., 31.

9.—DUTIES OF CRIMINAL JUDGES.

When a Judge differs from the Jury, he should pass such a sentence as he would have passed had he agreed with the Jury. Queen v. Sheik Golam Mustujia, 3 W. R., Cr., 29.

If personal property of which a complainant has been forcibly or illegally deprived comes into the Magistrate's hands, he may order its restoration to its owner, otherwise the complainant must seek to recover it or its value through the Civil Court. Ramjeebun Doobey v. Lucknowee Dabea, W. R., 1864, Cr., 5.

A charged B. before a Magistrate for wrongful confinement of her brother. Previous to the petition to the Magistrate, the charge had been investigated by the Police, and reported to be false. The Magistrate, without recording the complaint under Section 66 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, sent for the Police papers, and under Section 180 of the same Code dismissed the case. *Held that the proceedings were illegal; that the Magistrate was bound, under Section 66 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to record the examination of the complainant, before he could, under Section 180, dismiss the complaint. Dulali Bawa v. Bhutan Shaha, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 53.

Under Section 66 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the examination of the prosecutor should be reduced to writing, and signed by him. When a complaint is made before a Magistrate, but not reduced to writing, he cannot, under Section 273 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, refer the case to a Deputy Magistrate for trial. Sections 426 and 439 do not apply to a case where the prosecution is not commenced by a complaint, as directed in the Code. A conviction with such irregularity cannot stand good, merely because the amount of punishment would have been the same if proper proceedings had been instituted. The Queen v. Mohim Chundra Chuckerbutty, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 67; S. C., 12 W. R., Cr., 77.

A Deputy Magistrate committed certain prisoners for trial on a charge of dacoity. Some of the prisoners had confessed before the Deputy Magistrate, but he failed to record the examination of the prisoners, or to attest it, as required by Section 205 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Sessions Judge therefore refused to admit the examination of the prisoners by the Deputy Magistrate in evidence, and also refused to postpone the trial for the purpose of summoning the Deputy Magistrate, and taking his evidence in the matter.

Held that the examination of the prisoners was inadmissible in evidence; that it being wholly within the discretion of the Judge, under Section 366, to say whether or not he should postpone the trial, or summon any witness to give his evidence, the High Court, as a Court of Revision, would not interfere or order a new trial. The Queen v. Radha Jana, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 59; S. C., 12 W. R., Cr., 44.

Under Section 372 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the accused should be asked, at the end of the case for the prosecution, to produce his evidence, and it is at that point the duty of the Court of Session to ascertain who the witnesses are whom the prisoner desires to examine in his defence. The Queen v. Mookun, 12 W. R., Cr., 22.

A conviction and sentence for criminal breach of trust as a public servant reversed, owing to irregularities in the preliminary enquiries and irregular procedure as to the examination of the prisoner in the Court of Session. Reg. v. Dass, 3 Bom. Rep., C. A., 51.

Section 373, Code of Criminal Procedure, only empowers a superior Magistrate to refer cases to a Subordinate Magistrate when the complaint is made to himself or before a Police Officer, but not cases where he himself takes cognizance of an offence. Bhugoban Chunder Poddar v. Mohun Chunder Chuckerbutty, 12 W. R., Cr., 49.

The High Court pointed out the necessity of a Court showing its jurisdiction and competency on the face of all its proceedings. Queen v. Bipro Dass, 8 W. R., Cr., 45.

The examination of the prisoner by the Magistrate has not been recorded in full so as to include the questions as required by Section 205 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it cannot be given in evidence at the trial before the Court of Session, under Section 366, without further proof. When the examination would either alone or with other evidence be sufficient for the conviction of the accused, the proper course is to remand the case to the Court of Session, in order that proof may be taken of the examination.

When the evidence, exclusive of the inadmissible examination, is sufficient to support the conviction, it may be affirmed by the High Court without remanding the case, and the admission of such an examination by the Court of Session does not invalidate the trial and conviction under Sections 426 and 439 of the Code. Reg. v. Timini observed upon. Reg. v. Kalla Lakhmaji, 2 Bom. Rep., 479.

A Court has power to send a case for investigation to a Magistrate under Section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code, where no particular individual has as yet been accused. Essan Chunder Dutta v. Pranath Chowdhry, W. R., F. B., 171.

The jurisdiction of the Fouljady Court is confined to cases of possession, and it is beyond its province to enquire into and ascertain titles to landed property. Maharajah Moheshur Singh v. The Government of India, 3 W. R., P. C., 45.

A Collector who entertains a charge, under Section 168 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, of an offence against any Court or public servant should not try the case himself as Magistrate, nor, unless under very exceptional circumstances, give evidence as a witness before himself as Magistrate. Nekal Mitter, prisoner, 9 W. R., Cr., 12.

A Collector trying a suit under Act X of 1859 has authority to commit to the Sessions Judge. Queen v. Bunsee Singh, 1 W. R., Cr., 47.

Case of a conviction under Section 185 of the Penal Code, on a charge made by a Magistrate and Collector, without signing his order as Collector. Queen v. Gooorooburn Moseomdar, 2 W. R., Cr., 32.

Magistrates should not take up judicial work on Sundays. Grijamonee v. Ishenchunder, W. R., 1864, Cr., 2.

When a prisoner is on his trial by a Jury upon a charge of murder, it is the duty of the Judge to point out to the Jury accurately the difference between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and to direct the attention of the Jury to the evidence, and to leave them to find the facts and say (under the direction of the Judge as regards the law) of what offence the prisoner is guilty.

Where the provisions of Section 379 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were neglected, and the Judge did not sum up the evidence at all, a new trial was ordered. Elahi Bukhri's case (5 W. R., Cr., 80) considered; Queen v. Shamshere Beg, 9 W. R., Cr., 51.

In charging a Jury on the point of provocation in a case of culpable homicide, a Judge should tell the Jury that, to bring the case within the exception to Section 306, Penal Code, the prisoner must have been deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation; that there ought to have been sufficient cause for such loss of self-control; and that the provocation was not wilfully occasioned by the prisoner as an excuse for doing harm. Queen v. Gunesh Lushkar and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 72.

Conviction and sentence set aside (Glover, J., dissenting) as to two of the prisoners on the ground that there was a misdirection to the Jury, because the Judge in summing up omitted to advise the Jury not to convict upon the uncorroborated evidence of an approver, and because he treated the corroborative that which was no corroborative in
The Magistrate in his grounds of committal, and the Sessions Judge in his conviction, should specifically note, with exactness and precision, the proof against each particular prisoner, and the manner in which it is supported.

In a preliminary enquiry before a Magistrate, the evidence should be sent in as found, and not kept by the police till they have made it all complete. Queen v. Kodai Kahar, 5 W. R., Cr., 6.

If a Magistrate enquiring into a case of apparent injustice and oppression brought before him finds it to be a civil nature, he must stop the proceedings, and not attempt to adjudicate the matter. Queen v. Zemindar of Calgong, 1 W. R., Cr., 12.

Held that, when the Judge convicts on the charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, he should record under which of the Exceptions in which it is supported.

Held also that this Court was precluded under Section 426, Act XXV of 1861, from altering or Court on account of error of procedure when the error, and has not been sentenced to a more severe punishment than is awardable for the offence of which he ought properly to have been convicted.

Where the Judge at Sessions sentenced a prisoner to rigorous imprisonment for a crime punishable only with simple imprisonment, - Held that, this was an error which might be reviewed on the Advocate-General's certificate under the Charter of 1865, Section 26. R. v. Yed Ali Khan, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 424.

The error of a Deputy Magistrate in proceeding by warrant, instead of by summons, furnishes no ground for quashing his proceeding. Aneef Putney v. Ramsooder Chuckerbutty, 1 W. R., Cr., 16.

A Magistrate is not authorized to dismiss a case because he finds, in course of investigation, that the facts disclose an offence other than, or in addition to, that complained of; but is bound to address himself to the original complaint. Degumber Paul v. Kallydoss Dutt, 8 W. R., Cr., 628.

A discharge by the Magistrate under Section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not final, like an acquittal under Section 255, and the Sessions Judge, under Section 435, may order the accused to be put upon his trial notwithstanding his discharge by the Magistrate. Shoodun Mundle, 5 W. R., Cr., 58.

A Magistrate ought not to discharge an accused without taking the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution named in the petition of complaint. Dino Nath Gope v. Saroda Moobopadikya and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 47.

The Magistrate took the depositions by reading over to the witnesses depositions made by them in another case, at the hearing of which the prisoner was not present, and procuring them to affirm the truth of the same. Held that the depositions were illegally taken, and therefore could not sustain a charge. The Queen v. Rajkissen Mitter, 1 B. L. R., Cr., 37.

A Magistrate has a discretion, under Section 67 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to dismiss a complaint at once, and is under no obligation to go further. Batool Nashe v. Bhuglo Chohonkede and others, 10 W. R., Cr., 50.

A Magistrate may dismiss a complaint, under the provisions of Section 67 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, before issuing a summons for the attendance of the accused; but when all the parties are in attendance he is bound to follow the procedure laid down in Sections 265 and 266, and cannot dismiss the complaint without hearing the evidence. Beelash v. Makroo, 10 W. R., Cr., 61 ; 2 B. L. R., S. N., 15.

A Magistrate cannot dismiss a complaint without first examining the complainant. An enquiry by the police into complaints falling under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not warranted by law. Queen v. Harrakhand Nowula and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 12.

A Magistrate is not bound to adhere to any particular section of the law which may be mentioned by a complainant in his complaint, but may apply any section which he thinks applicable to the case, so long as the parties are not misled, and the proper procedure is observed. He may recall any order which he finds to be the wrong, and substitute any other which he may think right under the law. Kalidass Bhouttakarjee v. Mohendro Chatterjee, 12 W. R., Cr., 40.

A conviction and sentence by a Magistrate, F.P., under the Railway Act, reversed; there being no complaint made before the Magistrate, as required by the Code of Criminal Procedure. Re v. Larkins, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 4.

Where a Civil Court makes over a case to a Magistrate for investigation, the Magistrate ought to examine the complainant and reduce the examination into writing, which should be signed by the Magistrate and the complainant. Bhugoban Chunder Podder v. Mohun Chunder Chuckerbutty, 12 W. R., Cr., 49.

Where a complaint is preferred before a Magistrate, and the witnesses named by the complainant are summoned and attend, but the complainant is absent, a Magistrate may, if he thinks it unnecessary to carry on the inquiry in the absence of the complainant, discharge the accused. Queen v. Dasoo Manjee, 11 W. R., Cr., 39.

Where a Deputy Magistrate instituted proceedings against a complainant and his witnesses for preferring a false charge of theft before him, it was held that he could not merely rely on the decision in the theft case, but was bound to prove the falsity of the complaint of theft in the presence of the accused. Queen v. Ram Doss Bostub, 11 W. R., Cr., 35.

Procedure by Magistrate before declaring a forfeiture of the property of an absconded offender, Sheodyal Singh v. Girban Singh, 6 W. R., Cr., 79.

Before criminating a man upon his own statement under examination, it is necessary to see that such statement has been deliberately made and recorded; that after being recorded it has been shown or read to the accused; and that the examination has been attested by the signature of the Magistrate, following a certificate to be given under his own hand. Queen v. Musammil Nerni and Moniroodeen, 7 W. R., Cr., 49.

A Sessions Judge should designate accused persons by name and not by number. Queen v. Biddadur Biswas and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 53.

A Deputy Magistrate is bound to examine the accused under Section 266 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in answer to the charge brought against him. Queen v. Bissessur Sein, 9 W. R., Cr., 62.

It is not illegal for a Magistrate to commit an accused person to the Sessions without examining him or his witnesses.

The Magistrate, when he has prepared the charge, is bound to read it to the accused, and to ask the lawful witnesses to have summoned to give evidence on his behalf at the Sessions. The Magistrate cannot refuse to permit an accused person to attend at the Sessions by Mookhtear. Queen v. Hurnath Roy, 2 W. R., Cr., 50.

An order of fine quashed as made without the answers of the parties fined being taken to the person to attend at the Sessions by Mookhtear. Queen v. Bissessur Sein, 9 W. R., Cr., 62.

When an accused person denies the truth of the complaint made against him, the Magistrate ought, under Section 266, Code of Criminal Procedure, to hear the complainant and his witnesses in support of the complaint, and also the accused and his witnesses. Ahdal Monee Dossee, 6 W. R., Cr., 75.

When the default of complainant's witnesses was caused by the Deputy Magistrate shifting his Court to a place different from that named in the summons, — Held that it was irregular to throw out the case without giving them a second opportunity of appearing. Luckhim Mohoo v. Gooroo Doss Mookerjee, 5 W. R., Cr., 51.

Column 13 of the Calendar is not meant for the Magistrate's opinion as to the value of the evidence for the defence, but for an abstract of the nature of that evidence, whether to prove alibi, character, or any other plea. Queen v. Ajait Aheer and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 24.

Section 180 of the Code of Criminal Procedure refers to cases under Chapter XII, which are triable by the Court of Sessions, and not to cases under Chapter XV, which are triable by a Magistrate. Boidonath Bania v. Bhedoo Doss, 9 W. R., Cr., 3.

A Sessions Judge must form his opinion on the evidence taken before him, and cannot act on depositions recorded before his predecessor. If the Judge who recorded some of the depositions of the witnesses on a Sessions trial is obliged to leave the district before he can conclude the trial, his successor must recommence the trial de novo. Queen v. Charrroo, W. R., 1864, Cr., 32.

A Magistrate cannot decide the case of a prosecutor without examining his witnesses. If, upon such trial, he finds that the prosecutor has no right to bring a criminal charge, he should acquit the prisoner on that ground. Queen v. Sreenath Mookhopadhya and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 45.

When a prisoner is convicted of having made a false charge of an offence, the nature of the false charge should be stated in the finding and entered in the Calendar of Sessions, and not in cases under Section 207. Session Judges should record their reasons for confirming, reversing, or modifying the sentences or orders of the Magistrates. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XII.

A Magistrate ought to hear evidence in support of a charge before dismissing the complaint. A mere assertion by an accused, charged with committing theft, of a proprietary right in the alleged stolen property, is no reason for a Magistrate to refuse to entertain the charge of theft. Queen v. Kali Charan Misser, 7 B. L. R., Ap., 55.

A Magistrate should himself state distinctly what charge an accused person has to meet, and ought not to leave that to his amalah. A person who is called as a witness by the Court cannot be convicted and fined under Section 293 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Jehangeer Buksh Khan, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 43.

Where a case which has been partly heard by one officer is transferred to another officer for trial, the latter should hear all the evidence in the case before deciding it. The High Court, however, declined to interfere in a case of this sort, as the prisoners did not appeal or raise any objection to the trial on this ground. Kopil Nath Sahi v. Koneeram, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 3.

The Queen v. Chunder Seeker Roy—ruling that a Court before which an offence is committed under Chapter X of the Penal Code cannot try the case itself—followed, notwithstanding the argument of the Sessions Judge in this case that that ruling should apply only to certain cases under Chapter X. Chutoor Snoo Bhardi v. Macnaughten, 15 S. W. R., Cr., 2.

Section 207 gives no power to the Magistrate to call up and examine witnesses for the defence whose names have been given in a list, under Section 227, when the prisoners reserve their defence for the Court of Sessions; but under Section 228 he is bound to summon them to give evidence before the Court of Sessions.

The necessity of a Magistrate acting in a dispassionate and impartial manner, and not in the spirit of a prosecutor, observed upon. In the matter of Mahesh Chunder Bonnerjee; Queen v. Parma Chundra Banerjee; Queen v. Kali Sirkar, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 11; 13 S. W. R., Cr., 43.

When a Magistrate, under Section 308, Criminal Procedure Code, has ordered the suppression of a trade or occupation as a nuisance and injurious to the health of the community, the High Court will not interfere, unless they find either that there was no reasonable evidence before the Magistrate of the trade being injurious to the health and comfort of the community, or that the cause shown was such as ought to have satisfied the Magistrate that his order for suppressing the trade was not reasonable and proper. The Court take the findings of fact by the Magistrate to be correct, unless they see that there is not on the record any evidence to warrant such findings. Municipal Commissioners for the Suburbs of Calcutta v. Amanat Ali, 7 B. L. R., 516.

Where a Deputy Magistrate, without taking evidence, made an order under Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, changing a day on which a hāt used to be held, and subsequently, on taking evidence, found that his first order was wrong and passed without jurisdiction, he was held to have acted properly in recalling his first order. Mohun Sirdar v. Alhaj Churn Monophidha, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 72.

The order of the High Court regulating the procedure to be followed by Magistrates in the submission of records to the Appellate Court amended by substituting for the last part of it the words: “When the order is made by a Sub-Magistrate the copy submitted must be forwarded by the Magistrate of the Division, if any, appointed by the Magistrate to be correct, unless they see and proper. The Court take the findings of fact as ought to have satisfied the Magistrate that his warrant such findings. Municipal Commissioner for the Suburbs of Calcutta v. Amanat Ali, 7 B. L. R., 516.

The order of the High Court regulating the procedure to be followed by Magistrates in the submission of records to the Appellate Court amended by substituting for the last part of it the words: “When the order is made by a Sub-Magistrate the copy submitted must be forwarded by the Magistrate of the Division, if any, appointed by the Magistrate to be correct, unless they see and proper. The Court take the findings of fact as ought to have satisfied the Magistrate that his warrant such findings. Municipal Commissioner for the Suburbs of Calcutta v. Amanat Ali, 7 B. L. R., 516.

Where a Subordinate Magistrate to the Divisional Officer, which complains of a wrongful act on the part of the officer, the Judge is bound to receive the plaint, and to leave it to the defendant to plead Act XVIII of 1850. Venkat Shrinivas v. Armstrong, 3 Bom. Rep., A. C., 47.

A Magistrate who makes an illegal order, which purports to be made under Section 308 of Act XXV of 1861, but is not made in accordance with the provisions of that section, is liable to be sued in the Civil Court in respect of such order, and to be restrained by injunction from carrying it into effect. Ashburner v. Keshaevulu Yakub Patil et al., 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 150.

The High Court cannot interfere under Section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Query, can it interfere under Section 404 of that Code?) in the case of a conviction before a Justice of the Peace under the 53 Geo. III., c. 155, s. 105. Such a case falls under Section 410 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Oriental Gas Co. v. O. A. Guise, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 79.

The plaintiff sued a Magistrate for damage occasioned to him by the cutting of his bund at the Magistrate’s order. The Magistrate raised the defence that he was protected by Act XVIII of 1850 for all acts done by him bond fidie in his magisterial capacity. Held, on the facts, that the Magistrate was liable. Act XVIII of 1850 does not protect a Magistrate who has not acted with due care and attention. The mere absence of malafide is no defence. A Magistrate cannot be said to have “in good faith” believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of unless he in arriving at that belief acted reasonably, circumspectly, and carefully. A Magistrate would not be personally liable for an act done by him under a misconstruction or misrepresentation were an which might have been put upon the law by a reasonable man, acting with ordinary care and attention. But a Magistrate is not protected by saying he misconstrued the law, unless his proceedings have been in other respects regular, and the view of the law taken by him is such as a reasonable and careful man might take. Neither Section 62 nor Chapter XX of the Criminal Procedure Code authorizes a Magistrate to dispose of the property of others at his mere will and pleasure, or without his having distinct and legal grounds for the course he takes. When a Magistrate violates the plain language of the law, and the very first principles of judicial enquiry, his proceedings presumably are characterized by want of care. Turaknath Mookhopadhyaya v. The Collector of Hoogly, 4 B. L. R., A. C., 37; 13 S. W. R., C. R., 13.

The plaintiff sued a Magistrate for damages occasioned to him by the cutting of his bund at the Magistrate’s order. The lower Appellate Court found as a fact that the Magistrate proceeded under Chapter XX of the Criminal Procedure Code; that he called on the plaintiff to show cause, and did hold an enquiry through the police. The High Court, in special appeal, accepting the fact as proved, and by the lower Court,—Held, that the Magistrate was acting judicially and with jurisdiction (though under the circumstances disclosed carelessly and irregularly), and was therefore protected from action for damages.

A proceeding under Chapter XX of the Criminal SUIT TO RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT, DEPUTY MAGISTRATE OF THE ZILLAH OF TRICHINOPOLY, FOR A TRESPASS ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN COMMITTED IN EXECUTION OF AN ORDER MADE BY HIM UNDER SECTION 311 OF THE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE, DIRECTING THE DEMOLITION OF THE PLAINTIFF'S HOUSE, AS BEING A NUISANCE TO A PUBLIC THOROUGHFARE.

Defendant denied his liability, alleging in justification of his order that he believed the house to be obstructive to public comfort, and proceeded in accordance with Sections 308, 310, and 311 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that having acted in good faith in the discharge of his duties as a Magistrate he was protected by Act XVIII of 1850. The issues settled were (1) whether the house was an obstruction and nuisance within Section 308 of the Criminal Procedure Code; (2) whether the defendant acted in good faith in the discharge of his public duty in ordering the removal of the house; (3) whether the plaintiff was entitled to the amount of damages claimed. The Civil Judge held upon the first issue that the defendant had no jurisdiction to order the removal of the house; upon the second issue that the defendant had acted with due care and attention, but from feelings of personal animosity towards plaintiff, and was therefore not protected by Act XVIII of 1850; upon the third issue he assessed the damages at Rs. 500. The defendant appealed, relying mainly upon the objection that no action lay against him, inasmuch as, first, it had not been shown that he acted without jurisdiction in making the order complained of; and, secondly, that even if he had acted without jurisdiction, he acted, believing at the time, with good faith that he had jurisdiction, and was therefore entitled to the protection given by Act XVIII of 1850. Held, upon the first point, that an entire absence of an order had been made to make the order heard and shown; upon the second point, that the facts of the case furnished no reasonable or probable ground for belief in the existence of jurisdiction by a Magistrate of ordinary qualifications; that the defendant must therefore be held not to have entertained that belief in good faith, unless the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, under which he acted, admit of the view that he might, not unreasonably, think that it was probably intended to apply to such an annoyance as that complained of. That, however, these provisions were open to such a misunderstanding and misapplication by a Magistrate of ordinary qualifications, and consequently that the suit should be dismissed. R. Ranganath Ram, Nathumani Thathambyangar, 6 Mad. Rep., 423.

In a case referred by a District Magistrate under Section 427 of the Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that the charge should have been under Section 324 of the Penal Code—an offence not within the cognizance of a Second Class Subordinate Magistrate, and not under Section 323, the Court passed no order, and remarked that the case should not have been referred under Section 427, which applies only to the Court of Session acting in appeal from a Court subordinate to it. Reg. v. Nabajit Valad Vikhoji, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 2.

On a reference by a District Magistrate under Section 434 of the Criminal Procedure Code, where the conviction by a Subordinate Magistrate was for cheating when it should have been for criminal breach of trust, for which the punishment awarded was a legal one,—Held that there was no occasion for the Court to interfere with the conviction or

On reference by a Sessions Judge in reviewing the monthly magisterial returns, where the conviction by the Magistrate was for cheating by personation, and the offence appeared to the High Court to be furnishing false information for which the punishment awarded was legal,—Held that the Court, under Section 426 of the Criminal Procedure Code, ought not to interfere with the conviction of sentence. Reg. v. Rokhoji bin Kanoji, 3 Bom. Rep., C. A., 42.

The Court can only interfere under Section 434, Code of Criminal Procedure, when there is some illegality in the proceedings of a lower Court. Queen v. Joy Kishen Lall, 12 W. R., Cr., 46.

Section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure contemplates cases where the sentence or order is contrary to law. Queen v. Bindu and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 60.

A Sessions Judge, in referring a case under Section 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, should state reasons of his own for the reference, and not merely send up the reasons which may have been left by his predecessor. Batool Nishe v. Bhagwol Chowkeedar and others, 10 W. R., Cr., 50.

Held that a Subordinate Magistrate acted correctly, under Section 277 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in referring a case, not to the Magistrate of the District, but to the Assistant Magistrate in charge of the subdivision to which he was attached. Case of Nidree Telhinee, 11 W. R., Cr., 7.

The High Court has no power to set aside an order of a Magistrate acquitting an accused, nor can a Sessions Judge order the Magistrate to commit an accused whom the Magistrate has acquitted on a charge which is triable by the Magistrate, such as grievous hurt (Act VIII of 1866). *Queen v. Joyram At, 12 W. R., Cr., 14.

The High Court refused to interfere with an order of a Magistrate, by which he dismissed a complaint of theft, because it appeared to him, after making enquiries from the police before whom the complaint was in the first instance brought, that the complaint was not one that the Criminal Court should entertain, but in respect to which a suit in the Civil Court should be brought. Queen v. Rustom Monee, 11 W. R., Cr., 54.

In a referred case, and not an appeal, if the High Court considers a conviction wrong, the only course open to it is to annul the conviction, and order a new trial. Queen v. Sheikh Solim, 5 W. R., Cr., 41.

The Court has no power to review its judgment in criminal cases, as ruled in Full Bench Judgment, 3 W. R. C., Rul. p. 61. Khristmo Churn and Mohram of Assam, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 2.

On reference by a District Magistrate, a sentence passed by a Magistrate, F. P., in a case submitted to him by a Second Class Subordinate Magistrate, under Section 277 of the Criminal Procedure Code, annulled, as the Magistrate of the district alone had power to dispose of cases under that section. Reg. v. Kuberio Katno, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 8.

In a case referred by a District Magistrate under Section 434 of Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that the sentence was illegal, because the charge should have been under Section 324 of the Penal Code, for causing hurt by means of a heated substance, an offence which the 2nd Class Subordinate Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try; and not under Section 323, for causing hurt, of which offence the accused had been convicted, the Court passed no order, as it did not think it right, under the circumstances of the case, to direct the re-trial of the accused on the proper charge. Reg. v. Ambakon Girsoji, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 1.

In a case referred by a District Magistrate, on the ground that the accused had been convicted, under Section 403 of the Penal Code, of dishonest misappropriation of property; whereas the charge should have been, under Section 406, of criminal breach of trust, an offence not within the cognizance of the 2nd Class Subordinate Magistrate who passed the sentence, the Court annulled the conviction and sentence, and directed the case to be tried before a proper Court. Reg. v. Gans Valad Ramchandra, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 3.

In a case falling under Chapter XV., Code of Criminal Procedure, the statement of the complainant, the evidence of the witnesses, and the reply of the accused should be recorded. Queen v. Nijamund, 3 W. R., Cr., 60.

The High Court will not order a copy of the Judge's notes of the evidence and proceedings upon conviction in a criminal case to be furnished to the prisoner, on the ground of alleged probable hardship. A fair prima-facie case as to the irregularity of those proceedings, or the illegality or impropriety of the sentence or order, must appear before the Court will call for or direct a return of the record of the proceedings. Queen v. Subhaya Gaudan, 1 Mad. Rep., 138.

Documents which form the basis of a charge against a prisoner should not be buried among a mass of papers in the nuthee, but should be put either in the calendar or by themselves in an envelope or in some conspicuous part of the record where they would be seen at once. Queen v. Ruttion Meah, 8 W. R., Cr., 57.

The deposition of a person murdered, taken before a Magistrate, and the medical evidence, should be annexed to the Sessions record. Chiramanee Nye, petitioner, 11 W. R., Cr., 2.

In all forgery cases sent up in appeal the particular paper or papers said to have been tampered with should be readily accessible, and should be put with the Sessions record, instead of being buried in the record of the committing officer. Queen v. Broond Shakoo, alias Chundra Chatterjee, 7 W. R., Cr., 112.

The power granted to the Civil Courts of calling for and inspecting the records of a previous trial is one that ought to be exercised with the greatest caution, and does not extend to criminal proceedings. Queen v. Jumdeun Singh, 12 W. R., Cr., 73.

The principal documents in a Sessions case should be put in a prominent place on the record, and not buried in a mass of papers. Queen v.

In a case, the accused had been sent up.

On a ref. and sentence for life instead of ten years' transportation. Queen v.

A Session of conviction in which the accused had been sent up.

A Session of conviction in which the accused had been sent up.

A Session of conviction in which the accused had been sent up.

The Magistrate committed to the High Court. Pooon v.

There ought to be an accurate account of the proceedings in the High Court. Pooon v.

Held that before a Court, the accused should be sworn.

The draw entirely in the Court of a Magistrate.

Whether evidence was not for the statute of the Jury.

Section 3 authorizes the prevention of a Jury but not of murder.

If a Session of conviction in which the accused had been sent up.
CRIMINAL PROCEDURE—DIRECTION TO JURY.

14.—Direction to Jury.

In charging a Jury in a case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, a Judge should call upon the Jury to state which description of culpable homicide they consider the accused to have committed; Section 304 of the Penal Code prescribing different punishments for that offence. Where the Judge omitted to require the Jury to do this the High Court held that the conviction was for the lighter description of the offence. Queen v. Ameer Khan, 12 W. R., Cr. R., 35.

In reviewing the charge of a Judge to a Jury in the mofussil, it is sufficient to see whether the tendency of the charge, taken as a whole, has given a correct or incorrect direction to the mind of the Jury, and it is not correct to apply to such charge the criticisms which would be applied to a charge of a Judge in a Court in England. Queen v. Gogaleo and others, 12 W. R., Cr., 80.

The omission of the Judge in his charge to enter into details regarding the identification of stolen property does not amount to a misdirection to the Jury. Queen v. Madhab Paul and others, 1 W. R., Cr., 35.

A Judge may give the Jury his opinion of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, if he shows them clearly that the decision rests with them. Queen v. Abdool Juteel, W. R., 1864, Cr., 5.

In a case of dacoity the Judge should direct the Jury to convict only if they find that all the prisoners had the intention of causing wrongful loss to the prosecutor. Queen v. Bonomally Ghose, W. R., 1864, Cr., 8.

When different trials are held at different times and against different prisoners in respect of the same crime, a new charge specifying the particulars required by Circular Order No. 5, dated February 6th, 1863, should be delivered in each case. Queen v. Mahadeo, W. R., 1864, Cr., 15.

Where O. deposed that he and R. were four days in company at M., and the Judge charged the Jury that if they found that R. was not in company with O. during those four days at M., but was at S., it did not matter where O. was, because it was clear that he could not have been in company with R. at M., and must therefore have given false evidence when he said that he was during those four days in such company at M,—Held by the majority of the Court (Seton-Karr, J., dissenting) that there had been no misdirection in. Queen v. Ram Monee Sein and another, 7 W. R., Cr., 105.

A summing up to the Jury in which the Sessions Judge gave no aid to the Jury in the arrangement of the facts which were spoken to by the witnesses, and himself found facts which he should have put to the Jury, was pronounced defective, and a verdict founded thereon was set aside and the prisoner ordered to be released. Queen v. Ram Gopal Dhur, 10 W. R., Cr., 7.

In a case in which the principal evidence against an accused is the evidence of an approver, a Sessions Judge should carefully warn the Jury of the infirmity which attaches to that evidence, and he should also tell them (if the fact be so) that the approver is speaking under the influence of an offer of conditional pardon.

Evidence of character and previous conduct of a prisoner being matters of prejudice and not direct evidence of facts relevant to the charge against the prisoner, ought not to be allowed to go to the Jury. Queen v. Bycant Nath Banerjee, 10 W. R., Cr., 17.

It is the duty of a Judge to state to the Jury...
what are the principal points in the evidence, and how they bear for or against the prisoner; in short, to render the Jury every assistance in his power towards coming to a right conclusion. Queen v. Bunker Koorree, 6 W. R., Cr., 72.

In charging a Jury, a Sessions Judge should not tell them that the prisoners had previously been bad characters. That fact might be taken into consideration by a Sessions Judge in passing sentence when the prisoners are convicted. Queen v. Koubun Sheikh and others, 10 W. R., Cr., 39.

The omission of a Judge to point out to the Jury the weakness of the evidence against the accused, W. R., Cr., 3.

The evidence of a person stating before the Jury upon oath facts which he does not know of his own observation, facts which constitute the substance of the charge against a prisoner, and which the Jury themselves have to enquire into and arrive at as their verdict, ought not to be allowed to go to the Jury, and still less so when the person does not orally depose before the Jury, but his evidence is presented to them in the form of a written deposition. Queen v. Ramgopal Dhar, 10 W. R., 57.

A Judge is not bound to try a Native Christian with the aid of a Christian jury.

A Judge in directing a Jury should confine himself to a general commentary on the evidence and a statement of the legal offence proved, should such evidence be credited. He should not give a positive opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused person. Bharut Chunder Christian, appellant, 1 W. R., Cr., 2; Queen v. Gungra Bishen, 1 W. R., Cr., 26 and 29.

In giving a warning to a Jury not to disbelieve a mass of otherwise consistent evidence, because in one or two minor and immaterial points the witnesses made different statements, a Judge exercises a wise discretion, and affords no ground for the objection of misdirection to the Jury. Queen v. Bustee Khan, 1 W. R., Cr., 17.

There is no misdirection, in a case of false evidence, in a Judge pointing out to the Jury the contrast between the evidence for the prosecution and the course followed by the prisoner (namely, a simple denial of the charge, coupled with a refusal to examine the witnesses in attendance), so long as the Judge leaves it to the Jury to decide between the opposing statements, and to credit whichever they thought most worthy of belief. Queen v. Setonath Ghosal, 2 W. R., Cr., 60.

Though the Sessions Judge ought not to have made any remarks as to what the witnesses for the defence stated themselves to have heard, this slight error was held not to amount to misdirection of the Jury. Queen v. Sheikh Magan, 5 W. R., Cr., 1.

It is no misdirection for a Judge to tell the Jury that if the prisoner could not prove how he became possessed of certain articles it was their duty to convict him, for the presumption in such a case was legally valid that he knew the property had been unlawfully acquired. Queen v. Narain Bagdee, 1 W. R., Cr., 3.

The omission of a Judge to point out to the Jury the weakness of the evidence against the accused, and the possibility of other persons being the guilty parties, does not amount to a positive misdirection.

In a case where there was some evidence to go to the Jury, and no error in law was committed, the Court cannot interfere. Appeal dismissed. Queen v. Choonee, 5 W. R., Cr., 13.

The verdict of the Jury was reversed, on the ground of misdirection by the Judicial Commissioner in not having left the cause of death and the prisoner's connection with certain attempts at bribery as questions for the consideration of the Jury. Queen v. Kally Churn Gangooly, 7 W. R., Cr., 2.

Where a Sessions Judge left the Jury to decide upon the age of a girl who had been kidnapped, merely aiding them with his own opinion in which they expressed their concurrence,—Held that there was no misdirection to the Jury. Queen v. Shama Khankee and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 22.

Where there is no evidence against a prisoner the Judge ought to charge the Jury for an acquittal, and not leave the Jury to say whether the prisoner is guilty or not. Queen v. Greedharry Manjek, 7 W. R., Cr., 39.

The prisoner retracted his statement when read over to him, and said that he was compelled to make it. The Judge should have charged the Jury not to accept such a statement as a confession. Queen v. Gomesh Koormee, 4 W. R., Cr., 1.

A conviction founded upon the uncorroborated evidence of one or more accomplices is valid in law. Improper advice given by the Judge to the Jury upon a question of facts, or the omission of the Judge to give that advice which a Judge in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion ought to give the Jury upon questions of fact, amounts to such an error in law in summing up as to justify the High Court on appeal or revision in setting aside a verdict of guilty.

The power of setting aside convictions, and ordering new trials for any error or defect in the summing up, will be exercised by the High Court only when the Court is satisfied that the accused person has been prejudiced by the error or defect, or that a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby. Elahee Buksh, appellant, 5 W. R., Cr., 80.

A verdict of guilty of dacoity against certain of the prisoners set aside on the ground of misdirection, the Judge having omitted to point out to the Jury the danger of relying upon the uncorroborated testimony of accomplices. Queen v. Kootub Sheikh, 6 W. R., Cr., 17.

In his charge to the Jury the Judge should draw a distinction between the two classes of culpable homicide mentioned in Section 304 of the Penal Code, and direct them to find specially under which, if either, the prisoner was guilty. Queen v. Kali-charam Dass, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 86; and 15 S. W. R., Cr., 17.

Where a summing up of a Judge to a Jury points out to the Jury the principal features of the evidence as regards both the case of the Crown and the defence of the prisoners, it complies with the requisition of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Shepard, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 23.

A Sessions Judge in summing up is bound to advise a Jury on questions of fact, and may tell the Jury the impression which the evidence has made upon his own mind. Queen v. Dwarakanath Sen, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 34.

On a trial by Jury a Sessions Judge in summing up should give a full and detailed statement of the evidence on both sides; he should point out the legal bearing of it, and what weight the Jury ought to attach to its several parts. His omission to do so, if the accused is thereby prejudiced, amounts to such an error in law as would justify a Court of Appeal in setting aside the verdict.

No general rule can be laid down as to when a prisoner is prejudiced by a defective summing up, but in general, if the finding of the Jury in such a case is one that an Appeal Court would set aside if the trial had taken place with the aid of Assessors, the Court will interfere and set the verdict aside.

In capital cases and all cases of a serious or complicated nature, the Judge ought to read over the evidence in extenso to the Jury.

The Judge ought, if requested, to allow the accused an opportunity of cross-examining all the witnesses whose evidence is dispensed with by the prosecutor at the trial. His refusal to do so is, however, not an error in law.

Where the Magistrate erroneously treated a witness as an accomplice, and granted him a conditional pardon,—Held that the evidence did not require corroboration.

Where a person gave information to a Magistrate and the police of murder having been committed, and subsequently, on the charge having been dismissed, persisted the Sessions Judge to have the matter reinvestigated,—Held, that was not a complaint within the meaning of Section 360 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Reg. v. Fallechand Vastachand, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr. C., 85.

Held that it was no misdirection on the part of the Judge in not calling the attention of the Jury to Clauses 1 and 2 of Section 100 of the Penal Code, when he particularly called their attention to Clause 6 of that section. Queen v. Mookhtaram Mundl, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 45.

A Judge has every right to draw the attention of the Jury to anything which appears to be a palpable alteration or blot on the face of a document alleged to be forged. Queen v. Kissors Mohun Dutt, 17
S. W. R., Cr., 58.

A Judge ought not to introduce into his direction to the Jury any question as to recommending a prisoner to mercy, but should leave that entirely to the Jury. Queen v. Dassee Mosultmany, 14 S. W.
R., Cr., 46.

Under Section 379 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a Judge should sum up the evidence on both sides before requiring the Jury to deliver their verdict. Under Section 439, however, the High Court thought it unnecessary to set aside a conviction in a case in which was not done. Queen v. Sitwa, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 66.

Held (Warden, J., dissentieante), that the omission of the Sessions Judge to tell the Jury that the statement of one prisoner is not evidence against his fellow-prisoner is a material error, and one fatal to the trial, notwithstanding that the Sessions Judge dealt with the evidence against each of the prisoners separately. Reg. v. Shah Miya Salad Dand, 6

15.—Assessors.

Although the Criminal Procedure does not expressly provide for summing up of the evidence in a trial with the aid of Assessors, there is nothing in the Code to prevent a Judge from summing up the evidence to the Assessors. Where one of the two Assessors says that he thinks it proved that a war was waged against the Queen, that there was a conspiracy to carry on that war, and that the prisoner is guilty of all the acts charged, and the other Assessor concurs with him, it cannot be said that the Assessors have given no reason for their opinion.
The offence of engaging in a conspiracy to wage war, and that of abetting the waging of war against the Queen, under Section 121 of the Indian Penal Code, are offences under the Penal Code only, and are not treason or misprision of treason; and therefore the provisions of the Statute 7 Will. III., c. 3, s. 5 (1), are not applicable. The Gazette of India, or Calcutta Gazette, containing official letters on the subject of hostilities between the British Crown and Mahometan fanatics on the frontier, were rightly admitted in evidence under Sections 6 and 8 of Act II of 1855, as proof of the commencement, continuation, and determination of hostilities.

Similarly, under Section 6, a printed letter from the Secretary to the Government of the Punjab to the Secretary to the Government of India was properly resorted to by the Court for its aid as a document of reference. It was not necessary that these do-ments should be interpreted to the prisoner. It was sufficient that the purposes for which they were put in were explained. Queen v. Amiruddin, 7 B.
L. R., 63, and 15 S. W. R., Cr., 25.

In a trial conducted with the aid of Assessors, the Judge's omission to state the ground of his decision is not an illegality which invalidates the conviction.

When a judgment of acquittal is recorded it is not necessary to record the opinions of the Asses-

In a trial before a Sessions Judge with Assessors, when the prisoner pleads not guilty and the public prosecutor does not offer evidence in support of the charge, the Judge ought to instruct the Assessors that they are bound to find the prisoner not guilty.
4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXIX.

The grounds of each Assessor's opinion should be distinctly recorded by the Judge. Queen v.
Mussamut Mina Nugerthathin, 3 W. R., Cr., 6.

Assessors ought to give the grounds of their opinions, particularly when they differ in opinion from the Judge. Queen v. Bushmo Anent, 3 W.
R., Cr., 21.

In case of a view of the scene of an alleged offence, it is the duty of the officer conducting the Jury or Assessors to the spot not to suffer any other persons to speak to or hold any communication with any of the Jury or Assessors. The Judge therefore cannot delegate to the Assessor his own function of examining witnesses on the spot.
Queen v. Chutterdaree Singh, 5 W. R., Cr., 59.

A summing up of the evidence is not required in a case tried by Assessors. Queen v. Yoga Poly, 11 W. R., Cr., 39.

16.—Police.

A Magistrate has no power to realize the cost of a police constable from an individual. Queen
v. Rohimkant Ghose, 1 W. R., Cr., 15.

The appellant charged the prosecutor with theft, and he was handed over to the police. Held that the police, and not the appellant, are responsible for any oppression or extortion practised by the

The wounding of a thief by a chowkedar to secure his capture held under the circumstances to be justifiable. Queen v. Protab, chowkedar, 2 W. R., Cr., 9.

In discussion as to the propriety of a conviction on a charge of false evidence, one of the statements charged having been made to the police under compulsion. Queen v. Nagena Owrut, 3 W. R., Cr., 6.

A chowkedar who extorts money either by fraud or threats is guilty of cheating (Section 417, Penal Code), or of extortion (Sections 383 and 384, Penal Code), but not of criminal misappropriation of public money entrusted to him as a public servant. Queen v. Ramnarain, chowkedar, 3 W. R., Cr., 32.

Where a man is grievously wounded in a riot, the police are bound to act without taking into consideration who was the aggressing party. In the discharge of their duties, and in the absence of any proof that they exceeded their duty, the police were held entitled to the protection of the Court. Queen v. Damoo Singh, 8 W. R., Cr., 36.

The police may, without any formal complaint, apprehend anyone person found with stolen property. Queen v. Gowree Singh, 8 W. R., Cr., 28.

The police are not at liberty to bind a witness over to appear a month after date. Remarks on the insufficiency of the evidence in this case to warrant a conviction. Queen v. Bheen Manjee and another, 6 W. R., Cr., 52.

A constable who dishonestly misappropriates to his own use the pay of his thana police entrusted to him is guilty of criminal breach of trust. Queen v. Subdar Mejah, 3 W. R., Cr., 44.

That the facts proved would also constitute an offence under a section of the Penal Code, seems to be no reason for quashing a conviction under the special law, Act V of 1861. Queen v. Kasmauddin, 8 W. R., Cr., 55.

Admissions made by prisoners to police officers while in their custody are not admissible in evidence, especially when no witnesses are called to prove such admissions. Queen v. Bushno Anent, 3 W. R., Cr., 21.

A police officer acts improperly and illegally in offering any inducement to an accused person to make any disclosure or confession. No part of his evidence as to the discovery of facts in consequence of such confession is legally admissible. Queen v. Dhurun Dut Bhata and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 13.

The general exception provided by Section 79 of the Penal Code, and the power conferred by Clause 5, Section 100 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was held not to protect a police officer who did not act in good faith, that is, with due care and intention. Clause 5, Section 100, Code of Criminal Procedure, refers to property which is proved to have been stolen, and not to anything which a police officer may choose to imagine has been stolen. Where a police officer refused to let a person go home until he had given bail, he was held to have been guilty of wrongful restraint under Section 339 of the Penal Code. Sheo Shum Shaha v. Mahomed Fazel Khan, 10 W. R., Cr., 20.

Held by Loch, J., that a Magistrate has no authority to order a police enquiry in a case under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Held by Glover, J. (dissenting), that a Magistrate may order a police enquiry into any offence punishable under the Penal Code. In re Fazal Shah, 10 W. R., Cr., 49.

The report of a police officer is "credible information" within Section 282 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the case of Brindabun Shaha, 10 W. R., Cr., 41.

Section 211 of the Penal Code applies not only to a private individual, but also to a police officer who brings a false charge of an offence with intent to injure. Nubodeep Chunder Sirkar, petitioner, 11 W. R., Cr., 2.

Section 140 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to a case of arrest for dacoity made without warrant by a subordinate police officer in the presence of a head constable, who authorized him to make the arrest. Queen v. Sheikh Emow, 11 W. R., Cr., 20.

A report of an Inspector of Police and the evidence given by the same Inspector are not sufficient to justify an order binding a person to keep the peace. In the matter of Rajendro Khosiee Chowdry, 10 W. R., Cr., 55.

The karnam of a village is not bound to report the commission of offences other than those specified in Section 138 of the Criminal Procedure Code. 3 Mad. Rep., A. 1., 31.

J. M., a clerk in the Police Magistrate's office, having been convicted, under Section 2 of Act XLVII of 1860, as a person employed in a police office, a rule for quashing the conviction was made absolute,—Held that the words "Police Office" in Section 2, Act XLVII of 1860, do not apply to a Police Magistrate. In re Jodoo Nath Mookerjee, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 186.

A police officer negligently or improperly submitting an incorrect report of a local investigation, may be punished under Section 29 of Act V of 1861, in cases where the proof is insufficient to bring the case under Section 218 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Burroda Kant Maskeyn, 15 S. W. R., Cr., 17.

Where a police officer duly appointed under Act V of 1861 was engaged in the discharge of his duty as such police officer at a time when an unlawful assembly took place, it was held that he was competent to apprehend any of the members of such unlawful assembly; and a person who rescued the party apprehended was convicted of rescuing from lawful custody within the meaning of Section 225 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Assan Shurreef, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 75.

A police constable was tried and convicted by the Assistant Agent of Vizigapatam under Section 44 of Act XXIV of 1859, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment. On appeal, the Agent reversed the conviction on the ground that there had been irregularity of procedure on the part of his assistant in not recording evidence for the prosecution, and in only taking down the substance of the prisoner's statement, and not the full statement as made. Held, that the question was, whether there had been such error and irregularity on the part of the Assistant Agent as to prejudice the accused and to occasion a failure of justice. That if not, the order reversing the conviction was rendered bad in law by Sections 426 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That the accused did not appear to have been prejudiced; consequently, the order of the Appellate Court was set aside, and a re-hearing directed. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLV.

Accused, a police constable, was convicted under Section 44 of Act XXIV of 1859 of ceasing to perform the duties of his office. The evidence showed that he had gone to sleep while posted as a sentry over the jail. Held that the accused was not guilty of the particular species of offence of which he was convicted; he was, however, guilty prima-facie under the section.

Going to sleep while on guard is an offence punishable under Section 10. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXI.

In a prosecution under the Indian Police Act V of 1861, the Magistrate is bound to take into consideration and determine the prisoner's plea that he is a European British subject.

Section 29 of Act V of 1861 does not give to the Magistrate jurisdiction over European British subjects.

The evidence showed that the accused was guilty of insulting language, in addition to the charge of criminal trespass, is no such irregularity as to vitiate a trial, the said language having been complained of by the complainant at the first. Queen v. Raj Rama Moitra, 3 W. R., Cr., 28.

The case of a prisoner accused of the offence of attempting to cheat by personation was referred for trial by the District Magistrate to a Magistrate, F. P., who, without a complaint being made to him, convicted and sentenced the prisoner.

The conviction and sentence were confirmed by the Sessions Judge. On application to the High Court to annul the conviction, on the ground that the Magistrate, F. P., had no jurisdiction to try the case, the Court refused the application, as the question of jurisdiction had not been raised before the Sessions Court. Reg. v. VisaltzranallzDnula, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 33.

Where a prisoner is charged separately for having given false evidence with regard to two statements directly opposed to each other, a plea of guilty on one of the charges does not involve an acquittal on the other. A Sessions Court is bound to take evidence and try a charge before it can acquit a prisoner of that charge. Queen v. Hossein Ali, 8 B. L. R., Ap., 25.

(a) Witnesses.

Where the evidence was taken down by the Magistrate in English, and no memorandum was attached to it (as required by Section 199, Code of Criminal Procedure), stating that the evidence was read over to the witness in a language which he understood, it was held that there had been an error in law by which the accused was materially prejudiced. Queen v. Issur Rust and others, W. R., 1864, Cr., 63.

In a case tried under the provisions of Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the accused are entitled to have their witnesses summoned, and a Magistrate has no power to refuse to summon them. Queen v. Doorgaguti and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 55.

Magistrates are not incapacitated to give evidence of matters which have come before them in the course of preliminary enquiry into a criminal charge. Held that, in a suit for a malicious prosecution, the defendant had a right to the evidence of the Subordinate Magistrate who held a preliminary enquiry into a charge of forgery preferred by the defendant against plaintiff. Ramasamy Ayyan v. Ramu Mubani, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 372.

A mere written certificate of a medical officer that a prisoner is of unsound mind, and incapable of making his defence, is not sufficient evidence of the prisoner's insanity. The medical officer should be called as a witness, and be personally and carefully examined. Queen v. Ramu Rutton Doss, 9 W. R., Cr., 23.

A false statement by a witness as to his position or character ought not to be punished as severely as a false charge or a false claim. Queen v. Rewah Goallah, 5 W. R., Cr., 95.

Comparison of signatures is one kind of corroboration which would justify a conviction on the testimony of a single witness in a case of false evidence. Queen v. Balkhere Chowbey, 5 W. R., Cr., 98.

In a case of dacoity resting upon the evidence of witnesses who say they saw it, it should be made clear exactly when and under what circumstances the persons whom they swear to have recognized; how, when, and under what circumstances the prisoners were arrested; and generally what was done in the case from the time of the commission of the crime till it was sent in to the Magistrate. Queen v. Modhoo Manjee, 5 W. R., Cr., 71.

A Judge should compare the statements of the witnesses recorded by the Magistrate at the preliminary investigation with the evidence of the same witnesses at the Sessions. Queen v. Bindabun Cowree, 5 W. R., Cr., 54.

It is the duty of a Judge to bring to the notice of Assessors discrepancies and contradictory statements made by witnesses. Queen v. Burjo Barick, 5 W. R., Cr., 70.

The evidence of one witness uncorroborated is not legally sufficient for a conviction of perjury. Queen v. Lall Chand Kowrah, Chowkedar, 5 W. R., Cr., 23.

Objections to the sufficiency of evidence are not a ground of appeal. The deposition of a single credible witness is sufficient in law. Queen v. Muddun Sirdar, 2 W. R., Cr., 3.

If a person is before the Court as a witness his evidence must be recorded as the law directs; if he is not a witness, and is not examined as such, the Judge has no right to allude to his having made any statement. Queen v. Phoolchand, alias Phooloeel Akir, and Sheesurrun, 8 W. R., Cr., 11.

Where it was not shown that there were any witnesses forthcoming for examination other than those whom the Sessions Judge did examine, the Court refused, with reference to Section 363, Code of Criminal Procedure, to interfere with the Sessions Judge's proceedings. Queen v. Jamdadam Singh, 12 W. R., Cr., 73.

Recognition of things not before the eyes of defendant was not evidence against a person accused of having been in possession of those things. Queen v. Mussamut Joomnee and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 16.

An admission by a husband in the presence of several witnesses that he had kicked his wife, and that she died after receiving the kick, was held to be direct evidence against him. Queen v. Bysagoo Noshyo, 8 W. R., Cr., 29.

The evidence of one witness, if credible, is legally sufficient proof of any but certain exempted offences. Queen v. Bindu and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 60.

Where there is no community of interest, any one of a number of prisoners jointly indicted may be called as a witness either for or against his co-defendants. Queen v. Ashruff Singh, 6 W. R., Cr., 91.

A person may call the woman with whom he is accused of having had sexual intercourse as a witness on his behalf. A person is not, by reason of being an accomplice, disqualified from giving evidence either for or against a prisoner. Sheikh Beckoo, 6 W. R., Cr., 92.

When the accused has been arrested, the evidence of a witness for the prosecution ought, under Section 174 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to be taken in the presence of the accused. Queen v. Syud Hossein Ali Chowdary, 8 W. R., Cr., 74.

The former deposition of a witness should not be taken in evidence in Court. Queen v. Radhay Dharee, 1 W. R., Cr., 14.

There is no law or principle which prevents a person who has been suspected and charged with an offence, but discharged by the Magistrate for want of evidence, being afterwards admitted as a witness for the prosecution. Queen v. Behary Lal Bose, 7 W. R., Cr., 44.

In a case of forcibly rescuing cattle under Section 13, Act III of 1857, in which the accused did not summon any witness, it was held that even if the accused wanted them summoned the Magistrate, under Section 262 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, need not have summoned them, unless persuaded that they were necessary to give material evidence and that they would not attend voluntarily. Akbar Tugusdeer v. Ponchoo Biswas and others, 10 W. R., Cr., 42.

Section 266, and not Section 253, of the Code of Criminal Procedure is applicable to a case under Chapter XV of that Code; and under the former section a Magistrate is not bound to summon the witnesses for the defence. Bhika Roy v. Dhotun Roy, 10 W. R., Cr., 36.

When a prisoner makes a distinct defence, and calls witnesses to prove it, instead of dismissing the witnesses at once on their saying they know nothing in the prisoner's favour, a Judge should put a few questions to them in detail to see if there is any truth in the prisoner's statement or any part of it. Queen v. Bhagnur Putwa and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 9.

In a case under Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is expected that parties will bring their own witnesses with them. If they require the attendance of any witness they should apply to the Magistrate to cause his attendance; and where they do not so apply it is sufficient if the Magistrate record in his judgment the substance of the defendant's answer. Bagdeo Manjee v. Mokinndro Narain and others, 10 W. R., Cr., 16.

Where the accused was called before the Court as a witness, the Magistrate record in his judgment the substance of the defendant's answer. Bagdeo Manjee v. Mokinndro Narain and others, 10 W. R., Cr., 16.
prejudice the accused, or amount to an error or defect calling for interference within Section 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Tota-ram, 11 W. R., Cr., 15.

Where the evidence of a prosecutor and his wittesses is taken in the presence of the accused, and the case is postponed by the Court for the evidence of witnesses for the defence, the case ought not to be dismissed for default of prosecution if, on the day to which it has been postponed, the prosecutor is not present. The Queen v. Bedoo Ghose, 12 W.
R., Cr., 27.

A complainant’s deposition must show some grounds for proceeding before a Magistrate can legally issue a summons. Heronath Roy, petitioner,
W. R., 1864, Cr., 33.

The Deputy Magistrate was held to have been wrong in summoning the parties charged before examining the complainant. Rujub Mundve v.
Lokhun Mundve, W. R., 1864, Cr., 37.

In the case of a charge of an offence triable by the Court of Sessions alone, the Magistrate is bound under Section 186 of the Criminal Procedure Code to summon the complainant’s witnesses.
Queen v. Meer Zahir Ally, 8 W. R., Cr., 4.

A Magistrate is not bound, under Section 191 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to enforce the attendance of witnesses by warrant except upon proof of due service of summons. Abdoor Ruham, petitioner, 7 W. R., Cr., 37.

Conviction quashed, the prisoner’s witnesses not having been summoned. Queen v. Kalee Thakoor,
5 W. R., Cr., 63.

When a Judge gives evidence, he should be sworn like other witnesses. Kishore Singh v.
Gomesh Mukherjee, 9 W. R., 252.

A Judge is a competent witness, and can give evidence in a case being tried before himself, even though he laid the complaint, acting as a public officer, provided that he has no personal or pecuniary interest in the subject of the charge, and he is not precluded thereby from dealing judicially with the evidence, of which his own forms a part.
Queen v. Mukta Singh, 4 B. L. R. A. Cr., 15; 13 S.
W. R., Cr., 60.

A person apprehended by the police and brought before the Magistrate with the accused is, though not discharged by the Magistrate, a competent witness against the accused, provided he be not charged along with the accused.

Conviction of keeping a common gaming-house upheld where portion of the evidence against the accused consisted of instruments of gaming found in such a house, which had been entered in pursuance of a search-warrant illegally issued; there being sufficient aliasd to justify the conviction.

Held by Bayley, J. (Markby, J. dubtante,) that a Magistrate has a discretion under Section 262 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to summon a witness when he is likely to give material evidence on behalf of the accused. Ameru Chund Nohatte, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 63.

Section 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to cases triable under Chapter XV of that Code; and Sections 262 and 263 are apply-cable when the offence is not punishable with more than six months’ imprisonment; and it is in the discretion of the Magistrate to summon the witnesses for the defence, if he considers their evidence essential to the just decision of the case, and in cumbent on him to summon them only if it appears to him that they are likely to give material evidence on behalf of either party, and that they will not voluntarily appear for the purpose of being examined at the time and place appointed for the hearing of the complaint. Queen v. Mohurree and others, 2 N. W. R., 393.

A belief founded on private and anonymous information is not “knowledge” within the meaning of Section 68 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
In the matter of Moheshchunder Bonnerjea; Queen
v. Purna Chunder Bonnerjea; Queen v. Kali Sir-

An enquiry should be made into the excuse given by a person for his non-attendance as a witness before enforcing a fine for such non-attendance; in order that the Sessions Judge, or other authority, may fairly exercise the discretion given him by Section 221 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Queen v.
Ameer Khan, 2 N. W. R., 115.

Accused was summoned as witness in a case to be heard on 27th May. The summons was not served personally on accused, but affixed to the door of his house. On the appointed date the case was not taken up, but was adjourned by public proclamation until June 5th. On this latter date accused failed to attend. For this he was convicted of an offence under Section 174 of the Penal Code.
There was no evidence that the summons had been brought to the knowledge of the accused so as to require him to attend on the first occasion. Held, that on the ground of there being no evidence of the commission of an offence the conviction must be quashed. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIX.

Prisoners should name their witnesses at the commitment. Queen v. Kisseoree Mohun Dutt, 17
S. W. R., Cr., 58.

A prisoner who was about to be committed to the Sessions Court presented to the Magistrate a list of witnesses whom he desired to have summoned to give evidence on his behalf at the trial, and on being asked by the Magistrate why he desired to summon the witnesses the prisoner deprecated to state his reason.

Held, that the Magistrate was at liberty to decline to summon the persons named in the list on the prisoner declining to satisfy him that they were material witnesses; but the Magistrate ought to have fixed the amount which he considered necessary to defray the cost of the attendance of the persons named, and intimated to the prisoner his readiness to issue summonses on that amount being deposited.

The High Court called for the record for the purpose of seeing whether any of the persons named in the list were likely to be able to give material evidence: Subhardya Mudali, prisoner, 4 Mad. Rep., 81.

Section 188 only empowers a Magistrate to issue a warrant for the apprehension of a witness when he has reason to believe that the witness will not attend to give evidence without being compelled to do so, and it does not empower a Magistrate to commit a witness. In the matter of Moheshchunder Bonnerjea; Queen v. Purna Chunder Bonnerjea; Queen v. Kali Sirkar, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 1; 13 S. W. R., Cr., 1.
In a case under Chapter XV, Code of Criminal Procedure, it is incumbent on the accused either to produce their witnesses or to apply beforehand for a summons to enforce the attendance of any witness who is not likely to appear without a summons; nor is it necessary in such cases to record the examination of the accused with the same formalities as in cases under Chapters XII and XIV. Queen v. Chedee Koonjra, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 76.

In a case of an offence (such as hurt, under Section 323, Penal Code) punishable with imprisonment exceeding six months, and therefore falling under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate is bound to summon all the witnesses required by the accused. Queen v. Boolaker, 14 S.W. R., Cr. R., 81.

A Magistrate cannot issue a warrant of arrest against a witness under Section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, unless he is first satisfied that the witness has disobeyed a summons which was served on him.

In order to make a person summoned as a witness liable under Section 174 of the Penal Code, the fact must be that he intentionally omitted to attend at the place or time mentioned in the summons, or that he wilfully departed from the place where he had attended before the time at which it was lawful for him to depart.

A Magistrate is not justified by Section 206 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in taking a person, without any previous notice or summons, from among the audience or attendant witnesses in open Court, and placing him in the dock to be immediately tried upon a charge which has already been commenced to be entertained against other prisoners, and on which evidence has already been given. That section applies to investigations preliminary to commitment for a subsequent trial, and not to cases where the trial is actually being proceeded with. Queen v. Sutherland; Queen v. Narain Singh, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 20.

Where a prisoner, under Section 227, Code of Criminal Procedure, gives in a list of the witnesses he wishes to summon, after his case has been committed, the Magistrate is bound to exercise his discretion upon the point, and to state whether he will summon the witnesses or not, and he ought to state his reasons for not doing so. If he thinks the witnesses were included in the list for the purpose of delay, he should proceed under Section 228 of the Code. Queen v. Rajbuxer Mookerjee, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 14.

In a trial held under Chapter XV of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is not an irregularity to adjourn the trial, under Section 269, for the purpose of allowing the accused to secure the attendance of his witnesses. As a general rule, a prisoner should have his witnesses present on the day of trial. Queen v. Dimoo Roy, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 21.

Refusal to summon witnesses cited by an accused, on the ground of their being implicated in the charge, vitiates the trial and conviction. Ram Shukul Chowdry v. Sanker Bahadur, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 65.

In a trial under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate is not bound, under Section 253, to summon any witness whom the accused may require. It is only discretionary with him to do so, and in the present case he exercised refusing to summon the wit

Held, that where the evidence of an accomplice is uncorroborated, the correct practice requires Sessions Judges not merely to tell the Jury that it is unusual to convict on such evidence, but that he should also tell them that it is unsafe, and contrary both to prudence and practice, to do so; yet that his omission to state this does not amount to an error in law. Reg. v. Inam (3 Bom. A. C. Rep., Cr. Ca., 57), commented on; Reg. v. Ganu bin Dharoji et al., 6 Bom. Rep., Cr., 57.

The High Court refused to interfere with the reception by the Sessions Judge of the uncorroborated evidence of accomplices. Queen v. Dina Sheikh and others, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 15; S. C., 10 W. R., Cr., 63.

The testimony of an accomplice is not alone sufficient for a conviction. The corroboration must be a matter directly connecting the prisoner with the offence of which he is accused; and the evidence of two or more accomplices requires confirmation equally with the testimony of one. Queen v. Dwarka, 5 W. R., Cr., 13.

The English practice should be followed as to the amount of corroboration required to support the evidence of an accomplice, which is, that when he speaks to two or more persons, concerning the same offence, his testimony should be confirmed, not only as to the circumstances of the case, but also as to the identity of the prisoners; and that any prisoner as to whom his testimony is not supported should be acquitted. Reg. and Imam v. Alad Baker and others, 3 Bom. Rep., Cr., 57.

The corroboration of the evidence of an approver should arise from other evidence relative to facts which implicate the prisoner in the same way as the story of the approver does. Queen v. Bycuxt Nareth Banerje, 10 W. R., Cr., 17.

The unsupported evidence of an approver (especially if in itself unsatisfactory) is not sufficient to support a conviction. Queen v. Chirag Ali, 12 W. R., Cr., 5.

(c) Evidence of Husband and Wife.

Held by the majority of the Court (Norman, J., dissenting) that, upon trials in the mossafill, a wife is competent to give evidence for or against her husband, or for or against any person tried jointly with her husband. Queen v. Khoyroollah and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 21.

A conviction founded upon the uncorroborated evidence of one or more accomplices is valid in law. Elahee Buksh, appellant, 5 W. R., Cr., 80.

The evidence of a wife against her husband should not be recorded, even when it is in corroboration of other evidence. Queen v. Gour Chund Polie and Dwarkie Polie, 1 W. R., Cr., 17.

(d) Examination and Cross-examination.

Where the evidence of witnesses taken in the absence of the prisoner at a former trial was read out to them, and put in on their assenting to it as a true record of the facts,—Held that the proceeding was irregular and prejudicial to the prisoner; that such witnesses should have been subjected to a fresh oral examination; and that then the former depositions might have been put in, not to add to their testimony, but to corroborate it. A new trial was ordered. Queen v. Bishonath Pal, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 20; 12 W. R., Cr., 3.

It is improper to allow witnesses for the prosecution to state that the accused is not of good character. Reg. v. Timun, 2 Bom. Rep., 131.

Whenever a prisoner is put upon his trial he is entitled to have the witnesses examined de novo if they have previously given evidence on the trial of another prisoner in the same case; and it is not sufficient to require the witnesses to identify the prisoner, and to read over to them their former examination and require them to attest it. Queen v. Kanye Sheikh, W. R., 1864, Cr., 38.

It is not imperative on a lower Appellate Court to examine any number of witnesses a suitor may ask to have examined, and the refusal of the Court to do so is not a ground for special appeal. Ram Dhan Singh v. Rung Lal Singh, W. R., 1864, 249.

In every Sessions trial, no matter how often the case has been before the Court, the witnesses must be examined de novo in the same manner as if the case were entirely new and the witnesses had not been examined before. To read a witness his deposition on a former trial is not an examination of the witness in the case of the accused. Queen v. Sheikh Kyamut, W. R., 1864, Cr., 1.

It matters not how often the same offence is the subject of a Sessions trial, every accused person has a right to have the whole of the evidence given and recorded in his presence just as if the witness had never before given his testimony on the charge. Queen v. Affazudeen, W. R., 1864, Cr., 13.

A memorandum by a Judge that certain witnesses had deposited the same as the former witnesses is not in accordance with the requirements of Section 195, Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Mullac Nuthyo, W. R., 1864, Cr., 18.

A prisoner on trial is entitled to have his witnesses examined. Queen v. Bhooobn Isher Gossane, 2 W. R., Cr., 6.

An accused person is entitled to have the witnesses examined who are named in his defence. Queen v. Abool Setar, 3 W. R., Cr., 35.

An accused person has a right to cross-examine witnesses. Queen v. Noboommar Banerje, 3 W. R., Cr., 21.

Where witnesses are not examined in the presence of the accused, the conviction will be quashed. Queen v. Lalla Chowbey, 2 N. W. R., 49.

The right of an accused party to cross-examine witnesses for the prosecutor or for the Crown called against him. If he wishes to avail himself of evidence which has been given, or which can be given, by a witness called for another of the parties accused, he must call him as his own witness. Queen v. Sarupchunder Paul and Heralall Paul, 12 W. R., Cr., 75.

It is irregular to allow a witness to be examined on behalf of the prosecution after the prisoner has made his defence, when the witness is not a witness to contradict any new case set up by the prisoner. Where, however, the prisoner had full notice of the evidence which was to be given by such witness, and made his defence, in allusion to the evidence of the witness, the High Court refused to set aside the conviction, having regard to Section 139 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Shaw Kissore Halder, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 36.
A witness when under examination in chief before the Court of Sessions should not have his attention directed to his deposition before the Magistrate. He may, under Section 23, Act II of 1835, be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, when his attention may be drawn to the parts of the former writing which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. Queen v. Ramchunder Sircaq and another, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 18.

A Magistrate is bound, under Section 266 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to examine all the witnesses whom an accused person may produce for his defence. Ameer Chund Nohatte, 13 S. W. R., Cr. 63.

A Magistrate cannot refuse to allow witnesses whom he allowed to be cross-examined by the accused previous to the preparation of a charge to be recalled and cross-examined after the accused has been put upon his defence, under Section 252 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, treating them as witnesses for the prosecution. Thakoor Dyal Sen, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 51.

It is irregular to allow a witness to be examined on behalf of the prosecution after the prisoner has made his defence, when the witness is not one to contradict any new case set up by the prisoner. It is also an irregularity to prepare the charge against a prisoner after his defence has been recorded. Queen v. Cheley Lal and another, 3 N. W. R., 271.

In an enquiry under Chapter XIX of the Criminal Procedure Code the defendant should have an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses produced against him, of making his own statement, and of calling witnesses on his own behalf. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIX.

Section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure only requires the Magistrate to hear such witnesses as the accused shall produce in his defence. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXI.

The complainant's plader was at liberty before the Deputy Magistrate to cross-examine the witnesses for the defence on points respecting which they had made statements before the joint Magistrate; and he might do so as regards previous statements which were reduced to writing, without showing the writing. Section 34, Act XI of 1855, explained. Tukhoya Rui v. Tupsree Koer, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 23.

A complainant in a case who mentioned the names of several witnesses on his behalf was requested to produce them on a certain date. Instead of doing that he produced only two witnesses, who were examined. Held that, as the complainant did not apply to the Magistrate to issue summonses on the other witnesses, or ask him to proceed under Section 262, Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate was not wrong in law in deciding the case on the evidence which was before him. Queen v. Notobur Baria, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 87.

No conviction can be had under Section 228 of the Penal Code, simply because witnesses in a case give inconsistent evidence, and give their evidence reluctantly, and take up the time of the Court. Queen v. Hurry Purromanick Tate, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 5.

Case in which the High Court permitted a Deputy Magistrate to be examined on behalf of a petitioner whose case was investigated by the Deputy Magistrate. Queen v. Muckhosoodun Roy, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 49.

Conviction set aside on the ground of the Magistrate's irregularity in refusing, in a trial before him, under Chapter XV of the Criminal Procedure Code, to allow the examination of a witness who had been tendered on behalf of the accused. Queen v. Mahima Chunbra Chuckerbutty, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 77, and 12 S. W. R., Cr. R., 77.

Where the evidence of witnesses given on a previous trial was read over and used in a subsequent trial at the express request of the prisoners, instead of the witnesses being examined de novo, the High Court declined to interfere, with reference to Sections 426 and 439, Code of Criminal Procedure, as the irregularity of procedure was one by which the prisoners were not prejudiced. Purmessur Sing v. Sorooch Audhi Kuree, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 40.

Where a witness makes a statement before the Court of Sessions which contradicts that made by him before the committing officer, and no evidence is given to show which statement is true, it cannot, under Section 172, Act XXV of 1861, be said that an offence has been committed under the cognizance of the Court of Sessions.

A Judge's duty in dealing with the contradictory statements of a witness discussed. Queen v. Nomai, 4 B. L. R., A. Cr., 9; 12 S. W. R., Cr. R., 69.

(c) Admissibility.

A prisoner applied for copies of certain documents filed in Court, for the purpose of his defence. Held, the Magistrate had erred in refusing his application. Per Loch, J.—A prisoner is entitled to have copies of all documents for which he asks, and which he thinks necessary for his defence, and it is for the officer trying the case, whether Magistrate or Judge, to determine at the hearing whether the documents filed by the prisoner are or are not admissible as evidence. Shib Prasad Panda, in the matter of the petition of, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 59, and 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 77.

The memorandum required by Section 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should always be appended to the depositions. Queen v. Hossin Sirdar, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 17.

In a proceeding under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to determine the right of actual possession, it is necessary that evidence should be taken upon oath. Queen v. Kalichundra Shah, 7 B. L. R., 322, and 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 13.

In a charge under Section 498 of the Penal Code, the proof that the woman and a man, other than the accused, were living together, is sufficient to throw the burden of proof on the accused that they were not man and wife.

Evidence taken before the Magistrate, but not used at the trial, cannot be referred to on appeal. Queen v. Wazir, 17 S. W. R., Cr., R., 5; 8 B. L. R., Ap., 63.

The evidence of a prisoner taken by a Collector cannot be used against him on his trial before a Magistrate. Queen v. Soomkoy Ghose, 10 W. R., Cr., 23.

The substance of a report from a subordinate medical officer, with an expression of concurrence by his superior, cannot be read in evidence under Section 368 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Chintamonee Nye, petitioner, 11 W. R., Cr., 2.

The notes of an enquiry held before a registering officer are not admissible as evidence of what the prisoner said on that occasion. Queen v. Purmanund Barik, 11 W. R., Cr., 13.

The practice of not examining a police officer who investigates a case condemned. The statements made to him might be proved by him in the witness-box, and would be admissible to corroborate the evidence of other witnesses on the same point given in Court before the Magistrate and Sessions Judge, under Section 31, Act II of 1855. Queen v. Ahmed Ally and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 29.

To make the confession of a prisoner not uttered in presence of a Magistrate admissible in evidence, the fact discovered must be one which of its own force, independently of the confession, would be admissible in evidence. Reg. v. Chada Atchenah, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 318.

A conviction under Section 389 of the Penal Code quashed, inasmuch as the evidence did not allude to the negligence of which the accused has been found guilty, and because the evidence was not taken in the presence of the accused. Queen v. Brojanarain Puera, 2 W. R., Cr., 51.

Documents which were tendered in the civil suit, but not examined, except when put in to contradict him. In explaining the portions so used. Queen v. Nobohisto Ghose, 8 W. R., Cr., 87.

Admissions made by prisoners to police officers while in their custody, without witnesses, are not admissible in evidence. Queen v. Bushmo Anenti, 3 W. R., Cr., 21.

The admissions of prisoners in their statements before the Magistrate ought to be given in evidence at the trial. A Sessions Judge's notes of the evidence should be sent up in a legible form. Queen v. Bhogwan Dosadh, 4 W. R., Cr., 18.

When a deposition is received in evidence under Section 369, Code of Criminal Procedure, at a trial before a Sessions Judge, there ought to be on the record distinct proof of the existence of such a state of things as makes the deposition legal evidence. Queen v. Bheseun Doss, 7 W. R., Cr., 114.

The evidence of a policeman who overheard a prisoner's statement made in another room, and in ignorance of the policeman's vicinity, and uninfluenced by it, is not legally inadmissible. Queen v. Sageena and another, 7 W. R., Cr., 56.

Bare statements of prisoners are not admissible in, and ought not to be allowed to by the Judge as, evidence; nor is evidence taken before the Magistrate, unless contradictory of the evidence of the same witnesses as given before the Sessions Court, evidence in the trial, or proper to be put to the Jury. Queen v. Bheko Sing and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 108.

The admission of hearsay evidence prohibited. Queen v. Kally Churn Gangoooy, 7 W. R., Cr., 2.

The moment a witness commences giving evidence which is inadmissible—e.g., hearsay evidence—he should be stopped by the Court. It is not safe to rely on a subsequent exhortation to the Jury to reject the hearsay evidence, and to decide on the legal evidence alone. Queen v. Pitambur Sirdar and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 25.

Previous convictions are not admissible in evidence. Queen v. Thakoor Doss Chootur and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 7.

Evidence of bad character is not admissible. Misreception of evidence is a defect or irregularity within the meaning of Sections 426 and 439, Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Beharee Dosadh and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 7.

Previous statements of witnesses on oath are not available as evidence in a subsequent case in which he is not evidence in a subsequent case in which he is tried. Queen v. Kisto Mundul and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 8.

It is not competent to a Court of Sessions to inspect an original report from the office of the Superintendent of Police, and to make it evidence against the prisoners. Statements made otherwise than before the Court, and officers specified in Section 31, Act II of 1855, may be given in corroboration of testimony; but such statements must be regularly proved by the person who received them, or by some one who heard them given. Queen v. Bissen Nath and another, 7 W. R., Cr., 31.

The deposition of a witness in a former case is not evidence in a subsequent case in which he is tried. Queen v. Kisto Mundul and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 8.

Where certain portions of a police officer's diary are used as evidence against him, Section 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not bar the admission of other portions of the diary, as explaining the portions so used. Queen v. Nobohisto Ghose, 8 W. R., Cr., 87.

Police diaries cannot be legally used as substantive evidence, or read to the Jury. Queen v. Hurdu Surma, 8 W. R., Cr., 68.

Police reports are not evidence, except against the reporting police officer. Government v. Mudun Doss, 6 W. R., Cr., 52.

Queen v. Hurry Pershad and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 85.

G. D. presented a Government promissory note at the Bank of Bengal bearing a forged endorsement, and was arrested. A police constable asked N. if he knew G. D. N. replied that he knew him as a common man. The police constable then asked N. if he knew anything about the note. N. replied that he did not. No threat or inducement was held out, nor was any caution administered to N.

Hold that the statements made by N. in answer to the questions of the police constable were admissible. N. was afterwards brought before R., the Deputy Magistrate of Serampore, who told him before any depositions were taken that he (N.) was charged with having received a stolen promissory note, and R. asked him if he wished to say anything. N. replying in the affirmative, R., without administering any caution to him, asked him how or where he had obtained the note, and other questions, the answers to which were taken down. N. was again brought up before R., and was asked whether a promissory note then produced was the one he had delivered to G. D. to take to the bank. R. told N. that he was not bound to answer the question, but if he did the answer would be taken down, and if he objected to answer, that would also be noted. R. committed N. to take his trial before the High Court.

Hold that, on the trial, the answer of N. to the questions of R., whether R. acted as a Justice of the Peace for Bengal or as a Magistrate, were admissible. Queen v. Nabadwip Goswami, i B. L. R., O. Cr., 15.

When a Civil Court authorizing a criminal prosecution in cases of offences against public justice, instead of completing the investigation itself, and committing the parties for trial before the Court of Session, simply refers the proceedings and leaves it to the Magistrate to commit or not, as he may see proper, the depositions taken before the Civil Court are not admissible in evidence, as depositions taken before the Magistrate are in certain cases under Section 369, Code of Criminal Procedure. But by Section 57, Act II of 1855, the improper admission of such evidence is not of itself ground for the reversal of the Sessions Judge's sentence, when, independently of that evidence, there is sufficient evidence to justify the decision. Queen v. Nujum Ali, 6 W. R., Cr., 41.

Written reports of depositions are not evidence, except in the case provided for by Section 369 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Kally Churn Gangooly, 6 W. R., Cr., 92.

The attestation of a Magistrate stating why he could not proceed with the further examination of a witness is prima-facie proof of the fact, and may be laid before a Jury. Queen v. Rozookoolah, 12 W. R., Cr., 51.

Upon a plea of alibi by the prisoners that they had left the place on the 12th of April 1869, and reached Port Canning on the 20th of the same month, and were not at Patna on the 30th May, the prosecutor adduced in evidence a written statement engrossed on two pieces of stamp paper; one bearing the endorsement of the stamp-vendor as sold on the 13th, and the other on the 18th April, filed on the 20th April, and alleged to bear the verification of the prisoners. No evidence was adduced to prove that the prisoners had signed it. The Judge drew the attention of the Jurors to this document, and adverted to it in these terms—"If the written statement was drawn up on an earlier date than the date it bears, it could not have been prepared earlier than the day on which the principal stamp was bought, i.e., the 18th."

Hold that the document should not have been received in evidence; and that there was a misdirection which contributed materially towards the Jury finding the prisoners guilty. The Queen v. Gajraj, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 43.

An admission obtained from a prisoner by persuasion and promises of immunity by the police ought not to be received in evidence, as being in direct contravention of Section 146, Code of Criminal Procedure.

The deposition of the police officer, moreover, should be taken before the admission can at all be used against the prisoner, under Section 150, Code of Criminal Procedure. Bisoo Manjee, appellant, 9 W. R., 16.

Where a statement made by an accused before the Magistrate bears the Magistrate’s attestation, proof of the statement having been made is not necessary, but the proceedings must be presumed to be regular until the contrary is shown. Queen v. Yaga Poly, 11 W. R., Cr., 39.

Prisoner was charged, under Section 201 of the Penal Code, for that he, knowing or having reason to believe that an offence punishable with death had been committed, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, gave information respecting the offence which he knew or believed to be false.

Held that the proper order of proof on the part of the prosecution in the present case, was to prove (1) that A. N. was murdered; (2) that the prisoner gave information respecting the offence; (3) that such information was false and known by him to be so; (4) that he then knew of the commission of the murder; and (5) that his intention was to screen the murderer.

Held also that it was essential to the completeness of the case for the prosecution to show, not only that the information was given, but also that it was false, and known to be so by the prisoner. Further enquiry directed under Section 422.

Where a party makes a false statement when legally bound by a solemn affirmation, the fact that the statement was one tending to criminate himself will not justify his acquittal on a charge of giving false evidence. Anonymous, 3 Mad. Rep., Ap., 30.

In a case of giving false evidence, the strictest and most accurate proof is necessary, and the testimony of a single witness, unsupported by corroborative evidence, is insufficient for a conviction. Queen v. Mohima Chunder Chuckerbutty, 5 W. R., Cr., 77.

The guilt of a prisoner must be clearly proved before he can be convicted, and a weak case cannot be strengthened by the fact that the police have had many difficulties thrown in their way.

Absconding is a very small item in the evidence of guilt. Convictions must be based on substantial and sufficient evidence, and not merely on “moral convictions.” Queen v. Sorob Roy, 5 W. R., Cr., 28.

A Magistrate should take evidence as to the general character of a person charged with bad livelihood, and not convict him on the report of a police officer, which is not evidence, except against the officer making it. Queen v. Alum Sheik, 5 W. R., Cr., 2.

The statement made by a witness before the Magistrate was opposed to the statement made by him before the Sessions Court. On a charge of perjury being made,—Held that a statement made before the accused by one Court was no evidence of the falsity of a contrary statement before another Court to support a conviction of giving false evidence.

Held that neither the Judge nor Jury had any right to assume that an explanation could not have been given consistent with both the statements. Queen v. Kola, 4 B. L. R., A. Cr., 4, and 12 S. W. R., Cr., 65.

Where the Judge of first instance doubted the authority of a deed, it being written on two pieces of stamped paper of different dates,—Held, under the circumstances, not to be a proper deduction.

Where evidence could have been adduced, and was not, as to a handwriting being forged, and the Judge by comparison with other handwriting held it to be a forgery, such finding was disapproved of. Kurati Prasad Misser v. Anantaram Hajra, 8 B. L. R., 490.

(f) Dying Declaration.

In determining whether a declaration alleged to have been made by a deceased person is admissible as a dying declaration under Section 371, Code of Criminal Procedure, a Sessions Judge ought to direct his attention to the point whether the declarant believed himself to be in danger of approaching death. The evidence of persons who cannot speak of their own personal knowledge to such declaration should not be admitted; and in deciding whether the accused is guilty of the charge of murdering the deceased declarant, the Court should confine itself to enquiring into the facts which occurred on the day of the murder. Queen v. Tahir and Jullad Mollah, 10 W. R., Cr., 11.

The dying declaration of a deceased should form part of the Sessions record. Queen v. Soyumber Singh and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 2.

Before a dying declaration can be received in evidence it must be distinctly found that the person who made the declaration knew or believed at the time he made it that he was dying or was likely to die.

Where a Sessions Judge sees from the Magistrate's record that there is evidence which could prove that the declaration was a dying declaration, he should call for that evidence. A Magistrate should, in all cases in which dying declarations are made, examine the complainant on the point, and record the question as well as the answer to it upon the record of the examination. Sheik Tanoo, 15 S. W. R., Cr., 11.

A dying declaration is admissible in evidence in all criminal cases, provided the conditions attaching to its admission have been fulfilled, and is not confined to cases in which the death of the injured party is the sole object of enquiry.

There must be evidence of the state of the deceased person at the time of making the declaration.

The Magistrate recording a dying declaration should put on record the answer of the declarant to a question touching his knowledge or belief in his approaching death. Queen v. Ujrail, 3 W. R., 212.

19.—Confession.

The discretionary power given by law to examine a prisoner should be used to ascertain from him how he may explain facts in evidence appearing against him, not to drive him to make self-criminating statements. Virabuddra Gaud ex parte, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 199.

A Magistrate acts without due discretion when, as a prosecutor, he holds out promises to prisoners as an inducement to them to confess. Queen v. Ramdhun Singh, 1 W. R., Cr., 24.

A Deputy Magistrate should not act as Magistrate in a case in which he is himself the prosecutor, and take confessions of prisoners before himself. Queen v. Boidnath Singh and others, 3 W. R., Cr., 29.

A confession of crime when fairly made after due warning is not inadmissible, simply because, at the time it was made, no formal accusation had been made against the party making it. Queen v. Ramchurn Chamar and others, 4 W. R., Cr., 10.

To give weight to confessions of prisoners recorded under Section 149, Code of Criminal Procedure, there should be a judicial record of the special circumstances under which such confessions were received by the Magistrate, showing in whose custody the prisoners were, and how far they were free agents. Queen v. Kodai Kahar, 5 W. R., Cr., 6.

The whole and not part only of a prisoner's confession must be taken in order to his conviction. Queen v. Chokoo Khan, 5 W. R., Cr., 70.

A prisoner’s confession must be taken in its entirety. Queen v. Sheikh Boodhoo, 8 W. R., Cr., 38.

Section 109 of the Code of Criminal Procedure refers to cases where the confession of a prisoner has been made to the Magistrate conducting the investigation, and not to the police. It is only when properly made to the Magistrate that the confession can be used as evidence against the prisoner. The mere standing by of the Magistrate when the confession is being made to the police is not sufficient. Queen v. Dohum Kahar and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 82.

A prisoner may be convicted on his own uncorroborated confession. Queen v. Runjeet Sontal, 6 W. R., Cr., 73.

The confession of an accused person is only evidence against himself. Queen v. Cally Curn, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 318.

The properly attested confession of a prisoner before a Magistrate is sufficient for his conviction without corroborative evidence, and notwithstanding Zohar and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 84.

A voluntary and genuine confession is legal and sufficient proof of guilt. Queen v. Jhurree and others, 12 W. R., Cr., 49.

A confession made to a private individual may be evidence against the prisoner if proved by the person before whom the confession was made. Queen v. Gopeenath Kellee, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 69.

Statements made by a prisoner for the purposes of his defence cannot be held to be “information given to a public servant” within the meaning of Section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. Queen v. Daria Khan, 2 N. W. R., Cr., 128.

The practice of taking prisoners before Magistrates not having jurisdiction in the case, for the purpose of getting a confession recorded, is not generally desirable, but such a confession is legally admissible in evidence when duly proved. Reg. v. Nushyo, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 81.

The words “a Magistrate,” in Section 149 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, mean “any Magistrate,” and not merely “the Magistrate having jurisdiction.”

A Sessions Judge, after a prisoner upon his trial has pleaded what in effect amounts to a plea of not guilty, is not justified in convicting the prisoner solely upon a confession made before the committing Magistrate. Queen v. Hursookhi, 2 N. W. R., 479.

If the examination of an accused person taken before the Magistrate is afterwards read in evidence at the trial before the Sessions Court, the whole of it should be read out. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. IV.

It is not necessary for a Magistrate to caution a prisoner before receiving his or her statement. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XI.

Under Section 366 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the examination of the accused before the Magistrate must be given in evidence at the Sessions trial, whether it tells for or against the prisoner; and it is not in the discretion of the prosecution to put in that examination or not. Queen v. Sheikh Meher Chund, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 63.

In warning an accused person before taking down his statements, a Magistrate should state how the accused was warned. Queen v. Dedar Nushyo, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 81.
20.—Sanction of the Court to Prosecute.

Section 170, Code of Criminal Procedure, refers only to cases where a forged document has been put in evidence in a Civil or Criminal Court; in other cases, a Magistrate is competent proprio motu to enquire into allegations of forgery, and no sanction under Section 170, Code of Criminal Procedure, is necessary. Queen v. Ramdharee Singh and others, 10 W. R., Cr., 5.

The Court itself takes the initiative; but it was not intended that the Court should proceed in the preliminary examination. All the Court (Revenue and Judicial) has to do, is to satisfy itself that there are prima facie grounds for sending the case for investigation to a Magistrate; and the Collector is not bound to dispose of a case of contempt of the lawful authority of a public servant under Section 147, Act X of 1859, but it is discretionary with him to proceed under Section 171 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. 9 W. R., Cr., 3.

Sanction to a prosecution for perjury may be given by the Court which committed the offence at any time, even after the order for commitment to the Sessions has been made. In re Queen v. Golab Singh, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 10.

The prosecutor applied to a Civil Court for leave to prosecute, under Section 170 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a witness who had appeared before the Court. The Court granted the permission as applied for.

The prisoner was tried and convicted of an offence committed before the Sessions, and the minor of the defendant was adjudged, and the Court directed the release of the prisoner. Held that the document not being given in evidence in any proceeding in Court, theCollector was not bound to proceed under Sections 169 and 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In re The Queen v. Gour Mohun Sen, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 6; 11 W. R., Cr., 48.

Where the sanction to the prosecution accorded under Section 170, Code of Criminal Procedure, is extended only to one of the persons charged, the High Court quashed the commitment, and directed the discharge of the persons to whom the sanction did not apply. Queen v. Woodernull Singh and Gunghoo Singh, 10 W. R., Cr., 24.

A former decision in a civil suit in which the issue was the genuineness or otherwise of a kubool, and the Court held that it was not genuine, but added (as an obiter dictum) that the potta produced by the other side was authentic, does not bar the jurisdiction of a Civil Court in sanctioning a commitment for forgery in respect of the potta. Jugraj Misser v. Baboo Lall, 15 S. W. R., Cr., 50.

Under Section 170 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, any Civil Court which has the power of calling before it the proceedings and evidence of a suit in which forgery is alleged to have been committed, may, if satisfied after a preliminary enquiry that the charge is proper for investigation, give its sanction to the charge being entertained and investigated by the Magistrate, notwithstanding that the Subordinate Court by whom the suit was being tried refused its sanction to the prosecution. Dinubundo Chuckerbotty, petitioner, 5 W. R., Mis. 6.

The sanction accorded by a Civil Court, under Section 169 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in a case under Section 193, Indian Penal Code, need not be more specific than a general sanction to prosecute for any false statement contained in the two depositions given. Queen v. Kadir Buksh, 11 W. R., Cr., 17.

The Appellate Court to which it is subordinate may sanction the prosecution of an offence against a Court of first instance, even if the offence is abetment. Ishan Chunder Ghose, in the matter of, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 352.

A Sub-Registrar, under Act XX of 1866, has no power to investigate regarding the commission of an offence committed before him in the registration of any document, but should cause the complainant to proceed, under Section 66 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, before the Magistrate, or before an officer authorized to receive such complaint. The sanction of the Registrar, under Section 95, Act XX of 1866, relates to a prosecution to be instituted by the Sub-Registrar for an offence under the Act. Queen v. Haridus Kundee, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 69; 13 S. W. R., Cr., R., 21.

Where an offence is committed against a Court of first instance, the Appellate Court to which it is subordinate is competent to sanction a prosecution under Chapter XI of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Sanction to such a prosecution may be given even if the offence is abetment. In the matter of Ishan Chunder Ghose, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 352.

Where sanction to prosecute on a criminal charge, under Section 169 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was given in the case of only one out of two prisoners who were tried together, the High Court directed the release of the prisoner.
in regard to whom such sanction was not given. Queen v. Raj Kishore Roy, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 55.

The sanction for the prosecution of a Kulkarni for making a false report as a public servant, required by Section 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, may be given by the Mamlatdar or by the Patil to whom such Kulkarni is subordinate. The sanction of the Collector is not necessary for that purpose.

Section 167 of the Criminal Procedure requires that sanction to prosecutions therein mentioned shall be given before any such prosecution is commenced; and, until the sanction is obtained, the tribunal by which the offence is triable has no jurisdiction, and a conviction founded on evidence taken without such sanction would be bad.

Where a complaint charged a person who was one of the public servants mentioned in Section 167 of the Criminal Procedure Code with committing acts which, if committed by a private individual, would have constituted the offence of extortion, it was held that it was not illegal to treat the charge as a charge of extortion, and to proceed with the trial without sanction for the prosecution. Reg. v. Parshrám Kesav, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr., 61.

Where the Magistrate before whom a witness gives false evidence himself commits such a witness for trial, his sanction of the prosecution, under Section 168 of the Criminal Procedure Code, will be implied. Reg. v. Múhammad Khan Valad Imám Khan, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr., Ca., 57.

The words of Section 191 of the Penal Code are very general, and do not contain any limitation that the false statement made shall have any bearing upon the matter in issue. It is sufficient to bring a case within that section if the false evidence is intentionally given, that is to say, if the person making the statement makes it advisedly, knowing it to be false, and with the intention of deceiving the Court, and of leading it to be supposed that which he states is true.

The object of the sanction required by Section 169, Code of Criminal Procedure, is to ensure that the prosecution should be instituted after due consideration on the part of the Court before whom the false evidence was given, or on the part of a Court to which such Court is subordinate.

When a Magistrate perused the paper of a case which had been forwarded to him by a Subordinate Magistrate for consideration, and then sent on the papers to the District Superintendent of Police with an opinion adverse to the prisoner, and the District Superintendent of Police requested the Magistrate to issue a warrant against the prisoner, charging him with giving false evidence, it was held that the issuing of the warrant was a sufficient sanction, under Section 169, on the part of the Magistrate. Queen v. Mahomed Hassán, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 37.

A memorandum, under the signature of the Collector, sanctioning the prosecution, cannot be accepted in the place of a complaint, so as to authorize the issuing of a summons. Reg. v. Beer Dravale, 5 B. R., Cr. R., 48.

In a suit by A. for arrears of rent above Rs. 100 a decree was passed against B., C., and D., wherein certain documents filed by them were held to be forgeries, A. applied for and obtained an order from the Deputy Collector who tried the suit, for leave to prosecute B. and C. in the Criminal Court. A. afterwards applied to the Collector for leave to prosecute B., C., and D., whereupon the Collector passed the following order:—“Sanction has already been given once by the Deputy Collector. I, however, have no objection to give it a second time, as the petitioner desires it.” D. was convicted by the Sessions Judge on a charge under Section 471 of the Penal Code. On appeal by D.,—Held that no proper leave had been obtained to prosecute D., and this defect was not cured by the subsequent proceedings, and the conviction must be quashed. Queen v. Mohima Chundra Chuckerbulty, 7 B. L. R., 26, and 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 45.

When a Civil Court gives sanction to a prosecution under Sections 169 and 170, Code of Criminal Procedure, it should state with precision the particular offence or offences for the prosecution of which it gives sanction. Queen v. Ooma Moyo Deesa, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 25.

Prosecution for non-attendance in obedience to a summons was entertained without the sanction required by Section 168 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held that there was an implied sanction for the prosecution, as the conviction was by the same Magistrate whose summons was treated with contempt. Reg. v. Gana bin Tatia Selar, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 38.

The sanction of a District Superintendent of Police to the prosecution of a charge of giving false information, not to such District Superintendent himself, but to an Assistant District Superintendent, is no sufficient sanction under Section 198 of the C. C. I. Queen v. Ootam Chund, 2 N. W. R., 287.

The law does not require the sanction to a prosecution to be given in any particular form of words, and it permits such sanction to be given at any time. When a Sessions Court directs a commitment, it must be taken to sanction the prosecution out of which the commitment arises. Queen v. Lékhrón, 2 N. W. R., 132.

It would be undesirable for the High Court, except under very peculiar circumstances, to entertain in the first instance an application to authorize a prosecution for perjury. Sheeb Persaud Chuckerbulty, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 46.

Where the Judicial Commissioner of Assam, sitting as Sessions Judge, certified, in his capacity of Judge of the Chief Civil Court in Assam, that a charge of false evidence was entertained with the sanction of the District Court of Assam, to which the Court of the Moonsiff of Debhogur, before or against which the offence was committed, was subordinate,—Held that the sanction required, by Section 169, Code of Criminal Procedure, had been given. Baporam Akeem v. Gunaram Kuchurn, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 57.

A Civil Court has no power to make an order, under Section 170 of the Criminal Procedure Code, sanctioning a prosecution for an offence committed before the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen on the Small Cause side, that Court not being subordinate to the Civil Court. Ex-parte Mahalingayein, 6 Mad. Rep., 191.
The sanction of Government is required for the prosecution of any Judge, if a complaint is made against him as Judge. Construction of Section 167 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXII.

An application under Section 169 of the Criminal Procedure Code, praying for sanction to institute a prosecution on a charge of perjury, should, as a general rule, be first made to the Court before which the perjury is alleged to have been committed. The Rajah of Venkatagiri, 6 Mad. Rep., 92.

Sanction was given by the Magistrate for the institution of a criminal proceedings against the defendant for having made a false charge against the complainant. The Magistrate dismissed the complaint on the ground that the complainant had taken no step to prosecute for three months after the sanction was obtained. Held that the Magistrate had power to dismiss the complaint. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XV.

The proceedings of a Magistrate who tries prisoners charged with having committed offences under Sections 93 and 95 of the Registration Act XX of 1866, are not illegal and without jurisdiction or otherwise bad, merely because the prosecution was (with the sanction of the Registrar to whom he was subordinate) instituted against the accused by the same Magistrate in his official capacity of sub-Registrar. The Government of Bengal v. Hura Lal Das, 17 S. W. R., Cr., R., 39.

21.—WARRANT OF ARREST.

A warrant, which did not specify a punishable offence, and which had been issued upon a statement not sufficient to make out any offence, was quashed. Srimuti Bidheemukhi Debi, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 129, and 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 4.

Section 68 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives a Magistrate jurisdiction on proper evidence to issue a warrant for the arrest of persons in a pending case. Sideshurty Chowdrain, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 50.

A person complaining of irregularity of process issued for his arrest and for the attachment of his property, before applying to the High Court under Section 404 of the Criminal Procedure Code, should make application to the Magistrate issuing such process for his discharge and the release of his property, on the ground of the informality of the warrants. Queen v. Bisheshur Pershad, 2 N. W. R., 441.

Section 68 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies only to cases in which the private individual injured or aggrieved does not come forward to make a formal complaint. That section is intended for the purpose of enabling a Magistrate to take care that justice may be vindicated, notwithstanding that the persons individually aggrieved are unwilling or unable to prosecute; and even in such cases the jurisdiction to arrest requires, for its foundation, knowledge of the fact of an offence having been committed, and that knowledge must be either personal or derived from testimony legally given. The report of the police, or any statement which falls short of an actual formal complaint, or of a statement made on oath, is not sufficient in law to give a Magistrate jurisdiction to issue his warrant. Under Section 77 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate ought not to issue a warrant to an unofficial person, except when he is without the assistance of competent police officers, and unless the urgency is imminent.

The force of a warrant of arrest is at an end when the prisoner is brought before the Magistrate, and the prisoner cannot lawfully be committed to prison or remanded without sufficient grounds; and in the absence of evidence, there can be no grounds.

In this case, although the Magistrate had acted illegally before evidence was recorded, and had shown a want of discretion in some of the stages, the High Court refused to quash the Magistrate's order directing the prisoners to be put upon their defence, on the ground that the order had been made by a competent officer after hearing evidence which was judicially received and recorded. Queen v. Surendra Nath Roy, 5 B. L. R., 274; S. C. 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 27.

The issue of a warrant under Section 316 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is permissible for every breach of an order of maintenance made under that section, but there seems no ground for saying that a defendant can get out of his liability to pay payment by way of arrears for the levy of that payment. The result of issuing it for an aggregate of payments is that one month's imprisonment would alone be awardable in default. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIII.

A warrant issued under Section 68, which is a warrant of arrest as described under Section 76 (Form B), is only for the purpose of bringing an accused person before the Magistrate. It is not a warrant for commitment, and does not authorize the detention of a person longer than is necessary for his production before the Magistrate. To detain him further, there must be a fresh warrant under Section 222, charging the prisoner with some offence, on evidence taken on oath or affirmation, and in the presence of the accused. In the matter of Mohes Behunder Banneryea; Queen v. Poorna Chunder Banneryea; Queen v. Kali Sirkar, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 1; 13 S. W. R., Cr., 1.

Held that the order of a Magistrate sanctioning the detention by the police of an accused person for an indefinite period is illegal. At the expiration of twenty-four hours from the time of arrest, the accused must be brought before a Magistrate, who can then remand for a period not exceeding fifteen days, under Section 224 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The force of a warrant of arrest is at an end when the prisoner is brought before the Magistrate. Muthuoor Nauth Chucberbutty v. Heera Lal Das, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 55.

Where an accused person was arrested as an absconded offender, and without evidence being gone into on that charge, an enquiry was made into his mode of livelihood, without any summons being issued under Section 306 of the Criminal Procedure Code, such proceedings were held to be irregular. Queen v. Pittoon, 3 N. W. R., 2.

has reason to believe that the witness will not attend in obedience to a summons. Queen v. Chunder Shekur Roy, 12 W. R., Cr., 18.

A Magistrate or Municipal Commissioner has no power under Act III of 1864, Bengal Council, to issue a warrant for the arrest of a person who may have failed to appear on a summons to answer a charge, under Section 37 of that enactment, for using premises as a sawmill or wood depot without a license. Per Loch, J.—The provisions of Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure are not applicable to offences under Act III of 1864, B. C. Bisessur Chatterjee, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 1.

22.—Search Warrant.

It is essential to the legality of a search-warrant, under Section 114 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that the production of some specified and particular thing is desired; that the Magistrate alone shall determine that such production is necessary; and that a specified house or place only is to be searched. The warrant must, under Section 115 of that Code, be directed to some other person only when a police officer is not forthcoming. Queen v. Syud Hosein Ali Chowdhry, 8 W. R., Cr., 74.

An officer, subordinate to an officer in charge of a police station, who was deputed by the latter to make an enquiry under Section 135 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, attempted without a search-warrant to enter a house in search of property allegedly to have been stolen, and was obstructed and resisted. Held (applying Section 99 of the Indian Penal Code) that, even though the police officer was not strictly justified in searching the house without a warrant, the person obstructing and resisting could not set up the illegality of the officer's proceeding as a justification of his obstruction, and it was not shown that that officer was acting otherwise than in good faith and without malice. An Magistrate acting judicially should not import into the case before him his previous knowledge of the character of the accused, but should determine his guilt or innocence upon the evidence given in the case. Reg. v. Vyankatrao Shrinivás, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr., 50.

23.—Preliminary Enquiry.

An accused should be allowed, at preliminary inquiries before a Magistrate, to cross-examine the witnesses; but whether the accused himself shall be examined upon the matter of the charge by the Magistrate, is left entirely to the discretion of the Magistrate, and such discretion should not be exercised when the Magistrate thinks that the evidence for the prosecution does not disclose any proper subject of criminal charge against the prisoner. Queen v. Shama Sunkur Biswas and Shama Churn Bose, 10 W. R., Cr., 25.

It is necessary to a proper preliminary enquiry that the accused (or, under certain circumstances, his agent) should be present; that the witnesses whose evidence is to be the foundation of the commitment should be examined before him; and that he should have the opportunity of cross-examining them. It is essential, too, in a case of perjury, that he should know at what period he ceased to be a witness, and his position was changed to that of the accused. Queen v. Kalichurn Lahooroo, 9 W. R., Cr., 54.

A Magistrate holding a preliminary investigation under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or a Magistrate holding a trial of an offence within his jurisdiction under Chapter XIV of the Code, has power, under Sections 202 and 250, to put questions to the accused, and to examine him as he may consider necessary; and the Court of Session has similar power in regard to persons on trial before that Court, but the Procedure Code makes no such provisions in respect of parties under trial under Chapter XV. Nursing Chunder Miller, petitioner, 12 W. R., Cr., 77.

Where an accused person was discharged by a Deputy Magistrate under Section 225 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, after a preliminary enquiry, the Magistrate of the district may proceed against him afresh under Section 68 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Per Markby, J.—Section 435 (Act VIII of 1869) provides for the revision of proceedings which have already been commenced: Section 68 (Act XXV of 1861) provides for the institution of proceedings de novo. Ramjai Muzumdar, in the matter of the petition of, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 67, and 14 S. W. R., Cr., 65.

The misappropriation of each separate item of money with which a person is entrusted is a separate offence, and the facts connected with it should form the subject of a separate enquiry. The duty of a committing officer in such a case is to select certain distinct items, to frame his charges upon them, and to adduce evidence specially upon those items. Queen v. Chetter, C. A., 15 S. W. R., Cr., 5.

The necessity of making proper enquiries before committing to the Sessions pointed out. It is the duty of the police and the Magistrate not only to bring the parties suspected of being guilty to trial, but also to ascertain whether the suspected can clear themselves from the crime of which they are accused. Queen v. Kishko Doba, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 16.

A Magistrate is competent, under Section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to direct an enquiry to be made by a police officer into an offence punishable under a Local Act, such as the Police Act. Held that where a Magistrate professes to act under one section of the Criminal Procedure Code, under which he has no jurisdiction, but it is found that he has jurisdiction under some other section of the Code, the mistake is one which does not justify interference with the Magistrate's order, if otherwise good, and if the accused has not been prejudiced thereby. Queen v. Frankisto Palo, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 41.

A Magistrate cannot refuse a summons to a complainant, even in a case in which the charge might have been laid at the police in the first instance. A Magistrate is bound, under Section 66 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to examine the complainant on oath, and pass orders in the case. Amer Mahomed v. G. Brass, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 36.

A Magistrate is bound, with reference to Section 20 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to proceed in the investigation of cases arising under a special law (such as the Salt Law), according to all the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 270 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to complaints under a special law, but only to complaints triable by the Magistrate and punishable under the Penal Code with imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months. Queen v. Abdool Azeez Khan, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 36.

A Subordinate Judge, finding that a person had made a false verification of a plaint, sent his case for investigation to a Magistrate of the district, who refused to investigate it on the ground that the alleged offence was one triable exclusively by the Court of Session, to which the Subordinate Judge himself should, under Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, have committed it.

Held that the Magistrate of the district was bound to proceed with the investigation of the case, according to Section 16 of Act XXIII of 1861. Reg. v. Amanta Nath, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr., 29.

The proceedings before a Magistrate preliminary to commitment are not impeachable for irregularity because some of the depositions were taken before the accused persons were brought before him. Queen v. Ameer Khan and others, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 15.

The Court declined to set aside the preliminary proceedings before the Magistrate, because, though there might have been some irregularity in them, they had not been objected to by the parties, notwithstanding that they had full opportunity of doing so.

The decision in 12 W. R., 49, does not apply to a case where a regular charge was subsequently drawn up, giving the prisoner full information of the offence which it was intended to prove; still less to an ordinary Sessions case, where the regularity of the preliminary proceeding is not in question under the plea of not guilty. Government v. Mohesh Chunder Bannerjee, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 35.

In framing a charge for giving false evidence, under Section 193 of the Penal Code, the charge should be precise; and where the accused is charged with giving false evidence on three different occasions, each occasion should form the subject of a distinct head in the charge.

Amendments in a charge ought to be made formally, and should appear on the face of the record. Queen v. Fojobdar Roy, 9 W. R., Cr., 14.

A Sessions Judge has no power to try a prisoner who has been committed for trial on no specific charge. Queen v. Ram Kutun Doss, 6 W. R., Cr., 23.

Where a Deputy Magistrate did not draw up a charge in accordance with Section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but gave the accused clearly to understand the nature of the charges made against them, the irregularity was held to fall within Section 403 of that Code. Bhugwan and others v. Doyal Gope, 10 W. R., Cr., 7.

Where no formal charge has been drawn up by the Magistrate, under Section 250 of Act XXV of 1861, and the accused has not been called upon, under Section 251, to plead thereto, and was not tried thereunder, a release by the Magistrate of the accused does not amount to an acquittal under Section 255, but simply to a discharge under Section 250. Under such circumstances, Section 435, Act VIII of 1859, empowers a Sessions Judge to direct the committal of the accused to take their trial. In re Jagabandhu Myti v. Gobardhan Bera, 4 B. L. R., A. Cr., 1; S. C., 12 W. R., Cr., 65.

A charge should be so framed as to refer to the section of the Penal Code under which the offence charged is punishable, as required by Sections 234 and 237 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Dursoolla and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 33.

Charges of perjury should contain a distinct assertion with regard to each statement intended to be characterized as perjury; that it was made; that it is untrue in fact; that the accused knew it to be so when he made it; and the investigation of the Court should be directed to each of those points singly. Queen v. Kalichurn Lahore, 9 W. R., Cr., 54.

A person accused of perjury is entitled to have the specific charge made against him tried quite independently of a like charge against another person, and the Court of Sessions must find judiciously whether all, or if not all, which, of the particular charges of perjury, where there is more than one charge, is made out against each prisoner. A conviction for perjury, moreover, should not be sustained on the bare testimony of one witness. Queen v. Khod Lal, 9 W. R., Cr., 66.

A charge under Section 302 of the Penal Code need not set out at length all the facts necessary to constitute the offence of murder, and negative all the exceptions contained in Section 300, which defines the crime of murder.

Technical objections to criminal charges, particularly on the ground of the want of a sufficient specification of details, should be taken before the conclusion of the trial, when the Judge may, if necessary, amend the charge, and not afterwards, unless it appear that some failure of justice has been caused by the irregularity complained of. Government v. Ramasarma, 5 W. R., Recorder's Ref., 1.

Where several offences are charged under the same section, the Committing Magistrate should frame the charge so as to contain a separate head for each offence. The omission of the Magistrate to do this may be remedied by the Sessions Judge exercising the powers of amendment contained in Section 244 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Kalaram Singh and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 8.

A charge, under Section 411 of the Penal Code, of dishonestly receiving stolen property, should state the articles found in possession of the accused were the property of A. B., the owner thereof. Reg. v. Sidoo Bin Balmith, 1 Bom. Rep., 95.

In a case of mischief by fire with intent to cause the destruction of a dwelling-house, the charge should lay the intent as an intent to cause the destruction, not of a house simply, but of a house used as a human dwelling. Queen v. Durbar Polte, 8 W. R., 30.

A Magistrate, when he has prepared his charge, is bound to read it to the accused, and to ask him if he wishes to have any witnesses summoned to give evidence on his behalf at the Sessions. Queen v. Hurnath Roy, 2 W. R., Cr., 50.

A charge should distinctly set forth the particular offence in respect of which the accused either omitted to give information, or gave information which he knew to be false; and it should appear precisely what his duty was in the matter. Queen v. Mosubroo and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 37.

After the finding and discharge of the Assessors in a case of murder, the Judge altered the charge to culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and convicted the accused on that charge. Held, that the conviction was illegal. Queen v. Dyee Bhola, 1 W. R., Cr., 40.

The prisoner, who was charged with culpable homicide not amounting to murder, was tried for that offence, and there being no sufficient proof to convict on that charge, was tried by the Sessions Judge for not having used lawful means in preventing the riot (Section 154), and was punished for that offence. Held that the Sessions Judge was competent to charge the accused, and to try the prisoner for any offence coming under any one of the sections of the Code. Government v. Thacoor Doss, 1 Agra Rep., Cr., 13.

An indictment will not be invalidated in consequence of the charge not notifying the specific Section 161: it is necessary to show that the offence the instigation of which is the subject of the charge, has been committed. The Queen v. Notakur Nundy, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 43.

The materiality of the subject-matter of the statement is not a substantial part of the offence of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding, and an indictment under Sections 191, 193, of the Penal Code, though it does not allege materiality, is good if it alleges sufficiently the substance of the offence. The Queen v. Aidrus Sahib, 1 Mad. Rep., 38.

The splitting up of one aggravated offence into separate minor offences (i.e., a conviction for lurking house-trespass and theft under Section 456 and 380 of the Penal Code, instead of for lurking house-trespass in order to commit theft, under Section 457), prohibited. The Queen v. Ram Churn Kairee, 6 W. R., Cr., 39.

An indictment for cheating, under Sections 415 and 420 of the Penal Code, should state that the property obtained was the property of the person defrauded. An indictment defective in this respect is defective for uncertainty, and must be objected to, if at all, before the Jury is sworn.

The latter part of Section 41 of Act XVIII of 1862 only gives power to amend where the defect is formal. Queen v. Williams, 1 Mad. Rep., 31.

Section 242, Act XXV of 1861, points out how the charge is to be drawn up in a case in which it is doubtful which of two statements made by the accused is false. The Queen v. Kala Khan, 12 W. R., Cr., 23.

Where certain charges did not set out the exact statements made by witnesses which the Magistrate intended to prove false, but the defect was not such as to mislead the accused, the High Court declined to interfere under Section 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but warned the Magistrate to be careful for the future. Queen v. Adhya Thakoor, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 33.

Where a policeman in whose sight a theft was committed arrested the thief, and, being himself unable to take or send the accused to a Magistrate, sent a report, on which the Magistrate issued a warrant, and took his conviction. Held that, under these circumstances, the accused was legally brought before the Magistrate. Reg. v. Mahiya Valad Bomya Mahar, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., C., 99.

Where an accused person appears voluntarily before a Magistrate to answer a charge, the want of a complaint on oath, necessary for the issuing of a summons or warrant (Sections 66 and 43, Criminal Procedure Code), becomes immaterial. Semble,—The Magistrate taking a complaint and issuing a summons thereon, acts not ministerially, but judicially.

Conditions under which a Magistrate may proceed with an investigation or trial without a complaint upon oath considered, and cases bearing on the question reviewed and explained. Reg. v. Sad Shivotappa Pandurem Guppa, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 29.

Where a complaint laid before a Magistrate F. P., by certain Government employés, accused the prisoner of criminal breach of trust of their wages, but from the evidence adduced it appeared that the prisoner was guilty of criminal breach of trust of Government money, it was held that the Magistrate, F. P., had power to frame a charge against and convict the prisoner of the latter offence without a fresh complaint being made to him. Reg. v. Dhanded Ram Chundra, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr. C., 100.

A charge under Section 451 must charge the accused with committing house trespass with intent to commit some specific offence punishable with imprisonment. Queen v. Mohur Dowalata, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 63.

On a trial by Jury, the Sessions Judge has no power to alter the charge after the delivery of the verdict. Reg. v. Shek Ali Valad Faker Muham, 5 Bom. Rep., 9.

The form of an accusation by a District Superintendent of Police, under Section 193 of the Penal Code, does not preclude a Magistrate from framing the charge under Section 177; the sanction of the District Superintendent required under Section 168, Code of Criminal Procedure, to give the Magistrate jurisdiction, need not be express, but may be implied. In the case of Ashruff Hossein, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 67.

A Subordinate Magistrate (second class), who is not specially vested with powers under Section 66A of the amended Code of Criminal Procedure, has no jurisdiction to try a case on the report of a police officer, or on a complaint directly preferred to him.

The High Court will not, except on very strong and very clear grounds, transfer a case from one Magistrate's Court to that of another Magistrate. Reg. v. Shankur Alaaji Hoshing, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr., C., 69.
A statement by a private person, not upon oath or solemn affirmation, is not credible information, but would not be sufficient ground for a final adjuration under Section 288.

In order to warrant an adjuration under Section 288, there should be a judicial investigation, and the order should be passed upon legal evidence duly taken and recorded. Reg. v. Jivangi Limji, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 1.

Proper course laid down for a Judge to adopt when the facts proved do not support the charge as laid. Reg. v. Papee Farbut, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 81.

The Court, under Section 1 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XVIII of 1862), has power to order the amendment of a charge involving a charge in the ownership of stolen property, provided such amendment does not prejudice the accused in his defence upon the merits.

Where it is doubtful whether an amendment of a charge will or will not prejudice the accused in his defence upon the merits, the amendment ought not to be made.

Where the accused was charged with receiving stolen goods from the wife of the prosecutor, the property in the goods being laid in the prosecutor, and the charges were amended by laying the property in the prosecutor jointly with his mother, it was held that such amendment ought not to have been made. Reg. v. Govindas Haridoss, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 76.

In a case in which the accused is charged with having dishonestly appropriated property under Section 403 of the Penal Code, the charges should specify the person to whom the property belonged. Where the accused is interested in the property jointly with others, he is not necessarily guilty of a criminal act if he takes possession of it and disposes of it. Queen v. Parbutty Churn Chuckerbutty, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 13.

Procedure before framing a charge under Section 211 of the Penal Code. In the matter of the petition of Gour Mohan Singh, 8 B. L. R., Ap., 11, and 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 44.

Although a Sessions Judge has power to alter or amend a charge, he cannot add an entirely new charge, which is not even cognate to the charge on which an accused person has been committed for trial. Queen v. Waris Ali, 3 N. W. R., 337.

A charge alleging a previous conviction need not show the extent of the former punishment. Revised form of charge. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XI.

When an accused pleads guilty to a charge already framed, the Sessions Judge has no power to alter the charge upon the evidence in the record. Upon a charge of murder the accused pleaded "guilty," the Sessions Judge, taking into consideration the circumstances of the case, reduced the charge to homicide not amounting to murder. Held that the proceeding was illegal. Queen v. Goburdhan Bhuyan, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 101; 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 55.

A Court of Session is competent to proceed to the trial of a prisoner brought before it upon a charge by a Magistrate authorized to make a commitment, though the complaint or authorization be contained only in a letter from the Judge of that Court to the Magistrate of the district, sent with the record of the case, notwithstanding an "irregularity or defect of form in recording the complaint."

The complaint or authorization of the Court before which, or against the authority of which, an offence mentioned in Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure is alleged to have been committed, is a sufficient warrant for commencement of criminal proceedings. The Queen v. Mahim Chundra Chuckerbutty overruled; Queen v. Narayan Nath, 5 B. L. R., 660, and 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 34.

Six persons were charged in the same charge as follows: "That you, on or about the — day of June — at Tajpur, committed the offence of voluntarily giving false evidence in the stage of a judicial proceeding, and that you have thereby committed an offence under Section 193 of the Penal Code."

Held, the charge was bad and defective: first, as it charged a number of persons jointly with giving false evidence; second, as it did not show what statement the accused persons made; third, as it did not mention the day and year when the offence was committed; fourth, as it did not indicate the Court or officer before whom the false evidence was given.

To support a charge of giving false evidence under Section 193, it must be shown that the accused made a particular statement false to his own knowledge. Queen v. Maharaj Misser, 7 B. L. R., Ap., 66, and 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 47.

In a case in which a false charge was brought, a Magistrate gave the accused (A.) permission under Section 169, Code of Criminal Procedure, to prosecute the complainant (B.) of an offence under Section 211, Penal Code. The Magistrate tried the complaint of A. as a complaint under Section 211, but he subsequently framed a charge against B. under Section 182, Penal Code, and punished him under that section.

Held, with reference to Section 168, Code of Criminal Procedure, that the offences under Sections 182 and 211, Penal Code, being offences under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate was wrong in framing the charge under Section 182 without obtaining the previous sanction of the Criminal Court which heard the previous complaint of B. Eaj Coomar v. Kirirtee Oljee, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 67.

Held that the omission to prepare a charge did not vitiate the proceedings; and conviction upheld. Reg. v. Khabat Radd Bhide et al., 5 Bom. Rep., Cr. R., 40.

On a charge of perjury, each of the accused should be separately charged and tried in respect of the alleged perjury. Queen v. Ruikee Ram 2 N. W. R., 21.

The charge and finding in a case of causing hurt, under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code, need not contain a negation that the hurt was caused on grave and sudden provocation. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. V.

Where a person makes one statement before the Magistrate, and a directly different statement before the Civil Court, his commitment on an alternative charge, after the consent of the Civil Court has been obtained, under Section 169 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is strictly legal. Queen v. Ootur Narain Singh, 8 W. R., Cr., 79.

A Justice of the Peace or Magistrate committing a prisoner for trial before the High Court is bound, under Section 3 of Act XII of 1862, to frame and send up with the deposition a specific charge against the prisoner. Reg. v. T. T. Panesar, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 404.

Simler.—The latter part of Act XVIII of 1862, Section 41, gives power to amend an indictment where the defect is formal. The Queen v. Willans, 1 Mad. Rep., 31.

25.—Discharge.

Evidence in support of a complaint must be taken and considered before a Magistrate can dismiss the complaint. A mere plea by an accused, that the property of the theft of which he is charged is his own property, unsupported by proof, or by some circumstances which tend to indicate that there is some truth in the statement, is not sufficient to entitle him to be summarily discharged. Runoon Singh v. Kali Churm Misser, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 18.

The discharge by a Deputy Magistrate of a person charged with an offence liable only by a Court of Sessions, is no bar to the Sessions Judge ordering the committal of such persons to the Sessions under Section 435, Act VIII of 1859. Queen v. Sreenuath Day, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 61.

Where the Sub-Magistrate dismissed a charge for theft without enquiry,—Held that the District Magistrate might institute a fresh enquiry into the complaint. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXI.

A prisoner is entitled to be discharged from custody immediately on the judgment of acquittal being pronounced, and no formal warrant is necessary. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XI.

The words “dismissed without enquiry” in Section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure refer to a complaint which a Magistrate, under Section 67 of the said Code, has dismissed without making the enquiry he is empowered to make under Section 180. Re Moolchund, 3 N. W. R., 261.

Where, under Section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a case is sent up for investigation by a Magistrate, it is competent for such Magistrate to discharge the accused under Section 225, if, in his opinion, the evidence against the accused is not sufficient to warrant their committal to the Sessions Court. Reg. v. Padurang Majral and Ram Krishna Hari, 5 B. R., Cr., 41.

A Deputy Magistrate was held to have acted irregularly in dismissing a complaint, and directing the trial of the complainant under Section 211 of the Penal Code, without recording his reasons for doing so, and without examining all the witnesses tendered by the complainant, or allowing reasonable time for the attendance of such of the witnesses as were not present. Queen v. Heera Lall Ghose, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 37.

Dismissal of a complaint under Section 269 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in consequence of non-attendance of the complainant, the order of dismissal having been passed before the trial commenced, amounts to a discharge without trial, and does not bar the complaint from being again preferred. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. VIII.

In answer to a reference from a Sessions Judge, the Court were of opinion that, in a case where the accused has been duly summoned or arrested under a warrant, and is present to meet any charge, and the complainant and his witnesses negligently fail to appear against him, if it be not shown to the Magistrate that the case is one in which he ought to adjourn the enquiry under Section 224, Code of Criminal Procedure, the accused person ought to be discharged; but also held that the question did not arise under the circumstances of the case, and the case must go back to the Magistrate for investigation. Taki Mahomed Mandal v. Krishna Nath Rai, 7 B. L. R., 7, and 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 7.

26.—Commitment.

A Judicial Commissioner has no power, under Section 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to commit a witness for a false deposition given before the Assistant Commissioner.

The evidence of a writer in the Judicial Commissioner's office, to the effect that “the document shown to him is a deposition taken before the Assistant Commissioner; it appears to have been taken in due form upon solemn affirmation, and is attested by the signature of the Assistant Commissioner, is not sufficient evidence of the prisoner having duly deposed. Per Norman, J.—Quaere, notwithstanding the decision of the Full Bench, as to the correctness of conviction for perjury upon alternative statements. Queen v. Mati Khwai, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 36; S. C., 12 W. R., Cr., 31.

Legally, and for the purposes of a commitment, a Magistrate and Joint-Magistrate have equal powers, and the Joint-Magistrate is not bound to act upon the instructions of the Magistrate in a judicial proceeding, such as the commencement of a preliminary enquiry. Queen v. Tilko Goala, 8 W. R., Cr., 61.

A Court of Session cannot treat as a nullity the commitment of a Magistrate, F. P., on the ground that he investigated the case, and committed the prisoner, without a formal complaint being made to him, but should proceed with the trial in the usual course. Reg. v. Ranchoddas Nathubhai, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 35.

There had been a riot and fight between two factories, and some members of one party (A) were charged with the murder of the leader of the other party (B), and some members of the other party (B) were charged with causing grievous hurt to the leader of A. *Held that the members of each party should have been committed for trial separately, and that the Magistrate was wrong in committing the members of party (A.) and of party (B.) for trial all together upon joint charges, as if they had had one common object. Queen v. Sheik Basu and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 47.

A Small Cause Court Judge, if it is his intention to proceed under Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, should complete the investigation, and either commit or hold to bail the accused persons to take their trial before the Court of Session. Resolution on a Letter, 1 W. R., Cr., 5.

Criminal Procedure—Commitment.

The Sessions Judge wished to cancel a committal, on the ground of the evidence being insufficient. As the committal was not illegal, he was ordered to try the case; Circular Order No. 7 having reference only to commitments altogether illegal. Resolution on a Letter, 1 W. R., Cr., 8.

A Collector, trying a suit under Act X of 1859, has authority to commit to the Sessions Judge. Queen v. Bunsee Singh, 1 W. R., Cr., 47.

It is not illegal for a Magistrate to commit an accused to the Sessions without examining him or his witnesses. Queen v. Hurnath Roy, 2 W. R., Cr., 50.

A committal once made of an accused person by a Magistrate to the Sessions, cannot be annulled by his allowing the prosecutor to file a compromise. Queen v. Salim Sheik, 2 W. R., Cr., 57.

A Magistrate making an enquiry, with a view to commit, is bound to record specially the evidence on which the committal is made. Queen v. R. Anderson, 2 W. R., Cr., 65.

A Sessions Judge has no authority to interfere and direct a committal in the case of a conviction for assault under Section 352, or of hurt under Section 343 of the Penal Code, after a Magistrate has committed them being offences triable by the Subordinate Court. Queen v. Ramlokhul Singh, 5 W. R., Cr., 12.

A Magistrate should state in the grounds of committal the particulars of the case. Queen v. Ishur Manjee, 5 W. R., Cr., 17.

A Sessions Judge may, under Section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, after a Magistrate has discharged an accused person, order the Magistrate to commit the accused person to the Sessions. Mooker J Mean, petitioner, 7 W. R., Cr., 38.

Where a Magistrate used the words "acquittal and release," when he intended only to discharge an accused of an offence not triable by him, —Held, that the Court of Session was competent, under Section 435, Code of Criminal Procedure, to order a commitment of such accused person. Queen v. Neetie Dulal, 8 W. R., Cr., 41.

The discharge of a person accused of an offence triable by the Court of Session, is no bar to his being again brought, with a view to commitment, before a Magistrate of a district who has discharged another accused in the same case. Queen v. Tilko Goola, 8 W. R., Cr., 61.

The power of commitment given to a Court of Session by Section 435, Code of Criminal Procedure, must be exercised judicially upon the evidence before the Court, and such Court ought not to order a commitment, unless the evidence appear to it sufficient for a conviction within the terms of Section 226.

Where such discretion has been exercised, the High Court cannot enquire into the evidence, to see if it justifies the exercise of the discretion. Queen v. Shama Sunker Birwus and Sham Churn Bose, 10 W. R., Cr., 25.

A Sessions Judge cannot alter a commitment in a case which falls within the cognizance of a Magistrate, even though the Sessions Judge thinks the evidence render that the accused was guilty of an offence beyond the Magistrate's cognizance. The High Court refused to interfere under Section 434, Code of Criminal Procedure, on a reference in which the Sessions Judge ordered a commitment in such a case, although they considered that there was evidence to prove that the offence was one triable by the Court of Session. In re Hakim Sirdar and another, 10 W. R., Cr., 35.

Where there is riot and fight between two factions, the members of each party should be committed for trial separately, and not all together. Queen v. Durzoolia and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 33.

Where a District Magistrate annulled a conviction passed by a Subordinate Magistrate (first class) of voluntarily causing hurt by means of an instrument for stabbing, cutting, &c., under Section 324 of the Indian Penal Code (an offence cognizable by the Subordinate Magistrate), and directed the Subordinate Magistrate to commit the accused to the Court of Session for trial on the charge of voluntarily causing grievous hurt by means, &c. (a charge cognizable by the Court of Session), the High Court annulled the order of the District Magistrate, and restored the conviction and sentence of the Subordinate Magistrate. Reg. v. Hamdnud bin Malud, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr., 37.

The fact of a commitment being made by a Joint Magistrate exercising the powers of a Magistrate, is sufficient, under Section 339, Code of Criminal Procedure, to enable the Sessions Judge to proceed with the trial; and it lies with the party impugning the correctness of the proceedings to show that there was no jurisdiction. Queen v. Komurooddee Sikhdar, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 17.

A commitment to hajut before evidence is recorded is illegal. Queen v. Surrrendro Nath Roy, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 27.

Where a Magistrate of a district who had discharged a prisoner was subsequently directed by the Sessions Judge to commit him for trial, and the commitment was eventually made by the Joint Magistrate,—Held, that such commitment was not illegal.

Although ordinarily the order of the Sessions Judge would be directed to the Magistrate who had discharged the accused person, yet there is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code to prevent such Sessions Judge from directing a committal by any Magistrate who has prosecuted the accused for such a case without an order from the Judge. Queen v. Lekrey, 2 N. W. R., 132.

Prisoner, whilst under trial before the Sessions Court, upon a charge framed under Section 436 of the Penal Code (mistake by fire, &c., with intent to destroy a house), was charged under Section 221 with escaping from lawful custody. The Magistrate being too late to make the latter offence the subject of another charge in the same case, made a separate commitment of the prisoner, after he had been convicted of the former offence, for the latter offence, which was one cognizable by the Magistrate. The commitment was cancelled, and the Magistrate directed to deal with the case himself. In re Anunto Koyburt, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 14.

A commitment by a Subordinate Magistrate to the Sessions Court with respect to offences not exclusively triable by the Sessions Court is good. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XVII.

The duty of a committing officer is to ascertain whether, by the evidence for the prosecution in a prima facie case is made out against an accused. Queen v. Maha Singh, 3 N. W. R., 27.

A Small Cause Court Judge sent a case for investigation to the Head Assistant Magistrate under the provisions of Section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Head Assistant Magistrate transferred the case for investigation to the Sub-Magistrate, who committed the case to the Sessions. Held that the order of commitment was bad. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLI.

The commitment and trial together of several persons who are charged with having given false evidence in the same proceeding should be avoided. A Court of Session is competent to try separately prisoners who have been committed together. Queen v. Kureem and another, 11 W. R., Cr., 16.

The grounds of commitment and the remarks of the committing officer should be entered or copied in the Calendar, which ought to be complete in itself. Queen v. Khoda Sethai and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 9.

27.—Sentence.

In a case of interruption to a public servant in a stage of a judicial proceeding, under Section 228, Penal Code, a sentence of imprisonment cannot be passed under Section 152 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the case of Biram Khan, 10 W. R., Cr., 47.

The insufficiency of the punishment allowed by the law in cases of affray pointed out. The Queen v. Phoollee Misser, 12 W. R., Cr., 72.

Where a quiet, peaceable man, suddenly, and without the least motive or provocation, runs amuck against all around him, his case is different from an ordinary case of deliberate murder deserving of the extreme penalty. Queen v. Bishonath Bunness, 8 W. R., Cr., 53.

The punishment for escape from lawful custody (Section 124) in a case in which is one of the offences of which the prisoner is convicted, must be "in addition" to any punishment awarded for the substantive offence. Queen v. Dhoonda Bhooya, 8 W. R., Cr., 85.

Where a prisoner confessed that he did not suspect his wife's fidelity; that he left home on business; that on his return he saw what convinced him of his wife's infidelity; and that, maddened at the sight, he killed both her and her paramour,—Held that he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and that the case was one in which he ought to be treated with lenity. Queen v. Sheik Boodhoo, 8 W. R., Cr., 38.

A sentence of three years' imprisonment is not too severe a punishment for a deliberate attempt to pervert justice by fabricating in one office false statements to be designedly and corruptly used in another. Queen v. Kalachand Boidyo and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 18.

Discussion as to the punishment sufficient for women charged with bringing a false charge of dacoity. Queen v. Nathoo Dos, 3 W. R., Cr., 12.

To make it legal to punish at Patna a prisoner committed in Calcutta on a charge of receiving stolen property, it must be shown that the property was stolen at Patna. Queen v. Ghassoo Khan, 5 W. R., Cr., 49.

If a Sessions Judge thinks that a Jury is wrong in convicting a prisoner of culpable homicide, and not of murder, though he cannot interfere with the finding, he may sentence the prisoner to transportation for life, instead of ten years' transportation. Munamram Chung, appellant, 1 W. R., Cr., 19.

Where a Sessions Judge and Assessor acquit in a case of murder, but find the prisoner guilty of a minor charge, the Appellate Court has no power to interfere to enhance the punishment awarded. In the matter of Toyab Shaikh, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 58.

In an affray respecting land the aggressor was killed, and the other party, had not the affair ended fatally, would have been in the legal exercise of the right of defence of property, and would have been entitled to the benefit of Section 104 of the Penal Code,—Held that one year's rigorous imprisonment was sufficient punishment for the latter. Queen v. Shunker Singh and others, 1 W. R., Cr., 34.

A sentence of imprisonment ought to commence from the time that the sentence is passed, unless there is some lawful reason for ordering it to commence at some future period. Except as in the cases provided for by Sections 46, 47, and 48 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate cannot authorize a sentence passed by him to take place from some future date, nor, except as provided for by Section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, can a sentence, which is to be carried immediately, be suspended. In the matter of Krishnamand Bhuslancharjee, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 50; 12 W. R., Cr., 47.

The right to a fishery was in dispute between the zemindar of Bally and the zemindar of Moharajpore. The former obtained a decree in the Civil Court declaring the fishery to be his, in proceedings to which the latter was not a party, and the servants of the Bally zemindar thereupon removed a bamboo bar, which the Moharajpore people had erected to prevent the passage of fish. For this they were convicted of mischief under the Indian Penal Code,—Held that one year's rigorous imprisonment was encroaching on their master's rights. Bakar Halsana v. Dinobandhu Biswas, 3 B. L. R., Cr., 17; 8 S. C., 12 W. R., Cr., 1.

Although a Sessions Judge cannot release a prisoner on bail pending an appeal, he may suspend the sentence pending the appeal. Queen v. Moarati Jan Mookerjee, 3 W. R., Cr., 57.

A woman, quick with child, is exempt from capital punishment. Queen v. Tepoo, 3 W. R., Cr., 15.

Additional imprisonment in default of payment of fine must be rigorous. Queen v. Srimonto Kotal and another, 7 W. R., Cr., 31.

Simple and not rigorous imprisonment can be inflicted in default of payment of a fine imposed on an offender convicted, under Section 179 of the Penal Code, for refusal to answer a question asked of him by a public servant on a subject on which he was legally bound to state the truth. Queen v. Jogeshwar Roy, 5 W. R., Cr., 76.

To bring Section 59 of the Penal Code into operation, the punishment awarded on one offence alone must be seven years' imprisonment, and cannot be made up by adding two sentences together, and then commuting the amalgamated period to transportation. Queen v. Moukkee Koru, 2 W. R., Cr., 57.

Where a remand was convicted of wrongfully keeping in confinement a kidnapped person, and was sentenced to transportation by the Sessions Judge, who added a sentence of forfeiture of the rents and profits of the prisoner's estates under Section 62 of the Penal Code, the High Court set aside the sentence under Section 62 as too severe. That sentence should be inflicted for offences of the most atrocious kind, or for offences committed under the most aggravated circumstances. The Queen v. Mahomed Akhir, 12 W. R., Cr., 17.

Solitary confinement must not be imposed for the whole term of a person's imprisonment. Under Section 74 of the Penal Code, it is to be imposed at intervals. In the matter of Nyan Suk Mether, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 49.

A prisoner convicted, under Section 380 of the Indian Penal Code, of theft in a building used for the custody of property, was sentenced, under Section 75, to fourteen years' transportation, as he had been previously convicted thirteen times of offences now punishable, under Chapter XVII of the Code, with imprisonment for three years or upwards.

Held that, as all the previous convictions were prior to the passing of the Indian Penal Code, the present offence was not punishable under Section 75. Reg. v. Bushya bin Yess, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr., 11.

A direction annexed to a sentence of imprisonment, under Section 448 of the Indian Penal Code, that the convict be brought up at the expiration of the sentence, in order that he may give security for good behaviour for the period of one year, reversed, as not being authorized by Section 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Reg. v. Krishnaji B. Gankaad, 6 Bom. Rep., 39.

A sentence of four years' imprisonment by a Magistrate is illegal as beyond his competency. Khoomick Chamar, 6 W. R., Cr., 90.

A sentence of rigorous imprisonment passed by a Magistrate has not authority to vary any sentence he has passed. Queen v. Palibas, 34 W. R., Cr., 9.

A sentence of imprisonment passed by a Magistrate is illegal as beyond his competency. Queen v. Bhoobun Mohun and two others, 11 W. R., Cr., 39.

When a prisoner was charged under Section 46 of the Indian Penal Code with rioting armed with deadly weapons, and also under Section 324 with voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons, they should have been sentenced only under one or other of these sections; the charges being, properly speaking, only alternative charges. Queen v. Jeffi Sheik, 10 W. R., Cr., 63.

Where a conviction has been had under two Sections of the Penal Code, in which only an alternative sentence of imprisonment or fine is allowed, a sentence of fine cannot be passed. Queen v. Bhoobun Mohun and two others, 11 W. R., Cr., 39.

A sentence of rigorous imprisonment passed by a Magistrate, F. P., under Section 188 of the Indian Penal Code, for disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a public servant, altered to one of simple imprisonment, as the Magistrate's finding did not show that the case came within the latter part of the section, in which case alone the infliction of rigorous imprisonment was authorized. Reg. v. Ruturam M. Chavan, 3 Bom. Rep., Cr., 32.

A sentence of imprisonment passed on a woman who was never put on her defence quashed as illegal. Bama Boisthoo, petitioner, 6 W. R., Cr., 17.

A sentence of rigorous imprisonment passed in a case of affray with homicide, under Regulation VI of 1828, quashed as illegal, and altered to one of imprisonment with labour. Queen v. Komaruddy Bhooya, 1 W. R., Cr., 47.

Judges must not shrink from doing their duty, and they are bound to pass a capital sentence in a case of murder when they believe the evidence. Queen v. Sib Narain Palodhee and another, 7 W. R., Cr., 33.

Held on the facts of this case, that a party (A.) who objected to accompany a constable who had been directed to produce him before the Court, and also seized the constable by the arm, and resisted his carrying away a pony which A. was charged with having misappropriated, was guilty of separate offences under Sections 353 and 183 of the Penal Code.
The sentence of imprisonment passed in default of payment of a fine inflicted under Section 290 of the Indian Penal Code (for committing a public nuisance) should be one of simple, not rigorous, imprisonment. Santubin Lakhapā Kore, 5 Bom. R., Cr. R., 45.

Where the Sessions Judge directed the committal of defendant for adultery, the defendant having been already convicted by the Magistrate of enticing away,—Held that the sentence passed by the Magistrate should have been at once annulled, the requisite intention in the one case being the substantive delict in the other. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XII.

A Magistrate is at liberty to alter his sentence at any time before the despatch of the Calendar to the Appellate authority. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XX.

Three prisoners were charged with five distinct offences of housebreaking by night, and were sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment in each case. Held that the Magistrate had power only to pass sentence of four years' imprisonment upon each prisoner, but according to the sentence all the punishments inflicted would be going on simultaneously. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XIII.

Certain persons were convicted, under Section 5 of Act XXI of 1860, of manufacturing and selling gunpowder without a license, and sentenced to fine, or in default imprisonment. Section 44 of the Act provides a special procedure for levying the fine by distress. Held that the sentence was legal, the Act giving power to imprison or fine upon conviction. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIV.

Where prisoners are convicted of separate offences, a separate sentence should be passed in each case, with a direction that the imprisonment in the second case should commence on the expiration of that in the first, and so on. 4 Mad Rep., Rul. XXVII.

A sentence duly passed and recorded cannot be revised by the Judge. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XIX.

A Sessions Judge has no authority to suspend his own sentence. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. II.

A prisoner convicted under the 2nd Clause of Section 211 of the Indian Penal Code should be sentenced to imprisonment, with or without fine, and not to fine alone. Reg. v. Bama bin Rumbhajee, 1 Bom. Rep., 34.

28.—SEPARATE AND CUMULATIVE SENTENCES.

Two prisoners having been convicted by an Assistant Judge of forgery and other offences, were sentenced each to an aggregate amount of punishment which the Court was competent to inflict, but without specifying the several penalties awarded for each offence.

On a reference by the Sessions Judge, under Section 434 of the Criminal Procedure Code,—Held that it was an irregularity on the part of the Assistant Sessions Judge not to pass a separate sentence under each independent head of the charge, but that it was not an error or defect in consequence of which the High Court could reverse or alter the sentence under Section 426 of the Code.

Separate sentences cannot be awarded in one case for abducting a child in order to take property from its person (Section 369), and theft after preparation to cause death, &c. (Section 382), where the evidence shows that the act is one and the same. The sentence under the latter section was cancelled, there being no evidence of any preparation having been made to cause death, &c., within the meaning of that section. Queen v. Kashee Nath Chungo, 8 W. R., Cr., 84.

Where a prisoner convicted of "house-breaking in order to commit theft," and of "theft," both offences being portions of one continuous criminal act, was sentenced, on the first head of charge, to one year's rigorous imprisonment, under Section 457 of the Indian Penal Code, and on the second head of charge to receive twenty stripes, under Section 2 of the Whipping Act (VI of 1864), the separate sentences (though not illegal) were disapproved of, as contrary to the spirit and intention of the Whipping Act. Reg. v. Gind bin Akad, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr. R., 83.

Separate convictions and sentences under Sections 429 and 379, and under Sections 457 and 380 of the Penal Code were set aside; and the convictions under Section 429 in the former case, and under Section 457 in the latter, allowed to stand. Queen v. Sahrae and others, 1 W. R., Cr., 31.

A. was convicted of offences under Sections 143, 447, and 211 of the Penal Code, and sentenced by the Magistrate to one month's imprisonment for each offence. Held that, under Section 411 of Act XXV of 1861, there was no appeal. The separate sentences could not be taken together and combined into one sentence, so as to give a right of appeal. The Queen v. Nagardi Paramanick, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 5; 10 W. R., Cr., 3.

An accused who threatened three witnesses was convicted and sentenced to four months' imprisonment for the threat to each witness, in all to one year. It was held that if a person at one time criminally intimidates three different persons, and each of those persons brings a separate charge against him, the accused may be convicted for an offence as against each person, and be punished separately for each offence. The facts and evidence in this case, however, were considered insufficient to support the sentence, which was reversed as extremely harsh and unjust. In the case of Goolzar Khan, 9 W. R., Cr., 30.

Sentences of imprisonment may be accumulated beyond the period of 14 years, notwithstanding Section 46 of that Code, which limit has reference only to sentences passed simultaneously, or passed upon charges tried simultaneously. Queen v. Phuran, 7 W. R., Cr., 1.

Where prisoners are charged both with rioting, being armed with deadly weapons, and with causing hurt by shooting; and the conviction of the offence rests solely on the fact of their belonging to a party by one of whom (not one of the prisoners) fire-arms were used, it is wrong to pass a cumulative sentence, and to punish the prisoner both for the rioting and for the causing hurt. The punishment should be for either one or other of those offences. Queen v. Durzoolala and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 33.

The conviction of prisoners for two offences, when the one offence formed an integral portion of the other, held to be in effect punishing twice for the same offence, and therefore illegal. Government v. Lalawam Singh, 1 Agra Rep., Cr., 31.

Where substantially but one offence has been committed, and the acts which are the basis of one charge are the same which form the basis of another charge on which the prisoner has also been convicted, cumulative sentences on each charge should not be passed.

When prisoners were convicted under Sections 224 for escape, 223 for rescuing from lawful custody, and under Section 353 for using criminal force in so doing, and sentenced to separate punishments under each section,—Held that the prisoners had only done one act, and were guilty of only one offence, and should have been found guilty under Sections 224 and 225 of "escape" and "rescuing" respectively, and sentenced accordingly. The Queen v. Kalsiskark Sandyal, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 14; and Queen v. Rathakant Paul, 9 W. R., Cr. 12.

A cumulative sentence under Section 143 of the Penal Code (being a member of an unlawful assembly), and under Section 253 (using criminal force against a public servant) was upheld by the High Court in this case. Gobind Chunder Roy, 16 S. W. R., Cr., 70.

29.—TRANSPORTATION.

Under Section 59 of the Penal Code, a Court can sentence to transportation only in a case in which the offence is punishable with imprisonment for seven years or upwards. It may, in passing sentence for the offence, commute the imprisonment to transportation, but it cannot commute the sentence after the sentence of imprisonment has been passed. Queen v. Prem Chund Ousawal, W. R., 1864, Cr., 33.

A sentence of transportation under Sections 412 and 59 of the Penal Code cannot exceed ten years. Queen v. Mahanundu Bhunadary, 5 W. R., Cr., 16.

A sentence of transportation cannot be less than seven years to bring Section 59 of the Penal Code into operation; the punishment awarded in each offence alone must be not less than seven years' imprisonment; a general sentence of transportation for two or more offences, when only one of the punishments awarded is seven years' imprisonment, is illegal. Queen v. Shenaullah and Abo, 5 W. R., Cr., 44.

Transportation can only be substituted for imprisonment in a case in which the offender has been sentenced to at least seven years' imprisonment for one offence. Queen v. Tenzoram Male, 3 W. R., Cr., 44.

To bring Section 59 of the Penal Code into operation the punishment awarded on one offence alone must be seven years' imprisonment, and cannot be made up by adding two sentences together, and then commuting the amalgamated period to transportation. Queen v. Aootkee Kor, 2 W. R., Cr., 1.

Neither under Section 397 nor under Section 394 of the Penal Code can a prisoner be sentenced to fourteen years' transportation, the punishment actionable under those sections being transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment for ten years, with fine. Queen v. Bhamaur Dosadsh, 7 W. R., Cr., 41.

Under Section 59 of the Penal Code no sentence of transportation for a shorter period than seven years can be passed on any charge.

Therefore where a prisoner was convicted on separate charges of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding, under Section 193, and of forgery under Section 467, and sentenced to seven years' transportation for the first offence, and further period of transportation for three years for the second offence, the second sentence was quashed as illegal. Queen v. Gour Chunder Roy, 8 W. R., Cr., 2.

30. Whipping

Act XIII of 1856, Section 27, gives a Magistrate power to award either imprisonment or whipping, but not both, and a sentence which gives both is illegal. The Queen v. Shaik Fzea, Bourke's Rep., Q. C., 269.

Whipping cannot be added to a sentence of imprisonment in the case of a first conviction for the offence under punishment. Queen v. Kantiram and Meeken, 1 W. R., Cr., 24; Queen v. Tonaokoch, 2 W. R., Cr., 63; Queen v. Amarut Sheikh, 4 W. R., Cr., 20.

A sentence of whipping under Section 4, Act VI of 1864, can only be inflicted in addition to other punishment on a second conviction of the offences specified therein, when the first offence was committed some time previous to the second conviction, though after the passing of the Indian Penal Code. Queen v. Uday Patnaik, 12 W. R., Cr., 68.

In the case of adults on a first conviction, or in the case of juvenile offenders whether for a first offence or otherwise, whipping can only be in lieu of any other punishment. Queen v. Abdool Khitmulgar, W. R., 1864, Cr., 38.

Held by the majority, that when a person who has not been “previously convicted” (vide Section 4, Act VI of 1864), is convicted at one time of two or more offences, it is illegal to sentence him to whipping for one of those offences in addition to imprisonment or fine for the other or others; but it is not illegal to sentence him to one whipping in lieu of all other punishment.

Held further, that when a person who has been “previously convicted” is convicted at one time of two or more offences, he may be punished with one, but only one whipping, in addition to any other punishment to which, under Section 46 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he may be liable. Nasser v. Chunder and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 41.

In the case of conviction of attempting to commit house-breaking by night, with intent to commit theft, a sentence of whipping was annulled as being illegal. Reg. v. Yella Valad Parshia, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 38.

On a reference by a Sessions Judge, under Section 436 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a sentence of whipping in addition to one of rigorous imprisonment, in the case of an offence specified in Section 4 of Act VI of 1864, was annulled, as the prisoner had not been previously convicted of the same offence. Reg. v. Bâleji and Alad Bdp, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 5.

A prisoner convicted of “theft in a dwelling-house” who has previously been convicted of “simple theft” is not thereby rendered liable to whipping, under Act VI of 1864, Section 3. Reg. v. Chângia Shumia, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr., 68.

Section 3 of Act VI of 1864 (the Whipping Act) applies to juveniles as well as to adult offenders.

That Section does not apply to cases in which the second conviction is for an offence committed previously to the first conviction. Reg. v. Kusâd Valad Lakshman, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr., 70.

The Magistrate convicted the accused under Section 380 of the Penal Code, and a previous conviction having been proved under Section 379 of the Penal Code, sentence of imprisonment and whipping was passed. Held that in order to justify the sentence of whipping the previous conviction should have been in respect of the same specific offence. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXIX.

Follows the full bench decision ruling that when a person who has been previously convicted (Section 4 Act VI of 1864) is a second time convicted at one time of two or more offences punishable under the Penal Code, he may be liable. Ruttun Bews v. Buhur; Jholola v. Buhur, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 7.

When a person is convicted at one time of two or more offences punishable under the Penal Code, the Court is empowered to sentence the prisoner in the one case to rigorous imprisonment, and in the other case to whipping, under Act VI of 1864. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XIX.

A sentence of whipping founded on a previous conviction of the prisoner is only warranted where the subsequent conviction is for the same specific offence as that in respect of which the previous conviction applied. A Sessions Judge has no power to suspend a sentence in a case in the absence of appeal. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. 1.

Where the prisoner was convicted by the Magistrate of three distinct and separate offences, and was sentenced to a month’s imprisonment for the offence of wrongful confinement under Section 342, six months’ imprisonment for the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt under Section 325, and to whipping with twenty stripes for the offence of theft, under Section 378, of the Indian Penal Code, it was held (Kemp and Phear, J.J., dissenting) that the sentence was legal.

Where a person is convicted at the same time of two or more offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code, held (Kemp and Phear, J.J., dissenting) that it is lawful for the Court, in addition to the penalties prescribed by the Penal Code, to sentence the prisoner to whipping. Nasir v. Chunder not followed; Mamrudad v. Gaur Chundra Shamudur, 7 B. L. R., 165.

As a rule, before flogging is given as an additional punishment there ought to be formal evidence upon the record of the previous convictions relied on. The conviction and identity of the prisoner ought to be proved in the regular way, a mere kycout is no evidence whatever. Queen v. Nurmeer Nusype, 15 S. W. R., Cr., R., 52.

Held (Kemp and Phear, J.J., dissenting) that notwithstanding Section 46 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a person convicted at the same time of two or more offences punishable under the Penal CRIMINAL PROCEDURE—FINES.

The provisions of Section 61, Code of Criminal Procedure, as amended by Act VIII of 1869, are not applicable to fines and forfeitures under Act XXI of 1856, so as to allow of imprisonment and distress going on simultaneously. Government v. Junglu Beldar, 17 S.W. R., Cr. R., 7.

A prisoner was sentenced to imprisonment and fine, and in default of payment of the latter, to a further time of imprisonment.

He paid a portion of the fine, but that fact not having been communicated to the jailer, underwent the entire further term of imprisonment. Held that, under these circumstances, the Court had no power to order the fine to be refunded. Reg. v. Nitha Mulà, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 37.

In every case in which an offender is sentenced to fine, the Court which sentences the offender may issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by distress and sale. The successor in office of a Judge or Magistrate may levy a fine imposed by his predecessor; but the Court which levies the fine must be the same as the Court which imposed it. Chunder Coomar Mittr v. Modhoosoodun Roy, 9 W. R., Cr., 50.

A Deputy Magistrate has no authority to order arrears of municipal tax due by a person to be paid out of a fine levied on him. Queen v. Brojo Kishore Dutt, 8 W. R., Cr., 17.

The High Court refused to interfere with the order of a Magistrate fining complainants under Section 270 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when it appeared, after due enquiry by the Magistrate, that the complainants laid claim to large jumbas in a chur, without possessing any documents to prove their rights. Case of Mathoor Ghose and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 10.

A Magistrate may impose a fine exceeding Rs. 1,000 under the Excise Act XXI of 1856; Section 22 of the Code of Criminal Procedure notwithstanding. Queen v. Suroop Chundra Dutt, 7 W. R., Cr., 29.

The description of fine which it was the object of Section 63 of the same Code to prohibit was a fine which it would be impossible or very difficult for the accused person to pay, or wholly disproportionate to the character of the offence.

Quære,—Whether Section 63 has any application to fines inflicted by a Magistrate. Adoor Ruhum, petitioner, 7 W. R., Cr., 37.

A fine cannot be awarded as compensation in a case falling under Chapter 14, Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Nijamund, 3 W. R., Cr., 60.

An offender who has undergone the full terms of imprisonment to which he was sentenced in default of the payment of a fine, is still liable to have the amount levied by distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to him which may be found within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the district, whether the officer who inflicted the fine issued any special directions on the subject or not (dissentiente, Seton-Karr, J.). Queen v. Modhoosoodun Dey, 3 W. R., Cr., 61.

A fine is not awardable as compensation for a false charge of theft. Juhoorun v. Girdharea Ram, 3 W. R., Cr., 70.

An order directing the payment to a witness of a portion of the amount of fine levied on an accused, held to be illegal in the absence of proof that the witness suffered any loss owing to the conduct of the accused. Queen v. Kartick Chunder Haldar, 9 W. R., Cr., 58.

Under Section 15, Act XXIX of 1867, the fine to be imposed for non-payment of the tax cannot be less than the amount stated in the notice. Queen v. Bisessur Sen, 9 W. R., Cr., 62.

Under Section 3, Act XXIX of 1867, a person once fined for not taking out a license is not liable to a second fine, or to any further demand for the tax. Re Doorga Churn Giree, 9 W. R., Cr., 64.

Held that a Subordinate Magistrate of the 1st Class has power to deal with the case of an offence provided for by a special law (in this case Act III of 1863, B. C.) when the punishment awarded is six months' fine, and fine only, Section 67, and not Section 65, of the Penal Code being applicable to such a case. Chunder Prosand Singh, 10 W. R., Cr., 30.

Held that, where a Magistrate is dealing with a charge which he has the power to dispose of finally under Chapter 15 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, although the charge, as originally laid, fell under Chapter 14, he has a discretion to inflict a fine under Section 270 of that Code. Hathoor Laloong v. Hindoo Singh Moree and another, 10 W. R., Cr., 49.

The High Court has power to award, by way of satisfaction to a prosecutor, the whole or any portion of a fine imposed upon conviction of a felony before the Court, in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction. Reg. v. Hasssein Jan and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 190.

Sagar Dutt was convicted before a Justice of the Peace for possessing a warehouse, &c., in the town of Calcutta for the keeping and storing of jute, other than jute screwed for shipment, without a license, and for his said offence was fined Rs. 300, and adjudged to pay a further fine of Rs. 52 for every day after the conviction in which the offence was continued. Held that the conviction was bad. In the matter of Sagar Dutt; The Queen v. The Justices of the Peace, 1 B. L. R., O. Cr., 41.

The Court has no power to dispose of fines inflicted upon prisoners; such power exists in Government, alone. Reg. v. Goluck Dass, 1 Hyde's Rep., 282.

The Joint Magistrate was held not competent to direct, under Section 44 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that a portion of a fine inflicted, under Section 434 of the Penal Code, be paid to an Ameen for the purpose of paying the expense of his deputation to restore the land-marks which had been destroyed by the opposite party. Queen v. Mooril Lall and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 93.

A sentence must impose a specific fine on each prisoner. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. V.
When a fine is imposed in addition to transportation, and the whole or part of the fine is levied, it is the duty of the Sessions Judges to inform the authorities at Port Blair of the fact. Queen v. Ramdyal Singh, 8 B. L. R., Cr., 61.

Upon the conviction of certain persons under Section 20, Act XII of 1867, for illicit possession of opium, the Magistrate sentenced them to payment of a fine, and directed that upon the realization thereof one-half should be paid to the Inspector of Police who had apprehended the prisoners, but refused to pay the other half in accordance with Section 30 (for reasons set forth in his order) to the person who gave the information.

On a reference by the Sessions Judge to the High Court,—Held, the High Court could not interfere under Section 404 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The distribution of the fine under Section 30, Act XIII of 1867, forms no part of the Magistrate's judgment. Queen v. Ramdyal Singh, 8 B. L. R., Cr., 61.

Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint in default, under Section 259, Code of Criminal Procedure, and fined the complainant under Section 270, the fine was remitted and ordered to be refunded. Ram Churin Dey v. Sheikh Janan, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 63.

Section 115 of the Criminal Procedure Code makes applicable the provisions of Section 65 of the Indian Penal Code not only to offences falling under that Code as defined in its 40th section, but to every case in which a Magistrate has jurisdiction under Section 21 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Imprisonment for one month awarded in default of payment of a fine under Section 3 of the Salt Revenue Act (XXXI of 1850) was accordingly reduced to three weeks' simple imprisonment. Reg. Bhishoba bin Soma, 5 B. R., Cr., 63.

On a reference as to whether the restriction for the recovery of fines to moveable property (Criminal Procedure Code, Section 61) applied only during the lifetime of the offender, and whether the fine could after his death be recovered, under Section 70 of the Indian Penal Code, from his immovable property, the Court was of opinion that the law had only provided for the distress and sale of the moveable property, and that there was no way in which immovable property could be made liable. Reg. v. Lallu Khowar, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 63.

Section 62 of the Penal Code, which provides for forfeitures, limits them to cases when the parties shall have been transported or sentenced to imprisonment for at least seven years. Queen v. Kripamoyee Chassane and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 35.

Where a forfeiture under Regulation XI of 1796 was declared against three or four brothers constituting a joint undivided Hindu family,—Held that the forfeiture did not enure for the benefit of the fourth brother, nor did it affect the rights of the fourth brother, who was entitled to his fourth share in all the ancestral property of the family, and that the widow of the ancestor was also entitled to her undivided share. Gunther v. Goldab Khowar and others v. The Collector of Benares, 7 W. R., F. C., 47.

An order of forfeiture under Section 184, Code of Criminal Procedure, if substantially legal, cannot be disturbed for an immaterial error of procedure. Queen v. Gugun Misser, 8 W. R., Cr., 61.

Before a Magistrate proceeds to declare attached property forfeited, he should take evidence to prove compliance with the formalities laid down by law with regard to proclamation. Queen v. Muddun Mohun Podar, 3 W. R., Cr., 34.

The forfeiture of the property of an absconding offender, who appears within two years from the attachment of his property, should not be carried into effect until after a regular enquiry into the causes of the offender's absence. Bidhanath Sircar, 3 W. R., Cr., 63.

Before the passing of an order declaring the property of an accused person, who cannot be found, to be at the disposal of the Government, there must be a proclamation under Section 183, Code of Criminal Procedure, specifying a time within which such person is required to appear. But before a Magistrate can issue such a proclamation he must be satisfied that such person has absconded or is concealing himself for the purpose of avoiding the service of the warrant. Sheoody Singh v. Girban Singh, 6 W. R., Cr., 75.

The property of a judgment-debtor convicted of an offence under Act XI of 1857, which has been attached intermittently between the time of commission of the offence and the time of conviction, is property forfeited to the Crown under Section 3, Act XXV of 1857. The forfeiture relates back to the time of commission of the offence. Gunneshtell v. Ameer Khan, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 80.

In execution of a decree against the defendant, the plaintiff, on 17th July, 1871, attached certain property in Calcutta belonging to the defendant. On 26th July, 1871, the defendant was convicted under Section 1 of Act XI of 1857, and also under Section 121 of the Penal Code, of abetting the waging of war against the Queen, and sentenced to transportation for life and forfeiture of all his property. The offence for which he was convicted was committed in September, 1861. Held that the forfeiture took effect from the date of the commission of the offence, and therefore any attachment subsequently made was invalid.

The words in Section 3, Act XXV of 1857, "such an offence as aforesaid," refer to the offences mentioned in Section 2, as well as to the offence of mutiny mentioned in Section 1. Ganeshkhal v. Amir Khan, 8 B. L. R., 83.

33.—Confiscation.

The procedure prescribed in Sections 131 and 132 of Act XXV of 1861 must be followed before an order confiscating property is made. Behary Shaka v. Nubby Khan and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 13.

A Joint Magistrate's order of confiscation set aside,—(1) because made without permitting the accused to show cause against the confiscation of his goods; (2) because the confiscation ought not to be carried out when the accused has been apprehended and brought to trial before the passing of the order; and (3) because the Joint Magistrate acted in contravention of the order of the Magistrate releasing the property from attachment. Jhumdoa Singh and others, petitioners, 5 W. R., Cr., 8.
The property of certain rebels was confiscated, and a list made of such property, which list did not specify the land in suit. Held, nevertheless, that if the land in suit was actually attached as the property of the rebels the plaintiff's suit could be barred by the special Limitation Law of Act IX of 1859.

Confiscation of the zemindar's rights, under Act XXV of 1857, will not operate to interrupt the growth of a right of occupancy claimed by a tenant. Sheroraj Singh v. W. F. Legge, 3 Agra Rep., A. C., 46.

The confiscation of a village under Act X of 1858 cancels the rights of the tenants, and the fact that they were permitted to retain their holding on rent and enjoy the produce of the trees for some years subsequent to the confiscation, does not revive the rights which are absolutely avoided by the confiscation. Teekum Singh v. Musammat Dullo, 2 Agra Rep., 324.

In cases of confiscation limitation runs, not from the date on which confiscation is sanctioned by the Government, but rather from the date on which the property is actually attached on the part of the Government.

The refusal or accepting of bail is a judicial act, not merely a ministerial duty, and a mistake in the performance of that duty, without malice, will not be sufficient to sustain an action. Parankisan Narasay v. Capt. R. A. C. Stuart, 2 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIII.

A person sentenced to one month's imprisonment by a Magistrate, from which sentence an appeal is allowed under Section 411 of Act XXV of 1861, is not an accused person within the meaning of Section 55 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE—TENDER OF PARDON.

36.—TENDER OF PARDON.

A Sessions Judge is not competent before a trial to instruct a Magistrate to tender a pardon under Section 434 of the same Act. The Queen v. Mahendranarayan Bangabhusun, I B. L. R., A. C., 7.

On a reference by a Sessions Judge, where certain persons were found guilty of gaming by a Full Power Magistrate, solely on the evidence of a person supposed to have been concerned in the offence, the Magistrate had no power to tender a pardon in a case which he tried himself; but only under Section 209 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in the case of an offence triable by the Court of Session. Reg. v. Remediosa and others, 3 Bom. Rep., A. C., 59.

The provisions of Section 209, Criminal Procedure Code, apply to cases triable by the Magistrate concurrently with the Court of Session. Anonymous, 3 Mad. Rep., Cr., 2.

The procedure to be observed under Sections 209, 210, and 211 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when a tender of conditional pardon is made, pointed out. Queen v. Gogalao Doss, 12 W. R., Cr., 80.

The power given to a Magistrate by Section 209 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot properly be exercised, except with a view to the committal of a case for trial before a Court of Session. Anonymous, 3 Mad. Rep., Cr., 4.

Where a person to whom a tender of conditional pardon has been extended is considered by the Sessions Judge not to have conformed to the conditions under which pardon was tendered, the Sessions Judge, in exercising the power given him by Section 211 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, ought not to try him along with the prisoners in whose case he has already given testimony. Where a statement made by a prisoner before a Magistrate, though signed by the Magistrate, does not contain the certificate directed by Section 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it does not of itself constitute prima-facie evidence of the examination within the meaning of Section 366 of that Code; and if other proof is not given to show that the statement was made by the prisoner before the Magistrate, the statement is not admissible as evidence at the trial. Queen v. Petumbur Dhoobee, 14 S. W. R., Cr., R., 10.

37.—COMPENSATION.

Section 270, Code of Criminal Procedure (authorizing the award by a Magistrate of amends in cases of false complaints), applies only to complaints made and cases tried under Chapter XV of the Code, and is limited to cases punishable under the Penal Code with imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months.

Rs. 50 is the measure of compensation awardable from any complainant, irrespective of the number of accused persons. Queen v. Laloo Singh and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 54.

Although Section 270 of the Code of Criminal Procedure forbids compensation to a person falsely and vexatiously charged with theft, yet the law does not prevent a Magistrate from fining an unjust accuser. Chide Chowbee v. Bhownay and Jhaw, 1 W. R., Cr., 1.

A conviction for defamation cannot be sustained when the complainant admits the more serious charges. No compensation can be awarded in such cases. Assuruddee Khan v. Baboo Khan, 1 W. R., Cr., 6.

Amends cannot be awarded in a case under Section 374 of the Penal Code (unlawful compulsory labour) which comes under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Ratuah v. Pho Konder, 5 W. R., Cr., 1.

Amends cannot be awarded, under Section 270, Code of Criminal Procedure, to a person charged with theft under Section 380 of the Penal Code. Jalil Munshi v. Farnan Hossein, W. R., 1864, Cr., 55.

The compensation awarded, under Section 44 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to the person injured in consideration of the loss which he has suffered, corresponds to damages awarded in Civil Proceedings. Queen v. Baijoo Koormee, 5 W. R., Cr., 76.

Compensation, under Section 44 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, cannot be awarded to any one excepting the person who has directly suffered by the offence. It cannot be given to the heirs of a person who has been killed. Lal Singh, prisoner, 10 W. R., Cr., 39.

The award of compensation referred to in Section 44 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be a part of the sentence and order made upon a conviction for an offence of the nature specified therein, and should be found upon a statement of loss, damage, or expenses, as the case may be, ascertained at the trial. Queen v. Gour Churn Doss and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 53.

On a reference by a Sessions Judge, an order made by a Magistrate, under Section 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code, awarding compensation to the complaint of a fine inflicted for causing hurt reversed, as there was no evidence on the record to show that loss was caused, or that any special damage of a pecuniary nature resulted to

Since the passing of Act VIII of 1869, a Magistrate may, under Section 270, in a case in which more than one person has been accused, award compensation not exceeding Rs. 50 to each person.

Where a complaint is occasioned to a person whose property has been stolen, it is not illegal for the trying Magistrate to award portion of the fine inflicted on the accused as amends to the owner of such property, although the stolen property is recovered and restored to the owner. Reg. v. Ramji Oalad Daji, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 12.

The compensation or award which a Magistrate, who dismisses a complaint as frivolous or vexatious, makes in his discretion to award to an accused person, does not deprive the latter of any right of suit in the Civil Court which he may possess. Adram v. Hurballuh, 2 N. W. R., 58.

Under Section 270 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate dismissing a complaint as frivolous or vexatious can only award a sum not exceeding Rs. 50 to the accused by way of compensation, and cannot impose it by way of fine, nor can he directly sentence the complainant to imprisonment in default of payment. Queen v. Gopai, 2 N. W. R., 430.

A Magistrate is not authorized, under Section 270 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to award compensation from the complainant to the accused in respect of an unfounded charge brought against such accused of being a person of bad character or repute. Queen v. Bul Kishen, 2 N. W. R., 447.

An award of compensation to the widow of a person who died in consequence of a fall into a pit, negligently dug by the accused, from the fine imposed on the latter, is illegal. Reg. v. Shibaasphap, 7 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 73.

When a complaint being preferred to a Magistrate of an offence not coming within Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate alters it so as to bring it under Chapter XV, he cannot award compensation to the accused, under Section 270 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the offence originally complained of not being one for which compensation can be awarded. Reg. v. Gurnigaaph et al., 7 Bom. Rep., Cr., 58.

Where a complainant prefers three charges of three distinct offences, two of which are offences triable under Chapter XV and one under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate may award amends to the accused under Section 270 of the Code, if he considers the charge with reference to the cases under Chapter XV to have been vexatious. Modhoosoodun Ghose v. Ingram Payruh, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 39.

In a trial for causing hurt, the Sub-Magistrate awarded compensation to the defendant for a frivolous and vexatious complaint under Section 270 of the Code of Criminal Procedure,—Held that the section did not apply to such a case. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XL.

When a prosecutor fails to substantiate his charge, by making contradictory statements, the Magistrate who tries the case under Chapter XV of the Criminal Procedure Code can award compensation to the accused, although he commit the prosecutor to take his trial on a charge of giving false evidence. Queen v. Kupan Rai, 6 B. L. R., 296; and 15 S. W. R., Cr., 9.

Where a complaint constituted a charge of wrongful confinement under Section 343, and not one of criminal force under Section 352 of the Penal Code, the order awarding amends under Section 270, Code of Criminal Procedure, was quashed as illegal. Agsgr Howladar v. Asruddin, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 1.

Held by the majority of the Court, that the prisoners were rightly convicted of wrongful confinement of a woman, the facts of the case showing that she never went willingly to the prisoner's house, and was not a willing inmate, while she was there. Queen v. Ameen Daras, 4 W. R., Cr., 3.

A sentence of fine only cannot be passed, under Section 348 of the Penal Code, for wrongful confinement to extort confession: part of the sentence must be imprisonment. Dhrunraj Singh v. Petumber Doss, 5 W. R., Cr., 5.

The time during which a party is kept in wrongful confinement is immaterial, except with reference to the extent of punishment.

In no case is a police officer justified, by Section 132, Code of Criminal Procedure, in detaining a person for a single hour, except upon some reasonably ground justified by all the circumstances of the case. Queen v. Suprosanno Ghoshaul, 6 W. R., Cr., 88.

A Deputy Magistrate has no power to dismiss, in default of prosecution, a charge laid, under Section 347 of the Penal Code, of wrongful confinement for the purpose of extorting money. Queen v. Bedoor Ghose, 12 W. R., Cr., 12.

39.—Conviction.

Where a person, though charged under two heads, was found guilty of what was substantially but one offence,—Held that it was improper for the Sessions Judge to record a conviction under two sections of the Indian Penal Code, and thereupon to award a punishment of two years' imprisonment, in excess of what the law prescribed for the offence committed. Reg. v. Zyma Karubey, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 12.

A conviction of a prisoner on a plea of guilty before a Court of Session is valid although there were no Assessors. The Queen v. Srikanth Charal, 2 B. L. R., F. B., 23.

Persons not formally charged or put on their defence cannot legally be convicted. Omit Ram v. Nonao Ram and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 90.

Convictions under the Police Act V of 1861 are appealable like other convictions. When the appellants were convicted by the officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate and sentenced to imprisonment exceeding the limit prescribed by Section 411 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the appeal lies to the Sessions Court. Thakoor Doss v. Ghodai Shek, 5 W. R., Cr., 22.

A conviction and sentence arrived at by a Deputy...
Magistrate in the absence of the prisoner were quashed as irregular. Queen v. Rajcoomar Singh, 8 W. R., Cr., 17.

Where a prisoner has been duly convicted of a criminal offence, and afterwards there turns up fresh evidence, which would, in the opinion of the Judge, if it had been available at the trial, have proved a false statement of a prisoner, unsupported by any evidence whatever, that the Magistrate who convicted him did not record the whole of the defence he wished to make. Nirdha Singh v. Tofazzul Hossein, 8 W. R., Cr., 57.

The mere fact that the prosecutor gave the prisoner time to make out his accounts and pay the balance due, does not vitiate a conviction for dishonest misappropriation, or show that the matter is one for the Civil Courts only. In re Sreekant Biswas, 5 W. R., Cr., 56.

A conviction for theft under the Penal Code is illegal if the owner has given up all property in and all possession of the subject of the alleged theft. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXX.

A conviction under Section 181 of the Penal Code is good, though the offence falls within Section 183. But a sentence under Section 181 which awards no terms of imprisonment is illegal. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XVIII.

When the evidence is insufficient to convict a person of an offence in a criminal trial, he cannot be removed from office on the ground of that offence; if there are other circumstances in his conduct warranting his removal from office, they should be stated and proved. Gungadhur Roy, in the matter of, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 116.

Held that an order of a Sessions Judge, by which he altered a conviction by the Assistant Sessions Judge, of "dacoity" to one of "robbery," was illegal, not being an amendment of a sentence or order within the meaning of Section 22 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Held further, that if the accused were, in the opinion of the Sessions Judge, improperly convicted of "dacoity," he ought to have declined to confirm the sentence, and to have left them to be charged and tried for "robbery." Reg. v. Joo Thomeeit et al., 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 22.

Where the Subordinate Magistrate convicted certain persons without allowing them a proper opportunity for the summoning and attendance of witnesses named for the defence, the High Court quashed the conviction and directed the Subordinate Magistrate to re-hear the case. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXVIII.

The defendant was arrested by a warrant, and was released on bail to appear before the Magistrate on a specified day. The defendant appeared on that day, but the Magistrate being unable to take up the case, a verbal order was given to the defendant to appear on the following day. He omitted to do, and was convicted under Section 174 of the Penal Code,—Held that the conviction was good. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XV.

40.—Previous Conviction.

An offender is only liable to enhanced punishment, under Section 75 of the Penal Code, for an offence punishable under Chapter XVII, after having been punished with imprisonment for the same offence or for an offence punishable under the same chapter. Queen v. Puban, 5 W. R., Cr., 66.

Records of previous convictions should not be put in until the prisoner has been convicted in the case then under trial. Queen v. Jehan Mullick, 5 W. R., Cr., 67; and see Queen v. Shiboo Mundle, 3 W. R., Cr. 38.

Where a prisoner was convicted and sentenced, under Section 50 of Act XVII of 1850, upon the charge of fraudulently secreting a post letter, and on appeal such conviction and sentence were confirmed,— Held that he could not subsequently be convicted under the same section of having fraudulently made away with the same letter upon the same occasion, both acts being connected and substantially a part of one criminal transaction. The Queen v. Dalapatta Van, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 83.

41.—SUMMARY CONVICTION.

Held that the summary conviction and punishment of two police officers, under Section 29, Act V of 1861, by a cantonment Magistrate without formal trial, was illegal and irregular.

Held also that, although the Magistrate of a district is competent to order the removal of any particular case from the file of a Subordinate Court to his own, it is doubtful whether he can by general proceeding direct the transfer of cases which have no existence, and which are not pending before any of his subordinates.

Held also that a Cantonment Magistrate has power to try cases, under Section 29 of the Police Act, without complaint. Government v. Girdharem Lall and Sheikh Ahmed, 1 Agra Rep., Cr., 24.

A Police Magistrate has power to convict summarily, under Act IV of 1866 (B. C.), Section 26, for an offence punishable under Section 116 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Mahbub Khan, 1 B. L. R., O. Cr., 39.

There are strong grounds for urging that the Legislature intended that convictions under Sections 24 and 25, Act IX of 1869, should be summarily disposed of by the Magistrate, but the Court is not prepared to hold that the right of appeal is taken away. No jurisdiction is given to the Judge to reverse a conviction under these sections because he may regard it as one of hardship, nor has he to determine whether or not the failure to pay was in pursuance of an intention to avoid payment or not.

By failing to make payment within the time specified in the notice the tax-payer is guilty of an offence within the terms of Section 25, and subsequent payment does not take the case out of the provisions of that section.

To render such a conviction valid it must be shown that the prosecution was instituted at the instance of the Collector, and the mere sending on the telegraph report, with an expression of the Collector's general desire to prosecute defaulters, cannot be held tantamount to the institution of a prosecution at the instance of the Collector.

The provisions of Section 27 seem to imply that the Collector ought in each case to exercise his discision as to whether a prosecution should be in-

42.—DISPUTES CONCERNING LAND.

There are no "general powers" in any law which authorize a Magistrate to issue orders directing that a party shall be kept in peaceable possession of land. Such orders were therefore cancelled as without warrant of law, the procedure prescribed in Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure not having been observed.
The Queen v. Hemendronath Tagore, 9 W. R.,
Cr., 20.

It is not necessary that the proceeding required by Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, should be recorded in a particular form or on a separate sheet; it is sufficient if it be recorded. Jeyram Singh and others v. Jugnaran Dooby and others,
10 W. R., 1864, Cr., 16.

In a case of disputed possession of land, the Magistrate should record the proceedings required by Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, and look to possession, not to right,—i.e., maintaining in possession the party in possession, and forbid-ing disturbance of possession. Grijamonee v.
Ishur Chunder, W. R., 1864, Cr., 2.

A Magistrate has no authority to restore to possession a person who has been illegally dispossessed. He must declare the party in actual possession entitled to retain possession until ruined by the course of law, and forbid all disturbance of such possession in the meantime. Ramjeehan Dooby v. Luchmonee Dubea, W. R., 1864, Cr., 5.

There was a dispute as to the actual possession of land, not between two co-proprietors, but between rival ryots,— Held that, instead of attaching the whole estate, under Section 319 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate ought to have settled the dispute as between the ryots. Ramdyal v. Chinta Monee, W. R., 1864,
Cr., 28.

Two investigations, under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, were before a Magistrate, who, after deciding one of the cases, remarked on the other, that because the lands adjoined he had taken the evidence in the two cases together, and found it unnecessary to continue the enquiry further. Held, under Section 404, that the parties kept out of possession were entitled to a full enquiry. Watson and Co. v. Ranees Sarmomoces, 8
W. R., Cr., 63.

Held that it would be highly technical and unnecessary to interfere with a Magistrate's order under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that the Magistrate had not formally stated that he was satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace existed, when obviously the Magistrate had information of that kind before him. Mussamut Zuhooran, petitioner, 6 W. R., Cr., 4.

A Magistrate ought not to interfere, under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, with the execution of a decree of the Civil Court. If called on to interfere at all, because he is apprehensive of a breach of the peace, he should, under Section 319, maintain in possession the person who has been actually put in possession by a decree of the Civil Court. Shama Sowndery Debhia v. Jar-

the forms prescribed by Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure. Sabhee Singh and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 50.

On a charge of forcible ejectment, a Magistrate has nothing to do with the rights of the parties to the land. Gunganarain Poddar v. Deboo Mundal, 7 W. R., Cr., 12.

Under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate can only try the question of possession, without reference to the right of possession. Queen v. Mussamut Imam Bandee, 7 W. R., Cr., 26.

If B. uses force in carrying out his attempt, A. has a right to resist. Queen v. Oottum Mal, 2 W. R., Cr., 2.

An order issued by a Civil Court, under Section 319 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, without a formal enquiry, is not a legal order. Queen v. Saadat Khan, 3 W. R., Cr., 10.

Before passing an order in a case of disputed possession of land, &c., the procedure enjoined by Section 319 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be carried out. Queen v. Ssectanath Roy, 3 W. R., Cr., 9.

In a case of disputed possession likely to lead to a breach of the peace, the Magistrate, instead of merely binding down the parties to keep the peace, and declining to interfere further, is bound to dispose of the question of possession under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Code. Rajah Anundnath Roy, petitioner, 8 W. R., Cr., 12.

The omission of a Magistrate to record a proceeding in a case of disputed possession of land is not a mere non-formality in procedure, but renders the whole of the Magistrate's proceedings illegal. Harvey v. Bricte, 4 W. R., Cr., 26.

In cases of dispute concerning the possession of land under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to interfere, unless he is first satisfied of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. Dewan Elahe Ezwa Khan v. Subarnnissa, 5 W. R., Cr., 14.

Where a Magistrate thinks that the acts of the accused are likely to lead to a breach of the peace, and their statements as to possession of land are false, he may proceed to try whether the accused should not be charged with unlawful assembly. Eman Ali v. Sududerdeen and others, 9 W. R., Cr., 18.

To satisfy the requirements of Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate must himself enquire into the likelihood of a breach of the peace happening, and must come to a judicial decision upon it; and in conducting the subsequent investigation, he must examine the witnesses whom the parties have tendered. Mussamut Annade Koover v. Ranee Sonea Koover, 9 W. R., Cr., 64.

It is not necessary that an order issued by a Magistrate under Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, whereby a breach of the peace was prevented, should be supplemented by a proceeding under Section 318 of the same Code. Lutteef Hossein, petitioner, 7 W. R., Cr., 4.

When in a case under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate has taken any evidence, he is not justified in refusing to proceed with the case, because the parties neglected to file written statements on the day fixed for filing the statements. Case of Goluck Chunder Mysie, 11 W. R., Cr., 9.

In a case under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate need not summon witnesses, but may proceed with investigations conducted by the District Police, if he considers that they show that a breach of the peace is likely to occur.

In proceedings under Chapter XX of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate should not hold a lengthened and protracted investigation, but should make a speedy and summary enquiry into the fact of possession, and pass, with as little delay as possible, an order declaring the party whom he finds in possession entitled to retain it, until ousted by due course of law. Queen v. Bulkant Bhutacharjee and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 36.

The ruling of a Civil Court, that a plaintiff in a certain case had alleged title and undisputed possession, but had in no way proved that allegation, is not such an order as would justify a Magistrate, under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in putting him out of possession in favour of another party. In the matter of Jogesh Prokash Gangooly and another, 11 W. R., Cr., 43.

The provisions of Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are substantially complied with when the Magistrate states that he is satisfied that the disputes between the parties were likely to induce a breach of the peace, and records his opinion that the only way of bringing those disputes to a satisfactory settlement was by proceeding under the section quoted. Bisseshur Narain Mahal, petitioner, 8 W. R., Cr., 83.

Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not mean that any party who can show in the Civil Court a possession prior to the Magistrate's award, shall be entitled to have the award set aside, and to be put in possession, but only that the party out of possession must prove title. Shib
Under Act XXV of 1861, Section 318, the Magistrate, if satisfied that a dispute concerning land is likely to result in a breach of the peace, shall record a proceeding, stating the grounds of his being so satisfied. This proceeding should show on the face of it that there are reasonable grounds for apprehending a breach of the peace. Under this section the question of title is excluded, and the Magistrate is equally prohibited from grounding a prima facie case of possession on the title shown in evidence by either party. He should confine himself to ascertain what was the subject of the dispute and the question of the possession. R. v. Omirto Nauth Jha and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 399; 6 W. R., Cr. 61.

Where an order under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code was made between A. on the one side, and B. and the three tenants of B. on the other, declaring that A. was in possession of the property in dispute,—Held that this order was only binding on the actual parties to the case before the Magistrate, and that subsequent tenants of B. could not be criminally punished for disobeying the order in question. In the case of Gopal Burnawuri, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 28.

A Magistrate has no power to decide a question of possession, under Section 318, Act XXV of 1861, until he has recorded a proceeding, stating the grounds of his being satisfied that the dispute for possession is likely to induce a breach of the peace. In the case of Kashi Kishor Roy v. Tarini Kant Lahori, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 76.

A plaintiff in a civil suit brought for confirmation of his possession by a declaration of his title to a certain land, obtained, pending his suit, an order from the Magistrate, under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that he should be maintained in possession until ousted by due course of law. The order was discharged, plaintiff failing to prove his title, and the defendants then applied to the High Court, under Section 404 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to set aside the Magistrate's order, and put them in possession. Held that their proper course was by a suit in the Civil Court for possession, and the application under the Criminal Procedure Code was rejected. Jugesh Prakash Ganguli v. Nilkamul Mookerjee, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 57.

Section 320 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives special jurisdiction to Magistrates with full powers to decide disputes as to possession of land of which he was put into possession by an officer of the Collector, it was held that before B. could be convicted under Section 188 of the Penal Code of disobeying an order made by a public officer, it should be proved that B. was aware of the order under Section 318, and that having that knowledge he disobeyed it. Abolekhallall v. Sirnum Singh, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 50.

Where a Magistrate proceeding under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, decides on the evidence in favour of a party as being in possession of the disputed land, the High Court cannot reconsider the Magistrate's decision and decide which party is in actual possession. Bhurut Chunder Bose v. Dwarkanath Chowdry, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 28.

A Magistrate, under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is to enquire into the question who is in actual possession of the property in dispute, without considering how that possession has been obtained. Dustur Husung Jamasi, 6 Bom. Rep., Cr. Ca., 30.

Where a Magistrate proceeding under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, decides on the evidence in favour of a party as being in possession of the disputed land, the High Court cannot reconsider the Magistrate's decision and decide which party is in actual possession. Bhurut Chunder Bose v. Dwarkanath Chowdry, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 28.

Where an order had been made by a Magistrate under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in favour of A. in respect of certain land, and D. subsequently obtained an order from the Collector declaring him entitled to the same land, in pursuance of which he was put into possession by an officer of the Collector, it was held that before B. could be convicted under Section 188 of the Penal Code of disobeying an order made by a public officer, it should be proved that B. was aware of the order under Section 318, and that having that knowledge he disobeyed it. Abolekhallall v. Sirnum Singh, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 50.

Where two parties have a dispute before a Magistrate as to the right to the use of water which the party complained against had embanked, the Magistrate should proceed under Chapter XXII, and not as for a nuisance under Chapter XX of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Madhoo Churn, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 51.

In order to give a Magistrate jurisdiction to make an order regarding the possession of land, under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he must be satisfied that there exists a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace, and he must record the grounds of his being so satisfied. It is not sufficient that there is a mere scintilla of evidence, but there must be some evidence from which the Magistrate may reasonably draw the necessary conclusion of fact. The question whether any such evidence existed is one for the consideration of the High Court. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLIX.

The decision of the Deputy Magistrate was quashed, (1) because the property in dispute being julkur he had no jurisdiction to try the dispute under Section 318 Code of Criminal Procedure, but ought to have proceeded in the manner laid down in Circular Order No. 10 dated 16th April, 1863; (2) because a portion of the disputed julkur being situated within the district of Backergunge, the Deputy Magistrate of Fureedpore had no jurisdiction with reference to that portion of the julkur which was admittedly not within the limits of his jurisdiction. Goluck Chunder Roy v. Raj Mohun Bose, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 33. 1811, 366.

It is a misconception of the aim and object of the law, as well as a waste of time to the Court and of money to the parties, to come up to the Court, under Section 318 Code of Criminal Procedure, with questions of title to possession of land which can only be settled in a Civil Court. Koomer Poresh Narain Roy v. Watson and Co., 17 S. W. R., Cr. R. 3.

The mere service of a notice upon a mofussil naib who takes no steps whatever to consult his employer or act under his directions, is not such a notice as is contemplated by Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, in a case of dispute regarding possession of land. Ramrungheer Dassee v. Gooroo Dass Roy, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 9.

The sanction of the Civil Court is not necessary to a complaint of forcible dispossession by a party who was put into possession by the Civil Court, nor is the Magistrate limited in his action by the mistake of the complainant inciting Section 188 of the Penal Code as the section under which the offence charged falls. Doolar Pandey, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 10.

The purchaser of an interest in land at a sale in execution of decree obtained an order for possession under Section 263 or 264, Act VIII of 1859, and a dispute arose between him and another person who had some interest in the land, as to what passed under the sale certificate. Without ascertaining the rights of the parties the Magistrate made certain orders, the effect of which was to exclude the auction-purchaser for some time from exercising the right alleged to have passed to him under the purchase. Held that the Magistrate ought to have made no order at all with reference to the property, leaving it to the parties to determine their rights in the Civil Court, and that he had ample power under the Section to do what was necessary to prevent a breach of the peace. The High Court may interfere with and quash an order passed by a Magistrate under Section 62, Code of Criminal Procedure, when the order is one that was beyond the power and out of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to make it. Quere,—Whether pleaders have a right to be heard in such cases? Dengoo Shaikh v. Adam Stir- car, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 37.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction, under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, to prevent breaches of the peace in places where the rivers have dried up. The jurisdiction that was once there, under Section 36, is not taken away by reason of the land having appeared and the water disappeared.

It is not competent to a party who, when there is no clear evidence of actual possession, puts in certain documents which would be evidence of title, and invites the Magistrate to consider them as bearing upon the fact of possession, to object afterwards that the Magistrate has gone into the question of title. Criminal Procedure is not such a proceeding as to bring before it evidence of actual possession, but is a proceeding where the Magistrate has no power to use the information which the police may have obtained as evidence in the case. Queen v. Komul Kissen, 11 W. R., Cr. R., 35.

The Magistrate may require the accused to

A person in custody from his inability to give security is not in custody for an offence with which he has been charged, or of which he has been convicted. 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 23.

To justify a Magistrate in taking action under Section 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there must be evidence before him legally sufficient to establish the fact that the person charged is a person of the character described in the section. Queen v. Bulalu and others, 2 N. W. R., 455.

Where a person, under Section 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is ordered to provide security for his good behaviour, the order should, under Section 300, state the number of sureties required from the defendant.

The object of the law as to security for good behaviour is, that sureties shall be responsible for the good behaviour of the person called upon to provide security, not that a deposit be made in cash. Queen v. Sheo Buksh, 2 N. W. R., 295.

44.—Security to Keep the Peace.

There is nothing in Section 62, Criminal Procedure Code, to justify a Magistrate in making an order under that section on the mere report of a police officer. The Queen v. Bhypo Dayal Singh, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 4; S. C., 11 W. R. Cr., 46.

Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to disputes connected with lands, but refers specially to nuisances and other similar matters in which immediate action is necessary, in order to avoid a risk of illegal consequences. Raj Bulbul Addhya v. Gobindo Chunder Moiter, 12 W. R., Cr., 66.

Held that an Assistant Magistrate, as he comes within the definition of the term of "any magistrate," was competent to pass an order under Section 62 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which contemplates circumstances under which an immediate order is urgently required, and in this respect differs from Section 308 of that enactment, and that it should be read along with Section 188 of the Indian Penal Code. Government v. Mahomed Buksh, 1 Agra Rep., Cr., 23.

An order of a Magistrate, under Section 62, Criminal Procedure Code, e.g., prohibiting one of two rival proprietors of two different hāts from holding his hāt on certain days of the week in order to prevent obstruction, annoyance, and injury, is not a judicial order; and is, therefore, not open to revision by the High Court under Section 404, Criminal Procedure Code.

Per Phear, J. (dissentient.)—The power conferred by Section 62, Criminal Procedure Code, is of a judicial character within the meaning of the word "judicial" in Section 404; and an order of a Magistrate in exercise of that power is in the nature of an injunction, and is, therefore, subject to revision by the High Court under Section 404, Criminal Procedure Code. Queen v. Abbas Ali Chowdry, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 46, and 6 B. L. R., 74.

Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not authorize a Magistrate summarily to direct a person to remove a wall erected on land alleged to belong to another person in the absence of evidence showing that a riot or affray was likely to occur. Rashakishore v. Giridhara Sakre, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 19.

A Magistrate may, under Section 291 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, cancel an order passed by him under Section 282 of that Code, summoning a person to show cause why he should not enter into a bond to keep the peace. Mussamat Amundee Kooer v. Ranee Soomit Kooer, 10 W. R., Cr., 40.

A statement by a complainant (believed by the Magistrate) that he expected the defendant at any time to make an attempt on his person or property is credible information, within the meaning of Section 282 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, of an intended breach of the peace. Queen v. Kris- tender Roy, 7 W. R., Cr., 30.

There is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which makes it imperative on a Magistrate to confront the accused and the accused in a case under Section 282 of the Penal Code; and if a Magistrate considers a statement on oath of a complainant to be "credible information" under that section, there is no reason why he should not call on the accused to give security, the sufficiency of such "credible information" being ordinarily left to the Magistrate to determine. Tarnee Kant Lahoury Chowdry, petitioner, 8 W. R., Cr., 79.

A petition unsupported by any complaint or deposition on solemn affirmation cannot be considered "credible information" within the meaning of Section 282 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on which to warrant a Magistrate to demand security to keep the peace. Chamaro Mah and others v. Kashi Chunder Lalla and others, 8 W. R., Cr., 85.

Held (Glover, J., dissentient). the report of a police officer, though it justifies the issuing of a summons, is not sufficient ground on which to bind a man over in a recognizance to keep the peace.

The Magistrate must adjudicate on the question whether there is reasonable ground for believing that the defendant is likely to commit a breach of the peace, after taking evidence in the presence of the person charged, and giving him an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses.

The onus lies on the person who has obtained the summons to prove that the defendant is likely to commit a breach of the peace. Behari Patak v. Mahomed Hyat Khan; A. D. Dunne v. Hem Chandra Chowdry; Government v. Behari Lall Brojotari, 4 B. L. R., F. B., 46.

Before initiating proceedings under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate must satisfy himself on legal evidence that there exists a likelihood of a breach of the peace, and also record a proceeding stating the grounds of his being so satisfied. Taroffdi Mundle v. Chunder Bhosoon Bannerjee, 16 S. W. R., Cr., R., 74.

peace, a Magistrate is justified, without enquiring who was the aggressor or the aggrieved party, to proceed under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and to take whatever steps are in his opinion necessary to prevent a breach of the peace. Gangad Narain Mitter v. Gour Soondur Chowdry, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 85.

The prisoner was convicted of an offence punishable under Section 307 of the Penal Code. In addition to the sentence passed upon him under that section, the Sessions Judge directed, under Section 280 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that, at the expiration of the term of imprisonment imposed, the prisoner do execute a formal engagement in a sum of Rs. 100 for keeping the peace towards the prosecutor for a period of one year, and in default of entering into the required engagement, a separate sum of Rs. 150 shall be imposed. Queen v. Powell and others, 3 N. W. R., 96.

When the party summoned shows cause, the Magistrate in taking evidence should look not merely to the question of possession, but also whether he is satisfied that there was a probability of a breach of the peace. Koonjobehary Chowdhry v. Eknath Gurain, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 43.

When the party summoned shows cause, the Magistrate in taking evidence should look not merely to the question of possession, but also whether he is satisfied that there was a probability of a breach of the peace. Bhaneshkauri Chowdrain in the matter of the Petition of, 7 B. L. R., 329; 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 17.

Where a Magistrate who apprehended a breach of the peace eventually discharged the recognizances which he had compelled the parties to give, it was held that he exceeded his jurisdiction when he also gave directions as to the disposition of the property in dispute between the parties. Chowdry Sho Nandun Proshad v. Chowdry Nil Kanth Proshad, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 44.

Under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate, having satisfied himself that a breach of the peace is likely to ensue, should enquire which party is in possession, and after satisfying himself on that point should record a proceeding declaring the party held to be in possession to retain possession until ousted by due course of law, and should forbid any disturbance of such possession; but he should not go on to enquire into the rights of parties in possession, or forbid the exercise of any right by such party. An order passed under Section 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not fall within the provisions of Clause 7, Section 1, of Act XIV of 1859. Doorjan Singh v. Shibba, 3 N. W. R., 171.

Although it is competent to a Magistrate upon conviction and sentence for assault to order the accused to enter into an engagement to keep the peace, yet having omitted to do so he can afterwards only institute proceedings under Section 281 of the Criminal Procedure Code, upon receiving some further credible information (other than that which he derived from the previous trial) that the parties are likely to commit a breach of the peace.

It is essential to the validity of a summons issued under Section 281 that it should contain the substance of the information by which the Magistrate is moved to act. A separate summons should be issued to each person required to furnish security, and a separate bond taken from each, which should be in the form required by the Code, and in the order the Magistrate should state the period for which the person against whom the order is made is to be imprisoned if he fail to comply with it. Queen v. Powell and others, 3 N. W. R., 96.

Before making an absolute order directing a person to enter into a bond to keep the peace, the Magistrate must take the evidence on which he bases the order in the presence of the accused or his agent. Per Loch, J., Glover, dissenting. Maghan Misra v. Chammun Teli, 2 B. L. R., Cr., 7.

It is not necessary to call witnesses in support of an information laid before a Magistrate previous to requiring security for keeping the peace. Case of Mullick Fukeerun, 11 W. R., Cr., 6.

The period for which a prisoner can be bound down on security to keep the peace is one year from the date of his release from imprisonment. Queen v. W. Don Dolloi, 6 W. R., Cr., 71.

Where a matter in respect of which further security to keep the peace is required is the same as that before the Magistrate on the first occasion, the case can only be dealt with under Section 290 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Diego De Silva v. Jehangeer and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 23.

Security to keep the peace. Notice to show cause why security should not be demanded must be served before a Magistrate can pass orders requiring security to keep the peace. Sham Mohinee v. Futtek Chand Dass, 9 W. R., Cr., 16.

There is no appeal to the Court of Session from an order made by a Magistrate, under Section 409 of the Criminal Procedure Code, requiring a penal recognizance to keep the peace under Section 280. The Court of Session may, however, in such case, under Section 434 of the Code, call for and examine the record of the Court below; and if it shall be of opinion that the order of the Magistrate is contrary to law, refer the proceedings for the orders of the High Court.

There is no provision of the Criminal Procedure Code which makes it lawful for a Court of Session to call for and examine the record of a case tried by a Subordinate Magistrate, where no sentence or order has been passed thereon by the immediately subordinate Court of the Magistrate.

A conviction of house-trespass by a Subordinate Magistrate was reversed on appeal by the Magistrate of the district, who moreover directed the Subordinate Magistrate to take a recognizance bond in the sum of Rs. 50 from the accused, that he would not for one year enter the house, and would not commit a breach of the peace. Held by the High Court, that the order directing the recognizance bond to be taken should be set aside as having been improperly made by the Magistrate in the absence of the accused and upon the suggestion of his adversary.

A summons under Section 282 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to show cause why the person summoned should not enter into a bond to keep the peace, can legally issue on information if it be credible, contained in a case which was brought against the person summoned for illegal assembly, of which he was acquitted. The order directing that the defendant should enter into the bond cannot, however, be made until the Magistrate has taken fresh evidence, properly given, on the appearance of the accused before him (or of his agent); and before he has adjudicated judicially on such evidence, that it is necessary for the preservation of the peace that a bond should be taken. Nur Singh Narain, petitioner, 10 W. R., Cr., 1; 2 B. L. R., A. Cr., 7.

In proceedings against persons to show cause why they should not enter into bonds to keep the peace, it is incumbent on the Magistrate to adjudicate judicially on evidence given before him as to the necessity for taking such security. And in such cases the onus of proof lies upon the party on whose complaint the summons was issued. Queen v. Nirungun Singh, 2 N. W. R., 431.

A Magistrate is not competent, under Section 282 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to order persons to enter into bonds to keep the peace merely upon the statement of the complainant, on which the summons was granted, and without taking further evidence, or giving the parties an opportunity of cross-examining the complainant. Queen v. Nusseer-oed-deen, 2 N. W. R., 461.

The High Court declined to interfere with an order passed by a Magistrate in a case in which he ordered security to be taken for the preservation of the peace, where it appeared that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the order, although such evidence was taken in the vernacular and in disregard of the provisions of Section 267 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Puriag Singh, 13 S. W. R., Cr., 29.

Order of District Magistrate, requiring certain persons to enter into recognizances and find security to keep the peace, reversed, as such order appeared to have been made without any legal evidence having been taken and recorded, as required by Section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Reg. v. Daltapatram Penabhai, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., C. P., 105.

A Magistrate acts without jurisdiction in making an order binding a person to keep the peace when there is no complaint before him of a breach of the peace being likely to be committed by such person, and without taking any evidence in the matter. Brajendro Koomer Rai Chowdry, alias Dighoo Baboo, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 35.

It is illegal and contrary to the provisions of Section 282, Code of Criminal Procedure, to take recognizances from one person in order to prevent another from committing a breach of the peace. Ram Coomar Banerjee v. Rajah Gopal Singh Deb, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 54.

Defendants were charged with theft, and on their appearance before the Sub-Magistrate, on 1st May, were bound over by recognizance to appear from that date until the close of the trial. On the 2nd May, when the case was called on, defendants were not present, but they appeared on the 3rd. The Sub-Magistrate heard what they had to say, and directed the penalties on the forfeited recognizances to be levied from the defendants. Held that there was no ground for the interference of the High Court as a Court of Revision; that there is nothing illegal in requiring defendants to execute such a bond, and that no notice was necessary before proceeding to enforce the penalty. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXIX.

Section 294 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not authorize the imprisonment of sureties. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. LXIX.

Where a defendant charged with an offence bound himself to appear before a Sub-Magistrate on the 10th June, and the defendant did appear on that day, but made default on the 11th of June, on which the case was called,—Held that there was no forfeiture of the recognizance. In such cases Section 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires that the Magistrate shall form a reasonable opinion that there has been wilful default before issuing process to enforce the penalty. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLIV.

45—RECOGNIZANCES.

Recognizances are not necessary from persons acquitted by the Sessions Judge. Queen v. Anund Chunder Chuckerbuddy, 3 W. R., Cr., 33.

It is not necessary that there should be a conviction of rioting in order to admit of a Magistrate taking recognizances to keep the peace. Queen v. Seltaram Haara, 1 W. R., Cr., 45.

The estreating of recognizances is a proceeding resorted to where persons who have undertaken to give evidence in a criminal enquiry have failed without just excuse to attend, and have thus created an obstruction to public justice; but where a Magistrate thinks it proper to estreat their recognizances, he ought to allow them an opportunity of justifying their default. Queen v. Dassoo Manjee, 11 W. R., Cr., 39.

The order of the Magistrate directing the prisoner, on the expiration of his sentence for the offence of criminal trespass, to execute personal recognizances to keep the peace, was upheld as legal and necessary. Queen v. Gendoo Khan, 7 W. R., Cr., 14.

Before a recognizance can be forfeited, it must be proved that the person accused has either personally broken the peace or abetted some other person or persons in breaking it. The mere fact that the accused is a servant of one of two rival parties for whose benefit the breach took place, is not sufficient. Queen v. Kally Bhyrub Sandyal, 11 W. R., Cr., 52.

An unproved charge of false imprisonment is not the credible information contemplated in the law, on which a Magistrate may take recognizances to keep the peace. Keshub Chunder Sandyal and three others, 6 W. R., Cr., 1.
It should appear, on the face of a Magistrate's order, that he had received credible information that the persons ordered to enter into their recognizances were likely to commit a breach of the peace, or to do any act that might probably occasion a breach of the peace.

In a case which is made over for investigation to the Police, the prosecutor and his witnesses should be required, under Section 151 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to enter into recognizances to attend and give evidence.

A recognizance binding over an accused person to appear to answer a charge should specify the particular day on which he should be in attendance in Court. Queen v. Pooran Jolaha, 11 W. R., Cr., 47.

After calling upon a person, under Section 282 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to show cause why he should not enter into recognizances to keep the peace, a Magistrate should not order the defendant to enter into such recognizances without taking evidence, or making enquiry whether the defendant had committed any act which might probably occasion a breach of the peace. Queen v. Deo Nundun Singh, 8 W. R., Cr., 93.

A. executes in district T. a recognizance to keep the peace towards B., A was afterwards convicted in district S. of having assaulted B. in that district. Held, A had forfeited his recognizance, and the Magistrate in district T. could proceed against him under Section 293 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Queen v. Sham Sunder Chowdhry, 2 B. L. R., A. Cr., 11.

A Magistrate has no power to mitigate the penalty entered in a recognizance bond, which must be enforced to its full amount, unless Government forego a portion of the penalty. Anonymous, Bom. Rep., 140.

A Magistrate has no power to make an order that an accused person should enter into a bond to keep the peace until after an adjudication that it is necessary for the preservation of peace to take a bond from him, and until he is satisfied on that point, unless there is an admission by the party against whom the order is to be made. Queen v. Lall Behary Singh and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 50.

Before a Magistrate can declare that recognizances to keep the peace have been forfeited, he must record legal evidence in the presence of the accused, proving that he was about to do something which would cause a breach of the peace. In the case of Kalikant Roy Chowdhry, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 155.

The report of a Subordinate Magistrate is such "credible information" within the meaning of Section 282 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as to authorize a Magistrate to summon an individual named in the report, and require him to enter into a recognizance to keep the peace, although the report does not suggest that a recognizance should be required, but suggests other means for the prevention of disputes and the preservation of order. Akkeli Edathilitta Pugy Achen, ex-parte, 2 Mad. Rep., 277.

Held (Glover, J., dissenting) that, in the appearance of a party summoned under Section 282 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is incumbent on the Magistrate, before taking a bond from him for the preservation of the peace, to adjudicate judicially on evidence given before him as to the necessity for taking security. The onus in such case is on the party on whose complaint the summons was issued. Dunne v. Hem Chunder Chowdhry, 12 W. R., Cr., 61.

A charge of criminal trespass and mischief was dismissed. Thereupon the Magistrate recorded an order in the presence of both parties, calling on them to show cause, on a day fixed, why they should not enter into recognizances to keep the peace.

Held that it was not necessary also to issue a summons to them under Section 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Queen v. Chowdhry, 2 B. L. R., Ap., 28.

On the application of A., a recognizance was taken from B. that he would keep the peace for six months under a penalty of Rs. 500. Before the expiry of the period B. assaulted C. Held that there was a forfeiture of the recognizance. Jahu Box v. Government, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 66; and 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 14.

A surety who was bail for an accused person having failed to produce him on the day appointed, the Deputy Magistrate ordered that the bail-bond be forfeited, and a warrant be issued for the attachment and sale of the moveable property, first, of the accused, and secondly, of the surety. No recognizance had been signed by the accused, and no notice had been given to the surety to show cause. On a reference by the Magistrate, the Deputy Magistrate's order was set aside as being illegal. Queen v. Durga Das Bhattacharje, 7 B. L. R., Ap., 37.

Where a surety conditioned that he would be responsible for the continued presence of an accused person at one Court (Nowadah), it was held that the surety was released from liability under his recognizance by the permission which the Court at Nowadah gave the accused, without the surety's consent, of leaving that place of business, and also by the subsequent transfer of the case to another Court. Queen v. Mewa Lal, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 53.

A Magistrate cannot pass an order, under Section 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, directing a certain person to abstain from a certain act, or to take order with certain property, unless he is satisfied that such direction on his part is likely to prevent or tends to prevent a riot or affray; nor can he pass an order under that section, or under Section 282, or any other section of the law, calling upon a person to enter into recognizances not to collect certain cesses, though under Section 282 the Magistrate may bind him down to keep the peace, if there is sufficient evidence to show that a breach of the peace is imminent through his act. Lutchmeupat Singh and Routmul, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 3.

Per Ainslie, J.—In a case in which proceedings are taken for forfeiture of recognizances, the person against whom they are held is competent to give evidence on oath on his own behalf. Quere,—When recognizances are forfeited, is a Magistrate bound to forfeit the whole amount of the bond, and is the power of reducing the sum to a penalty corresponding to the breach of the peace confined only to the Government? Jchan Buksh, petitioner, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 87.
Criminal Procedure—Absconded Offender.

An order calling for recognizances Sund erection fresh disputes with other persons. The Deputy Magistrate, instead of referring the case to the Court of Session under Section 298 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, directed A. to enter into another recognizance for a further period of one year.—Held the order was illegal. Queen v. Kalinath Biswas, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 116, and 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 18.

An order directing certain persons to enter into recognizances of Rs. 500 each, conditioned to keep the peace for the period of one year, without first summoning them to show cause why they should not be required so to do, is irregular, and will be quashed. Queen v. Moonee Doobey, 2 N. W. R., 189.

Held that where the personal attendance of an accused is dispensed with, a recognizance bond, if such is deemed necessary, should be taken from him, and not from his agent, binding him (the accused) to appear either in person or by an agent; and that a Magistrate has no legal authority to secure the attendance of an agent by such a bond. Reg. v. Lallub Jassubhadi, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr. R., 64.

In proceedings taken against a person to obtain security for good behavior and in default of furnishing security, the examination of the witnesses must be taken in the presence of the accused person, who should be permitted to cross-examine them. Queen v. Shunkur and others, 2 N. W. R., 406.

46.—Absconded Offender.

The proper remedy of claimants to property attached as belonging to an absconding offender is by a civil suit. The Court declined to quash such an attachment as made without observance of the due formalities, being of the opinion that the plea of informality could be considered on the surrender of the fugitive, but cautioned the Magistrate against a sale until the needful formalities were carried out. Re Chunder Bhan Singh and others, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 16.

Regulation XI of 1796, being a highly penal statute, should be construed strictly. As it makes no express provision for the case of joint proprietors of land, or persons jointly holding a sudder farm of land, in the absence of clear words indicating such an intention, it cannot be assumed that the Legislature intended to authorize the confiscation of the property of any person other than the delinquent. Juggomohun Buksee v. Roy Mothooronath Chowdry and others 7 W. R., P. C., 18.

Under Regulation XI, 1796, the Governor-General in Council could pronounce an order of confiscation in cases of persons charged with offences of a criminal nature who should abscond or conceal themselves so as not to be found upon process issued against them. After the issuing of the attachment by the Court and the subsequent declaration of forfeiture, everything previous to the attachment must be presumed to have been regularly and legally done, unless such presumption were rebutted by sufficient evidence. Must. Gobst Koonur and others v. The Collector of Benares, 7 W. R., P. C., 47.

47.—RIGHT OF PRIVATE DEFENCE.

The accused had, in using right of private defence of property, caused the death of a thief, who was seized in the act of committing a burglary in his house, and was convicted by the Sessions Judge of culpable homicide, and sentenced to three years imprisonment. The sentence was reversed on appeal, and the prisoner acquitted. Queen v. Kurnar, 9 W. R., Cr., 12.

Dispute between two parties (the Mollahs and Shikdars), in which the Shikdars attacked and killed, one of the Mollahs when exercising the right of retaking their own property. Three of the Shikdars were also wounded. The Shikdars were convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and of rioting, but the Mollahs were held entitled to the protection conferred by Section 104, Penal Code: they were therefore released. Queen v. Mith Singh and others, 3 W. R., Cr., 41.

The right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who, believing they will be attacked, court the attack. Queen v. Nowadbee, W. R., 1864, Cr., 11.

When the accused, whose property had frequently been stolen, went out with a latee to watch his property, and with the latee struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blows, it was held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted and to the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th Exception to Section 99, and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but was proected by Sections 97 and 104 of the Penal Code, and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property. The Queen v. Mokee, 12 W. R., Cr., 15.

There can be no right of private defence, either on one side or the other, in a case of premeditated riot. Queen v. Teollah and others, 7 W. R., Cr., 34.

The legal right of private defence of the body and property is not exceeded by a person who is attacked by another with a spear, and who strikes a blow with a latee, which results in the death of the party attacking, and such right of private defence of the body extends, under Section 100 of the Penal Code, to the taking of life where grievous hurt is reasonably apprehended. Queen v. Moiwoodin and three others, 11 W. R., Cr., 41.

A party in possession of land is legally entitled to defend his possession against another party seeking to eject him by force. Queen v. Tuli Singh and others, 2 B. L. R., A. Cr., 16; 11 W. R., Cr., 64.

The accused was attacked by a man whom he found by a hole cut in his house for the purpose of committing a burglary, and struck out at the man a blow which caused his death. Held that the accused simply exercised his right of private defence, and was guilty of no offence.

Two other men, who helped him to remove the dead body, and were accused of causing the disappearance of evidence, knowing that an offence had been committed, under Section 201, Penal Code, were also acquitted, for that section contemplates a belief that an offence has been committed; and if the first prisoner was acquitted of all offence, it may be presumed that the other prisoners did not believe that any offence had been committed. Queen v. Pelkoo Miskyo, 2 W. R., Cr., 42.

In cases of hurt or grievous hurt the question should be considered as to who was the aggressor, and whether the offence was committed in the exercise of the right of private defence. Queen v. Suhun and Samoo, 2 W. R., Cr., 59.

Where land in the possession of A. was encroached on by the servants of B., who committed mischief on the land, and the servants of A. assembled and resisted the encroachments, the High Court declined to interfere with the Magistrate’s order convicting the servants of A. of unlawful assembly, as there was no error in law in the order of the Magistrate, who found as a fact that the right of defence of private property had ceased under Clause 4, Section 105 of the Penal Code. The Queen v. Rij Kristo Doss, 12 W. R., Cr., 43.

The firing of a gun at persons at a distance of twenty-five yards, without a reasonable apprehension of danger and without any necessity for so doing, is not justifiable by the right of private defence. Queen v. Hussanuddy, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 46.

The right of private defence under Section 103 of the Penal Code is restricted by Section 99 of that Code, and does not extend to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence. Queen v. Dhumunjai Polye, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 68.

Where the offence which occasions the right of private defence of property is criminal trespass, the right of defence under Section 104 of the Penal Code only extends (subject to the restrictions of Section 99) to the voluntarily causing to the wrong-doers some harm other than death. Queen v. Goburdhan Pari, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 74.

The right of private defence as described in Section 97 of the Penal Code is subject to the restrictions mentioned in Section 99, that is, it should be exercised only in the defence of one's own body or that of another person against an offence affecting the human body. Under Section 102 the right commences only as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body caused by an attempt or threat to commit an offence, and by Section 99, Clause 4, the right is restricted to not inflicting more harm than is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence.

Where A. trespassed on the lands of B., whose servants seized and confined A. till the following day, when B. gave information to the police, it was held that the conduct of B. and his servants in confining A. could not be supported on the ground that they were exercising the right of private defence of property, under Sections 97, 104, and 105 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Kassanauth, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 64.

In the case of a complaint under Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for the removal of an obstruction from a thoroughfare, a Magistrate should first enquire if the road is a public one or not. If he finds in the affirmative, he has jurisdiction to proceed; if in the negative, he should withhold his hand and abstain from carrying out the order for the removal of the obstruction. Becharam Bhuttacharjee, 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 67.

There is no right of appeal from the decision of a Jury appointed to try whether the order of a Magistrate for the removal of a nuisance under Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was reasonable and proper. Such decision of the Jury is not a judicial proceeding with which the High Court can interfere under Section 404. Shitaram v. Ramnund, 16 S. W. R., Cr. R., 16.

In referring a case regarding a nuisance to arbitrators under Section 310, Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate should fix a time within which the arbitrators are to send in their award; and this must be done whenever from any cause the constitution of the Juries is changed and a fresh Juror is appointed. Where this is done a Magistrate cannot carry out his original order if there is any delay in the submission of the award by the arbitrators. Shama Kant Bawdopadyha, in the matter of, 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 69.

A prostitute by visiting a dak-bungalow at the request of a person staying there, but against whom there is no evidence of any impropriety of speech or gesture or act, or that she had occasioned annoyance to the public generally or to any persons who, in the exercise of their public right, were lodging in the bungalow, is not liable to be convicted under Section 290 of the Indian Penal Code as having committed a public nuisance. Queen v. Musumut Begum, 2 N. W. R., 349.

In order to remove a public nuisance a Magistrate is bound to proceed under Section 308 and following Sections of Chapter XX of the Criminal Procedure Code, and is not competent to pass a summary order to the police to do so. Queen v. Damodur Dass, 2 N. W. R., 452.

49.—MAINTENANCE.

Before an order under Section 316 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the maintenance of a wife or child can be passed against a person, the charge must be legally proved against him, the words “due proof” in that section meaning legal proof on oath. Gonda v. Pyari Doss Gossein, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 19.

An order made under Section 316 of the Criminal Procedure Code, fixing a sum for the maintenance of a child, containing a prospective order for an increase of the amount awarded as the child grows older, is unauthorized by the law. Musumut Musigo v. Juna Dass, 2 N. W. R., 454.

Where the Magistrate's order directed the defendant to pay a monthly sum for the maintenance of his wife, and directed that the defendant be rigorously imprisoned for the term of fifteen days for every breach of the order, under Section 316 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the High Court quashed the latter part of the order as being irregular and bad in substance. 5 Mad. Rep. Rul. XXXIV.

No order can be passed under Section 316 of Chapter XXI of the Criminal Procedure Code for the maintenance of an unborn child. Musumut Larlu v. Bansa Ditchi, 3 N. W. R., 70.

An order of maintenance under Section 316 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a “judicial proceeding of a Criminal Court,” within the meaning of Section 404 of that Code, but no appeal lies against such order under Section 409. Reg. v. Thakut bin Ird, 5 B. R., Cr. R., 81.

A decision of the Civil Court, refusing to enforce a contract or agreement against a man for the maintenance of a woman, cannot conclude either the woman from applying, or a Magistrate from making an order, under Section 316 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for the maintenance of their illegitimate daughter. John Meislakbach, 17 S. W. R., Cr. R., 49.
I.—FRAUD.

(a) Miscellaneous.

The plaint alleged fraud in the defendants in that they represented themselves as agents, when in fact they were principals, in fifty-eight instances in which they had made contracts with the plaintiffs. The prayer of the plaint was “that the defendants may either be held personally responsible on the several said contracts as purchasers thereunder, or otherwise that they may be held personally liable for damages, for fraudulently representing that they were authorized to effect the contracts aforesaid;” and further asked for an account and for damages.

It appeared clear to the Judge below, on the evidence, that the defendants acted as principals, and he treated the case on the issue of fraud alone.

Ten cases only of the fifty-eight were selected by the plaintiffs, on which they gave evidence of the fraud; and the Judge found in their favour as to three, and held that the plaint charging fraud the plaintiffs could not succeed on any cause of action incidentally disclosed. The decree was drawn up with reference only to the three cases on which the fraud was found, so far as finally to dispose of them, but ordered an enquiry as to the fraud in all the rest.

Held that the case was appealable, and that the decision of the Court below was right. Ghasseram Misser and others v. Williamson and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 205.

Plaintiff had executed a kistbundee for arrears of rent decreed against him by a Revenue Court. He then sued to set aside the decree and kistbundee, on the ground that the decree had been based on a fraudulent and fictitious kubuleut. The suit, though dismissed in the first Court, was decreed in appeal. Held in special appeal, there being no evidence of the fraud on the record of the case, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree. Murriam Bebee v. Mahomed Jamal, 12 W. R., 380.

Held that, where the widow and plaintiff, the transferee, were engaged in a scheme for evading the restrictions put by the Hindu law upon the widow’s right of alienation, and were making use of the forms of a suit in furtherance of the fraud, it was quite competent for the lower Appellate Court... to determine and satisfy itself (some of the persons really interested being minors, and the transaction being open to suspicion as prejudicial to their reversionary rights) of the true nature of the transaction at the instance of the remote reversioner, even had the nearer reversioner been present and consented to the decree being passed in plaintiff's favour. Dowar Rai v. Mussamut Boonda and others, 1 Agra Rep., F. B., 57.

In an action of trespass against the Sheriff, it appearing that the plaintiff had never had possession of the property alleged to be converted, and that the conveyance to the plaintiff of the property seized had been effected with the view of defrauding the creditors of an insolvent, who shortly before such conveyance was the owner of the same,—Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

The doctrine of a fraudulent conveyance being void as against creditors, held to be a principle of Hindu as it is of English law. Sham Kissore Shaw v. David Cowie, 2 Ind. Jur., O. S., 7.

A person who fraudulently removes property, intending thereby to prevent that property from being taken in execution of a decree made by a Collector, commits an offence, and is punishable under Section 206 of the Penal Code, and not under Section 145, Act X of 1859. Gour Chandra Chuckerbutly v. Kishen Mohan Singh, 10 W. R., Cr., 46.

In a suit to recover immovable property alleged to have belonged to the plaintiff's husband which she inherited from him, and from which, after seven years' possession, she was ousted by the defendant, whose possession was conferred by the Magistrate under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the defendants claimed under a deed of sale which the lower Courts found to have been executed in fraud of creditors,—Held, that if plaintiff was in possession for seven years since her husband's death, she should not be allowed to be dispossessed on the ground of a fraudulent deed to which defendant was a party years previously, to which plaintiff was no party. Ethamoye and others v. Hurro Soondure Dassee and others, 12 W. R., 155.

A obtained a decree in a suit instituted on a binding to have been executed by plaintiff's father, and one D. proceeded to execute it, by putting up for sale certain rights and interest of plaintiff which the nearer reversioner had not only alleged fraud, but shown the way in which the fraud was intended to be carried out. Bycunto Nath Sett v. Russick Lall Bormona, 10 W. R., 231.

A person does not become a bona-fide purchaser within the meaning of Act XI of 1855 unless he has made all reasonable enquiries as to the title. Enquiries from neighbours are not sufficient. Gour Goopal Dutt v. Bissennath Ghose, Cor. Rep., 41.

A putneedar who had obtained two decrees, one for back and current rents and the other for back rents, first sold the tenure in execution of the decree for back rent, and within three days after its sale caused it to be sold again in execution of the decree for back and current rents. Held that, having come in under the provisions of Section 106, Act X of 1859, and his objections having been overruled by the Collector, he had a right to sue within a year from the date of adjudication, and the suit would lie in the Civil Court, as the act of the putneedar in setting up the defaulter's tenure a second time for sale for arrears due by the defaulter was a fraud. Sowdannymee Dassee v. Bhulanath Shaka, 9 W. R., 365.

A sale by a husband to his wife may be collusive and a fraud upon his creditors, notwithstanding the payment of the purchase-money by the wife out of her funds. Bhawan Lall v. Mussamut Ateecium, 1 W. R., 319.

Where a tenure has been sold under Section 105, Act X of 1859, in execution of a decree for the rent of land held under a mourose pottah, a tenant in possession is at liberty to show that the decree had been obtained by fraud and collusion against a person who had then no interest in the premises. John Borradaile & Co. v. A. C. Gregory, 2 W. R., Act X R., 63.

A putneedar who had obtained a decree was not guilty of any fraud or misrepresentation, or did not guarantee the validity of the sale under the decree.

Where a plaintiff sued for recovery of possession of property which he said he purchased from two defendants, and it was found as a fact that one of the defendants did not sell, but that the other used fraud in effecting the sale, it was held that the decision below which gave plaintiff a decree for the entire property against the defendant who acted fraudulently was erroneous, and that he decree should have absolved from liability the share of the defendant who did not join in or know anything of the sale. Kaledass Mosoondar v. Wekeromissa Khan and others, 8 W. R., 482.

Where a transaction was originally a sale, temporarily converted into a mortgage for some fraudulent purpose, but subsequently, as between the parties to the fraud, voluntarily restored to its original state of a sale,— Held, under the circumstances, that the sale should stand good, and consequently that there was no necessity for foreclosure, and no equity of redemption to sue for.

When a granddaughter purchases from a grandmother and attempts to oust a stranger who purchased bond fide and without notice, full and satisfactory proof of the bona fides of the transaction is necessary, even though no motive for fraud is proved. Sheikht Imadat Hossein v. Beebee Atikoomnissa, W. R., F. B., 77.

There is no fraud in a purchaser securing the assent both of the ostensible and beneficial owners to his purchase, so as to require a good title. Kallee Mohun Paul v. Bholanath Chakladar and others, 7 W. R., 138.

A defendant may plead the joint fraud of himself and the plaintiff as a bar to an action upon a contract which the plaintiff seeks to enforce by suit. The distinction between acts voidable by statute and at common law discussed. A. Seshatiya v. Kondaiya, 2 Mad. Rep., 249.

No one ought to be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud, even under a title from a Government sale for arrears of revenue. Nirub Syed Manloor Ali Khan Bakadoor v. Rajach Oojodya Ram Khan, 8 W. R., 399.

Where a party to a suit chooses to clothe with fraud conduct of the other side on which he bases his claim, he must understand that he risks the success with the charge which he makes. Hullo Monee Dossee and others v. Onookool Chunder Mootjee and others, 8 W. R., 461.

Where a mother conveyed her property to her daughter, and the property was afterwards attached in execution of a decree against the daughter,— Held, that the mother could not obtain a reconveyance of the property on the ground that the conveyance to the daughter was for the purpose of defrauding the mother's creditors, and that the onus was on the mother to prove that the decree against the daughter was a fraudulent contrivance to deprive the mother of possession of the property. Keshubchandra Sein v. Vyasmone Dossee, 7 W. R., 118.

A party should not expect redress from a Court of equity, justice, and good conscience, when he knows before such Court that, granting all his intentions to be fraudulent, he has a perfect right to seek to render inoperative a contract into which he willingly entered. Komolanan Sein and others v. Beharse Cant Roy, 11 W. R., 313.

When a decree is obtained fraudulently, and without notice to the opposite party, either of the suit or sale, the judgment-debtor may claim a rehearing at any time within 15 days after the seizure of his person or property. Boidoo Nath Roy v. Brojo Kisor Chuckerbutty, 2 W. R., Act X R., 15.

A son cannot obtain a decree when suing as heir to regain property, alleging his father's fraud as the cause of action. Bhugobutty Dossee v. Khizen Nath Roy, 3 W. R., 30.

A party cannot allege or plead his own fraud, nor can his representatives, nor a private purchaser from him, do so, unless they are themselves the defrauded parties, and seek relief from the fraud. Luckee Narain Chuckerbutty v. Taramonee Dossee, 3 W. R., 92.

In a suit to set aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud, it is not sufficient for a Court to find that the mode of making the attachment and proclamation was according to law; but it is necessary to consider the surrounding circumstances. Chonoo Sahoo v. Munnoo Lall, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 325.

(6) Indicia of Fraud.

The relationship between parties to a conveyance of property may be immaterial if the purchase is found true, but is not immaterial where the question to be decided is whether the purchase was true or fraudulent. The mere handing over of the purchase-money from one party to the other in the presence of strangers, and the registration of the deed, are not sufficient to prove the transaction to be bond fide. Prao Kissen Deb v. Lokenath Singh Mojoomdar, 10 W. R., 445.

A zamindar (A.) gave certain villages in putnee to B., and received consideration-money and rent from him, but B. never got possession of them, nor derived any benefit from the putnee; it having been found that the villages belonged to a third party as lakkherajdar, who obtained a decree against A. in a suit to which B. was made a party.

Held that, in cases like this, it would be a sufficient proof of fraud to show that the fact (of ownership) as represented was false, and that the person making the representation had a knowledge of the fact contrary to it. Raja Nilmony Singh v. Gordon Stuart, 9 W. R., 371.

Plaintiff sued for possession on a declaration of his itnammee right to a portion of a talook, for which his mother obtained an itnammee pottah. Afterwards the original superior tenure having been sold for arrears of rent under Act VIII of 1855, the father of defendant No. 1 purchased those rights and interests in the name of the defendant, and then obtained from the zamindar a pottah and settlement of the talook as one coming under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819. He then fell into arrears, the talook was sold under the Regulation last cited, and he purchased it blamelessly. Held that the legal inference from these facts was that the conduct of the father of the defendant No. 1 was fraudulent. Soobul Chandra Pal v. Autter Aly and others, 11 W. R., 32.

Where G. and Co. were unable to meet the bills of T. and Co., and wrote to T. and Co., "If you do not arrange for renewal or payment of them, we must stop payment;" G. and Co., knowing that they were insolvent, but for the purpose of delay, and not for any benefit to the estate, agreed to mortgage to T. and Co. what was substantially the whole of the estate.

T. and Co. renewed the bills, and the bills again falling due, and A. and Co. being unable to meet them, T. and Co. paid them. Shortly afterwards G. and Co. filed their petition of insolvency, without having carried out the agreement. In a suit by T. and Co., the Court refused to decree specific performance of the agreement, and held that it was a fraud against the general body of the creditors. Teil and others v. D. C. Gordon and another, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 142.

The mere non-payment of a debt does not necessarily prove collusion between the debtor and his vendor to defraud the creditor. Fraud must, not be presumed without good and probable grounds. Kissenbun Surmak and others v. Ramdun Chatjerjee and others, 6 W. R., 235.

A conveyance was held to be benamee in and fraud of creditors, even though executed and registered before obligation was incurred, when the conveyance was between near relations, and it was found that, in spite of the alleged conveyance, the possession remained with the original owner of the estate. Roop Davi Singh v. Narain Sahoo, 1 W. R., 217.

Where a deed was executed conveying a man's entire property to his son, only two years old, and reserving to himself one rupee a day for his subsistence, and after execution the conveying party keeping the property in his own hands out of the possession of any debt due to him. Sthoroda Bhosun Banerjee v. Tara Chand Kur and another, 11 W. R., 553.

A decree of an Appellate Court obtained, after a compromise not to prosecute the appeal, was held to be an adjudication obtained not only with great impropriety, but in effect by fraud. Rajmohun Gosain v. Gourmohun Gosain, 4 W. R., P. C., 47.

There is nothing fraudulent or illegal in a father making provision that property over which he has complete control shall not go into the hands of an insolvent son; but a benamee conveyance to female members, the father continuing the absolute and uncontrolled owner during his life, and the son entering into possession after his death, cannot exclude the claim of the son's creditors. Hemanginee Dassee v. Jogendronarain Roy, 12 W. R., 236.

Where a vendor knowing that he had no right or title to property, or being cognizant of the existence of incumbrances, or of latent defects materially lowering it in value, sold it and neglected to disclose such defects to the purchaser,—Held that there was a fraudulent concealment vitiating the contract. Peary Mohun Soor v. Abdool Sobhan Chowdury, 7 W. R., 258.

If a man largely indebted executes a conveyance of property to his wife, as in satisfaction of dower, the conveyance is void as against his creditors, if executed for the fraudulent purpose of keeping the property in his own hands out of the reach of the creditors. So also a conveyance by a man in such circumstances to his wife is fraudulent and void if no dower is due, and the conveyance is voluntary, and not made in satisfaction of any debt due to him. Shakt Mahomed Bussoroolah v. Abimoressa, 7 W. R., 513.

In considering a case of alleged fraud in the purchase of an estate, it is material to enquire what relation the purchase-money paid bore to the true value of the estate. See Hurree Chundra Boy v. Cofal Chundra Chuckerbutty and others, 7 W. R., 10.

Where an overseer in the Public Works Department, who is prohibited by the rules of his office from entering into any trade or contracts with that department, enters into an agreement of partnership for carrying on business under contract with the department, such agreement is a fraud upon the public, and is therefore one which a Court of Justice ought to treat as an absolute nullity. Sharoda Prosad Roy and another v. Bhola Nath Banejee, 11 W. R., 441.

The setting up of a hostile title against the remainder by a tenant under a fraudulent purchase amounts to a disclaimer and forfeiture of all right of occupancy to which the tenant might have been entitled had he set up his title under Section 6, Act X of 1859. Mirza Nadir Beg v. Mudduram, 2 W. R., Act X R., 2.

Where a deed of sale is executed under circumstances which suggest an intention to defraud creditors, it is not sufficient that the sale was formally made and the deed duly registered; the ABSENCE AND INADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION.

A putnee talook being about to be brought to sale under Regulation VIII of 1819, the agents of the sharers were in attendance at the Collectorate on the day of sale, prepared to pay the rent due. Two of the agents (T. and B.) happening to be out of the way at the time, the lot was about to be called up, the third (K.), without informing the Collector or zamindar's agent of their intention to pay, or giving notice to the others, purchased the putnee,—

Held that K.'s act was one of bad faith, that the 4-annas shareholders whom he represented could not in equity be allowed to benefit by adopting the fraud.

Held that as between the Collector and zamindar and the defaulting putnees the sale was valid; but that it was void so far as it created a title in favour of the 4-annas shareholders to the 8-annas share, and K. must be treated as having made the purchase on account of, and as a trustee for, the 12-annas shareholders. Koylash Chunder Banerjee v. Kalee Prosunno Chowdury, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 305.

(c) Absence and Inadequacy of Consideration.

A deed of assignment of property by a Hindu woman, without consideration or proper advice, is held to have been improperly obtained and may be set aside. Soondur Koomaree Debia v. Kishoree Lal Sein, 5 W. R., 246.

A gift by a husband to his wife is not void against the husband's creditors, if at the time of the gift the husband was solvent, and the wife was put in possession under the gift, especially if the plaintiff became a creditor of the husband long after the gift. Shaik Ezaat Ali v. Mussamut Ramprash Koonwar, 1 W. R., 21.

A Court of Equity will not set aside the voluntary deed of a weak man who is not absolutely competent to make a contract. The Court must be satisfied as to consideration having actually passed from the purchaser to the former owner, and as to the source from which the purchase-money was derived. Muthurollah v. Soraboodeen, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 305.

Mere inadequacy of consideration, unless it be so great as to amount to evidence of fraud, is not sufficient ground for setting aside a contract, or refusing to decree specific performance of it. But inadequacy of consideration when found in conjunction with any such other circumstances as suppression of true value of property, misrepresentation, fraud, surprise, oppression, urgent necessity for money, weakness of understanding or even ignorance, is an ingredient which weighs powerfully with a Court of Equity in considering whether it should set aside contracts, or refuse to decree specific performance of them.

(d) Undue Influence, &c.

In a suit to enforce performance of a contract, where defendant pleads that the contract was executed under compulsion and intimidation, it is sufficient for him to prove that it was executed from fear of a criminal complaint, as that might have been a righteous fear, and not simply a bodily fear imposed on him, in order to his doing which he would not of his own free will have done.

Should he plead that the contract was based upon the condonation of a criminal complaint against the plaintiff, which might have been of a nature not condonable by law, and that the contract was therefore void, it would be for him to show what was the nature of the offence complained of. Kumula Nath Sein and others v. Beharee Kant Roy, 11 W. R., 314.

A contract of sale of conveyance entered into by any one with a person who stands relatively to him in a position of confidence or trust, is liable to be called in question by the vendor, and to be set aside at his instance, if it be found that the other party made an unfair use of his advantages. This rule of equity applies strongly in a case where any person, acting as an attorney or as a legal adviser, enters into a contract with his client in respect of the subject of litigation or advice. Undue influence is presumed to have been exerted until the contrary is proved, and the purchaser is bound to show that all the terms and conditions of the contract are fair, adequate, and reasonable. R. A. Pushong v. Munia Hallawani, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 95; 10 W. R., 128.

Certain parties convicted of a criminal offence, in order to avoid apprehension, entered into a compromise with complainant, who agreed to accept a sum of money as costs and as compensation for the disgrace he had suffered. They accordingly sold him some property in lieu of cash. Held that the sale was not made under illegal pressure. Shaik Nubbee Buksh and others v. Mussamut Rebee Hingon and others, 8 W. R., 412.

A Court of Equity will not set aside the voluntary deed of a weak man who is not absolutely non compos, unless the weakness as well as the facts surrounding the transaction, and the nature of the transaction itself, be such as to satisfy the Court that the person had not at the time a mind adequate to the business, and that he might have been imposed upon, or unless the Court is not satisfied of the good faith of all the parties to the transaction.

Where a deed purports to have been executed by a purdah woman, the Court should see that it was fairly taken from her, and that she was a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. When the disposition is in the nature of a death-bed disposition, the Court that upholds it ought, from whomssoever it proceeded, to be satisfied that it was the free voluntary act of the party by whom it purports to have been executed, and expressed his real intention.

CONSEQUENCES OF FRAUD.

A vendee, and an ostensible vendor, are bound by a consideration of any creed, and will hold the property as original de facto, but must be free of any creed. Sahoo v. A.

The report of a party or pleading is to be the giver of any creed. Buksh, 4 V.

A wife and husband are bound to each other. Pershad v.

A father and son are bound to each other. Pershad v.
time of the sale whether there is any encumbrance on the property, gives an evasive answer which misleads the bidder and induces him to purchase the property as encumbered, he cannot subsequently claim as against such bidder to enforce his mortgage. McConnell v. Mayer, 2 N. W. R., 315.

Where there is an allegation that a lease is held benamee, it is not sufficient for the party in whose name the lease is drawn out to produce the document, but it is necessary for him to prove that he has the beneficial interest in the property. Sardamukhun Roy Choudhury v. Shama Soondery Dossia, guardian of Bama Churn Goohoo, minor, and another, 7 W. R., 209.

Where the property belonging to one family is conveyed to another by a deed of such a nature as secures the continuance of the profits to the former, the possession by the latter must be held to be on behalf of the former, until by some unequivocal act they show a distinct intention to hold on their own behalf. Juggernath Pershad Dutt v. C. S. Hogg and others, 12 W. R., 117.

The property bought by P. in the name of S. was mortgaged by P. through his benameedar S., by conditional sale to L., who, dying after foreclosure, left it in possession of his widows, defendants Nos. 3 and 4, from whom P. purchased it at a sale in execution of a decree against them. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 resisted on the ground that S.'s conditional sale did not pass the rights and interest of P., which they bought at an auction sale in execution of a decree against P.

A. purchased B.'s rights at a sale in execution of a decree of a Civil Court, but found the lands in the possession of C., a purchaser at a sale by the Collector's Court. A. prayed to be put in possession summarily, alleging C. to hold merely benamee for B. Held that A. could not proceed summarily, but must bring a regular suit. Omesh Chunder Roy v. Bhee Ashrufonissa and another, 6 W. R., Mis., 122.

Where property is held benamee, the ostensible owner assents to its being disposed of to the prejudice of the real owner, the latter cannot be allowed to object, the fraud being a consequence of his own act. Bhugwan Doss v. Reet Bhoobun Singh and others, 6 W. R., 283.

The mere taking a benamee lease, uncompromised by any other circumstance of suspicion, does not per se constitute fraud. Munoodall v. Reet Bhoobun Singh and others, 6 W. R., 283.

The real owner of property is the person who should institute a suit for it. A benamee holder may sue as trustee on behalf of the beneficial owner, without disclosing the name of the real owner; and if the defendant does not object to the suit proceeding in that form, and raises no issue upon the real title of the plaintiff, the suit may proceed and be decided. Prossunno Coomar Roy Choudhury v. Gooroo Churn Sein; Gooroo Churn Sein v. Oojulmonce Chowdhraji, 3 W. R., 159.
Registration of a deed does not affect the question of bona fide, nor is a conveyance to be considered bona fide simply because there is proof of its execution and some statement that money was on the occasion actually paid by the vendee into the hands of the vendor in the presence of witnesses unacquainted with the circumstances of the parties and the relation they bear to each other; but in coming to a conclusion, the circumstances and probabilities are to be carefully considered and weighed, e.g., the object of the purchase, whether the purchase-money really belonged to the purchaser, and whether possession was taken after purchase, and, if not, why possession was not taken.

In cases of benamied purchase in India, the criterion of beneficial ownership is the source from which the purchase-money is derived. Akbar Ali v. Mahomed Faiz Buksh, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 12.

Where property is bought from a wife as the ostensible owner, the husband consenting to the sale, and the transaction is bonâ fide on the part of the purchaser for a consideration, the purchase is a good one, even if the property is not the wife's but the husband's. Sheikh Golam Kussool v. Sheikh Abul Ruheem, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 19.

The law as to benamied conveyances taken by a father in the name of a son, whether in Hindu or Mahometan families, should be considered in all Courts in India as conclusively settled by the decision of the Privy Council in Gossain and Gossain, 6 Moore's East Indian Appeals.

That decision, however, was not applied to the present case, in which it was found that a father who had purchased property with his own funds, had had the conveyance drawn up in his son's name with a view to affect the interests of his daughters and to vary the rule of succession between sons and daughters in his family. Nawab Asimul Ali Khan v. Hurdwaree Mull, 14 S. W. R., P. C., 14.

In the case of a benamied purchase, the mere use of the benamied name is sufficiently disposed of by a party whose name is used sets up no claim, and if there appears to have been long continued possession on the part of the person claiming to be the beneficial owner. Mussamat Hoymobutty Dassee v. Sreechissen Nundy, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 58.

In a suit by an heir to recover property which has been transferred by a benamied and fictitious conveyance on the part of the deceased's father, where the object was bound to have been to defraud creditors, Held that plaintiff could not be permitted to plead the fraud of his father from whom he derived his title. Kalvineath Kurr v. Doyal Kristo Doss, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 87.

In cases where the question is whether property bought and held in the name of another than the party claiming as the real purchaser, is the property of that other, or merely bought and held in his name (benami) for the claimant, the criterion is to consider from what source the purchase-money came; the presumption is that a purchase made with the money of A. in the name of B. is for the benefit of A.; and where the purchase is by a father, whether Mahometan or Hindu, in the name of his son, there is no presumption of an advancement in favour of that son. Upon the facts, the decision of the Courts below reversed. Mouli Syad Ashar Ali v. Mussamat Bibi Aliafat Fattma, 4 B. L. R., P. C., 1, and 13 S. W. R., P. C., 1.

When a decree is assigned to A. for his benefit, in the name of B., the ostensible decree-holder, may take out execution. Purna Chundra Roy v. Abhaya Chundra Roy, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 40.

3.—Statute of Frauds.

A contract of guarantee is a "matter of contract and dealing" within the terms of Section 4 of 21 Geo. III., c. 70, and therefore such a contract made by a Hindu is not affected by Section 4 of the Statute of Frauds. When a defendant raises a claim of set-off on the trial of that issue he must be considered as plaintiff. Srimati Jugandamba Das v. Grob, 5 B. L. R., 639.

When a contract is proved to have been entered into, but no memorandum thereof in writing has been signed by the parties, a Hindu defendant is not entitled to plead the Statute of Frauds. John Borradaile and another v. Chinsook Buxyram, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 70; 1 Hyde's Rep., 51.

The 4th Section of the Statute of Frauds applies to cases in the mosfussil in which the defendant alone is a British-born subject. Matya Pillai v. Western, 1 Mad. Rep., 27.

The 4th Section of the Statute of Frauds does not apply to suits in which the defendant is a Hindu. Nekram Jemadar v. Iswarprasad Pachuri, 5 B. L. R., 643; 14 S. W. R., 305.

4.—Champery.

Where the Court finds any person, though not a party to the suit, guilty of champery or maintenance, and setting in motion the process of the Court for improper purposes, such person will be made to pay the costs of such proceeding. Jaggeress Cooor v. Prossono Coomar Ghoose, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 282.

A contract, the effect of which is to assist another in carrying on the litigation against a third party, made with the express declaration that it was out of spite and ill-feeling against such third party, is a contract against public policy, and a suit cannot lie upon it. Baman Dosse Banerjee v. Huro Lall Shaw, 10 W. R., 140.

The Courts will not interfere when a transfer is completed at once, e.g., when a party buys a certain share of a litigant's risk, and stands or falls by his purchase, having only the right to recover his share from the party suing if the latter wins his case, and having no claim at all if the Courts decide against him.

Quere.—Whether in the present state of the law in India (1864), champerty can be pleaded at all.

Quere.—Whether champerty or maintenance, according to English law, is forbidden by the law of India.

Where A. sues in respect of his own interest for the violation of a contract made for him by B. as agent only, the assignment of B.'s interest on the ground of maintenance and champerty does not apply to natives of India. In dealing with objections to their constitution and champerty, the Court must look to the general principles regarding public policy and the administration of justice upon which that law at present rests.

To constitute "maintenance," improper litigation must have been stirred up with a bad motive for purposes contrary to public policy and justice. "Champerty" is a species of "maintenance" and of the same character, but with the additional feature of a condition or bargain providing for a participation in the subject-matter of the litigation.

Specific performance decreed of a lease, though the lease formed part of an arrangement whereby, as a consideration for the lease, the plaintiff was to lend the defendant money to enable him (inter alia) to commence proceedings against the then tenant of the subject-matter of the intended lease. Pitchabatti Chetti v. Kamala Nayakkan, 1 Mad. Rep., 133.

R. enters into an agreement with G. that if a suit, which was then about to be brought by G., for the recovery of certain lands should be decided in favour of G., R. was to pay G. Rs. 85, and G. was to make over to R. half the land recovered. R. was to pay Rs. 50 in certain proportions, which R. was to lose if the suit was not decided in favour of G. G. recovered the land, and R. then sued him upon the above agreement.

No issue was taken in the Court of first instance on the question whether the agreement was void for champerty.

An issue was raised on this question by the Appellate Court, and (no evidence being taken) was decided in favour of the defendant.

Held in special appeal that, as it was not manifestly apparent in the face of the proceedings that the agreement was against morality or public policy, the Appellate Court ought not to have held it void.

Semble, That the above agreement was not void on the ground of champerty: at any rate, that it was capable of explanation by a consideration of the surrounding circumstances, which the plaintiff should have had an opportunity of giving in evidence. Ramrat Khunderav v. Govind Pandhesh et al., 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 63.

In a suit by a Mahometan mookhteer for specific performance of an agreement under which he advanced money to carry on a suit by members of a Hindu family to set aside alienations made by their father, on the understanding that he was to be entitled to a share of the estate recovered from the purchasers in the event of success,—

Held that the agreement savoured of champerty, and that a suit involving such interference in the affairs of a Hindu family could not be countenanced. Sheikh Abed Hossein v. Lalla Ram Sarun, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 426.

A Hindu widow, as the heiress of her husband, sued his four surviving brothers, who retained the enjoyment of the whole joint estate, for the recovery of her share. While the suit was pending, on the 24th April, 1859, she entered into an agreement with the defendant by which, after reciting the nature of her claim, and stating that she was too poor to prosecute it, she assigned to him all she might be entitled to receive from the joint estate in right of her deceased husband, together with all interest and accumulations thereon, and all advantage to be derived from the suit about to be instituted by the defendant; and she appointed him her attorney to institute and carry on any suit in her name for recovering her right and share in the property; it being agreed that he should retain one moiety of what might be recovered absolutely for his own benefit as remuneration, and out of the other moiety should repay himself such sums as he might from time to time have advanced or paid for her maintenance, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, and also all such sums and costs as he might from time to time have advanced or been put to in carrying on the suit, with 12 per cent. per annum, and should pay over the residue to the widow herself. Subsequently the suit was withdrawn.

In May, 1859, the widow, by G., filed a fresh bill against her husband's surviving brothers, for recovery of her husband's share in the estate, together with accumulations, and in August, 1861, obtained a decree for a large sum of money out of the joint estate, "the whole to be enjoyed by her as a Hindu widow in the manner prescribed by Hindu law." By a deed dated November 14th, 1860, G. assigned his interest under the assignment of April, 1859, to H. S., the defendant.

In a suit brought on the 22nd February, 1866, by the reversionary heirs of the husband in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Hoogly, against the widow, G., and H. S., the last one of whom alone resided in Calcutta, which suit was, on the 23rd of April, 1866, removed into the High Court, on the application of G. and H. S., it was proved that the agreement of April, 1859, and all sub-assignments that might have been made be set aside as void, and that the money should be paid into Court and kept there during the life of the widow defendant, for the benefit of the reversionary heirs, and in order to prevent waste.

Held, by Phear, J., the suit being one to prevent contemplated waste, was not barred by lapse of time. The suit must be treated as if the plaint had been originally filed in this Court, the proceedings in the Hoogly Court being without jurisdiction, and the cause of action having arisen wholly within the jurisdiction of the High Court.
The agreement of 4th April, 1859, was void as being without definite consideration, and being in the nature of a gambling transaction not valid against heirs under Hindu law; and it was also void being of a champertous nature, and contrary to public policy. The law which forbids and avoids all acts contrary to public policy, and subversive of the general interests of society, is in force in this country. Independent of the Charter, there is a power inherent in any Court of Justice which re-cieves its authority from the State to make the interests of private persons subordinate to those of the public, and to take care that where they are in conflict that the latter should prevail.

Semele, there is nothing in equity which prevents a suit pending a suit, or any other legal proceedings, from assigning the whole or any part of the subject of litigation.

Held, on appeal, by Peacock, C. J., and Macpherson, J., that the suit could be maintained for the relief sought, and for the protection of the property.

That the defendant H. S., by joining in the application to have the suit removed to the High Court, admitted the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit in the exercise of its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, and could not afterwards dispute the jurisdiction. The law therefore to be administered by the High Court must be the same as that of equity which ought to have been applied if the suit had been tried in the Court at Hoogly.
The deed of the 4th April, 1859, so far as it related to the moiety of the property assigned to the defendant G. absolutely, was not binding on the plaintiffs or on the persons who upon the death of the widow may succeed to the property of her deceased husband. Though not void on the ground of champerty it was an unconscionable bargain, and a speculative if not a gambling contract, and there was no necessity for such an alienation by the widow. But so far as regards the assignment of the moiety as security for the advances and expenses which G. or his assigns might reasonably and properly incur for the maintenance of the widow for carrying on the necessary proceedings to enforce her rights, with twelve per cent. interest on such advances, it is not void, but created a charge upon that moiety which was binding upon the reversionary heirs of the husband to the extent of such advances and expenses. There was legal necessity for such charge, and it affected the moiety both of principal and accumulations. Held, by Macpherson, J.—That accumulations are not the same as income, and cannot be dealt with by a Hindu widow as such; they should be treated in the same way as the corners.
The agreement of April, 1859, was void by English law as being a mere gambling transaction, and contrary to public policy and illegal.
The law which would have been applicable to the case, if it had been tried at Hoogly, is practically the same as the English law, whatever may be the nationality of the parties. Grose v. Amirtamayo Dassee, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 1; 12 W. R., O. C. 13.

5.—INJUNCTION.

Injunction granted to restrain a partner from excluding his co-partner from the partnership business and from doing any act to prevent its being carried on according to the articles. Vardallcha Nattan v. Ramaswami Nayakaer and others, 1

In an application for an injunction to restrain the use of a trade mark, it is not a sufficient defence to say there was no fraudulent intention, and that there is no reason for not granting the application.
Grahm and others v. Ker, Dods, and others, 3 B. L.

In a suit for an injunction to compel defendant to reduce to its original dimensions an embankment which he had recently raised from a certain height to a greater height, on the ground that the effect of defendant's act had been, and would be, to injure plaintiff's land by preventing the passage of water which used to overflow that land,— Held that plaintiff was bound to establish not merely an injury, actual or prospective, caused by the act complained of, but an injury caused by infraction of some right which plaintiff possessed, or by the omission of something which defendant was legally bound to do. Pran Kiso Roy v. Huro Chunder Roy and another, 10 W. R., 435.

The Court, in granting an ad interim injunction, will first see that there is a bond fide contention between the parties, and then on which side, in the event of obtaining a successful result to the suit, will be the balance of inconvenience if the injunction do not issue, bearing in mind the principle of retaining immovable property in stato quo.

On those principles an injunction was granted to restrain the defendants from " selling, alienating, or otherwise disposing" of certain houses, the subject of a suit, in which the plaintiff, claiming under the will of his father, sought to set aside procedings in execution taken by an executor (under whom the defendants claimed) after the death, but before the grant of probate of the will of the deceased, and by which proceedings the executor had seized the houses in satisfaction of his own debt. Gomes v. Carter and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 411.

Proof of actual damage is not necessary in order to sustain an action for an injunction to restrain the defendant from collecting, without any title, from the ryots of the plaintiff's estate, two annas rent over and above the full sixteen annas in the rupee. Nadiriumma Chowdhry v. Ram Chunder
Sarma, W. R., 1864, 362.

Injunction granted to restrain a bazar-dealer from using trade marks similar to those of a Glasgow firm trading in India. Ewing v. Chooene Lall Mullick, Cor. Rep., 150.

Injunction granted by the Court to restrain proceedings in the mofussil against the Court Receiver. Beer Chund Gossai v. Hogg, Cor. Rep., 56.

Section 92, Act VIII of 1859, applies to a case where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendant in possession is likely to endanger or make away with any property in dispute in the suit, and empowers the Court in such a case to issue an injunction to the defendant to refrain from the particular act complained of, and, in case of necessity, to appoint a receiver or manager of so much of the property only as is in dispute. Joyanarain Geere v. Shipsherd Geere, 6 W. R., 281.

Where A. seizes property in attachment of a decree which had been obtained by his own judgment-debtor, and there is nothing to show that that decree was sold to B., and A. is not proved to have acted maliciously or without probable cause, A. is not liable to B. in a suit for damages. The seizure, moreover, having been made under the order of the Court, the defendant was not liable for what was done under the Court's order.

In attaching a decree under Act VIII of 1859, the Civil Court should not proceed under both Section 92 and Section 236 of that Act, but under Section 92 alone, and the Collector has no power to attach so much of the property as is in dispute. Joykhale Dasse v. The Representative of Chandmalla, 9 W. R., 133.

The Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Thana being closed during vacation, a plaint which, under Section 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, ought to have been instituted in that Court was, by the order of the District Judge, referred for trial to the Assistant Judge, entered in the register of suits in the Judge's Court, and tried by the Assistant Judge.

Held, reversing the decree of the District Court in appeal, that it was not lawful for the Judge to refer the suit, without its having first been instituted in the Principal Sudder Ameen's Court; and that the District Judge ought to have considered the objection, as involving a question of jurisdiction, though raised before him for the first time during the hearing, and not taken in the memorandum of appeal against the decree of the Assistant Judge. Mottil Ramdas v. Jawnadas Janardas, 2 Bom. Rep., 42.

Where a Court has no jurisdiction to make an order it can have no jurisdiction to modify such order. It is not lawful for a District Court, under Section 92 of Act VIII of 1859, to issue an injunction to prevent waste, &c., or to appoint a receiver or manager, in respect of property in dispute, in a suit pending in a Subordinate Court. The District Judge may withdraw the suit from the Subordinate Court to the District Court under Section 6 of the Code, and then make orders in accordance with the terms of Section 92.

Held that Section 96 of the Code of Criminal Procedure allows, by implication, the power of bringing a suit for damages, leaving that remedy to those who do not wish to take advantage of the remedy given them by the Act.

Where special damage is the gist of a plaintiff's case, and he fails to prove such damage, he is precluded from recovering ordinary damages. Edward Wilson v. Kanjoya Sahoo, 11 W. R., 143.

The plaintiffs, who were in possession of certain premises, brought a suit to restrain the defendant from selling a share in them which he had attached in execution of a decree upon a mortgage to him of that share, and to set aside the deed of mortgage. According to the plaintiffs' case they (the plaintiffs) were in possession under a decree of Court obtained upon a mortgage executed to them by the executor of the will of the last proprietor under a power contained in the will, and the mortgagees to the defendant, who were the brother and the son of the testator, had no interest in the property at the time of their mortgage to the defendant. The plaintiffs applied for an ad interim injunction, and the Court granted the application. Kuplat Khotry v. Mahima Chandra Roy, 5 B. L. R., 254.

The power of a Court to attach property, and to appoint a receiver extends only to the better management or custody of any property which is in dispute, and ceases when the suit comes to an end. An injunction in respect of property cannot be discharged after a claim is dismissed, or pending an appeal. Shaikh Moheoodeen v. Shaik Ahmed Hossein, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 384.

In a suit to have the portion of a bund cut by the plaintiff closed up, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from so cutting the bund in future as to injure the plaintiff,—Held that it was material to try the question whether the plaintiff had a cause of action, and also the question as to the property in the bund, because if the bund belonged exclusively to the plaintiff the defendant, unless he could prove a right of user, was a trespasser, and on the other hand, if it belonged exclusively to the defendant it would be necessary to enquire whether the defendant had so used his own property as to injure the property of his neighbour. Nund Kishore Singh v. Hakim Ram Kishore Singh Deb, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 359.

An injunction cannot be issued under Section 92, Code of Civil Procedure, on a mere allegation that the defendant wishes to realize debts by bringing actions in Court, without proof of an intention of waste, damage, or alienation. Prosseno Moyee Dasse v. Wooma Moyee Dasse, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 409.

A. having brought a suit against B., obtained and issued, on the 24th July, 1868, an injunction against him under Section 92, Act VIII of 1859. The suit was on the 18th of August, 1868, dismissed; but no compensation was awarded to B., under Section 96 of Act VIII of 1859, in respect of the injunction which had been issued against him. A. and B. both appealed, the former against the decision dismissing his suit, the latter for compensation. Both appeals were dismissed on the 23rd November, 1869, B.'s because it was engrossed on a stamped paper of the value of eight annas only.

B., on the 16th December, 1869, then instituted a suit against A. in the Small Cause Court, for damages in consequence of the injunction which A. had caused to issue against him in his suit. For the latter part of the year 1869, B. was not debarred, by Section 96 of Act VIII of 1859, from instituting a suit against A. for damages, there not having been an award of compensation under that section. The cause of action accrued from the time at which the plaintiff was first damaged by the wrongful injunction, continued as long as the injunction remained in force, and limitation began to run as soon as the injunction was at an end. Nanda Kumar Shaha v. Gaur Sankur, 5 B. L. R., Ap., 4; 13 S. W. R., C. R., 305.

A. obtained a decree against B. and others (Hindus), on a title of purchase from them, for possession of an undivided moiety of a dwelling-house, to the remaining moiety of which C. (a Hindu) alleged he was jointly entitled, and that he and his family were in possession. On A.'s proceeding to obtain execution of his decree C. brought a suit, alleging that A. had obtained no title under his purchase, and praying for partition of the property. On application for an interim injunction to restrain A. from executing his decree pending the particular suit, the Court granted the application. Anantnath Dey v. Mackintosh, 6 B. L. R., 571.

An agreement in the nature of a deed of compromise was executed in the English form between a husband and wife (Armenian Christians) relative to the wife's separate property. The present suit was brought by the official assignee (appointed under the Insolvent Act) of the husband, not for the specific enforcement of an agreement, but to secure the devolution of the trustfund which had been improperly withheld.

Held that the fraudulent exclusion out of the settlement of a house alleged to have been purchased by the husband with the wife's money, which was the foundation of the defence, had not been established against the husband; that even if it had been it could not have been used as a defence in this suit; that if the house was bound by a trust for the children, it could not be subject to a right of execution for the wife's private debts; and that her proper course would not have been to treat the agreement as a nullity, but to act upon it and enforce it by a bill to compel a settlement of the property which had been improperly withheld. Catharine Arrathoon v. John Cochran, 4 W. R., P. C., 66.

If a trustee has power to make valid grants, the grantees have a perfectly good title, if they take for valuable consideration without notice of the trust. Lutefun v. Bego Jan; Syud Cherag Ali v. Bego Jan, 5 W. R., 120.

S. being entitled to personal estate by a settlement executed upon her marriage with R., vested it in trustees on terms which conferred upon her an estate for her separate use for life, with remainder, in case she should die in the lifetime of her husband, to her children, share and share alike. The settlement did not contain a power to invest in the purchase of real estate.

R. died in the lifetime of S., and a portion of the trust fund was invested by the trustees in the purchase from S. of real estate vested in her as representative of R. S. afterwards married P.; and during her second coverture a further portion of the trust fund was with the consent of S. invested in the purchase of real estate. S. survived P. and died intestate, leaving a son and daughter and the children of another daughter her next of kin.

Held, 1st, that the events contemplated by the settlement not having arisen, the trust fund became the absolute property of S.; and 2nd, that the devolution of the trust fund was to be governed by the state of its investment at the time of her death, and that therefore, so much of it as was invested as above must descend as real estate.

Also, the parties being neither Mahometans nor Hindus, and though, not strictly speaking, all of them European British subjects, yet having all of them adopted the law which affects European British subjects in India, the real estate, whether situated within or without the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, will descend to the heir-at-law. Rigordy v. Smith and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 290.

Unles unless a plaintiff who alleges that he gave the property sued for to the defendant in trust makes out at least a prima-facie case of trust, he is not entitled to call upon the defendants for their defence, nor to get a decree, merely because the defendants fail in proving the case set up by them. Koodejamira Beebee v. Assur Hossein, 2 W. R., 58.

In a suit by the mutawallees of a large Mahometan establishment, acting on behalf of the Mahometans of the neighbourhood, to secure the performance of trusts of a deed of appropriation by a Mahometan, the plaintiff was held, with reference to the words of Sections 14 and 15, Act XX of 1863, to be a person interested in the preservation of the trust, and a proper person to bring the suit. He was not required under those sections to have any interest in the trust, direct or immediate, or any share in the management of the property. Doyal Chund Mullick v. Keramat Ali, 12 W. R., 382.

Held that where a trust has been once perfectly created, although there may have been no transmutation of possession, it cannot be defeated by any subsequent act of the settler, and apparent dispositions of portions of the property afterwards made by him to particular members of a family, the individuals constituting which have, as a class, a beneficial interest in the whole, must be regarded not as gifts to them or creations of new trusts in their favour which he had no power to make, but as the acts of a trustee, and available only to the extent of the shares to which such persons may be entitled.
RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS.

But this applies only to dispositions out of the principal of the fund, and not to payments made out of its income to particular members of the family for their maintenance, or other expenses, as there may be circumstances which would render it inequitable to take an account of the latter, so as to charge such persons with what they may have received beyond their respective shares. Sir Jamsetji Fizbihia v. Sonabdi and others, 2 Bom. Rep., 139.

Where immoveable property was given into the possession of the defendant, under an order of a revenue officer, which directed the defendant to sell the crops and, after payment of Government dues, to account for the profits to the plaintiff on his claiming it, it was held that the defendant was not a depository, but a trustee of the property. Vital Viskvanath Pralxin v. Ram Chundra Sadasiv Kurkire, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 149.

Suit brought to recover possession of a talook upon the alleged ground that the moneys with which the purchase was made were not the moneys of the person in whose name the property was bought, but of a lady with whom he was living as husband and wife, and that there was a resulting trust in her favour. The Privy Council considered that the very principle of a resulting trust was that the property had been purchased with money belonging to another, with an implied trust that it should belong to that other person to whom the money also belonged; but that if it was the intention of the person to whom the money belonged that there should be no such trust, no such implied trust could arise by implication, and the presumption would then be met by the facts. Considering, also, that the suit was brought to set aside a purchase which had been made eleven years before and had remained unimpeached from the time it was first made until the institution of this suit, and that the suit was brought after the death of all the parties who knew the transaction and could have explained it, their lordships were of opinion that every Court would be bound to look with very great jealousy at the evidence which was brought forward to support the case. Mudsumul Ameeoonissa Khanum v. Massamut Askrifoonissa, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 259.

A former abuse of trust in another instance (their lordships observed) could not be pleaded against a trustee who sought to prevent a repetition of abuse, even if he were formally implicated in the same indefeasible courses against which he was seeking to protect the property, though it would be a reason for excluding him from the administration of the property as sebait. Paggumohini Dassee v. Sukhemon Dassee, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 41.

7.—RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS—(See HINDU LAW, MAHOMEDAN LAW).

(a) Miscellaneous.

A person temporarily officiating as priest has no right or title to the property of the church in which he officiates. The permanent incumbent, and that portion of the community which remains attached to his ministrations, might perhaps claim the restoration of a portion of the property shared by trustees. Fernandez v. Fernandez, 2 Ind. Jur., O. S., 12.

One test of an endowment as to whether it is bonâ fide or nominal is to see how the founder himself treated the property, and how the descendants have since treated it. Ganga Narain Sirca v. Brindabun Chunder Kur Chowdhry, 3 W. R., 142.

The high priest of a religious endowment in Assam, who was only a nominee of the grantees, was held to have no right to grant leases in his own name and of his own authority. Ram Doss and others v. Mohesher Deb Misree, 7 W. R., 446.

Documentary proof is not absolutely necessary to prove an endowment. Muddun Lal v. Sreemutty Komul Bibeef and others, 8 W. R., 42.

If mutwallees fail to act up to the directions of an endowment, the grant does not necessarily revert to the heirs of the grantee. Reasut Ali v. J. C. Abbott and others, 12 W. R., 132.

In this case the Court refused to enforce against the manager of certain endowed property a contract for specific performance (the contract being for the grant of a putnee lease of a portion of the said property), on the ground of its being doubtful whether it is competent to the manager of endowed property to grant a putnee thereof. Motee Doss v. Modhoo Soodun Chowdhry, 1 W. R., 4.

An ascetic, a mere-life tenant, cannot alter the succession to an endowment belonging to ascetics by an act of his own in connection with the status under which he originally acquired the trust. Mowunt Rumun Doss v. Mohunt Ashbul Dass, 1 W. R., 160.

Unless endowed property descends to the heirs of a deceased kadhim, they can have no right to manage or interfere with the property. If a kadhim has only a life-interest, any lease given by him will continue without the consent of the succeeding kadhim, or perhaps of the mutwalle, if he has any special right to confirm leases. Sujaurt Ali v. Bhasrooddoo Doss, 10 W. R., 458.

Where the plaintiff sued to recover certain property not wuqf, on the ground that the mutwalle and his ancestor (a former mutwalle) had misconducted themselves by selling to some of the defendants the property which was the subject of the endowment,—held that as plaintiff had shown no title either as heir or otherwise to partake of the benefit of the endowment he had no right to recover possession, and that the utmost he could ask for was to have the mutwalle who had misconducted himself removed, and a new mutwalle appointed, provided he showed circumstances which according to law would justify the Court in selecting a mutwalle. Bhurruck Chundra Sahoo and others v. Golam Shurru, 10 W. R., 313.

Grants to an individual in his own right and for the purpose of furnishing him the means of subsistence, do not constitute a work for endowment. Bibee Kunneez Fatima v. Bibee Saheba Jan and others, 8 W. R., 313.

It having been decided in a former suit, wherein the present plaintiff and appellant was defendant and the present defendant was plaintiff, that the latter could not claim from the former a share of certain property set apart for the maintenance of a
A property wholly dedicated to religious purposes profits is charged for such purposes the property burdened. Basoo Dhul v. Kissen Chunder Geer the property cannot be sold; but where a portion only of its must revert to the heir of the person who endowed it may be sold, subject to the charge with which it is burdened. Gossain, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 200.

An account decreed against the Administrator-General, who had been appointed the executor of the last surviving trustee under the will of the founder of a religious institution. Querri—Whether the Advocate-General must not be made a party in all such cases. Notice of the decree directed to be given to the Advocate-General, in case he should think fit, on behalf of the Crown, to propose a scheme for the management of the charity. Powers of the Advocate-General. Thakoor Doss Sett v. C. S. Hogge, Cor. Rep., 68.

A mutwalli in possession is entitled to make arrangements for endowed lands, and to obtain kubulets from the ryots. Obhoy Churn Paul v. Sadut Ali, 2 W. R., Act X R., 70.

Where the mutwalli of an endowment dies without nominating a successor the management must revert to the heirs of the person who endowed the property. Peet Koonwar v. Chutter Dharee Singh, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 396.

A property wholly dedicated to religious purposes cannot be sold; but where a portion only of its profits is charged for such purposes the property may be sold, subject to the charge with which it is burdened. Basoo Dhul v. Kissen Chunder Geer Singen, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 200.

A suit to recover on a bond given by the de facto manager of a muth as a charge on the muth having been decreed by the Subordinate Judge.—Held that as the obligor had turned the previous manager out of possession, and as his own right to possession was contested at the time he executed the bond, he was in no better position than a trespasser and wrong-doer. Ramchurn Poojee v. Nunhoo Mundle, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 147.

Where property is endowed (made waqf) by the proprietor, and as such devolves to his widow as trustee (mutwalli), it cannot be sold in satisfaction of a claim against him. Fegredo, J. v. Mahomed Mudessur, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 75.

Section 3 of Act XX of 1863, by the constitution appointed under that Act, the High Court of the Civil Judge dissolved a suit brought by the plaintiffs, who had been pointed out by the committee as superintending the authority of the Court for the diction, are solely suits charging trustees, managers, or committees with misfeasance, malvers. the temple property, or neglect of duty. There is nothing in the Act to oust the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts over suits to establish a share in the management. Agri Sarma Edri v. Vistnu Embrandri, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 338.

In the case of a public endowment to trustees, managers, or superintendents of endowed lands under Act XX of 1863, any person interested (and the interest need not be pecuniary one) in the religious establishment, its worship or service, or in its trusts, has of suit, after leave obtained from a Civil Court against such trustees, &c., for misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty. Bibeo Fatima v. Bibeo Shobra Jan and others, 313.

Where a Civil Judge, upon a petition, instituted a suit, made an order disposing at the matter in dispute, and his successor, on the former order, decided by an order under Section 3 of Act XX of 1863, by the constitution as superintending the authority of the Court for the diction in the matter. Kaviraja Sundara Pillai v. Nallo Naika Pillai, 3 Mad. Rep., 93.

Since the passing of Act XX of 1863, any person, or manager of a Mahomedan endowment, cannot be considered to hold the position of a trustee, having been made of the property to charitable or other uses, and transferred to others by deed of gift. Lall Mahomed v. Lalla Brij Kishore, 17 S. C. R., 430.

An appropriator, who sues on the ground the trust created, so far as it relates to pointment of mutwallies, had never been appointed, and that the original rights of the appropriator remain, is at liberty to bring suit without leave of the Court, under Section 18 of Act XX of 1863.

According to Shea law, a man who devotes property to charitable or other uses, and transfers proprietary right therein to a beneficiary, cannot take it back from the beneficiary when it is in the possession of the beneficiary. Syed Afsul Hossein, 2 N. W. R., 344.

A committee, appointed under Act XX of 1863, has power to dismiss the trustees or superintendents of temples described in Section 3 of the Act, without having recourse to a civil suit; but such power can only be exercised on good and sufficient grounds. Chinna Rangaiyangar v. Subraya Mudiali, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 334.

Where there were not good and sufficient grounds for the removal from office of the defendants, superintendents of a pagoda, within pagoda to recover a certain sum of money for which he had not accounted. The defendant was dismissed by three members of the district committee, which consisted of six members, the other three members refusing to sign the order of dismissal. The plaintiffs were appointed trustees in place of the defendant by the members who dismissed the defendant.

_Held_ that the appointment of the plaintiffs was invalid, and that they were not entitled to sue the defendant. Bandurungy Annuchurryy v. Vtathory Matari, 4 Mad. Rep., 455.

The plaintiffs describing themselves as the agent, and gomastha of the hereditary durmakurtah of the Trivellore Pagoda, brought a suit for damages against the defendant the committee of the district, appointed by virtue of Act XX of 1863, and their servants, for a trespass by the defendants in forcibly dispossessing them of the pagoda and the property therein, and for the wrongful removal and retention of the property. The plaint stated that the defendants were punished criminally for the trespass by the Magistrate who, after enquiry under Sections 318 and 319 of the Criminal Code, restored the possession of the pagoda to the plaintiffs. The damages claimed were the value of jewels, cash, records, and accounts not restored; the expense incurred by the defendant by the members who dismissed the defendant, and that he had not accounted. The defendant was dismissed by six members, the other three members refusing to sign the order of dismissal.

_Held_ that the plaint was brought by the plaintiff personally, and not on behalf of the plaintiffs, by the durmakurtah through his recognized agents; that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a moderate amount of damages for the wrong done to them in ejecting them from the pagoda; that the expenses incurred in the criminal proceedings instituted by the plaintiffs were not recoverable as damages, such damages not being directly traceable to the wrong and its natural and necessary consequence; that the amount of income received by the defendants during their possession during a festival held at the pagoda.

_Held_ that the plaint was brought by the plaintiff personally, and not on behalf of the plaintiffs, by the durmakurtah through his recognized agents; that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a moderate amount of damages for the wrong done to them in ejecting them from the pagoda; that the expenses incurred in the criminal proceedings instituted by the plaintiffs were not recoverable as damages, such damages not being directly traceable to the wrong and its natural and necessary consequence; that the amount of income received by the defendants during their possession during a festival held at the pagoda was a loss sustained by the durmakurtah and not by the plaintiff personally, and that the plaintiff had failed to make out the loss of property alleged.

_Semple._—That an order of the Civil Court, under Section 18 of Act XX of 1863, refusing leave to institute a suit, and deciding that the temple was governed by a hereditary durmakurtah, and therefore within Section 3 of the Act, was not conclusive upon the question of title between the parties. T. Srinivasa Chaitiyar v. Venkutasa Naikur, 4 Mad. Rep., 410.

By an agreement entered into between the predececssors of the plaintiff, durmakurtahs of a temple, and the defendants, it was provided that there should have a permanent right of cultivating certain lands belonging to the temple upon payment of the circurirva and a swambogam mentioned in the agreement. Subsequently to the agreement the Government notified that the melvanam payable to the Government would be henceforth permanent and not according to the nerick ascertained by reference to the market prices in certain towns, and the Government stated that any advantage arising from the change of system should go to the ryots themselves. The plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover the balance of the market value of the produce of the land cultivated by the defendants after deducting the amount of circuri kist paid by them.

_Held_ (reversing the decree of the lower Court) that the defendants were only liable to pay the amount of swambogam mentioned in the agreement, and that no right was acquired by the plaintiffs by virtue of the subsequent arrangement made by the Government. Theshikam Fyengar v. Ganapathy Fyer, 4 Mad. Rep., 320.

The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of a mutt and certain lands attached to it under a grant from the Rajah of Tanjore, from the possession of which he had been ejected by the Collector of Tanjore in 1856 on charges of breach of trust and other misconduct, sued to recover the possession of the lands and mesne profits. The Civil Judge found that the grant was for the performance of religious ceremonies and pious observances only, and that the plaintiff had led a vicious life and been guilty of malversation in his office, and, being of opinion that the plaintiff had been properly deprived of the lands belonging to the mutt under Regulation VII of 1817, dismissed the suit. _Held_ that under Section 4 of Act XX of 1863 the plaintiff became entitled on the passing of the Act to the restoration of the endowment. Jusagheri Gosamier v. The Collector of Tanjore, 5 Mad. Rep., 334.

The Committee of a District duly appointed under Act XX of 1863 are entitled to maintain a suit in a Civil Court without having obtained the leave of the Court to bring the suit, as well when the object of the suit is to establish their right of control under Section 3 of the Act, as when it is sought to enforce such control against the officers of the temple subordinate to them. Venkatasa Naida v. Sudagopasama Fydr, 4 Mad. Rep., 404.

Act XX of 1863 does not apply to a suit brought by the dhurmakarta of a temple and one of its worshippers to compel the defendant, as heir of the late manager, to make good, out of the property inherited by him, the deficiency in the devasthanum funds caused by breach of trust and misappropriation by the late manager. The leave of the Civil Court for the institution of such a suit is not necessary, and the suit is maintainable. The right of instituting such suits is not a privilege accorded by Act XX of 1863, but a pre-existing right. Jeyangurulavaru v. Durma Dosseer, 4 Mad. Rep., 2.

A suit by an officer of a mosque, temple, or religious establishment, for dismissal from his office is not a suit for misfeasance within the meaning of Section 14, Act XX of 1863. Syed Amin Sahib v. Ibrahim Sahib, 4 Mad. Rep., 72.

In bringing a suit under Act XX of 1863 it is not necessary to show that the temple was one which was formerly under control of the Board of Revenue. The Act applies to property in Calcutta. Gaves Sing v. Rungopal Sing, 5 B. L. R., Ap., 55.
Remarks on the doctrine of equity as to the applicability of the defence of purchase for valuable consideration with notice.

A defendant is not precluded from availing himself of any equity which might arise out of the facts proved at the trial, merely because he has not raised that equity on the face of his written statement. Gour Chundra Biswas v. Greesh Chunder Biswas and others, 7 W. R., 120.

A zemindar bequeathed the whole of his zemindary to his eldest son, leaving certain fixed stipends to his other children. In consequence of subsequent events the Court considered these stipends ought to be reduced. It was alleged that the value of the zemindary had been reduced by a sale of a part of it; but as it was nowhere alleged that the sale had been occasioned by bad season, or acts of God, and not by the neglect of the person through whom the appellant claims, the question of natural equity was held not to have arisen. Maharajah Grees Chunder Roy v. Sumbhoo Chunder Roy, 5 W. R., P. C., 98.

When a man builds a house on lands supposing it to be his own, or believing that he has a good title, and the real owner, perceiving his mistake, refrains from setting him right, and leaves him to persevere in his error, a Court of Equity will not allow the real owner to assert his legal right against the other without at least making him full compensation. Mussammat Rani Rama v. Sheikh Jan Mahomed, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 18; 11 W. R., 574.

An usufructuary mortgage of lands was executed in 1846, but the mortgagee did not enter into possession. In 1852 his representative, the plaintiff, commenced a suit to obtain possession, but allowed it to drop. In 1854 he commenced the present suit for the same object. Held that laches could not be imputed to the plaintiff from the date of presenting the plaint in 1852, and that the produce from that date should be accordingly awarded him. Lakshmi Narayana v. Ramappa Chakkrira, 1 Mad. Rep., 70.

Although the English law is not obligatory upon the Courts in the mofussil, they ought, in proceeding according to justice, equity, and good conscience (Regulation IV of 1827, Section 26), to be governed by the principles of English law applicable to a similar state of circumstances. Dada Hanaji Baboojir Jogeshet, 2 Bom. Rep., 38.

In deciding a case in the absence of specific law and usage, according to justice, equity, and good conscience (Regulation IV of 1827, Section 26), the Court should be guided by the principles of English law applicable to a similar state of circumstances.

The parties having acted under a misapprehension of the law, leave was given to bring a new suit within three years. Gooroo Swamy Perria Woodia Taver v. Rany Anka Mootoo Natchair, 6 W. R., P. C., 50.

The English doctrine of advancement is applicable in India as between a father and daughter, both of English extraction and living under English law. The status of the daughter, under an alleged bond-fide purchase must be considered. The nature of the purchase must be positive proof that of her name as he was not the buyer and was retained the property for himself. M. S. Stevenson, 2 W. R.

No man, acting with good faith, and believing that he has a ground for doing so, should be held liable, because, upon his application, a Magistrate makes an order which, it afterwards turns out, ought not to have been made. Pureg Singh and others v. Jogessur Suhaye, 8 W. R., 111.

A suit, the sole object of which was to have a trust fund paid into Court, was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had no actual title to any part of the fund. When the plaintiff in a suit, seeking solely the payment into Court of a fund for the relief of poor Armenian orphans, had no interest, except as a member of the Armenian community, the Municipal Court to have only a life-interest in the property ought to be so tied up as to prevent defendant from wasting it, it was held (following a decision of the Privy Council) that it was not proved. AMussamut Budun v. Fuloor Ruhman, 9 W. R., 1804, 275.

Where moneys deposited in Court had been drawn out by a party on the admission of the opposite party, and the latter sued on the allegation that, as the former had been declared by a decree of Court to have only a life-interest in the property in dispute, the money which represented that property ought to be so tied up as to prevent defendant from wasting it, it was held (following a decision of the Privy Council) that it was not sufficient to allege that defendant was committing waste: the suit would not lie, unless some act of waste threatening the corpus of the property were proved. Mussumut Budun v. Fuloor Ruhman, 9 W. R., 362.

In a suit against a widow individually, and not in her representative capacity, to recover plaintiff's share of property alleged to have been in her possession, the suit being one wherein defendant was charged with devastation in respect of such property only, - Held that defendant was not liable in that suit to be made answerable out of her husband's assets for any devastation in which he may have committed. E. Staves v. Eulalia Dias, 15 W. R., 444.

Where the Chief of an Independent State, exercising the sovereign power of that state within its territories, confiscates property within those territories, the confiscation must be respected by English Courts of Justice. The fact of such confiscation, if disputed, must be ascertained by the Court in the same manner as are all other facts which are in issue between the parties. Shoyay Ali v. Shoyay Doang, 14 S. W. A Court of Equity will not interfere where a tenant-in-common acts reasonably for the purpose of enjoying the property, held in common, in any way in which an owner can enjoy such property without injury to his co-purchaser, but the case is different where there has been a direct infringement of a clear and distinct right. The lex loci contractus determines the capacity of a person to contract, and reference ought not to be made to the law of his domicile of origin.

The privileges and disabilities of minority, so far as they are not removed by express enactment, attach to European British subjects in this country until they have attained the age of 21 years.

The same rule ought, on principles of justice, equity, and good conscience, to be observed in the Non-Regulation as in the Regulation Provinces. Hogaray v. Girdhara Lal, 3 N. W. R., 338.

Held that, the evidence showing that certain acts of trespass by one of the defendants were for the benefit and on behalf of the members of the committee, and were afterwards adopted and taken advantage of by them when they had acquired a full knowledge of those acts, the defendants for whose benefit the acts were done were liable for the trespasses. Venkatasa Naik v. S. Srinivas Charyar, 4 Mad. Rep., 410.

Whether a person, if his domicile of origin was Scotch, does not lose that domicile and acquire an Indian domicile by settling as an indigo planter in India and there dying; also whether a son of a Scotchman retaining his domicile, though resident in India, can, if born out of wedlock, become legitimate per subsequens matrimonium. An unappropriated payment is to be applied to the earliest debt, although the debt is barred by the Act of Limitation, where the facts do not raise any question which might affect such priority. Moonebappah S. v. Veucatarayadoo, 6 Mad. Rep., 32.

Payments unapplied by either the debtor or the creditor should be appropriated to the earlier items making up the debt due. This rule is not impaired by the decisions in the cases of Mills v. Fowkes (5 Bing. N. C., 455) and Nash v. Hodgson (6 Deg. M. and G., 474). Hirada Karibsappah v. Gudit Muddappa, 6 Mad. Rep., 197.

An independent sovereign prince is privileged from suit in the Courts of British India.

The Thákur of Palitána is an independent sovereign prince.

A suit was brought against the Thákur of Palitána (his title being omitted from the plaint), and an ex-parte decree was obtained against him. An application on the part of the Thákur to have the decree set aside was dismissed, and the plaintiff then sued out an attachment, but, failing to execute it within a year, was compelled to apply to the Court, under Section 216 of the Code, for leave to execute it. The defendant at the same time applied to have the attachment and all proceedings under it declared null and set aside.

The Court (without expressing an opinion as to whether the order dismissing the application to have the decree set aside would have prevented it from declaring the decree void ab initio.—Held that as the decree was made erroneously and without jurisdiction it would not, when apprised of the error, assist the plaintiff in carrying it into execution in a case in which lapse of time made it incumbent on the plaintiff specially to invoke the aid of the Court for that purpose. Ladvuwarbai v. Ghooi Shrisarsangi Portatabanjy, 7 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 150.

Where H., knowing that B. claimed certain land as his own, nevertheless purchased the land from a third person and erected a bungalow upon it, which B. did not interfere to prevent,—It was held that the English rule of equity, which under such circumstances would allow B. to recover the land with the bungalow upon it, ought not to be applied in India, but that H. should be allowed to remove the bungalow he had erected. Naridyabin Raghaji v. Bholagir Gara Mangir, 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 80.

A judgment debt due to the Crown in Bombay entitled to the same precedence in execution as a like judgment debt in England, if there be no special legislative provision affecting that right in the particular case. Where portion of the mortgaged premises was accidentally burned, and portion of them fell down, and the mortgagee rebuilt them, it was held that the mortgagee was not entitled to payment upon payment of the sum so expended by the mortgagee, though such sum amounted to more than double the price for which the premises had been conditionally sold to the mortgagee. Manchrurah Ashandelarij v. Kamrussina Begum, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 109.

A decree for the removal of a building upon his land may be given to the owner, even though he has stood by and allowed the defendant to construct it, provided the building is not substantial and has not cost much and the materials may be removed without difficulty. Sufdur Ali Khan v. Jeo Naran Singh, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 161.

The question as to the validity of the marriage of Native Christian converts does not depend on the presence or otherwise of an ordained minister of religion. Kristo Mohun Christian v. Anunda, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 249.

Conditions in village administration-papers purporting to interfere with or alter the ordinary rules of descent, will not be enforced. The law of inheritance, whether Hindu or Mahometan, is a part of the law of this country, and as such overrides the provisions of a document which was not designed to record more than the rights of the village community. Small sections of society cannot be allowed to make special laws of descent for themselves. Musumut Sarupi v. Mukh Ram, 2 N. W. R., 227.

9.—LIS PENDENS.

The doctrine of lis pendens is not applicable to the case of a purchaser at a sale in execution. Nufur Mordha v. Ram Lal Adhyac, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 308.

By the rule of lis pendens, a decree pending a suit is not to be got rid of by a sale by one of the parties while the suit is pending. Fuisseum Bibee v. Omdah Bibee and Shakti Jonaio Aly, 10 W. R., 469.

changers pendente lite with notice. The doctrine of lis pendens has a wider operation than here in England; is applicable to natives of this country. Distinction between equitable and pendente lite and an absolute sale. Kassim Shaw v. Unodispersad Chatterjee, 1 Hyde's Rep., 160.

In a suit brought in a Small Cause Court to recover balance of rent due, the defendant pleaded the pendency of a suit brought by him in the District Moonsiff's Court against the plaintiff for damages for illegal dispossession, and that he had given credit against the amount of damages for the balance of rent due. Held that the pendency of the suit in the District Moonsiff's Court was not a bar to the present suit, but that it was open to the Court, in its discretion, to postpone the hearing of the present suit until the District Moonsiff had given his decision. Mattakarippa Kaundan v. Rama Pillai, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 158.

Suit to recover possession of a Mutah from which plaintiff had been ejected by an order of Court, passed in execution of the decree in a suit to which he was no party. Plaintiff claimed under a deed of sale from A. (a purchaser from C. and D) dated 11th November, 1860, and alleged that he purchased for valuable consideration and without notice of any other claim. Defendant asserted that plaintiff purchased fraudulently with notice of his late husband's right of purchase. It appeared that defendant's husband had sued C. and D. and others to enforce a lien upon the Mutah, and obtained a judgment of the Privy Council upholding his lien and declaring its priority over the purchase of C. and D.

This suit was pending before the Privy Council at date of plaintiff's purchase. In 1862 defendant's husband sued C. and D. for specific performance of an alleged agreement for sale, dated October, 1851, without adding any evidence as to the existence of the agreement, and got a decree in his favour because the 'Principal Sadr Amin had said in the original case that C. and D. had agreed to sell the Mutah. The present plaintiff was turned out of possession under this decree, to the proceedings in which he had in vain sought to get made a party, on the ground that he was affected by notice of the former proceedings. He sought relief under Section 230, Act VIII of 1859, but his application was dismissed, and he then commenced this suit. The Civil Judge decided in favour of plaintiff.—Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that this was a case of a vendee of property, perhaps subject to a lien, turned out upon a decree against other people declaring the holder of the lien the owner of the property, and that the ejectment was wrongful and procured by a gross misuse of the Court's process.

Three brothers, M. L. B., P. K. B., and G. D. B., being jointly entitled in equal shares to an undivided one-third share in certain property, mortgaged their shares by three deeds bearing different dates to one R. N. Between the dates of the two last mortgages the brothers instituted a suit for partition of the property and for certain other objects; and on the 2nd February, 1864, a decree was made in the suit, declaring the brothers entitled to a one-third share of the property, and ordering a partition and the taking of accounts, and reserving the question of costs. R. N. was not made a party to this suit. On 6th September, 1864, the brothers consented to mortgage certain property to the plaintiff, including that previously mortgaged to R. N.; on 8th and 9th December the agreement was performed by conveyances in which R. N. joined, and which recited that he had been paid off; and on 28th November, 1865, and 27th March, 1867, the three brothers conveyed their equities of redemption to the plaintiff. On 15th June, 1868, an order was made in the partition suit for the sale of a sufficient portion of the property to pay the costs of the parties to the suit, and under this order the property which the plaintiff sought to recover in the present suit was sold on 1st May, 1869, and purchased by the defendant, who at the time had full notice of the plaintiff's claim. Held, the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession. Kailas Chundra Ghose v. Fulchand Jaburri, 8 B. L. R., 474.

Proof of mercantile usage needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity, or the notoriety of custom upon which, in respect of all these, becomes a local law. The usage may be still in course of growth; it may require evidence for its support in each case; but in the result it is enough if it appear to be so well known and acquiesced in that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient tacitly imported by the parties into their contract. Yuggomohan Ghose v. Manick Chun, 1 W. R., F. C., 8.

A custom that some only of the mirasidars of a village should bind the co-owners of the village lands is valid. Anandayyan v. Deverajyan, 2 Mad. Rep., 17.

A custom which has never been judicially recognized cannot prevail against distinct authority. Narasmal v. Balarama Carlu, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 420.

The custom of the Reddi caste, according to which a father-in-law may disinherit his heir in favour of a son-in-law, is bad. Zaimana Reddi v. Mahalinga Chetti and others, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 51.

A question of custom is a question of fact on which the lower Court alone can pass a decision, and on which the High Court cannot interfere. Hurreshur Mookeree v. Jadunath Ghose, 10 W. R., 153.

A custom to adopt names in trade must be proved strictly. Missreelon v. Ramnarain, Cor. Rep., 63.

If it is contended that the succession to property is regulated by any special family custom, that custom ought to be alleged and proved with distinctness and certainty. Serumah Umah v. Patathun Vitil Marya Cootty Umah, 15 S. W. R., P. C., 47.

A finding upon a question of custom after going into evidence is a finding on a question of fact,
II.—JOINT LIABILITY AND CONTRIBUTION.

The plaintiff purchased a house with land attached, and sub-let the property to his vendor, one of the defendants. The defendants having in collusion prevented its enjoying rent, he sued for rent, but on their intervention the suit was dismissed. He then brought a regular suit, and obtained a decree from the Civil Court for khas possession. His present suit is to recover wasilat. Shamasunker Choudhry v. Sreenauth Banerjee, 12 W. R., 354.

In a suit to recover the value of the produce of land from defendants, who had agreed to cultivate it, but had failed to do so, it was held that, as defendants were jointly liable, a specification of liability was not required. Munraj Muthon v. E. Hudson, 12 W. R., 309.

When a lease is granted jointly to two tenants both are jointly liable for the rent due under the lease, and one of them cannot divide this joint liability. Jogendra Deb Roy Kut v. Kishen Bundhoo Roy and others, 7 W. R., 272.

Where a judgment was passed against several defendants, jointly and severally, and some of them paid the whole of the judgment debt,—Held that they might sue the others for contribution.

Where two parties are jointly and severally liable under the terms of a bond, the principal may be sued for the amount due with interest, notwithstanding that a decree has been obtained for the same sum against the other party. Mahomed Rohenoodeen v. Indoor Chunder Joshowrree, 12 W. R., 159.

One of the nine judgment-debtors paid the whole of the debt, and then applied to execute the decree against one of the others. Held that he was entitled to receive only one-ninth of the debt from him. Musamut Kishen Kaminee Choudrain v. Mohima Chunder Roy, Marsh, 339.

A suit for contribution will not lie in the Small Cause Court in the absence of an implied joint contract for contribution. Sreeputty Roy v. Loharam Roy and others, 7 W. R., 384.

If a man request another to pay money for him there is an implied contract to repay the amount, for which an action will lie in the Small Cause Court, if it does not exceed Rs. 500. A suit for contribution not founded on any contract is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. Noorai Mollah and wife of Eyennooddeen Migie, deceased, v. Sheikh Nubbo and others, 7 W. R., 386.

In a suit for contribution, where a joint decree cannot be passed, the specific liability of each co-sharer must be not only alleged but clearly established. Pitambur Chuckerbutty v. Bhyrubhath Puilet, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 52.

In a suit for contribution it must be distinctly proved that both parties enjoyed the benefit of the object to the gaining of which they executed a bond jointly. Kashee Dass Sundyal v. Gobind Nath Lahory, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 530.

The defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiff in writing, by which, in consideration of the trouble taken and large sums of money advanced by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendants, the defendants promised that they would from generation to generation pay to the plaintiff Rs. 100 per annum out of a specified fund. The plaintiff brought a suit to recover a sum within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court under the written contract. Held that the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that the undertaking of the plaintiff to forbear from enforcing the debt due to him prior to the contract was a sufficient new consideration to support the contract.

Held also that on the death of one of the co-contractors the whole liability to the plaintiff attached to the surviving co-contractors. Chir Narayana Pillay v. Ayamernul Ambalom, 4 Mad. Rep., 447.

Plaintiff, defendant, and another party had jointly and separately contracted with Government to do certain work, depositing security and stipulating that a percentage upon the work done should be retained in the hands of Government to meet the contingency of the Government incurring expense in case of failure on the part of the contractors. The contract was completed by one of the contractors, who received the amount which had been deducted as above, and gave a joint receipt for the same.

Held that there was nothing in law to prevent plaintiff from recovering as from defendant his share of the said amount. Such a suit was not one for money due on a contract and was not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. Coomar Narain Dass v. Ram Coomer Mya, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 513.

A. and B. jointly executed a bond in favour of C. When the bond fell due A. alone executed a second bond for a larger amount in favour of C., covering the amount of the debt under the former bond together with a further advance to him (A.). At the same time C. cancelled the former bond,—Held that thereupon A. could maintain his suit against B. for contribution. Trailabhanath Roy v. Kashinath Roy, 6 B. L. R., 633; and 14 S. W. R., C. R., 438.

A claim for contribution should distinctly set forth the amounts due by each party sued, failing which the plaint should be rejected. Bholanath Chatterjee v. Indurchund Dougur, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 373.

A decree having been executed for the full amount due against a joint-debtor, the latter sued his co-debtors for contribution, who pleaded that at the time of payment the decree had been barred in consequence of a certain proceeding in the execution case not having been bond side,—Held that the question raised by the defendants was necessarily considered in the execution case, that the Court must be assumed to have acted rightly in granting execution, and that the plaintiff having been compelled to pay the joint-debt was entitled to re-

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Immoveable property situate in the island of Bombay was conveyed in 1859 to N. and his wife (Parsees), their heirs, executors, administrators, and assignees, and was subsequently mortgaged by N. and his wife, but the mortgagee did not enter into possession. In 1861 N. alone entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to give them a lease of that property for five years, the plaintiffs being willing to accept that lease with such title as N. could confer. Held that, notwithstanding the non-concurrence of the mortgagee and of N.'s wife, N. must specifically perform his contract. The non-concurrence of the mortgagee could not prevent the right of the plaintiff to specific performance by N. of the agreement, because N. should either himself redeem the mortgage or permit the plaintiff to do so. Naoroji Beramji v. Rogers, 4 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 1.

The result of a long-pending litigation was that the defendants were directed to pay wasilat for certain lands which they had possessed under an invalid lakheraj claim. They subsequently entered into a compromise with the plaintiff, and agreed that if they defaulted in rent, or if the lands became khas of the zemindar, or were by any means to be alienated, the defendants would point out the lands, or, on failure to do this, would pay damages for the loss of the same. Held that lapse of time and surrender of the lands were no impediment to the Court granting relief to the plaintiff in the shape of a decree for specific performance. Rajah Protap Chunder Singh v. Gooroo Dass Roy; Rajah Pertap Chunder Singh v. Chunder Koomar Roy, W. R., 1864, 76.

There are only two classes of cases in which specific performance of an agreement to enter into a partnership has been decreed: first, where the parties have agreed to execute some formal instrument which would confer rights that would not exist unless it was executed; secondly, where there has been an agreement which has come to an end to carry on a joint adventure, and the decree that the agreement is valid, prefaced by the declaration that the contract ought to be specifically performed, is made merely as the foundation of a decree for an account. Verdachalahattam v. Ramasarum Nayoka and others, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 341.

The ascertainment of the amount of damages is a necessary preliminary to a decree under Act VII of 1859, Section 192, for specific performance of a contract and payment of damages as an alternative in case of non-performance.

The application of the doctrine of specific performance to partnerships is governed by the same rules as those which govern it in other cases. Specific performance decreed of a lease, though the lease formed part of an arrangement whereby, as a consideration for the lease, the plaintiff was to lend the defendant money to enable him (inter alia) to commence legal proceedings against the then tenant of the subject-matter of the intended lease. Pitckabutti Chetti v. Kamalla Nayaka, 1 Mad. Rep., 153.

A Court of Equity will not decree specific execution of an agreement in favour of a party who

Specific Performance.

In a suit for possession an intervenor claimed the lands in dispute upon a title distinct from that of the plaintiff; whereupon the intervenor was made a defendant, and a decree was ultimately passed in plaintiff's favour, with costs payable jointly and severally by all the defendants. The original defendants having been obliged to pay the whole amount of these costs in execution, they brought a suit for contribution. Kristo Chunder Chatterjee v. Wehd, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 70.

Notwithstanding an order of the Privy Council that a certain sum should be paid to a judgment-debtor out of money deposited by the judgment-debtor in their treasury, the former took out execution against the property of the latter, who having died in the meantime was represented by plaintiffs and defendants. Certain property belonging to the deceased having been attached and advertised for sale, plaintiffs paid the costs due under the Privy Council decree, and then sued for contribution.—Held that defendants were liable for the sum paid in excess of plaintiff's share. Shaikh Ahmadoollah v. Maah Khan, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 115.

Where plaintiff had contracted with defendant to purchase from him a share of certain landed estates, excluding from the contract certain land in those estates situated within a defined boundary, defendant binding himself to make over to plaintiff other lands in exchange,—Held that if defendant failed to make over the lands last mentioned, plaintiff might sue him for specific performance or for damages, but could not, under the contract, sue to recover lands which he did not buy. Kishoree Debia and others v. Jugernauth Acharjee, 9 W. R., 269.

When there is an agreement to sell, and a part of the consideration-money has been received, the stipulating purchaser is entitled to specific performance on paying down the rest of the said money. A deed of agreement to sell at some future period may be registered under Act XIX of 1843. Shibkishen Doss v. Sheikh Abdool Soban Chowdhray, 3 W. R., 103.

Where a partition deed has been made and partly acted upon, and nothing is asserted against it in the way of undue influence,—Held that the proper course for the plaintiff was to sue to enforce performance, and not for her rights as they may have existed previously. Mussamut Bhowanee Koonwer v. Thakoor Doss, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 277.

Held, under the circumstances of the case, that there was not such a contract on consideration received as to make this a case where a suit for specific performance rather than a suit for damages should be, both to the right of action, Bal Gebind Mahtoo v. Meer Lutfiullah Hossain and others, 7 W. R., 142.

An agreement to remain for ever in a particular community cannot be enforced by a suit in Court. Nitye Shaha and others v. Soobul Shaha and others, 10 W. R., 349.

Immoveable property situate in the island of is not competent to perform his part of the agreement. To entitle a party to specific performance he must show that there has been no default on his part, and that he has taken all proper steps towards performance on his own part.

The Court refused to enforce specific performance of a contract to grant a putnee lease of certain endowed property on the ground that it was doubtful whether it was competent to the manager of endowed property to make such a contract.

Motee Doss v. Medhoosoodun Chowdhry, 1 W. R., 4. A suit to obtain specific performance of the conditions of a lease, and not to cancel the lease or eject the tenant from his holding, is cognizable by a Civil Court, and not by the Revenue Court.

Certain putneedars applied for a butwarra under the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814. At the time of the butwarra it was stipulated between the putneedars of a 6-annas and a 7-annas share that in the event of a particular village falling by division wholly to either of them they would reunite and hold the 13-annas share joint as before. One party having resiled from this agreement, it was held that the other party was entitled to sue for specific performance, and such a suit would lie in the Civil Court. Nuckhand Singh and others v. Hunooman Dutt Singh and others, 10 W. R., 69.

A suit lies for specific performance of a contract in respect of an adjustment subsequent to, and for property beyond, the decree, notwithstanding Section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, which applies only to subject-matters relating to the decree. Ram Lockun Bulra v. Madhup Chunder Bulra, 3 W. R., 118.

A suit for specific performance of a contract to sell land will not lie if the plaintiff neglects to enforce his rights for a long time (in this case three years) after his rights under the contract for sale accrued, and if he does not act up to a condition precedent to the sale to him. If he has any claim at all it would be for damages against the person breaking the contract for loss sustained by the non-fulfilment of the same: Purseeg Singh v. Khur Singh and others, 8 W. R., 280.

In a suit to enforce delivery of a kobala where plaintiff was found not to have acted up to the original terms of the contract, inasmuch as he failed to pay a part of the consideration-money as agreed upon, and did not offer to pay up the remainder until the suit was brought,—heled that defendant was no longer bound to deliver over or ratify the document which it was intended should be executed between them. Ram Junno Koonoo v. Mullicka Dassee, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 338.

When an agreement provides that an act is to be done by one of the parties within a limited time, and the party fails to perform the act within such time, if the other party elects notwithstanding to take the benefit of the contract the latter must perform his part of it; and though exact and literal performance of the original stipulation has become impossible, the terms of the contract must be carried out as nearly as possible. Makharrance Brojo Sonduree Debia v. Collins, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 359.

The High Court can, under the Charter and Act VIII of 1859, grant specific performance of part of a contract and give damages for the breach of the remainder. In a suit for specific performance of a contract the cause of action is sufficiently shown by a statement of the terms of the contract, followed by the averment of the refusal of the defendant to perform it, with a readiness and willingness of the plaintiff to do his part in it. Ununtram Dass v. Ramlochon Aick, 14 S. W. R., O. C., 15.

The plaintiff contracted with the defendant for the purchase of a piece of land, and paid him part of the purchase-money, it being agreed that the balance should be paid after registration of the bill of sale. The defendant kept the document with him, but failed to get it registered. In a suit by the plaintiff to enforce specific performance, held, the suit would lie. Tripura Sundari v. Rasisik Chanda Kumungzi, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 134; and 15 S. W. R., C. R., 189.

Plaintiff had entered into a contract with one of the defendants for the purchase of certain immovable property, and after he made a small advance the contract was written out and registered. The purchaser refusing to pay up the purchase-money unless the vendor paid the costs, or half the costs, of registration, the latter re-sold the property to a third person. The present suit was to compel the completion of the contract and delivery of the property. Held that in bringing such a suit, the plaintiff was bound, if he had not previously tendered the money to the defendant, to pay it into Court. Mahadoo Begum v. Syud Habubul Hossein, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 44.

13. PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Where a Mahometan lady of position residing within the town in which a Court held its sitting was willing to admit the Court to an interview at her own residence, the Judge was held to have done wrong in insisting upon her personal appearance in Court. Tohurutoollah Chowdroy v. Asalooden Chowdroy, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 129.

The Privy Council dissented from the conclusion came to by the High Court, that any primâ facie case had been made out by the plaintiff (respondent) and considered that the suit, being one brought against purdah women upon a deed alleged to have been executed by them, wholly failed, insomuch as there was no proof that the women had signed the deed, or that it had been ever signed by them, and that their lordsships, if they affirmed the judgment of the High Court, would be going against the whole course of cases that have been decided in India and by the Privy Council in respect of transactions to which purdah women are parties. Mussamut Aseoseonissa and Eshan Bebee v. Bagur Khan, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 393.

Where the conveyance by a purdah woman is impeached, there ought to be clear evidence, not of the mere signature by the party, but that the sealed woman had the means of knowing what she was about. Syud Fazul Hossein v. Aymjud Ali Khan, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 523.

In cases of transactions by purdah women mere registration does go far to corroborate the proof of their validity, unless a mutation of names takes place, which, if done under a mooktearnamah, has not the same effect as against a purdah woman as

A litigant is bound to disclose all his titles at once. He cannot be allowed to keep back one, and then, years after, to bring a fresh suit on the ground that he had still a right in reserve. Brojo Lal Roy v. Khetter Nath Mitser, 12 W. R., 55.

In a dispute about julkurs between the proprietors of a neighbouring estate, where the title-deeds of the two parties do not specially mention the particular pieces of land or water in contest, the title of the parties must depend on the fact as to which of them has been in possession. Shama Soonder Debia v. The Collector of Malda and others, 12 W. R., 164.

Section 24, Act X of 1859, does not apply to cases in which pure questions of title are involved. Jameer Mundul Gomashta v. Mohima Chunder Ghose, 5 W. R., Act X R., 15.

Held that, as a general principle of law, the fact of obtaining possession affects the title, and has in all systems of law, European and Oriental, been always treated as a most important element in the acquisition of title. Salim Sheikh v. Boidonath Guttuck, 12 W. R., 217.

It is not competent to the Government to deny the title of a tenure which it has, by selling, once guaranteed to the purchaser. Jeebon Singh Burman v. The Collector of Buckergunge, 2 W. R., 77; and Goluch Chunder Sen v. The Collector of Buckergunge, 2 W. R., 139.

The title to large properties may be incidentally adjudicated upon in suits for small amounts. Omrao Singh v. Khuruk Singh, 2 W. R., 218.

In a suit to recover immovable property in the possession of the defendant, a plaintiff cannot ordi narily succeed merely by showing that the title has accrued to him. Joykishen Mookerjee v. Raj Kishen Mookerjee, 12 W. R., 315.

When a suit is brought for confirmation of possession upon a certain title the plaintiff is bound by the title which he sets up in his plaint, except when he sues to recover immovable property from which he has been ousted. Umbica Churn Banerjee v. Digamburee Dahee, 12 W. R., 429.

A title once declared valid cannot afterwards be attached on grounds which were available and dismissed for want of proof of title, except when he sues to recover immovable property from which he has been ousted. Umbica Churn Banerjee v. Digamburee Dahee, 12 W. R., 429.

A title once declared valid cannot afterwards be attached on grounds which were available and dismissed for want of proof of title. Sunooburnissa Khanum v. Meher Chund,W. R., 1864, 313.

Where a Hindu widow claimed property on the ground that it had been held as banneree for her husband, and also that a hibbanamah had been executed in her favour in order to remove certain difficulties, it was held that the titles were inconsistent, there was nothing to prevent her succeeding on the strength of the hibbanamah. The mere fact of registration in a Collector’s books is no evidence of title. _Ameroonissa Bibe v. Wooma roododeen Mahomed Chowdry_, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 49.

Where a sale of landed property which has been executed by the Government was made by Government without any restriction being attached to the original notice of sale, which stated that the highest bidder was to be the purchaser,—it was held that the Government could not, subsequent to the bid and the deposit of the earnest-money, impose any condition, but was bound to make over possession irrespective of the character of the highest bidder. In selling the property of rebels which it had confiscated the Government does not perform an act of State, but stands in the situation of an individual selling his property by auction, and a suit may therefore be properly brought against the Government by the purchaser, if the Government refuses to give up possession or transfer the possession to another. _Shoo Lal Bohree v. Sheikh Mahomed_, 13 S. W. R., F. C., 4.

15.—Prescription.

Oral evidence, if credible, is legally sufficient to prove a prescriptive title. _Meekraban Khan v. Mahboob Khan and others_, 7 W. R., 462.

In a suit for the removal of a wall on which plaintiff had been allowed by defendants for a number of years to rest the thatch of a hut, and which wall and thatch, after having been blown down by a cyclone, had been rebuilt by plaintiff, though the thatched roof had been again blown down, and no thatch at the time of the suit,—it was held that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff could not have acquired a prescriptive right that the water from the thatch should pass over defendant’s lands, and was not entitled to restrain him building up the wall. _Lal Monee Dossee v. Joynarain Shakah_, 11 W. R., 508.

A title by prescription cannot be created by length of user short of twelve years, the ordinary period prescribed by the Statute of Limitation. _Doorga Churn Paul v. Pearee Mohun and others_, 9 W. R., 283.

No fixed period has been laid down within which a right by prescription may be gained in this country. The evidence must be such as to justify the Court in inferring the existence of a valid ancient right, having regard to the nature of that right and the circumstances under which it has been exercised. _Kristo Mohun Mookerjee and others v. Jagannath Roy Jyogi and others_, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 323; 11 W. R., 236.

The lower Appellate Court having found that on the purchase of the defendant’s lease the land came into the immediate possession of the zemindar who let it to the plaintiff, the plea raised by the defendant, that he has a prescriptive right of occupancy, will not avail him, unless he can get over the fact found by the lower Appellate Court, or can show that the zemindar had illegal possession of the land. _Doorga Churn Paul v. Fajar Ram Kurmokar v. Jameer Farmanick_, 1 W. R., 167.

A plaintiff may have a prescriptive right to pass and re-pass in boats during the rainy season over certain lands belonging to the defendant, notwithstanding that the general public have no such right of passage, and that the channel does not lead to the plaintiff’s house, and is injurious to a bank belonging to the defendant. _Ramsunder Burral v. Woomakant Chuckerbally_, 1 W. R., 218.

To constitute a right by prescription, the possession must have been as of right. Mere permissive possession cannot be the basis of right of prescription. _Askar v. Ram Manik Roy_, 5 B. L. R., Ap., 12; 13 S. W. R., C. R., 344.

Prescriptive rights are founded on the presumption of a grant from long-continued uninterrupted user and enjoyment as of right. _Chunder Jalek v. Ramchurn Mookerjee_, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 212.

In 1859 A obtained a decree for possession of land against B., but no proceedings in execution were taken, and B. continued in possession. In 1869 C, having purchased the right and interests of A. in the decree, forcibly dispossessed B., who had been twelve years in possession. B. now brought this suit against C. to recover possession. It was held, the execution of the decree of 1859 being barred, and B. having been twelve years in possession, he was entitled to recover. _Amirunissa Begum v. Umad Khan_, 8 B. L. R., 540; 17 S. W. R., C. R., 119.

Where a charitable grant in connection with a temple was proved to have been enjoyed by the incumbent and those under whom he held in regular succession for more than thirty years, it was held that the grantee had acquired a right of property in it under Regulation V of 1827, Section 1. By Warden, J.—Independently of the origin or nature of the grant. _Amirunissa Begum v. Umad Khan_, 8 B. L. R., 540; 17 S. W. R., C. R., 119.

Where a charitable grant in connection with a temple was proved to have been enjoyed by the incumbent and those under whom he held in regular succession for more than thirty years, that, under Regulation V of 1827, Section 1, a statutory and indefensible title to land against B., but no proceedings in execution were taken, and B. continued in possession. In 1869 C, having purchased the right and interests of A. in the decree, forcibly dispossessed B., who had been twelve years in possession. B. now brought this suit against C. to recover possession. It was held, the execution of the decree of 1859 being barred, and B. having been twelve years in possession, he was entitled to recover. _Adverse possession which bars the remedy also transfers the rights_. _Amirunissa Begum v. Where the plaintiff’s ancestors had enjoyed an allowance during four successive generations, for a period extending over more than a century, the legal presumption, in the absence of the original grant, is that such grant was hereditary. The allowance having been continued by the British Government to the plaintiff’s grandfather, for the same reasons for which a village (admitted to be held on hereditary tenure) had been continued, and having been paid to the plaintiff’s grandfather up to his decease, and afterwards as a matter of course, to the plaintiff’s father, it was held that the enjoyment of the plaintiff’s grandfather and father was proprietary enjoyment; and as this enjoyment had continued uninterruptedly for more than thirty years, that, under Regulation V of 1827, Section 1, a statutory and indefensible title to the allowance had been acquired. _Desi Kupfairiya Kukumatriya v. The Government of Bombay_, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 23.

at least twelve years. The “Limitation Act, 1871,” requires peaceable and open enjoyment without interruption for twenty years.

The right asserted in a claim founded on prescription should be strictly and clearly defined, and cannot be based on rights which are inconsistent. When a party is called upon by the Court to elect which branch of a double case he will proceed with, the election must be distinct and clear, and such as will bind him and will show accurately on the face of the record, the claim (if any) which is abandoned.

Adverse possession for more than twelve years is of itself sufficient to create a title. Ramshahaj Singh v. Koldeep Singh, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 80.

—POWERS OF LEGISLATURE.

It is beyond the power of the local Legislative Council to pass an Act in any way affecting the provisions of a Statute of the Imperial Parliament.

Although the old East India Company had power, under the Charters of Charles II., to make laws affecting British-born subjects, yet this power ceased in A. D. 1709, when its Charters were surrendered to Queen Anne. From that date down to the passing of the 3rd and 4th William IV., c. 123 (with the exception of a limited power of legislating as regarded the local limits of the presidency town) no authority expressly granting power to the East India Company or the Indian Government to legislate for British-born subjects can be found.

Semble.—That neither the East India Company nor any Indian Government (with the like exception) possessed such power from the year 1709 till the passing of the 3rd and 4th William IV., c. 123. With the exception of offences made punishable by the 53rd George III., c. 155, Section 105, by Justices of the Peace, the Recorder's Court had, by virtue of the 37th George III., c. 142, exclusive criminal jurisdiction over British-born subjects throughout the Bombay Presidency, and the same exclusive jurisdiction was continued to the late Supreme Court, and is now exercised by the High Court, with the like exception, and some further exceptions introduced by subsequent Acts of the Government of India.

The Bombay District Police Act (No. VII of 1867) passed by the Governor of Bombay in Council for making Laws and Regulations, is ultra vires in so far as it confers criminal jurisdiction upon Magistrates in the Mofussil, being also Justices of the Peace, over British-born subjects, as it thereby affects the Acts of Parliament under which the High Court is constituted, and interferes with the criminal jurisdiction which that Court possesses over British-born subjects in the Mofussil, which jurisdiction is exclusive except in so far as it is limited by Statute 53, George III., c. 155, Section 105, and not by subsequent Acts of the Government of India.

—CONSTRUCTION OF ACTS.

Trees are to be held moveable property for the special purposes of the Registration Act, but they are not ordinarily so regarded in Indian Acts. Chowdhry Roostum Ali v. Dhandoo, 4 Agra Rep., 157.

The meaning of an Act is to be gathered solely by reference to the Act itself. Mudoosoddan Dey v. Ramchurn Mookerjey, 1 Hyde Rep., 100.

A special enactment is not impliedly repealed by a subsequent general enactment, if the two enactments are not so repugnant as to be incapable of standing together. Subapati Mudaleyar v. Narayansum Mudaleayer, 1 Mad. Rep., 115.

If the express words of an Act do not warrant or necessitate a demand of duty or charge, it is not competent to a Court of law to extend such enactment or to give to the words a meaning beyond their strict and literal signification, so as to include any case which may reasonably come within the spirit of the enactment. Port Canning Land Company, Limited, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 208.

It is not for a Civil Court to speculate upon what was in the mind of the Legislature in passing a law, but the Court must be bound by the words of the law judicially construed. Mohesh Chunder Dass v. Madhub Chunder Sirdar, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 85.

18.—MISCELLANEOUS REGULATIONS.

Towjees, meel, melaneer papers, jaidads, and jumna wasil bakesee papers are not per se an account within the meaning of Section 3, Regulation I of 1798. Goluck Chunder Dutte v. Mohun Loll Sookut, 5 W. R., 271.

The rights and interests of a judgment-debtor in a jagheer granted under Section 34, Regulation XII of 1805, cannot be sold in execution of a decree. The Court should sequestrate the property, and make the proceeds available during the life of the debtor for the payment of the money decreed (disentiente, Steer, J.). Shaikh Zameeooldeen Mahomed v. Russik Chund Addy, 1 W. R., F. B., 85.

A 20 years' lease of an estate attached under Regulation I of 1806 is inconsistent with the objects of attachment under that Regulation. Mahararane Inderjeet Kooer v. Musamut Khanum Jhan, 1 W. R., 63.

Regulation XIV of 1812, as well as Act XVI of 1842, by which it is modified, apply to the Ceded and Conquered Provinces only, and not to the District of Tirhoot. Ameer Ayl v. Ameeronissa Begum, 11 W. R., 11.

The owner of the house where an ornament has been found concealed may, under Section 6, Regulation V of 1817, retain possession of it as a "valuable property" under Section 2, if no one else has substantiated any claim thereto. Prem Moye Devah v. Nobin Chunder Chowdhry, 4 W. R., 48.

Regulation XIV of 1827 (Bombay), Section 1, Clause 1, Article 7, and the Religious Law of the Hindus, are not applicable to the case of a party charged with mortgaging his house a second time previously to redeeming the same from a prior mortgagee. Reg. v. Avajee Wullud Gobindram, 1 Bom. Rep., 93.

Where more than one person is convicted under Section 4, Regulation XXI of 1827 (Bombay), of keeping smuggled opium, each of the convicts is liable to the whole penalty therein imposed, viz., the forfeiture of double the value of the opium and double the amount of the duty leviable thereon. Reg. v. Vakutclzand and another, 1 Bom. Rep., 50.

A conviction and sentence by a Full Power Magistrate for breach of the rules for the retail sale of opium under Regulation XXI of 1827 (Bombay), Section 10, annulled for want of jurisdiction, as the Zillah Magistrate alone was empowered to enforce the penalty. Reg. v. Sade Valad Pavodi, 3 Bom. Rep., A. C., 39; Reg. v. Gania Bim Bopu, 3 Bom. Rep., A. C., 50.

By Section 26, Regulation IV of 1827 (Bombay), the usage of the district in which a suit may arise takes precedence over the law of the defendant in the determination of civil suits. Abbas Ali Zenool Aradin v. Golam Mahomed Wullad Baba Mirza, 1 Bom. Rep., 36.

Clause 1, Section 27, Regulation IV of 1827 (Bombay), imposes no obligation on the Courts to ascertain whether there is family rule or usage, where there is no allegation of such fact in the pleadings, or where the parties have waived resort to the course prescribed by the Regulation. Mode Kaikhoosro Hormuzjee v. Coo'z/erbaee, 4 W. R., P. C., 94.

The Executive Government is not empowered to introduce Regulation VIII of 1822 into any other tract of country than that described in Section 2. Rajah Rajkishen Singh Surmone Badadoor v. The Collector of Gowafulahar, 3 W. R., 180.

When a failure to sow indigo according to contract is not shown to be due to accident, it must be presumed to have been fraudulent, and does not in that case fall within Clause 4, Section 5, Regulation VI of 1823, which limits the penalty to three times the sum advanced. Lall Mahomed Bizwas v. Robert Watson and Co., 4 W. R., 62.

Cotton having been sold subject to examination by an inspector, the mere fact of cotton of two different qualities being found in one of the bales is not sufficient to support a charge under Section 1, Clause 1, of Regulation III of 1829 (Bombay). Magistrates are bound to record translations of their findings in criminal cases. Reg. v. Ruttunjee Bhookun, 1 Bom. Rep., 17.

A suit for the emoluments attached to the office of Kurnam in an unsettled district is barred by the operation of Section 3, Regulation VI of 1831 (Madras). Collector of the Krishna District v. Kalavagunta Chinmanras, 5 Mad. Rep., 360.

Regulation IX of 1833 contains no provision making the pendency of proceedings before a juchenay a bar to the Civil Court jurisdiction. Sikundar Ali and others v. Purwurush Ali and others, 3 N. W. R., 132.

(a) Acts of 1840 and 1841.

The suit was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground of the plaintiff's inability to explain how, in execution of an Act IV award for a small portion of the land in dispute, he was ousted from the whole. Held that the Court should have tried the question of the hereditary nature of the tenure pleaded by the defendant, as well as the fact of possession and subsequent dispossession alleged by the plaintiff. Byrubnath Sondiyal v. Hurro Soondery Debha, 1 W. R., 32.

In a suit for confirmation of plaintiff's right to land within a kharjia talook, by the setting aside of an adverse award under Act IV of 1840 (which had been confirmed in appeal), where it was found that after defendant had held the land for a year under the award in question plaintiffs had again entered into possession, it was held that as plaintiffs were in possession, though in contravention of the Magistrate's order, they did not need the Court's intervention to put them in possession, and their omission to sue for possession was no bar to their title being investigated. Skiboo Soondery Debha v. J. Beckwith and others, 9 W. R., 580.

An award under Act IV of 1840 is not sufficient proof of title when the person in whose favour it is given does not maintain his possession under the award before the survey authorities, and allow his adversary to take actual possession. Jooool Kishore Shaka v. Raj Kishen Surmah, 3 W. R., 129.

A surnnud issued to an agent of H. H. Holkar, under Act XV of 1840, and Regulation XIII of 1830, was held not to be invalidated by the omission to enter the agent's name in any list of exempted or empowered persons under Regulations XXIX of 1827 and XIII of 1830.

The omission to secure the agent any specific jurisdiction under Regulation XIII of 1830 was held to disentitle him from exercising any but the most ordinary jurisdiction which could be exercised under that law. Sukaram bin Witollee v. Sudasew bin Sayajee, 1 Bom. Rep., 96.

A suit will not lie for the reversal of a Magistrate's order made under the authority of Act XXI of 1840, nor to recover damages for the doing of the act directed by the order; but the proper remedy of a party aggrieved by the order is to appeal against it under Section 4. Ramkissore Bhuttacharee v. Bissheshwur Bhuttacharee, Marsh., 231.

Section 22, Act XII of 1841, does not apply to a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's title in right of inheritance as against other members of the family. Shaikr Mahomed Wizeys and another v. Musst. Sugareeontiss, 6 W. R., 38.

An order in a summary suit for possession of land under Act XIX of 1841 is no bar to a regular suit to try the question of title (see Section 17), which may be brought any time within twelve years. Lal Narain Singh and Dedputty Singh v. Nanee Narain Koopar and Mussamul Shama Koopar, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 191.

No appeal lies from an order of a Judge proceeding under Act XIX of 1841.

The fact that the Judge may have rejected evidence which ought to have been received and considered does not warrant the High Court in interfering to set aside an order of such Judge. Venkatá Chetta Chetti and others v. Parvatammal, 2 Mad. Rep., 418.

The remedy for a party dissatisfied with an order passed under Act XIX of 1844, making a division of a deceased person's property, is by regular suit, not by appeal. Musasmat Edoo v. Mehdee Khan, W. R., 1864, Mis., 12.

Where a Magistrate acting under Act XXI of 1841, has ordered the removal of an obstruction placed on a road by a person claiming a right to the soil, and a title to place the obstruction, the remedy for such person is by appeal against the order under the 4th Section, and he cannot institute a suit in the Civil Court to have a declaration of his right to close up the way. Prankissen Surma and others v. Ramrooder Surma and others, Marsh., 214.

Trustees were appointed for a Company in 1845, and the partnership was to last twenty years, which expired on December 31st, 1864. The shareholders thereupon appointed S., a new trustee, to sell the business, and he sold it to R. The old trustees had left the country. In an application, with the consent of all parties, under Act XXIV of 1841, that S. might sign the deed of transfer, the Court held that it was necessary to show that the old trustees had no lien on any other property in the concern before the order asked for could be made. In the matter of Fort Gloucester Mills Company, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 260.

(b) Acts of 1843 and 1844.

Plaintiff being entitled by an arrangement between the members of a family of patilis, of whom he was one, to a third of the emoluments of the office of managing revenue and police patil, sued the defendant in possession to recover a third of a deceased persons property, is by regular suit, considered does not warrant the High Court in interfering to set aside an order of such Judge. Venkatá Chetta Chetti and others v. Parvatammal, 2 Mad. Rep., 418.

An agreement between two members of a patil family that they are to officiate in turns is not illegal as being opposed to public policy. The Court will not, however, compel the actual patil to vacate office under such an agreement as long as his appointment under Act XI of 1843 is unrevoked. Vaku Valad Ram Pátíl v. Pánd Valad Máji Pátíl et al., 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 243.

A transaction is not necessarily a lottery within Act V of 1844, simply because a matter of whatever kind is agreed to be decided by lot.

Where twenty persons agreed that each should subscribe Rs. 200 by monthly instalments of Rs. 10, and that each in his turn as determined by lot should take the whole of the subscriptions for one month,—Held that the agreement was not illegal, and that a suit might be brought on a bond given by one of the subscribers who had received one month's subscriptions, to secure the payment of his subsequent monthly instalments. Kamakahi Achaki v. Appateer Pillai, 1 Mad. Rep., 448.

Held (Tucker, J., dissentient) that all town duties, taxes, and cesses of every kind on trades or professions (and not merely such of them as were then levied by Government) were abolished by Act XIX of 1844, and that a privilege enjoyed by a private person to levy certain fees on articles imported and exported through three of the city gates of Surat, and originating in an alienation by a former sovereign of a portion of the royal revenues derivable from that source, ceased from the date when the said Act came into operation; and consequently that the Court was not precluded from so deciding, because the provisions of Act XX of 1839 (empowering the Governor in Council of Bombay to prohibit the levy of haks and fees) had not been complied with in forbidding the levy of the fees in question.

Per Couch, J.—The intention of the Legislature in 1844 appears, from the language used by it in Act XIX, and from the recital in Act XVI of that year, to have been the import on salt being about to be increased, that, instead of leaving haks such as this to be abolished at different times under the Act of 1839, they were then to be entirely abolished. Nasaorvanji Pestanji v. The Deputy Commissioner of Customs, &c., 2 Bom. Rep., A. J., 75.

(c) Acts of 1847 and 1849.

When the Collector of Ghazeepore, under Act I of 1847, the operation of which is confined to the territories subject to the North-Western Provinces, tried a dispute as to the boundaries of two zillahs, one within and the other without the North-Western Provinces, he was held to have acted without jurisdiction, and therefore not to be a competent authority within the meaning of Section 14, Act VIII of 1839. Puhlwan Singh v. Maharajah Moheshur Buksh Singh, W. R., 1864, 191.

Where a tindal of a small vessel had been convicted of criminal breach of trust which appeared to have been committed in the Portuguese possession of Goa, but no order was recorded by the Sessions Judge of Mangalore who tried the case under Section 9 of Act 1 of 1849.—Held that there ought to be a new trial. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XIII.

A pension having been granted by Government to B. P. in lieu of a saranjam held by his grandfather, a claim to share the same by M. P. and his brothers was compromised by B. P. agreeing to pay them a certain proportion thereof yearly. The Agent for Sardars, affirming the decree of the Assistant Agent, found the agreement to be null. and void as an assignment of a future interest in a pension.

Held, that, as the pension was not granted "in consideration of past services and present infirmities or old age," the case did not come within the terms of Act VI of 1849, and that the agreement was a valid one. Panse v. Panse, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 62.

On a petition praying that an attachment placed on a pension, of which petitioner was the recipient, might be removed under Act VI of 1849, the High Court declined to interfere, as it had not been shown that the pension was one enjoyed in consideration of past services and present infirmities or old age. Vithalrav Eshvanrav ex parte, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 65.

Arrears or pension due to the deceased at the time of her death form part of her estate, and the person who is legal heir to the deceased is entitled to recover them. The grantee of the pension formerly enjoyed by the deceased has no right to such arrears which formed part of the deceased's estate. Musasmat Nouriah Soallan Begum v. Musasmat Nukhrub Soallan Begum, 4 Agra Rep., A. C., 44.

An order made by a District Judge, rejecting an application to attach a pension, on the ground that being a political pension it could not be attached under Act VI of 1849, was reversed, on petition, by the High Court, which directed the pension to be attached. Harbhat bin Ram Chandrabhat, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 67.

Clause 1, Section 1, Act VI of 1855, shows that the Statute was designed for the benefit of creditors, and that it authorizes sale of both the legal and equitable rights of judgment-creditors. Under this clause, therefore, an equity of redemption is a kind of property that may be seized and sold. A, a mortgagee who takes from B. as security an existing mortgage from C. to B., stands in the same position towards A as B. is subject to the same equities in respect of, the mortgagor B., who has assigned that mortgage to him by way of sub-mortgage, as B., himself a mortgagee, does to the original mortgagor C. A mortgagee, at a Sheriff's sale held under a writ of fi. fa. sued out by him upon his mortgagee's bond and warrant to confess the mortgage debt, purchased his mortgagee's equity of redemption, and obtained a conveyance thereof from the Sheriff under Clause 3, Section 1, Act VI of 1855. Held in a suit by the mortgagee against the mortgagee for redemption of the mortgage, that the latter was entitled under that Act to hold the mortgaged estate against the mortgagee freed from the equities existing in him previous to sale, and conveyance of his rights and interests under the mortgage. Toyluckomohon Tagore v. Gobind Chunder Sen, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 187; 1 Hyde's Rep., 289.

In the case of a conviction by a Subordinate Magistrate, under Section 18 of Act III of 1857, of a person who through neglect permitted a public road to be damaged, by allowing his pigs to trespass thereon,—Held, on a reference to the District Magistrate, that the conviction was not illegal, because the land damaged was a public road, as the right to use a public road is limited to the purposes for which the road is dedicated. Reg. v. Lingana bin Gimbara et al., 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 14.

Where land forfeited to Government by a conviction of the owner of an offence within Act XXV of 1857 is subject to rent, the person entitled to the rent is not entitled to recover arrears due at the time of the forfeiture, either from the heirs of the owner or from the Government; but the Government is liable for the rent which may subsequently accrue. Neelmoney Singh Doe v. The Government; Neelmoney Singh Doe v. Chutterdhun Singh, 308.

The procedure in regard to the seizure and attachment of property under Act XXV of 1857, and the adjudication of claims to such property under Act IX of 1859, pointed out. Held that it is not incumbent on a party aggrieved by acts done under these laws to bring a suit at all; but if he brings a suit, it must be brought within a year of the attachment or seizure complained of. Byjauth Singh v. Solano, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 114.

The European British subject, not belonging to or connected with the Army, who resides within a cantonment, is amenable to the jurisdiction of a Cantonment Joint Magistrate under Section 1 of Act III of 1859.

Where a pleader resides within the limits of a cantonment, and practises as a pleader within the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court, both the Cantonment Magistrate and the Small Cause Court Judge have concurrent jurisdiction over him to the amounts respectively cognizable by them. Jehangir v. Richard Morgan, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 187.

The High Court can set aside an order of the Judge made under the Act without evidence being taken, without remanding the case to the Judge, there being no analogy in this respect between an ordinary civil suit and proceedings under this Act. Sheik Busza and another v. The Collector of Tipperah, 8 W. R., 375.

Nothing in Section 20 of the Act allows a concurrent period of 12 years to sue in the ordinary Civil Courts for confirmation of civil rights. Gobind Pandey v. Heemut Bahadoor and others, 6 W. R., 42.

According to Section 20, a suit for possession of confiscated property under title must be brought within one year of attachment or seizure. Proceedings to foreclose are not the suit contemplated by

The property in suit was attached by the Magistrate in 1858, and seized in 1862, without adjudication of forfeiture, as provided by Act XXV of 1857, and the owner did not surrender himself to undergo trial, and did not establish his innocence, or prove that he did not escape or evade justice within one year from the date of seizure, as provided by Section 8 of that enactment. Held that the suit was not barred by one year's limitation provided in Section 9 of the said Act, it being applicable to suits and proceedings in respect of property seized after conviction of the offender if he is tried, or after an adjudication of forfeiture if he is not in person present to take his trial, and not where there is a mere seizure by a Magistrate of a suspected person's property without further proceedings.

Although Section 18, Act IX of 1859, deals with such property, and provides that the offender's failure to surrender himself within one year from the date of seizure would preclude the Courts from questioning the validity of seizure, yet the general terms of that section cannot, in the absence of express provision to that effect, be construed to mean that any involuntary absence would be treated as a default or refusal to surrender. Held, therefore, that plaintiff's suit, if he succeed in establishing that his absence within the limited period was involuntary, would be removed from the operation of that section.

The plaintiff's suit was not barred by Section 20, Act IX of 1859, which deals with the rights of persons who are not accused and suspected of the act of rebellion, and its operation according to ordinary rules of construction cannot be extended to cases not within the preceding portion of the section. Mohamed Yousuf Ali Khan v. Government and others, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 191.

Plaintiff joined with the rebels and took a leading part with them. A reward was set upon him as a rebel leader, and after a time he was captured.

No formal proceedings were taken under Sections 2 and 7 of Act XXV of 1859 for adjudicating his property (which consisted of little more than an annuity) to be forfeited. The property charged with the annuity was in the hands of the Collector as the manager under the Court of Wards. The annuity was withheld, and was no longer regarded as a charge on the estate, but was treated as merged. Held that the mere withdrawal of the payment of annuity by those who had the management of the estate, which was charged with the payment, would be an illegal act in no way affecting the plaintiff's right; but as the withholding of the payment was under the authority and direction of the official who was authorized to make attachment of rebels' property, it was with reference to the nature of the property equivalent to an attachment or seizure, and could not be questioned except under the provisions of Section 18 of Act IX of 1859, notwithstanding there had been no adjudication of forfeiture. Ranee Chundra and another v. Koornuer Roof Singh, 4 Agra Rep., 281.

Where the property of a rebel has been sold, any party claiming an interest in the thing sold is bound, under Section 20, Act IX of 1859, to bring his suit within one year from the date of the order of confiscation. Prosunno Pandey v. Gunga Ram, W. R., 1864, 2.

According to Section 20, Act IX of 1859, a suit for possession of confiscated property under title must be brought within one year of attachment or seizure. Proceedings to foreclose are not the suit contemplated by that law. Nundun Singh v. Mussamut Bibee Koolsoom, W. R., 1864, 377.

A mokurrureedar having fled and abandoned his tenancy appertaining to a rebel's estate which was confiscated by Government, was held not entitled to recover the tenure on the ground (1) that his suit was barred by Section 20, Act IX of 1859; and (2) that the mokurruree was not an absolute tenure, but one on condition of service to be rendered to the former proprietor, whose estate had been confiscated for rebellion. Nepal Singh v. Ram Saran Singh, W. R., 1864, 5.

Held that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation provided by Act IX of 1859, Section 20, as not having been instituted within one year from the date of seizure by Government. Mussamut Ameerunnissa v. Shib Sukha, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 271.

Where the rights of a mortgagee only are confiscated and granted, the suit to redeem the property by a mortgagor is not barred by Section 20, Act IX of 1859. Ramdhun and others v. Rajah Bhowanee Singh Bahadoor, 4 Agra Rep., 139.

A suit by a mortgagee for possession, on ground of foreclosure, of rebel's property sold under Act IX of 1859, is barred by limitation, if not brought within one year from the date of seizure or sale. Gobind Pandey v. Hemut Bahadoor, 6 W. R., 42.

The procedure in regard to the seizure and attachment of property under Act XXV of 1857, and the adjudication of claims to such property under Act IX of 1859, pointed out.

A seizure within the meaning of Section 20, Act IX of 1859, is such a taking possession of the property forfeited as is referred to in Section 7, Act XXV of 1857, not merely formal, but actual. Bynumal Singh v. Solantra, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 114.

Where, by a decree of the Special Commissioners' Court, established under Act IX of 1859, a decree of possession was given, the plaintiff, as a claimant, the proceedings of officials making over that property were, when followed by a suit against Government to obtain possession of a portion of that property, in which suit the Government raised no question as to the propriety of the decree, or of the making over of the bulk of the property under it, held to bind the Government as to the right of the decree-holder to the property. Secretary of State v. Mussamut Kanzadi, 5 B. L. R., 312.

An order of a Magistrate passed under Section 2 of Act XIII of 1859, "that the prisoner should work for a certain period," and in case he failed or do so should suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month," annulled as to the latter part, the Magistrate having no power to make that order until the failure had occurred and been proved before him. Reg. v. Jomd bin Bdu, 1 Bom. Rep., Cr., 37.

The imprisonment of a defendant by order of the Magistrate under Act XII of 1859 does not preclude the plaintiff from proceeding by civil suit for recovery of money advanced to the defendant for the performance of work. C. A.

Act XIII of 1859 does not apply to contracts for a "chakri" domestic or personal service, but to contracts to serve as artificer, workman, or labourer. In the matter of Domestic Servants, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 32; 12 W. R., Cr., 12.

An order directing compensation under Act XIII of 1859 is illegal. Such portion of the money advanced to the defendant as had been appropriated to the fulfilment of the contract, or as could justly be set-off against a part fulfilment of the contract, ought not to be ordered to be refunded. 4 Mad. Rep., Rul. LXVIII.

Breach of contract to supply wood does not fall within the purview of Act XIII of 1859. In the case of the Upper Assam Tea Company v. Thopoor, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 1.

Persons convicted under Section 48 of the Police Act (XXIV of 1859) are not liable to both fine and imprisonment in default of payment. The procedure to be followed in enforcing the fine is that laid down in Madras Act V of 1865. Anonymous, 3 Mad. Rep., Ap., 9.

There is no Act of the Legislature which empowers either the District Magistrate or the local Government to define a "term" for the purpose of Section 48, Act XXIV of 1859. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXIV.

(f) Acts of 1860.

A Magistrate issued a notification that all persons desirous of carrying arms should take out a license enabling them to do so, under Section 26 of Act XXXI of 1860; and certain persons were, in consequence of his notification, arrested and brought before him charged in a police report with carrying arms without license. No summons or warrant had been applied for, nor any complaint lodged before the Magistrate, previous to the arrest of the prisoners. No charge in writing was framed as required under Sections 250 and 251 of the Criminal Procedure Code. No evidence was taken; but the prisoners admitted carrying the fire-arms. The Magistrate convicted them, under Section 188 of the Indian Penal Code, of disobedience of an order duly promulgated by a public servant. There was no evidence that the disobedience would cause or tend to cause annoyance, obstruction, or injury to human life, health, or safety. Held that the convictions must be quashed. Necessity of observing the rules laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code remarked on. The Queen v. Nandkumar Bose, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 149.

The word "suit" in the proviso of Section 3 of Act XLII of 1860 refers to regular suits before a Collector under Act X of 1859, and not to the summary proceedings under Regulation XXVIII of 1802, and Section 2 of Regulation V of 1822. Adimulan Pillai v. Kovel Chinna Pillai, 2 Mad. Rep., 22.

Where casual presence, or even residence for a temporary purpose, without the intention of remaining, is not dwelling within the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court within the meaning of Section 4 of Act XLII of 1860. Saminatha Pillai v. Varisai Mahomed Savatatan, 2 Mad. Rep., 304.

Execution against the person of a judgment-debtor is not a preliminary step necessary to entitle the judgment-creditor to proceed against the debtor's immoveable property under Section 11, Act XLII of 1860. Vendatasami Naik v. Vattamalay Guandan, 2 Mad. Rep., 339.

Section 21 of Act XLII of 1860 is to be given the same operation as if Act XXIII of 1861 had formed part of Act VIII of 1859 when it became law. Sabapati Mudali v. Muttusswami Mudali and others, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 103.

(g) Acts of 1862—1868.

Act VIII of 1862 does not relieve putneedars from their liability under the old laws of paying the zemindyar dak charges. Bissonath Sircar v. Ranee Shurnmooyee, 4 W. R., 6.

Section 5, Act VIII of 1862, does not prevent the Civil Courts from entertaining a suit against the King of Oude without the consent of the Government. Petition of Begum Bibee, Bismullah Khanub, and Tainub Khanum, 7 W. R., 168.

Held (Jackson, J. dissenting) that an officer exercising the powers described in Section 1, Act XV of 1862, is competent, under the provisions of Section 59 of the Police Code, to pass a sentence of transportation for seven years, instead of awarding sentence of imprisonment. In the case of Boodhoo, prisoner, 9 W. R., Cr., 6.

A warrant of attorney to the attorney of a defendant to receive a declaration or plaint, &c., in any action or suit to be brought for the recovery of certain moneys, and to confess the same action or suit, or else to suffer or consent to a judgment or decree in the said action or suit by default, or in any other way to pass or be pronounced against the defendant, empowers the attorney to accept service and appear for the defendant within the meaning of Sections 17 and 49 of Act VIII of 1859.

Held that Section 7 of Act XX of 1862 refers only to warrants of attorney for the entering up of judgments in the High Court which were in existence before the 1st July, 1862.

That, where a summons has not been issued to a defendant, the defect is cured by his appearance. Khowul Chundra Ghose v. Sreemulti Saroda Soon-dery Dassee, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 244.

Madras Act IV of 1863 does not take away the former jurisdiction given to the District Moonisff in respect of causes of action arising within the limits of his jurisdiction. Magam Thimmaya v. Tangaal Couranappa, 2 Mad. Rep., 82.

Conviction under Section 9 of Bombay Act IX of 1863, and sentences of one month's rigorous imprisonment, as well as an order for confiscation of cotton, set aside for want of evidence to show that the Deputy Magistrate who tried the case had jurisdiction in the matter over the person convicted, and for want of evidence of fraud.

With reference to Section 18, Act XXI of 1863, an advocate cannot sue upon a promissory note given by anticipation for fees not taxed; nor can the Court in such suit award to the plaintiff a quantum meruit for his services. Donald Macleod v. Mah Mah Yet, 7 W. R., 390.

Under Act XXI of 1863 (Sections 22 to 26), a case cannot be stated for the opinion of the High Court with reference to a point of law arising out of proceedings in execution of a decree. In the matter of R. Sutherland, 9 W. R., 478.

An advocate cannot sue upon a promissory note given in proceedings in execution of a decree. In the matter of the Northern Assam Company, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 12 W. R., 48.

The wages of labourers employed under Act III of 1863, and VI of 1865 (B. C.), are leviable out of the land, and form a primary charge upon it, into whosesoever hands it may pass. Therefore such labourers are entitled to their wages in full against a company which is being wound up; and purchasers of the land from the company are entitled to set-off against the purchase-money payments made by them to such labourers on account of wages due to them by the company previous to the purchase. In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act, 1866, and the S. Cachar Tea Co., 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 180.

A putneedar, in execution of a decree for rent against his mourasidar, attached certain property of his, including a parcel of land belonging to the plaintiff, who, to save that portion, paid the whole amount due, and sued the mourasidar to recover the portion he ought to have paid. The suit was dismissed, no obligation on the plaintiff to pay having been shown. He appealed, alleging that her portion was within and subordinate to the holding of the mourasidar, and to sell would have jeopardized her holding. Held that the case was rightly remanded by the lower Appellate Court, but that the issue to be tried was whether the plaintiff was a party who came under the provisions of Section 6, Act VIII (B. C.), 1865, read with Section 13, Regulation VIII of 1819, more particularly with Clause 3, Luckhee Pratia Debia v. Brindabun Dey, 12 W. R., 313.

The length of notice to be given to persons holding licenses for carrying on slaughter-houses under Act VII of 1865 (B. C.), must be determined in each case according to its own particular circumstances. E. Vere Haldane, 6 W. R., 77.

An appeal to the Collector is not necessary as a condition precedent to a suit in the Civil Court under Section 13, Act VIII (B. C.) of 1865. Ngin-dro Chundro Ghose v. Musruff Bibee, 15 S. W. R., Cr., 17.

The defendant, an officer in a regiment stationed at Vellore, was sued for money due for the rent of a house occupied by him at Madras. While absent on leave on medical certificate, he rented the plaintiff's house at Madras, where he was residing at the time of the institution of the suit; but he returned to Vellore previous to the hearing of the suit. The Small Cause Court Judge of Vellore held that the defendant was dwelling at Vellore at the time of the institution of the suit within the meaning of Section 8, Act XI of 1865. Held that there was nothing in point of law to prevent the Judge from affirming his jurisdiction. D. Kissun Sing v. Lieut. R. L. N. Sturt, 5 Mad. Rep., 471.

Held that the words "three miles" in (Bombay) Act III of 1866, Section 1, Clause 2, must be construed as three miles measured in a straight line along the horizontal plane, that being the most convenient meaning of the words, and the most capable of being ascertained. Reg. v. Bhekoolo Vinohá and others, 4 Bom. Rep., Cr., 9.

Plaintiff, on the 15th June, 1868, immediately after the death of his debtor, brought a suit against the debtor's widow (1st defendant) for recovery of the debt, and, before judgment, obtained attachment...
MUNICIPAL ACTS.

and sale of property of the deceased, the sale proceeds being kept in deposit in the Court. These proceedings took place in June and July; and on the 15th August administration was granted to the Administrator-General, the widow not having taken out administration. On the 28th September, the Administrator-General was, on plaintiff's application, made defendant in place of the widow, and the suit proceeded against him to decree. Before plaintiff applied to execute this decree, the amount of the sale proceeds was, by the direction of the Civil Judge, handed over to the Administrator-General; accordingly, on this ground, plaintiff's application to the District Moonsiff for execution was rejected. He appealed unsuccessfully to the Civil Court.

Held, on special appeal, that Section 33 of Act XXIV of 1867 took away plaintiff's right to payment otherwise than rateably with the other creditors. Haninabala Sannappâ v. Mrs. Cook and J. Miller, Esq., 6 Mad. Rep., 346.

The fine imposed under Section 17, Act IX of 1868, for neglect to take out a certificate, must not be less than twice the amount for which such certificate should be taken out. The Queen v. Ram Gobind Chuckertubuliy, 2 B. L. Rep., Ap., 40; S. C., 11 W. R., Cr., 13.

A Magistrate was held to have acted rightly in dismissing a complaint under Section 17 of Act IX of 1868, because there was no evidence that the names of the accused were included in the list mentioned in Section 17. In prosecution under this Act, a Magistrate must proceed in the manner laid down in Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and must require proof of all the facts which go to constitute the offence. Queen v. Khelitro Mohun Ghose and others, 11 W. R., Cr., 56.

A suit against the King of Oude, commenced without the consent of the Governor-General in Council, was held to be null and void, even though it had been instituted, and judgment had been given, before the passing of Act XIII of 1868. Begum Bibâ v. The King of Oude, 11 W. R., 116.

Under Act XIV of 1868, the police are not empowered to put a woman on the register of common prostitutes against her will. The penalty prescribed by Section 11, Act XIV of 1868, for disobedience of any of its rules, is for a "woman" who voluntarily registers herself as a "common prostitute."

A Magistrate has authority to hear any objection urged by a woman charged with disobedience of the rules under Act XIV of 1868, against the legality of her registry, or that she is not a common prostitute.

The possession of a registry ticket is not sufficient evidence of being a common prostitute. In the case of Lakshmoni Kaur, 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 70; S. C., 12 W. R., Cr., 55.

A Judge has no authority under Act XVI of 1868 to order a Subordinate Judge to try proceedings in execution of a decree which are a portion of the original civil suit tried by himself. Moonsee Afsabodeen Ahmed v. Mohinee Mohun Dass, 15 S. W. R., Cr., 48.

A Zillah Judge has no power to transfer proceedings in execution of a decree to a Subordinate Court, unless duly authorized under Section 19 of Act XVI of 1868. Sheikh Mahomed Kumroodeen v. A. Ujobunniya, 17 N. W. R., 113.

Under Section 18 of Act XVI of 1868, an appeal lies to the District Judge if the subject-matter of the original suit does not exceed in value Rs. 5,000. It is immaterial whether or not the judgess's argument of the appeal exceeds that amount in value. Musst. Masooma Bebee v. Musst. Nazur Fatma, 17 N. W. R., 117.

(h) Municipal Acts.

Where a party is injured by an order of Municipal Commissioners under Act XXVI of 1850, issued in respect of a subject within their jurisdiction, he is debarred from bringing a suit in the Civil Court to annul such order, until he has exhausted the remedies afforded to him by the rules framed by Government in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Sakhrâm Shridhur Gddwri v. The Chairman of the Municipality of Kulyân et al., 7 Bom. Rep., A. C., 33.

The managing committee of Municipal Commissioners appointed under Act XXVI of 1850 have no power to try and convict persons for alleged breaches of rules made in pursuance of that Act. The power to inflict fines for such offences is, by a Section 10, vested in the Magistrate. Reg. v. Mewji Dayal; Reg. v. Kalidas Keval, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 10.

The Chairman of Municipal Commissioners appointed under Act XXVI of 1850, although a public servant, is not legally competent as such to issue an order for attendance before him. Held, accordingly, that disobedience of such an order was not an offence within Section 174 of the Indian Penal Code. Reg. v. Purshotam VDljî, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., 33.

Where accused was convicted under Act XXVI of 1850 of disobedience of an order made by the Municipal Commissioners of Puna, and was sentenced to pay a fine of twenty rupees, and (eight days' time being allowed him within which to comply with the order) a further fine of two rupees each day during which he should continue wilfully to disobey such order, the latter part of the sentence was reversed by the High Court as being illegal. Reg. v. Jagunnath Bhat bin Apga Bhat, 5 Bom. Rep., Cr., p. 103.

A notice under any of the Sections of Act III (B. C.) of 1864 preceding Section 81 may, under that section, either be served upon the person addressed, or left with some servant of the family. The mistake of a few rupees in a notice, caused by an error in addition, is not sufficient to impeach or affect the demand where the directions of the Municipal Act have been substantially complied with, Section 48 protecting the Commissioners against such mistakes. Gopee Kishen Gossain v. W. H. Ryland, 9 W. R., 562.

The obstruction of a drain by a tree blown down by a cyclone is not an obstruction within the meaning of Section 57 of Act IV of 1864 (B. C.).

The owner of ground is answerable under Section 67, whether his ground was made dirty by himself or by somebody else. Anonymous, 3 W. R., Cr., 33.

The owner of land is punishable if his land is made filthy by other people, unless he has let it, Churn Sircar, 3 W. R., Cr., 57.

When the occupiers are liable. Queen v. Parbutty. Churn Sircar, 3 W. R., Cr., 57.

A notice of action against Municipal Commissioners is absolutely necessary under Section 77, Act III of 1864 (B. C.). A notice of objecting to and asking for a reconsideration of the order complained of is not sufficient. Abhoy Nath Bose v. The Chairman and the Deputy Chairman of the Municipal Committee of Kishnagur, 7 W. R., 92.

The Municipal Commissioners were held entitled, under Section 73, Act III of 1864 (B. C.), to recover from the defendant the expense of clearing away any jungle which they found on his land, upon his failure after notice to clear it himself within the time specified in the notice. Lord H. Ulick Browne, Chairman of the Municipality, v. Woomesh Chandra Roy, 7 W. R., 213.

Plaintiffs, as proprietors, sued the Howrah Municipal Committee to recover possession of land from which they alleged they had been ousted by defendant's stacking stones thereon; and they regarded their cause of action as arising when the Municipal Commissioners refused to remove the stones. Defendant's case was that the land had been in possession of Government till Act III (B. C.) of 1864 was extended to Howrah, which time the Commissioners had held the land.

Held (by Bayley, J.) that the Municipal Commissioners had acted properly under the law, and were entitled to the application of Section 87, Act III (B. C.) of 1864.

Held (by Phear, J.) that Section 87 could only protect defendants if sued for damages consequent on a wrong done by them in the reasonable belief that they were exercising their lawful powers; but if they were sued by parties kept out of possession by their continued wrong-doing. Poorno Chunder Roy and others v. H. Balfour, Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners at Howrah, 9 W. R., 535.

Municipal Commissioners are entitled to one month's notice of action under Section 87, Act III (B. C.) of 1864, while they have been acting bond fide in the belief that they were exercising powers given to them by that Act; not if their proceedings were not justified by that Act, and only colourably done under cover thereof. Gopeekishan Gossain v. W. H. Rayland and others, 9 W. R., 279.

Held that the Magistrate, as President of Municipal Committee, has no power to issue an order forbidding as a nuisance an Act not included in the rules passed under Act XXVI of 1850. Government v. Sham Snodar, petition, 1 Agra Rep., 34.

A Joint Magistrate, though Vice-Chairman of the Municipal Committee, can impose fines under Act IV of 1864 (B. C.).

The Joint Magistrate should make a record of his proceedings before passing sentence. Anonymous, 3 W. R., Cr., 33.

A Municipal Commissioner invested with the powers of a Magistrate under Act III (B. C.) of 1864, is protected by Act XVIII of 1850 in respect of every act done by him in such capacity judicially; and so long as he acts within his jurisdiction and in good faith, no action for damages will lie against him in a Small Cause Court. Skakazada Halimoozumah v. Municipal Commissioners of Hoogly, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 340.

The words "uses any premises" in Section 77, Act III of 1864, mean using and employing the premises as a place for the carrying on of the offensive trades mentioned in that section. The Municipal Commissioners for the suburbs of Calcutta v. Zamir Shaikh, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 4.

The municipal authorities have no power under Section 57, Act III of 1864, Bengal Council, to impose a fine on a person for blocking up a drain which is not shown to be public property, or along the side of any highway. Banti Madhukar Banneryee, 14 S. W. R., Cr., 23.

By Section 19 of the Bye-laws of the Howrah Municipality, framed under Section 84, Act III of 1864 (B. C.), and confirmed by the Lieutenant-Governor, it is within the discretion of the Municipality to refuse permission for the excavation of a tank, and the Courts have no power to interfere with the bond fide exercise of such discretion. Bhyrub Chunder Banneryee v. Chairman of the Howrah Municipality, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 215.

Previous to the institution of the present suit, one of the shareholders brought a suit against the Chairman of the Municipality for recovery of possession of his share. The other shareholders were made defendants in the suit. This suit was dismissed as barred by the Law of Limitation. After the dismissal of the suit, the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of his share of the land, on the allegation that his tenant had relinquished the land within three months, in consequence of his having been dispossessed by the Municipal Commissioners.

Held that the suit was not barred by Section 2, Act VII of 1859, and that Section 87, Act III of 1864 (B. C.), did not apply.

By Section 61 Act III (B. C.) 1864, Municipal Commissioners, if they deem a house or building to be in a ruinous state, may, after the notice prescribed by that section, cause the same to be taken down. Gopeekishen Gossain v. Mr. W. H. Rayland and others, 9 W. R., 279.

Held that, under Section 180 of Act VI of 1863 (B. C.), the Justices of the Peace are required to keep up and maintain the existing tanks, reservoirs, &c., vested in them, or to substitute a new tank, reservoir, &c., for any existing tank, reservoir, &c., i.e., new works of a like kind, each for each, in place of the old. Therefore, where the Justice had closed a tank for the purpose of constructing in its place a different means of water supply, a mandamus was issued directing the Justices to maintain the tank, and supply it with water, or to substitute another in its place, and supply that with water. Queen v. The Justices of the Peace for the Town of Calcutta, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 282.

The Chairman of the Justices of Calcutta, on the complaint of the Health Officer, issued a warrant for the seizure of certain articles of food, and without notice to the owners, or reducing the proceedings to writing, condemned them as unfit for use. In support of a rule nisi for a certiorari for bringing up the order that it might be quashed, it was argued that the Chairman had not, as such, jurisdiction to make the order; and that it was invalid, as notice had not been given, and the proceedings had not been reduced to writing. Cause was shown that the description of the Chairman was immaterial, as he was also a Justice of the Peace, and that such summary proceedings were necessary for the public safety.

_Held_ that the Act does not empower the Chairman of the Justices, as such, to issue a warrant under the 200th Section; that such a warrant must show, on the face of it, that the Justice issuing it had jurisdiction; that the application under Section 226 must be reduced to writing, and that the description of the Chairman was immaterial, as he was also a Justice of the Peace, and that such summary proceedings were necessary for the public safety.

R. was fined by the Deputy Magistrate for using an unlicensed slaughter-house. He subsequently gave an ijara or lease to A. to carry on the business of slaughtering cattle or allowing cattle to be slaughtered "without a license." He was fined Rs. 200 by the Deputy Magistrate. On appeal to the Sessions Judge he was acquitted. On the motion of the Municipal Commissioners for a rule to set aside the order of the Sessions Judge, it was _held_, per Jackson, J., that R., by giving a lease to A., had parted with his interest, and had ceased to have any power to allow or disallow the slaughtering of cattle. That Section 7, Act VII (B.C.) of 1865, provides penalties only, and does not describe an offence or relate to a conviction. It is quite another question whether the act itself is an offence irrespective of Section 7, and whether R. could be dealt with as an abettor.

_Per Mitter, J. (dissenting)._ The Judge has found that the lease was given by R. with the avowed object of continuing the slaughter-house, and admittedly for the express purpose of evading the law; the case therefore falls within the express words of the section, "or allows cattle to be slaughtered." In re Municipal Commissioners for the Suburbs of Calcutta, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 28, and 14 S. W. R., Cr. R., 67.

By Section 151 of Act VI of 1863 (B.C.), the Justices are empowered in making any main or sewers for the drainage of Calcutta, "to carry such sewers through, across, or under any street, or any place laid out or intended for a street or any cellar or vault which may be under any of the streets, and (after reasonable notice in writing in that behalf) into, through, or under any enclosed or other land whatsoever, making full compensation for any damage done thereby; and if any dispute shall arise touching the amount or apportionment of such compensation, the same shall be settled in the manner therein after provided for the settlement of disputes respecting damages and expenses." Section 229 provides that "in all cases where any damages, costs, or expenses are by this Act directed to be paid, the amount of the same, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained and determined by a Judge of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes." Section 226 provides that a month's notice shall be given before any action is brought under the Act against the Justices. By Act V of 1857, the Oriental Gas Company was empowered to lay down pipes and execute other necessary works for the supply of gas to Calcutta. In an application by the Company for a writ of mandamus to compel the Justices to join with the Company in referring to a Judge of the Small Cause Court to ascertain the amount payable to the Company as compensation for damage alleged to have been occasioned to their pipes, &c., by the drainage works of the Justices, an affidavit was filed, in which the Company's manager stated specifically the loss that had been occasioned, and that he had on personal inspection satisfied himself that the loss was occasioned by the negligent execution of the drainage works of the Justices. The affidavit on behalf of the Justices stated that "in carrying out such drainage works, the Justices, or their contractors, agents, or servants, have not damaged the pipes, &c., of the Company, and that the Justices deny that they are in any manner liable for the damage in respect of which compensation is sought by the Company, or that they have done or caused any damage to the Company." _Held_ (per Phear, J.), on the facts, that the Justices' works had caused damage to the Company's main and pipes.

_Held_ also, that the compensation-clause of Section 151, Act VI of 1863 (B.C.) makes the Justices liable to compensate owners of land, or of any interest in land through which the drainage works are authorized to be carried, for any damage caused by any proceedings in such works. It applies to cases where the works have been done with due care and skill, and where, but for the Act, there would have been a right of action against the Justices.

_Held_ also, that the denial of liability by the Justices was simply a general denial that any damage had been done to the Company; the question, therefore, between the parties resolved itself into a dispute as to the amount of damage, which, by Section 151, must be settled in the manner provided by Section 229. Hence the Company was entitled to a writ of mandamus.

_Held_ also, that Section 226 applies to proceedings dehors the Act, and not to proceedings taken to enforce compliance with the provisions of the Act.
the word "judgment" in Clause 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865, means a decision, whether final, or preliminary, or interlocutory, which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. The order of the Court below, that a writ of mandamus should issue, was not a "judgment," therefore no appeal lay from it.

Held also, that the proceeding by way of mandamus is a "proceeding in a civil case" within the meaning of Rule of April 4th, 1866. Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company, 8 B. L. R., 433, and 17 S. W. R., C. R., 364.

In a suit for alleged damage done to the plaintiff's premises by excavations for drainage purposes, which the Justices are authorized to make by Act VI of 1863 (B. C.), it being shown that the Justices have entrusted the execution of the work to skilled and competent contractors,—Held the Justices were not liable.

In such a suit no cause of action will be allowed to be raised, except that disclosed in the notice of action required to be given to the Justices by Section 226 of the Act. Ullman v. The Justices of the Peace for the Town of Calcutta, 8 B. L. R., 265.

No suit can be maintained against the Justices of the Peace of the City of Bombay in respect of an alleged wrongful distress for unpaid rates levied by the Municipal Commissioner of that city, either under the provisions of Act II of 1865 (Bombay) or Act IV of 1867 (Bombay). In such a suit the Municipal Commissioner himself or the actual tortfeasor is the proper defendant. ShibsunkurGovindram v. The Justices of the Peace of the City, 5 Bom. Rep., O. C., 145.

Madras Act III of 1869 gives a Tahsildar power to issue summonses. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XLIV.

Madras Act III of 1869 confers no authority upon revenue officers to summon a subordinate to attend for the purpose of carrying out a sale of land for arrears of revenue. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXVIII.

An order to repay a fee under Section 31 of Act VII of 1870 is an integral part of the sentence, and the fee should be treated as a fine imposed by the Court, and may be retained in deposit pending an appeal, where an appeal lies. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXVIII.

Section 154 of Madras Act III of 1871 was not intended to apply to omissions to take out licenses. It applies to breaches of the Act which, in a policeman's view, are offences, and regarding which, if committed within his view, one of two courses is open to him—viz., to arrest without warrant, or to lay an information before a Magistrate, and apply for a summons or warrant. If he adopts the latter course, then Sections 43 and 66 of the Criminal Procedure Code require that the information should be reduced to writing, and given on oath or solemn affirmation, before any process is issued thereon. Section 68 of the Code is limited to cases in which no complaint has been made, and the Magistrate, proprò motu, institutes a prosecution. 6 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIV.

Under Section 43, Act XXI of 1836, only persons holding licenses, and not their servants, are subject to the penalties specified in the section. Queen v. Ramkishen, 8 W. R., 4.

In a suit brought by plaintiff for the specific performance of an agreement entered into between the plaintiff and defendant whereby the defendant, an Abkarry contractor, undertook to sub-let to plaintiff the Abkarry of a Talook, and also to recover damages for the breach of contract,—Held that Section 99 of the Abkarry Amendment Act (Madras Act III of 1864) did not affect the rights and liabilities of the parties inter se, under the terms of an unexecuted contract to sub-rent, although the Act would prevent the sub-rentor deriving any benefit under an executed contract of sub-renting from the exercise, or the manufacture or sale of liquor, as defined in Section 2, until he had complied with the condition prescribed in Section 9 of the Act. Venkata Krishunrjia v. Venkatachalayinar, 5 Mad. Rep., I.

Sweet palm juice, which by exposure to the operation of natural causes ferments and becomes toddy, is as much manufactured by the person who exposes it as if the same result were produced by the process of distillation. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXVI.

The Magistrate convicted the accused under Section 21 of Madras Act III of 1864, and directed the confiscation of certain arrack found in his possession,—Held that the accused being a licensed vendor, the arrack was not liable to confiscation. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XII.

Primâ facie, toddy is fermented palm juice. A conviction under Section 21 of Madras Act III of 1864, for selling toddy without a license, upheld, although no evidence was given as to whether fermentation had taken place. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXXVI.

Upon a conviction under Section 22 of (Madras) Act III of 1864, for conveying liquor without valid permits, it appearing that the defendants produced permits by the Talook Abkarry Renter, covering the amount of liquor which was being conveyed, but made out in the names of third parties who were not present when the liquor was seized, but on whose behalf the liquor was at the time of seizure being conveyed,—Held that the permits were valid, and the conviction was bad. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. XXIX.

The Lord's Day Act (29 Car. 2, c. 7) does not extend to criminal cases in British Burmah. A was convicted and fined for the breach of an Abkarry rule. Held that the conviction could not be supported, on the ground that the Abkarry rule had not the force of law. Abraham v. Queen, 1 B. L. R., A. Cr., 17.

The Abkarry Acts (XXI of 1856, XXIII of 1860, and XX of 1864) not having been extended to British Burmah, and no power being vested in the Chief Commissioner to make rules containing penal clauses, the Abkarry rules passed by that functionary have not the force of law. In re Abraham, prisoner, 10 W. R., 350.

1.—Admissions.

The admission of a defendant's vakil in Court was held to be legal evidence of the receipt of money, and to do away with the necessity for other proof. Kaleekamund Bhuttocharjee v. Gireenbald Dabia and others, 10 W. R., 322; Matadee Roy v. Aodhoosoodun Singh and others, 10 W. R., 293.

A statement made by a party is not, ipso facto, conclusive against him, though it may be used against him and may be evidence, more or less weighty, possibly even conclusive, according to the circumstances of each case, and the result come to by judicial investigation. Ayetun and others v. Aamsebuk Poddar and others, 12 W. R., 156.

A statement made by a party is not, ipso facto, conclusive against him, though it may be used against him and may be evidence, more or less weighty, possibly even conclusive, according to the circumstances of each case, and the result come to by judicial investigation. Ayetun and others v. Aamsebuk Poddar and others, 12 W. R., 156.

Where a person uses the admission of another as evidence the whole admission must be put in. He cannot put in half and exclude the other half. Those who have to decide upon the evidence are not bound to believe the whole of the statement. Raja Nilmoney Singh Deo v. Ramanooqrah Roy and others, 7 W. R., 29.

Admissions, &c., by the parties in a former arbitration may be used in evidence in a subsequent suit. Huronath Siricar and others v. Promath Sircar and others, 7 W. R., 249.

Where a plaintiff deliberately claimed land as rent-free he was not allowed, merely on the ground of the proprietor admitting the lands to be lease to plaintiff's vendors, or even of the defendant making a somewhat similar admission, to benefit by such admissions and vary his claim. Nidh Chowdhry v. Bunda Lal Tachur and others, 6 W. R., 289.

Plaintiff sued to recover rent for several years on an instrument alleged to have been signed by a the ryots on the estate. Defendant denied having been a party to the instrument, but admitted that he held a small portion of land of the defendant with a small rent, and that somewhat more than 1 year's rent was due.

EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS.

Held that the fact of defendants being allowed to appear as co-plaintiffs in a redemption suit, to which plaintiff was no party, cannot be received in evidence as an admission adverse to plaintiff's interest; and so also the admission made by Kaiwal, plaintiff's brother, and "lumberdar," cannot, merely on account of his being such, be held as binding against the plaintiff, unless it be shown that he (Kaiwal) was invested by plaintiff with sufficient authority in that behalf.

Bucha v. Lullee and others, against the plaintiff, unless it be shown that he on account of his being such, be held as binding interest; and so also the admission made by Kaiwal, which plaintiff was no party, cannot be received in evidence as an admission adverse to plaintiff's interest.

The admission of a lessor does not bind a lessee in certain cases in which a bond-fide act might have bound. Surooghuo Dutt v. Brojogopal Ghose, 3 W. R., 143.

In a suit for enhancement of rent a defendant is not bound to traverse a statement made by the plaintiff in the notice of enhancement as to the description of the land in question. The doctrine of admission by non-traverse is not applicable to written statements filed under Act X of 1859. Shadhow Singh v. Ramanograh Lall, 9 W. R., 83.

The statement of a party to a suit is admissible evidence against him to prove the contents of a written instrument. Mutturuppa Kaundan v. Rama Pillai, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 158.

Suit by a purchaser from a mortgagee against a dur-mokurrureedar for the cancellation of his mokurruree lease granted without authority by the mortgagee. In a former suit brought by the mortgagee for possession the mortgagee admitted the mortgage. Held that, although that admission was conclusive as between the mortgagee and the mortgagee, the colluding parties, yet that in the present case, brought to avoid the defendant's title on the strength of an alleged collusive mortgage, it was quite competent to him to contest its bond-fide nature. Donunjoy Dey Potedar v. Dwarka-Nath Singh, 5 W. R., 280.

Mutturuppa Kaundan v. Rama Pillai, 3 Madras Rep., 158, applies to the defendant's admission of a transaction embodied in a written document not receivable in evidence, and is no authority whatever for construing a document present to the Court upon a defendant's admission. Mokulachmi Annal v. Balani Chelli, 6 Mad. Rep., 245.

An admission made by an intervenor in a former suit is evidence against him, quantum valeat, in a subsequent suit. Skee Surn Singh v. Ram Khelawat Singh, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 165.

In a suit to recover a specific sum of money which had been attached by the Magistrate where defendant expressed his intention to take the money for the purpose of investing it in trade,—Held that defendant's admission was sufficient evidence to show that the money was in danger of being alienated within the meaning of Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Goluck Chunder Goho v. Mohun Chunder Ghose, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 95.

In a suit by the grandchildren of the deceased daughter of a member of a joint Hindu family, who, though not entitled to his property as his heirs, had been long in possession, the surviving daughter, in whom according to Hindu law her father's interest would now be legally vested, admitted by a petition filed in this suit that by her gift or relinquishment plaintiff had a title to her father's share. The admission was held to be evidence that such title existed anterior to the commencement of the suit. Gour Lal Singh v. Motesh Na-rain Ghose, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 484.

A copy of a defendant's deposition in a former suit having been put in by plaintiff at a late stage of the case, when defendant had no means of explaining away any supposed admission therein,—
Held that the first Court was wrong in accepting the same as an admission binding on defendant, and that the lower Appellate Court was right in sending for the defendant and examining him on the subject. Shaikh Komurronde v. Shaikh Monye Mundle, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 220.

When a defendant admits any one fact contained in the written statement of the plaintiff, and thereby excludes independent evidence thereof, he is not entitled to say that the plaintiff has relied on his statement as evidence, and that he (defendant) is in consequence in a position to claim that the whole of it may be read as evidence in his own favour. Shaikh Shurfuras Mollah v. Shaikh Dunno, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 257.

A plaintiff abandoning his own case and falling back on the admission of the defendant is bound to take these admissions as they stand and in their entirety. Tarinee Pershad Stev v. Dwarkanath Rukher, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 451.

An admission before a Registrar of the receipt of purchase-money attested by his endorsement, as required by Clause 3, Section 65, Act XX of 1866, though evidence of the strongest and most reliable description, ought not to be treated as conclusive. In the face of such admission, however, the party seeking to get out of its effects must make out his case by very clear evidence. Mahomed Haneef Meajee v. Mooshur Ali, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 280.

Plaintiff sued in the Revenue Court for the recovery of rents fraudulently misappropriated by defendant, and upon defendant's allegation that plaintiff was etmamdar or gomashat, and not izadar, the Deputy Collector dismissed plaintiff's suit for want of jurisdiction. Plaintiff now sues in the Civil Court, and upon defendant again raising the plea of non-jurisdiction the Moonsiff came to the conclusion that plaintiff's allegation that he had been etmamdar was false. Held that any admission or allegation of the defendant in the former suit, put in evidence by the plaintiff, was amply sufficient to support the plaintiff's allegation in this suit that he had been etmamdar; and that the Moonsiff went out of his way to enquire into a fact which was not disputed by either of the parties. *Bhug-

way of defence, the object is to get rid of a written contract of sale of land by showing that it is not the contract really entered into by the parties; but the evidence must be very powerful to induce the Court to believe that the terms expressed are not the real ones.

Evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement to suspend the operation of a written contract of sale until an agreement for a re-sale is executed, is admissible as a defence even in a Court of law. \textit{Dada Honaji v. Babajej Jugus}, 2 Bom. Rep., 38.

In a suit between Mahometans a pedigree may be satisfactorily established merely by oral evidence. \textit{Mohdin Ahmed Khan v. Syud Mahomed and others}, 1 Mad. Rep., O. C., 92.

Oral evidence may be admissible to explain a document, but not to vary the terms thereof when such terms are in themselves clear and undisputed. \textit{Rambuddun Singh v. Kanee Sree Koonwar}, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 22.

If an agent signs a promissory note without disclosing the names of his principals the latter are not liable, and no parol evidence is admissible with a view to establish their liability. \textit{Sheo Churn Sahoo v. G. Curtis}, 3 W. R., 139.

Oral evidence must not be admitted of the contents of a decree of the original existence of which there is no clear proof. \textit{Mujeeosoddeen Caze v. Meher Ali}, 1 W. R., 212.

A written document may be explained by oral testimony. \textit{Chunder Nath Deb v. Gunga Gobindo Singh Roy}, 1 W. R., 94.

Parol evidence can only defeat a written contract when mistake or fraud is proved. \textit{Kassim Mundle v. Sreemutty Noor Bebee}, 1 W. R., 76.

Parol evidence may be received to show that, notwithstanding a deed purport to be a deed of absolute sale, the true nature of the transaction is a mortgage. \textit{Kashinath Roy v. Nowcoury Koondoo}, 1 W. R., 22.

Oral testimony, if worthy of credit, is sufficient, without documentary evidence, to prove a fact or a title. \textit{Ram Soondur Mundul v. Akima Bibe and others}, 8 W. R., 366.

The lower Court received parol evidence to supply words in an old deed, lost in consequence of the parts on which they were written having been eaten by insects. \textit{Held that the parol evidence was properly admitted}. \textit{Benodhee Lall Roy v. Dulloo Sircar, Marsh.,} 620.

Oral evidence is admissible to prove that consideration has not been paid at all or in full, notwithstanding the recital in the bond that full consideration has been paid. \textit{Sheik Wallee Mahomed v. Sheikh Koomar Ali and others}, 7 W. R., 428.

Extrinsic evidence is not admissible to alter a written contract, or to show that its meaning is different from what its words import; where there is a latent ambiguity in the wording, parol evidence is admissible to explain it. \textit{Ram Lochun Shaha v. Unnopoorna Dasser}, 7 W. R., 144.

In a suit by a husband against his wife to recover property alleged to have been nominally sold by him to her, oral evidence was not allowed to be admitted to prove that no consideration ever passed between them, after he had solemnly in a written document admitted that it had passed. \textit{Mussamut Ram Dee Koonwary and others v. Shib Doyal Singh}, 7 W. R., 334.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove a verbal contract. \textit{Ramtattlee v. Ibrahim Ismailjee Sedat and another}, 7 W. R., 353.

In a suit for purchase-money oral evidence is admissible to show how the purchase-money has been apportioned. \textit{Dhooba Thakoor v. Ram Loll Shahee and others}, 7 W. R., 408.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove the conduct of the parties, the value of the property, and other circumstances connected with the transaction between the parties to the written contract. \textit{Photo Money Dossi v. Great Chunder Bhuittharjee}, 8 W. R., 515.

Parol evidence was held admissible to explain a deed, e.g., to prove that a village not included in a putnee lease was intended by the parties to be included in it. \textit{Dhunput Singh Dooget Roy Baha-door v. Sheikh Jowahur Ali}, 8 W. R., 152.

Oral evidence cannot be adduced by a plaintiff who is barred by limitation, in order to supplement the want of an acknowledgment in writing, which, under Section 4, Act XIV of 1859, will prevent the ordinary rule of limitation from being applied. \textit{Wooma Soondery Dassie v. Biressur Roy}, 8 W. R., 289.

In a suit brought on an allegation of forcible dispossession, oral evidence, if credible and pertinent, is sufficient to establish the fact of possession. \textit{Sheo Suhayee Roy v. Godur Roy}, 8 W. R., 328.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written document, except under special circumstances. \textit{Mussamut Sam Deye Kower v. Bishen Dyal Singh}, 8 W. R., 339.

Mere oral testimony is insufficient to prove possession of land without any of the documentary evidence (leases, agreements, collection papers, &c.) which is the invariable concomitant of actual possession in this country. \textit{Thakoor Deen Tewaree v. Nawab Syed Ali Hossein Khan and others}, 8 W. R., 341.

Parol evidence is not admissible to vary a deed of sale so as to make it a mortgage deed, whether as against a party to the deed, or as against an innocent purchaser from the person in whose favour the deed was executed. \textit{Mhomed Azeem v. Rae-sooddeen and others}, 6 W. R., 111.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that the name of the party used in a deed was only benamée for another person. \textit{Tara Monree DebEE v. Shibnath Tulepatetur and others}, 6 W. R., 191.

Oral evidence may be received to prove that the consideration stated in a deed to have been paid was not paid, but not to prove that only a small portion of the consideration stated in the deed to have been received in full was to be paid at the EVIDENCE—PROCEEDINGS AND RECORDS.

A judgment adduced as evidence is not to be rejected merely on the ground of its having been extrapert. Ujjain Shaher v. Anund Singh and another, 10 W. R., 257.

The report of a serishtadar, after local investigation, cannot be legal evidence, unless it is shown that no Civil Court Ameen was available for the duty in the district. Goluck Chunder Kool v. Dookhee Ram, 12 W. R., 209.

A written statement is not legal evidence, although the same penal consequences may follow from it if false as from a false deposition. Ijootoolah Khan v. Ram Churn Ganguly, 12 W. R., 39.

Where certain amounts of rent are recited in a judgment as proved to have been paid in certain years, such recital is evidence as between the parties to the suit. Mussamut Reazoonissa v. Tookwn Yha, 10 W. R., 246.

Held (following the ruling of a majority of a Bench of three Judges) that a nazir's return is no legal evidence of service of notice. Shahkoondun Lall v. Noor Aly, 10 W. R., 3.

Held that in subjects of a public nature, such as to prove custom of preemption, &c., previous judgments between other parties are admissible as evidence, but must not be regarded as conclusive evidence, and that a custom is not established by one instance. Tota Ram v. Mohan Lall, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 120.

In a suit for arrears of rent from a putneedar, where plaintiff stated that he had, on an allegation made by defendant that a dacoity had taken place in her house, allowed her an abatement; but finding from a judgment of the High Court that no such dacoity had taken place, he claimed full rents, —Held that the High Court's judgment was admissible, with a view to ascertain the truth of plaintiff's case. Rajah Enayet Hossein v. Bebe Khooboonnissa, 9 W. R., 246.

The report of a nazir deputed to enquire into the condition of property in dispute under Section 180, Act VIII of 1859, is admissible in evidence, although he was not an Ameen appointed under Act XII of 1856. Buzal Rohim v. Lutafut Hossein; Mussamut Khodejonnissa Bibee v. Lutafut Hossein, W. R., 1864, 171.

Survey maps are not evidence of title in a dispute regarding a right of fishery. Thakoor Broma v. Thakoor Lalitnarain Dao, W. R., 1864, 120.

The report of an Ameen, however valuable in clearing up difficulties as to the identity and possession of lands, is, generally speaking, of no value in determining questions connected with the possession of lands in dispute in past times. Prannath Chowdhry v. Mirmomoyee Chowdhry, W. R., F. B., 39.

The proceedings in two former suits where, under similar circumstances, though the exercise of the right was disputed on other grounds, the right of preemption was admitted to exist, may be received in evidence in support of the custom.

A person claiming to exercise his right of preemption must show how it was made. Any apportionment of the purchase-money is altogether illegal. Madhub Chundra Nath Biswas v. Tomee Bewa and others, 7 W. R., 210.

Statements made in a verified written statement of a party are not admissible in evidence (Bayley,
A judgment in a former suit against plaintiff, to which defendant was no party, is not evidence against the parties to a present suit. Mahomed Ali v. Shurum Ali, 8 W. R., 422.

The proceedings of a Settlement Ameen cannot be taken as evidence against a person who was not a party in those proceedings. Lall Singh and others v. Modhoosoodun Roy, 8 W. R., 426.

The Full Bench Decision (7 W. R., 388) merely laid down that a decision in a suit inter alios relating to a question of adoption was not a judgment in rem, and was not conclusive; and that a judgment or order in a suit inter partes in which it had been found that the plaintiff had been adopted, could not be used at all as evidence of the fact of adoption in a suit inter alios. It only spoke of decrees or judgments inter alios, and never intended to speak of the admissibility or inadmissibility of thackbust maps or other similar surveys, as to whether they would or would not be evidence against persons who were not parties to them. Mootie Lall and others v. Ranee, 8 W. R., 64.

A judgment in a former suit against plaintiff, in a suit for damages for defamation of character, a police officer's report to the High Court, legalevidence. Byjnath Singh and others v. Moharance Indurjeet Koor, 8 W. R., 331.

The investigation by a Magistrate in a case in which he found that the lands in dispute were not within his jurisdiction, but within that of another Magistrate, is not evidence. Chundra Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Sorbo Kobbia Deobia, 11 W. R., 534.

The report of a nazir that summons has been served on a defendant is not legal proof of service. Ram Soodur Chuckerbutty v. Kalee Komul Dutt, 6 W. R., Act X R., 92.

The report of a sheristadar is not, under Section 180 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in view of the agreement that the Commissioner attached to the Court, legal evidence. Byjnath Singh and others v. Moharance Indurjeet Koor, 8 W. R., 331.

The conviction in a criminal case is not conclusive evidence in a civil suit for damages in respect to the same act. Bishonath Neogy v. Huro Gound Neogy, 5 W. R., 27.

A copy of translation of what a Magistrate is supposed to have said in English in a proceeding under Act IV of 1840 is no evidence of an admission. Ramjee Lall v. George Anderson, acting manager of the Rajah of Durhbanghak, on behalf of the Court of Wards, 7 W. R., 141.

Copies of depositions given in suits in which defendant was not a party cannot be treated as evidence in a case in which he is a party. Shumbo Geer Gossain v. Ram Jewan Lall, 8 W. R., 509.

A summary decree under Regulation VII of 1799, for the rent of 1265, at a higher rent than that at which the ryot claims to hold, which decree was passed in accordance with two summary decrees of 1263 and 1264, for the reversal of which a suit was then pending in the Civil Court, became a nullity on the reversal of these decrees, and is no evidence in a suit for enhancement of a variation of rent depriving the ryot of the benefit of the presumption under Section 4, Act X of 1859. Toy Kishore Chowdhray and others v. Gopal Lall Thakoor, 6 W. R., Act X R., 28.

The report of an Ameen upon a local investigation is sufficient evidence to support a decree, if it is believed by the Court, and considered sufficient, without further evidence to corroborate it. Seetaram Mookerjee v. Ramnarain Mookerjee and others, 6 W. R., 51.

Plaintiff, as representing decree-holder, sued for confirmation of title and for sale of the property in execution. Defendant's case was that he was purchaser for valuable consideration from the original judgment-debtor. The lower Appellate Court set aside this plea, on the ground that the High Court had declared in special appeal, in a previous litigation between defendant and another party, that the purchase in question was spurious, null, and void.

Held that the decision of the High Court, though not binding and final evidence against the defendant in this suit, was sufficient to give plaintiff a prima-facie case which, by the rules of pleading, it was for defendant to rebut. Abdoel Kureem v. Suffer Ally, 11 W. R., 118.

The mere fact of a particular rate of rent having been decreed against two ryots not having a right of occupancy, is not enough to show that the rate so decreed was the rate prevailing in the neighbourhood. Surakhuloonissa Khatoon v. Gujones Bukloor, 11 W. R., 142.

Suit to recover damages for a malicious prosecution. The case for the prosecution having been that the plaintiffs had dishonestly broken open the defendant's grain pit, and the defence that it was done under a claim of right, the Joint Magistrate convicted the accused. His sentence was reversed by the Court of Session, and then this suit was commenced.

Held that in the absence of any special and probable circumstances to rebut it, the judgment of one competent tribunal against the plaintiffs affords very strong evidence of reasonable and probable cause. Patrimi Bagiyappa v. Bellamkonda China Venkayyo, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 238.

Where records from a Government office are required as evidence, it is for the Court to send for them; but papers required from a Court of Wards, which is not a Government office, must be obtained by the party who needs them, by means of a summons on the proper officer. Sobhee Tha v. Soshunauth Tha, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 150.

A judgment inter partes may be received in favour of a stranger as against a party thereto, not as concluding such party, but as evidence for what it is worth. Bhrub Nath Tooe v. Kally Churn Chowdry, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 112.

Where an order for a local investigation, under Section 180, Code of Civil Procedure, is not objected to by the opposite party at the time it is made, the Court is justified in viewing as evidence the report of the Commissioner, and the depositions taken by him, being a part of the record. Ramruknl Ram v. Sonlumnaflz Y/La, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 375.

A Civil Court is bound to receive as evidence authenticated documents named in the plaint, and filed by the plaintiff's pleader on the day appointed for fixing issues, even though through inadvertence of the amilah they were not made part of the record. Ram Runjun Chuckerbutty v. Annund Chander Mustkerjey, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 323.

Where there is a conflict between a Judge's memorandum of evidence and the recorded depositions of witnesses, the Court must be guided by the latter. Moharannc Hcearanath Koorun v. Bbou Bumr Narain Singh, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 375.

The lower Appellate Court was held to have committed an error in law in admitting the plain filed in the previous suit as evidence against the present defendant, and also in relying on a decision of 1867, which did not determine any question of right as between the present plaintiff and the present defendant with reference to a julkur in dispute. Kashee Chunder Mozoomdar v. Seetul Chunder Tullabatter, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 157.

Decree in favour of either party, to which the other was not a party, or the proceedings of the revenue authorities, though not binding, should be treated as evidence to which the Court should give such weight as it thinks proper. Collector of Furreedpoore v. Kalie Dass Huvarah, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 194.

Suit regarding a chur claimed by defendant as having formed on the bank of the river adjacent to his village, and by plaintiff on the ground that the bed of the river belongs to his village.

The survey in this case having been made at a time when neither of the present parties held any right in the land, but when both villages belonged to the same proprietor, was held to be some evidence of possession at that time, not only of the julkur but of the right of property in the river, and possession under these circumstances to be some evidence of title. Mohinee Mohun Dass v. Khajah Assanoollah, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 73.

5—Admissibility of Evidence.

In a suit to recover property claimed by plaintiffs as shebahits lately in possession, and wrongfully ousted therefrom, it was held that statements made by the ancestors of plaintiffs and defendants were receivable as evidence. Where a suit of this kind it is incumbent upon the plaintiffs to prove the title which gives them the right to recover possession of the property, just as it would if they were seeking to recover upon a secular instead of a quasi religious title. Nund Pandah v. Gyadhur and others, 10 W. R., 89.

An original document upon which the plaintiff based his suit was proved to be in the possession of the defendant. In a previous suit the defendant's mother had filed the document, and on removing it had, according to the rules of practice, placed a copy there instead. The defendant on being summoned failed to produce the same. Held that a copy of such copy, so filed in Court, was admissible as evidence. Held also that a mother can bind her sons acting in good faith as their guardian. Mahhul Ali v. S. M. Masnad Bbce, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 54.

In a suit for land claimed as originally belonging to a lakhiraj holding of plaintiff's ancestor, which had been resumed by the zamindar, who afterwards caused it to be sold in execution of a decree as the lakhiraj of his debtor, it was held that the judgment in the resumption suit was no evidence of plaintiff's title as against the auction purchaser (defendant) who had been no party to the suit. Maha Moya Dossee v. Foodsttree Deb, 10 W. R., 113.

Where a Principal Sudder Ameen had deputed a civil ameen to enquire into the fact of possession, instead of hearing the evidence on the point himself,—Held that, even if the Principal Sudder Ameen's order was improper, the deputation of the ameen was legal, and the evidence taken by the ameen was legal evidence, to be considered on its own merits. Ram Churn Mahtoon v. Suruobjct Mahtoon and others, 9 W. R., 494.

Where an Ameen had been deputed by a Civil Court to enquire into the question of possession, his report and the evidence taken by him are admissible under Section 180, Act VIII of 1859. Bboun Roy v. Nobin Roy, 9 W. R., 601.

No dakhill or document, unless of very old date, or for some other special reason, is admissible in evidence unless it is attested in some way. Luchmeput Singh v. Junggulse Kullyan Doss, 9 W. R., 147.

Section 47, Act II of 1855, does not refer to evidence of living witnesses, but to declarations of deceased persons in cases of pedigree, who, though not related by blood or marriage to the family, were intimately acquainted with the family, and possessed under these circumstances to be some evidence of title. Mohima Chund Chund v. Mothooranath Ghose, 9 W. R., 151.

The reception of a bond in which land is pledged as a mere collateral security as evidence, though not registered, is not barred by Section 49 of the Registration Act. Woody Chand Jiunu v. Nity Mundul and Poresh, 9 W. R., 111.

An authenticated copy of a hustabood of 1209, B. S., of which the original was put into the Collectorate by the zemindar according to Regulation VIII of 1800, was held to be no evidence against third parties, defendants in a rent suit. Ram Nursing Mitter v. Tripooora Sondery Dassia, 9 W. R., 105.

Private butwarra papers are good evidence towards showing what lands were in fact comprised in the estate at the time of butwarra. Dwarkanath Roy Chowdhry v. Huronath Roy Chowdhry, W. R., 1864, 238.

A copy of a record-keeper's report is not evidence, nor is a copy of a Magistrate's proceeding in a suit regarding other property covered by the deed in dispute. Dwarkanath Bose v. Chandee Churn Mookerjee, 1 W. R., 339.

A power of attorney authorizing the registration of a deed of mortgage, and recognizing a previous power to execute the deed of mortgage, is admissible as original evidence by way of admission of the document. Hossein Jan v. Muhkdoumunn, 2 W. R., 45.

A document found to have been subsequently added to, yet in some degree accepted as genuine, is not inadmissible in evidence. Surbomungula Dossee v. Maharajah Sutesh Chunder Roy, 2 W. R., 231.

Authenticated copies of documents, of which the originals are filed in another suit, are admissible as evidence when not objected to by the other side. Geoursrurn Dos v. Kanhya Singh, 2 W. R., 237.

A survey award sought to be set aside cannot be treated as evidence. An Ameen's report is evidence, without any specific documents corroborating his finding. Ishan Chunder Stein v. Hurse Churn Dey, 2 W. R., 278.

In a suit for account by the representatives of A., deceased, a document was offered as evidence purporting to be a copy made by deceased of an acknowledged instrument. The defendant containing an entry of a payment of Rs. 5,000 by the deceased to the defendant, and the purchase therewith by the defendant of company's paper for the deceased. Held that, by itself, the document was inadmissible. But when further evidence was given by a witness that the deceased had stated to him that the document was a correct statement of his account with the defendant,—Held that such evidence was admissible; and that, with the addition of this evidence, the document also was admissible as containing an entry by the deceased against his interest. But, quere, whether the circumstance that the entry only indicated a conversion of the money into a new shape did not take away the character of its being an entry against interest.

Mussamut Zaynub and others v. Hadjee Baba Caransee, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 54.

Decrees and proceedings to which the defendants were not parties are not admissible as evidence against them. Rajah Sult Surn Ghosal v. Dhone Krishna Sircar, 1 W. R., 88.

Neither an alleged potkah nor jumma-wasilakee papers (when objected to by the other side) are receivable in evidence, until some proof beyond mere conjecture is given of their genuineness and authenticity, and the hearsay evidence of three witnesses does not supply the defect. Gowind Chunder Ady v. Mussamat Auloo Bebee, 1 W. R., 49.

The deposition by a caze of the vendor's admission to him of a sale and receipt of consideration, together with the conduct and statements of the parties, form legal evidence of the sale as against the vendors. Hurrish Chunder Dutt v. Teen Courree Dutt, 5 W. R., 175.

A copy of an alleged deed of partition set up to defeat an ordinary rule of Hindu law, with respect to succession, and taken from the record of a miscellaneous proceeding, without any suggestion as to what has become of the original, is not admissible in evidence. Ishan Chunder Chowdhry v. Bkyrub Chunder Chowdhry, 5 W. R., 21.

A survey map sought to be set aside may be used for the purpose of testing the correctness of an Ameen's report. Puddo Monee Dossee v. Biseshur Dutt Chowdhry, 5 W. R., 34.

A copy of a deposition of a person who is alive if filed in the lower Court, and not objected to there, may be used as evidence in the Appellate Court. Fukeroodeen Mahomed Ashun Chowdhry v. Kurrleen Buksh Chowdhry, 5 W. R., 43.

A executed an instrument in favour of B., thereby covetanently to repay B. the amount of a loan, together with interest, and mortgage certain immoveable property as security for repayment of the same. B. sued A. for the debt. Held that the instrument did not directly create, declare, transfer, or extinguish any right or title in immoveable property; the land was mentioned as a collateral security, and therefore the instrument was not inadmissible in evidence under Section 13 of Act XVI of 1864. Gopal Prasad v. Nandaranee, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 192; Io W. R., 252.

A proceeding of a Criminal Court is not admissible as evidence; a Civil Court is bound to find the facts for itself. Keramuttoollah v. Gholum Hossein, 9 W. R., 77.

Reports of officers appointed under Regulation I of 1814, if received as evidence in the first Court, and not objected to in the Appellate Court, may under certain circumstances be accepted quantum valeat. Bhikoo Shahoo v. Teik Ali Khan, 9 W. R., 86.

In order to make the evidence of a deceased witness legally admissible, provided the admission of the evidence is questioned, it is strictly necessary to prove the death of the witness. Queen v. Gogaitur and others, 12 W. R., 80.

Where no objection had been taken as to the admissibility of documentary evidence, viz., a decree and other proceedings in regard to that decree which had been made use of by the opposite party, an Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to exclude it.

Where a defendant allows, without objection, a purchaser of a plaintiff's interest in the suit to substitute his name on the record under an order of Court, he cannot afterwards contend that the suit is there stayed. Bir Chandra Roy Mahapatier v. Bbsi Dhar Roy Mahapatier, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 214.

The plaintiff executed a deed of sale of a moiety, and a lease of the other moiety of certain property to B. B. instituted a suit under Section 15, Act...
EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

XIV of 1859, which was dismissed. B. then returned the deed of sale and lease to A., with the following endorsement under his signature, viz., “returned, no claim.” A. instituted the present suit for recovery of possession of the said property, and the Court held that A. had no right to sue for a moiety of the property, as the same had been conveyed to B.; and that the endorsement of the deed of sale, “returned, no claim,” was not admissible in evidence, as the same had not been registered.

Held that the entry was only of evidence that the transaction was inchoate, and not final, so as to require a reconveyance.

Held that as the plea as to the inadmissibility of the evidence for want of registration was not specially taken in the Court below, it could not be allowed in special appeal.

Held that the onus was upon the defendant to prove his purchase. Girish Chandra Roy Chowdhry v. Srimati Amina Khatun, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 125.

That the evidence was given in the absence of the other side is not enough to make the deposition of a witness taken on commission inadmissible. Ram Chand Mookerjee and others v. Kaminee Dubea, 10 W. R., 236.

Under Section 58, Act III of 1851, Government chittas are admissible as evidence in cases in Chittagong. Mahomed Fedye Sirdar v. Oseeoodeen and others, 10 W. R., 340.

Transfer of an under-tenure, endorsed upon the back of the tenant's pottah, is not admissible in evidence unless it be stamped as though it were a separate deed. Tetai Abom v. Gagai Gura Chawas, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 30.

Where a party putting in chittas called in a witness to attest them, but the witness did not do so, and the party did not apply to the Court to compel him to do so, the chittas were held to be no legal evidence, even though admitted by the lower Court without objection from the opposite party. Jijutoothah Khan v. Ram Churn Gangooley, 12 W. R., 39.

The verdict of a Criminal Court, with respect to the alleged theft of notes, is no evidence of the absence of such notes. Panna Lall v. Gopiram Bujriah, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 2.

Where the accounts of a mortgagee have been in possession, their income-tax papers are inadmissible as evidence in his favour, though they may be used against him. Shah Gholam Nusuf v. Mussamut Emmanun and others, 9 W. R., 275.

Under Section 4, Act II of 1855, a Court is entitled to refer to entries made by its own officer, the Nazir, and find thereon that a warrant had been issued in accordance with an application admitted to have been made. Nilkunth Chucker-butt v. Sheo Narain Koowoor and others, 8 W. R., 272.

Rough notes taken down by an Assistant Collector of what was said by witnesses whose depositions are not recorded are not evidence such as is required by law, and an opinion based on such evidence is without legal validity. Bula Thukoor v. Meghlim Singh, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 269.

A copy of a kazi's register is not receivable in evidence. The register itself should be produced or proof given of its loss, and the entry should be verified. Jaffree Khanam v. Imdad Hossein, 2 N. W. R., 314.

It is the practice of the Courts to receive evidence as to the actual payment of consideration-money, notwithstanding the sale-deed may contain an admission of the receipt thereof. It being generally, if not universally the case, that the consideration-money is not paid at the time of the execution of the deed, gross injustice would be committed if such evidence were excluded.

To enable an appellant in special appeal to succeed on the grounds that the depositions of his witnesses were not recorded, he must show that application was duly made that they should not be summoned, or that, being present, application was duly made for their examination. Surm Rai v. Ukhman Rai, 2 N. W. R., 209.

The admission of the daughter of a mortgagee being that of a person having no title to the estate in question in the suit, is not binding on such mortgagee.

It is the province of the Court which has to decide issues of fact to determine the amount of credit to which each particular proof offered is entitled; and with the fair exercise of its discretion in this respect by such Court, the High Court, as a court of special appeal, is not at liberty to interfere. Mulhia Dass v. Magk Singh, 2 N. W. R., 207.

Entries duly made in settlement proceedings, with respect to matters therein properly recorded, are, as against cultivators, evidence of such matters, although such evidence may be rebutted by other more reliable proof, if it be procurable. Dublee Lal v. Goolzar Rae, 2 N. W. R., 394.

A statement by a witness that a party is in possession, is in point of law, admissible evidence of the fact that such party was in possession. Maniram Deb v. Debi Charan Deb, 4 B. L. R., F. B. R., 97; 13 S. W. R., F. B. R., 42.

An unregistered document, requiring registration as affecting an interest in land, is admissible in evidence for any purpose for which registration is unnecessary. Lachniput Sing Dugar v. Mirza Khamy Ali, 4 B. L. R., F. B., 18, and 12 S. W. R., F. B., 11.

A suit for breach of a covenant to register contained in an unregistered mortgaged deed, the defendant cannot plead the non-registration of the instrument for the purpose of protecting himself. Such a deed is admissible in evidence for a collateral purpose without being registered. Sham Narayan Lall v. Khimajit Matoe, 4 B. L. R., F. B., 1 and 12 S. W. R., F. B., 11.

Where evidence, such as hearsay, is improperly admitted, the question for the Judicial Committee is whether, rejecting that evidence, enough remains to support the finding.

Disapproval was expressed by their Lordships of the reception by the lower Court of evidence which ought not to have been admitted. Mohur Sing v. Ghurbin, 6 B. L. R., 495, and 15 S. W. R., P. C., 8.
EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The judgment in a former suit against the same defendants in respect of the same subject-matter is admissible, though not conclusive, evidence against the defendants in a subsequent suit brought against them by other parties. Lala Ranglal v. Deonarayan Tewary, 6 B. L. R., 69, and 14 S. W. R., C. R., 201.

An Ameen had been deputed to make a local investigation, and had examined certain witnesses, but could not examine the rest, or complete his investigation and draw up his report, owing to the plaintiff not paying the necessary expenses. Held that the depositions of the witnesses without the Ameen's report were not admissible in evidence. Deonarayan Deb v. Kuli Das Mitter, 6 B. L. R., Ap. 70, and 14 S. W. R., C. R., 39.

The summons-book of the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, is admissible in evidence, though not signed by the presiding judge. Queen v. Nakur Sircar, 6 B. L. R., 729.

The report of a mouzadar, not being that of a person competent within the meaning of Section 180, Act VIII, 1859, to report upon matters in process of judicial decision, may be disregarded by a Civil Court. Rajaram Kalita v. Roopa Kugata Kalita, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 113.

Chittahs made by the revenue authorities in the course of measurement of a Government mehal stand precisely on the same footing as chittahs made by them in enquiries relating to revenue, and are equally admissible in evidence; the circumstance that the proceeding relate to a khas estate cannot deprive them of the character of public proceedings upon matters of public interest. Tarucknauth Mookerjee v. Mohendronauth Ghose, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 56.

The rule that verbal evidence is not admissible to vary or alter the terms of a written contract is not applicable where the parties did not intend that the writing should contain the whole agreement between them; and this may appear either by direct evidence or by informality in the writing. Beharee Lall Doy v. Kaminee Soodnaree, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 319.

A statement made in a case by a pleader on behalf of his client after full consideration and consultation, is admissible as evidence against that client in another case in which he is a party. Com. abutter v. Paresnauth Panday, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 135.

A map is not admissible as evidence unless it is stamped. Kunuck Monee Dassce v. Gopee Mundle, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 180.

In a suit for possession, where plaintiff put in a copy of a solehnamah to which defendant was not a party,—Held that although no question of right or title could be decided adversely to the defendant on the basis of that agreement, yet it would be evidence that defendant did not alter the tenure of possession, and for what purpose they had been prepared. Sreemutty Dassce v. Pelarum Dassce, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 261.

In a suit to recover possession of certain land on the allegation that it was part of plaintiff's jotejumna, which had been previously held by his father and mother, plaintiff's inability to substantiate an alleged pottah was held to be no reason why he should not be permitted to fall back upon other evidence, e.g., possession by his father under a tolooke jote title. Luckhee Chunder Chuckernbutty v. Ramdhan Shaha, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 399.

A solehnamah was considered admissible as evidence against plaintiff, because, although he was not a party to it, his maternal uncle, who were the managers on behalf of his mother through whom he claims were parties, and certain boundaries therein laid down contradict the statement as to the boundaries now made by him. Mahomed Anwar Chowdry v. Roy Chunder Ghose, 17 S. W., R. C. R., 522.

The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover rent due upon a muchilka executed by the defendant. The defendant admitted that he occupied the land under the express contract contained in the muchilka. The muchilka was a document, the registration of which was compulsory, under the Registration Acts, but was not registered.
6.—OATHS AND AFFIRMATIONS.

A member of the Church of England is not exempt by law from taking an oath in a Court of Justice in India, although he may entertain sincere objections against taking an oath on the Bible, and is willing to make an affirmation binding upon his conscience. The English Statute 17 and 18 Vic., Chap. 21, does not apply to India. P. Vatu Mudali v. W. Steuerly, 2 Mad. Rep., 246.

When an individual who is unable to read and write presents himself to affirm solemnly or make oath to the truth of an affidavit, it will be sufficient, in order to meet the requirements of Section 9, Act VIII of 1863, in obtaining his verification, to allow him to affix his "mark" in lieu of his "signature," and, in affirming or swearing him, to vary the usual words by saying "mark instead of signature," in lieu of "signature." Anonymous, 9 W. R., 357.

When a plaintiff before a Moonsiff came and petitioned the Judge, complaining that the Moonsiff had improperly refused to examine his witnesses, the plaintiff dismissed his suit, although informed that witnesses were in attendance, and the Judge upon examining the petitioner upon solemn affirmation, and finding the charge unproved, ordered proceedings to be taken against the petitioner for giving false evidence,—Held that the Judge had no authority to examine the petitioner upon oath in such a case, and that the oath having been made, and the evidence given coram non judice, could not form the subject of a prosecution for false evidence. Queen v. Chota Jadub Chunder Biswas, W. R., 1864, Cr., 15.

A witness who is not a Mahometan or Hindu ought to be sworn, and not examined under the provisions of Act V of 1840. Queen v. Ramikat Kingle, 5 W. R., Cr., 65.

Where a witness was, at the beginning of the day, solemnly affirmed once for all to speak the truth in all the cases coming before the Court that day,—Held that he might be convicted, under Section 193 of the Penal Code, of giving false evidence in a suit which came on that day, although he was not affirmed to speak the truth in that suit after it was called on for hearing, and the names of the cases in the day's list were not mentioned when the affirmation was administered. Queen v. Venkatachalam Pillai and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 43.

A witness may be examined either on oath or on solemn affirmation, but he cannot be both sworn and put on solemn affirmation at the same time. Queen v. Hossein Sirdar, 13 S. W. R., Cr. R., 17.

A Hindu who has become a convert to Christianity is not under a legal obligation to speak the truth unless his evidence be given under the sanction of an oath on the Holy Gospels, so as to justify a conviction under Section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. A statement made by a witness in a criminal trial not on oath or solemn affirmation is not a declaration within the meaning of Section 199 of the Penal Code, nor is the witness bound to make a declaration under Section 191.

A Hindu who has become a convert to Christianity cannot be convicted under Section 193 of the Penal Code unless his evidence be given on oath. Vendamutti, 4 Mad. Rep., 185.

An agreement to take an oath by the parties to a suit filed in Court is not an adjustment by mutual agreement or compromise within the meaning of Section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Konnapalum Uthatchadam Hajo v. Perotta Melodan Ramen Nambiar, 4 Mad. Rep., 422.

7.—SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

A copy of a disputed deed cannot be taken as evidence without proof that the original is out of the power of the party producing the copy. The admission of the existence of the original is not tantamount to an admission of the correctness of the copy. Musasamut Beebe Kurn v. Ruttun Bhuggi, W. R., 1864, 186.

yet in a case in which a copy of a letter was filed without objection in the Court of first instance, and the writer of the letter (one of the defendants) was cross-examined as to it, the lower Appellate Court was held not to be justified in refusing to consider that the copy was evidence of the letter. James Fegredo v. Mohamed Modessur and others, 10 W. R., 267.

After an appeal was filed the decree was destroyed. Held that a copy in the possession of the appellant might be received upon evidence given of its authenticity. Bishnudal Singh and others v. Mussamut Khaduma and others, Marsh., 217.

The evidence of members of the family would be the best evidence as to whether the parties were joint or separate; the account books would be simply corroborative. Jagun Kooer and others v. Rugkoonundun Lall Sohoo and others, 10 W. R., 148.

A copy of a pottah cannot be received in evidence without cause being shown for the absence of the original. Robert Watson and Co. v. Sham Lall Pundah, 10 W. R., 73.

Whether secondary evidence is admissible in the plaint or cross-examination question for the determination of the Court which tries the case on its merits, but the such determination is open to special appeal, if it is come to without evidence at all, or without evidence legally sufficient. Chunderkant Ghose v. Showdaminee Debia, 9 W. R., 517.

It is not enough for a party desirous of adducing secondary evidence of the contents of a document which ought to have been registered, to show that he cannot produce it, because it is not registered; he must show that its non-registration was not due to any fault or want of diligence on his part, or he must show that the party against whom he desires to use it was guilty of such fraud in the matter of non-registration that he cannot be allowed to object on that ground to the production of the secondary evidence. Kumeezoodaleen Haldar v. Rujub Ali, 9 W. R., 528.

Where a Court is satisfied that a deed was executed, and has been lost or destroyed, it should receive secondary evidence of the contents, documentary or oral; and it is not necessary that the witnesses called in to give oral testimony should be attesting witnesses. Syud Lotfoollah v. Mussamut Nusseebun, 10 W. R., 24.

Where defendant, after executing a bill of sale in respect of certain lands, and receiving the full amount of purchase-money agreed upon, had repudiated the contract, and refused to make over possession, it was held that though the fact of the deed of sale not being registered precluded it, under Section 13, Act XV of 1864, from being admitted as evidence, yet plaintiff was not excluded from showing by other evidence that he performed his part of the contract. There is nothing in that section which says that no contract purporting to create or transfer any right, title, or interest in land shall be recognized by the Civil Court unless reduced to writing. Meer Helalooddeen Chowdhry v. Abdoo Sultan, 9 W. R., 351.

A copy of a document should not be received in evidence until all legal means have been exhausted for procuring the original. Where a document is alleged to be in the possession or power of a certain party, such party's denial in pleading that he has ever had the document is not sufficient to justify the omission of the processes the law provides for his testimony, and of his being called on to produce the original.

If a Judge is satisfied of a plaintiff's inability to produce an original pottah on which he relies, he ought to allow secondary evidence to be given of the contents of the document; but he should be satisfied, on reasonable grounds, that the evidence gives a true version of its contents, and he should require sufficient evidence of the execution of the pottah. Shookram Sookul v. Ram Lall Sookul, 9 W. R., 248.

When a suit was brought on a mortgage deed alleged to have been destroyed in the mutinies,— Held that if it were established that the original deed was destroyed, and that there was no copy of it in existence, the Court could receive oral evidence as to its contents, and determine the genuineness or otherwise of the deed on that evidence solely. Sheosurun Ojha v. Mussamut Gooleebane Kooyr, W. R., 1864, 264.

When the original of a deed, relied on by the plaintiff, was at the command of the defendant, and plaintiff was only obstructed in producing it by the non-attendance of the defendant, the very best secondary evidence to which he could have recourse in lieu, was held to be an authenticated copy filed in another case by the defendant herself; and, as such copy could not, under the ordinary rules of the Court, be removed from the custody of the Judge, it was held that there is no rule of law in Indian Courts of equity and good conscience to prohibit the reception of a copy of such copy under the circumstances. Mukhool Aty v. Musnud Bibee, 11 W. R., 396.

A copy of a document, purporting to be the copy of an original kobala alleged to have been registered by a Cazee, does not come within the provisions of Regulation XXXVI of 1793, Section 17. It might possibly be receivable as evidence if the accuracy of the first copy, and the execution and loss of the original, were proved. Sreemunt Kowar v. Akbar Mundul and others, 8 W. R., 438.

Copies of income tax returns should not be admitted as evidence without proof that the persons who made them were dead. Lalla Gooro Sukhay Singh v. Bromo Deonarain, W. R., 1864, Act X, 105.

Where a lease is inadmissible as evidence, because it is not registered, no secondary evidence of its execution is admissible. Mussamut Kaboolun v. Shumsheer Aty and others, 11 W. R., 16.

Secondary evidence cannot be given of a lost instrument requiring a stamp which was not stamped.

Quare,—Whether permission to pay the stamp duty and penalty can be given in the case of a lost instrument. Aruncheliam Chetty v. Oluuppap Chetty, Mad. Rep., 312.

An authenticated copy of an authenticated copy of a deed is admissible as secondary evidence; but proof of the execution of the deed itself must be given before the copy can be admitted. Tayunnissa Bibi v. Kunwar Sham Krishna Roy, 7 B. L. R., 621, and 15 S. W. R., 228.

A certified copy of a document deposited in a public office, which document is itself a copy, is admissible as secondary evidence where the absence of the original is duly accounted for. Bhulabhâdi Gullabhâdi et al. v. Modji Desâjî et al., 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 48.

Where an instrument, the registration of which was rendered compulsory by Section 17 of the last Registration Act (Act No. XX of 1866) was destroyed accidentally by fire soon after its execution, and before registration,—* Held, in a suit to compel the defendant to execute another instrument of the same effect as that which had been destroyed, that secondary evidence of the contents of the unregistered instrument was admissible. * Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed for. Nynâkku Routhen v. Vakanû Mahomed Naina Routhen, 5 Mad. Rep., 123.

8.—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Neither number nor respectability of witnesses will supply the place of exact and necessary knowledge of the facts to which they depose.

Mutations of names in the Collector's register, as between two brothers, are papers which the Court is bound to consider as indicating that the members of the Hindu family between whom they have been executed were at that time living separately each for himself. Paara Lall v. Musamut Bhawoor Koer and others, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 100.

In a suit for rent and damages in which the amount of rent payable is in issue, the Judge must require the plaintiff to show that in past years the defendant has paid what the plaintiff is now demanding, and for the purpose of proving these past payments the best evidence is requisite, secondary evidence being only admissible when the absence of primary evidence is satisfactorily accounted for. Ram Jeebun Lall v. Nund Lall, 2 W. R., Act X R., 43.

In a suit to recover damages caused by the defendants plundering the house of the plaintiff, the Court of first instance passed, upon the evidence of two witnesses, a decree in favor of the plaintiff. Court of first instance passed, upon the evidence of two witnesses, a decree in favor of the plaintiff. Court of first instance passed, upon the evidence of two witnesses, a decree in favor of the plaintiff. Court of first instance passed, upon the evidence of two witnesses, a decree in favor of the plaintiff.

As it has been held by the Privy Council that, according to the practice in India, the recital in a deed of the payment of consideration-money is not conclusive evidence of such payment, a Judge was declared to have acted correctly in considering evidence on the question whether consideration so recited had passed or not. Lolliita Dassia v. Rutton Mallee Bhutacharjee, 10 W. R., 208.

The certificate of the Inam Commissioner does not afford conclusive evidence of the title of the person, nor is his decision one over which the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction. Avissâpha v. A. Ramjogee, 2 Mad. Rep., 241.

One of the co-sharers in an estate which had been sold under Act XI of 1859 sued to recover her share from the certified purchaser (M.), himself one of the original owners. Her case was that she provided a portion of the purchase-money, but that her name was not registered on account of M.'s having no written authority to act on her behalf. M., however, executed an ikrarnamah in which he admitted receipt of the purchase-money of plaintiff's two-annas share, and covenanted to give her possession. Defendant denies having received any contribution or consideration-money from the plaintiff, though admitting execution of the ikrarnamah. Held that even if the ikar fully and unequivocally admitted payment of the consideration-money, that would not be conclusive evidence of payment as against the defendant, and proof would have to be given. Musamut Neymun v. Musaffar Wahid, 11 W. R., 265.

Suit for the recovery of a debt upon an agreement which was not brought forward or alleged to be in existence, when the same demand was successfully disputed in a former suit brought during the infancy of the predecessor of the present appellant, who was the son of the alleged original debtor. The respondent having failed to account satisfactorily for the non-production of the agreement before, and the probabilities of the case being against the genuineness of the agreement, the suit was dismissed. Katchy Kulusama Ramgarha Kalaka Thelu Chetty, Zemindar of Oodiarpalliam, v. Balosamy Chetty, 3 W. R., P. C., 50.

The incidental mention of a child's age in the recital of a will is no proof of the exact age of that child. The proceedings after the devisor's death granting a certificate to the guardian of the girl are merely proof of her being a minor at that time, and do not disclose what her exact age then was. In the absence of proof of the person who made a sale being a minor at the time she executed a deed of sale to plaintiff, the onus of which lay on the defendant, the sale by her was upheld. Nilmony Chinthry v. Musamut Eheerwissi Khanum and others, 8 W. R., 371.

In a suit for arrears of rent it was held that settlement papers were only corroborative evidence; and that, though introduced on the testimony of sworn witnesses, they were not sufficient legal evidence of the yearly rental. Burwantrlee Vail v. Fforlong, 9 W. R., 239.

The fact of a person not having brought a regular suit to obtain possession of land in reversal of a revenue award within three years of its confirmation by the Revenue Commissioner is not conclusive evidence of title. It can only be evidence of the date of possession at the time when it was prepared. Sunkurnarain Singh v. Rajajh Ram Tarun Deo, 4 W. R., 56.

A Moonsift's report of a local investigation, when not shown to be substantially erroneous in its data or reasoning, should convey the greatest weight as EVIDENCE—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

The mode in which the offices of priest and manager have been held for many generations is material evidence of the conditions on which the original gift of an idol was made. Nimaye Churn Prom the Manager Chudhry v. W. R., 197.

A former decision as to the situation of a chur, when an eight-annas share was in dispute, is not binding as an estoppel, although it is strong evidence in a suit in which the other moiety is disputed. Nasimooddeen Ahmed Chowdry v. J. P. Wise, 5 W. R., 282.

Until a party has exhausted all the means prescribed by law for compelling a witness to produce a document known to be with him, and so long as the original is procurable, or its loss not satisfactorily accounted for, secondary evidence cannot be admitted. In cases of adoption careful scrutiny is necessary. The party seeking to establish an adoption is bound to produce the best evidence procurable. The rule by which the validity of such document may be tested is contemporaneity of execution and publication of the deed of permission; and in the absence of this test all the circumstances bearing upon the alleged deed, and all the probabilities for and against its genuineness, must be thoroughly considered. Greesh Chunder Lahoori v. Ramlool Sircar, 1 W. R., 145.

Possession is evidence of title, and gives a good title against a wrong-doer; but a person who has not had possession cannot, without proof of title, turn another out of possession, even though that other may have no title, for possession is a good title against any one who cannot prove a better.

The mere production of a conveyance is no evidence that the person producing the document has obtained a conveyance from the person to whom the property is thereby conveyed, more especially when the person who produces the document is not, and never has been, in possession of the property.

A statement relating to property, made by a person when in possession of that property, may be evidence against himself, and all persons in possession of the property after such statement; but a statement made by former owner that he had conveyed to a particular person cannot be evidence against third persons. Clarke v. Binduban Chunder Sircar, W. R., F. B., 20; Ind. Jur., O. S., 97.

Where both parties to a suit adduce calculations made in neighbouring villages as evidence to establish their respective cases, they impliedly consent that the calculations, although not strictly legal, shall constitute the materials upon which the Court is to act, they are not entitled afterwards to object to them in special appeal. Anar Mollah v. James Hills, 10 W. R., 139.

A person's title or property in a tree may be evidence against any one who cannot prove a better. Clarke v. Binduban Chunder Sircar, W. R., F. B., 20; Ind. Jur., O. S., 97.

Where a subsequent deed of permission to adopt was proved, a distinct reference made in it to a former deed of the same character which corresponded in every particular with the description of it given in the subsequent instrument, was, in the absence of proof of the existence of any other document, or of anything calculated to throw doubt on the former instrument, held sufficient to establish its identity. Kishen Sunkur Dutt v. Maha Mys Doeessi, W. R., 1864, 210.

Where defendant's written statement is referred to as evidence in plaintiff's favour, the whole of it becomes evidence in the suit, and the Court can, in its discretion, attach thereto, or to any portion thereof, so much value as seems to it fit. Radha Churn Chowdry v. Chunder Monooe Shikdar, 9 W. R., 290.

Where a considerable time has elapsed of enjoyment and apparent acquiescence, a purchaser, or one claiming through him, may be absolved from showing anything more than the fact of a sale made to him under some ostensible plea of necessity. Madhub Chunder Hajraaj v. Gobin Chunder Banerjea, 9 W. R., 358.

What is sufficient evidence to warrant a presumption that a tenure has been held at a uniform rate for twenty years will depend upon the circumstances of each case. Pnee Mohun Mookerjee v. Annund Moyee Debba and others, 9 W. R., 158.

The appearance of an alleged minor may be taken into consideration in disposing of his plea of minority, but the decision must rest mainly upon positive evidence which he is bound to produce. Khetter Mohun Ghose v. Ramessur Ghose, W. R., 1864, 304.

The existence of a decree against the father is not sufficient evidence of the necessity for his selling his son's interest in ancestral property. Kanto Lati v. Greeshkumar Lati, 9 W. R., 469.

On an enquiry whether a signature is genuine the signature cannot be compared with a document not before the Court, or with one of which the authenticity is disputed.

When a plaintiff attempts to enforce, as a contract of loan binding upon the defendant, immediately upon its execution, an instrument which he verbally agreed at the time should not so operate, and for which the defendant received no consideration, the latter may give evidence of the verbal agreement. Aumamgola Chetti v. Kristavan Nayakan, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 457.

Where enhancement is sued for on the ground that the rent paid by the defendant is below the rate prevailing in the neighbourhood, it is not enough for the plaintiff to show that the adjacent lands are of a similar description to those held by defendant; he must also show that they are held by persons of the same class with the defendant. Womurrath Roy v. Ashumbari Biswas, 12 W. R., 476.

In a suit to recover a village alleged by the plaintiff to have been let to defendant on service tenury by an ancestor of the plaintiff, and to be resumable at the pleasure of a successor, the only facts proved in evidence were a holding for a long period of years and payment of rent to the plaintiff, the zemindar. Held that such facts establish merely a tenancy from year to year. N. S. Vinduva Patrudu v. Sri Raja Sanyasiraj, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 476.

In a suit against a Collector for an illegal seizure and subsequent usurpation of plaintiff's shares in an agraharam village for non-payment of tirvari due from the other tenants of the village, and to recover the increased tirvari imposed by the Collector,—Held that the fact of potahs having been issued separately to each tenant stating the share of land occupied, without defining the holding by boundaries, and the proportionate amount of assessment which the cultivator is to pay for it, though affording cogent evidence of the distinct liability of each for the amount of terre vide stated in his potthah and no more, is not conclusive evidence of such individual liability. Eliaza v. The Collector of Madura, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 59.

Uninterrupted and undisputed possession for a long time constitutes sufficient prima facie evidence of title; but if this possession is admitted to be under an adoption it will avail nothing if the adoption fails. Ranajit Haimun Hullah Singh v. Komar Gunshree Singh, 5 W. R., P. C., 69.

Where there is sufficient evidence of a fact, it is no objection to the proof of it that more evidence might have been adduced. Ramalinga Pillai v. Sadasiva Pillai, 1 W. R., P. C., 25.

Where the question for trial is the right to possession, it is not essential that the plaintiff should prove actual possession. Gudadhir Koondoo and others v. Ram Coomas Bose and others, 6 W. R., 155.

A native case is not necessarily false and dishonest because it rests on a false foundation, and is supported in part by false evidence. J. P. Wise and others v. Sunduloonissa Chowdrane and others, 7 W. R., P. C., 13.

The very strongest and most reliable evidence is required in the case of a claim to a share in an estate larger than the Hindu law allows. Gopal Chunder Mana v. Gourmenee Dossee and others, 6 W. R., 52.

The production of a potthah in the presence of the party most interested in challenging its genuineness is a fact legally of the utmost importance in determining its genuineness. Gunee Bisw� v. Sreegopal Paul Chowdury, 8 W. R., 395.

In a suit to establish title, evidence of the plaintiff's possession, prior to the summary award under Section 15, Act XIV of 1859, under which he was dispossessed, may be good evidence of his title, and must be considered. Bolludee Kant Bhusatacha v. Doorja Dhu Sride, 7 W. R., 89.

The giving of receipts for rent, coupled with the fact of payment of rent at the old rate down to the present time, is evidence of confirmation of the tenant by the auction-purchaser and his successor. Tara Chand Dutt v. Mussamut Wakenoonnissa Bibe and others, 7 W. R., 91.

An ex parte decision is not sufficient evidence as to the rates of similar lands in the neighbourhood on which to base an enhancement of rent from Rs. 17 to 50. Mufrewoooden, alias Bhaloomeen, v. Woolfuttoonissa Bibe, 7 W. R., 194.

If a particular mouzah has been held for many years as part of a particular mehal or remindary, the fact of such holding affords a strong presumption that it is part of that mehal, even as against a purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue of another mehal who claims that part of the mehal purchased by him. It is not conclusive evidence against such auction purchaser, nor could any length of adverse holding prior to his purchase preclude the auction purchaser from recovering it, if he could show clearly that it belonged to the mehal which he had purchased. Pran Kissen Banerjee and another v. Juggobundai Dutt and others, 7 W. R., 207.

A ryot is bound to give strict proof of a uniform payment of rent for twenty years. That is a matter which should not be decided in his favour on mere inference. Sham Lall Ghose v. Boistub Churn Moomoondar, 7 W. R., 407.

In special appeal, the High Court held that evidence which did not allude to any specific acts of ownership was not sufficient evidence to prove possession.

In a suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate, where defendant pleaded the presumption arising under Section 4, Act X of 1859, and plaintiff produced in support of his claim a decree of 1860, declaring him entitled to the enhanced rent and a later decree for arrears on the same scale,—Held that the fact that the later decree had only been executed in part, and that defendants never paid more than Rs. 24 to the Government, did not neutralize the effect of the decrees as the very best evidence that the rents had varied since the Decennial Settlement. Woodoo Narain Stein v. Tarince Churn Roy and others, 11 W. R., 496.

Although, in order to prove the payment of a uniform rate of rent for 20 years, it may not be necessary to prove an uninterrupted course of receipts, yet, if the evidence in the case shows that, during the period for which receipts are not produced, the ryot was paying at a different rate of rent, that evidence must be taken into consideration with the receipts that are produced. Gobind Chunder Bloombick v. Rammonnee Dossee and another, 6 W. R., Act X R., 42.

In a suit for enhancement where the defendants plead a holding at a uniform rate from the Permanent Settlement, the mere existence of a potthah and amunlumah of 1215 is not conclusive evidence that the rate was then changed, or was the first fixed. Luchunu Narain Shaha, alias Gopeshath Shaha, v. Koorchi Kant Roy and others, 6 W. R., Act X R., 46.

The fullest proof is requisite to support a trust which is declared by word of mouth by a person at the point of death, and is in terms an intention on the part of the donor to deprive his family of all substantial enjoyment of his property. Bypro Persad Mytee v. Kena Dayee, 5 W. R., 82.

The mere entry of the name of an elder member of a Hindu family in the revenue records is not conclusive evidence that the proprietary right exclusively belongs to him, unless it be proved that the person so recorded had sole enjoyment of the same for more than twelve years. Runjeet Singh and others v. Madad Ali, 3 Agra Rep., 222.

The mere fact of a survey award, without proof of possession, is not conclusive against all other

In a suit in which the question was whether there had been a division, the sole evidence of division was the decision of a punchayat reciting that division; the question, however, not having been at all material to the point then in dispute,—Held that the decision was not sufficient evidence of the division. Bhugavat Panday v. Rama Shaiyo Panday, 4 Mad. Rep., 5.

A. and Co. and B. and Co. entered into a joint adventure in opium. A. and Co. were to send money to various places to be handed to the agents, who were to buy and sell. They now claimed money to various places to be handed to the agents, against B. and Co. for money alleged to have been sent after giving credit for sums received. The proof was the arrival of the money at A. and Co.'s books at each place, but there was no proof of payment to the agents save such entries. As to remittances to the other places, the only evidence was the books of A. and Co. at the place of despatch. Held that there was no evidence as to the latter claims; and as to the former, although the evidence appeared insufficient, the case would not be remanded, as the appellant, independent of these claims, had a balance against them. Seth Lakhmi Chand v. Seth Indra Mull, 4 B. L. R., P. C., 31; 13 S. W. R., P. C., 36.

Evidence should receive its due weight, and not be rejected from a general distrust of native testimony, nor perjury widely imputed without some grave grounds to support the imputation. Rammany Ammal v. Kulanthai Naucheer, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 1.

In a suit to recover possession of land contained in a certain Government resumed mehal, where defendant's plea was that the land had been purchased by him at an execution sale for arrears of rent as belonging to a jungle mehal, the lower Appellate Court refused defendant's application for a comparison with the maps and chittahs made on the occasion of a boundary dispute between the zamindar and Government, when it had been decided in a local enquiry that the land belonged not to the resumed mehal, but to the jungle mehal. Held that the Subordinate Judge ought to have entertained the application, the evidence offered having been the very best. Radha Churn Gaugooey v. Anund Sein, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 444.

The ex-parte deposition of a witness who might have been called and cross-examined at the trial, ought not to have any weight given to it. Lalla Bussedere v. The Government of Bengal, 16 S. W. R., P. C., 11.

The principle that a plaintiff is bound to produce the best evidence in his power was held not to justify a Judge in omitting to consider the weight and legal effect of the remaining witnesses, when plaintiff had failed to produce the most important witness. Latore Mistree v. Agamudda Nushye, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 482.

A survey map and proceedings may in certain cases form evidence sufficient to prove title; and it is beyond the province of the High Court in special appeal to lay down any rule as to what weight is to be attached to that evidence. Oommut Fatima v. Bhugo Gopaul Dass, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 50.

9.—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

Held, in a suit for enhancement of rent, that jumma-wasil-bakee papers, when produced by the zamindar at the citation of the defendant himself, were not merely corroborative but, under Section 4, Act X of 1859, good and sufficient evidence as against the latter in rebutting the presumption under Section 4, Act X of 1859. Shib Prosad Doobey v. Promothanath Ghose and others, 10 W. R., 193.

Jumma-wasil-bakee papers are at the best corroborative evidence, not independent testimony. Queere,—Can such papers be dealt with as a "book," or be described as "kept in the regular course of business," within the meaning of Section 4, Act II of 1855? Beechho Burral and others v. Bheekoo Roy, 10 W. R., 291.

Jumma-wasil-bakee papers ought not to be regarded as anything else than "books proved to have been regularly kept in the course of business;" and by Section 43, Act II of 1855, they are "admissible as corroborative, but not as independent proof of the facts therein stated." They are correspondently insufficient by themselves, and without independent proof, to rebut the presumption which arises under Section 4, Act X of 1859, in favour of a defendant who has been found to hold lands at a uniform payment of rent for more than twenty years. Ram Lall Chuckerbutty and others v. Tara Soondery Burmony, 8 W. R., 280.

In suits upon two hypothecation bonds executed by different defendants, the plaintiffs in the first suit sued for recovery from the defendants personally, and in the second suit for recovery from the defendants and also from the property hypothecated, and in each case obtained a decree. The lower Appellate Court reversed both decrees, on the ground that the bonds were vitiated by a fraudulent alteration of them in the material part, viz., the date fixed for payment. Held that the documents might be used as evidence of the debt between the parties and also of the creation of the charge upon the property hypothecated. It lies upon the parties who seek to enforce an altered instrument to show the circumstances under which the alteration took place. Ramasamy Kon v. Bhavanna Arrar, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 247.

A survey map is not sufficient, in the absence of other satisfactory proof of title, or of long antecedent possession, to establish a plaintiff's right to the land, and to disturb the defendant's present possession. The Collector of Rajshahye v. Doorga Soondery Debia, 2 W. R., 210.

Hold that the counterpart of a lease, being a registered document, was admissible in evidence, and could not be rejected solely on the ground that the original registered lease was not before the Court. Majid Hossein v. Jwunon Khewat, 3 Agra Rep., 233.

Where chittas were produced by plaintiff as evidence of certain lands being māl, it was held that they were sufficiently attested by the deposition of the village gomastah that they were the chittas of the village while he was gomastah, and that he had been present when, with their assistance, a pūrtāl measurement had been carried out in the village. Dahee Prasad Chatterjee v. Ram Coomar Ghosal and others, 10 W. R., 443.

Bundobust papers are nothing more than a contemporaneous record of tenures as they existed in the years specified, and do not in any way import the commencement of a tenure or a fixing of the rent at that particular time. Dhum Singh Roy v. Chunder Kant Mookerjee, 4 W. R., Act X R., 43.

A recital in a deed of mortgage granted by one of two undivided brothers to a third party, that a division had taken place between the mortgagee and his brother, is no evidence of separation as against the latter or his representatives. Gopaj Govind and Narayan v. Narayan bin Toojahue and Madoo Lakaram, 1 Bom. Rep., 31.

A hatchitta book is a document kept especially as a security for the vendor; and in the absence of fraud it must be considered binding upon him. Gopemohun Roy v. Abdool Rajah Surjan Nacoda, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 358.

Former decision rejecting issumnuvisee papers, which were not satisfactorily proved as conclusive evidence of a putnee's title to land, adhered to. If properly supported and proved, such papers are prima facie evidence until rebutted. The Government v. W. Fergusson, 9 W. R., 158.

Issumnuvisee papers which were mainly relied on by a plaintiff putnee, in a suit brought to assess lands said to have been held by a ghatwal, in excess of the area to which he was admittedly entitled, were rejected as insufficient, in the absence of satisfactory proof as to whence the information in these papers was derived (decisions contra cited and disserted from); and the defendant ghatwal's contention that all the lands had been held at a uniform payment of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement having been maintained, it was held that, whether he came under Sections 3 and 4, or under Sections 15 or 16, Act X of 1859, his rent could not be enhanced. James Erskine v. The Government and Manick Singh and others, 8 W. R., 232.

A writing under the hand of a deceased husband, declaring that he gave his wife power to adopt, though not complete as a testamentary disposition, may yet be evidence of a declaration of fact. Brolskoshiere Dassce v. Sreenath Bose, 9 W. R., 463.

Measurement papers of a zemindary made for the purpose of a partition are admissible as evidence as to title, as showing what the zemindary consisted of, though the partition may not have been carried out. Anund Chunder Roy v. Huronath Roy, 4 W. R., 26.

The account books of a factory regularly sworn to by the manager are legal evidence of payment of rent. Kaltee Kant Mojoomdar v. R. Watson and Co., 2 W. R., Act X R., 75.

Books proved to have been regularly kept in course of business are admissible as corroborative but not independent proof of the facts stated. Dwarka Das and others v. Dwarka Das, 3 Agra Rep., 308.

If an instrument on which a case depends should appear to have been altered, it cannot be received in evidence or be acted upon till it is most satisfactorily proved by all the subscribing witnesses at the least, and other evidence, that the alteration was made antecedently to the signature. Ptembar Manickjee v. Mottcheewand Manickjee, 5 W. R., P., C., 53.

Maps drawn for one purpose are not admissible as evidence in a suit for a totally different purpose. John Ker v. Nuzzar Mahomed, 2 W. R., P., C., 29.

"Ought not to be accepted" may have different meanings with reference to documentary evidence and to parol evidence. Kheman Kure Choudhry v. Beer Chunder Joobraj and others, 6 W. R., 56.

How far and when canoongee papers are admissible as evidence for the zemindar as to the rate of rent paid by the ryot. Kheeramooy Dossee and others v. Bejoy Godind Bural and others, 7 W. R., 533.

An examined copy of a quinquennial register is evidence without the production of the original. Sreemutty Oodo Monee Dahee and others v. Bisnoo Nath Dutt and others, 7 W. R., 14.

Receipts of rent purporting to have been given by the former owners of a jote are not admissible in evidence without proof as to the handwriting of the parties who gave them, or some satisfactory account of the custody from which they came. Womensh Chundra Mookerjee and others v. Sreemutty Bama Dossee, 7 W. R., 15.

In a suit by a Mahometan to compel the defendant to rejoin him as his wife, a mere declaration by the defendant in a mortgage-deed executed by her, that she was the wife of the plaintiff, would not be evidence of the removal of the legal impediment to the re-marriage created by the divorce; neither can a presumption be drawn from the fact of the re-marriage that the impediment had been removed and that the defendant had again become a lawful wife to the plaintiff after re-marriage. Aktaroonissav. Shairinoollah Chowdhry, 7 W. R., 268.

With regard to the admissibility of evidence in the Indian Courts in India, no strict rule can be prescribed as in the Courts in England. A copy of a document coming out of a public office, and certified by the officer in charge of that department to be a true copy, is admissible in evidence. Unida Rajah Raj Venkataperumal Rouswe Behadoor v. Pemmamsy Venkatadyr Naddeo, 4 W. R., 121.

Old canoogee papers cannot, in the absence of evidence to show what they are and that they came out of proper custody, be received in evidence; before such papers can be admitted as evidence against a party it must be shown how they can be used against him. Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty v. Tara Soondery Burmone, 8 W. R., 517.

Documents not bearing proper stamps under Act X of 1862 are not admissible in evidence even to show the terms of the deed as against the party producing the same. Thakoer Oomrao Singh v. Thakoorance Methab Koornwar and others, 3 Agra Rep., 103.

A copy of a copy of a sunnud is not admissible in evidence. Rajah Neelanund Singh and others v. Nusseeb Singh and others, 6 W. R., 80.

The books of a creditor are not admissible as evidence against his debtor to prove the debt, unless there is other evidence of the debt; in which case entries in such books may be admitted as corroborative evidence under Act II of 1855, Section 43. In the case of a running account with items on both sides, the Statute of Limitations will not operate as a bar to items beyond the period of limitation, if there has been an agreement or understanding between the parties that only the balance should be due; and if within the period of limitation the debtor has admitted the state of the balance, including such items, to be correct. Ramkrizto Prat Chowdhatry and others v. Hurrydas Koonda, Marsh., 219.

The recital in a lease granted by a husband of his wife's property, that he was empowered by mooktearnamah to manage her business generally, is not evidence against the wife that such a mooktearnamah existed. Bhikunrarn Singh v. Musammat Nizot Koer, Marsh., 373.

Certificated copies of survey measurement chittas, field books, and maps are admissible in evidence. Govind Rutho Singh v. Anund Moyee Debia and others, 8 W. R., 167.

It is doubtful whether, under Section 43, Act II of 1845, jumma-wasil-bakee papers are admissible as corroborative evidence. Sheo Sukhoye Roy and others v. Goodar Roy and others, 8 W. R., 328.

Chittas are evidence of title in boundary disputes, if an account is given of them, and they are properly introduced and verified. Sudakhina Chowdhryen v. Raj Mohnun Bose and others, 11 W. R., 350.

Pencil memoranda on a Government survey map held to be admissible as evidence.

Survey maps prepared under the authority of Government are evidence of possession, and, therefore, also of title. Loazima and thaka papers are legal evidence quantum valeat. Shanshee Mookhee Dossee and others v. Bisessureet Dudee, 10 W. R., 343.

A copy of a document cannot be admitted as evidence, unless the absence of the original is properly accounted for; the mere fact of the latter being in another Court is not a sufficient reason. A map is not evidence of title, but only of possession, even though prepared by the gomastas of both plaintiff and defendant. Seemutty Gourmo-

Under Section 13, Act II of 1855, Government survey maps are evidence, not only with regard to the physical features of the country depicted, but also with regard to the other circumstances which the officers deputed to make the maps are specially commissioned to note down. Further than this they are not evidence as to rights of ownership. Koomodiny Danae v. Poorno Chunder Mookerjee, 10 W. R., 301.

The fact of a pottah being more than 30 years old was held not to do away with the necessity of proof before it could be used as evidence. Fazil Sirdar v. Cheunm Biswas and others, 10 W. R., 237.

Copies, and not translations, must be tendered when parties wish to put in evidence judgments delivered in English; but there is no law which declares that Bengalee copies of formal decrees of a Zillah Court are inadmissible. Kedr Nath Mahastah v. Kaduminee Dudee, 10 W. R., 239.

Documentary evidence tendered by a plaintiff cannot be rejected merely because it has not been adduced in a former suit to which plaintiff was a party. Purejean Khatoon and others v. Bykunt Chunder Chuckerbutty, 9 W. R., 380.

Deeds of sale or wills which divert the course of inheritance must be proved by legal evidence before they can become operative. Abedoonissa Khatoon v. Ameeronissa Khatoon, 5 W. R., 257.

The absence of erasures or alterations is no ground for admitting what is at first sight a possible forgery to be a true document. Ram Sukhoye Singh v. Oodet Singh, 4 W. R., 9.

Held that jumma-wasil-bakee and peskee papers, though corroborative evidence against tenants, cannot be admitted as against a party holding under an adverse title. Mohima Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Poorno Chunder Banerjee and others, 11 W. R., 165.

Documents filed in a case under Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, cannot be accepted as evidence in a suit before a Deputy Collector. Bhoobun Singh v. Dhooorub Singh and another, 11 W. R., 171.

A mere alteration in the rate of rent on the part of a zamindar or person other than the tenant will not prove a variation, unless it be shown that the tenant submitted to or paid that varied and enhanced rate. Gopal Mundul v. Nobo Kishen Mookerjee, 5 W. R., Act X R., 83.

Documentary evidence should not be summarily rejected for want of legal proof, unless the party producing it understands the nature of the proof required, and has had an opportunity of producing it. Sheikh Gholaam Hossain v. Okhoy Coomar Ghose, 3 W. R., Act X R., 169.

Where the parties make no bond-fide attempt in the lower Court to prove the genuineness of conveyances on which they rely, they have no right to ask the Appellate Court to relieve them of the consequence of their own negligence. Misree Begum and others v. Punnoo Singh and others, 8 W. R., 362.

It is competent to show that a bond executed in favour of A. was really in favour of B., and that A. was a party to it merely in the capacity of gomastah of B. Musammul Khooob Koornur v. Moodnarain Singh, 1 W. R., P. C., 36.

In a suit for enhancement of rent, a collection account or jumma-wasil-bakeefiled many years previously by the plaintiff's predecessor in a suit to which the defendants are not parties, is not per se evidence for the plaintiff that the defendants' predecessor held at the rates of rent mentioned therein.

"Semble." That, if proved to have been regularly kept in the way of business, the paper might have been put in as corroborative evidence under Section 43 of Act II of 1855, or might have been used by the writer thereof to refresh his memory under Section 45.

"Semble." That, if it were shown that the writer was dead, or could not be found, the original might have been put in evidence under Section 39. Khcero Monee Dassee v. Bejjoy Gobind Burral, 7 W. R., 533.

The recital of necessity in a lease is not per se legal evidence of the existence of the necessity which under Hindu law may justify an alienation by a mother or grandmother. Obhoy Churn Doss v. Meer Sahib Ali, 5 W. R., 244.

The mere insertion of the name of the defendant's father in the loazima papers of the zemindar is no sufficient evidence that rent has ever been paid for the lands in dispute. Shibo Soondery Debia and others v. Ram Dhaimat Kunee and others, 6 W. R., Act X R., 17.

"Held" in a suit to establish title to land, where an Ameen's map which professed to show the daghs of a hustaboodchittah was not questioned by either party, it was not open to the Court to question its correctness, and to try whether it was possible to construct any map from the chittah. Brijanauth Choseondey v. Lall Mesah Munnerpooree, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 391.

Where a Court Ameen is appointed under the Civil Procedure Code, his report is only evidence on the point to which the commission refers; any report he chooses to make on any other point is no legal evidence in the case. Syud Abdool Ali v. Mullick Sudderodeen Ahmed, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 493.

An investigation as to mesne profits made by a Civil Ameen in execution of a decree is no evidence against a party who was absent therefrom; and if his name was not mentioned in the petition for execution no presumption can arise that he was a party thereto. Bhomanath Chatterjee v. Lordchund Dogare, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 372.

Survey proceedings are evidence of actual possession, and must be regarded as correct, so far as the appearance of the country is recorded thereon, but if questioned in time, are not conclusive on the question of title. Rajah Lsidanand Singh v. Rajah Mohendro Narain Singh, 13 S. W. R., P. C., 7.

When it becomes necessary to establish the genuineness of a writing, the testimony of the writer or of some person who saw the paper or signature written is not, as a matter of law, the only mode of proof. Evidence as to the similarity of handwriting is just as good in point of admissibility as the testimony of the subscribing witnesses. Grish Chunder Roy v. Bhugwan Chunder Roy, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 191.

An adversee's account-books may be used as corroborative evidence, not as independent testimony. Ramessur Singh v. Ajoodya Perihad Singh, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 294.

When a document is tendered, it is the first business of a court to satisfy itself whether the document is admissible at all. If not evidence between the parties, it should be rejected at once. If an admissible document comes under the class which requires proof, it should be distinctly noted that it is admitted on the record subject to proof, in order that if no proof be offered, the opposite party may ask the Court to take it off the record. W. B. Manson v. Galam Kabria Moonsker, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 490.

In a case involving a boundary dispute, a survey map, if not conclusive evidence, is evidence of an important character, which ought to be looked into and considered. Guddadhur Banerejee v. Tara Chund Bannerjee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 3.

It is unfair and most unsafe for an Appellate Court to start objections to a document after the witnesses who proved it have been examined and allowed to go without being asked any question affecting the genuineness of the document. Lalla Mohadeo Perihad v. Sultund Misser, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 502.

The Judge was held to have been wrong in summarily excluding copies of a kobala, and of certain admissions from evidence merely because they were copies and not originals, when no objection was taken to them, and in having rested his decision against the plaintiff's title upon two decrees, one of which was not between the parties to this suit, and the other had been found by the first Court to have been fraudulently obtained, without any enquiry having been made into this matter by the Judge. Sreemutty Luzina Bibee v. Juggo Mohun Dutt, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 378.

In a suit between two ryots holding from the same zamindar as to a portion of a khal, the question being whether the disputed portion of the khal was situated in plaintiff's or defendant's holding, the Moonsiff on remand sent for the zamindar, who put in a verified kyfeut in favour of plaintiff, whereupon the Moonsiff, considering it unnecessary to enforce the zamindar's attendance, gave a decree for plaintiff. The Judge was of opinion that the kyfeut was not admissible in evidence, and dismissed plaintiff's suit without enforcing the attendance of the zamindar. The Court in special appeal held that the Judge was bound to consider the plaintiff's pottah as against the real owner only, and to have examined him, and remanded the case accordingly. Khetter Mohun v. Soobul Dass, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 426.

Although a Commissioner's report should have very great weight attached to it, it is not absolutely binding. Venata Reddi v. Venkaturamayati, 1 Madras Reports, 418, dissented from; Kanikutla Chellamayati v. Poleshetti Papaiya, 6 Mad. Rep., 36.

A document in the shape of a petition to a Court setting forth an arrangement come to between the parties in a suit, may be received in evidence in support of a fresh suit founded upon the agreement recited in such petition, although only stamped as a petition, it not appearing that the agreement recited was made in writing. Ramdyal and others v. Dhooleny Tjahumur, 3 N. W. R., 14.

10.—ANCIENT DOCUMENTS.

To establish the authenticity of a document so old that the witnesses to its execution cannot reasonably be expected to be in existence, it is not necessary to go behind the possession of the present owner. If the custody from which the documents come into Court has been and is the custody in which, judging from the purport of the document itself and the other circumstances of the case, it would naturally be expected to reside, then the document ought to be treated as authentic to such extent as to be admissible in evidence between the parties. Chunder Kant Mistree v. Brogonauth Bysack, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 109.

With regard to the proof of ancient documents the proper rule is, that if they are more than thirty years old they need not be proved, provided they have been so acted upon or brought from such a place as to offer a reasonable presumption that they were honestly and fairly obtained and preserved for use, and are free from suspicion of dishonesty. Application of this rule considered. Vithul Mahadeb et al. v. Daud Valad Muhammad Husen et al., 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 90.

When a document is so old that the parties to it and the witnesses are in all probability dead, and evidence cannot be produced to prove the factum of its execution, the rule in England, as well as in this country, is to compel the party who relies upon the document to show that it comes from the custody in which it would naturally be expected to reside, were it a real and authentic document.

Sreekhant Bhuttacharjee v. Rajnarain Chatterjee, 10 W. R., 1.

The antiquity of a pottah is no evidence of its genuineness. Alucka v. Kasee Chunder Dutt, 1 W. R., 131.

The rule regarding the proof of documents more than thirty years old is that they need not be proved, provided they have been so acted upon or brought from such a place as to offer a reasonable presumption that they were honestly and fairly obtained and preserved for use, and are free from suspicion of dishonesty. Hari Dhanger et al. v. Biru Darsa et al., 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 135.

 Held that the Subordinate Judge was bound to consider the plaintiff's pottah and amulnamah as evidence in this case, they being both very old documents and found in the possession of the party who, in the natural course of things, would be their custodian; and that he ought, before deciding against the plaintiff's evidence, to have insisted upon the attendance of one of the parties who had been cited by them as witnesses, but who had refused to attend. Ramdhum Ghose and others v. Eshan Chunder Ghose and others, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 346.

A Court is bound to decide upon the evidence without reference to any previous arrangement between the parties as to the mode in which the evidence is to be dealt with.

The rule of the English Law of Evidence, which dispenses with formal evidence of the execution of a document more than thirty years old, assuming it to be applicable to the Courts of this country, does not apply to a case in which it is not shown in whose custody the document has been kept; and even then the Court could reject the document if it thought it to be a fabrication.

A document thirty years old does not prove itself, in the absence of evidence, that it has come from the proper custody. The finding of a fact by the lower Appellate Court upon evidence, a portion of which was inadmissible, is not such a finding of fact as cannot be interfered with in special appeal. Guro Das Dey v. Sambhunath Chuckerbunity, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 258.

Per Bayley, J.—The omission in the first Court to enquire or specify in the judgment as to whether a pottah, which is admittedly 102 years old, and which is actually supported by the evidence of old witnesses, comes from proper custody or not, is not a sufficient reason to invalidate the finding that the pottah is proved; nor is it a defect in the investigation affecting the merits of the case which would justify the inference of the High Court in special appeal.

Per Glover, J.—The question as to proper custody is not in issue, the Judge having found the pottah proved by the evidence of witnesses. Shah Budinodeen v. Golam Peer, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 279.

The phrases "attesting a document" and "proving a document" are defined and distinguished. Bissonauth Chatterjee v. Madhubonse Dabee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 511.

11.—PRODUCTION, PROOF, AND INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Evidence of possession and enjoyment is good evidence of title as against the real owner only where it has been undisputed and continuous. Gooroo Persaud Roy and others v. Bykunt Chunder Roy and others, 6 W. R., 82.

An affidavit in support of an application for taking documents out of the custody of the Court for the purposes of another suit should state in what way they are material to that suit. Mollwo, March, and Co. v. Rajah Pertab Chunder Singh, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 283.

Where a document is found on independent evidence to have been in existence long prior to the institution of the suit, and also to be genuine, it is not necessary to insist on the testimony of subscribing witnesses. Mahomed Fedye Sirdar v. Oseoodeen and others, 10 W. R., 340.

The production of documents in the Courts of India is subject to risk, and of all men a defendant talookdar has the greatest reason to be careful of his title-deeds, since, whatever may have been the recognition of his title by his existing zamindar, he may at some future time have to establish that title by the strictest proof against one coming in by purchase at a sale for arrears of revenue. Gopal Lal Tagore v. Tilluck Chunder Roy, 3 W. R., P. C., 1.

Remarks on the impropriety of allowing documents to be filed after most of the witnesses had been examined, without any explanation of their being tendered at that late period and without any enquiry whether they were relevant or otherwise, were made by one document filed after evidence and argument concluded, though it had been in plaintiff's hands before the commencement of suit. Gungalnarain Dass v. Saro Dey and others, 6 W. R., F. B., 23.

When a lower Court dismisses a suit on the ground that the documents on which the plaintiff based his title were not authentic and genuine, it is incumbent on the lower Appellate Court, before giving the plaintiff a decree, to find whether the documents in question were authentic and genuine. Shibchunder Bhuttacharjee v. Jugguttara Chowdhry, 8 W. R., 488.

There is no rule of law prohibiting a Court of Justice from receiving the evidence of a defendant in favour of his co-defendant. The best evidence in support of a deed of gift are the witnesses to its execution or its custody: it is not necessary to support it by documentary evidence. Ram Comul Chuckerbutty v. Nund Ram Koolal and another, 10 W. R., 261.

It is not necessary for a party who desires to prove a document to call the writer of it, if alive, as a witness, so long as he can get other satisfactory proof of its execution. Gunganarain Dass v. Saradomohan Roy, 12 W. R., 30.

The plaintiff having sued for rent upon a kubul, and failed to prove it, is not entitled to a decree if he shows that the defendants had paid him rent for a number of years, the Court observing that it would not be the exercise of a sound discretion to allow a party who relies upon a document to set up a fresh case when an issue as to the execution of such document is found against him, and there are good reasons for believing that the document is not genuine. An admission by one ryot as to the rate at which he holds (though against his own interest) is not evidence to prove the rate at which another ryot holds. Nurrohurry Mokhonto v. Narain Dossie, 8 W. R., F., B., 23.

When it has been found that a deed has been duly executed, and that a certain sum of money has passed in consideration of that deed, and where there is a recital in the deed of the fact that the balance of the consideration-money was paid previously to the execution of the deed, then there is something more than a presumption that the whole consideration has passed upon the deed. Doun Singh and others v. Bhuggobutty Deba, 8 W. R., 215.
The signing of a deed of conveyance of property made with full knowledge of the contents of the deed and of the object of the signature may convey the right to the person signing, even if the signature be not made in the assembly when the deed was executed. Sunutullah v. Darse Bibe, 1 W. R., 66.

A signature of a Rajah of the ancient Nuddea family was held to be valid, even though it did not contain the name of any particular individual. Gunee Biswas v. Sreegopal Chowdhy, 8 W. R., 395.

Where a document, although blank, when signed and put into the hands of one of certain parties, is afterwards filled by the consent of those parties with words which had already been agreed upon by them, and have, in consequence of such consent, been already drafted, the signature to the fair copy, although before the words were filled in, is just as binding as if it was attached to the document after the words had been written down in it. Aked Hosein v. Lalla Ram Surun and another, 11 W. R., 216.

In accordance with former rulings (1 W. R., 331; 6 W. R., 82), it was held that, before a document, of whatever age it may be, can be put in as legal evidence, there must be sworn testimony as to the custody from which it has come. Kalee Tara Deka v. Nilamund Shaka, 12 W. R., 90.

Plaintiffs must, on the presentation of their plaints, produce in Court the originals of the document relied on by them in support of their claim. When a plaintiff can satisfy the Court at the hearing that some document on which he desires to rely was not presented with the plaint, because he was ignorant of its existence at the time, the Court will probably allow it to be received as evidence. Campbell v. Keith, 1 Hyde's Rep., 287.

In a suit for possession of land, the order that the party in possession do set forth a list of documents, is to be confined to documents other than title-deeds. Where the title-deeds are required by the plaintiff on special grounds, as, for instance, where it is alleged that the defendant is a trustee for the plaintiff, those special grounds on which they are required should be set forth by affidavit. Heeralal Saha v. Jadub Chunder Chuckerbutty, Cor. Rep., 66.

Held that the misconception of a document is an error in law, and is as such within the term of the present special appeal law; and that the Courts, in order to ascertain the intention of the parties, must look to the writing alone and to the words of the document of that nature; the purport of the copy being that documents which are not in the record when that document was written down in it. Aked Hosein v. Lalla Ram Surun and another, 11 W. R., 216.

A Judge may lawfully employ a former decision for the purpose of showing that documents which bear such a distant date that their attestation or proof in the usual form is impossible, had been used publicly on a former occasion in the same Court when they had been found to be authentic. Nagur Singh and others v. Mshoo Sudon Khan Sirdar and another, 11 W. R., 309.

A ryot's receipts should not be rejected when they are not denied merely because he has not called the zamindar's agent to attest them. Kaityain Dabea v. Soondury Dabea, 2 W. R., Act X R., 60.

The issue being as to whether a certain mookhtearnamah, which purported to have been signed by the respondent, was valid or not, the validity of the mookhtearnamah was pronounced against, as there was no legal proof of its execution, and the absence of legal proof was not compensated by any legitimate inference arising out of or by any of the facts disclosed by the other parts of the case, the whole of the transactions relative to the execution thereof being of a very questionable character. Seeut Pershad v. Mussamut Doolhin Budam Konwur, 8 W. R., F. C., 22.

In a suit for possession, the fact of plaintiff having been a subscribing witness to a potthah which is set up by the defendant is not conclusive against the former. Hossetine Khanum v. Tijun Lull, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 293.

The party producing dakhilas is bound to give some evidence of their having been signed by the person by whom they purport to have been granted, although the opposite party does not deny the signature. Bharul Roy v. Gunga Narain Mohapatra, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 211.

In order to prove legally the execution of a document of which a copy only is on the record, it is not enough for the witness to depose that he executed a document of that nature; the purport of the copy must be read to him, and he must be asked whether the original of the same was what he executed. Mussamut Kamoola Khanum v. Khajah Mohamed Eusa Khan, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 429.

Where a plaintiff sues upon title-deeds as evidence of his claim he is bound to file them with his plaint, or else have them ready to produce at the time of the first hearing; otherwise he is bound to show good cause for not having done so.

In a suit to set aside a summary award under Section 246, Civil Procedure Code, a Judge is bound to 12.—Presumptions.

In a suit to recover possession of certain lands in the bed of a river, which had changed its course, and to get rid of the effect of a Deputy Magistrate's order under Section 318, Criminal Procedure Code, it was found that plaintiffs had been in possession when the lands were surveyed some years previously as part of their village, and had continued in possession up to the year in which the criminal proceeding was held. Held that the presumption raised by the plaintiff's continued and undisturbed possession was not rebutted by defendant's allegation that he was entitled to the julkurof the river. James Hogg v. Denonath Koondoo and others, 11 W. R., 566.

When a seminadar gives a lease, the presumption is that he is in a position to give possession of the property leased. Douzeliv. Rajah Tek Narain Singh, 2 W. R., Act X R., 103.

A Judge in this country is Judge both of law and fact, but if, in deciding upon the facts, he deals improperly with the presumptions which the law would raise, he commits an error in law which the High Court can correct in special appeal. When a Judge decides without legal evidence he commits an error in law. Ramee Surnomoyee v. Luchmeeput Doogur and others, 9 W. R., 338.

Where A., is compelled by process of law to pay money which B. was legally compellable to pay, the presumption that it was paid at the request of B. Saajana Chari and another v. Shakkarat Patan and another, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 411.

An acknowledgment of the plaintiff in a former case of having realized a certain sum of money on account of rent paid for three years may afford some presumption that the older items in the account were satisfied, and, if that presumption could not be rebutted, might be an answer to an action on the older demand. Rajah Enayet Hussein v. Sheik Doodar Bus, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 97.

An adversary is entitled to the benefit of such presumptions as naturally arise from a party's failure to prove his allegations, even though the onus was in the first instance on the former. Gumer Biswas v. Sree Gopal Paul Chowdhyr, 8 W. R., 395.

The presumption of legitimacy, where there has been opportunity for sexual intercourse, is not irrebuttable. Pandiya Tilden and another v. Puli Tilden and others, 1 Mad. Rep., 428.

Uniform payment of rent for twenty years may be presumed without proof of such payment for every separate year. Komul Lochun Roy v. Tomerooddeen Sirdar and another, 7 W. R., 417.

Proof of the fact that, in matters connected with succession, the law of the country of domicile has been adopted by a family, negatives any presumption arising from the observance of ancient customs in other matters. Chandro Seekher Roy v. Nobin Soondur Roy, 2 W. R., 197.

In a suit for resumption, where the defendant gives direct evidence of possession for a period only a few years short of 1790, it is competent to the Court to infer from collateral facts and other evidence a possession prior to that period. Hira Money Debha v. Lakemah Mundud, 2 W. R., 135.

The fact that, under certain circumstances, a river is in some places, and at extreme time of low water, fordable, does not warrant the presumption that the river was a fordable stream at the time of the formation of the chur. G. P. Wise v. Ameronissa Khatoon, 3 W. R., 219.

When the payment of rent is not a matter directly in dispute, and dakhilas are produced by the ryot to show that he is entitled to the presumption under Section 4, Act X of 1859, if the landlord does not deny them he is legally presumed to admit them. Kansie Khoda Newaz v. Mebo Kishore Raj, 5 W. R., Act X R., 53.

Uniform rent for the 20 years preceding the suit ought not to be presumed upon evidence which only touches a portion of that period: on the other hand, it is not necessary to have evidence bearing directly on every one of the 20 years. It is sufficient if the whole time is included within limits upon which the evidence bears, provided the evidence leads to the belief of uniform rent. Catherine Foschola v. Huro Chunder Bose, 8 W. R., 284.

Defendant having purchased a decree, caused the judgment debtor's (P.'s) rights and interest in certain property to be sold in execution, and bought them himself. Plaintiff, who had purchased one B.'s rights and interests in a 4-annas share of the property, intervened; but his intervention having been rejected in the summary department, he sued to set aside the summary order, and to establish his vendor's right in the property. Defendant having admitted the sale to the plaintiff, the first Court thought it unnecessary to examine the witnesses to and the writer of the deed of sale, and, finding the plaintiff in possession, decreed the suit. This decision was reversed in appeal. Held that the lower Appellate Court did wrong in presuming collusion between B. and his vendor to destroy plaintiff; and, if that presumption had been rejected, the deed without examining the writer and witnesses: and that it should have decided whether plaintiff was in possession at any time under the deed of sale. Ram Lall Jha v. Issur Chunder Dey and others, 10 W. R., 451.

In a suit to recover the value of plundered property, when a question arose as to the amount of the property misappropriated, it was ruled that, unless the defendant produced the property and showed it not to be of the value stated by plaintiff, the strongest presumption should be made against him, and the highest value assumed. Soonder Money Chowdhraiv. Bhooobun Mohun Chowdry, 11 W. R., 536.

In a suit for recovery of possession and for opening a water-course (defendant having raised the land and stopped the water-course), plaintiff's assent to defendant's acts cannot be presumed from the fact of his not having objected. Oodyeessure v. Huro Kishore Dutt, 4 W. R., 45.

uniform payment of rent. Besschur Chuckerbutty and others v. Woomachurn Roy, 7 W. R., 44.

An unexplained variation of one rupee in a total jumma of sixty rupees is not a material variation, and does not deprive the tenant of the benefit of the presumption of uniform payment from the Permanent Settlement. Anundlott Chowdhry v. J. Hills, 4 W. R., Act X R., 33.

When a ryot, in an enhancement suit, proves uniform payment of rent for twenty years previous to the enhancement, the presumption of such uniform payment may be relied on, even if the first receipt in a jumma in 1783, and had since paid the same amount for his own benefit, but was given to his wife and children for their maintenance. Teemut Aly v. The break of one year in twenty is not sufficient to set aside the presumption that the receipts for nineteen years prove the payment of a uniform rent. Tarine Kent Lahoree Chowdhry v. Kalie Mohun Surmah Chowdhry, 3 W. R., Act X R., 123.

A variation in the rate of rent, which does not affect the integrity of the jumma, does not rebut the presumption of a holding at a fixed rent from the Permanent Settlement. Gopal Chunder Bose v. Muthoor Mohan Banerjee, 3 W. R., Act X R., 132.

Under Regulation VII of 1799, a plaintiff could only sue for and recover the rent of the current year. No legal presumption arose from his having done so that the rent of prior years had been satisfied. Shahoor Mitteerjeet Singh v. Choker Narain Singh, 2 W. R., 58.

The holding for twenty years at a fixed rent from which uniform payment from the Permanent Settlement is allowed to be presumed, must be proved by the best evidence in the tenant's power. Kunuk Mone Debia v. Gunga Ram Doss, 3 W. R., Act X R., 135.

To entitle a ryot to the benefit of the presumption of uniform payment from the Permanent Settlement, it is not necessary that he should explicitly plead a holding from the time of the Permanent Settlement. His proof of upwards of twenty years' uniform holding is sufficient. Koonurwur Raj Coomar Roy v. Assa Beebee, 3 W. R., Act X R., 170.

When parties are in possession of an estate, it is generally to be presumed that they have been in possession as owners; and it lies on the party alleging that possession was of a different nature, such as that of an under-tenant, to prove the allegation. Shaktivooddeen Chowdhry and others v. Ram Gouty Chuckerbutty, 9 W. R., 556.

If a ryot pleads a holding for more than twenty years at a uniform rent on a potthah subsequent to the Permanent Settlement, the defence annuls the presumption to which he might be entitled, and the case must be decided according to the potthah. Luchmeepershad v. Ram Golam Singh, 2 W. R., Act X R., 30.

Presumption of occupancy from Permanent Settlement cannot be pleaded after a potthah brought forward to strengthen the presumption is found to be fabricated. A. J. Forbes v. Nund Coomar Mundul, 2 W. R., Act X R., 35.

Where property is acquired by a Mahometan lady living in a state of wedlock, and also by her legitimate daughter, a very small amount of evidence would suffice to dispose of the presumption arising from the fact of the title-deeds being with the lady, against the supposition of a benemee purchase. Mussamut Kundurun v. Mussamut Laktu, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 356.

In a suit for possession of jungle lands, where there is no proof of acts of ownership having been exercised on either side, possession must be presumed to have continued with the person to whom they rightfully belong. Rajah Leelamund Singh v. Mussamut Basheroonissa, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 102.

A thatched house, which had been used by the proprietor of the land whereon it stood as a house of prayer for himself, family, neighbours, and the public, having been blown down, a brick built one was erected in its stead by public subscription and maintained for the same purpose. After the proprietor's demise his heirs claimed the right and title to the house. Held that the consent of the proprietor, added to the long use of the house by the public, entitled the public by way of implied grant to the occupation of the same as a house for prayer, and the plaintiffs could not succeed. *Sufroo Shaikh Durjee v. Put-Wrongful interruption does not destroy a right

R., 308.

Honesty and bona fides must be presumed in all cases in the absence of evidence to the contrary, as well in all applications for execution as in every other instance in which the conduct of a party to a civil suit or criminal prosecution is considered and has to be dealt with by a Court of justice. *Meer

The legal presumption in favour of a child who was born in his father's house of a mother lodged appropriately treated as a wife, who was treated as a legitimate child by his father, and whose legitimacy was disputed after the father's death, was a safe and proper one to be made, and that the opposing case had not, as it ought to have been, strictly proved.

The ordinary legal and reasonable presumptions of the case must not be lost sight of in the trial of Indian cases, nor an entire history thrown aside because the evidence, or some of the evidence, of some of the witnesses was incredible or untrustworthy.

It is not the practice of the Courts in India or of the Privy Council to press against either an infant or a Hindu female a presumption by acquiescence in a rival claim from the mere non-contestation for a limited time of an adverse title.
Romamani Ammal v. Kulanthi Nancheer, 17 S.

In a suit for the demolition of a privy erected was aware of the erection of the privy and had allowed it to be completed and to remain standing for at least seven years, his application was refused.

13.-DUTY OF THE COURT WITH RESPECT TO EVIDENCE.

In examining evidence, with a view to test wheethe several witnesses who bear testimony to the same facts are worthy of credit, it is important to see whether they give their evidence in the same words, or whether they substantially agree, not, indeed, concurring in all the minute particulars of what passed, but with that agreement in substance, and that variation in unimportant details, which are usually found in witnesses intending to speak the truth, and not tutored to tell a particular story.
Nana Narain Rau v. Hurru Punth Bhad, Marsh., 436.

It behoves all Courts of first instance to take care that a party to a suit whose case has been finished is not permitted, without good reason, to mend that case by fresh evidence after his adversary has succeeded in impeaching it. Evidence given under such circumstances must always be in the highest degree untrustworthy. Hurro Monte Dossee and others v. Onookool Chunder Mukerjee and others, 8 W. R., 461.

Where the plaintiffs in these suits appealed in both the lower Courts to the jurisdiction for the determination of a previous suit as evidence in their favour, and embodied it in their pleas as being a material particular of the cause of action which they proposed to establish, they were not allowed in appeal to the High Court to object to the reception by the lower Appellate Court of the judgment in question as evidence in the present cause, on the ground that they were not parties to that case, although the Judge, on review, reversed the judgment he had already passed in favour of these plaintiffs on the strength of the decision of the High Court which reversed the judgment in the previous suit on which the plaintiffs had relied. D. Panioty and others v. Parbutty Chowdhrain, 8 W. R., 492.

Where a Court of first instance sets aside its own ex-parte judgment, and after a new trial, in which it takes fresh evidence, as well as admits that originally recorded, again gives plaintiffs a decree, it is the duty of the lower Appellate Court to enquire, under Section 57 of Act II of 1857, whether, independently of the evidence originally recorded, there was sufficient to justify the decree.
Rajul Singh and others v. Kishiree Lall, 8 W. R., 499.

The production in evidence of a forged document by a party to a suit does not relieve the Court from the duty of examining the whole evidence adduced on both sides, and of deciding the case according to the truth of the matters in issue.
Gorbilla Gace v. Goorodoss Roy, 2 W. R., Act
X R., 99.

In a suit for a sum alleged to be due on the balance of partnership accounts, the Sudder Court bought, under Section 16, Regulation VI of 1793, to have used the evidence to be supplied by the original account bookkeeper. Subject to the observations, was a balance due without objection.
Mussamut Settel Bohoo v. Harkishen Doss, 5 W.
R., P. C., 76.

The consideration of a case upon evidence can seldom be satisfactory, unless all the presumptions for and against a claim arising on all the evidence offered, or on proofs withheld, on the course of pleadings, and tardy production of important portions of a claim or defence be viewed in connection with the oral or documentary proof, which per se might suffice to establish it. Maharajah Rajaedro Kishwar Singh v. Skeepurshun Missur, 5 W. R., P. C., 55.

A Judge cannot give evidence in a case merely by making a statement of fact in his judgment.
If he intends the Courts to act upon his statement, he is bound to make that statement in the same manner as any other witness. Rousseau and another v. Pinto, 7 W. R., 189.

In examining ther several wit same facts are v see whether the words, or whet indeed, concurr what passed, but and that variati are usually foun the truth, and n: Nana Narain R. 436.

It behoves al care that a part for the Court altogether to discredit witnesses deposing viva voce by reason of the necessity imposed on the Court to sift the evidence of such witnesses with great minuteness and care. Modhossoudan Sandle v. Suroop Chandra Sircar Chowdhry, 7 W. R., P. C., 73.

When the first Court has decided a case in favour of a defendant, without receiving certain evidence tendered by him, the Appellate Court should allow him the opportunity of adducing that evidence. Mokeem Sandle v. Nawab Syed Ali Ahmed, 3 W. R., Act X R., 133.

The production of a forged document in evidence by a party to a suit does not exempt the Court from a full examination of the whole evidence adduced. The Bengal Indigo Company v. Tarinee Pershad Ghose, 3 W. R., Act X R., 149.

Where a suit which was filed originally before a Principal Sudder Ameen, who had fixed the issues and recorded the evidence of witnesses, is transferred by a Judge to his own file, the Judge, his Court being a Court of original jurisdiction, ought to have the witnesses before him and take their evidence de novo. Mussamat Unnopoorna v. Hurbullub Singh and others, 8 W. R., 465.

When a lower Court disposes of a case upon the merits as proved by evidence not legally admissible against the defendants, and the Appellate Court considers it proper to allow the plaintiff to adduce further evidence, it may either take such further evidence itself or send the case back to the lower Court to take such evidence. Ramjoy Surmah Mojoomdar v. Rajah Puran Kishen Singh, W. R., F. B., 124.

According to the practice in India, the statement in a deed of compromise of the payment of consideration-money is not conclusive evidence of payment.

In estimating the value of evidence, the testimony of a person who swears positively that a certain conversation took place, is of more value than that of one who says that it did not. Chowdhry Dabey Pershad v. Chowdhry Dowlut Singh, 6 W. R., P. C., 55.

In a suit to recover possession of land claimed by virtue of a sunnud from a rajah, in which plaintiff gave prima facie evidence of the authenticity of the sunnud and subpoenaed the rajah to prove it, it was held that the lower Court did very right in considering the plaintiff's testimony to be strengthened by defendant (rajah's) refusal to come into Court with his own story; and that the onus lay on the rajah to rebut the plaintiff's evidence, or to prove minority or other personal disqualification. Radha Kisto Singh Deo v. Gudadthur Banerjee and others, 8 W. R., 453.

It being objected in special appeal that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was based on documents which were neither admissible as legal evidence nor had any bearing on the point to be decided,—Held that though the objection to the admissibility of the evidence ought to have been taken in the Court in which the evidence was tendered, yet coming in such a shape as it did it could not be got over.

Held also (Mitter, J., dissentiente) that as defendant has succeeded in special appeal on an objection which he should have taken before, he ought to pay his own costs in this appeal, even should he succeed ultimately (the case being remanded), and that it is not the exclusive duty of a Court, but that of pleaders also, to see whether evidence tendered is legally admissible. Munrakhun Roy and others v. Fuggut Doss and others, 10 W. R., 124.

A Court of first instance, being satisfied that plaintiff's case could not be established, refused to examine defendant's witnesses. The lower Appellate Court, differing from the Moonsiff, gave plaintiff a decree. Held that, although the Moonsiff had committed a great irregularity, still as that point was not raised in the lower Appellate Court it could not be taken in special appeal. Gooroo Dass Akhoolee v. Poran Mundle, 12 W. R., 363.

Every party to a suit is entitled to have all the witnesses whom he desires to call, and is ready at the trial to produce, heard by the Court, whatever opinion the Court may form by anticipation as to the probable value of the evidence when it shall be given. Looloo Singh and others v. Rajender Laha, 8 W. R., 364.

The general duties of the lower Courts in connection with the examination of witnesses pointed out. Ramgutty and others v. Mumtaz Bibee and others, 10 W. R., 280.

The defendant pleaded payment and produced a letter of acknowledgment said to have been written by the plaintiff. The plaintiff denied its genuineness, and the Principal Sudder Ameen rejected the testimony of two pyadas who deposed to the payment. On appeal the Judge remanded the case, requiring the lower Court to give the appellant the opportunity of proving the letter, and after recording a fresh finding to return the case to his Court.

Held that the lower Court was bound to pronounce a distinct opinion as to the value of the evidence, and not to have rejected it altogether. Rumpal Singh v. Maharajfector Mungle Singh and others, 11 W. R., 106.

In a suit claiming the exclusive right to open and shut a kunwa or sluice, and to set aside the award of a Deputy Magistrate, the Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree; but the Principal Sudder Ameen, finding from several measurement and settlement papers that the subject of dispute was not a kunwa or sluice, but a pyne and water-courte, dismissed the case.

Held that the Principal Sudder Ameen ought to have given some opinion upon the oral evidence upon which everything depended; and that he was wrong in relying upon a recital in a muntrokhal khusrah which was contrary to an entry in the original khusrah. Ramput Tewaree and others v. Sheo Suhye Singh and others, 11 W. R., 159.

The lower Appellate Court was not competent to reject the documentary evidence which had been admitted by the Court of first instance, merely because it had been admitted after the first hearing of the case, or after the date on which it had been ordered to be produced. Honooman Singh and others v. H. H. Fell and others, 3 Agra Rep., 148.

Even if the evidence upon the record is in itself insufficient, a Judge may properly decide the case upon that evidence, if the defendant consents to its being taken as sufficient. It is the duty of the party who wishes to object to evidence to object in the first instance, and not to delay doing so until the case is before the High Court in special appeal.

In a suit for arrears of rent for 1273 at an enhanced rate, plaintiff relied upon an agreement said to have been executed by defendant in that year. The Assistant Collector found that the agreement had not been executed by defendant. In appeal, the Judge called an expert who proved that the signatures of the attesting witnesses were not genuine, and the decision of the Assistant Collector was affirmed.

Held that the Judge was wrong in calling for and acting upon the evidence of the expert. Bindessuree Dutt Singh v. Doma Singh, 9 W. R., 88.

Discrepancies in an account of what took place in a conversation are not a sufficient ground for disbelieving statements made by different witnesses. The manner in which evidence is to be dealt with discussed. Bhaju Sing v. Kiasnath Tewari, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 332.

Where the records of a case in appeal were not whatever papers had been sent up, together with such papers as the parties had respectively filed, with a direction to the lower Court to summon both parties, and to take such further evidence as either of them might think fit to adduce in support of his case, and to return such evidence with its own opinion for final disposal by the High Court.

Bunswarry Lal v. J. Furlong, 8 W. R., 38.

Where plaintiff and defendant respectively put in evidence different portions of the proceedings in a former suit, and found arguments thereon, the Court is bound to use them all as evidence. Beer

The fact of a party putting his name as a witness to his brother's signature to a deed conveying the whole of certain property was held to be evidence against such party, either that the whole property did belong to his brother, or that he was acquiescing in his brother's act of selling the whole. When a document is tendered in evidence the Court has no right, without distinctly deciding whether it is or is not proved to be genuine, to decline to receive it for the mere general reason that it may possibly or probably be a forgery. Thomas Oman v. Kumar Promotho Nath Roy and others, 10 W. R., 256.

A bond executed between a plaintiff who sued upon it, and the defendants, contained the following clause: "And inasmuch as we (the defendants) are urgently in want of money, and are unable to procure a stamp at the moment, we have executed the bond on plain paper. Should it be necessary for you (plaintiff) to bring a suit against us, whatever penalty you may have to pay shall be made good by us, with interest."

The Small Cause Court Judge, before whom the case was tried, considered the above clause in the bond to be evidence of an intention between the parties to avoid the Stamp Laws, and refused to receive evidence to the contrary. He also refused to admit the bond in evidence. Held, on reference to the High Court, that the clause in question did not amount to an agreement to evade the Stamp Laws. The Judge might have inferred from it that it was the intention of the parties to evade the Stamp Laws, but that he should have heard evidence to the contrary. Shushi Bhusu Banerjee v. Taranath Kar, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 329.

When the words of an agreement are plain and unambiguous they should not be explained away by extrinsic evidence, and still less by mere reasoning from probabilities. Alagya Tirrachettambala v. Saminada Pillai and others, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 264.

It is incumbent on a Judge to look at the plain-tiff's documents when they have been accepted by,
and formed the basis of, the decree of the Court below. He should not reject them merely because they have not been filed with the plaint. Mohabber Doss v. Lalla Roy, 1 W. R., 12.

A written statement cannot be called for by an Appellate Court, or read as evidence against any party to the suit, save the person by whom it is made, and those who are bound by admissions made by him. Juggessur Mookerjee v. Gopee Kishen Sen, 3 W. R., 50.

The general fallibility of native evidence in India is no ground for concluding against a transaction when the probabilities are in favour of it. The Privy Council, whilst lamenting the great latitude with which documentary evidence was received in India, held that it would be contrary to justice in any particular case to visit upon an individual penal consequences by way of costs, because the administration of justice was not more strictly conducted with reference to the admission of evidence. Bunwarree Lall v. Hetnarain Singh, 4 W. R., P. C., 128.

Where the evidence upon the record is not sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce a judgment upon regular appeal, it may require the Court against whose decree the appeal is made to make additional evidence defining the points to which such evidence is to be confined, in order to enable the Appellate Court finally to determine the case. Narasimarao Krishnaroo v. Ataji Virapaksh, 2 Bom. Rep., 64.

In a case where hearsay evidence is not admissible as evidence, it should not be taken down. Pitumber Doss v. Ruttun Bullub Dass, W. R., 1864, 213.

The lower Appellate Court is not bound to receive and act on a map as genuine and correct because another Court has formerly done so. Mohamed Ali Ahmed Khan v. Imad-oor-rohoman Chowdhry, W. R., 1864, 323.

In a case in which A. sued on a kobala, and B. relied on a deed of gift from a third party (C.), who was the vendor of the former and the donor of the latter, the lower Court was held to have committed an error in law in having looked into a written statement made by C. subsequent to defendant's deed in a case to which B. was no party, and in having taken for a standard a signature in a deed which ought to be set aside as spurious. Poran Chunder Chatterjee v. Grish Chunder Chatterjee, 9 W. R., 450.

A lower Appellate Court was held not to be wrong in reading as evidence in the suit evidence in another suit which had been read in the first Court, unless it was objected to. Rugkoo Nath Pershad v. Hurse Mohunt, 10 W. R., 37.

Where a Judge is influenced in his estimate of parol testimony by the result of his consideration of documents which he ought not to have dealt with as evidence, there is no proper trial of the case. Boidonath Parooy v. Rustick Lall Mitter, 9 W. R., 274.

In a suit to obtain possession of mirâds land, the Court of original jurisdiction decreed for plaintiff on the evidence, but on appeal its decision was reversed, on the ground that the claim had not been properly valued, and plaintiff was permitted to bring a fresh action. At the trial of the second action the Moonsiff recorded his previous decree and some additional evidence, which the District Judge in appeal considered to be insufficient. Held that under the peculiar circumstances of the case the Judge, if not satisfied with the evidence taken at the second trial, should have allowed the plaintiff to give again the evidence adduced at the former trial. The lower Court's decree was therefore reversed, and the suit remedied in order that this might be done. Jote bin Nimhajee and others v. Somajee bin Bapujee Gurare and others, 1 Bom. Rep., 166.

A suit for arrears of rent under a kubuleut, the execution of which was denied by defendant, having been decreed in favour of plaintiff, an appeal was preferred to the Additional Judge, who sent for copies of two documents (previously filed by defendant in the Assistant Magistrate and Registrar's offices respectively), which neither of the parties had put in in the Court below, and used them as evidence in favour of the defendant.

Held that neither of the documents could be properly used as evidence between the parties to this suit, except for the purpose of cross-examination of witnesses in the Court of first instance, and that the use made of them by the lower Appellate Court was unfair to plaintiff, and caused a mis-trial. Dwarkanath Saha and others v. Ram Lochun Biswas, 10 W, R., 92.

There is no safer rule for investigating cases of conflicting evidence, where perjury and fraud must exist on the one side or the other, than to consider what facts are beyond dispute, and to examine which of the two cases best accords with those facts according to the ordinary course of human affairs and the usual habits of life. Meer Uuudoollah v. Bebee Imaman, 5 W. R., P. C., 26.

The native Courts of India in receiving evidence do not proceed according to the technical rules adopted in England, and they would, by their usual practice, admit a copy of a public document authenticated by the signature of the proper officer as primâ facie evidence, subject to further enquiry if it were disputed. Naragunty Luchmedavamah v. Venyama Naidoo, 1 W. R., P. C., 30.

Case in which leave to appeal depended upon the value of the land in dispute. The respondent asked to be allowed to go into evidence on the question of value, but this was refused. Mohan Lall Sookul v. Dabee Doss Dut, 2 W. R., P. C., 9.

Where a person became the purchaser of a talook under a decree for sale obtained by judgment-creditors of the owner, and an assignee of a judgment-creditor sued to have it declared that the purchase did not affect any transfer of the ownership of the talook.—Held that the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that the talook in question was still the property of the judgment-debtors, and not the property of the purchaser. In matters of this description, it is essential to take care that the decision of the Court rests, not upon suspicion, but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony.

The power given to the High Court by the Code of Civil Procedure, of taking, of its own motion, original evidence anew should be exercised very sparingly; and when exercised it is desirable that the reasons for exercising it should always be recorded or minutely by the Court in the proceedings. Rashumchunder Doss v. Chunder Chuckerbuddy and others, 7 W. R., P. C., 10.

Even additional evidence cannot be admitted in appeal without any substantial reason being recorded in the proceedings. R. Snadden v. Tod, Finlay, and Co., and others, 7 W. R., 313.

A Court must examine the evidence put in by both parties, and state specifically the reasons upon which it is or is not evidence of the one or the other, or rejects that of the other. Kissen Coomar Sen and others v. Ram Coomar Shone, 6 W. R., 88.

Where evidence which was rejected by the Court of first instance is admitted in appeal, the Appellate Court is bound to state its reasons for admitting the evidence. Lowa Jha and others v. Bisessour Singh and others, 11 W. R., 6.

In a suit for rent the defendant pleaded payment and put in evidence receipts for the rent claimed. The Court of first instance disbelieved this evidence and gave a decree for the plaintiff. The judge on appeal compared the signature of the plaintiff on the receipts with his signature to a document not in evidence in the case, and reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. Held that the decision of the judge, proceeding upon the point as to the credibility and weight of evidence, could not be objected to on special appeal. Ramsoonder Sircar v. Kistobug Bug, Marsh., 322.

In a suit for rent the defendant pleaded payment and filed a number of receipts. The plaintiff was required to examine them and acknowledge or deny them. After time had been allowed him for examining his own papers, he filed a petition admitting all the receipts except three. The Deputy Collector gave a decree disallowing the three receipts, which was reversed by the Judge and the receipt admitted. Held that the Deputy Collector was wrong in rejecting the three receipts without examining the plaintiff again, since the petition was no evidence; and that the Judge was wrong in admitting the receipts, but that he ought to have remitted the case to the lower Court to try whether they were genuine. Dooraj Singh and others v. Dullell Singh and others, Marsh., 277.

When a suit has been dismissed upon a preliminary point, and the decision on that point has been reversed by the Appellate Court, and the case goes down with a view to trial on its merits, evidence may properly be received even from defendants who had no appeal, and a fortiori from a defendant who had not appeared. Koonj Behary A wrtee v. Tarinee Kant Lakoree, 8 W. R., 285.

Where a Judge whose judgments have been observed to be very careful, comes to a conclusion in the weight of evidence as to a pure question of fact, the High Court would do wrong not to follow the evidence. Anund Moyee v. Ranee Shurmo Moyee, 6 W. R., Act X R., 83.

In deciding on the facts of a case, Judges should not base their decision upon some isolated piece of evidence, but take into consideration and record their opinion on the whole evidence offered on both sides. Titluchdharee Singh v. Somodha Singh, 6 W. R., 9.

When the Court of first instance admitted without objection unstamped receipts in evidence, but the Judge on appeal rejected the documents, and reversed the decision of the lower Court,—Held that the documents once received without objection were wrongly rejected, and the decision below wrongly reversed on appeal, as the irregularity was not one affecting the merits of the case under Section 350, Act VII of 1859; and that the Court had no power to receive the documents on payment of the stamp duty and penalty under Section 17, Act X of 1862.

Section 17 of Act X of 1862 only applies to the reception of documents under Section 15 which have been insufficiently stamped, not to documents on which there is no stamp. Such documents should not be received at all. Lalji Singh v. Syad Akram Ser, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 235; S. C., 12 W. R., 47.

A Civil Court is not bound by the admission or rejection of documents by a Revenue Court. Raj Chunder Roy Chowdhy v. Sheikh Abbas, 5 W. R., 186.

The plaintiff not having shown any bonâ fide intention to examine as witnesses two of the parties to the suit, and not having complained of the refusal of the Court below to add them to the list of witnesses until the arguments on the appeal were concluded, and decision was about to be given, the High Court declined to allow the plaintiff to put in fresh evidence at such a stage of the proceedings. Keshom Singh Roy v. Eskom Chunder Roy and others, 6 W. R., 213.

Where an Appellate Court received additional evidence, recording only that the papers were material and important, there was held to be no sufficient compliance with the proviso of Section 355, Civil Procedure Code, which requires the reason for admitting additional evidence to be stated. Maharajah Juggut Indur Bunwaree v. Bhubo Taring Dasse, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 19.

Where the evidence is accepted by a Subordinate Judge as sufficient to warrant a decree, and the case is only remanded for a defect of parties, his successor is justified, when the case is returned by the first Court, in respecting the former judgment and acting upon the evidence as bonâ fide good and sufficient. Wise, J. P. v. Ishan Chunder Bonnerjet, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 380.

It is not right for the Lower Court to select five out of twenty witnesses tendered for examination. It is the bounden duty of the Judge to receive all the evidence tendered, unless the object of summoning a large number of witnesses clearly appears to be to impede the adjudication of the case, or otherwise to obstruct the ends of justice. Ramdhan Mundle v. Rajballab Paramanick, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 10.

Where evidence has been taken by an Appellate Court in the presence of parties or their agents, it should not be rejected on appeal merely because the Court omitted to record its reason for admitting it. Bhugwan Chunder Ghose v. Rajgoomar Goho, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 393.

When parties have had an opportunity to put in such evidence as they consider sufficient to entitle them to a judgment upon the material issues of the case, the evidence ought to be held sufficient under Section 353, Civil Procedure Code, to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce a satisfactory judgment. Bebee Zahura v. Bhugwan Dass, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 211.

In a suit for a sum of money on an unadjusted account, plaintiff filed a memorandum (A.) with her plaint, from which the amount claimed in the plaint could be made out. In her examination by the Court the plaintiff put in another memorandum (C) to explain memorandum A. Defendant admitted that memorandum C. was signed by him. It had reference to a period immediately preceding that for which the suit was brought. Held, that memorandum C. was rather evidence to support the originally stated cause of action, than an amendment of the claim or the substitution of one claim or cause of action for another. The case was one which should have been decided not merely on the discrepancy between the two statements made by plaintiff, but on the whole of the evidence.

The mere omission of an accountable party, framing his own account, to carry forward into a new account a balance against himself existing in a former one, can constitute no evidence in his own favour. To prove the existence of the balance, such omission might be considered in conjunction with other evidence in the cause. Mulka Munkara, Begum of ex-King of Oude, v. Tekath Roy, 14 S. W. R., P. C., 24.

A lower Court was held to be justified in rejecting a prayer by the plaintiff for the examination of witnesses after his case had been closed and defendant's case almost come to a termination. Syed Abul Ali v. Mullick Sudderodon Ahmed, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 493.

Where credit has been given to witnesses by the Court of first instance before which they have been examined, the Appellate Court is not at liberty to say that it disbelieves them without stating reasons. Mussamat Husumbuttee Dassee v. Sreekissen Nundy, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 58.

The rule limiting the right to call evidence to contradict witnesses in collateral questions excludes all evidence of facts which are incapable of affording any reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal matter in dispute, the test being whether the fact is one which the party proposing to contradict would have been allowed himself to prove in evidence. Kasi Guldm Ali bin Kasi Ismail v. H. H. Agd Khan, 6 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 93.

It is the duty of the Judge of an Appellate Court to allow the parties or their pleaders to submit the evidence to him at the hearing in open Court, and to make upon the evidence so submitted every comment, and found upon it every argument they may think necessary. Lalla Tuggeshur Sahay v. Gopal Lall, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 54.

14.—Account Sales.

A. at Calcutta consigned goods through B. at Calcutta to C. at London, for sale on his (A.'s) own account and risk. B. advanced money thereon to A. The goods were sold in London by C., who sent the account sale to B. in Calcutta. In a suit by B. against A. in Calcutta for the balance due to him on account of the money so advanced after giving credit to A. for the amount realized by the sale of the goods according to the account sale,—

Held that the account sale was prind-facte conclusive of the amount realized; and if A. wished to falsify the account, the onus lay upon him. Sheikh Dooman and others v. Ambrose Stevens and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 5.

Account-sales furnished by plaintiff to the defendant are prind-facte evidence of the amount realized by the sale of the goods mentioned therein. Stearman v. Fleming, 5 B. L. R., p. 619.

Where goods are consigned to be disposed of in a foreign market, it is an implied term of the agreement by the consignor that the account-sales furnished by the correspondents abroad shall be taken as prind-facte evidence of what the goods realized. Held that this was so even though the consignor objected to the correctness of the account-sales when furnished to him. Hodgson et al. v. Rupchaund Haarimal, 6 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 39.

15.—Privileged Communications.

The question whether a communication between the accused and witness is privileged is a question of law for the Judge to decide. Communications between mookhtears and their clients are not privileged within Section 24 of Act II of 1855. Queen v. Chundracant Chuckerbalty, 1 B. L. R., A. Cr., 8; 10 W. R., Cr., 14.

On questions of caste a lower Appellate Court has a right to come to a finding based on history or the custom of the country. Roghoonath Dass Maniaputur v. Bydonath Dass Maharathn, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 364.

Where there is conflict between a Judge's memorandum of evidence and the recorded depositions of the witnesses, the Court must be guided by the latter. Held (by Jackson, J.) that where the right of succession to a raj or zemindaree (dignity and estates) depends upon the custom which regulates the devolution of the raj, the true question as between rival claimants is which of them is favoured by the custom as known to the public functionaries of the district, as recognized by the family itself of the late rajah, and as established by precedents. Held (by Jackson, J.) that for the purpose of ascertaining the custom of any given family on particular points, there can be no more important source of information than the declaration of successive heads of the family on solemn occasions. Held (by Markby, J.) that where the impartibility of the dignity and estates of a raj had its origin not in any custom, family or local, but in the peculiar character of the raj itself, and which by its very nature was invisible, the nature of the raj would not exclude from... inheritor any person of either sex if without physical or intellectual infirmity. Held (by Markby, J.) that in order to establish a koolachar, or family custom of descent, there must be shown either a clear, distinct, and positive tradition in the family that the custom exists, or a long series of instances of anomalous inheritance from which the koolachar may be inferred. Held (by Markby, J.) that to establish a local custom to exclude females from inheritance by instances of exclusion in a certain district, the district must be stated and described geographically in which the custom is now and for a long time has been prevalent, and which includes the property in question. A sufficient number of instances of exclusion within that locality must then be adduced to establish that the custom extends to the whole district, and therefore governs the succession in dispute. Until some connection, geographical or political, is shown to exist between two districts, there is no ground for inferring the custom of one district from its existence in another.

16.—WITNESSES.

The Court will extend the privileges of purdah to women, who, though not purdah, are not accustomed generally to appear before the public. Kis-tomohun Mookerjee v. Aunderrmoonee Dubee, 2 Hyde’s Rep., 88.

An à priori consent to abide by the testimony of a certain witness cannot bind the consenting party to hear any testimony, but only to such evidence as is legally admissible, i.e., evidence as to such facts as the witness can directly speak to. Luckemonne Dossée v. Shunkuree Dossée, 2 W. R., 252.

In a civil proceeding a husband or wife can give evidence for or against each other. Suleemollah v. Subeea, 4 W. R., 83.

Act VIII of 1859 confers no authority upon a Judge to issue a summons to a witness to attend on the settlement of issues. Annund Chunder Banerjee v. Womes Chunder Roy, 1 Hyde’s Rep., 147.

Held by the majority of the Court (dissentient, Jackson, J.) that there ought to be a locus penitentiae for witnesses who have depose falsely to retract their false statements. Queen v. Gallie Mullick, W. R., 1864, Cr., 10.

The denial by a witness of any relationship to his brother, whose witness he was, was held to be the mildest form in which false evidence could be given, and to merit only a mild punishment. Queen v. Govind Sahoo, W. R., 1864, Cr., 14.

A lower Court having allowed some of the witnesses of the plaintiff to depart without taking their evidence, the plaintiff objected to its taking the evidence of more of the defendant’s witnesses than of his own. Upon this the Court allowed some of the defendant’s witnesses to leave the Court without examining them. The case was remanded for examination of all the remaining witnesses and a fresh decision. Gopee Ojah v. Hur Gobind Singh, 12 W. R., 229.

The arrest under civil process of a judgment-debtor going to a Court in obedience to a citation to give evidence, and made within the precincts of that Court and with some show of violence and contempt of Court, does not entitle the officers making the arrest to protection under Section 78, Penal Code. Thacoodoss Nundee v. Shunkur Roy, 3 W. R., Cr., 53.

A party who calls a witness to give testimony on his behalf (e.g., to prove the execution of a document) is not necessarily bound by the evidence which that witness gives; but if such evidence is at variance with the truth of his case (e.g., if the witness swears that the document was not executed and has the means of knowing the fact), it throws such a suspicion upon the case as to render the clearest testimony necessary before its truth can be established. Fuuseen Bibee v. Omia Bibee and ShakhJonab Ali, 10 W. R., 469.

Where an attesting witness is unable to write, and either makes a mark or has his name written for him in a deed, the style of execution of the attestation cannot invalidate the deed. Agum Misra v. Pulkulkhantee Misra, W. R., 1864, 87.

When a witness has been examined on behalf of the plaintiff he cannot be recalled as a witness for the defendant without leave obtained at the end of the first examination. Mackintosh v. Nobinmonee Dossée and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 160.

If the Court, when specially prayed to take the evidence of a witness, without good reason refuses to do so, the party calling the witness has ground for complaint. But the Court is not bound to examine a person as a witness merely because he has been summoned and is in attendance. Sreesmutty Ranae Doorga Soondery v. Ranae Huru Monee, 2 W. R., 166.

A Court ought not to reject any witnesses in attendance whom the parties wish to call. R. Watson and Co. v. Nuktee Mundul, 6 W. R., Act X R., 83.

Where a day has been fixed for hearing the witnesses, the Court is not competent to decide the case without waiting for that day, in the absence of the witnesses, on the ground that no amount of witnesses would be believed. Ranae Oojulla Koomeree Dhujamonee Debee v. Gholum Mostafa Khan, alias Mudhoo Khan and others, 6 W. R., 60.

As a general rule, all the witnesses brought forward by a party ought to be examined. But when an objection is made in special appeal that the Judge below has omitted to examine certain witnesses, it ought to be shown that the evidence of those witnesses would have been material to the case. Nilkaut Surma and others v. Sooesta Debia and others, 6 W. R., 324.

It is not the business of a Court to determine what witnesses shall be examined. The parties must select their own witnesses, and call upon the Court to examine such of them as they may think proper. Where a party fails, in the first instance, to do the necessary steps to have the witnesses examined, or to compel them to be present for examination at the proper time. Moomooy Debbe and others v. Bheem Koomar Chowdhry, 6 W. R., 231.

The fact of a witness not having been named in the plaintiff’s list of witnesses is no ground for conclusive: testimony of his case.

A witness called by the Court is liable to be cross-examined by any of the parties to a suit.

A Court cannot refuse an application for summonses for witnesses at any time before a case is tried.

A Court is not bound, on the mere statement of a party that he has more witnesses, to issue a warrant for their apprehension. It is the duty of the Court, when an application is made to enforce the attendance of witnesses on whom summonses have been served, to pass some definite order on the application, and not merely to order that the petition be filed with the record.

Every Court is bound to render all reasonable assistance to a party to enforce the attendance of his witnesses.

A lower Appellate Court does right in refusing to summon witnesses whom the first Court was neither asked to hear, nor refused to hear.

A Judge's discretion in not compelling the attendance of witnesses named by one of the parties, must be exercised on reasonable grounds distinctly stated in the judgment.

Although, under the Civil Procedure Code, the Court is bound to take into consideration all the rights of the parties to the suit, whether legal or equitable, and by its decree to give effect to those rights as far as possible, the Court should confine itself to granting such relief as is prayed in the plaint. Viraavuni Gramini v. Ayyasvaya Gramini, 1 Mad. Rep., 471.

A witness (an attorney) cannot refer to his documents' receipt book, in order to enable him to say whether a document of a particular character and date was in his possession on a particular day. A receipt by the defendant for documents relating to his title in a suit is receivable in evidence as being in the nature of an admission signed by the defendant. Madhub Chandra Dutt v. Rajkista Set and others, Cor. Rep., 148.

Where witnesses do not appear on summons, it is for the parties to move the Court, not for the Court to proceed suo motu to further the production of the witnesses, though the Court may issue attachment under Section 168, Code of Civil Procedure, if it is shown that the witnesses are absconding or keeping out of the way. Bichman v. Lali Bhaaree Panday, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 324.

It is the duty of a plaintiff or defendant to tender such witnesses as he considers necessary to prove his case, notwithstanding the report of the nazir that such and such witnesses are in attendance. Deen Dyal Singh v. Dunee Roy, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 185.

Upon trial of a prisoner it is illegal to read over to witnesses their depositions taken at a former trial, and ask them if they are true. Such witnesses will be held not to have been duly examined, and a conviction founded upon their evidence will be quashed. Queen v. Kalundar Dass, 2 N. W. R., 100.

Where a defendant, after asking the lower Appellate Court to summon plaintiff as a witness, and consenting to abide by his deposition, had again petitioned the Court that the plaintiff should not be examined,—Heid that defendant should not have been bound solely and absolutely by the plaintiff's deposition, but that the other evidence on the record should also have been considered. Jugdeo Singh v. Shiek Molaizm Hossein, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 108.

The circumstance of a witness being a servant or a defendant of the plaintiff does not of itself disentitle him to credit. Sheoobul Chunder Kuleah v. Koylash Chunder Mal, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 23.

Five suits having been brought to recover a balance of accounts from defendants, who were alleged to be partners of a trading concern, and as such liable, certain witnesses were examined in four of the cases in which the plaintiff in one of the suits was not a party, and at his request the evidence taken in those cases was allowed to be used as evidence in his case, and then the witnesses were discharged. Two days after this he applied to have the witnesses re-examined, giving no reason for his application, which was refused. Heid that the refusal was justified in the absence of any new reason for the re-examination. Tranamuth Roy v. Goluck Chunder Sein, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 348.

A Court has no power to refuse to summon witnesses when expressly requested by a party to do so, unless the witnesses are required to be summoned in such a manner, or in such numbers, as clearly indicates a vexatious desire of obstructing the course of justice. Rum Phat Pandey v. Wahed Ali Tahan, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 66.

Instead also of dismissing plaintiff's suit on account of his pleader's inability on the day of trial to prove which of his absent witnesses, against whom he had applied for further processes to be issued, were material, the proper course for the Judge was to allow the plaintiff a certain time to produce evidence upon this point, upon payment by him of all the costs of adjournment. Peerie Mohun Bose v. Hurrish Chunder Ghose, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 141.

It is the bounden duty of a Court, unless where it sees that there is a clear intention to delay or obstruct justice, to examine all witnesses whom the parties wish to be examined. Chowdry Khoorjo Roy v. Shik Tehul Roy, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 173.

A Civil Court has no power to bind witnesses by recognizances to attend to give evidence on a future day.

A verbal order of the Court to witnesses requiring them to attend on a future day would not justify the issuing of a warrant for the apprehension of such witnesses in case they failed to attend in obedience to such verbal order. Venkatappod v. Paammah, 5 Mad. Rep., 132.

A Court is not authorized to issue a proclamation and attachment mentioned in Section 159, Code of Civil Procedure, unless it is proved to its satisfaction that the evidence of the witness is material, and that he is avoiding the summons; and after these circumstances have been shown, it is a matter of discretion to issue the proclamation and attachment, and after issue to let the case stand over. Kalee Dass Chuckerbutty v. Eshan Chunder Chuttjee, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 416.

A Judge was held to have done wrong in throwing out the evidence of witnesses tendered by the defendant in a civil action merely because they have been found untrustworthy when examined with reference to a charge of breach of trust against the same defendant in a criminal case. Lall Chund v. Brundabun Chunder Roy, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 226.

Where an application was made at a very late stage of a case to enforce the provisions of Section 159 of the Code of Civil Procedure, without proffer of any proof that the witness was absconding or keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding the service of the summons, the lower Appellate Court was Heid to have been justified in not postponing the case to secure the attendance of the witness, although material. Ajodhya Dass v. Biket Misan, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 176.

Section 159, Code of Civil Procedure, gives a Civil Court a discretion as to the issue of proclamation and subsequent orders for attachment; but such Court is bound to exercise a reasonable discretion. Poran Chunder Ghose and others v. Gopee Nath Singh and others, 8 W. R., 505.

A party to a suit requiring the examination of another party may, under Section 165, Act VIII of 1859, after the expiration of the given time to show cause why he should not attend and give evidence, apply for an order to compel him to do so. Allad Singh Roy v. Ram Pershad Singh, 2 W. R., 218.
Section 162 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not give the lower Court an absolute power either to allow or refuse the issue of a summons against a party to appear as a witness. If the Court exercises the power adversely to the petitioner, its order is to allow or refuse the issue of a summons against a judgment that judicial discretion has been used, not give the lower Court an absolute power either not final, except when it gives reasonable grounds for its decision.

The order of a Court dismissing a petition, under Sections 162 and 163, Act VIII of 1859, is final. But the Court is bound to show on the face of its judgment that judicial discretion has been used, and the limit of its powers not exceeded. Ram Swrun Singh v. Goordo-Dyal Singh, 1 W. R., 83.

A Court in refusing to summon a material witness without special reason, but merely because other material witnesses are relied on, or may be called, does not properly exercise the discretion vested in it by Section 162 of Act VIII of 1859. Maltunganee Dabea v. Kalee Dabea, 2 W. R., 4.

Act VIII of 1859 confers no authority upon a Judge to issue summonses to witnesses to attend on the settlement of issues.

The written statements must be prepared with great care and deliberation, so as to dispense altogether with parol evidence. Anund Chunder Banerjee v. Womes Chunder Ray, 1 Ind. Jur. O. S., 151; 1 Hyde's Rep., 147.

Though there is no appeal against an order of a Judge refusing to comply with an application under Section 162, Act VIII of 1859, requiring the attendance of a party to a suit as a witness, yet the Judge is bound to exercise the discretion vested in him by that section upon a correct assumption of the facts. This not having been done in the present case, the case was remanded to the Judge. Neemchand Deg v. Anundcoomar Roy Chowdhry and others, 7 W. R., 147.

Section 168 of the Civil Procedure Code requires that there should appear to the Court to be satisfactory ground for believing that the default on the part of witnesses summoned to give evidence is without lawful excuse before issuing a warrant for the arrest of such witnesses. But it is not necessary for this purpose to institute a formal investigation and come to a determination on the evidence adduced. Periyanna Chetty v. Govinda Gounden, 5 Mad. Rep., 104.

Case of recusant witnesses who were ordered to be proceeded with under Section 168, Act VIII of 1859 (by attachment and sale of their property), and to be tried by the criminal authorities under the Penal Code. Sreemunty Saroda Dossee v. Rajah Barada Kant Roy, 5 W. R., Act X R., 49.

Cross-examination—Witness for defence. Queen v. Ishun Chunder Dutt, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 88; and 15 S. W. R., Cr. R., 34.

Unless a defendant has subjected himself to cross-examination, no statement which he may volunteer can be used as any evidence in his own case. Shaiikh Shurfurus Mollah v. Shaiikh Dhunos, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 257.

17.—EXAMINATION OF WITNESS UNDER COMMISSION.

An examination de bene esse, being on the same footing as the examination of a witness in a cause, can only be conducted by counsel. J. A. Hoffman v. P. Framjee, Cor. Rep., 7.

The Court will not issue a commission for the examination of an infant of tender years. Re Sreemunty Beechoodhy Dossee, an infant, 2 Hyde's Rep., 152; S. C., 1 Cor. Rep., 78.

Commission granted on application of the plaintiffs, who resided in Madras, to examine witness in Madras. Costs of commission to be costs in the cause. Gahan v. Owen, Cor. Rep., 11.

A Commission for the examination of witnesses will be issued, even though the cause is entered upon the Peremptory Board of the day, if the issuing of such Commission is not calculated to prejudice the defendants, or to subject them to loss or inconvenience. Jansheh v. Dunia, 1 Hyde's Rep., 269.

The Court is invested with discretionary power to grant or to refuse applications made under Section 175, Act VIII of 1859, for the examination by Commission of witnesses resident more than 100 miles distant from Calcutta. Burney v. Eyre, 1 Hyde's Rep., 68.

A Commission will be granted nearly as a matter of course to examine a material witness who is out of the jurisdiction of the Court, if the witness cannot be brought into Court by its ordinary process.

But the Commission will not be granted, at the instance of either party, to enable him to give evidence himself under a Commission, except under very strong circumstances indeed, such as where he is seriously ill. Dowuccett v. Wise, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 557.

A Magistrate is not bound to execute a Commission of a Small Cause Court, directing him to take the evidence of prisoners in jail, in a case in which none of the circumstances existed authorizing that Court to issue the Commission. Gopal Chundra Sircar v. Kurnodhar Moochee and others, 7 W. R., 349.

The issue of a Commission for the examination of an absent witness without notice to the opposite party, even if not illegal, is objectionable. Turuchnath Mookerjee v. Goureed Chun Mookerjee, 3 W. R., 147.

The kingdom of Ava is not the territory of a Native Prince or State in alliance with the British Government within the meaning of Section 177 of Act VIII of 1859.

A Commission for the examination of a witness at Mandalay can only issue from the High Court.

The consent of parties is not requisite to the admissibility of evidence taken under such Commission, if the examination have been taken upon oath or affirmation. Aga Mahomed Taffer Tekrani v. Mirza Nastrullah, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 73.

A de bene esse examination of a witness about to leave the jurisdiction of the Court must be taken by the Court, unless the parties consent to the evidence being taken under a commission. Edwards v. Muller, 5 B. L. R., 252.

Where a Commissioner took the evidence of witnesses when the last return day of the Commission had expired, it was held that the depositions of the witnesses were not admissible in evidence in the cause. Gregory v. Dooley Chundandary, 14 S. W. R., A. O., 17.

A party who has not joined in a commission is entitled to cross-examine the witnesses who are ex-

It is the duty of the party obtaining a commission for the examination of witnesses to take such steps as may be necessary to secure the attendance before the Commissioner of the witnesses he desires to examine.

Where parties require the production of telegraphic messages, it is for them, and not the Court, to obtain the necessary sanction of Government to the disclosure of such messages. Leckraj v. Pala Ram, 2 N. W. R., 210.

18.—PARTIES AS WITNESSES.

A party summoned by the Court to give evidence is not only required to give answer to the questions put to him by the Court, but the opposite party has a right to cross-examine him. The statement of any person examined is not admissible unless the opposite party has had the opportunity of cross-examining him. Gooroodass Roy and another v. Greedhur Sein and others, 17 W. R., 110.

It is within the discretion of a Judge to refuse to summon a plaintiff whom defendant desires to have before the Court as his witness, and that discretion will not be interfered with in special appeal unless shown to have been exercised illegally. Indro Lochun Ghose and another v. Grish Chunder Roy Chowdhray and others, 10 W. R., 134.

Under the Indian Divorce Act a respondent can be a witness. By Section 52 she may be compelled to give evidence in the cases there supposed. In other cases her evidence is admissible if she offer herself as a witness. Kelly v. Kelly and Saunders, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 6.

Where some of the witnesses (defendants) in a suit had been examined, and plaintiff petitioned the Court to have the remaining defendants examined as witnesses, he was held not to have taken the necessary steps required by law to enforce their attendance, because he did not make any special application to the Court, or show sufficient grounds in support of his petition. Ram Tukul Thakoor v. Oodit Narain Singh, 12 W. R., 36.

A Court is not bound to dismiss a case on account of the non-appearance of a plaintiff summoned by the defendant to attend as a witness, when the defendant did not petition for attachment or other legal process to be made by the Court to compel the plaintiff's appearance. Buste Narain Roy v. Sham Soonder Nundar, 2 W. R., Act X R., 43.

A judgment passed against a plaintiff, under Section 126 of Act VIII of 1859, was reversed by the High Court in special appeal, as there was nothing on the record to show that the party refused to answer any material question relating the suit. Krishnaji A. Nunkor v. Vihunu A. Nukor and another, 2 Bom. Rep., 260.

When a defendant specially summoned to attend and give evidence under Sections 162 and 165 of the Code of Civil Procedure, failed to attend, and the Court acted rightly in deciding against the defendant under Section 170. Isham Chunder Ghose v. Hurish Chunder Buja, 12 W. R., 350.

An appeal lies from a decision dismissing a suit for default under Section 170, Act VIII of 1859 and it is in the discretion of the lower Appellate Court to remit the case to the Court of first instance to consider the other evidence in the case. Kedarnath Bhattacharjee v. Kripa Ram Bhattacharjee, 5 W. R., 270.

A plaintiff required to appear, but not to give evidence, does not fall within Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, to have judgment passed against him, but only those who fail or refuse to appear on summons served on them. Binode Ram Si v. Brohmo Moyee Debia, 1 W. R., 168.

Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, authorizes dismissal for default only against the plaintiff who fails or refuses to attend, not against the plaintiff's witness who appear. Prosunno Coomar Gooroo Perishad Roy, 1 W. R., 25.

A defendant failed to appear when ordered to attend under Section 170, Act VIII of 1859. The Judge did not at once pass judgment against him but called the plaintiff's witnesses, and refused to allow the defendant's vakeel, who was present, cross-examine them. Held that the Judge ought to have allowed the defendant's vakeel to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses. Shahsada Fuktur v. Jakiriam Bhukut, 2 B. L. R. Ap., 12.

Section 170 is discretionary. Under it the fit Court may decide against a defendant, on the ground of his failure to appear, even without going into the plaintiff's evidence, and the lower Appellate Court is equally within the law in going into the whole case on its merits. Geepul Lall Bose v. Kalesh Mookerjee, 5 W. R., 89.

A Court may avail itself in an execution of the power given by Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, to summon a party to give evidence; and if his failing to comply with that order to pass judgment against him. Syed Deshan Hosein v. Musamut Hodija and others, 8 W. R., 64.

It is not imperative on, but discretionary with the Court, under Section 170, Act VIII of 1859 to give a decree against the non-attending party. Rajchunder Ghose v. Koylachshunder Banerjee, W. R., Act X R., 86.

The stringent provisions of Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, ought to be applied only in the case of contumacious litigants, and not to plaintiffs on whose part there is no proof of cognizance of the issue of a commission for their examination, or no proof of default. Dat Hurrukman Pyne v. Oodoychand Pyne and another, 6 W. R., 247.

Sections 166 and 170 are applicable to suits under Act X, having been extended thereto by Section 67 of the latter Act. Soofun Khan v. Huru Perishad Paul, 4 W. R., Act X R., 50.

To render a person liable to the penalty prescribed by Section 170 Act VIII of 1859, it must be shown that notice had been duly served on him, and that he had failed to comply with the requisition contained in that notice. Gooroodass Roy v. Greedhar Sen and others, 11 W. R., 110.

The High Court will not interfere on appeal with the decree of the lower Court dismissing a plaintiff's suit (under Section 170, Act VIII of 1859), on the ground of his refusing to answer a question material to the case when duly required to do so. Semhur—It might be otherwise had plaintiff once endeavoured to purge his contempt. Jethala Ramji Shett v. Avadot Mulundagata Kunhi, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 299.

A defendant who has been ordered to attend and give evidence under Act VIII of 1859, Section 170, and has failed to do so, is not precluded from appealing against a decree in favour of the plaintiff. Khomkur Abdool Guffoor v. Casee Khoda Nawaz, Marsh., 358.

Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, was not intended to empower a Court to decree a claim which on the face of it is barred by limitation. Dooega Dutt Singh v. Kalika Sookul, 7 W. R., 46.

When a plaintiff was summoned as a witness and did not attend, and the first Court, instead of enforcing his attendance or proceeding to pass a decree against him under Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, tried the case on the merits and gave the plaintiff a modified decree.—Held that the lower Appellate Court, instead of reversing the decision and dismissing the plaintiff's claim on the ground of non-attendance, should have again summoned the plaintiff and then acted under Section 170. Kisto Coomar Chowdry v. Gebind Coomar, W. R., 1864, 133.

The first Court having decreed against the special respondent on the ground of his refusal to come forward and give evidence after being summoned by the special appellant, the lower Appellate Court was not authorized by law (with reference to Section 170, Act VIII of 1859) to come to a contrary decision, without insisting on the absentee's evidence being recorded, or giving any reasons for dispensing with it. Musumatur Bukhson v. Haruk Chand Sahoo, 1 W. R., 114.

When a plaintiff cites defendants as witnesses, and is unable to prove his case without them, his suit ought not to be dismissed without proof, but the procedure laid down in Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, should be followed. Hemanginee Dossee v. Ram Nidhee Koondoo and others, 10 W. R., 138.

Under Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, it is discretionary with a Court to pass such orders as it thinks proper in regard to a plaintiff who disobeys its summons to attend, and it is no ground of special appeal that further steps were not taken by the first or the lower Appellate Court. Narain Dossi Oela v. Makarajah Mahatab Chand Bahadoor, 10 W. R., 174.

The non-attendance of defendant when cited as a witness to give evidence is not alone sufficient to justify the decision of the suit against him under Section 170 of the Civil Procedure Code. His absence may be an unfavourable circumstance, but the Court will not always be disposed to attach to it such weight as to regard it as justifying a decree in the plaintiff's favour. Roob Narain Misser v. Kashi Ram Singh Timbiram, 2 N. W. R., 67.

In a suit to recover a sum of money being the balance of purchase money alleged to have been paid on a bill of sale executed by defendant No. 1, but said to have been fraudulently taken possession of by him before payment of the stipulated price from defendant No. 2, in whose custody it had been left and with whom the portion paid had been deposited,—Held that defendant No. 2 could not be exempted from liability without satisfactory explanation of his neglect to keep the deed entrusted to his custody. Where the plaintiff himself is present, the lower Appellate Court may in its discretion examine him if it considers his evidence material. The requirements of the law are sufficiently fulfilled if the Court records that it considers his examination necessary. Bibee Hafiz v. Azkur Hossain, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 328.

An order under Section 165 of the Civil Procedure Code, requiring a party to a suit to attend and give evidence, may be served on such party's pleader and need not be served personally. Shewruadppha v. Kashinath Vishna, 6 Dom. Rep., A. C. J., 141.

Where a defendant when summoned as a witness does not appear, the Court is bound to adjudicate upon the question of the sufficiency of his excuse for not appearing. Bhally Mahomed Bukshu v. Nobin Chunder Roy Chowdry, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 269.

In a suit by the putneedar for rent due under a durputnee, defendant was summoned to produce the durputnee potah and a bynamah which he had produced on a former occasion in a different suit. On his representing that they were lost, plaintiff put in a certified copy of the bynamah obtained from the office of the Registrar of Deeds. Held that as the defendant failed to produce the bynamah or to prove that it was out of his power to do so, the Judge might have passed judgment against him at once under Section 170, Act VIII of 1859. As the defendant gave no clear evidence to rebut the bynamah put in by the plaintiff, the copy of the bynamah was good evidence in support of the plaintiff's case. Tara Chaund Banerjee v. Boistub Churn Bhudro, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 196.

Where a defendant contumaciously refuses to appear in answer to a summons, the Court ought to apply the provisions of Section 170, Civil Procedure Code. Thakoor Lall Misser v. Brohomerje Dabee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 253.

Where the defendant, when called upon by the plaintiff to give evidence, persistently refused to do so, and the first Court came to the conclusion that the case set up by the plaintiff was true, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the first Court's decision without taking any notice of that point, the lower Appellate Court's decision was reversed as wrong in law, and that of the first Court restored. Sin Buroda Moyee Dasso v. Rughoonath C.uckerbutty, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 295.

A Court is bound, under Section 162, Act VIII of 1859, before summoning a plaintiff to give evidence, to record the reasons of its being satisfied that the evidence of the plaintiff is essential to the defendant's case. Where, however, the Court does not give reasons of its satisfaction that the presence of the plaintiff is necessary, it does not follow that the defendants had failed to satisfy the Court that there was sufficient grounds for the application. Mookund Adit v. Rajah Sutoorghun Andit, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 507.

There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure or any other law which says that the provisions of Section 170, Act VIII of 1859, apply to those cases only in which the party summoning his opponent is not in a position to prove his case otherwise than by the evidence of that opponent. Kashenath Sahu v. Dwarkanath Sircar, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 563.

The Court of first instance refused to grant plaintiff's application to be allowed to examine second defendant as a witness on her behalf, thinking the grounds of such application insufficient for the exercise of its discretion under Section 162 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the adjourned date of hearing plaintiff failed to produce any other witness, and the suit was dismissed under Section 148. On regular appeal, the Civil Judge considered that the Court of first instance ought not to have refused plaintiff's application, but held that the refusal was a final order not open to question in appeal. On the adjourned date of hearing plaintiff failed to prove any other witness, and the suit was dismissed under Section 148.

The First hearing of a suit was fixed for the 10th July, 1867. Neither of the parties nor their vakils appeared. Thereupon the Court dismissed the suit under Section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code, but afterwards, upon the application of the plaintiff's vakil, restored it to the file for hearing, under Section 119. Plaintiff obtained further adjournments, to produce witnesses, the last being an adjournment to the 26th September. On that day the vakils of both parties appeared, but no witnesses, and the Court again dismissed the suit under Section 148, for failure to produce witnesses. On the 22nd of October the suit was again, under Section 119, restored to the file on the application of the plaintiff's vakil, and a decision was afterwards come to for the plaintiff, upon the merits. On appeal the last mentioned decree was reversed, and the decree passed under Section 148 (whether the first or second decree was not specified) upheld, upon the ground that as Section 119 was inapplicable to a decree passed under Section 148, the Court of first instance had acted without jurisdiction in restoring the suit to the file. Held, on special appeal, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the first decree of dismissal be a decree which might have been made under Section 147, was one to which Section 119 might apply. That the second decree of dismissal was one to which Section 148 alone applied, consequently one subject only to review or to an appeal, and the proceeding had in October, 1867, been substantially an application for review, with which the Court had power to grant. Ambalavance Padiyatchi v. Sabramandia Padiyatchi, Mad. Rep., 262.

A party to a suit tendering himself as a witness and declining without lawful excuse to answer questions put on cross-examination, is liable to deal with under Section 169 of the Civil Procedure Code.

"Without lawful excuse," means such an excuse as would in law justify the refusal to give evidence.

In a proceeding for contempt it is, under Section 21 of Act XXIII of 1861, fatal to the conviction of the Judge fail to record with the finding and sentence the statement of the offender. Leth Raj Padeiyat v. Sabraman Padeiyat, 4 Mad. Rep., 231.

The provisions of Section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure ought to be exercised with the most temperate discretion.

Where the Court might have treated one of the defendants as in default, and passed judgment against him under the above section, but instead of doing so passed over the default and made an order adjourning the further hearing of the suit, and the day to which the hearing was adjourned disposed of the suit under Section 170—"Held the Court by its own act was not in a position to treat the defendant as in default. Pudya Vasadan Nambudrisen v. Kayaka Kovilaguth Valia Rany, 4 Mad. Rep., 231.

A defendant in a suit summoned by and examined as a witness for the plaintiff is entitled to protection from arrest on civil process during the time reasonably occupied in going to, attending at, and returning from the place of trial. Appasamy Potter v. Govineni Nambier, 4 Mad. Rep., 145.

In a suit by a co-sharer, who is also a purchaser of the rights of several of the other co-sharers, against all the shareholders, the fact of the shares of each partner being differently described in another suit against the present plaintiff will not bar the present suit if the plaintiff is holding according to his allegation in his plaint. Nor will a partition suit against the present plaintiff will not bar the portion.

A plaintiff is not estopped by an evidently false statement in his plaint as to possession, but the Court may look behind the statement and determine upon its truth or otherwise, and affirm or disallow it, as may seem right and proper. Choonoo Lalli v. Shaikh Keramut Ali, W. R., 1864, 282.

Parties who by false representations induce others to enter into contracts, are estopped from afterwards falsifying their statements, and if necessary may be compelled to make them good. Radhakishen v. Mussamut Shureefunnissa, W. R., 1864, 11.

A party is estopped from pleading, in a suit for a kubuleut and for determination of the rate at which such kubuleut is to be delivered, a pottah which he denied in a former suit for rent. Syed Makomed Hossein v. Peeroo Mullick, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 115.

When, in answer to a suit, two parties combine to make a statement to defeat a third party, it is competent to either of those parties, when they are opposed to each other in a suit, to say that the combined statement was false, and intended as a fraud against the third party. The admission in the former suit is not to be regarded as an estoppel against either of the two parties in the present suit, but the Court is competent to enquire into the character of the transaction, and to declare it void, if it is satisfied that the transaction is not a bond-fide one. Ram Sarun Singh v. Mussamut Pran Pearee, 1 W. R., 156.

Suit for share of joint ancestral property. Plaintiff claims under a man who when sued in 1812 as trustee for the defendant's father, then a minor, never pleaded that he was a co-parcener. Held that the plaintiff, if not estopped from now contending that the property is joint, has still the full burden of proving that it is joint. Surnomoyee Debha v. Gunga Gobind Roy, 2 W. R., 264.

An admission made by a party in another case, involving other parties, cannot operate as an estoppel in a suit against parties who were not affected by it. Chunder Kant Chuckerbutty Christian v. Pearee Mohun Dutt, 5 W. R., 209.

A plaintiff is not estopped by a statement made by him in a former pleading. Bissessaree Debha v. Yankee Doss Mohunt, 1 W. R., 162.

In a suit for property it was held that the plaintiffs were not bound by an Act IV award against a person in whose name the property had been purchased by the father of the plaintiffs, but who had not either title or interest in the property, and did not conduct the Act IV proceeding with any authority from the plaintiffs. Held, too, that plaintiffs were not estopped by statements made by them as parties in another suit, which did not affect their status, nor by their failure to set forth their title in a former suit brought against them for mesne profits of the land in dispute. Mohendra Nath Mullick and others v. Rakhal Doss Sircar and others, 10 W. R., 344.

Held that the former statement of the plaintiff, which was at variance with the one now made, was to call in question the will set up by the defendant, the so-called adopted son supporting her action. Held that the plaintiff's former statement in the Act XXVII case was no bar to her present action. Soori Monee Dossee v. Swoop Chunder Shah, W. R., 1864, 198.

In a suit by a co-sharer, who is also a purchaser of the rights of several of the other co-sharers, against all the shareholders, the fact of the shares of each partner being differently described in another suit against the present plaintiff will not bar the present suit if the plaintiff is holding according to his allegation in his plaint. Mohendra Nath Mullick and others v. Rakhal Doss Sircar and others, 10 W. R., 344.

Held that the former statement of the plaintiff, which was at variance with the one now made, was not an estoppell, but the Court ought to have determined which of the two statements was correct. Jee Narain v. Sheikh Torabun and others, 3 Agra Rep., 216.

When an ekrar (providing for payment of rent by deduction from larger profits) which might have been pleaded as a bata to a suit for rent has not been so pleaded, and a decree has been obtained under Act X, the matter cannot be reopened in a subsequent civil suit. Kylash Chunder Ghose v. Khetterson Dosses, 2 W. R., Act X R., 57.

It would be an estoppel to a suit to bar sale of a property in which he is not an heir. Bhaskar Luther v. R. R., 1 Agra Rep., 19.

The fact of a mokurruree pottah coming collaterally in issue in an Act X suit for the purpose of enabling the Court to adjudicate upon the question of the amount of rent due, does not imply such a decision upon the validity or otherwise of the mokurruree as would be an estoppel to a suit in a Civil Court. Janessur Dass v. Goolgaree Lal, 2 W. R., 63.

Held that the plaintiff's assertion in a former suit claiming in "malikana" the land now in dispute, even if the identity of the land now claimed with the land then in suit be established (which has not been done), does not absolutely preclude him from asserting "mouroosee" right to the same land, and the Court from adjudging his true right. Ram Sahai Misser v. Bisraj Singh, 1 Agra Rep., R. A., 19.

Where a defendant, having the means of proving the real value of property, made no objection to the plaintiff's under-valuation, and also herself in special appeal knowingly under-valued the property by valuing the subject-matter at Rs. 675,—Held that she could not be heard to represent the real value of the property to be over Rs. 10,000 for the purpose of securing admission for an appeal to her Majesty in Council. Ranee Bhagobutty Debea, in the matter of, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 62.

An admission made in a verified petition by an intervenor in an Act X suit, and repeated in a verified plaint filed by him in a regular suit, was held to be binding in a subsequent suit on the party who made it. Grish Chunder Lahoree v. Shuma Churn Sundyal, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 437.

A defendant who has executed a mortgage and formally acknowledged under his hand and seal the receipt of the consideration-money may, in a suit for foreclosure by the mortgagee out of possession, deny that the money was advanced, the mortgage deed not creating an estoppell. Ram Surun Singh v. Mussamut Pran Pearee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 14.

Held that a party was not estopped from bringing a suit to bar sale of a property in which he had a reversionary right by the fact that he had admitted on previous occasions that he had no present right in the property. Musst. Saujbarre v. Payagh Patuk, 1 N. W. R., Par. 2, p. 5.

(8) By Pleadings.

In a former suit A. G. (appellant) sought to establish his right, in execution of his decree against R. R., to have a talook sold as belonging to R. R.; D. S., a defendant in that suit, pleaded that the whole talook had been conveyed to him absolutely by his father, R. R., under a hibbanamah. An issue was raised and tried whether the talook belonged to D. S. or not; and it was expressly decided that it did not, and that the zemindaree was liable to be attached and sold in execution of A. G.'s decree as belonging to R. R. Held that it was not open to D. S. or to plaintiff claiming under him now to come into Court and ask for a declaration of his right to a half share of the talook as against A. G. Mooneshee Abdool Gunnee v. Kishanund Dass, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 350.

Plaintiff's father was by a decree of 1848 declared entitled to his cousin's estate as reversioner. When the reversion opened out plaintiff's father was insane, and plaintiff, as representative of his father, having endeavoured to obtain possession under the decree, was successfully opposed by the defendants, who obtained a judgment of the High Court in their favour on the ground that the plaintiff's father was no longer heir under the Hindoo law in consequence of supervenient insanity. Plaintiff was then obliged to bring this suit to establish his own title as heir, and defendants disputed his right on the ground that his father is not disqualified by insanity which was now congenital. Held that defendants were estopped by their former defence from pleading their present defence. Brij Bhoorun Lall Awuster v. Mohadeo Dobey, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 422.

(c) By Conduct.

Plaintiffs who have in a former case allowed property attached as theirs by their creditors to be claimed and taken by the defendants, are estopped in a subsequent suit from making a contrary averment. Erskine and Co. v. Okhoy Chunder Dutt, 1 W. R., 1864, 58.

The failure of a party to put in an answer in a former suit, which in no way threatened his title as a reversioner, cannot be construed into a consent on his part to an alienation made by a Hindu widow, which has been found in a subsequent suit to be illegal. An issue raised to contest its validity was made without legal necessity. Bisheshur Mookerjee v. Judoonath Lowe, 1864, 48.

A. executed a deed of sale in a house in favour of B., which was duly registered. B. afterwards mortgaged the house to C. Held that A. and those claiming through him were estopped as against C. from setting up that the sale of the house to B. was a benamee transaction, and that A. continued not-wishing to be the true owner. Rockendale Moduck v. Bindoob Dabheere Debee, Marsb., 493.
When a person wilfully induces another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and to deal with him on the faith of it, he and those who claim under him are conclusively bound by the representation so made. Moonishee Syud Ameer Ali v. Syed Ali, 5 W. R., 289.

As no law of feudal escheat exists in this country, and the title of Government to property on failure of heirs rests on grounds of general or universal law, the Government by not entering upon the land of a deceased person, by allowing another to enter, and by accepting revenue from him, is not estopped from calling his title into question. The Government v. Greethoree Lal Roy, 4 W. R., 13.

A defendant is not estopped as to a plaintiff who is a vendee from a co-defendant in a former case in which a third party was plaintiff by anything that may have occurred in that case. Dinnosessa Akhalya v. Asgar Ali, 5 W. R., 181.

A., who was in partnership with B., C., and D., brought a suit in the Zillah Court of Jessore against B., C., and D., for an account and division of the partnership estate. An arrangement was come to between the parties, on the faith of which A. filed a razeenamah, stating that his claim was satisfied, and allowed a decree to go against him in terms of the razeenamah. The defendants failed to carry out their part of the arrangement. A petitioned the Zillah Court for leave to withdraw his petition of compromise, and that the suit might proceed as if no decree had been passed, but the Court refused the petition. The principal place of business of the defendants was in Calcutta. Held that A. was not barred from bringing a suit in the High Court to compel the defendants to perform the agreement upon the basis of which the decree was obtained in the Zillah Court, either by the fact of the consideration of the agreement being the consent of A. to the compromise of the suit, or by the decree of the Zillah Judge.

The fact of A.'s plaint not showing when the cause of action arose, is ground for rejecting the plaint, but no ground for finding on the trial that the suit is barred upon an issue raised as to limitation. Kalluynauth Shaw v. Rajebholuchan Mosoomdar and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 343.

When a purchaser of land lies by for five years, allowing another person to occupy the land, and afterwards to sell it, he is estopped by his own conduct from afterwards claiming the land from a bona-fide purchaser without notice. Mohesh Chunder Chatterjea v. Issur Chunder Chatterjee, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 266.

The circumstance that the plaintiff preferred a criminal charge against the defendant for the taking of his goods, which charge was dismissed, does not prevent the plaintiff from afterwards suing in the civil Court to recover the goods, or for the taking or detention of the goods, notwithstanding the Criminal Court may have jurisdiction upon a conviction to impose a fine and award it to the protector as compensation. Mussamut Roopu Bewa v. Ramcoomar Sandyal and others, Marsh., 248.

Held that the plaintiffs who had received rents from the mortgagees were estopped from pleading the invalidity of the mortgage. Gunga Bishen and others v. Ram Guti Rai, 1 Agra Rep., 49.

A party by whom malikana was payable obtained a decree against the maliks, and executed it by selling their right to malikana. The purchaser then sued the decree-holder for arrears of malikana, and the plea set up by defendant was limitation. Held that as defendant had caused the right to malikana to be sold he could not avail himself in equity of the plea of limitation, and say that what was purchased was not a substantial right actually existing at the time. Syud Alai Ahmed v. Bodhoo Singh, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 214.

A plaintiff is bound to put forward all the titles which he has existing at the time of his suit; failing to do so, he is estopped from adducing in a future suit a title which he ought to have urged in a former. Dudsar Bhee v. Shukir Burkundeez, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 169.

If the person who asks for redress is a party who has customarily the acts of which he complains, the Court is bound to refuse him any redress or assistance. Bhyro Dutt v. Mussamut Lhrhannee Rooer, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 123.

A person who has deliberately executed a deed by which his own property is bound is not at liberty to set up as a plea for evading obligation that he did so for the purpose of defrauding other people, but is bound by such deed. Kylash Chunder Mitler v. Dhun Monee Dassia, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 273.

Parties holding a permanent settlement from Government cannot question the validity of a mortgagee potah previously granted by themselves when they held the property under a temporary settlement. Khajee Abdul Mannah v. Buroda Kanti Bannerjee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 394.

Suit for possession of certain property as part of a joint-family property sold by a widow without authority. Plaintiff applied to appeal specially on the ground, but could cite no authority in support of it, that when the eldest member and manager of the family purchases out of his own separate funds, because the family is joint, the property must be considered as joint property. Having failed in this character, the Court declined to allow him in special appeal to come in as a reviser, and ask for a decree declaring the widow's act void as against reversioner. Madho Pershad v. Lalla Feteen Lall, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 98.

Plaintiff, after failing in a former suit to establish her right to certain land as belonging to her puttee talook, was not allowed to fall back on a different title and bring a separate suit claiming the same land as belonging to her mowrose, the cause of action in both cases being really the same. Anungo Mohun Deb v. Unnoda Dassee, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 351.

Under special circumstances, a widow who had asserted a proprietary right in certain property, without putting forward any claim for maintenance, not allowed afterwards to enforce her claim for maintenance against such property in the hands of a purchaser. Musamut Goolabee v. Ramtahal Rai, 1 N. W. P., Par. 12, p. 191.

The plaintiff sued for a quantity of land which was family property in the possession of his brother, the defendant. The defendant in a former suit declared that the land sued for was not family property but belonged to his sister, and in this suit he claimed the property under her will. The lower Court found that the property was family property, but that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the whole property on the ground that the disclaimer of the defendant in the former suit amounted to an estoppel and forfeiture of his share. Held that the effect of the defendant's conduct did not operate either as an estoppel or a forfeiture, and that the plaintiff was only entitled to a decree for a moiety of the property. Vellavan Chetty v. Thundavamurty, 4 Mad. Rep., 374.

A judgment-creditor, by putting up the rights and interests of his judgment-debtor in a talook for sale in execution, is not estopped from afterwards claiming a portion of that talook under a different title, e.g., under a mortgage. Chunder Kant Gangooey v. P. Wise, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 342.

As a general rule where a person takes land from another and pays rent to him he cannot deny the title of his landlord; but he is not precluded or stopped from proving, when sued for rent, that that title has expired. He is not warranted, however, in refusing to pay rent simply on the apprehension that he may be called on to pay the rent by a party who is said to have obtained a decree against the landlord for the land. Even if a decree has been passed against the lessee from the landlord derives his title, he is entitled to recover his rent until the decree is put in force. Burn and Co. v. Busho Moyee Dassee, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 85.

(d) By Decree.

The decision of a Collector on a question of possession and of the right to receive the rent, does not bar an action in the Civil Courts to try the title of the parties. Kalidass Ghose v. Chundramohini Dasi, 8 W. R., 68.

In a foreclosure suit in which A. was plaintiff, and B., C., and D. were defendants,—Held that A. was estopped by a previous verdict on the point in issue in an ejectment in which C. and D. were plaintiffs, and B. was defendant. Modin v. Mahomed, 1 Mad. Rep., O. C., 254.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for rent, basing his claim upon a kubuleut bearing date 6th Srabun 1258, B. S. His suit was dismissed, and the kubuleut pronounced to be spurious. Held that he was not estopped from afterwards suing the same defendant to set aside a pottah of the 27th Aughran 1244, B. S., under which the defendant claimed, the validity of the pottah not being in issue in the former suit. Oomanath Roy Chowdhry v. Raghunath Mitter, Marsh., 43.

A suit for rent was brought against the guardian of a minor, and the Court gave a decree founded on a kubuleut given by the ancestor of the minor. After the minor had come of age a suit was brought against him for subsequent arrears under the kubuleut. Held that he was estopped by the decree in the former suit from denying the validity of the kubuleut. Tarinaperanad Ghose v. Sreegopaul Paul Chowdhry and others, Marsh., 476.

A decree in a resumption suit estops only the parties to that suit and those claiming under them. Joy Kishen Mookerjee v. Kishen Gisain, 5 W. R., Act X R., 82.

The dismissal of a suit for the declaration of plaintiff's right to receive rent from a tenant of a portion of an estate cannot be pleaded as an estoppel in a suit to establish plaintiff's general right as 'proprietor of the whole estate. Kishen Dhun Nundee v. Bhookto Polly and others, 9 W. R., 461.

A suit for a kubuleut in which the rate of rent is the subject-matter and the question of the right of occupancy is not the main point, is not an estoppel to a suit for repossession, under Clause 6, Section 23, Act X of 1859. Khoda Buksh v. Akool Gisay, 9 W. R., 395.

In a former suit for assessment, in which the decree was that the land in question formed a part of the defendant's istemraree talook, the Collector found that it was not a part of such talook, and decreed the assessment. Held that the then defendant could not now sue in the Civil Court to establish his istemraree talookdaree rights. Mahomed Asim v. Ramkant Chowdhry and others, 6 W. R., Act X R., 101.

Held that a former judgment, by a Court of competent jurisdiction, upon the same cause of action, was conclusive between the same parties in a subsequent suit brought in another Court, notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal against it; but that the Judge passing a decree in the subsequent suit might, upon application made to him, and security being given, stay the execution of it, until the appeal in the former suit was decided, and might, if the decree in the former suit was reversed, entertain an application for the review of his own decision in the subsequent suit. Bulkirum Nathurum v. The Gujardl Mercantile Association, Limited, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 81.

A. brought a suit against B. in the Collector's Court for rent. In answer, B. set up a bond, by the terms of which A., in consideration of a loan of Rs. 10,000, stipulated that B. should apply a certain portion of the annual rent to the reduction of the loan, and the payment of the interest thereon. A. alleged that the bond was false. The Collector, in an issue directed by the High Court, decided that it was genuine, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. B. afterwards sued A. in the Civil Court upon the bond. Held, per Peacock, C. J., the decision of the Collector was not conclusive, but the Collector's decision as to the genuineness of the bond did not operate as an estoppel. The two Courts are not Courts of concurrent jurisdiction.

Per Peacock, C. J., Quere,—Is a judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction in a former suit conclusive between the parties on the same point conclusive between the parties in another Court in the country? Muzzammut Eedun v. Mussammut Bechun and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 264.

A suit on the same cause of action, and between the same parties, as a former suit which was summarily dismissed without being tried on its merits, is not one on a cause of action which has been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit. Shobhee Beva v. Mehdee Mundul, 9 W. R., 327.

A suit was brought by A. to recover property, in which, on appeal to the Privy Council, two questions arose, viz., whether the property was to pass as divided or undivided property, and whether such property was conveyed away to A.'s father by a deed of testamentary disposition. The lower Court had decided only the latter point, and the Privy Council remanded the case for determination of the former point. On a second appeal to the Privy Council, that Committee were asked to enter upon the question as to the validity of the testamentary paper, when A. gave up the point that the paper was in any sense testamentary in its character, and disclaimed having any title under it as a testamentary devise, and the Privy Council therefore did not decide that question.

Held that a subsequent suit by A., in which he sought to recover the property by setting up the paper as a valid will and testament, was a suit instituted without bona fides, and could not be allowed to proceed, because, first, the nature of the paper was in issue in the former suit, and what was in issue must be taken to have been decided by the judgment; and, secondly, because A. having used the document and abandoned all right to it as a will, he could not again use it for a different purpose. Sreemutho Raghoonadha Perya Oodya Taver v. Kattama Nauchear, 10 W. R., P. C., 1.

T. claimed a zemindary as the representative of a devisee under a will. In 1845 A., one of the zemindar's widows, had sued T.'s father for the zemindary, and he in his answer had set up the will. In 1856 K., the zemindar's second daughter, and A.'s successor according to Hindu law, had sued T.'s guardian for the zemindary, and he in his reply had set up the will. B. was a defendant in both suits. B. had decided against the plaintiff, but in one the parties were restricted to evidence on a point which was raised as to division, and in the other no points nor issues were settled. On an appeal by K. to the Privy Council against the decrees of 1845 and 1856, the will was not relied on, because as such it was admitted to be untenable, and the Privy Council decided against T., reversing the former decrees. T. now sued K. for the zemindary, grounding his claim on the will. The Civil Judge rejected his plaint under Act VIII of 1859, Section 2.

Held, on regular appeal, that although the Privy Council had given no direct decision upon the will, their judgment and final order involved the decision of all claim of title under that will, and must be considered, as between the parties, tantamount to an express adjudication upon such claim.

To give effect to the plea of res judicata, the Court must be satisfied that the ground of legal right on which the plaintiff sues was a point raised and opened for decision in the former suit, and that it was finally dealt with by the judgment and decree therein. Udaiya Tévar v. Katama Níchiyar and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 131.

When a Court of Justice states a fact, that fact is conclusive in the case. Petumber Manikjee v. Motiechand Manikjee, 5 W. R., P. C., 53.

Two applications before a Collector, the one by defendants, asking an amendment of the collectorate record by expunging therefrom plaintiffs' names, as being out of possession, and which, after evidence taken, was ordered to be done; and the other by plaintiffs, praying a partition under Act XIX of 1853, which was refused, on the ground that they had not established their possession, cannot be considered such an adjudication of rights as to be a bar to a suit by the plaintiffs for establishment of right to and possession of the land referred to in such application. Kishun Sakai v. Raghow Sing, 2 N. W. R., 64.

A. executed a kubuliatt for a term of years to B. as zemindar. B. gave a putni of the zemindari to C. C. instituted a suit for arrears of rent under the lease for a term of years against A., the lessee. A. in defence admitted the execution of the lease to B., but denied that B. was his real lessor and beneficially entitled to the rent, alleging that B. was only a bailamdar for a third party. Held that in India the English doctrine of estoppel did not apply, and that A. was competent in a suit for rent to deny his lessor's title as stated in the lease, and by parol evidence to prove a different title to that recited in the lease. Denzelle, B. v. Kedernaulth Chuckerbatty, 7 B. L. R., 720, and 16 S. W. R., C. R., 186.

The doctrine laid down in the Duchess of Kingston's case as to estoppel by judgment, is applicable to cases tried under the Civil Procedure Code of India, the 2nd Section of which is consistent with that rule.

But the Judicial Committee, reversing the decision of the Court below, considered that the doctrine had no application in the present case, the judgment relied on not being the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point upon the same matter; and after an examination of the whole evidence restored the judgment of the first Court. Khugwelee Sing v. Hossein Bux Khan, 7 B. L. R., 673, and 15 S. W. R., P. C., 30.

S. died in 1865, leaving two sons, N. and G. M. took possession of the property of S. under a will alleged by her to have been executed by S. In 1867 G. brought his suit, as one of the heirs of S., to set aside the will, and made his brother N. a codefendant. The principal Sudder Ameen dismissed the suit, finding on the evidence that the will was genuine. In 1869 N. brought this suit for his share as heir of S., against M. The first Court found that the will was a forgery, and gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal the Judge held that N.'s claim was barred by the decision in the former suit brought by his brother, and reversed the decision of the first Court.

_Held_ on special appeal that it was not barred by the finding of the Court in G.'s suit, as N. was no party to that suit, and he could not in any manner have availed himself of a decree in that suit to enforce a claim to his share.

_Nabin Chundra Ma-
sundar v. Mukta Sundari Debi_, 7 B. L. R., Ap., 38, and 15 S. W. R., C. R., 309.

Where the whole question of plaintiff's title is raised and decided in a suit for possession of land, that decision is conclusive between the parties as to every portion of land held under that title.

_Nund Kishore Singh v. Harse Persaud Mundie_, 13 S. W.
R., C. R., 64.

 Plaintiff, as the purchaser of a resumed milik, ejected the defendants, who brought a suit under Section 23, Act X of 1859, to recover possession, on the ground that they held under a potthah from plaintiff's vendors, and that the period of the potthah had not expired. The Collector found their plea good, and restored them to possession. Plaintiff then brought the present suit to set aside the potthah and recover possession.

_Held_ that the question between the parties having been already determined by the Collector, who had jurisdiction, it was a res-judicata.

_Hur Lal Saka v. Tirthanund Thakoor_, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 417.

Where a suit for rent has been dismissed on the ground that the defendants were trespassers, the latter cannot bring a suit for possession in a Revenue Court.

_Radha Churn Roy v. Moran and Co._, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 342.

Where application is made to a Collector for a tenant liable to pay revenue on account of an estate which applicant has carved out of unoccupied waste, and it is found that Government is not in a position to create such a tenure, the applicant is not bound by his offer made under an erroneous impression, nor is he estopped thereby from pleading as against the landlord that he is not liable to pay any rent.

_Brijonath Chowdry v. Lall Meah Munnespoore_, 13 S. W.
R., C. R., 391.

Where a suit for arrears of rent, at enhanced rates for a certain year, was dismissed for want of notice, but the Court also found that the potthah set up by defendant was not genuine, _held_ the decision was no bar to a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff for arrears of rent at enhanced rates for a subsequent year.

A matter which is directly adjudicated upon by a Court of competent jurisdiction can be treated as res-judicata, but not matters determined for colateral or incidental purposes only.

_Jardine Skinner v. Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty_, 14 S. W. R., C.
R., 412.

Where a plaintiff's claim to have a property declared imjamee had been dismissed in a former suit, his suit for a partition of the same property was held to be barred against a defendant who had been a party to that suit, as well as against defendants who are not in possession.

In a suit for removal of an alleged nuisance, which was dismissed because plaintiff did not produce his witnesses, and failed to prove his case, it was _held_ that there had been an adjudication, and that another suit would not lie on the same cause of action.

_Aishore Singh v. Huree Persaud Mundle_, 13 S. W.
R., C. R., 64.

The plaintiffs sued to raise an attachment placed upon a house, but failed in the lower Court, and the decision of the lower Court was confirmed upon appeal. The house was then sold. The plaintiff sued the purchaser to recover possession of it.

_Held_ that he was not estopped from suing by the decision in the former suit refusing to raise the attachment, and that such decision could not be even in evidence in the latter suit.

_Moro Balkrishna Male v. Shek Saheb Valad Badrudden Kambhe_, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C. P., 199.

Where for the purposes of a rent suit a Revenue Court finds that a kubuleut propounded by the plaintiff is a genuine document, such finding is no bar to a Civil Court trying the question of right between the parties, and for that purpose trying the validity and genuineness of the kubuleut.

_Bois Chunder Sen v. Traburam Sein_, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 32.

Such matters only as are decided between the parties by the decree in the suit ought to be treated as binding against them in subsequent litigation.
No part of the reasoning on the findings of facts which have induced the Court to come to its decision is binding as between the parties further than for the purposes of the particular decision.

_Auktul Chunder Mookerjee v. Sib Narain Ghose_, 15 S. W.
R., C. R., 527.

The plaintiff sued to recover two villages from the defendants, claiming title from C., the purchaser.
The first defendant alleged that her husband, not C., was the purchaser. This question was determined in a former suit, in which the present first defendant was plaintiff, and the present plaintiff defendant, in favour of the present plaintiff by the Civil Judge, and the decision was confirmed on appeal by the Sudder Court. An appeal to her Majesty in Council was dismissed for want of prosecution. _Held_ that the matter in issue was res-judicata.

_Whether the former judgment could be deemed conclusive whilst an appeal was pending._

_Sri Raja Karkarlupudi Sureyanarayanara Gurn v. Chel-

A widow claiming to be a trustee of property endowed by her husband is not bound by a decision adverse to a claim set up by her husband's grandfather in respect of that property, if she was not a party to the litigation. Fegredo, I. v. Mahomed Mudessur, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 75.

(e) Nature of the Bar.

To conclude a plaintiff by a plea of res-judicata, it is sufficient to show that there was a former suit between the same parties for the same matter upon the same identical question. It is necessary also to show that there was a decision finally granting or withholding the relief sought. Saikappa Chetty v. Rani Kalednapuri, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 84.

An estoppel in pais need not be pleaded in order to make it obligatory.

With the Indian system of pleading, a party's statement in a judicial proceeding cannot be excluded like allegations in bills in equity and pleadings at common law. But mere statements for the purpose of a particular judicial proceeding can only be conclusive evidence in another proceeding, as to such material facts embodied therein as must have been found affirmatively to warrant the judgment of the Court upon the issues joiner. They are then conclusive between the same parties; but because, for all purposes of present and prospective litigation, they must be taken as truth.

A brought a pauper suit, and virtually denied possession of certain property. B. petitioned to dispauper A., alleging that A. was possessed of such property. The Court decided that A. was in possession, and rejected her prayer to be allowed to sue as a pauper. Held, in a subsequent suit by A.'s representative against B.'s representative for the property, that even if A.'s allegation found to be false could be treated as an estoppel, B.'s allegation found to be true would also be an estoppel; and "estoppel against estoppel setteth the matter at large," but that, although A.'s allegation was receivable evidence against A. and her representative, they were not concluded by such allegation and the decision thereon. Citra Rani Namaji v. Tejuna Rani, 2 Mad. Rep., 31.

The strict technical doctrine of English law as to estoppels in the case of deeds under seal does not apply to the written instruments ordinarily in use amongst the natives of India. Zemindar Sre Matu Gaurewallaba Ramchandra v. Verappa Chetti, 2 Mad. Rep., 124.

A party to a suit is not estopped, merely by the reasons which a Judge may give for his decision. In order to make out that a decision in a former suit is an estoppel, it must be established that the same identical question has been formally raised and finally decided. Rajah Nygendar Narain v. Rughoonath Narain Dey, W. R., 1864, 20.

A stipulation in a bond that all payments should be endorsed on the back thereof, and that all other pleas of repayment would be futile, does not estop the defendant from proving by other means that the debt, or part of it, has been satisfied. Kaleedass Mittra v. Tarachand Roy, 8 W. R., 316.

Estoppels must be made out clearly. J. Tweedie v. Poonochunder Gangooly and others, 8 W. R., 125.

A decision in a former suit cannot operate as an estoppel as between co-defendants in that suit, or parties claiming under them. Mudhoo Mookoo Dabee v. Gunga Govind Mundle, W. R., 1864, 299.

To constitute a res-adjudicata with regard to a plaintiff's claim, it must have been raised by a previous suit in a Court competent to entertain it, and been determined by the judgment of the Court in that suit; or if it never has been expressly raised in a previous suit, it must be such as the plaintiff might and ought to have combined with the claim which was actually made and decided in such suit, if he ever intended to avail himself of it. Chunder Shukhur Deb Roy v. Doorgendro Deb, 3 W. R., 39.

Section 16 of Regulation III of 1793 applies only to cases in which the question to be determined in the cause is the same as has been already heard and determined, and not to cases in which new circumstances have intervened and altered the nature and character of the question to be determined. Doorga Pershad Roy Chowdry v. Tara Pershad Roy Chowdry, 3 W. R., P. C., 11.

To conclude a plaintiff by a plea of res-judicata, it is not sufficient to show that there was a former suit between the same parties for the same matter upon the same cause of action. It is necessary also to show that there was a decision finally granting or withholding the relief sought. Saikappa Chetti v. Rani Kalandra Purichiyar, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 84.

The force of res-judicata attaches not only to the bare condemnation or discharge of defendant, but to all the objection grounds distinctly found by the Judge as the basis of his decision. Ramasami Padeiyatchi v. Virasami Padeiyatchi, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 272.

A defendant, after having waived his plea of res-judicata in the Court below and consented to a trial of the suit on the merits, may revive the plea in the Court of Appeal on the appeal of the plaintiff. When, however, the plea is waived, and the Court, with the consent of both parties, goes on with the suit, its decision will be binding as between the parties. Mugno Moye Debby v. Hur Chunder Raoot, 3 W. R., Act X R., 146.

Quare,—Whether the dictum of a Revenue Court under Act X of 1859, with reference to the bona fides or otherwise of a pottah, is in any way binding upon a Civil Court in a suit in which the bona fides of the pottah is put in issue. Kumar Ali v. Dhoya Bibee, 5 W. R., Act X R., 61.

A decision between a ryot and a body of co-sharers is not binding upon the several co-sharers inter se. Nobin Chunder Dass v. Nim Chund Dass, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 191.

(f) Where Suit is Barred.

A right of enhancement decided in a former suit must be considered as res-adjudicata in this suit for enhanced rent. Bhuggobutty Debba v. Ram Kanayee Laha, 1 W. R., 167.

That a ryot's holding was of a date prior to 1790 once decided in a zemindar's suit under Section 28, Act X of 1859, must be considered as res-adjudicata.

Since Section 30, Regulation II of 1819, does not apply to a case in which (both parties being present) the Court held that in the absence of documentary evidence, the plaintiff's claim must be dismissed. The decision being a dismissal of the suit after adjudication of the merits, the matter must be considered as res-adjudicata. Mohanund Chowdhry v. H. A. Eglington, 1 W.R., 343.

Certain property having been sold in execution of a money decree against the representative of a mortgagee, a suit was instituted and a decree obtained in setting aside the sale as being that of land in which the mortgagee had no interest. The holders of the original money decree then again brought a suit to obtain a declaration that the said property was liable to be sold in satisfaction of the said decree.

_Held that the matter in issue having been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the suit was barred by Section 2, Act VIII of 1859. Nuffoo Chunder Naloo Chowderry v. Luckhee Monee Daece and others, 9 W.R., 300._

Where a widow who had taken possession of her husband's property was ejected by means of a suit in which her defence raised no right of lien for dower, in which suit an absolute decree of right was given to his heirs, the right of lien, as between her and them, is a res-adjudicata. Mussamut Wira v. Mussamut Shahbo, 8 W.R., 397.

A decree made in favour of a plaintiff in a suit is binding upon the defendants collectively and severally, notwithstanding any of them was made a defendant only _ikhhtatun_, i.e., by way of precaution. Any issue which is material to the rights of parties in the matter of the suit between them, whether actually contested or not, shall not after a first trial be raised in a subsequent suit between the same parties. Dokee Nundun Roy v. Kalee Pershad and others, 8 W.R., 366.

In a suit by a tenant to recover possession of land from which he had been dispossessed by defendant under colour of a sub-lease alleged to have been extorted by force, it appeared that plaintiff had, on this very cause of action, sued the defendant in the Court of the Collector, who had found the sub-lease to be good and valid, and had dismissed the suit. _Held that the suit, having once been dismissed by a Court of competent jurisdiction, could not again be entertained by the Civil Court._ F. Holloway v. Ashman Roy, 10 W.R., 325.

A suit to have a registered kobala declared fictitious and void as against plaintiffs was held to disclose no good cause of action, seeing that, on a petition preferred according to the provisions of Section 84, Act XX of 1866, a competent Court had already decided that the defendant was entitled to obtain registration of the deed. Ram Chunder Paul v. Becharam Dey, 10 W.R., 359.

When a suit for rent due under a stipulation in a puttee lease was dismissed in the Revenue Courts,—_Held that another suit could not be brought in the Civil Court as for damages laid at the amount of rent which would have been realized._ Gopalkisto Mookerjee v. Modhoosoodun Paul Chowdhry, W.R., 1864, Act X R., 82.

A. sued B. and C. in the Civil Court to recover possession of certain lands, of which he alleged that they had dispossessed him, under a decree obtained by them in a suit in which he had previously sued B. in the Civil Court, before Act IX of 1859 had been passed, for rent, in which suit C. had been added as a party, and had proved his title to the lands against A. _Held that A.'s suit must fail, on the ground that it involved a material issue of fact which had already been determined by a Court of concurrent jurisdiction in the former suit, which was between the same parties, and which issue disposed of the present suit. Also held on the facts that A. was barred by limitation._ Chowdhuri Nilcutn Pros. Singh v. Dignarayan Singh, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 30 10 W.R., 75.

A Deputy Collector having in a suit for rent given plaintiff (M.) a decree, determining adverse to defendant (K.) an issue which he had raised to an arrangement of tenancy,—_Held that K. can not succeed as plaintiff in a new suit in the same Court in which he sets up the same arrangement and asks to have it declared as that under which he holds the land from M. Kaler Doss Ghosal v. Modhoosoodun Roy and others, 10 W.R., 465._

When once a Civil Court has passed a final decision between the parties it loses jurisdiction over the suit, except for the purposes of executing the decree; and it cannot hold a new trial of the same unless, for some reason within the Procedure Act, the first trial appears to have been unfair between the two parties. Lolit Mohun Roy Chowdhry and others v. Sewtra Biber, 10 W.R., 423.

The purchaser at the sale of a talook, sold under a judgment upon a decree, sued to reverse the order of a Judge annulling the sale, and in the suit he craved confirmation of the sale, that he might be put into possession of the talook, and for a decree for mesne profits. This suit being dismissed on the merits, he instituted another suit, in which he craved a bynkah, or certificate of sale. _Held that the second suit was brought for the same causes and subject-matter as the first, and that the plaintiff was therefore precluded by the dismissal of the first suit from obtaining it._ Lam and others v. Dewan Puddum Lockun, Marsh., 96 W.R., F. B., 1862, 28.

A point raised in issue and tried in a previous suit between the parties having been re-opened by the Judge below in the present case, the High Court reversed the Judge's order, on the principle of res-judicata. Mier Bahadoor Ali and others v. Mussamut Suneerchuroo and others, 6 W.R., 157.

It having been decided in a suit between the same parties as a material issue that the plaintiff were not the illegitimate sons of the deceased as they alleged, and entitled to maintenance,—_Held that they could not again raise the issue on a fresh suit to establish their right to maintenance._ Ram Sooth and others v. Tara Singh and others, 4 Agra Rep., A. C., 40.

_Held that the plaintiff having failed in a regular suit in 1853 to establish his right to rent, his present suit for rent was not admissible, as from that date no rent was paid, nor was his title in any way recognized.* Sookhubund v. Nundo Singh, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 221.

A case decided by a Collector under Regulation
EVIDENCE—ESTOPPEL.

V of 1822, from whose decision no appeal was made, is res-judicata, and cannot be re-opened before a Small Cause Court Judge. Sriraja Up- paalpat Ganakaya Guru v. Balivirammon, 2 Mad. Rep., 175.

A plaintiff suing for the recovery of land is bound to put forward his whole case at once, and cannot be allowed to maintain a second suit for the same cause of action, merely by alleging that the Collector's order sought to be set aside is of a different date and description from that which was sought to be set aside in the former suit. Luchman Doss v. Priag Dutt and others, 3 Agra Rep., 305.

A person who buys with her eyes open, pendente lite, cannot maintain a suit involving a revival and re-trial of the very question decided in her vendor's suit. Nadurunnisa Bhee v. Aghar Ali Chowdury and others, 7 W. R., 103.

Possession of certain lands having been given to a decree-holder in execution, the judgment-debtor appeared before the Court which had jurisdiction to execute the decree and complained that illegal possession had been taken of land not covered by the decree. The Court determined that the decree did not cover the land, and rejected the complaint. The judgment-debtor then brought the present suit to recover possession of the excess land which had been made over to the decree-holder. Held that the question was one which arose in the former suit between the parties and which related to the execution of the decree in that suit, and must therefore, under Section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, have been determined by the Court executing the decree, and could not be gone into in this separate suit. Jogendro Narain Koornwar v. Ranee Surnomoye, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 39.

(g) Where Suit is not Barred.

Where a third party objected to the auction-sale of certain immovable property which had been attached by the Revenue authorities, it was held that his right to bring an action to prove that the property was his was not barred by Section 184, Act XXXII of 1860, because he had omitted to deposit the money demanded by Government or to file security. Sheo Pershad Singh v. Gopal Lal, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 276.

A former judgment which after deciding the issues both of limitation and right in favour of the plaintiff, non-suited him, is not conclusive in a subsequent suit as regards limitation. Muddun Mohun Chunder Chowdury v. Brindabun Chunder Sircar Chowdury, 4 W. R., 104.

In a former suit against a party and his vendor, in which an intervenor was made a defendant, plaintiffs obtained a decree with a reservation of intervenor's rights. The decree was not a res-adjudicata in the present suit by a purchaser from the intervenor against the said vendee, the reservation being a mere obiter dictum. Buksh Ali v. Nityanund Doss, 5 W. R., 227.

Plaintiff purchased an estate from L. (defendant No. 1) during the pendency of a suit on the part of F. against his vendor, G. (defendant No. 2), for confirmation of possession and registration of name. L.'s suit against G. was dismissed for default. Plaintiff then sued for possession on the ground of having been dispossessed after the decision in the other case.

Held that the cause of action in that other case is not the same as the cause of action in the present suit. Mohabeer Pershad v. Lalla Ram Bahadur and others, 11 W. R., 170.

After the partners of a trading firm had dissolved partnership and divided assets and liabilities, a suit was brought against the firm by a creditor, and decreed, notwithstanding the plea put in by one of the partners (M.) that by the private arrangement among the partners the debt sued for pertained to the other partner's (L.').s share of the liabilities.

When a Court of competent jurisdiction in deciding upon a particular subject-matter thinks it necessary to go into collateral facts for the purposes of its decision, its opinion on those facts is not conclusively binding in a subsequent suit which relates to a different subject-matter. Modhun Ram Dey v. Boydonath Doss and others, 9 W. R., 592.

A., on the 1st of February, 1868, entered into a contract with B. to supply him with straw for twelve months, the supplies to be sent as ordered daily. On the 12th of March B. brought an action in the Small Cause Court against A. for damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of A.'s having failed to supply straw as agreed upon. The Judge decided the questions in issue (namely, of the factum of the contract and the authority of the person who executed it in A.'s behalf) in favour of B., and gave him a decree. On the 21st of April a second suit was brought by B. against A. on the same contract. The claim was for damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of A.'s having failed to supply straw as agreed from the 20th of February to the 17th April. That suit was dismissed, the Judge holding that the matter was res-adjudicata, as he considered that the contract was an entire one, and that B. had shown by suing on it for general damages that he treated it as such, and had elected to rescind it. On the 9th of May a rule nisi was granted for a new trial, and on the 16th of May the rule was made absolute. On the 12th June, at the new trial, a decree was made in favour of B. for so much of the damages claimed as had been sustained subsequently to the date of the decree of the 25th March. In an action brought by B. on the same contract for damages sustained between the 17th April and the 16th of June, by reason of A. having failed to supply straw as agreed according to the terms of the same contract, A. denied that there had been any such contract, and further pleaded that the matter of the contract, if there had been one, had already been adjudicated upon. On reference from the Small Cause Court,—Held that the finding of the Judge upon the contract in the action brought on the 12th of March was conclusive between the parties, and that A.'s plea of res-adjudicata was not well founded. Cook and others v. Judges Chunder Mundali, 2 B. L. R., O. C., 48.

A case, struck off on the ground of discrepancy between the plaint and the plaintiff's deposition cannot operate as res-judicata. Gunga Narain Doss v. Punchanunee Dosses, W. R., 1864, 163.

A decision in a former case, in which a mere question as to the use of the water in a water-course arose, cannot operate as res-judicata in a subsequent case, in which the subject-matter is whether the defendants have the right of throwing up an embankment and obstructing the water-way. "Mamnolnm Sing/lv.Amrinat/z C/w'zud/zry, W. R., 1864, 245.
A. and his brothers made consignments of indigo to B., who sued A. for the balance of an account due to him in respect of advances made by him to A. and his brothers, and that suit was dismissed on the ground that no balance was proved to be due. A. now sues to recover the proceeds of the indigo, or his share of such proceeds. Held that the dis-missal of the former suit was not a bar to the institu-
A previous rent suit which can only decide the question of liability to rent, is not res-judicata in a suit for abatement of rent on the ground of decrease of area, as to the question of what is the proper measuring rod. Sreemunt Mundul v. Meer Athur Ali, 6 W. R., Act X R., 193.
Where a suit for damages for the cutting down of certain trees on land alleged to belong to plaintiff was dismissed by a Small Cause Court which found that the plaintiff had no right to the land,—Held that the decision did not conclude the plaintiff in the matter of his title, but gave him a new cause of action against the defendant. Chunder Narain Mocooomdar v. Frithanund Asumer, 12 W. R., 290.
Held that the plaintiff's title to be maintained in possession of an orchard as planter of trees, or the dignity of a tank, not having been adjudged upon in a former suit,—cannot be considered as a res-judicata, and should be decided on the merits. Goslain Jugoooporee v. Kisken Doyal Chand, 1 Agra Rep., 32.
A former decree decided that the plaintiff (a widow) always received a certain fixed amount, and was not entitled to recover more in the shape of profits in respect of the share claimed. Held that it was not a decision that such fixed payment represented a mere claim to maintenance, and not a substantial right or interest in the property itself, so that on partition she must be regarded as having no claim to share in the land.
It should be enquired into (the decree being so construed) whether the acceptance of a fixed payment was on forfeiture of all rights to the property, and whether it extended only so far as the widow's right is concerned, or whether it affected the son's right likewise. Mussamut Man Koorwar v. Dila-wur Hossein Khan, 1 Agra Rep., R. A., 36.
Where a Court in a former suit against the present plaintiffs decided as to the validity of the mortgage now in suit, although it was not a matter for adjudication then before the Court,—Held that that decision was no bar to the plaintiffs' present suit, and that the question of the genuineness or otherwise of the mortgage by defendants to plaintiffs was to be decided on merits. Buster Ram and others v. Newaj Singh and others, 1 Agra Rep., 63.
Held that a former suit which decided the question of relinquishment of the land by defendant, a ryot, does not bar the present suit, which is brought on the allegation that the land being seer land, the defendant, the occupant, has no right of occupancy, and should consequently be ejected. Held, further, that in computing the period of twelve years' holding which creates a right of occupancy, all such time which was subject to litigation should be excluded. Naiyal Singh and others v. Ram Narain, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 93.
Held that the judgment of the Lucknow Civil Court, in a former suit for property situated within the jurisdiction of that Court, was no bar to the present suit, in respect to property situate at Allahabad. There was no splitting of the claim, inasmuch as the former suit was for the entire property situate in Lucknow and Allahabad. Thakoor Pershad v. Kalika Pershad and others, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 104.
Held that a decree of the Revenue Court, in a suit for possession brought by one lessee against the zemindar, was no bar to a suit in the Civil Court brought by another lessee to obtain possession against both the zemindar and the first lessee. Run Singh v. Mahomed Abid and others, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 127.
In a suit to recover, with mesne profits and other incidents, a jeryati village alleged by the plaintiff to form part of the zemindari, and to be wrongfully held by defendant by virtue of the execution of a decree of the late Commissioner of Northern Circars passed in 1844, the defendant pleaded that he held on a permanent lease subject to a fixed quit-rent, that he and his ancestors had held on that tenure since and previously to the Permanent Settlement, and that the quit rent had been received from him by the plaintiff. The Agent dismissed the suit, on the ground that the matter had become res-judicata against the plaintiff by a former decree in 1807.
Held that the matter of the present claim was not res-judicata, because the question of the existence and validity of the alleged grant, on which the defendant relied, was not determined in the former decree. Vairrichara Surya Norayana Raj Baha-door v. Nadiminti Bhagavat Palanjali Shastri, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 120.
In 1856 the plaintiff, the zemindar of Tarla (who had attained his majority in 1853), instituted suits for the recovery of the two villages claimed in the present suit, on the ground that the villages were jeryati, and had been temporarily alienated, and that the plaintiff claimed a right of resumption. It was decided that the villages had formed a mokasa jagheer from a date prior to that of the Permanent Settlement, and that, as they did not constitute a portion of the assets of the zemindary at the date of the settlement, there was no right of resumption. Pending those suits, an order was issued by Government which plaintiff construed as a transfer to him of the Government right in the villages, and he founded the present suit upon the lapse of the mokasa to Government, and the order transferring the right to him.
In a suit brought to set aside the adoption of the first defendant, to declare plaintiff's title to certain lands and for possession, the first defendant pleaded that the question of his adoption was res-judicata in a former suit. In that suit, between the present plaintiff's son as plaintiff and his father (the present plaintiff) as the first defendant, and the present first defendant, the alleged adopted son as second defendant, the latter was found to be the adopted son of the undivided brother of the present plaintiff.—Held that the first defendant's adoption was not res-judicata. Gopala busy v. Raghapatiki Ayyan, 3 Mad. Rep., A. j., 217.

Plaintiff claiming as grandson of one Subapati Mudali, the only undivided brother of Subraya Mudali, sought to recover half of the village sold by Subraya to first defendant's father in 1855; the village having been (as alleged) family property, and sold without the consent of plaintiff's father, who succeeded his father, Subapati, and not for family purposes.

In a former suit (No. 3 of 1855), brought by the plaintiff's father against Subraya and Ramanya, the father of the present first defendant, and the present second defendant, the paternal nephew of the first defendant, for possession of the whole of the family property belonging to him, and Subraya as co-partner, and to rescind the sale to Ramanya, the plaint stated, amongst other things, that Subraya was imbecile; and that the sale deed was obtained by taking a fraudulent advantage of his imbecility; and that it was invalid as being made without plaintiff's consent. The Court decided that Subraya was "both physically and mentally qualified to manage, and legally competent to deal with the estate, supposing it to be undivided to the extent of his own share," and dismissed the suit.

In 1862 plaintiff again sued the present defendant for the whole of the village on the same ground of imbecility and fraud. The Civil Court decided that the suit was barred by the decree in the first suit, and on appeal the decree was affirmed.

Held that the present cause of action, namely, the plaintiff's right as co-partner to a moiety of the property, and the invalidity of the instrument of sale to pass that right to the defendant, was not res-judicata. Chinniya Mudali v. Venkatachella Pillai, 3 Mad. Rep., 320.

In an action to recover fees claimed for services as an hereditary family and village priest, it appeared that a deceased brother of the plaintiff had recovered judgment against one of the defendants and others in an action for similar fees. Held that the former judgment was not conclusive in favour of the plaintiff, nor as against a brother of one of the original defendants. Krishnumbut bin Skibrambhut v. Lukshnumbut bin Gunnesbhat, 1 Bom. Rep., 141.

K. sued to establish his title to a house purchased by him from D. D.'s guardians during minority, alleging that the greater part of the purchase-money was employed in paying off a mortgage claim upon the house; that after he had obtained possession under his deed one D. S., the holder of a decree against D. D.'s guardians, attached the house; and that he brought the suit to raise the attachment, in which having failed he paid into Court the amount of D. S.'s claim.

Held that K. was not estopped from bringing this suit against D. D. by the decree in his former suit to raise the attachment, which declared that the deed of sale now relied upon was fraudulent and void as against D. S. Dagom v. Kamble, 2 Bom. Rep., 369.

A suit struck off by reason of the defendant being then in jail on a criminal charge, cannot be set up as res-judicata in a subsequent suit, there having been no determination in favour of one party or the other, nor can it be treated as a case of withdrawal under Section 97, Act VIII of 1859. Luckhee Ram Dass and others v. Joy Sunkar Gooho, 7 W. R., 236.

A suit to establish the plaintiff's right to a share of ancestral property, part of which was in his sole possession, cannot operate as a res-judicata in a subsequent suit to recover possession of a part of the ancestral property which was, as he alleges, in his sole possession, and to which he was forcibly evicted by the defendant during the pendency of that suit. Hurznath Roy and others v. Gooroo Doss Roy, 7 W. R., 423.

Five brothers, A., B., C., D., and E., executed an ikkar, by which talook N. and others were to remain in their possession, and under the management of A. On refusal to give his brothers their shares of the profits, they sued separately and obtained decrees against him for the amount due to them. A.'s son now sues B. for the sums which his father was compelled under the ikkar to pay his other brothers, on the allegation that B. alone was in possession of talook N. and appropriated the rents thereof fraudulently. Held that the present suit was not barred by the former suits under the ikkar, except so far as B.'s share in talook N. was concerned. Khetto Nath Day v. Gossain Doss Day and others, 7 W. R., 188.

A suit which was brought by A. against B. and C., and dismissed, cannot be pleaded as res-judicata in a subsequent suit brought by B. against C. Huro Mone Debia v. Tameeoodeen Chowdhr and others, 7 W. R., 181.

A former judgment, which proceeded wholly upon a technical defect or irregularity in the proceedings, and not upon the merits of the case, is not a bar to a subsequent suit for the same cause of action. Ram Nath Roy Chowdhr v. Bhagbut Mohapatr, 3 W. R., Act X R., 140.

The decision in a suit under Act X of 1859 against the defendants as the plaintiff's tenants will not bar a suit brought in the Civil Court against the same defendants as the plaintiff's vendees, the parties being accidentally the same persons, but legally different persons, with different rights and interests. Sheikh Gholam Ahmed v. Sham Soondor Roy, 5 W. R., Act X R., 9.

A mere decree for rent of certain lands in a suit in which no question as to the lands being lakheraj was put in issue or decided, cannot operate as an estoppel to a suit to obtain a declaration that the same lands are lakheraj. Dukheena Mohun Roy Chowdhr v. Kasheenath Chatterjee and others, 6 W. R., 37.

Where a person apparently holds a tenure in a zamindary he is recorded in the sherishtah, and is nominally in possession, though in a suit for rent, or as to the state of the property, the zamindar is, at any particular time, unable to prove that such person is holding baremee for others, really interested; or if, in any future years, such zamindar can show that these persons are then really enjoying the profits, paying the rents, and acting as owners, he is not prevented by a decision as to the rents or title in former years from showing what is the state of things in any subsequent years. Ram Dhun Mookerjee v. Monee Cornica Debee and others, 6 W. R., 266.

Plaintiffs sued for their share in the property of their family. The Judge rejected their claim, mainly on the ground that when parties in a former suit respecting the same property they had pleaded division, and the Court found that the family was undivided. Held that the Judge was wrong in attributing to the plaintiff the plea of division in the former suit, and, even if such plea had been raised, the judgment in that suit, pronouncing the status of the parties to be that of non-division, was conclusive on that subject, and that it was open to the plaintiffs to sue for enforcement of their rights to effect a division. Sangoovin v. Kollathoorayen, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 116.

The survivor of several Hindu sisters is not bound by decrees obtained against her sisters during their lives, whose interest was only a life-interest in their father's property, which on their death passed to the survivor as heir of her father. Joygobind Shakoy v. Mahkub Koowur, 7 W. R., 487.

A Collector's judgment as to the genuineness of a pottah cannot be pleaded as an estoppel in the Civil Court in an action for enforcement on account of trespass. Arndhun Day and others v. Golam Hossein and others, 8 W. R., 487.

In a former suit for rent brought before the Collector by A. against B., A. set up a bond authorizing B. to deduct a certain portion of his rent, and apply it in reduction of the amount due to him on the bond. The Collector held that the bond was genuine. B. now sues in the Civil Court under the bond. Held by the majority of the Court (Campbell, J., dissenting) that the decision of the Collector was not conclusive, except upon the question relating to the rent, concurrency of jurisdiction being a necessary part of the rule creating an estoppel in such a case. Mussumat Edun v. Mussumat Bechun, 8 W. R., 175.

In an action for rent defendant pleaded by way of estoppel to part of the plaintiff's claim that, in a prior action for rent previously due, brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, it had been found that the defendant was tenant to the plaintiff of a less quantity of land only than that in respect of which the plaintiff claimed rent in his suit. Held that there was no estoppel, and that the plaintiff might show, notwithstanding such previous judgment, that the defendant was in occupation of the larger quantity. Ojoodhya Persad v. Bhugwan-tajah, Marsh., 12.

A finding in one suit to which A. was a party is no bar against A. in another suit, unless it is shown that the issue in question in the latter was raised in the former suit, and was a material issue in it. Dahoo Munder v. Gopee Nund Jha, 2 W. R., 79.

If a man takes out probate of a will his heirs are not estopped from disputing the will. Mahomed Mudun v. Khediaunnissa, 2 W. R., 181.

A. claimed certain property as the adopted son of B., and it was decided in that suit that A. had failed to prove that he was the adopted son of B. Held that this decision was no legal bar to A.'s proving in another suit that he was the adopted son of B., in which A. sought to obtain a different property upon a different cause of action, though the parties to the suit were the same. Kriparam v. Bhagawun Dat, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 68; S. C., 10 W. R., 100.

An affirmation in general terms of the right of a plaintiff in a suit, which was based in some measure upon certain documents, is not such a decision between the parties as precludes the defendant from raising a question as to the genuineness of these documents in a subsequent suit between the same parties. Hurreehur Mookerjee v. Oomamoye Dossee, 12 W. R., 525.

A. brought suit under Clause 6, Section 23, Act X of 1859, by a ryot against his zamindar, cannot bar A. for confirmation of title by the intervenor in that suit. Tarachand Ghose v. Radhamony Dossee and others, 7 W. R., 459.

Where a Deputy Collector declined jurisdiction in a suit for ejectment under Section 28, Act X of 1859, and the appeal against this decision to the Judge was dismissed,—Held that that decision was no bar to a suit for ouster in the Civil Court, either in the way of res-judicata or otherwise. Basar Mahamed v. Sudder Gaze and others, 7 W. R., 97.

In a suit brought in the Civil Court to enforce a summary decree for rent against the immovable property of the defendant, that Court is not estopped by the decision of the Collector that the remedy upon that summary decree was bound by limitation, but it is the duty of the Court to decide whether the suit to enforce the decree against the immovable property is barred or not. Gyanchun-dra Roy Chowdry v. Kales Churn Roy Chowdry, 7 W. R., 481.

A summary order rejecting plaintiff's claim in an execution case to the property in dispute, when it had been attached by a decree-holder, which order was not followed by the sale of the property attached, cannot in any manner affect the present suit against parties other than the decree-holder brought for a different purpose and on a different cause of action. Bood Rucole and others v. The Nawab Nazim of Bengal, 11 W. R., 382.

The proceedings in a suit under Act X of 1859, in which the Collector did not finally adjudicate upon the genuineness of a pottah, although he accepted it as genuine, are no bar to a subsequent suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that the pottah is a forgery. Petumber Shaka and others v. Ramjoy Ghosh and others, 7 W. R., 92.

Dismissal of suit for rent is no bar to suit for title and possession with mesne profits. Gour Hurse Doss v. Mutteenolah, 1 W. R., 99.

An admission made by a party in other cases may be taken as evidence against him, but cannot operate against him as an estoppel in a case in which his opponents are persons to whom the admission was not made, and who are not proved to have ever heard of it, or to have been misled by it, or to have acted in reliance upon it. Chunderkant Chuckerburtly, Christian v. Fazre Mohun Dutt, 5 W. R., 209.

A decision as to the validity of a will under the provisions of Act XXVII of 1860 will not bar a regular suit under Act VIII of 1859, between the same parties, to contest the validity of the same will. Annud Chunder Mitter v. Baney Mokhob Mitter and others, 11 W. R., 127.

An heir is not deprived of what he is entitled to, as such, by having, in proceedings taken against, the property claimed, repudiated heirship, and denied that he had inherited. Khemunuree Dossar v. Gooroo Prosad Mytee and others, 11 W. R., 379.

The finding of a Civil Court as to the execution of a will is not conclusive evidence on the point, if the question of its execution was not a material issue in the suit. Beer Chunder Roy v. Sheikh Tumexoodeen, 12 W. R., 87.

A judgment-debtor did not oppose a claim successfully made by a third party to property of the debtor which was finally settled in execution of a decree. Held that, in the absence of fraud in the deed, it was not against his judgment-creditor, the debtor's not opposing the claim of the third party was no bar to his suing the latter to recover from him the property he had claimed. Bindoo Bassinee Dabea v. Taraphrosno Banerjee, 2 W. R., 3.

When a suit has been remanded by the Appellate Court and then dismissed by the Court of first instance for non-appearance of the parties, the plaintiff is not debarred thereby from bringing another suit upon the same cause of action against the same defendant. Raghunath Singh v. Ram Kurnam huttee, 5 B. L. R., Ap., 64.

The judgment of a Moonsiff's Court (confirmed by the lower Appellate Court) in a suit for arrears of rent, as to the validity of the same lease which plaintiff there set up, and of the same mukurruree potah which defendants then brought into Court, was not conclusive evidence in the present case, for though an inferior Court has jurisdiction to try every matter which is necessary for the adjudication of the point in contest before it, its decision is not final as regards other facts not in contest before it. Sekainee Courree Coomaree v. The Bengal Coal Co., 13 S. W. R., C. R., 129.

A suit for enhanced rent after notice having been dismissed in appeal, plaintiff sued to recover rent for the same year at the rate admitted by the defendant in the former suit. Held that the cause of action in the present suit was not the same as in the former, and that the law of res-judicata did not apply in bar. Krishno Chunder Goopto, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 380.

A suit against the same defendant on a bond having been dismissed on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove the execution of the bond, defendant sued to recover the identical sum as a balance due on a khatta account. Held that the second suit was not brought on a cause of action previously tried and determined between the parties, and was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. Anghore Nath Gosral v. Roop Chund Muddle, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 97.

J. and B. borrowed a sum of money on a mortgage of property. Shortly after this they granted a mukurruree of the property to plaintiff and afterwards sold their rights as proprietors to one R. R. Subsequently to this the mortgagee brought a suit against the mortgagees, and obtained a decree declaring the property liable to be sold in satisfaction of his debt. The property was accordingly sold in execution and purchased by one R. D., and the sale proceeds were made over to the judgment-creditor. Plaintiff as mukurrureedar now sues to obtain possession on the ground that the debt being paid off the mortgage is no longer in existence. The Judge having found that the purchase by R. D. was not bonafide, but for and on the part of R. R. who was in actual possession.—Held that Section 290 of the Code of Civil Procedure was no bar to the suit, the ground of fraud alone giving plaintiff sufficient right to question the legality of the sale. Mussamut Shama Keszyv. Mussamut Raj Kishore, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 179.

Decisions against one heir are not final or binding against other heirs. Nor are decisions against one person in any way conclusive or binding against other persons who do not derive their title from that person and who come into Court upon an independent title or independent right of suit. Shub Pratap Gufer Khan v. Golam Nufuz, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 298.

A decision on a collateral issue as to the rights of the parties prior to a decree in a suit for enhancement of rent, is no bar to another suit on the point so decided. Salahmunissa Khatoon v. Mohesh Chunder Roy, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 85.

A suit is not barred by the principle of res-judicata because, in a former case between the same parties and on the same cause of action, the judgment was set aside. Held that the evidence had been recorded but before final judgment was passed, obtained the Court's permission to withdraw the case, with reservation of leave to bring another suit. Observations on decision of Privy Council in Watson v. Collector of Rajshaye, 12 W. R. (P. C.), p. 43. Sreemotee Mona Bibe v. Oomed Ali, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 276.

An incidental finding of a Revenue Court as to the genuineness of a potah is no bar to the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to try the same question on a distinct issue in a regular suit. Shub Panah Mudden Mohun Doss, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 415.

The Court declined to concur in a decision which should deny to plaintiff money now evidently due, and which defendant has failed or omitted to pay, upon the ground that in a previous suit it appeared that defendant was willing to pay and consequently that suit was unnecessary. Ram Soondur Sein v. Krishno Chunder Goopie, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 380.

Plaintiff's former suit in the Revenue Court for arrears of rent at enhanced rates, to which defendant set up a plea of lakheraj, was dismissed on the ground that the kubuleut propounded by plaintiff was not proved. Held that plaintiff was now entitled to bring this action for a declaration of his title to the disputed lands as part and parcel of the māl lands of his zemindaree. Issur Chunder Roy v. Jaggeswar Chose, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 184.

(4) Estoppel by Acquiescence.

In a suit to recover possession of land where it appeared that the defendant's father had in A. D. 1801 obtained possession on a lease of 280 bigahs from the Government of Kulaibo, and that the plaintiff's father had in 1806 obtained a grant of ten unspecified bigahs of the same land, but that he never asked to have them marked out and given to him in specie, and that he, and subsequently his sons, the plaintiffs, were content up to the year 1856 to receive from the defendant's family in respect of their grant the rent formerly paid by them to the Government for the same. The District Court reversed the decree of the Moonsiff, and threw out the claim to recover possession of the land on the ground that the plaintiffs must be taken after such a lapse of time to have acquired in the arrangement that a yearly rent was to be received without any particular land being marked out as theirs.

_Held_ that it is competent for the Assistant Judge to come to that conclusion under the circumstances, and that there was no ground for saying that there was any error of law in his decision, which was accordingly affirmed. _Suli v. Dhundaraj Venayak_, 3 Bom. Rep., A. C., 55.

Acquiescence must be inferred when a person stands by and allows another to erect a _pukka_ building on his land, and a suit would not lie for the demolition of the building, but only for damages or rent of land. _Hurro Chunder Mookerjee v. Hullodhur Mookerjee_, W. R., 1864, 166.

The sending of an agent by a tenant to settle with the landlord as to the rent is not a virtual acquiescence in the rate of rent demanded. _John St nackt and J. Cox v. Lalla Bhurrut Lall_, W. R., 1864, Act X, Rul. 115.

A consent by the vak eeel of a party to a decree being made binding on property other than what the parties to the suit may have an interest in, is not consent to what is beyond the scope of the suit, and can neither be binding on the party nor acted upon by the Court. _Abul Khardar v. Andhu Set_, 2 Mad. Rep., 423.

Where a mortgage was made by a lumberdar of his own share and shares of his co-sharers as agent on their part in order to raise a sum required to pay the Government revenue,—_Held_ that the co-sharers, being aware of the fact of mortgage, and not having at the time repudiated it, and moreover having acquiesced in the decree of the Court of first instance which awarded their shares on payment of their quota of the mortgage debt and interest, must be taken to have thereby consented to the act of the lumberdar which was done on their behalf.

The mortgage being made by the lumberdar for himself and as agent for other sharers, it was necessary to issue notice of foreclosure both to the lumberdar and his co-sharers, and that the latter should also have been made parties to the suit for possession. _Punchum Singh and others v. Mungle Singh and others_, 2 Agra Rep., 207.

(j) _Rulings under Section 2 of Act VIII of 1859._

A plaintiff's failure in a former suit to establish his claim with reference to a different property from which he was dispossessed at a different date, cannot render his present suit inadmissible under the provisions of Section 2, Act VIII of 1859, even though the title set forth in both the suits is identical. _Booa Rusoalee v. T. It: Na'wab IVazz'm of Bengal_, II W. R., 382.

Where a suit against several defendants for a joint jumma is dismissed on the ground that the jumma is several and not joint, the plaintiff is not precluded by Act VIII of 1859, Section 2, from afterwards suing each of them severally for the separate jumma. _Telokharee Saka v. Bissendro Narain Sahie_, Marsh., 418.

In a suit for redemption of mortgage the plaintiff may impale other persons who claim the right of redemption in opposition to him.

Where D. sued for redemption, and obtained a conditional decree, and subsequently the plaintiff sued D. to establish his right to the mortgaged property and obtained a decree,—_Held_ that a suit by the plaintiff for redemption was not barred by Section 2, Act VIII of 1859. _Bhoop Singh v. Nursing Rai and others_, 4 Agra Rep., 144.

A plaintiff's failure in a former suit to establish his claim as part of her talook. In a former suit A. had sued B. to recover possession of the same land, claiming it as _tawfer_ (or excess), and her suit had been dismissed. _Held_ that A.'s present suit was barred under Section 2 of Act VIII of 1859. _Umatara Debi v. Krishna Kamiit Dossi and others_, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 102; 10 W. R., 426.

Where the plaintiffs in a former suit were H., R., L., and K., and the plaintiffs in the present suit O., R., and L., it was held that the former suit was not between the same parties as the latter, or brought by parties under whom the present plaintiffs claim, and therefore that the present suit was not barred by Section 2, Act VIII of 1859, whether some of the parties were trustees for the others or not. _Woomeeh Chunder Roy and others v. Nobin Chunder Mozoomdar and others_, 10 W. R., 457.

To plead res-judicata under Section 2, Act VIII of 1859, there is necessarily that the parties should be the same or their representatives, that the subject-matter of the suit should be the same, and the cause of action the same. _Maharaj Singh v. Musamset Beela Koore_, W. R., 1864, 320.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of land and for wasilat from the period at which he alleged he was dispossessed; and he obtained a decree for possession of the lands and for wasilat from the date of the plaint. He afterwards sued the defendant for wasilat from the date of the alleged dispossession to the date of the plaint. _Held_ that wasilat having been claimed in the previous plaint for that period, and there having been an adjudication upon his claim of wasilat, and no evidence that wasilat was withheld for the period for which it was now claimed, through inadvertence or by mistake, the case was within Act VIII of 1859, Section 2, excluding from the jurisdiction of the Court causes of action "which shall have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction to a former suit between the same parties." _Luteesoonissa Bibee v. Luckeemoney Dossit and others_, Marsh., 93.

A suit for wasilat is not barred under Section 2, Act VIII of 1859, although in a previous suit the plaintiff prayed for possession of the land and obtained a conditional decree, and subsequently the plaintiff sued D. to establish his right to the mortgaged property and obtained a decree. _Held_ that the question of wasilat could not be raised by Section 2 of Act VIII of 1859, whether some of the parties were trustees for the others or not. _Balum Blatt alias Rafa/iz Ram B/zult v. Bkoooun_, 6 W. R., 78.

In a suit for possession, wasilat was not treated as a cause of action "heard and determined in that suit" within the meaning of Section 2, Act VIII of 1859. _Held_ that the question of wasilat could not be regarded as a cause of action "heard and determined in that suit" within the meaning of Section 2, Act VIII of 1859. Where the amount of mesne profits cannot be ascertained till after the end of the year, the cause of action does not arise until the end of the year.
Parties in possession are liable for waслиat to the legal owners whom they keep out of possession, even though there was no mala fides on their part.

The Tipperah Rajah's Court is a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of Section 2, Act VIII of 1859. A decision given there bars a fresh suit in respect of the same matter in a British Court.

In a suit to recover, in virtue of a right of inheritance, a share of a deceased father's estate from which plaintiff had been ousted in 1858,— Held that as the plaintiff had brought a suit in 1853 in which she claimed the same properties as belonging to her father's estate, and had accepted and acted upon the decree then passed, which excluded the property in question from her claim, her present suit was barred by Section 2, Act VIII of 1859; and further that she could not claim the property on the ground of a solenamah by which it was admitted and declared that the property belonged to her father's estate, when it had been already decided in the former suit that it ought not to appertain to that estate.

A suit is not barred under Section 2, Act VIII of 1859, as res-adjudicata, unless the parties or their privies, the subject-matter of suit and the cause of action, are the same.

A landlord sued his tenants and his tenants' surety in the Collector's Court for arrears of rent, the surety being merely treated as a nominal party, and the decree being given against the tenants. He afterwrd sued the surety in the Civil Court on the bond given by him, and in the lower Court obtained a decree, not only for the arrears of rent, but also for the costs in the Act X suit.

A landlord sued his tenants and his tenants' surety in the Collector's Court for arrears of rent, the surety being merely treated as a nominal party, and the decree being given against the tenants. He afterwrd sued the surety in the Civil Court on the bond given by him, and in the lower Court obtained a decree, not only for the arrears of rent, but also for the costs in the Act X suit.

Where the right to possession as evidenced by the title of the parties was in issue in a former case under Act X of 1859, and the right to possession as between the same parties under their several titles is also the point in issue in a subsequent suit in the Civil Court, the causes of action in the two cases are identical, and the latter suit is barred under Section 2, Act VIII of 1859.

Plaintiffs having purchased the rights of a widow in certain properties, sued the defendants for partition of the share purchased; defendants admitted the widow's right to a certain extent, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that plaintiffs before they obtain partition must establish the extent of their right and the validity of the purchase.

A landlord sued his tenants and his tenants' surety in the Collector's Court for arrears of rent, the surety being merely treated as a nominal party, and the decree being given against the tenants. He afterwrd sued the surety in the Civil Court on the bond given by him, and in the lower Court obtained a decree, not only for the arrears of rent, but also for the costs in the Act X suit.

A landlord sued his tenants and his tenants' surety in the Collector's Court for arrears of rent, the surety being merely treated as a nominal party, and the decree being given against the tenants. He afterwrd sued the surety in the Civil Court on the bond given by him, and in the lower Court obtained a decree, not only for the arrears of rent, but also for the costs in the Act X suit.

In execution of a decree, the right, title, and interest of A. in a certain property were sold and purchased by B. In execution of another decree, the right, title, and interest of A. and C. in the same property were sold and purchased by D. In a suit by A. the sale to B. was set aside, but on appeal the decision of the Court of first instance was, upon consent of the parties, set aside and the sale allowed to stand good. D. sued for possession of the share of A. and C. in the property purchased by him, and obtained a decree for possession of the share of C. only. D. now sued to set aside the sale to B. and for possession of the share of A. Held that the suit was not barred by Section 2, Act VIII of 1859.

A. B. instituted a suit against V. B. to recover possession of one-half of a field. S. N. and B. N., on their application, were made plaintiffs in that suit, but no alteration in the amount either of stamp or claim was made in the plaint.

The Principal Sudder Ameen awarded to A. B. one-fourth of the field, and to S. N. and B. N. conjointly he awarded one-fourth, but as to the remaining one-half he passed no decree, as it had not been claimed in the plaint. S. N. and B. N. thereupon filed a fresh suit to recover possession of their remaining one-fourth of the field, and the principal Sudder Ameen passed a decree in their favour. This decree was confirmed by the joint Judge.

Held that the decrees of the lower Courts were erroneous, and that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred by the provisions of Section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, but leave was granted to them to apply to the Court below for a review of the decree passed in the former suit. Vyasar Bakti v. Subhajit Narayan, 5 B. R. C. A., 173.

Two purchasers of holdings in the defendant's zamindari at a sale for arrears of revenue applied to the Collector to have the transfer registered in the zamindar's sherista, under Act X of 1859.

Section 27. Their application was refused; and they brought a suit in the Civil Court to set aside the Collector's order and register their names.

Held that proceedings authorized to be taken in the Collector's Court under Section 27, Act X of 1859, are not proceedings in a suit; and consequently that such proceedings are no bar to a suit in the Civil Court under Section 2, Act VIII of 1859. Chandra Narayan Ghose v. Kasi Nath Roy Chowdry, 4 B. L. R., F. B., 43, and 12 S. W. R., F. B., 30.

Where a party has a good objection, such as an absence of tender before suits to urge to the prosecution of a suit, his omission to do so in the first instance is fatal to his availing himself of it as an objection on appeal.

Where a woman is in possession of her husband's estate as security for unpaid dower, the proper decree, in a suit against her for possession by the heir, is a decree for possession, subject to the amount due, with a direction for an account as to mesne profits received by her.

A Mahometan died, leaving among others a widow and a sister entitled to shares in his estate. The widow got possession of the whole. The sister died; and after her death her husband, on behalf of himself and grandson, sued the widow to obtain the shares to which the deceased sister was entitled, and obtained a decree for payment of the same, after satisfaction of the widow's lien for dower, in certain proportions to himself and grandson.

The husband's interest in the decree was subsequently confiscated by Government for having taken with the enemy in the mutiny. He subsequently died, leaving his grandson. The widow died during the mutiny, and her brother was put into possession of the property by the Government as her heir. The grandson now sued the widow's brother to recover his own and his grandfather's share, alleging that the lien for dower had been

(a) Miscellaneous.

In cases of alleged benamee sales effect should be given to the evidence of possession and enjoyment since the purchase, as showing who is the substantial owner.

The burden of proof lies on the person who maintains that the apparent state of things is not the real state of things, and the apparent purchaser must be regarded as the real purchaser until the contrary be proved. Deo Nath and others v. Peer Khan and Ramzan Khan, 3 Agra Rep., A. C., 16.

When a person grants a bill of sale to another person absolute in its terms, he cannot sue to have it set aside on the ground that he has all along remained in possession; and if he alleges fraud in the contract, and adduces the fact of non-payment of the consideration-money as evidence of fraud, he will be bound to show proof of non-payment. Tekait Megraj Singh v. Raj Jaymungul Singh, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 78.

A donee, under a deed of gift, brought a suit to recover a piece of land which he alleged his donors had given for a temporary purchase to the defendant in possession six years before; and the Moonsiff found that it was so, and allowed the claim. But the plaintiff had failed to prove his donors'title to the land, reversed the Moonsiff's decree, Held (reversing the decision of the lower Court) that the fact of the land being under attachment by the Magistrate after enquiry as to the land, reversed the Moonsiff's decree. Held (reversing the decision of the lower Court) that the fact of the land being under attachment by the Magistrate after enquiry as to the

When a purchaser of immovable property deals with a person having a qualified power of dealing with that property, it lies upon the purchaser to give some reason of the need which actually existed, or was alleged to exist, for the sale. Vaddal Ramakristanama v. Nandi Appayya, 2 Mad. Rep., 407.

A person who seeks to bar one who is primâ facie the legal owner, by evidence of ratification, or of facts cogent enough to prove one not a formal to be a substantial party, must make and prove such a case, for he is one who seeks to displace a legal title. Rajan v. Basuwa Chetti, 2 Mad. Rep., 429.

The burthen of proving an allegation as to the lunacy of any person rests on the Collector, or the person who makes the allegation. Sheikh Bhusa-ruoolllah v. The Collector of Tipperah, 8 W. R., 375.

Suit by a late Rajah's brother for maintenance allowance, which the present Rajah opposed on the ground that, as the plaintiff was no longer the ruling Rajah's brother, his allowance must be diminished. Held that the onus was on the defendant to prove a custom of entitling him to diminish the allowance herefore enjoyed in right of plaintiff's position in the family. Rajah Moobood Naurin Deb v. Mooraee Mohun Baboo, 6 W. R., 91.

An admission by one defendant against another, which admission the Court finds to be collusive, cannot relieve the plaintiff from the burden of starting his case against the repudiating defendant, nor can it shift the burden of proof to the shoulders of the latter from off the plaintiff. Sheikh Skhyamut Ali v. Monohur Doss and others, 6 W. R., 299.

When it is alleged that the consent of one of the parties to an arbitration was obtained by threats and through undue influence exerted by persons in authority, the onus probandi is on the person making the averment. Ranie Purvatha Vardhay Nauchiar v. Jayavera Ramakomara Etyapa Naicker, 4 W. R., P. C., 31.

Before a plaintiff is entitled to recover any damages from a defaulting witness in a former suit, he must prove that he was damaged by the omission of the defendant to appear. The mere failure of the defendant to appear as a witness is not per se a sufficient proof of his liability to damages. Dwarkanath Kooree v. Anundo Chunder Sannet, 5 W. R., S. C. C. Ref., 18.

Where a plaintiff alleged that subsequent to his purchase of a tank, at a period specified, defendants had commenced to take water from it and had opened a channel for the discharge of the water,—Held that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove the assertion on the part of the defendants of any new right. Dabee Dhor Thakoow v. Khetlormonee Dabee and others, 11 W. R., 15.

In a suit to recover advances alleged to be due from a discharged gomastah, who pleaded acquittance at the time of his discharge,—Held that plaintiff was bound to prove the payments to, and the receipts from, the gomastah, and to put in original documents, and not mere transcripts, even if the defendant had remained silent. Robert Watson and Co. v. Sreedhrur Mundle, 10 W. R., 421.

A decree-holder, in execution of his decree, put up for sale certain property of his judgment-debtor which was purchased by plaintiff ostensibly on his own account. Having reason, however, to believe that the purchase was benamee for the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder again took out execution against the same property, and advertised it for sale. Plaintiff intervened, but his objections were disallowed by the Court, which found the judgment-debtor in bond-fide possession on his own account. The property was then sold, and one of the defendants bought it. Plaintiff then sued to have the execution proceedings set aside, and to have it declared that the property had been bought on his own account and with his own money. Held that the onus of proofs lay on the plaintiff. Mudun Mohun Shahe v. Bhurut Chunder Roy, 11 W. R., 249.

Unless a plaintiff who alleges that he gave the property sued for to the defendant in trust, makes out at least a primâ-facie case of trust, he is not entitled to call upon the defendants for their defence, or to get a decree, merely because the defendants fail in proving the case set up by them. Khoodejannissa Bebee v. Aman Hormuzin, 2 W. R., 58.

Suit for share of income tax by a co-sharer who, the lower Court found, was the defendant's manager. Held that the mere production of a deed showing that the defendant had in it nominated other persons to collect the rents of her share, without proof of cessation of possession, did not shift the onus from the plaintiff of proving that he had ceased to hold possession of the defendant's share as her manager, or that the defendant, and not the plaintiff, had actually collected the rents. Ramnath Ghose v. Amrit Moyee Dossor, 5 W. R., 168.

Suit for title-deeds. The defendant (plaintiff's maternal aunt) pleaded that she had purchased the property in the plaintiff's name, but that she was the party beneficially interested in it. Held that if the plaintiff could show that he had held possession from the time of the purchase to the institution of the suit, the defendant must prove that she had herself purchased the property, otherwise the onus would be on the plaintiff to prove that the property was purchased from his own funds. Niltomone Banerjee v. Surbo Mungula Debra, 2 W. R., 31.

Where a suit was brought to redeem a mortgage, and the defendants pleaded possession under a sale,—Held, under the circumstances, there having been long undisputed possession, that the onus of proving that the possession was less than a proprietary possession and was referable to a mortgage, lies on the person who claims to redeem it.

Uninterrupted possession for a long time is primâ-facie sufficient proof of title, and the security which being in possession affords should not be weakened. Rughoo Nath Rai and others v. Chundoo Lal and others, 3 Agra Rep., 195.

In a suit for confirmation of possession and declaration of title (the principal defendant admitting plaintiff's possession and title), in which a vendee from such defendants intervenes and claims the property on the allegation of being in possession,—Held that such vendee must prove possession from the defendant as admitting the plaintiff's title. Lalla Raj Sahie Singh v. Lalla Oojoodha Pershad, 5 W. R., 233.

In a suit by the alleged purchaser of the origina proprietor's equity of redemption to establish his right to redeem against a subsequent purchaser c the same proprietary rights, the plaintiff is bound both to establish his original deed of purchase, an to prove either actual possessio nor receipt of au effi it, or some portion of the proceeds of the pro perty. Syud Fustool Ruhan v. Ali Kureem, W. R., 163.

An ejectment alleged to have taken place under direct action of Court, and supported by document issued by and filed in the Court, must be presumed to have been real and bond fide, until the part ejected proves that all these proceedings were fictitious, and that he never lost possession of the land until it holds it. Sheikh Buduroodeen v. Ham, Mullick, 5 W. R., 180.

When a judgment-debtor sues to set aside a sal in execution of a decree, on the ground of irre larity, the onus of proving the irregularity is on his Mussamut Nufsua v. Syud Mahomed Akbar Gase 2 W. R., 74.

The mere admission by a widow of a debt of her husband as the cause of the sale of his property is evidence that the debt really was the husband's in the face of a recorded protest by his relation the reverisors. It lies on the purchasers to prove that it was so. Cassemuddin Ahmed v. Rai Doss Gossain, 2 W. R., 170.

Where a plaintiff sues for a specific sum of money due on a balance of account, it is for him to sta his case and show what sum is due on the account and until he has done so the defendant need not b called upon to rebut him. Ruttun Chand Bysac v. Bocha Bibee, 12 W. R., 529.

In a suit to recover possession of a tank which was included in an undivided mehal of which cler tiff was the shareholder, where defendants con tended that the tank had for more than twelve year before the suit been separate and in their separa possession and enjoyment,—Held that there wa primâ-facie proof that the shareholders or certai of them had enjoyed the use of the tank, the burde lay on the defendants to prove their separate en ment. Brojonaon Pal Chowdhy v. Sreegoopaul Paul Chowdhy, 12 W. R., 468.

In a suit on a bond, it is for the plaintiff to prov the amount of the debt, and this will be done suffi ciently in the first instance by proof of the execu tion of the bond. It is for the defendant to prove in answer, if he can, that such amount is less that the sum sued for. Sivaramaiyar v. Sama Awjar, W. R., 47.

It is not necessary for a plaintiff to prove that b was disposed of on the date mentioned in the plaint. Obhoy Churn Mahatta and others v. Un noda Pershad Mookerjee, 9 W. R., 348.

One shareholder, being dispossessed by the other of a certain jalkar, in execution of his decree brought a suit under Section 230, Act VIII of 1859 alleging that the jalkar had been a part of their joint mehal; and that, in partition thereof, the jalkar was of one of his own villages. Held that the onus was upon the claimant to prove his case. Udai Tara Chowdhry v. Khaja Abdul Gani, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 90; S. C., 12 W. R., 16.

When a widow dies possessed of property, it is for those who claim it adversely to the natural heirs, and against the presumption that the widow has acquired at least the nucleus from her husband, to prove her special pleas, and to show that it came into her hands from other sources.

In a suit by the natural heirs, if the defendant sets up a preferential hereditary right by virtue of adoption, he must prove his adoption. Bisserur Chuckerbutty v. Ram Jot Mozoomdar, 2 W. R., 326.

When a defendant admits execution of a bond, but denies receipt of consideration, the onus of proving receipt is on the plaintiff. When a defendant admits having written a letter of assignment directing the plaintiff to pay certain sums of money due by the defendant to the third parties named in the letter, the plaintiff is bound to prove such payment. Takaet Roop Mangle Singh v. Anund Roy, 3 W. R., 111.

Where it is alleged that a deed of compromise was beneficial to a minor in a transaction involving a surrender of the minor's title in a large estate for a very inadequate maintenance, and her waiver of the rights of appeal and cross-appeal, the onus of proving that such a deed was beneficial to the minor is on the party making the allegation. Ranees Koshun Fahan v. Rajah Syud Enaet Hossein, 5 W. R., 5.

Conduct which defeats an ordinary presumption and shifts the onus probandi, does not necessarily invalidate all the evidence which is offered in proof. Nowbut Ram Bhukut v. Shuklee Deyee, 5 W. R., 34.

When a Collector in exercise of his lawful functions has assumed the jurisdiction to sell a putnee, it lies on the plaintiff who impugns that official act to show that it is done without jurisdiction. Kalee Koomar Mookerjee v. The Maharajah of Burdwan, 5 W. R., 39.

Where a defendant in a bond suit denies receipt of the consideration in toto, the onus of proving the receipt thereof is on the plaintiff. When the defendant denies receipt of the consideration in part, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove payment of the consideration to the extent of the sum not admitted by the defendant. Mussamut Jhaloo v. Sheikh Furzaan Afi, 5 W. R., 203.

When a party claiming the right of pre-emption impugns the correctness of the price stated in the deed of sale, the burden of proof is on him to show that the property was in fact sold below the stated price. Mohamed Morul Hossein v. Hyde Buksh, W. R., 1864, 304.

In a suit to recover the amount of excess payments of Government revenue made by the plaintiffs on account of their co-sharers to save the estate from sale (each proprietor holding a well-defined although not actually separated share)—Held that the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove their shares and amount of revenue payable on them. Aghore Ram Sahoy v. Ramolee Sahoy, W. R., 1864, 309.

In a suit on a bond, the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon showing that it was executed by the defendant. The onus lies on the defendant of showing the want of consideration. Juggut Chunder Chowdhry v. Bhugwan Chunder Fultehdur, Marsh., 27.

Where a plaintiff establishes a prima-facie case of the identity of ayma land which he claims through his ancestor, who had been allowed by the Collector to retain it, it will rest with defendant to prove that the land is his own, or that it is not the ayma land which the plaintiff's ancestor once held. Molla Abdur Rub and others v. Hurryur Mookerje and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 50.

Where a plaintiff sets up a case of an exceptional neem-ousut howala, alleging it to be not transferable, the plaintiff should be called on to prove the allegation, before a defendant in possession, under an order of a Revenue Court, can be called on to prove title. Mussamut Hurro Soondery Debia and others v. Mussamut Ameena Begum, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 188.

In a suit by a wife to recover valuable real and personal property of which she has been fraudulently and violently deprived by her husband, the principal defendant, the defence was bond-fide sale and payment of consideration-money. Held that the onus probandi was on the defendant, and that the mere endorsement of Government securities (which in the case of strangers or third parties would throw the onus on the person alleging fraud) did not apply when the relation was that of husband and wife. A trustee who misapplies trust funds should be compelled to compensate the cestui que trust, and is liable to heavy interest. Bosul Rukim v. Shumsekerunissa Begum, W. R., 1862, F. B., 62.

When the plaintiff's allegation is met, not by a denial, but by a counter allegation, the defendant is bound to prove such counter allegation. Mahomed Hoshein v. Kalechurn Banerjee, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 91.

In an action for malicious prosecution, it is for the plaintiff to prove the existence of malice and want of probable or probable cause, before the defendant can be called upon to show that he acted bona fide and upon reasonable grounds, believing that the charge which he instituted was a valid one. Mokant Gaur Huri Das Adhikari v. Hayagrib Das Mohant, 6 B. L. R., 371, and 14 S. W. R., C. R., 425.

The plaintiff sued on a bond, which recited that the defendant had received the consideration mentioned in the bond. Held that the onus was on the defendant to show that the recitals in the bond were not correct. Fulli Bibi v. Bussiandi Midiha, 4 B. L. R., F. B. R., 54, and 12 S. W. R., F. B., 25.

Where an heir's title to an estate is uncontested, and his possession is only obstructed by an alleged conveyance on the part of an ancestor, it lies upon the party holding possession, and who causes the obstruction, to prove that such a conveyance has taken place. Kaminee Mohun Chuckerbutty v. kalee Kant Sein, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 275.

A party claiming to erect a bund in a natural flowing river, so as entirely to cut off the water from another party, is bound to rest on the legal right to do so by user. Heeranund Sahoo v. Mussamut Khuberoonissaa, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 516.

In a suit for the removal of certain outlets made by defendant in an aqueduct, on the ground that plaintiff was entitled to the exclusive use of the water of the aqueduct, where the defence set up was that the portion of the aqueduct to which the dispute related was where water flowed through the lands of the defendant's zamindar.—Held that it was for plaintiff to make good the title he alleged. Onra v. Kishen Sooduree Dassere, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 83.

In a suit by a judgment-creditor to recover the amount of certain decrees by attachment and sale, and to have a certain deed of bye-mokasa, which was set up by the judgment-debtor's wife, set aside as executed in fraud of creditors; where plaintiff showed the existence in the mind of the judgment-debtor of a sufficient motive for the fraud, and also that the said debtor was in the management of the estate claimed and in the receipt of its rents, it was held that plaintiff had started a primâ facie case, which shifted the onus on the defendant to prove the bona fides of the deed. Gowhur Ali Khan v. Mussamut Sakeena Khanum, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 507.

(b) In respect of Title.

In a suit to prevent the defendants from obstructing the plaintiff in his enjoyment of fruits of certain trees, which he claimed as heir of a person who purchased that right, the defendants denied the existence of the right, and alleged possession and enjoyment in themselves.

Held that the District Judge, in appeal, having found the possession and enjoyment to be in the trees, which he claimed as heir of a person who purchased that right, the defendants denied the existence of the right, and alleged possession and enjoyment in themselves.

In a suit for possession of alleged lakheraj land, if the alleged lakherajdar proves possession as purchaser of the alleged lakheraj land, the Court ought not to put upon him the burden of proving a title; but if the zamindar wishes that point to be tried in another suit, he must accept the onus of proving his title as lakheraj, and had been admittedly in possession of them as such for a very long time, it was for the zamindar, who pleaded a right to oust them summarily, under Section 10, Regulation XIX of 1793, to prove that the lakheraj title was invalid as having been created subsequent to 1790. Munaram Doss Kormokur v. Girdharie Ram Doss, 10 W. R., 278.

In a suit for confirmation of possession of lands which plaintiffs alleged to be lakheraj, and of which they had been dispossessed by the defendants, Held that, as plaintiffs had purchased the land as lakheraj, and had been admittedly in possession of them as such for a very long time, it was for the zamindar, who pleaded a right to oust them summarily, under Section 10, Regulation XIX of 1793, to prove that the lakheraj title was invalid as having been created subsequent to 1790. Munaram Doss Kormokur v. Girdharie Ram Doss, 10 W. R., 278.

In a suit to recover possession of lands which plaintiffs alleged to be lakheraj, and of which they had been dispossessed by the defendants, Held that, as plaintiffs had purchased the land as lakheraj, and had been admittedly in possession of them as such for a very long time, it was for the zamindar, who pleaded a right to oust them summarily, under Section 10, Regulation XIX of 1793, to prove that the lakheraj title was invalid as having been created subsequent to 1790. Munaram Doss Kormokur v. Girdharie Ram Doss, 10 W. R., 278.

In a suit to recover possession of lands which plaintiffs alleged to be lakheraj, and of which they had been dispossessed by the defendants, Held that, as plaintiffs had purchased the land as lakheraj, and had been admittedly in possession of them as such for a very long time, it was for the zamindar, who pleaded a right to oust them summarily, under Section 10, Regulation XIX of 1793, to prove that the lakheraj title was invalid as having been created subsequent to 1790. *Munaram Doss Kormokur v. given to the defendant, not entitled to the decree, did his. Held that the decree taken by it was in the possession of her title to deeds in favour of the defendant to raise the nability of the suing on behalf of the defendant, entitled to the production of his possession in support of title as against a consideration, with the name of the pro-real proprietor, to proof of his defendant in a suit against the defendant, who was entitled to an aqueduct, which was where the defendant's zealous efforts to make his aqueduct stand up to make Kishen Soona prosper.

In a suit to recover the amount of certain debts, the defendant was set up by the plaintiff as executed in a suit to recover a debt, and showed the existence of a security in that the said estate claimed. Held that plaintiff held that plaintiff was not entitled to have a debt secured, as the said estate claimed a debt. Rule of evidence stated.

In a suit to recover the plaintiff's property, which was purchased by the defendant, the existence of the property in the existence of the property, and to have it enjoyed in the property, would be considered. Held that the defendant was entitled to have the burden of proving the existence of the property, and that he is in a purchase, and possession of the property.

Sheo Suhaye (Pla.) W. R., 294.

The plaintiff purchased the alleged piece of land, but if the plaintiff put upon the sales of the plaintiff, or another, by proving that the plaintiff was entitled to have the property in the property, and that he is in a purchase, and possession of the property.

John Wise and others P. C., 5.

It would be in a purchase, and possession of the property, for those who have the general lamentation as a piece of land.
The plaintiff having alleged a distinct title under a deed of sale in lieu of dower was held bound to prove her title, and not entitled to claim the benefit of a decision to which she was not a party, nor of an admission by her husband as binding on the defendants. Mussamut Sobrattun v. Mussamut Toova and others, 7 W. R., 273.

In a suit under the Civil Procedure Code in which the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants wrongfully and forcibly took away and were detaining timber which had been in the plaintiffs' constructive possession, and to which they are entitled, and the relief asked for is the restitution of the timber with costs of suit, if it be proved that the defendants had forcibly and wrongfully taken property in the plaintiffs' actual or constructive possession, it would then be for the defendants to show that they were entitled to the timber. In the present case, the plaintiffs having failed to show their possession of the timber or the forcible or wrongful dispossession or conversion of the goods, and the defendants having made good their title to the timber,—Held that the judgment should have been given in favor of the defendants. R. Snadden v. Todd, Findlay, and Co., 7 W. R., 286.

Where a plaintiff comes into Court to prove a lakheraj title, no proof of possession for years (unless it be carried beyond 1790) as apparent lakheraj can excuse him from proving his title. Ram Jeobun Chuckerbutty and another v. Persaud Skar and others, 7 W. R., 458.

Where a ryot holds lands of considerable extent under a zamindar, and alleges that one or two plots occupied by him are held under a different title, the onus is on him to prove his allegation. Ram Koomar Roy v. Bejoy Cobind Bural and others, 7 W. R., 553.

In a suit to recover possession, where plaintiff proves possession and illegal dispossession, the onus of proving the title is shifted upon the defendant in the first instance, and if the latter establishes his title, the plaintiff must then be required to prove his. Radha Bullah Gossain v. Kitchen Cobind Gossain, 9 W. R., 71.

The onus in a suit in which the plaintiff seeks to obtain a declaration that the defendants held a tenure under him lies on the plaintiff, who must prove strictly the title under which he seeks that declaration. Royes Mollah and others v. Modhoo-woodun Mundul, 9 W. R., 154.

Where a plaintiff claims, not under any general right of inheritance, but expressly under a deed, he must prove that deed: no legal presumption as to the contents of the deed can arise from a consideration of what the party, through whom he claims, would have been entitled to by the law of inheritance, had there been such a deed. Moolad Mullick v. Belat Mullick, 9 W. R., 385.

In a suit for possession, where plaintiff had a clear title as heir to his, deceased husband as against defendant,—Held that the latter was bound to show adoption to some other matter which would prevent the plaintiff from succeeding. Teelucko Kooer v. Nirban Singh, 9 W. R., 439.

In a suit to establish a right of pre-emption on the ground of ownership of contiguous land, no amount of mis-statement on the part of the defendant as to the ownership of such land can relieve plaintiff of the onus of proving his ownership.
title till he has proved his own. Lekhraj Raj v. Matty Madhub Sur, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 95.

(c) Genuineness of Deeds.

In a suit for a declaration of plaintiff's reversionary title as heir to his late uncle's property, and for reversal of a deed of sale from that uncle set up by the defendant, the widow not having been made a party to the suit, and her consent to or dissent from the alleged conveyance not having been ascertained, the issue tried was whether the deed was genuine and whether defendant has possession under it. Held that the onus was rightly placed on the defendant. Bykunt Nath Roy v. Greesh Chunder Mookerjee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 96.

Where the execution of a mortgage deed was admitted and long possession of the mortgagee under that decree was established,—Held that the onus of proving that the transaction was impeachable lies on the person who impugns it, and denies that the money which was consideration for its execution was paid. Harpaul Singh v. Musamut Zahoorun, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 202.

The plaintiffs on being served with notice of foreclosure by the mortgagees brought a suit for a declaration that the mortgage was not genuine. Held that the onus did not lie on the plaintiffs to prove the fabrication of the mortgage deed. Gujadhur Mowar and others v. Zinda Mowar and others, 6 W. R., 69.

The mere production of a document is no proof of its genuineness. The party who seeks to put it in evidence must prove that it is what it purports to be. George Mears v. Dass Monee Dassia, 5 W. R., Act X R., 11.

Where a son purchased a property sold for arrears of rent, on account of the default of his father, and both father and son were living together at the time of the purchase,—Held that the onus was on the son to prove that his purchase was bona fide. Hur Suhaye Misser v. Deen Dyal Singh, 7 W. R., 275.

Plaintiff alleging that an attachment subsisted, and that therefore the mortgage under which defendant claims is invalid, is bound to prove his allegation, and the onus is not discharged by showing that the attachment was made some years previous to the alienation. Toolkhee Dutt Misser v. Brojo Mohun Thakoor, 9 W. R., 332.

The Court will generally presume that proceedings in a suit are bona fide, and it lies on the party who impugns them to show or suggest some thing from which the Court may infer that they were not bona fide. Tabhur Singh and others v. Mottee Singh and others, 9 W. R., 443.

A plaintiff suing for a declaration that an adoption is invalid is bound to prove the invalidity. Brojokishoree Dassee v. Sreenath Bose, 9 W. R., 465.

Where a plaintiff in a civil suit relies upon a kobala which has been held by a Court of Small Causes to be mala fide, the onus lies upon him to prove that the deed was executed, and that it represented a real and honest transaction between the parties. Ethan Chunder Doss and others v. Rokemoodeen Sowdagur, 10 W. R., 412.

In a case of purchase after a decree, when the vendor is only a benamedar, and the vendor's husband (supposed to be the real owner) wrote the deed and received the purchase-money (thereby making himself a consenting party), the onus lies on the plaintiff to prove that he is a bond-fide purchaser for value, exercising due care and diligence. Man Turunginee Daber v. Baistub Churn Bhudder, 1 W. R., 110.

The object of Section 54, Act XI of 1859, is to protect, not every incumbrance which may be set up, but only bond-fide incumbrances executed in contemplation of an impending sale or in fraud of a possible purchaser. Where surrounding circumstances suggest such creation, it is for the party setting up the incumbrance to establish its bond-fide character. Monohur Mookerjee v. Joykishen Mookerjee, 5 W. R., 1.

In a suit for a declaration that a document pronounced by the defendant is false, it lies upon the plaintiff to prove that allegation. Ram Nidheet Koondoo v. Goluck Chunder Moshanto and others, 11 W. R., 280.

In a suit to establish title, unsuccessfully asserted in an execution case, to property sold in satisfaction of a decree, where plaintiff claims under a gift and other titles originating with the judgment-debtor, it is not sufficient for plaintiff to make out a primae facie case, leaving it to defendant to demonstrate fraud; plaintiff is bound to satisfy the Court of the genuine bond-fide nature of the transfer. Ram Kishore Singh and others v. Ramsurbo Chatterjee and others, 11 W. R., 454.

(d) In Suits for Possession.

In a suit to recover possession of certain property from plaintiff's vendor (who did not substantially resist the claim), a third party who came in and claimed the property was made a defendant. It was held that the onus of proof as against the plaintiff lay entirely on the intervenor. Jogodaund Misser v. Hameed Rusool and others, 10 W. R., 52.

Held (Mookerjee, J., dissentiente), that the rule that in suits for confirmation of possession by adjudication of title the plaintiff is bound to prove that he was in possession at the time he preferred the suit, is not so inflexible a rule that it cannot be departed from; as for example, where plaintiff sues for confirmation of possession and proves that he was in possession for many years, and until within a few months of the institution of the suit, he should not be required to bring a fresh suit, merely changing the prayer for confirmation of possession into one for recovery of possession. Moutrie Abdeoollah v. Shaka Majesoodeen, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 286.

Where an unsuccessful claimant, under Section 246, Code of Civil Procedure, sues for confirmation of alleged possession and adjudication of title, the onus in the first instance is on plaintiff, and an important question in the case is, who was in possession at the time of the attachment. Toofana Dass v. R. Mun Rukhun Roy, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 202.

Where plaintiff, as heir of the ostensible auction-purchaser, sued to oust defendant who had been twelve years in possession, and the latter pleaded that the sale was made benamee,—Held that the long possession would go to prove the truth of defendant's allegation that the auction-purchaser... was merely a trustee for him, and it would be for that

In a suit for title as heir to a party to the appeal, the defendant admitted the title to be genuine under the deed, and the execution was bona fide. 7 W. R., 275.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendant claimed the property from the plaintiff, and impugned his title. 6 W. R., Act X R., 463.

Where a party at the time of foreclosure by a declaration of title and by a suit against the defendant claimed the property from the plaintiff, and impugned his title, the defendant was entitled to the evidence against the plaintiff. 6 W. R., Act X R., 463.

Where a party at the time of foreclosure by a declaration of title and by a suit against the defendant claimed the property from the plaintiff, and impugned his title, the defendant was entitled to the evidence against the plaintiff. 6 W. R., Act X R., 463.

Where a party at the time of foreclosure by a declaration of title and by a suit against the defendant claimed the property from the plaintiff, and impugned his title, the defendant was entitled to the evidence against the plaintiff. 6 W. R., Act X R., 463.

Where a party at the time of foreclosure by a declaration of title and by a suit against the defendant claimed the property from the plaintiff, and impugned his title, the defendant was entitled to the evidence against the plaintiff. 6 W. R., Act X R., 463.

Where a party at the time of foreclosure by a declaration of title and by a suit against the defendant claimed the property from the plaintiff, and impugned his title, the defendant was entitled to the evidence against the plaintiff. 6 W. R., Act X R., 463.

Where a party at the time of foreclosure by a declaration of title and by a suit against the defendant claimed the property from the plaintiff, and impugned his title, the defendant was entitled to the evidence against the plaintiff. 6 W. R., Act X R., 463.
was merely a trustee for him, and it would be for plaintiff to show that his ancestor paid for the purchased property. Zooliayar Ali v. Mahomed Ikteer and others, 9 W. R., 438.

The plaintiff sued for possession under the allegation that the property in dispute was under the management of the defendant. The defendant having denied management, and set up a title by purchase and his possession for more than thirty years having been proved,—Held that the onus of showing a possession for his benefit was rightly rebutted by the plaintiff's prior continuous and peaceful possession, the defendant must show affirmatively that his title was a valid one, and could not raise the defence that the plaintiff was prevented from showing it to be invalid. Mohesh Chandra Banerjee v. Srimati Barada Debi, 2 B. L. R., A.C., 274; S. C., 11 W. R., 185.

In a suit by a Mahometan wife, who had left her husband's protection on account of ill-usage, for recovery of certain securities belonging to her which had got into the husband's possession, and the detention of which he justified on the ground that he had purchased them from her, and on their endorsement and delivery to him had paid the full value for them, the correct principle as to the onus of the proof is that, although the wife may have failed to establish affirmatively the precise case alleged by her, her husband having admitted the receipt of the securities from her, was bound to show something more than mere endorsement and delivery, and the relation of the parties being what it was, it lay upon him to prove that the transactions which he set up were bond-fide sales and purchases, and that he actually gave full value for what he received from her; and where it was proved that the wife had the securities while under her husband's protection, and some had passed from her to him and others to his creditors, and that the wife left her husband's house in destitution, the proof adduced by the husband as to the sale for full consideration to him must be full and clear, and such as to satisfy a Court of Justice that the transactions were conducted fairly and properly, and with a due regard to the rights and interests of the wife. Judoonath Bose v. Shumsoonnissa Begum, 8 W. R., P. C., 3.

In a suit for confirmation of possession of, and declaration of title to, land alleged to have been purchased at a private sale from the wife (S. S.) of a judgment-debtor who had come into possession of the land by gift from her husband, defendants claimed to be bond-fide purchasers from S. S. to whom, they alleged, the property really belonged, and who had been all along in possession. The substance of the defence was that, "even granting that any such papers" (as a hibbah and a deed of sale) "were written between the parties, this can avail the plaintiff nothing, as the deeds were fraudulent."

Held that there was no such admission on the part of the defendants as shifted the burden of proof upon themselves. Hurish Chunder Paul and others v. Radhanath Sein and others, 11 W. R., 328.

In a suit to obtain possession of certain lands, on the ground that they had been assigned to plaintiffs by a partition made by the Collector,—Held in respect to a dagh in which plaintiffs were admitted to be entitled to a certain quantity of land, it was their business to prove that the particular lands which they claimed had been assigned to them by the butwara proceedings. Bhugubhooty Goopha v. Saroda Sooderry Deba and others, 11 W. R., 337.

The plaintiffs' ancestors having been declared by a decree of the Peshwa's Government in A.D. 1722, to be entitled to the whole of the Patelki watan of Panderi, and the defendants having produced a watanpatra from the Rajah of Satka, in A.D. 1742, in favour of their claim to a half share, but being unable to show that their ancestors had any concern with the watan for a period of ninety-six years subsequent thereto, during which the plaintiffs' ancestors were recognized as the sole owners,—Held that the District Judge did not act contrary to law in throwing upon defendants the burden of proving possession as proprietors for more than thirty years without interruption before the institution of the suit.

A rule to show cause why the decree of the High Court should not be reviewed on the ground of the discovery of new evidence was discharged, as the applicants failed to show that the document brought forward was admissible as evidence, and that it was not within their knowledge or could not be adduced by them at the time when such decree was passed. Kokoli v. Jagtafp, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 49.

A plaintiff suing for confirmation of possession must prove that he was actually in possession. Mussamut Luteefoonissa Bibee v. Syud Rajoor Rahman and others, 8 W. R., 84.

When a landlord sues for possession of land within his estate, the onus is on him to prove that he is entitled to that possession. Gudathus Banerjee v. Kanye Dehooaria and others, 8 W. R., 193.

Where a tenant is found to have taken steps required by law in furtherance of his intended relinquishment, it is for the landlord to prove his continued possession notwithstanding. But where it is found that the tenant has not gone through the necessary steps, it will be for him to prove that the landlord took possession of the land and enjoyed the profits by holding it khas, or by letting it to others. James Ernestine v. Ram Coomar Roy and others, 8 W. R., 220.

In a suit between two zemindars, the appellant sought to disturb the admitted possession for about eleven years of the defendant. The defendant insisted on a possession of much longer duration as a statutory bar to the suit. Held that the onus was on the appellant to prove that the cause of action accrued to him on a disposition within twelve years before suit, and that he, or some other person through whom he claims, was in possession during that period. Maharajah Koonwar Mitrasur Singh v. Nund Loll, 1 W. R., P. C., 51.

When an heir of a deceased judgment-debtor admits possession of some of the latter's property, the onus is on the heir and not on the decree-holder to prove the extent of that property. Matungneedee Deeva v. Gugun Chunder Bhooy, 2 W. R., Miis., 41.

In a suit to recover possession of land and wasilat under a ganti jumma, which had originally belonged to the defendants, the main question was as to ten katas, of which possession by receipt of rent only was claimed from the defendants, whose dwelling-house was thereon. The defendants alleged that the ten katas were included in the ganti jumma under which plaintiffs claimed.

Held that the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove that the ten katas were included in the ganti jumma under which they claimed. It was not on the defendants to show the extent of that tenure while it was in their possession and when it was transferred to the plaintiffs, although the fact was one peculiarly within their knowledge. Giridar Har iri v. Kalikant Roy Chowdhrty, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 161.

In a suit to eject a tenant holding over after the expiry of a pottah which was made for a number of years, the onus is on the landlord to show that the tenure was such that the express limit of years may be fairly applied to the possession and construed to give the right of re-entry. Roy Odrye Narain Singh v. Ubhuron Roy, 4 W. R., Act X R., 1.

In a suit for possession of land on the ground that it belonged to plaintiff's talook, where defendant pleaded limitation,—Held that the burden lay with the plaintiff to prove that he had possessed (i.e., enjoyed the land) within twelve years of the suit. Ram Luchun Chowdhry v. Joy Doorga Dossia and others, 11 W. R., 283.

In a suit to confirm a claim property on the allegation that plaintiff's father had obtained it in gift from his wife Lalun, and that it had been in the possession of father and son more than thirty years, defendant having had his name recorded in the Collectorate as heir to Lalun,—Held, with reference to the fact that there had been a tenancy of husband and wife together, that it was incumbent on plaintiff to prove that his possession was possession on his own account, and not that of an agent. Velayet Aly Khan and others v. Musamut Aseum, 11 W. R., 313.

Where a defendant pleads partly title and partly purchase, and asserts his own possession on ancient titles, denying that the plaintiff's father or ancestor had been in possession of any portion of the land in dispute for a very long period, the onus of proving possession within the period of limitation is on the plaintiff. Ishur Chunder Biswas v. Bissambur-Biswas, W. R., 1864, 107.

In a suit by a Hindu widow for confirmation of her title to certain land in right of her husband, the defendant, who had a possessory award of the property given to her under Section 15, Act XIV of 1859, pleaded that the plaintiff was never in possession. Held that the onus was on the plaintiff to show that she was in possession within the period of limitation. Santo Moomee Goopthk v. Shuttoo Bhamo Goopthk, 7 W. R., 34.

In a suit to recover possession on the allegation that the plaintiff had been dispossessed by the defendant, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his possession of the land in dispute within twelve years preceding the suit. Boole Singh and others v. Hurobuns Naran Singh and others, 7 W. R., 212.

Plaintiff sued for confirmation of possession and registration of certain property which had been mortgaged to him by defendants. The transaction on the face of the deed was an absolute sale, but an ikrar was executed at the same time as the mortgage which reserved the equity of redemption to the mortgagor. This ikrar was made over to the defendant, the mortgagor. Plaintiff's allegation was that the ikrrarnamah was returned to him by the mortgagor, who thus surrendered the equity of redemption. Defendant alleged that the ikrar had been lost and had somehow found its way to the plaintiff. Held that the presumption of law was in favour of the plaintiff who had possession of the ikrar, and that the onus of proving its loss lay upon the defendant. Raj Coomar Singh and others v. Ram Swye Roy and others, 11 W. R., 151.

In an action by a ryot to recover possession under Clause 6, Section 23, Act X of 1859, the zemindar admitting a tenancy at some former time should show that it has been determined. The judgment of the lower Court merely stating that the plaintiff's tenure had lapsed and assigning no reasons was set aside, and the suit remanded for trial. Sheo Purshan Lall v. Ram Narain Singh, 1 W. R., 361.

When a plaintiff sues for possession admitting that he was dispossessed more than ten years before suit, the onus is on him to prove that the person through whom he claims, was in possession at some time within twelve years. Nawab Nazir Sidhee Nujer Ali Khan Bakadoor v. Woomesh Chunder Mitter, 2 W. R., 75.

When a defendant in possession pleads limitation, the plaintiff must prove a possession of the property by himself within twelve years prior to the date of suit, whatever may be the date of dispossession which he states in his plaint. Mirza Mohamed Hossin v. Surahootttsa Khanum, 2 W. R., 89.

Suit by a lakherajdar to set aside an Act IV award, retaining the defendant in possession of certain lands belonging to a Hindu temple. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant's brother was cook to the temple, and that on his death the land in dispute (which formed his wages) was given to another. The defendant claimed the land in hereditary right as servant of the temple. Held that the onus of proving a right to the possession of the land, of which the plaintiff was the acknowledged owner, lay on the defendant who claimed such right. Mooreole Dhur Pandar v. Mothoaranund Doss, 2 W. R., 152.

When a plaintiff sues to recover possession upon a distinct allegation that he was in possession, and that on a certain date he was forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed by the defendants, the onus is on him to prove his allegation before the defendants can be called upon to substantiate their claim. Goopodoss Roy v. Hyrunath Roy, 2 W. R., 246.

In a suit by Government against ghatwals, the defendants were found to have been in possession "for a very long time," and although they had failed to prove possession in excess of sixty years, the onus was held to lie on the Government to prove possession within sixty years. Brommanund Gossain v. The Government, 5 W. R., 136.

In a suit for possession of land, where plaintiff's title and previous possession are both denied, it is not proper for a Court to start with the case put forward by the defendant, the onus of proof being primarily on plaintiff. Walker v. Atin Ram Mundur, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 478.

In a suit for possession it is always for the plaintiff to remove the bar of limitation, whenever that bar is set up by the defendant in possession, although the latter possession is not admitted to have existed for eleven years. Busseroonissa Chowdram v. Rajah Leelanum Singh, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 135.

In a suit by the lessee of the purchaser of the rights and interests of the first defendant to obtain possession of some portions of land alleged to fall within the share of the zemindary so purchased, defendants contended that the plots which were the subject of suit, although falling within the ambit of the zemindary, did not in fact form a portion of it, but were lakheraj lands belonging to themselves by a title independent of the title to the zemindary. The evidence showed the principal defendant to have been in receipt of the rents and profits of the land in suit, as well as of his share of the zemindary. Held that the onus lay upon the defendants to show the alleged independent title; failing to do so, the prima facie title made out by the plaintiff ought to prevail. Shumdan Ali v. Muthoonnath Dass, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 226.

A talookdar who had purchased in execution sale the under-tenure of one of his tenants, sued him to obtain possession of the land contained in the purchased holding, of some of which he said he had been dispossessed, and in regard to the remainder of which his title was disputed, Held that the deputation of an Ameen was improper, and that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove his case. Shustu Ram Paul v. Nobo Kant Roy, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 190.

In a suit by a zemindar to obtain khas possession of land within his estate, if a defendant is a middleman the right of plaintiff follows as a matter of course, unless defendant can make out his claim to exclude the zemindar; but if defendant is a ryot plaintiff must show some cause of action beyond the bare circumstance of defendant's refusal to quit after notice under Act X of 1859. He must show that the ryot is of a class liable to eviction. Lalla Feynath Sahee Deo v. Lutchun Christian, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 158.

In a suit for possession where plaintiff claims under a pottah, the execution of which is not denied by defendant, whose contention is that the lessor has no power to grant it, the onus is on the defendant to prove his plea. Rajah Mookom Narain Deo v. Janardun Dey Burnick, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 208.

In a suit to recover possession of land within plaintiff's estate, in which defendant sets up a rent-free title, all that plaintiff is required to show is that either he or his predecessor had received rent for the land at some time subsequent to the perpetual settlement, in which case the onus of proving title falls on the defendant. Ram Narain Singh Dho v. Bahadur v. Bistoo Thakoor, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 299.

A party holding a decree for a share of a mouza brought a suit for possession and damages in the allegation that he found the defendant in occupation of a part of the land on which indigo plants were standing, and permitted him to continue for a time till the plants should be removed, defendant promising then to give over possession, but that when the time came defendant refused to give over possession and was still occupying the land. Held that it lay upon the plaintiff to show wrongful occupancy on the part of the defendant. Gour Sarun Dass v. Serondye, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 144.

In a suit between the two rival zemindars about certain lands hitherto occupied but now relinquished by Government for salt manufacturing purposes, the real question at issue was held to be whether these lands appertained to the zemindaree of the plaintiff or of the defendant; and as the latter was now in possession under a possessory award of the criminal authorities, the onus was on plaintiff to show that the land belonged to his zemindaree. Rajah Luckman Persad v. Maharanne of Burdwan, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 181.

In a suit for possession, with mesne profits, on the ground that the lands claimed were allotted to plaintiff's share by a butwarrah under Regulation XIX of 1814, where defendant, admitting the allegation, urged that plaintiff had given up possession as soon as the butwarrah was completed,— Held that it was for plaintiff to prove that defendant had interfered with the possession awarded to him by the Collector. Synd Moharuk Ali v. Synd Imdad Ali, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 200.

In a suit for possession of a portion of land on the allegation that it had belonged to plaintiff as his ancestral property up to the date of his being ousted, when the defendant, admitting the alleged possession, contended that it had been not that of an owner, but only possessive possession as that of a tenant,— Held that the burden of proof lay on the defendant. Boistub Churn Sen v. Grahun Ram Sen, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 32.

In a suit to contest the demand of a distrainer, the landlord is only required to prove the fact of tenancy and the amount of jumma, if thereupon the tenant pleads payment, and if payment is denied, the onus is on the tenant to prove his allegation. Oojan Dewan and others v. Prannath Mundul, 8 W. R., 219.

The onus in a case in which the plaintiff is an ordinary zemindar, suing to assess lands which he asserts to have been illegally usurped or alienated by a dependent lakherajdar subsequent to the Permanent Settlement, rests on the plaintiff. Be-
In a suit for arrears of rent on account of a certain quantity of land, at a specified rate, plaintiff is bound to prove that defendant held the said land for which he was liable to pay at the rate sued for. Shumboo Geet Sossain v. Ram Jewn Lal and others, 8 W. R., 464.

In a suit for rent alleged to be due under a particular arrangement, the existence of which is repudiated by defendant, it is for plaintiff to prove the arrangement. Shumboo Geet Sossain v. Ram Jewn Lal and others, 8 W. R., 509.

Suit by purchaser of a mootah at a sale for arrears of revenue for the rents and profits of a hamlet, consisting of lands which, when uncultivated, were given by the then zamindar to the defendant (respondent). The plaintiff alleged that the lands were included in the assets upon which the permanent assessment was fixed, but being unable to prove his allegation, his suit was dismissed. See Raj Roy Vencata Niladry Row v. Patchaory Vencapatuty Raj, 5 W. R., F. C., 80.

In a suit for arrears of rent, the defendant is entitled to a deduction for lands washed away, but the onus lies on him of proving to what deduction he is entitled, and of showing precisely what lands have disappeared. Momas Sari v. Qhoy Nath Dose, 2 W. R., Act X R., 27.

When a debtor pleads tender of payment as a ground for not being saddled with interest, the onus is on him to prove that he made such tender. Ranee Shurut Soondery Dabee v. The Collector of Mymensing, 5 W. R., Act X R., 69.

Where a plaintiff claims rent on account of lands as māl from defendants, who set up a lakheraj title and produced lakheraj surnuds in support, he has first of all to prove that he has collected rents from the lands as māl within twelve years of the suit; and in calculating the period of limitation, the plaintiff is not entitled to deduction on account of the periods of pendency of suits for rent and for small portions of the land. Prudhan Gopaul Singh v. Bhoop Roy Ojha, 9 W. R., 510.

When defendant in a suit for arrears of rent alleges remission, the onus probandi lies on him in regard to the remission. Buawary Lall v. J. Furlong, 9 W. R., 239.

In a suit for rent under a kubuleut, if a third party intervenes and supports the defendant's case that the rents have been paid, not to the plaintiff, but to the intervenor, the onus of proving such previous receipt and enjoyment is altogether on the intervenor; and until his intervention is disposed of, the plaintiff need not prove his title or the kubuleut. Ram Bhurose Singh and others v. Jeywa Mahatoon, 11 W. R., 319.

The tenant is entitled to the presumption under Section 4, Act X of 1859, on proof of his uniform payment of rent for twenty years. If he fails to prove this, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove an increase in the value of the produce, or in the productive power of the land. Shib Narain Ghose v. Kassae Pershad Moorkjee, 1 W. R., 226.

If a ryot shows payment of rent for 1265 and 1266, it is to be presumed that all previous claims have been satisfied; to entitle the landlord to carry to the credit of 1264 any of the payments made in 1266, he must show that, at the close of 1264, there was an arrear due to him. Ranee Sooruth Soondery Dabee v. K. Brodie, 1 W. R., 274.

In a suit for enhanced rent of a talook, the existence of which, as an ancient talook, is undoubted, in which the only question is whether the rent is fixed or variable, the onus is first on the defendant to prove that he has held at a uniform rate for twenty years, and if (the defendant prove so much) then on the plaintiff to prove that the rent has varied since the Permanent Settlement. Rashmonee Debo v. Hurunnath Roy, 1 W. R., 280.

In a suit to assess or resume invalid lakheraj created subsequent to December 1, 1799, the onus is on the plaintiff to show that the case is one falling within Section 10, Regulation XIX of 1793; or, in other words, that the grant was subsequent to December 1, 1793. Sution Ghas v. Abdool Turab, 2 W. R., 205.

In a suit for rent, where a deed of sale is the foundation of plaintiff's right, he is bound to prove the deed, even if it is not objected to in defendant's written statement. Zemut Hossein and others v. Kunee Futamma, 12 W. R., 5.

In a suit for rent and damages, in which the amount of rent payable is in issue, the onus is on the plaintiff of proving that the defendant has paid in past years what the plaintiff is now demanding, and the best evidence is requisite to prove these past payments. Ram Feebun Lall v. Nund Lall, 2 W. R., Act X R., 43.

In a suit for rent, when the ryot pleads that part of the land is waste and lakheraj, the onus is on the landlord to prove that such land has paid rent to him in previous years. Motee Lal Aduck v. Fudooputtee Doss, 2 W. R., Act X R., 44.

The fact alone of variations in the amount of rent paid between one year and another does not necessarily establish the plaintiff's right to enhance. The onus of accounting for such variations is with defendant. Horunnath Roy v. Chitramonsee Dosse, 3 W. R., Act X R., 122.

(f) In Suits with respect to Tenures and Rights in Land.

In a question of boundary between a lakheraj tenure and a zamindar’s māl land, there is no presumption in favour of one or the other, but the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his case. Beer Chunder Joobraj v. Ram Cutty Dutt and others, 8 W. R., 209.

In a suit for a kubuleut on an alleged right to assess lands which have accreted to a permanent zimma tenure, it is for plaintiff to prove that under the Law of Accretion (Section 4, Regulation 21 of 1825), the accretions are either by custom or agreement liable to assessment. Jaggut Chunder Dutt and others v. Despino Fanyot and others, 8 W. R., 427.

Where a defendant pleads a putnee tenure, the onus of proof is on him in the first instance. But when he sets up and proves by credible evidence the creation by the plaintiffs of an inferior tenure entitling him to hold the estate, he has discharged the burden, and it then lies on the plaintiffs to displace or explain away that evidence. Opedro Narain Ghose v. Bajfjyee Rajah Keshub Chunder Deb and others, 6 W. R., 25.

In a suit for a certain quantity bound to provide for which he is entitled, he is entitled to a proof of revenue for a period of which he is entitled to receive, and it is the duty of the respondent to produce evidence to prove this, which is the onus of discharge.

In a suit for a particular arrangement disquieted by the arrangement, a suit by purport of revenue for a period consisting of which he is entitled to receive, the assessment was given by the respondent. The period included in the assessment was the period of the arrangement, and the question in Venkata Nills v. Raj, 5 W. R. 464.

In a suit entitled to a particular arrangement to the amounts given by the respondent, the onus lies on him to prove this, which is the onus of discharge. When a complaint is on him to prove this, the period of the arrangement is to be included in the assessment of the period of which he is entitled to receive, Venkata Nills v. Raj, 5 W. R. 464.

Where a plaintiff alleges remission of rent in respect of the lands as small portion of the lands, the tenant is obliged to produce evidence of the removal of the rent, and in calculating the rent the periods of the small portion v. Bhag Roy, 5 W. R. 1266.

When defendant alleges remission, regard to the land, the tenant is obliged to prove this, Furlong, 9 W. R. 1266.

In a suit for remissions of rent, the tenant has the burden of proof, and in computing the rent, the tenant is obliged to produce evidence of the period of the small portion v. Bhag Roy, 5 W. R. 1266, 315.

The tenant under Section 4, Act 11 W. R. 315, when the payment of rent is increased by the productive power of the land, Kasae Persh, 11 W. R. 315, if a ryot has been satis the credit, if 1266, he must the superior holders or managers of endowed property, and claim to hold a permanent khadim tenure from which they are not liable to be ejected except for misconduct, the onus probandi is on the defendant. Chand Meer v. Khandkar Ashrutollah and others, 6 W. R., 89.

When a plaintiff, suing for land as mål, adds in his plaint that the defendant will set up an invalid lakheraj title, and the defendant really does plead a sunnud, the legal rule as to the burden of proof is not altered, i.e., that the plaintiff who affirms the land to be his mål must prove that affirmation. Issur Chunder Shaha v. Baroda Soondery Debia, 3 W. R., Act X, 18.

In a suit for enhanced rent, where the plaintiff alleges that the defendant abandoned a mokurruree tenure, established by him and accepted a variable tenure, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his allegation. Goluck Chunder Roy v. F. C. Sandes, 5 W. R., Act X, 32.

In a suit to set aside a neem-ousat howala subtenure, on the specific allegations of the temporary and extraordinary (i.e., non-transferable) character of the tenure, when the defendant is in possession under a decision of the Revenue Courts passed under Clause C of Regulation 23, Act X of 1859, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his specific allegation. Hurro Soondery Debia v. Ameena Begum, 5 W. R., Act X, 72.

In a suit to assess land which the defendant proves that he purchased as lakheraj, and of which he is in possession, the onus of proving that it is rent-paying lies on the plaintiff. Raj Kishore Mookerjee v. Hurrechor Mookerjee, 10 W. R., 117.

Where plaintiffs sued for declaration that certain lands were lakheraj, on the ground that defendant had obtained a decree in the Collector's Court against them for rent,—Held that the onus lay upon the plaintiffs to show that they were holding the land as true lakheraj, and that the Collector's decree was wrong. Hurrenдра Kishore Bakadoro v. Kedar Nath Mitter, 10 W. R., 188.

In a suit to recover possession of land under a mokurruree lease granted to plaintiff by the zamindar (defendant who admitted its validity) from the other defendant who had been in possession twenty years, and who claimed a mokurruree interest, it was held that the onus lay upon the substantive defendant to show that his lease was mokurruree. Rughoonath Dobey v. Poresh Ram Makata, 10 W. R., 9.

In a suit to recover khas possession, where the defendant's plea is that his holding is a permanent holding, it is not sufficient for him to show that it was the exact permanent right at issue between the parties. Doorga Soondery v. Brindaubun Sircar and others, 11 W. R., 162.

There is no presumption that orchard lands in Behar are held on a bhaolecue tenure, there being many instances of orchards there being held on a nuddie tenure. The onus of proving the special nature of the tenure is on the zamindar suing for the value of trees cut down, and not on the tenant defendant. Domun Singh v. Sookun Lall, 2 W. R., 12.

In a suit against the purchaser of a howala, who been in possession for more than twenty-five years, plaintiff was bound to prove that he acquired the in the way he alleges, viz., in the exercise of his zemindary right upon the relinquishment or abandonment of the howala by the party of whom the defendant afterwards bought it. Madhub Chunder Ghose v. Nirkant Shaha Roy, 2 W. R., 42.

The Government, when acting as agent of a zamindar, can only sue to resume invalid lakheraj lands under 100 beegahs. The onus of proof of its being mål, when so claimed, is on the zamindar. Ram Lochun Sircar v. Denonath Paul, 2 W. R., 279.

In a suit to assess more than 100 beegahs of land, though stated to be under Section 30, Regulation 11 of 1819, but on the allegation that they are the plaintiff's mål lands, the plaintiff is bound to prove that the lands were their mål lands on or before December 1st, 1790, before the other party can be called upon to prove his title. Sookhoda Debia v. Sheikh Ajenoodeen, 2 W. R., 302.

A zamindar who, under the provisions of Section 10, Regulation XIX of 1793, ousts a party who held long possession as a lakherajdar, is bound to prove his right to exercise that power before the lakherajdar is called upon to prove his title to hold the land as a valid rent-free grant. Mohunt Prem Shewuk Doss v. Isre Pershad, 2 W. R., 303.

In a suit by an auction-purchaser to assess rent on land claimed as valid lakheraj, the onus is on the ryot to prove that the land has been held as lakheraj from the year 1790. Sham Lall Ghose v. Se-kunder Khan, 3 W. R., 182.

Long possession of lands as chowkedaree chakeran affords ground for the presumption that the lands were set apart as such at the Decennial Settlement. The onus of proof that the lands were the private lands of the zamindar not set apart at the Decennial Settlement as chowkedaree chakeran is on the zamindar. Moobtakhezho Debia Chowdhrain v. The Collector of Moorshedabad, 4 W. R., 30.

In a suit for possession of land from which the plaintiff has been dispossessed by the defendant, if the defendant admits the plaintiff's possession as lakherajdar up to the time of dispossession, and justifies his proceedings by pleading that the lakheraj was created subsequent to 1790, and that the land is part of his mål land, it is not necessary to try the plaintiff's title, but the onus is on the defendant to prove his allegation. Oottum Churn Dutt v. Ram Lall Dun, 5 W. R., 91.

When a lakherajdar, suing for possession of a land of which he has been dispossessed by the present putneedar, is, from his having been the former putneedar of the village in which the land in question is situate, able to show the exact position of the village during his tenure of it, the onus is on him to prove that the land was lakheraj during the period that he held the village in putnee. Nishkun Mookerjee v. Promothknath Ghose, 5 W. R., 148.

Whether a defendant admits the existence of the superior tenure of a plaintiff over the whole or only a part of the under-tenure under which the defendant pleads to hold under the tenure of the plaintiff, and whether the defendant pleads the existence over a part of his own under-tenure of tenures independent of the plaintiff's under-tenure, but within the same talook in which the tenure of the plaintiff is situated, the onus is on the defendant to prove that he has collected rent direct from the

After the zamindar has made out a prima-facie case, the onus is on the judgment-creditor, who attaches a tenure as liable for his debt, and who desires the same to be sold in execution, to prove the liability of the tenure to satisfy that decree. Aliak Monee Dassia v. Chundra Kant Maakerjee, 5 W. R., 233.

Where a ryot claims protection from ejectment by an auction-purchaser under the proviso to Section 37, Act XI of 1859, the onus is on the ryot to prove the character of his holding. Domun Lall v. Pudmum Singh, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 129.

In a suit between two rival tenants claiming to hold under the same landlord, where one of them admitted the tenancy of the other, but pleaded resignation by him of his tenancy and a lease to himself, the onus of proof was held to rest upon the plaintiff. Kishen Chunder Shaha v. Hookoom Chand Shaha, W. R., 1864, 47.

A suit to recover possession of land from which the plaintiff had been ousted by the defendant under Section 28, Act X of 1859, will not lie upon the ground that the tenure is invalid, but merely upon the ground that the lakerhaj was granted after 1st December, 1790; and the onus probandi in such case is on the plaintiff. Ayalunker v. Choken Sahoo, W. R., 1864, 2.

Suit to recover possession of land from which the plaintiff had been ousted by the defendant under Section 19, Regulation XIX of 1793, on the ground that it was an invalid lakerhaj created after 1st December, 1790. — Held that the zamindar having no right to oust the lakerhajdar, unless the lakerhaj was created after 1st December, 1790, must prove that the lakerhaj was created subsequently to that date, and that it was not for the lakerhajdar to prove that the lakerhaj was created prior to that date. Mou Mohinee Dossee v. Joykissen Mookerjee, W. R., F. B., 174.

Although generally it may be taken that land whereon an orchard is planted belongs to the zamindar, and has been granted to a stranger to plant trees thereon, in which case it reverts to the zamindar after the trees have disappeared and the land has become arable, yet when it is asserted that the land belongs to the planter of the orchard, having been acquired by purchase, it is for the zamindar to prove that the land belongs to him and was given for plantation; and in the absence of such proof the holder or occupant may rely on his long possession. Dhunee Ram v. Amanut Hossein and others, 3 Agra Rep., 161.

(g) In respect of Fraud.

Where a mother conveyed property to a daughter, and the property was afterwards attacked in execution of a decree against the daughter, — Held that the mother could not obtain a reconveyance of the property, on the ground that the conveyance to the daughter was for the purpose of defrauding the mother's creditors, and that the onus was on the mother to prove that the decree against the daughter was a fraudulent contrivance to deprive the mother of possession of the property. Koshub Chundra Sein v. Vyasmonee Dossia, 7 W. R., 118.

In a suit by three brothers to recover an e sold by their two brothers as their guardians di their minority, as they alleged, without nee and in collusion with the purchaser,— Held the onus was on the plaintiff to prove the sale fraud and collusive. Achнут Singh v. Kishen Per Singh, W. R., 1864, 37.

In Suits with regard to Wrongful Alienation.

Upon those who claim under an alienation from a Hindu widow rests the onus of showing that the transaction was within her limited power. The Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Maratna, 2 W. R., P. C., 61.

Suit by the purchaser of a certain annual payment by Government, called tora garas huk, sold in satisfaction of a decree. Held that the onus was on the Government to prove that there was something in the nature of this payment which made it incapable of alienation, and that the Government had failed to give such proof. Shunbho Lall Gobind Lall v. The Collector of Surat, 4 W. R., P. C., 55.

Where it was in proof that a portion of the immoveable property of the wife had passed to a bond-fide purchaser under conveyances executed by the wife to her husband or to such purchaser, the burden of proof in a suit by her to recover the property is upon her, as she seeks to be relieved from the effect of her own conveyances, the execution of which she does not dispute, against one who, if not an absolute stranger, stands in no fiduciary relation to her. Judonath Bose v. Shumsoonnissa Begum, 12 W. R., P. C., 3.

In a suit brought by a Mahometan widow against the brother of her deceased husband for her share of the property of her husband, the defendant set up a tumliknamah by which the deceased conveyed the property away to the son of the defendant. Held that the burden of proof was on the defendant, and that he was bound to adduce the very strictest proof of the conveyance, as it cut away property from the natural heir. The tumliknamah was rejected, having regard to its terms and to the probabilities and facts of the case. Saduk Ali Khan v. Bibee Pearce and others, 9 W. R., 142.

In a suit by a ryot under Section 14, Act X of 1859, to contest a notice of enhancement, the onus probandi is on the ryot. Prithee Ram v. Sridhar Nandi v. Braja Nath Kundu, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 211.

Where there is prima-facie evidence that a tenant holds part of the land sought to be enhanced as paying rent and part as rent-free, the onus is shifted from the ryot to the landlord.

_Mehal Chunder Mistree v. Huree Pershad Mundul, 6 W. R., 154._

_In a suit for enhancement, the defendant pleads an exemption in respect of part of the land. If the plaintiff makes out a prima-facie case, the Court is to look, not to the validity of the defendant's title, but to his possession of the land as lakheraj._

_Mirza Mahomed Ali v. Radha Romun Mundul, 4 W. R., Act X R., 18._

When a landlord sues for enhanced rent and is met by an allegation that certain plots of land never paid any rent at all, the onus is on him to prove that the lands did at some former time pay him rent.

Golam Ali v. Gopal Lal Thakoor, 9 W. R., 65.

_In a suit for enhancement, where the defendant pleads a lakheraj holding as to a portion of the land, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove whether the disputed land ever paid rent.

_Sheeb Narain Roy v. Haidam Dossee Byragee and others, 6 W. R., Act X R., 45._

_In a suit for enhancement, where the defendant pleads that rent has been assessed on lands coalition with the land, the onus is on the defendant to prove the custom._

_Karoo Chowdhry and another v. Joyessur Mandal, 6 W. R., Act X R., 46._

_In a suit for enhancement, where the defence is that part of the land is mál, the plaintiff should prove that he has collected rents from such part as mál land, before he can call upon the defendant to prove his lakheraj title; and even then the plaintiff must sue subject to the Law of Limitations._

_Ram Coomar Ghossal v. Debe Pershad Chatterjee, 6 W. R., Act X R., 87._

_In a suit for enhancement, in which the defendant adduced in evidence a decree in a suit in 1820 between the predecessors of both parties, to show that he and his ancestors had held at a rate fixed by a sunudd prior to the Permanent Settlement, the onus was held to be on the plaintiff to prove that that decree was not applicable to the particular holding in dispute._

_Bhobooonderee Debha v. Gour Kishore Dutt, 6 W. R., Act X R., 96._

_Where a ryot is sued for enhanced rent in respect of lands part of which he admits to be rent-paying and the remainder lakheraj, the onus of proving that any part was exempted is not shifted from the ryot.

_Dhun Monee Debha v. Suttorgun Seald, and others, 6 W. R., Act X R., 100._

_Where a plaintiff sues for enhancement, on the ground that the defendant did not pay the rents paid by others in the neighbourhood for similar lands, and the defendant denies his liability to pay such rents owing to his having mokurruree pottahs, the onus is on the defendant to prove those pottahs._

_Frymuth Roy Chowdhry v. Mohkoodeen Ahmed, 6 W. R., Act X R., 39._

_The onus is in a suit by a landlord for enhancement under Section 17, Act X of 1859, on the ground that the productiveness of the land has increased, rests on the plaintiff, who must prove that the productiveness was increased otherwise than by the agency or at the expense of the ryot._

_The general rule of evidence is that if, in order to make out a title, it is necessary to prove a negative, the party who avers a title must prove it._

_A written statement put in by a defendant is not a plea by way of confession and avoidance, and the whole statement must be taken together._

_Poo-lin Behary Sen v. R. Watson and Co., 9 W. R., 190._

_In a suit for enhancement, where the defendant replies that the land in question does not belong to the plaintiff's estate, the onus is on the plaintiff (who seeks to disturb the existing arrangement) to prove that it does do so._

_Mirza Mahomed Ali v. Radha Romun Mundul, 4 W. R., Act X R., 18._

_In a suit for enhancement, where the defendant pleads that rent has been assessed on lands coalescent with the land, the onus is on the defendant to prove the custom._

_Ram Coomar Ghossal v. Debee Pershad Chatterjee, 6 W. R., Act X R., 96._

_The onus in a suit by a landlord for enhancement is on the plaintiff to prove that the land is mál, eventhough the alleged owner puts forward no claim._

_Prem Chand Dasrick v. Brojonath Koondoo Chowdhry and others, 10 W. R., 205._

_A plaintiff who sues for enhanced rent is bound to prove that the present rate is not fair and equitable._

_J. Hills v. Jendur Mundul, 1 W. R., 3._

_In a suit for enhancement, if the defendant pleads that the productive powers of the land have been increased by his own exertions, the onus of proof is on him._

_Noobeen Kutien Bose v. Skofatoollah, 1 W. R., 24._

_When a ryot sues to contest a notice of enhancement, the onus is on the landlord to prove his grounds of enhancement; but the Court is bound to find clearly that an Ameen's report, adverse in the main to the landlord's claim, supports the defendant's special grounds._

_Dinnonath Mose Mullick v. Jagessur Mundul, 1 W. R., 154._

_In a suit for enhancement of rent brought by an auction-purchaser against a ryot before Act X of 1859, the ryot cannot avail himself of the presumption arising under Section 4 of that Act from a uniform payment for 20 years, but must prove uniform payment for 12 years before the Decennial Settlement._

_Notwithstanding proof of such payment, he will still be liable to enhancement in respect of lands._
In a suit for assessment at enhanced rates, in which the defendant admits that the main portion of the lands in dispute are māl, but does not separate the rent-free lands, the plaintiff is not bound to prove that the lands are māl until the defendant points out their precise situation. Rajak Sutto Churn Ghosal v. Tarinee Churn Ghose, 3 W. R., 178.

Where a ryot on whom notice of enhancement has been served sues under Section 14, Act X of 1859, and fails to show that any excessive rate is demanded from him, or that he is not liable to pay the rent demanded, his suit ought to be dismissed. The Court ought not to go on to try defendant's case as if he were suing for enhancement. Gunga Narain Chowdhry v. Kofa Pali, 11 W. R., 377.

(1) In regard to Defamation.

In a suit for damages for a false charge,—Held that an accusation which has been held by a Criminal Court to be unfounded is sufficient prima facie evidence that the accusation was maliciously brought, and that it is for the accuser (defendant) to rebut that evidence by showing that he had reasonable and probable cause for making the accusation. Heera Chand Banerjee v. Banee Madhub Chatterjee, 6 W. R., 29.

Act XVIII of 1862 refers only to the High Court in its original criminal jurisdiction, and is not applicable to mofussil Courts. Section 27 of that Act requires proof of the existence of the circumstances relied on as a defence before good faith can be presumed in a case of defamation. The onus of proving good faith is on the person making the imputation. Before such person can claim the benefit of Exception 9, Section 499 of the Penal Code, he must show that he has exercised due care and caution. Sealay v. Ramnarain Bose, 4 W. R., Cr., 22.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution, where it was proved that plaintiff, a man of property and respectability, had been charged by defendant with theft, and that he had been convicted before the Magistrate, but acquitted by the Sessions Judge,—Held that the mere fact of acquittal did not prove that the charge was malicious; that property having been found in plaintiff's house which defendant claimed as his stolen property, plaintiff could not recover damages, unless it was certain that the property in question was not stolen but his own; and that it was for plaintiff to show that there was no ground or reasonable cause for bringing the charge. Duongussee Bydev v. Gridharee Mull Dooğur, 10 W. R., 439.

Held that the best evidence of enmity is the evidence of the parties between whom it exists; and that in the absence of the plaintiff's own testimony, there was no sufficient evidence of malice to make it incumbent on the other side to show reasonable ground for the charge. Roshan Sircar v. Nobin Ghuttuck, 12 W. R. 402.

Although a suit cannot be maintained for damages for defamation of character, when it is substantially a suit for damages against witnesses in respect of evidence given by them upon oath in a judicial proceeding, yet it may be supported when, though called a suit for defamation of character, it is substantially a suit for a malicious prosecution. In the latter case the burden is on the plaintiff to prove (1) that the defendants were the prosecutors of the criminal proceeding against him; (2) that they were actuated by malice; and (3) that their proceeding was without any reasonable or probable cause; and the Privy Council agreed with the High Court in thinking that there was no evidence on the part of the plaintiff of want of reasonable and proper cause for the institution of this prosecution. Gummesh Dutt Singh v. Magneeram Chowdry and others, 17 S. W. R., Cr., 283.
I.—INSOLVENT COURT.

Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21.) In re Manuel Grant Costello, 8 B. L. R., Ap., 57.

Section 342 of Act VIII of 1859 does not apply to appeals from the orders of a judge sitting as a Commissioner of the Insolvent Court. The right of appeal is given by Section 73 of the Indian Insolvent Act, and the Court cannot impose on the appellant a condition that he shall give security for the costs of such an appeal. Ram Sabuck Misser, in the matter of, 5 B. L. R., 179.

Proceedings in the Insolvent Court do not necessarily abate by the death of the party who institutes such proceedings. There is nothing in the Indian Insolvent Act, or in the rules of the Court, which prevents the Commissioner from allowing the proceedings to be carried on by the representative of such deceased party, he being in their interests. In the matter of Ram Sabuck Misser; Sheikh Palw v. Janki Prasad; Sheikh Ranisan Ali v. Janki Prasad, 6 B. L. R., 119.

When an insolvent has obtained his discharge, a Commissioner has no jurisdiction on the application of some of the creditors to make an order dismissing his petition, and ordering the estate and effects of the insolvent in the hands of the official assignee to be made over to certain persons on behalf of the creditors. The petition being dismissed, the property re-vested in the insolvents. The Court which passed the order dismissing the petition, upon finding such order had been obtained by fraud, has power to set aside the order. Ram Sabuck Misser, in the matter of the petition of, 6 B. L. R., 310.

The Insolvent Court has no power to allow an insolvent to withdraw his petition of insolvency, on the ground that he has made a compromise with his creditors. Where, however, the Court is satisfied that all parties concerned desire to take the matter out of the hands of the Court, it will dismiss the petition, even though there is no ground arising out of the facts of the case why the petition should be dismissed. Pyarichand Mitté, in the matter of, 6 B. L. R., 558.

Where the evidence has not been taken down in writing, as provided by Section 72 of the Insolvent Act, the evidence cannot be gone into on an appeal under Section 73.

Per Norman, J. (Paul, J., dissenting.)—The Insolvent Court has power, under Section 26 of it and 12 Vict., Chap. 21, to order any person who is in possession of, or has under his control, any property alleged to belong to the insolvent, to deliver such property to the official assignee. In the matter of Adjudhia Pershad; Mohanty Jairam Gir v. A. B. Miller, 7 B. L. R., 74, and 15 S. W. R., A. O., 16.

A Commissioner sitting in Insolvency, while sentencing an insolvent to imprisonment on the criminal side, under Section 50 of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, has power, in addition, to order that the further hearing of the insolvent's petition be adjourned, with or without protection, under Section 47, beyond the expiration of such term of imprisonment. In re Mancharji Hirji Radhymoney, 5 Bom. Rep., O. C., 61.

Where, under Section 51 of the Insolvent Debtors' Act (11 and 12 Vict., Chap. 21), it has been adjudged that an insolvent shall be forthwith discharged from all his debts, &c., except as to certain specified debts, and as to these that he shall be discharged so soon as he shall have been in custody, at the suit of the person or persons who shall be creditor or creditors for the same respectively, for such period as the Court shall direct; such an order of adjudication does not in itself operate as an order for the imprisonment of the insolvent, but the detaining creditor, if he wishes to arrest or detain the insolvent for such period, must (if he have not already done so) place himself in a position to issue execution against the insolvent. In re Mancharji Hirji Radhymoney, 5 Bom. Rep., O. C., 55.

Section 49 of the Insolvent Act was not intended to give the Court power merely on the occurrence of insolvency to set aside a sale which has rightly and clearly taken place upon process of execution.

The power of the Court to attach the property of an insolvent is confined strictly to the provisions of the Insolvent Act. In re Khettyev Das, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 14.

The petitioner came down from Cawnpore, where he had resided for some time, to Calcutta, to file his petition. He stated that he intended to settle in Calcutta on obtaining his discharge. Held that his being in Calcutta under these circumstances did not constitute residence. Held also that, by Section 18 of the Letters Patent, the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court has been narrowed by the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, i.e., that portion of the Presidency over which the authority of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal extends.

Semble.—Under Section 5 of the Insolvent Act, the residence of the petitioner must be within the limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court. In the matter of Tiokhins, an insolvent, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 84.

Where a person applied for the benefit of the provisions of the Insolvent Act on a petition in which he described himself as “William Cockburn, of Doomrah Factory in Tihotho,” and stated in his petition “that he is now residing at No. 19, Garden Reach, in the Suburbs of Calcutta, within the jurisdiction of the High Court”—Held the petition was rightly dismissed for want of jurisdiction. In re William Cockburn, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 326.

A Commissioner has no power, under Section 73 of the Insolvent Act, to extend the time for presenting a petition of appeal from an order of the Insolvent Court. In re Ghotiam Rusal Khan, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 130.

2. INSOLVENT DEBTOR.

An insolvent, J. A., executed the following document in Calcutta, dated May 16th, 1867, in favour of M., L., and Co.: “Dear Sirs,—In consideration of your having advanced to me the sum of Rs. 8,700, I hereby assign to you the whole of my furniture, fittings now lying at my house, Fairy Hall, Dum-Dum, the whole of which I declare to be my property, free and unencumbered, and hereby authorize you to proceed to a sale of the said property by auction, should I fail to refund the amount of Rs. 8,700 on or before the 10th day of July next.” The document was duly stamped and registered under Section 53 of the Registration Act. J. A. failed to pay the Rs. 8,700; and on the following day, M., L., and Co. placed a durwan, their own servant, on the premises at Fairy Hall, to assert their right to the possession of the furniture, and to prevent its removal without their permission. An inventory was being made, and other steps taken preparatory to a sale. J. A. continued to reside in the house, and to use and enjoy the furniture as before, with the knowledge and consent of M., L., and Co. Before our order took place, J. A. filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, and the usual vesting order was made. Held that the furniture was in the “possession, order, and disposition” of the insolvent within the meaning of Section 23 of the Insolvent Act. In the matter of Agabeg, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 340.

The agent of a company or private individual who procures and receives parcels for transmission by his employers, or who by his personal exertions obtains passengers for their dak, although he may be entrusted with the receipt or price of carriage, and is paid by commission, is not a broker or trader within the meaning of the Insolvent Act. Re Campbell, an insolvent, 2 Hyde’s Rep., 180.

Held, that Rule 14 of the Insolvent Court at Bomburgh, requiring a special application on affidavit and notice to opposing creditors, before a fresh petition can be filed, has reference to a dismissal upon hearing, and not to the case of a petition dismissed under Rule 10. In re Manekji Frenji, an insolvent, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 167.

When an insolvent was brought up for the purpose of obtaining his discharge,—Held that the “bad faith” mentioned in Section 281, Act VIII of 1859, must be in respect of the debt for which he was imprisoned, and with regard to which the application was made. Oriental Bank v. Ramaddi Sen, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 14.

Defendant, who had taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act, was sued by plaintiff for a debt contracted previously to his insolvency, the debt not having been entered in the insolvent’s schedule at the time of his final discharge. Held, insolvent being a trader, that, under the provisions of Section 60 of the Indian Insolvency Act, taken in connection with 5 and 6 Vict., Chap. 122, the discharge was good and valid, and that subsequently acquired property could not be attached for any debt discharged under the insolvency. Brett v. Schenested, 2 Hyde’s Rep., 1.

An insolvent debtor in the mofussil may assign all his property to trustees for the benefit of the creditors who may assent to the conditions of the assignment; and such an assignment will be valid, although it may operate to defeat an expected execution, if it be the intention of the assignor to confer on the assenting creditors a substantial interest in the property assigned, and not merely to defeat or hinder a judgment creditor.

Such an assignment may be made to trustees, but it is not requisite that it should be made to trustees; and it is not requisite that it should be made directly to the assenting creditors. It will confer on the trustees a title to the property assigned superior to that of a judgment-creditor, who has obtained an order for attachment subsequently to the assignment.

It is not invalid if made subject to a condition requiring assenting creditors to execute a release of the debtor, nor is it invalid if it declares a resulting trust in favour of the debtor; but, semble, that the Court might order such resulting trust to be executed for the benefit of judgment-creditors who decline to assent to the assignment.

Nor is it invalid if it empowers the trustees to permit the debtor to retain such portion of his furniture, linen, &c., as they may think fit; but this power should be exercised only when the other assets are insufficient to discharge the primary objects of the trust.

Nor is it invalid if it contain a power for the trustees to continue the business, if the power so given is ancillary to winding-up the business and realizing the assets of the estate; nor is it invalid if executed only by a minority of the creditors. Nor can it be invalidated by subsequent negligence on the part of trustees.

The question as to the intention of the debtor, in executing such an assignment, is a question of fact rather than of law; and in determining this question the conditions and trust subject to which the assignment is made may be considered.

The valuation for stamp duty of a suit brought by the trustees to set aside an attachment should be calculated on the value of the lien claimed by the judgment-creditor. To such a suit it is not necessary to make all the creditors parties. Cecil Stephenson and others v. Baumgartner, 3 Agra Rep., 104.

A insolvent obtained his final discharge in April, 1863. Held that he was not still liable, under the provisions of the English Bankrupt Act, 1861, Section B. 4, for the ascertained value of certain premia on a policy of insurance which he had undertaken. Gray v. Chick, Cor. Rep., 136.

Certificate refused where insolvent had been guilty of fraudulent practices in trade. Certificate suspended in the case of a partner at home, who, though innocent of the fraudulent practices, omitted to give notice to the parties intended to be defrauded. The Insolvency Court has no power to punish criminally for fraudulent practices in trade. This is left to the action of creditors through the channel of the criminal law. Re Jansen v. Rees, Cor. Rep., 13.

The insolvent, who was born in England, of English parents, was the widow of a surgeon, and resided at Salam for some time before, and at the time of the presentation of her petition to the Court. Held that the 5th Section of the Insolvent Debtors' Act is as applicable to a "British subject" (in the sense in which that appellation is used in the Charter of the late Supreme Court) resident within the jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras, as to an inhabitant within the local limits of the town of Madras. In the matter of Dorothea Hicks, an insolvent, 3 Mad. Rep., Ind. Jur., 151.

Reckless trading, although unaccompanied by any legal or moral fraud, is a ground for suspending protection. In re W. M. Baggot, Bourke's Rep., Ins., 5.

An adjournment on the ground that the insolvent is unable to attend the Court by reason of ill health, will only be granted when the insolvent enjoys the benefit of the Court's order granting him personal protection. In re Odoytoo Churn Roy, Bourke's Rep., Ins., 3.

In 1862 the plaintiff's former firm of J. S. B. and B., of Manchester, entered into an agreement with S. and Co., of London, and B. and Co., of Calcutta, to purchase and ship, on the joint account of the three firms, certain goods to B. and Co., each firm taking one-third share of the profit or loss in the transaction; and by the agreement it was stipulated as follows:—

"J. S. B. and B. to draw at six months on S. and Co. for cost of goods, including packing charges; said bills to be discounted (and domiciled) at Overend, Gurney, and Co.'s at 11 per cent. in excess of bank minimum rate. B. and Co. to remit their three months' or six months' drafts as may appear most desirable on S. and Co., in favour of J. S. B. and B., which Overend, Gurney, and Co. agree to take at 11 per cent. above bank minimum rate for three months, and 11 per cent. for six months as provision for said six months' drafts. B. and Co., on sale of goods, to specially remit proceeds to Overend, Gurney, and Co., in first-class bills drawn in favour of Overend, Gurney, and Co. Overend, Gurney, and Co. agree to give up B. and Co.'s drafts on S. and Co. on receipt of the said remittances under rebate. In the event of S. and Co. being brought under cash advances, J. S. B. and B. agree to find cash to the extent of one-third the amount." In 1863 J. S. B., one of the members of the firm of J. S. B. and B., retired from the firm, which was carried on under the name of T. B. and Bro. and the agreement of 1862 was continued by that firm with the two other firms of S. and Co. and B. and Co. On the 27th December, 1866, purchased by the plaintiff, and shipped to B. and Co., on triplicate account, and bills were drawn by the plaintiff on S. and Co., as agreed, and were deposited with A. C. and Co., not with O. S. and Co. On the 2nd January, 1867, in consideration of the plaintiff taking on himself all the risk attaching to the said goods, S. and Co. and B. and Co. transferred all their right, title, and interest in the said goods to the plaintiff. This agreement was signed on behalf of B. and Co. by L. B. in his own name, one of the members of the firm then in London, who stated that he had the authority of his partners for so doing. On this agreement being made, B. and Co., by the direction of the plaintiff, handed over the goods and documents relating thereto to B. and Co.; of Calcutta, on the 16th January, 1867. B. and Co. stopped payment on the 27th December, 1866, and J. H. and R., the only partner of that firm then in Calcutta, filed his petition in the Insolvent Court there on the 7th February, 1867. L. B. filed his petition in the said Court on the 18th May, 1867. S. and Co. stopped payment in December, 1866. On the 16th March, 1867, an order of the Insolvent Court was made in the matter of the petition of J. H. R., and the assurance of this order B. B. and Co. delivered to the defendant, as official assignee of the estate of the said J. H. R., the unsold goods in their hands, which had been transferred to them by B. and Co., and the net proceeds of those which they had sold. Held by Norman, J., that the agreement of January 2nd was fraudulent and void against the creditors of B. and Co., under 13 Elia., c. 5, if not void under Section 24 of the Indian Insolvent Act.

On appeal, held by Peacock, C. J. That the goods were sent to B. and Co. on a special trust, and there was a specific appropriation of the proceeds binding in the case either of insolvency or bankruptcy; that the agreement of January 2nd was valid and binding on the assignee of B. and Co.; that by it the property in the goods passed to T. B. and Bro.; but if it did not, the proceeds were specifically appropriated to taking up the bills of B. and Co. on S. and Co.; and until they were paid B. and Co. had no interest in the goods which could justify their assignee in stopping the remittance of the proceeds or of taking the property out of the possession of B. B. and Co.; that the plaintiff was entitled to the proceeds with interest from the time the proceeds and goods were handed over to the assignee, and that the goods were not in the order and disposition of J. H. R. at the time of his filing his petition within Section 23 of the Indian Insolvent Act.

Per Markby, J.—Each of the two firms and Barlow were in the outset part owners of these goods, and each became liable to the other to contribute his share towards the cost price thereof. In November, 1866, there ceased to be a binding agreement to remit the proceeds to O., G., and Co., and no new agreement was substituted. The agreement of 2nd January did not renew the right to have the proceeds remitted for special appropriation, and it was moreover a fraudulent preference and void so far as B. and Co. were concerned. On 16th January, when the goods were transferred to plaintiff, he was merely a creditor, and therefore a transfer for his benefit, within two months of filing petition of insolvency, was void under Section 24 of the Indian Insolvent Act.

Per Peacock, C. J., and Markby, J.—That an order under Section 26 of the Indian Insolvent Act does not prevent the owner of the property which is the subject of the order from suing the assignee to establish his right to it. Barlow v. Cochran, 2 B. L. R., O. C., 36.

The order of discharge of an insolvent trader, under Section 60 of the Indian Insolvent Debtors Act, operates to discharge such trader from all debts that could be proved in the matter of his insolvency, whether they are specified in his schedule or not. Dhadhadh Naharudin v. Mânikji Shâhpurji Kâda, 7 Born. Rep., O. C., 22.

Held that a judgment-debtor who had been in prison for two years under the Code of Civil Procedure was liable to be adjudicated an insolvent in respect of the same judgment-debt, where the petition for adjudication was presented before he was released from prison under Section 278 of the Code. In the matter of Ragubhushan Ram Chandra, 6 Born. Rep., O. C. J., 86.

In order to enable an insolvent to appeal from an order passed in the matter of his petition, notes of the evidence must be taken at the hearing by an officer of the Court.

In the time allowed for appealing, the vacation is to be computed, unless such time expire during the vacation, in which case the petition of appeal must be presented to the Court or a Judge on the first day after the vacation. In re Lâkhmîdâs Hânîraj, 5 Born. Rep., O. C., 63.

An authority (assuming it to be sufficient) given by the official assignee to settle the outstanding of one who has filed a petition of insolvency does not enure after the dismissal of the petition, and cannot entitle the person so authorized to sue at all. The mere fact that a payment was made to a person at a time when his petition was upon the file of the Insolvent Court, which petition was afterwards dismissed, does not invalidate the payment.

Rajkrîsto Singh v. Shaikh Sefatullah, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 85; It is not illegal for a debtor to execute a security, or make an assignment in favour of one creditor over others. The provisions of the bankrupt laws, made to promote the equal distribution of the trader's assets among all his creditors, are not in force in these provinces. Buldeo Dass v. Nonna Lall, 1 N. W. R., Par. 1, p. 23.

3.—Creditors.

A distress levied after the filing of the petition of insolvency, but before the vesting order is drawn up, is invalid as against the official assignee. A vesting order is made when it is given by the Court, and not at the time it is drawn up, signed and sealed. Bodey J., in the matter of, 5 B. L. R., 309.

St. & Co., merchants carrying on business at Glasgow, brought a suit against I. C., official assignee, who resided in Calcutta, as assignee of the estate of B. & Co., merchant carrying on business at Calcutta; and B. & Co., merchants carrying on business at London. St. & Co. alleged in their plaint that they were the owners of certain goods, and sold the same to B. & C. and Sm. & Co., and drew for the price on Sm. & Co., who accepted the drafts; that the goods were shipped to B. & Co. at Calcutta; that at the time when the acceptances were given it was agreed upon between St. & Co., Sm. & Co., and B. & Co., that they should be met and paid out of the sale proceeds of the goods, "which were therupon specially appropriated thereto"; that Sm. & Co. and B. & Co. subsequently suspended payment, namely, in December, 1866, and January, 1867; that in February, 1867, B. & Co. filed their petition in the Court for the relief of insolvent debtors at Calcutta, having previously delivered a portion of the goods, and endorsed the bills of lading for the remainder to I. S. & Co., who had notice of the insolvent state of Sm. & Co. and B. & Co., without any consideration and without the consent or authority of St. & Co., although the acceptances had not been met or returned, or the goods in any way paid for; that the proceeds arising from the sale of the goods had been handed over by I. S. & Co. to I. C., who threatened and intended to apply the same in payment of the general body of creditors of B. & Co. St. & Co. prayed that the rights of the parties to the suit might be declared; that an account might be taken of what had been received by I. C. in respect of the proceeds of such sale; that I. C. might be directed to pay to St. & Co. what on taking such account might be found due to them; that a receiver might be appointed; that meanwhile I. C. might be restrained by injunction from paying over the same to any one except St. & Co. On the case coming on for settlement of issues, the suit was dismissed by Norman, J., on the ground that, from the facts alleged in the plaint, the inference was that the goods were in the possession, order, and disposition of B. & Co. as reputed owners, with the consent of St. & Co., within the meaning of Section 23 of the Insolvent Act; and therefore the goods and the sale proceeds rightly passed to I. C. as assigned; and further that the Court had not jurisdiction to declare the rights of all parties as prayed for; that the cause of action did not wholly arise within the jurisdiction, and it was not shown that leave had been granted to institute the suit.

Hold on appeal that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and the plaint sufficiently disclosed a cause of action. St. & Co. had a right to have it tried whether they had an equitable charge upon the proceeds for the purpose of paying the bills. Sterling v. Cochrane, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 114.

Ever since the year 1843 it has been well established in bankruptcy that if the estate is more than sufficient to pay the creditors twenty shillings in the pound, the surplus is to be applied to the payment of interest on debts bearing interest by contract. In the matter of Thomas Pereira, 1 Mad. Rep., 221.

Under a vesting order an insolvent’s estate became vested in the official assignee, who paid the scheduled creditors the principal of their debts. A discharging order was then made under Section 59 of the Indian Insolvent Debtors’ Act (11 Vict., c. 21). At the date of such order the official assignee had Rs. 143-1-8 to the credit of the insolvent’s estate. He subsequently received the interest on certain securities which had been made available to the insolvent for his life before the date of the vesting order. Hold that the discharging order did not make the vesting order void; nor as regards the estate vested in the official assignee did it re-vest immediately the right of property in the insolvent. That creditors are entitled to interest carrying debts out of a surplus remaining in the official assignee’s hands after payment of the scheduled amount of debts.

That, notwithstanding the discharging order, the Court might direct the Rs. 143-1-8 and the interest subsequently received, to be paid to the insolvent’s creditors rateably in respect of interest on their debts calculated down to the date of the discharging order, and that the balance should be paid to the insolvent or his representative. That the interest subsequently received by the official assignee was “neither after-acquired property” within the meaning of Section 59, nor “a debt growing due to the insolvent before the Court shall have made its order” within the meaning of Section 7 of 11 Vict., c. 21. In the matter of Thomas Pereira, 1 Mad. Rep., 217.

C. & Co., merchants, carrying on business at Manchester, brought a suit against I. C., official assignee, who resided in Calcutta, as assignee of the estate of B. & Co., merchants, carrying on business at Calcutta, and S. & Co., and M. & Co. and others, merchants, carrying on business in London and Glasgow, respectively. C. & Co. alleged in their plaint that under an arrangement with B. & Co. and S. & Co. they shipped, on the joint account of the three firms, goods to B. & Co. at Calcutta, drawing for the price on S. & Co., who accepted their drafts in respect thereof; that C. & Co. had a one-third share in the above joint accounts; S. & Co. had a one-third share, and B. & Co. and M. & Co. had a one-third share between them; that the whole of the goods were purchased and paid for by C. & Co. that at the time the acceptances were given it was distinctly agreed upon by all the parties that the bills should be met and paid out of the sale proceeds of the goods, “which were thereupon specifically appropriated thereto;” that S. & Co. subsequently suspended payment in December, 1866, and B. & Co. in January, 1867; that in February, 1867, B. & Co. filed their petition in the Court for the relief of insolvent debtors at Calcutta, having previously sold a portion of the goods, and delivered the remainder to I. S. & Co., as agents, for sale on account of C. & Co. and the other parties interested, I. S. & Co. being instructed by B. & Co. to hold the same to a separate account of B. & Co.; that I. S. & Co. had received the proceeds of the sale of the whole of the goods; that the proceeds arising from the sale had been handed over by I. S. & Co. to I. C., who threatened and intended to apply the same in payment of the general body of creditors of B. & Co. C. & Co. prayed that the rights of the parties to the suit might be declared; that an account might be taken of what had come into the hands of I. C. in respect of the goods; that I. C. might be declared answerable to C. & Co. for the amount which should be found to be due to them on account of the goods and other payments made by them on account of the goods; that I. C. might be directed to pay to C. & Co. what should be found due to them on taking an account; that the proceeds might be directed to be paid amongst the parties to the suit, according to the respective shares and interest therein; and that in the meantime, I. C. might be restrained, by injunction, from paying over the same to any one except C. & Co.

On the case coming on for settlement of issues, the suit was dismissed by Norman, J., on the ground that the Court had not jurisdiction to declare the rights of parties as prayed, and no cause of action was disclosed against the official assignee.

Hold on appeal that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and the plaint sufficiently disclosed a cause of action. C. & Co. had a right to have the question tried whether, by the alleged arrangement, the proceeds of the goods were specifically appropriated to payment for the goods, and the Court had clearly jurisdiction to compel I. C., the official assignee, to apply the proceeds, so far as they may have been specifically appropriated. Collie v. Cochrane, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 131.

The execution of a letter of license to an insolvent by all the creditors mentioned in the schedule to his petition in the Insolvent Court, upon which his petition in the Insolvent Court was dismissed, was held to be sufficient consideration to enforce the contract to bear against one of the creditors, although all the creditors were designated together as one party in the deed, and there was no express declaration that each creditor executed in consideration of all the others executing. Bundesdurch Poddar v. Ramjee Morarjee, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 243.

In a suit for money due on three promissory notes, two of them executed by defendant and one T. in favour of plaintiff, the third by defendant alone, the defence was that the plaintiff agreed to give up three notes sued upon, and to take in lieu thereof a single note signed by T., while a third of the debt in insolvency, in favour of defendant and by defendant endorsed to plaintiff. Hold, as the consideration for the making of that note by T. was the defendant's withdrawing his opposition in the Insolvent Court, that that arrangement was brought about by plaintiff to secure to himself and defendant an undue share of the insolvent's property, and was an arrangement contrary to the policy of the Insolvent Act, and therefore void. Agar Chand v. P. Viraraghavahoe, 3 Mad. Rep., O. J., 172.

When A., a holder of a hoondee drawn up and accepted by the firm of B., procured that firm, when it was on the verge of insolvency, to sell him certain property in payment of the hoondee; but, before he obtaining possession, the official creditor of, and decree-holder against, the firm, got it sold in satisfaction of his debt.—Held on A.'s suit that the sale in his favour cannot, in the absence of any finding of fraud, be set aside merely on the ground that the effect of it has been to deprive the other creditors of their powers to have recourse to the property. Dalo Ram v. Shiva Pershad, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 71.

Claims of European Assistants and Native Establishments and Workmen of Insolvent Firm. In the matter of Parke Pillar and another, insolv. (Charles Nephew and Co.), 6 B. L. R., Ap., 146.

A claim was made against the estate of an insolvent in respect of certain bills of exchange, on which dividends had been declared in favour of the present claimant by the official assignee, on the estates of two other insolvents, but which bills of exchange were also included in the present claim. Held that the dividends declared on the two other insolvencies must be deducted from the amount of the claim, though no payment in respect of the dividends declared had been actually made. In the matter of Parke Pillar, 8 B. L. R., 118.

In 1870 the firm of S. M. and Co., of Calcutta, authorized A., of the firm of C. N. and Co., also of Calcutta, to indent for iron from England. In pursuance of such authority, C. N. and Co. ordered through their London agents, P. P. and Co., a shipment of iron, which was duly shipped by P. P. and Co., who drew against the said shipment two bills of exchange for Rs. 10,000 and Rs. 1,484-10 respectively on the firm of S. M. and Co., in favour of C. N. and Co. The bills on presentation were duly accepted by S. M. and Co., and afterwards discounted by C. N. and Co. with the Chartered Mercantile Bank, C. N. and Co. at the same time depositing with the bank as collateral security for the payment of the bills the bill of lading for the iron shipped from England by P. P. and Co. For subsequently both S. M. and Co. and C. N. and Co. filed their petitions in the Insolvent Court, and were adjudicated insolvents. In the schedule of S. M. and Co. the bank was inserted as a creditor in respect of this transaction for Rs. 11,484-10. When the bills of exchange became due they were duly presented for payment to the acceptors, but were dishonoured and protested by the bank for non-payment, and on such non-payment the bank sold the shipment of iron for which it held the bills of lading, and realized the sum of Rs. 10,073-12-6. The bank claimed to prove for the whole amount in the schedule against the estate of S. and Co. Held, so much as was due to it on the bills of exchange after deducting the amount realized by the sale of the iron. *In the circumstances of the case, C. N. and Co. were interested in the shipment of iron as well as S. M. and Co., and therefore there was no obligation on the bank to give up the security before proving its claim, but it might have proved for the whole amount of the debt and retained the security. In the matter of Shib Chandra Mullick, 8 B. L. R., 30.

To an action brought, prosecuted, or defended by the official assignee, it cannot be objected that such action was brought, prosecuted, or defended without leave first obtained from the Court. Should, however, the official assignee bring, prosecute, or defend any such action without leave first obtained from the Court, he will do so at his own risk in regard to the matter of costs. Cochrane v. Owen, 2 Hyde's Rep., 150.

Where money due to an insolvent is deposited in Court, and the Court orders it to be paid to creditors who had attached the money, instead of the official assignee, the remedy open to the latter is a suit for an injunction to restrain the creditors, and an application for an order under Section 92 of Act VIII of 1859. In the matter of A. B. Miller, 12 W. R., 103.

4.—OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE AND VESTING ORDER.

On the 15th of March, 1862, the petitioner brought an action in the Supreme Court against the insolvent to recover a sum of money, and on the 17th of that month the usual summons was served on the insolvent. On the last-mentioned day the insolvent was committed to prison on a charge of murder, notwithstanding which, on the 21st March, 1862, he filed his petition in the Insolvent Court. The usual order was then passed, vesting all the insolvent's estate and effects in the official assignee from the date of the filing of the petition. On the 26th March, 1862, the present petitioner recovered judgment in his action in the Supreme Court. The insolvent was tried and convicted and sentenced to death, and on the 14th of April, 1862, before the insolvent filed his schedule in the Insolvent Court, the sentence was carried into execution. Held, first, that Section 6 of 2 Vic., c. 21, is not imperative; and, secondly, that Sections 21 and 26 of the same Act give the official assignee ample powers for the ascertainment and realization of an insolvent's estate without the aid of a schedule. In re Kalle Churn Khetry, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 16.

R. carried on business in Calcutta in partnership with B. and Co. After B. and Co. had stopped payment, B., B., and Co. were creditors of B. and Co. Goods were consigned on triplicate account to B. and Co., B., B., and Co., and another. The consignors wrote to B. and Co.: "You will please hand over the goods, as per annexed list, to B., B., and Co., Calcutta; they are bought, as you are aware, under special agreement on triplicate account." Before the goods had arrived B. and Co. stopped payment. B., B., and Co. were creditors of B. and Co. After B. and Co. had stopped payment, on the application of B., B., and Co., R. endorsed over, without consideration, the bills of lading to B., B., and Co., who thereby obtained delivery of the goods, and proceeded to sell the same. Within two months of the endorsement T. R. filed his petition of insolvency. Held that, under Section 24 of the Insolvent Act, it appearing on the evidence that at the time of the filing his petition the goods were, as to one-third, the insolvent's property, the official assignee was entitled to have the goods, &c., handed over to him, and an account in respect of such of the goods as had already been sold. In the matter of Robinson, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 273.

A vesting order in insolvency is in effect an assignment in trust for the benefit of creditors, and is paramount to the right of an attachment before judgment-creditor; as it is more equitable that property under the control of the Court should be applied for the benefit of all the creditors than for the exclusive advantage of one. Savita Ramji v. JadHAVI NATHU; Ex-parte Gamble, Official Assignee, 2 Bom. Rep., 165.

Held as to an objection taken, that the vesting orders relied upon by the official assignee were signed by himself and not by the clerk of the Insolvent Court (as directed by Rule 57); that in the face of an established practice of the office, that the clerk and the official assignee should, in the absence of either, and in the transaction of official business, sign one for the other, and no attempt having been made to set aside the vesting order for irregularity, the District Court, as well as the High Court on appeal, was bound to regard such orders as in full force and effect. The High Court, however, considered the practice, so far as it permitted the official assignee to sign vesting orders, objectionable and requiring alteration. Gamble v. Bholagir and others, 2 Bom. Rep., 147.

It is not necessary for the assignee to obtain the leave of the Court before commencing an action; the absence of such permission is matter of objection only between the assignee and the Court of Bankruptcy, and not between the assignee and the other party to the suit. Re LatAPhIE, Cor. Rep., 4.

Property attached before decree passes to the official assignee under an insolvency where the adjudication and vesting order are obtained after the absence of such permission is matter of objection only between the assignee and the Court of Bankruptcy, and not between the assignee and the other party to the suit. declared an insolvent, and by a vesting order of the same date his estate was transferred to the official assignee. Held that the execution was complete by the seizure of the money, and that the official assignee was not entitled to the sum of Rs. 227 as against the execution-creditor. Grish Chandra Roy v. Prasanna Kumar China, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 94.

The Insolvent Court has a discretionary power, under Section 26 of the Insolvent Act, to order any person who has the possession of, or has under his power or control, any property of the insolvent, to deliver over such property to the official assignee. In re Dwarkanath Mitter, S. M. Ranamani Dasi v. A. B. Miller, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 63.

A widow, as administratrix of her husband's estate, sued to recover certain articles of moveable property belonging to that estate, which had been wrongfully appropriated by her son. Defendant pleaded that if the articles belonged to his father's estate they had been fraudulently kept out of the father's schedule when the latter had passed through the Insolvent Court; and that the widow could not claim the property, as she would thereby be taking advantage of her husband's fraud. He also pleaded a set-off on account of a claim against his father. Held that as the official assignee refused to make any claim to the property in dispute, no third party was competent to set up a claim. The creditors had their remedy against the official assignee. The right of ownership was still vested in the plaintiff, notwithstanding the alleged fraud. Manly v. Manly, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 136.

The official assignee of the Insolvent Court is entitled, under the vesting order, to possession of the insolvent's estate even when that estate has been attached in execution of a decree, and an order directing the sale of it has been passed. But if a sale has taken place before the vesting order, the property in the subject of the attachment has passed from the judgment-debtor to the auction-purchaser, and the proceeds of the sale are primarily charged with the satisfaction of the decree or decrees in execution of which the sale has been made. The expression "private alienation," in Section 240 of the Code of Civil Procedure, does not refer to an alienation effected by a vesting order of the Insolvent Court under Section 7 of the Indian Insolvent Act; such an alienation is rather an alienation by operation of law than one by the judgment-debtor.

Semble,—That Section 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure was introduced, not for the purpose of restraining the ordinary effect of attachment, but for the purpose of preventing the same view being taken of attachments before judgment as had been taken by the Indian Courts of the writ of sequestration.

A fresh attachment of property has preceded decree; no fresh attachment is necessary subsequent to decree. Sarkies v. Muss. Bundoo Baee, 1, 6, N. W. R., 81.

In a suit by the official assignee of an Insolvent Court, such official assignee should be made the plaintiff, and the law then allows him to sue by his recognized agent, but the law does not allow the recognized agent to sue as plaintiff.

In a suit so incorrectly instituted the plaintiff should be returned for amendment. Carter v. Misree Lal, 2 N. W. R., 179.

The vesting of an insolvent's property in the official assignee is liable to be divested by a sale in pursuance of an attachment subsisting at the time of the vesting order. Annand Chunder Paul v. Puncture Lall Soor, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 257.

An order made under Act XXVIII of 1865 for the winding-up of the estate of a trader not only stays the further prosecution of suits, &c., against him, but also prevents the completion of an execution against his immovable or ordinary moveable property, if such execution have not been consummated by seizure and sale before the filing in Court of the resolution passed at the meeting of the creditors, unless the leave of the Court be given to the execution-creditor to proceed notwithstanding the winding-up order.

Such leave ought not to be given except upon special grounds. Laches of the execution-creditor will be an obstacle to his obtaining such leave.

Under the Insolvent Debtors' Act (1 & 2 Vic., c. 110, English Repealed Act; 11 & 12 Vic., c. 21, India) the mere delivery of the writ of fi. fa. to the Sheriff or his deputy for execution bound the goods as against the assignees in insolvency, subject to the right of the execution-creditor to have satisfaction of his debt by sale. But in bankruptcy the law is otherwise. The execution must be levied by seizure and sale before the date of the fiat or the filing of the petition for adjudication; otherwise the execution-creditor is entitled only to a rateable part of his debt with the other creditors.

The practice of the High Court under the Civil Procedure Code, on the execution of decrees for money, either against immovable estate, has been, in the first instance, to issue a writ of attachment, and subsequently, on its return by the Sheriff duly executed, to issue a writ directing a sale. The writ of fi. fa. which issued from the Supreme Court was an authority to the Sheriff not only to seize, but also to sell. Section 250 of the Civil Procedure Code applies neither to executions against immovable property nor to executions against debts due to the defendant; and in order to give to third parties full opportunity of vindicating their right before sale, and also to give the defendant an opportunity of paying, it has not been usual to issue process of attachment and sale simultaneously even against personal property, and it would not seem to be proper to do so, except under special circumstances. Financial Association of India and China v. Pranjivandals Harjivandals and another, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C., 25.
I.—SHARES AND THEIR TRANSFER

Where a contract has been made for the sale of shares deposited with a bank as security for an advance, the vendor is not bound to disclose the fact to the purchaser when there can be no reason to anticipate such a depreciation of value in the shares as would entitle the bank to refuse to transfer. Narayen Suckaram v. Dr. Bhawoo Dajee, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 154.

On the 19th April, plaintiff sold to defendants sixty shares in the N. Bank, to be delivered and paid for on Thursday, April 26th. The sold note was as follows:

Calcutta, 19th April, 1866.

BABOO LALL MOHUN MULLICK.

Sold by your order, and on your account, to Messrs. Peary Chand Mittra and Sons (Metcalfe Hall) sixty shares in the N. Bank at rupees four premium per share.

(Signed) SREE COOMAR SIRCAR, Broker.

The bought note exactly corresponded.

On the 23rd April, plaintiff received from defendants the following:

From Peary Chand Mittra and Sons, to Baboo Lall Mohun Mullick.

With reference to the sixty N. Bank shares sold by you, we shall thank you to send us three transfer deeds on Friday next, viz., two for twenty-five shares each, and one for ten shares.

(Signed) PEARV CHAND MITTRA AND SONS.

On the 26th April, plaintiff sent to defendants sixty N. Bank shares, some standing in the name of H., and some in the name of P., accompanied by transfers, all executed by P. alone. These shares were all returned by the defendants, with the following memorandum:

From Peary Chand Mittra and Sons, to Baboo Lall Mohun Mullick.

Calculta, 26th April, 1866.

The accompanying shares in the N. Bank purchased for delivery to-day are not in order.

(Signed) PEARY CHAND MITTRA AND SONS.

Later in the same day, the 26th, plaintiff took personally to defendants the same sixty shares with transfers, executed some by H. and some by P., the name of the transferor corresponding number by number with the name in the shares. On this, as on the previous occasion, the name of the transferee was left blank. These shares were also rejected by the defendants as not in order. Plaintiff then, on April 27th, about 1 P.M., had the shares registered in his own name, and, within two hours afterwards, sent them to the defendants with corresponding transfers, and with the following letter:

To Messrs. Peary Chand Mittra and Sons.

Dear Sirs,—In compliance with request in your memorandum of the 23rd instant, I now send you the sixty shares N. Bank, with three transfer deeds, and will feel obliged by your paying the amount to the bearer.

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) LALL MOHUN MULLICK. Calcutta, 27th April, 1866.

The defendants declined to receive the shares, and they were re-sold at a loss.

The plaintiff never had any personal interest whatever in the shares, either on the 26th or 27th April, and was a mere nominee holder for H. and P.

The articles of association of the N. Bank required transfers to be in the form F. appended to Act XIX of 1857. The transfers tendered by plaintiff were on each occasion in that form.

The above facts were found by the First Judge of the Small Cause Court in Calcutta, who referred the case for the opinion of the High Court, under Act XXVI of 1864, Section 7.

He also stated that the defendant swore that the "Friday, the 27th April, mentioned in their memorandum of the 23rd April, was inserted by accident, instead of Thursday," the 26th April, and that they consequently rejected the tender on the 27th.

Held, 1, that the contract as it stood on the bought and sold notes was a contract by the vendor (as in Stephen v. De Medina) that "in consideration of such a sum, I will execute any proper conveyance which you tender me."

2. That the memorandum of April 23rd, coupled with the fact of the vendor having made tenders of transfers of the shares, was evidence enough to show that the vendor bound himself to tender a proper conveyance to his vendees.

3. That the document of conveyance must be complete at the time of tender, or capable of being then made complete.

4. The transfers, with a blank for the name of the transferee, were incomplete and insufficient, the vendor showing no authority from H. and P.

5. That the Court below must deal with the question of fact, whether or not the mention of Friday, the 27th, instead of Thursday, the 26th, was a mistake, and, remedied, that, if the defendants had received the blank transfers, and acted upon them, the waiver would have rendered them complete. Lall Mohun Mullick v. Peary C/m/m' i'llz'tterand others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 383.

_Held_ that a contract to deliver shares in a public company is sufficiently performed when the vendor places the vendee in such a position as enables him to become the legal owner of them.

A share in a company signifies a definite portion of its capital, and does not necessarily mean the right of a person whose name is then actually on a register of shareholders. Parbhudas Pranjvana'a: v All India, 2 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 79.

In a suit to recover damages for the non-acceptance of shares, where the vendor had contracted to execute proper transfers and to do all other things necessary on his part to transfer the shares, and to bear the expense of such transfer,—_Held_ on the issue whether the plaintiff was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract, that it was sufficient to show that he had in his possession at the time fixed for the performance of the contract on his part such certificates of the shares contracted to be sold as were required by the law, and that he tendered the same with a deed of transfer to the purchaser, to effect the transfer; but that it was the duty of the purchaser himself, in such case, having accepted the shares, to have the transfer made into his name in the books of the company.

The finding of the Court below on the first issue being therefore reversed, the suit was remanded for trial of the issue whether the contract was a wagering one, the Judge having omitted to determine that, and the defendant not having given the evidence upon it, in consequence of the first issue being found for him on the evidence given by the plaintiff. Maganbhai Hemchand v. Manchabhai Kallianchand, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 79.

In an action by A. against B. for damages for non-acceptance of shares by B. alleged to have been bought by him of A., it was shown that the shares were bought by C., who after the purchase entered into an arrangement with B. that the purchase should be on their (B. and C.'s) joint account. _Held_ there was no contract between A. and B., and the suit was dismissed. Barrow v. Stewart, 1 Ind. Jur., 226.

Shares in the National Bank were sold by the allottee, and a transfer in the form required by the articles of association of the bank was executed, but no name was inserted as transferee. The purchaser pledged them with the I. P. L. and China Bank, and deposited with them the blank transfer. This produced a letter from the pledgor, to register their lien, and on its refusal sold the shares to the plaintiff and delivered to him the transfer, also in blank. The plaintiff inserted his own name in the transfer, and requested the National Bank to register the shares in his name.

In an action against the National Bank to recover the price of the shares,—_Held_ that they were justified in refusing to register. _Held_ also that the plaintiff, having received back from his vendors the price of his shares, had no cause of action. Knowles v. The National Bank of India, 2 B. L. R., O. C., 158.

Plaintiffs contracted with B. to sell him three numbered shares to be transferred upon payment of the price on or before a certain day.

_Held_ that the covenants to transfer and to pay the price are concurrent; and that the ability of A. to constitute B. the legal owner of the shares contracted to be sold together with willingness to do so, amounts to "readiness and willingness" on the part of A. to fulfil his part of the contract. Imperial Banking and Trading Co. v. Almura Madhavji, 2 Bom. Rep., 260.

Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to sell him 250 shares in the Alliance Financial Corporation, and 10 shares in the Mazagan Reclamation Co., the purchase should be on their (B. and C.'s) joint account. Held there was no contract between A. and B., and the suit was dismissed. Stewart, 1 Ind. Jun, 226.

Plaintiffs contracted with defendants to sell them two hundred shares, on payment of the price by defendants on or before the 1st of July, 1865. Plaintiffs were in possession of the shares at the time of the contract, and continued so until they sold them after default made by defendants, and they were registered as holders of them. Plaintiffs, on the 1st July, when the share certificates with transfer deeds in blank were tendered to defendants, who
A liquidator having been appointed, the E. B. Company, receiving in part pay which was a company registered under Act XIX of a joint-stock company formed after the passage of 1,000 fully paid-up shares of the company, Prorunna Coamar Banner/ks, I Ind. Jur., O. S. 112.

2.—Shareholders and Contributories.

A. and B., proprietors of indigo factories, sold to the E. B. Company, receiving in part payment 1,000 fully paid-up shares of the company, which was a company registered under Act XIX of 1857, A. and B. covenantee to indemnify the company from all loss, and to guarantee a dividend of 8 per cent. for the term of two years. A., being indebted to C., deposited the shares with him as a security for the debt. C. gave notice of this to the company before he made the advance to A., and the company assented to the deposit. Held that C. was entitled to have the deposit of the shares registered in the books of the company, and to be paid dividends upon them. The deposits by A. was accompanied by a contract with a power of sale of the shares, but nothing was said about receiving the dividend.—Held that under this contract of A., C. could not receive the dividend, though he could under a contemporaneous general power of attorney from A. and directed each of them to pay the amount appearing against his name.

Held that this was a suit by the official liquidator to have appellants declared contributories, and an appeal therefore lies from the Recorder's decision so declaring them.

Held that the liability, under Sections 6, 11, 18, 22, 36, and 37 of a registered shareholder, as member of a company, to contribute is a prind-facce liability only; it being open to him to show that although his name is on the register yet he did not agree to become a member; and that, as appellants were not cognizant of (much less did they assent to) the registration of their names as shareholders, whilst they refused to receive any shares or pay up any calls or deposits, the sole step taken by them of joining others in putting forth the prospectus and affixing their names therein to a certain number of shares cannot be said to be an agreement to become members of the company, and so they are not contributories. James Cotton v. The Pegu Saw Mills Company, 9 W. R., 539.

The register of shareholders required by Section 14 of Act XIX of 1857 may consist of particulars entered in different books, which taken together substantially contain all the information which the Act requires.

If there is a substantial compliance with the requirements of the Act the register is not invalidated by reason of slight deviations from its directions or by unimportant omissions or defects in particulars of information specified in Section 14.

If the certificate of registration be not forthcoming, the fact of incorporation may be proved aliounde. In re Alliance Financial Corporation Balney's case, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 139.

Where shares in the East Indian Railway Company belonging to an execution-debtor who had absconded with the share certificates, were sold in execution, the transfer being executed by a Judge under the provisions of Act VIII of 1859, Section 267, a writ of mandamus was directed to issue out of the Court, ordering the company to register the transfer of such shares, and to issue fresh share certificates in respect of them. Queen v. The East Indian Railway Co., Bourke's Rep., O. C., 395.

In June, 1865, was projected the Pegu Saw Mills Company, Limited, appellants being amongst the projectors, and having signed the prospectus, and entered their names in a list (attached to the prospectus) of intending shareholders, each to a specified extent. Their names were also entered as such shareholders in the registration of the company under Act X of 1866. In January, 1867, certain contributories (amongst whom appellants were not) and certain creditors applied to the Recorder of Rangoon, under Clauses 4 and 5, Section 101, to have the company wound up, and an official liquidator appointed. A liquidator having been appointed, he applied to the Court to call upon each of the contributories, named in a list which he presented, to pay up his contribution. Accordingly the Recorder declared the appellants to be contributories, and directed each of them to pay the amount appearing against his name.

Held that this was a suit by the official liquidator to have appellants declared contributories, and an appeal therefore lies from the Recorder's decision so declaring them.

bound to grant him, under the circumstances, new share certificates. Reg. on the prosecution of Toolsee Dass Nundy v. East Indian Railway Company, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 258.

Defendant applied for 100 shares in a company, and on their being allotted to him paid Rs. 1,000 in deposit. His name was placed upon the register of shareholders, but he refused to sign the articles of association. Held that he was not liable as a shareholder. The Gossery Cotton Mills Co. v. James Stoy, 2 Hyde's Rep., 236.

J. S. allotted 25 shares in a company registered under Act XIX of 1857, signed the memorandum and articles of association, and paid the first call on the 28th September, 1863, on which he sold the 25 shares to B. P., the chairman of the company. The purchase by B. P. was made in pursuance of an agreement entered into between B. P. and P. H., another director of the company, and two other persons, who were members of the firm of B. B. and Co., and then managers of the company, which they accordingly jointly purchased, and subsequently divided among themselves; B. P. taking for himself two-fifths of the whole, including the 25 shares of J. S. The fact of the joint purchase was not communicated to the other directors of the company, nor was there any evidence to show that their attention had been called to certain entries in the books of the company relating to B. P. having paid the second call on his two-fifths of the joint purchase. J. S. got no notice to pay the second call, and never applied for or obtained a certificate for the 25 shares; but such a certificate was obtained by B. P. on the 10th of October, 1864, certifying that J. S. was the shareholder. J. S. had signed a blank form of transfer and a blank form of request to the official liquidator, and the names of B. P.'s share certificates were transferred to his name on the register, nor was the sale to him ever brought to the notice of the directors as a board, or to any of his partners, of any portion of the 2,800 shares; and the articles of association required the consent in writing of the directors to every transfer.

On application by J. S. that his name should be removed from the list of contributories as framed by the official liquidator, and the names of B. P.'s trustees under Act XXVII of 1865 substituted in respect of the 25 shares,—Held that J. S. was not exonerated, under the circumstances, from the duty of obeying the articles of association and the provision of Act XIX of 1857; that the act of an individual director in his private capacity ought not to bind the board, which had never authorized or ratified his conduct; and that the official liquidator, as representing the body of shareholders, rightly insisted upon keeping J. S.'s name on the list of shareholders. In re East Indian and Banking Company. Jamnadar Savarkal's case, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 113.

A company registered under Act XIX of 1857, and enabled by its memorandum of association to purchase its own shares, purchased seven thousand of them which were in scrip, share certificates having never been issued in respect of them. The letters of allotment indorsed by the allottees and receipts for the first call were made over, at the time of purchase, to the company. No transfers, however, were executed by the allottees, nor were the shares registered by the company in their own name, but they continued to stand in the names of the allottees. Two thousand of the seven thousand shares had been re-sold by the company; and the remaining five thousand were mentioned in a list, kept by the company, of shares purchased by them.

On application to the allottees to have their names removed from the list of contributories, as framed by the official liquidator,—Held that the company, through its directors, having given the act of purchase as by their subsequent conduct, treated themselves as the owners of the shares, could not be permitted to take advantage of their own neglect, or that of their officers, in not registering the shares in the name of the company, and that the name of the company therefore be substituted as holders of the shares. Mercantile Credit and Financial Association. In re ex-parte Dahie and others, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 125.

A member of a duly registered company whose shares have been forfeited is as much a past member as a member whose shares have been surrendered or transferred, but he is not liable to be placed on the list of contributories until it is established that the existing members are unable to satisfy the contributions required to be made by them, in pursuance of the Indian Companies' Act, and that the debts, in respect of which he is called upon to contribute, were incurred prior to the date on which he ceased to be a member of the company. In re the Allahabad Trading Company, Limited, 6 N. W. R., 101.

In January, 1865, the plaintiffs purchased from the defendants 2,000 shares in the defendants' company at 15 per cent. premium, for which they paid in cash Rs. 3,20,000, and the defendants simultaneously agreed to repurchase for future delivery and payment at a fixed time in July, the same 2,000 shares at 291 per cent. premium. The contracts for the repurchase were signed by three directors of the defendants' company, and on each was a memorandum, initialled by two of them, referring to a list of the "Share Receipts," and signed and delivered by them with the words "we are duly to examine and receive the same at the fixed time." The allotments were made under the provisions of Act XXVIII of 1865, and for the purpose of the bills of exchange, and notices of forfeiture for non-payment of the call were sent by post. The original holders of the 190 letters of allotment were included in the list, but no notice was sent to the plaintiffs. On the 27th of May all shares upon which the second call was not paid were declared to be forfeited for the benefit of the company. The defendants' company, as stated in the memorandum of association, was established among other subjects for the purchase and sale of debentures, stocks, shares of joint-stock companies (including the shares of this company), and other securities, the making loans and advances on such securities as the directors of the company may think fit.

Held that the contracts for the purchase of the 2,000 shares being within the scope of the authority of the directors, the defendants were bound by them; that the defendants were bound to treat the plaintiffs as the holders of those shares, and to give them the notice required by the articles of association; and that they were not at liberty to give that notice to the original allottees, who, by the admission of the defendants, testified by the acts of their agents in making the contracts, had parted with their shares; that the shares were, consequently, not legally forfeited, and having refused to accept them, and being then unsaleable, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the full price as damages. Oriental Financial Association v. Mercantile Credit and Financial Association, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 1.

In a suit brought by a joint-stock company, in liquidation against a former director of the company for Rs. 27,30,000 on a promissory note, dated the 1st of March, and purporting to be paid on demand; but with the words in pencil "due 4th June" put on it, the same day it was signed in accordance with an understanding between the defendant and the other directors that they would not press him for payment before the latter date, and signed by the defendant some days after the day it bore date.

Held that a one-anna stamp was not sufficient, under Schedule A, Clause 10 of Act X of 1862. And on the plaint being amended by claiming for the price of shares bargained and sold to the defendant, but not accepted by him, and for money found to be due on an account stated.

Held that the plaintiffs could not recover, 1st, because no shares were really bargained and sold, as the plaint alleged; and what was done was, according to the intention and understanding of the parties, a mere form gone through, for the purpose of deceiving the public, and making it appear that 10,000 shares had been sold at a certain price; and, 2ndly, because the contracts were made for the purpose of defrauding other persons.

Held also that the 9th clause of the articles of association (providing that the existing shareholders for the time being should have the option of taking and subscribing for the shares in the additional capital, rateably and in proportion to their respective shares in the existing capital of the company) being imperative, and not merely directory, a deviation from it could not be made, unless with the assent of every shareholder. 3.—Powers and Liabilities of Directors.

A. and M., at the request of B., agreed to get up a company which should purchase of B. the goodwill, stock, and furniture of Spence's Hotel, and all outstandings due to B., for four lakhs of rupees. The scheme was made public, and shares were applied for in excess of the intended capital. On the 1st May, 1863, the memorandum of association was registered, signed inter alios by A. and M. On the same day the prospectus was issued, which stated inter alios that "the company have purchased from the former proprietor for the sum of Rs. 4,00,000 the entire stock of hotel and shop, together with the outstandings on the 30th April, 1863, the latter amounting to about Rs. 50,000. The dividend of 10 per cent. is guaranteed to the shareholders." The prospectus was signed by A. and M. and another as directors, but the last took no active part. On the same day an agreement was signed by B., whereby he agreed, in consideration of Rs. 4,00,000 paid by A. and M., as therein mentioned, part, viz., Rs. 1,50,000, in paid-up shares in the company, to transfer to them, or Spence's Hotel Company Limited, the goodwill, furniture, outstandings, &c. The articles of association were dated 7th September, 1863, and signed M., with two others, formed the first board of directors. These directors, at an extraordinary meeting held on August 1st, presented a report which was adopted by the meeting, in which they said B. had deposited with M. and A. security sufficient to insure the payment of 10 per cent. dividend guaranteed by him to the company. On the 5th of December, 1865, a deed (E.) was executed, with the approval of the company's solicitors, by B. on the one part and A. and M. on the other, which, after reciting that as security for the guarantee of 10 per cent. dividend, B. had deposited with A. and M. 400 fully paid-up shares in the company, witnessed that B. would pay to A. and M. such sums as should be necessary to make up and pay half-yearly a dividend of 10 per cent. per annum; and that he constituted A. and M., his attorneys, to sell the 400 shares, and out of the proceeds to make good the yearly dividend of 10 per cent. and, after such payment towards the guaranteed dividend to hold the remaining shares or balance of money in trust for B. absolutely. On the same day another deed (F.) prepared by A.'s private solicitor, was executed by B. on the one part and A. and M. on the other part, which, after reciting an agreement by B. with A. and M. in April that, if they would assist him in forming such company for the purchase of Spence's Hotel, &c. (which company they had, in fact, formed at the time of the execution of the deed), "he, B., would pay or secure to A. and M. such fitting and proper remuneration for their trouble and risk as might be ultimately arranged;" and after reciting deed (E.) &c., witnessed that B. covenanted with A. and M. that, notwithstanding the trust contained in the before-mentioned indenture (deed E.) whereby the surplus mentioned was declared to belong to B. absolutely, the same surplus should belong to and be the exclusive property of A. and M. in equal shares; and that, if the net profits of the hotel should be insufficient to pay the whole 10 per cent., then the whole of the 400 shares deposited with A. and M. should be retained by them for their own benefit in equal shares. This deed was not disclosed by A. and M. until the filing of their written statement in the present suit. There was no actual deposit of the 400 shares by B., but A. and M. respectively took 200 shares in their own names. Rs. 10,947-9-6 were paid by A. and M., to make up the deficit in the guaranteed dividend to December, 1864. B., on the 5th December, 1863, also executed a further deed (D.) in which, after reciting that the outstanding debts of the hotel should realize before 1st May, 1865, Rs. 50,000 at least, and that he had deposited with the company 50 paid-up shares as security for this guarantee, he, B., covenanted to pay any deficit, and appointed the company his attorneys to realize these shares, and out of the proceeds to pay themselves the deficit, and subject to this to hold the shares or the proceeds in trust for B., fifty shares were received from B. by A., under the trusts of this deed. The outstandings fell short of the guaranteed amount by Rs. 19,255. Held (affirming the decision of Phear, J.) that the suit was rightly brought by the company as plaintiffs. That A. and M. were the agents of the company to effect the purchase, and as such were bound to make for the company the best bargain which they reasonably could, and forbidden to obtain personal benefit or profit.

That A. and M. were trustees of the 400 shares for the benefit of the company, and jointly and severally responsible to make them good; and whatever benefit they took under the secret deed they must make good to the company. A. to be responsible for the 50 shares (but in this respect, nothing to show that he had not been duly ap

4.—Powers and Liabilities of Companies.

Where the articles of association of a limited company stated that the object for which the company was established was for the purchase of the business of an hotel-keeper, confectioner, and provisioner, the future working and carrying on of the said business, and the doing of all such other things as were incidental or conducive to the attainments of the above objects, it was held that the directors had powers to bind the company by the issue of negotiable securities in the ordinary course of business.

Where a note which had been taken by the company as a security from two judgment-debtors of the company was endorsed by the company to a third party, and discounted by him, and was on the due date, not having been taken up by the makers, renewed by the company,—Held that such negotiation of the note by the company was within the ordinary course of the business of the company.

Also held upon the facts that the power of the company to issue negotiable securities was well exercised, and that the company had due notice of dishonour by the makers. Chooniall Seal v. Spence’s Hotel Company, Limited, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 14.

R. G., on the faith of statements in the prospectus of a company, was induced to apply for fifty shares in the company, which were allotted to him, and he paid the deposit money thereon. At the time of issuing the prospectus there were no other members of the company besides the directors. Some of the material statements in the prospectus were untrue to the knowledge of the directors. The prospectus, which was published on the 23rd June, 1865, contained the following statements: “Capital, fifty lakhs of Rs. in 10,000 shares of Rs. 500 each, with power to increase. Rs. 50 per share to be paid on application, and the balance by calls of Rs. 100 each, to be made within not less than three months of each other. The first call will not be made within less than three months after the closing of the share list. Of these 10,000 shares, 6,000 will be reserved for England, but the operations of the company will not be delayed until they can be sent home and taken up.”

On 18th July, 1865, the company advertised that “all the Indian shares being subscribed for, the share list is now closed, and the letters of allotment will be issued at an early date.”

In truth, not half the number of “Indian shares” were at any time subscribed for.

On the 22nd November, 1865, the directors resolved that “a call of Rs. 100 per share be made upon the shareholders, payable at the National Bank of India on the 15th December proximo.” R. G. received notice of the call, but did not pay it. On 18th April, 1866, the directors desired the secretary to write to shareholders who had not paid their first call in full, asking them to do so at once. R. G., who had not signed the articles of association, on receipt of notice from the secretary, requested to be allowed to withdraw his money, forfeiting one-fifth, or to be allowed to hold five shares instead of fifty. The request was refused by the directors, who on 18th July, 1866, passed a further resolution that the defaulters, among whom R. G. was named, “have notice sent them that unless the amount of the calls due on their respective shares, together with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the 15th December, 1865, be paid into the National Bank of India, Calcutta, on or before the 7th August, 1866, legal proceedings will be adopted against them for the recovery without further notice.” R. G., on receiving notice of this resolution, wrote, through his attorneys, informing the directors that he would apply to the High Court to have his name removed from the register of shareholders. The directors thereupon declared the shares to be forfeited by 21st September, 1866, and resolution to wind up the company voluntarily was passed at a general meeting of the shareholders, and was afterwards confirmed. In the course of the winding-up the liquidator applied to the Court, under Section 154, Act X of 1866, to determine whether R. G. was entitled to a refund of the deposit money paid by him on the fifty shares allotted to him in the company, or whether he was liable to pay, as a contributory, the call in respect of his shares made before the shares were forfeited. It was not until the hearing of this application that R. G. became aware of the facts which proved that the directors had published material statements which they knew to be untrue.

Held that the issuing of a prospectus is an act comprised within the term "management and conduct of the company's business." The statements made in the prospectus were the representations of the company. R. G. was entitled to have his contract to take 50 shares set aside, and to be repaid the amount of his deposit money. In a suit filed on the 28th of April, 1866, and brought by a joint stock company, after registration, to recover damages for breach of a contract made with the defendants before registration,—Held (by Couch, C. The purchasers by the directors of a joint-stock company, on behalf of the company, of shares in other joint-stock companies, unless expressly authorized by the memorandum of association, is ultra vires.

A joint-stock company, even though it be empowered by its memorandum of association to deal in the shares of other companies, is not thereby empowered to deal in its own shares, and a purchase by the directors of the company of its own shares, on behalf of the company, is therefore, under such circumstances, ultra vires.

A sharer in a joint-stock company can maintain an action against the directors of such company to compel them to restore to the company funds of the company that have by them been employed in transactions that the directors have no authority to enter into, without making the company a party to the suit.

Where a shareholder purchased shares in a joint-stock company, knowing at the time that similar companies were in the habit of dealing in their own shares and those of other companies, and believing that the company in question adopted the same practice, but made no enquiry to ascertain whether or not such was the case, nor made any objections to such dealings of the company until it was discovered they had resulted in loss, it was held that he had, by his own conduct, lost his right to hold the directors personally liable in respect of the loss, and that the result was held to be the same whether the said shareholder was beneficially entitled to his shares, or merely a trustee of them for others. A company was formed with the following objects, as stated in the memorandum of association, viz., "of securing valuable property in the new port and town of C. and its immediate vicinity; and of improving the property so acquired by building upon, letting, or selling it as may be deemed most advisable; and of undertaking the construction of public works calculated to facilitate trade, and also of constructing tramways, roads, docks, wharves, and jetties upon the land so to be acquired; and for all other purposes that may be essential or conducive to the attainment of or connected with the above objects." After the establishment of the company the directors were induced to take a share in and become liable for the cost of a mill for husking rice, which it was induced to establish by a separate company; and a considerable sum was advanced out of the funds of the company for the building of the mill and for machinery, &c.

The undertaking failed, and the directors, to avoid losing the advances of the company, resolved to take over the mill, and carry it on as the property of the company. They accordingly purchased a large quantity of rice, which was husked at the mill, and consigned to several firms in England. P. M. and Co. realizing the proceeds for the benefit of the company.

The rice was sold in England at a considerable loss, and re-drafts for the deficiency were drawn on P. M. and Co. or on the company. The company would pay at maturity any re-drafts which might be drawn on P. M. and Co. as their town agents in respect of the shipments. Bills of exchange were drawn by P. M. and Co. on the firms to which the respective consignments were made, and these bills were sold in the ordinary course of business in Calcutta, P. M. and Co. realizing the proceeds for the benefit of the company. These bills were honoured by the respective consignees. The rice was sold in England at a considerable loss, and re-drafts for the deficiency were drawn on P. M. and Co. or on the company. The company went into liquidation during these transactions. Some of these re-drafts had been accepted by the company, and others merely registered by the liquidators as claims against the company. Claims were now made on the company by the drawers or endorsers of these re-drafts, but the liquidators declined to pay them, stating that the proceedings, in connection with the consignments of rice, were not authorized by the memorandum and articles of association of the company, and that therefore the company was not liable for any losses.
in respect of such consignments. Held that trading in rice was a transaction ultra vires of the company; the directors therefore could not bind the company, and the consignees could not recover in respect of the shipment.

The company was not liable on the redrafts; it had no power to issue bills of exchange or to accept the redrafts, and therefore the holders of those which had been in fact accepted were in no better position than the holders of those which had not been accepted. In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act, 1866, and of the Port Canning Land Investment Reclamation and Dock Company, Ltd., 7 B. L. R., 583.

The provision of law (Section 30, Act IV of 1862) which forbids the Bank of Bengal making a loan or advance on the security of immovable property, is not intended merely to regulate its affairs as amongst shareholders and directors: it is not ultra vires for the bank to take the security of immovable property as a protection against loss for a debt already incurred and due. A written authority given to the bank by a debtor to sell his immovable property of which the title-deeds are in deposit with it, and to apply the proceeds towards payment of his liabilities, creates an equitable lien under that property, even if the circumstances under which the deposit was originally made rendered the transactions ultra vires of the bank. Ebrahim Assem v. W. D. Cruickshank, Agent of Rangoon Bank, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 203.

5.—PROCEEDINGS IN WINDING UP.

Where a company is being wound up under Act XIX of 1857, and its assets are collected and distributed under the 73rd Section of that Act, all creditors take pro rata. In the matter of Act XIX of 1857 and the Ganges Steam Navigation Company, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 394.

A bank was registered at Bombay only as an unlimited company under Act XIX of 1857, and carried on business at Bombay and Calcutta. At a meeting held before Act X of 1866 came into force, it was resolved that the company be wound up voluntarily under Act XIX of 1857, which resolution was confirmed after Act X of 1866 came into operation, and more than a month after the original resolution. Held that these resolutions were informal; that the company was not winding up under either Act; and that an action against it by a creditor could not be stayed.

Semble.—That an action will not be stayed against a company which is being wound up voluntarily under Act X of 1866. And held that a company registered at Bombay only as before mentioned cannot be wound up by the High Court in Calcutta. In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act, 1866, and the East India Bank, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 330.

The holder of fully paid-up shares may apply for the winding-up of a company as a contributory under the 104th Section of Act X of 1866.

The Court will not be satisfied with the bare statement of a director that a company is unable to pay its debts so as to grant a winding-up order. In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act, 1866, and the Sylhet and Cachar Tea Company, Limited, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 94.

Where a Steam Tug Company was being wound up under the Indian Companies' Act, 1866, it being admitted that the vessels were in the habit of going to sea,—Held that the captains and crews were entitled to rank preferentially, and to be paid their wages in full, in priority to the claims of other creditors.

Semble.—They would be similarly entitled if the vessels plying actually on the open sea or not. Held also that, in the absence of any contract or custom to the contrary, the captains and crews were monthly servants of the company, and were entitled to be paid only for the month in which they were dismissed. Held also that servants of companies generally had no right to prove in preference to other creditors, or to be paid in full, or in priority to them. But where A. by his contract was to be paid Rs. 1,000 on any breach of its terms,—Held that he was entitled to prove for Rs. 1,000. In re The Indian Companies' Act, 1866, and of the Calcutta Steam Tug Association, Limited, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 17.

In an application, under Section 288 of the Civil Procedure Code, to execute an order of a District Court for the winding-up of a company by staying suits which had been filed against the company in the High Court,—Held, first, that the order can take effect only from the time when it is filed in the Court to which it shall have been transmitted for the purpose of being executed, and that suits can only be stayed from that time; secondly, that where the decree in a suit has already been actually executed by the attachment of property of the defendants, although the sum decreed may not have been realized by a sale, there is no longer a suit or action to be stayed within the meaning of Section 72 of Act XIX of 1859. Narayan Shanjee v. Gujrat Trading Company, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 20.

In an application by a creditor of a company to have it wound up under the superintendence of the Court, the Court will always be in favour of making an order for its being so wound up. The petitioning creditor is entitled to his costs as a first charge on the assets of the company, subject to any prior liens on the estate. In re the Nabor Habi Tea Company, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 11.

Where a company was being wound up by the Court of Chancery in England all action brought against it in this country was ordered to be stayed. Peltz v. The Commercial Banking Corporation, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 363.

Under Section 174 of the Indian Companies' Act, the Court has power to sanction compromises of calls, debts, and liabilities before the list of contributories has been settled, or the competence of the shareholders has been ascertained.

The Privy Council will be reluctant to interfere with the discretion of Courts having jurisdiction to sanction a compromise by the liquidators of a company winding up under Section 174 of the Indian Companies' Act, where all the facts have been placed before the Court in India, and there is no reason to suppose that the proceedings for a compromise have been tainted with fraud. Bank of Hindustan, China, and Japan v. The Eastern Financial Association, 3 B. L. R., F. C., 8.

Where leave had been given to certain creditors to proceed in a suit against a company for advances, while proceedings for the winding-up of the company were pending, but before winding-up order had been made,—Held that the leave to proceed to execution was not necessarily affected by the winding-up order. In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act, 1866, and the Sylhet and Cachar
Tea Company, Limited, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 123.

A. had been engaged as assistant to a company for three years under articles of agreement, which contained no provision for his dismissal, except in case of A.'s failure to perform his covenants or for misconduct. Before the expiration of the three years the company was ordered to be wound up under the Indian Companies' Act, 1866. At or about the time of filing the petition to wind-up notice had been given to A. that his services were no longer required. Since then A. had been unable, though he had done his best, to obtain service elsewhere. A.'s period of contract had since expired. B. also had been similarly engaged, but had received no such notice, and was still continuing in the company's service. His period of contract had not yet expired. In a proceeding in proof of claims of creditors against the company,—Held that A. was entitled to his salary to the end of the period of three years B. was also required to pay advances. In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act, 1866, and the Sylhet and Cachar

Leave given to the provisional liquidator to advance money for the purpose of carrying on a certain indigo plantation mortgaged to a joint-stock bank, which was being wound up under the supervision of the Court.

A joint-stock banking company, established by deed and Royal Charter in England, under the provisions of the English Joint-Stock Companies' Act of 7 and 8 Vict., with agencies in different parts of the world, was registered under the Indian Companies' Act of 1862 (25 and 26 Vic., c. 89), but not under any Indian Act, having its principal place of business in London, though having a principal branch in Calcutta to which the other branches in India are subordinate, is not such a company as can be wound up as an "unregistered company," under the provisions of the Indian Companies' Act of 1866 (Act X of 1866), but should be wound up by the Court of Chancery, and an order of the Court of Chancery under the English Act of 1862, winding up the company in England, has the effect of winding up all branches of the company in India and elsewhere. Where it was shown that the bank was first mortgagee of certain indigo concerns, and had advanced money to the planter for the purpose of carrying on the cultivation and manufacture up to the time of the winding up, and it was still necessary that further sums should be advanced for the completion of the cultivation and manufacture; and that under the circumstances it would be clearly for the benefit of the creditors that such advances should be made,— Held that the provisional liquidator, supposing the winding-up of the bank and his appointment by the Court in India had not been _ultra vires_, would have been authorized by the Court to make the required advances. In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act, 1866, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 335.

A suit may be brought in the Courts in India against a company that is being wound up under "The Companies' Act, 1865," without the leave of the Court of Chancery being first obtained.

_Semble.—_The High Court will, in the exercise of its general power, stay the proceedings in a suit against such a company where the circumstances are such as to render it proper to do so. _Bank of Hindostan, China, and Japan v. Premchanda Rai-chand_, 5 Bom. Rep., O. C., 83.

On 25th October, 1870, a petition for the winding-up of the B. T. E. Company of Assam was presented to the Court of Chancery in England, by one of the shareholders of the company, and a provisional liquidator was appointed. On 5th November, at an extraordinary meeting of the company, it was resolved that the company should be wound up, and liquidators were appointed. On 12th November the petition for winding-up came on for hearing, and an order was made that the voluntary winding-up should continue subject to the supervision of the Court. On 18th November, by deed under hands and seals of the liquidators,
M. was appointed their attorney in India. On 27th October certain immovable properties in Assam belonging to the company were attached in execution of decrees in certain suits in the Court of the Moonsiff of Debghur. On 9th December the properties were put up for sale, and purchased at prices which it was alleged were considerably under their value. Applications were made in the Moonsiff's Court at Debghur by the purchasers for confirmation of the sales, which applications were opposed by M., and, pending the Moonsiff's decision, an application was made to the Deputy Commissioner of Luckhimore for an order to stay all proceedings in the decree-suits on the ground of the order for winding-up the company of 12th November, which application was refused by the Deputy Commissioner on 18th February, 1871. The Moonsiff made an order confirming the sales. M. thereupon petitioned the High Court for the removal of the suits from Assam to the High Court, to be tried in its extraordinary original civil jurisdiction, on the ground that no appeal would lie against the order of 15th February refusing to stay the proceedings in the suits; and that if an appeal should be preferred to the Deputy Commissioner from the order of the Moonsiff confirming the sales his decision would be final. The application was opposed on behalf of the purchasers. _Held_, the Moonsiff not having had notice of the winding-up order of 12th November, had power to sell the property on 9th December, and the sale having actually taken place, and there being nothing to show that there was any irregularity in the proceedings, the High Court would have no power if the cases were brought to set aside the sale. This, therefore, was not a proper case for the exercise of the power which the High Court possesses under Clause 13 of the Letters Patent. In the matter of certain Decree Suits of the year 1870, in the Court of the Moonsiff of Debghur, &c., &c., 7 B. L. R., 5.
I.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Mere laches, or indirect acquiescence short of the period prescribed by the Statute of Limitations, is no bar to the enforcement of a right absolute vested in the plaintiff at the time of suit.

Semble.—The doctrine of acquiescence or laches will apply only to cases, if such there are, in which they can be regarded as a positive extinguishment of right. When they go merely to the remedy, the Courts have no power arbitrarily to substitute an extinguishing prescription different to that determined by the Legislature. Peddamuthudaty and others v. N. Timma Peddy, 2 Mad. Rep., 270.

The equitable doctrine of laches and acquiescence does not apply to suits for which a period of limitation is provided by the Limitation Act. Rama Ran v. Raj Ran and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 114.

There is no such doctrine as that acquiescence is a binding presumption of law after the lapse of several years. Chellaperumidi Pillai, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 135.

Sixty years possession is a bar under Clause 3, Section 3, Regulation 11 of 1805, not only to past arrears of rent, but to future assessment of rent. James Erskine v. The Government and Manick Singh and others, 8 W. R., 232.

The Government of India, taking upon themselves to pay debts due against the estate of the ex-King of Delhi out of the assets of the estate of the ex-King, are entitled to avail themselves of the Statute of Limitations in a suit brought against the estate; but if a suit could justly, and in equity and conscience, be substantiated against the ex-King, it ought to be allowed before the Government officers, irrespective of technical difficulties which might have attended legal proceedings against the King.

Where plaintiff sues to establish proprietary right as against a mutwal, it is necessary for him to prove that he has been in actual possession within twelve years. Protap Narain Mookerjee v. Kartick Chandra Mookerjee, 10 W. R., 192.

Parties claiming as heirs of property sold without their consent and held by the purchaser in adverse possession, are bound to appear and assert their title within the period prescribed by law. The mere fact that, by some proceedings of the settlement officers, they obtained a settlement of the estate, cannot give them a right which they have lost by limitation. Mowla Buksh Khan and others v. Khoskoram Pandey and others, 10 W. R., 249.

The rejection of a claim to attached property, simply on the ground that it had been presented too late, was held to be no legal bar to the adjudication of the claim when it was again advanced after attachment made under decree. A claim of this kind may be admitted even after proclamation of sale, provided it has not been designedly and unnecessarily delayed to obstruct the ends of justice. Mahomed Mubson v. Sumpute Sukhoon Chowdhry, 10 W. R., 305.

In a suit to set aside the sale of certain lands which had been attached and sold by a decree-holder as the property of his debtor, plaintiff brought his action against the decree-holder and a party whom he supposed to be the auction-purchaser. Subsequently, finding that his supposition had been erroneous, he applied to have the real purchaser made a party, and the heirs of the decree-holder (who had died) substituted as defendants. Held that the suit against the heirs was not barred by lapse of time, as it was originally brought within the period of limitation against the decree-holder, of whose death the plaintiff first learnt the news from the return made to the summons. Sree Kishen Chowdhry and others v. Ram Kisto Bhuttacharjee and others, 10 W. R., 317.

In a suit for possession by the purchaser of the right of a reversioner to the estate of a widow, which was instituted within one day of extreme time of twelve years allowed by the Law of Limitation, reckoning from the alleged date of the widow's death,—Held that it was necessary, under such circumstances, for the plaintiff, in order to rebut the plea of limitation, to prove, not only that the widow died on the date alleged, but that she actually held possession up to the time of her death. Kalee AVath Talookdar and another v. Joy Doorga Dossee and others, 11 W. R., 173.

In a suit for a portion of land granted in trust for purposes connected with the preservation of a Mahometan saint's tomb, where the plaintiff claimed as the son of the last mutawalle, on the allegation that the (plaintiff) had been dispossessed during his minority, the defendant's case being that the grant had never been in the possession of mutwallies, but had been divided among the original grantee's heirs, from one of whom the portion in dispute had come into the possession of the defendant's vendor,—Held that, on the question of limitation, it was for the Judge to find whether plaintiff's father had in possession within time. Reasut Ali v. J. Abbott and others, 12 W. R., 132.

In a suit that a party possession, where defendant pleaded limitation, and plaintiff proves that commencement of the possession of the party whose claim was as tenant, it is for those who set up the plea of limitation to show when the nature of that possession was changed and how it became adverse. Ramdhun Sat Nobin Chunder Chowdhry, 12 W. R., 250.

The Indian Law of Limitation as to realty makes no difference with regard to the limitation of time of Limitation to bar the remedy. Parakut Asse" v. Kavari Hengusu, 2 Mad. Rep., 36.

Where a plaintiff sues upon his jenud title, he previously instituted a suit in which he unsuccessfully set up his kánam right, the latter suit can avail to prevent the Statute of Limitations running against him. Parakut Asse" v. Edapally Chennen, 2 Mad. Rep., 266.

In a suit to recover, with mesne profits and other incidents, a jirayati village alleged by the plaintiff to form part of his zamindary, and to be wrong held by defendant by virtue of the execution of a decree of the late Commissioner of the North Sirkars passed in 1844, the defendant pleaded that he held on a permanent lease subject to a ground rent. Held that the lease was for a term which was not barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that the quit-rent had been received from him by the plaintiff.

Held that, as the defendant stated that the plaint had received kattubandif from him since 1857, plaintiff's claim to eject could not be disposed of absolutely on the ground that it was barred by the Act of 1857. Held also that, as the plaintiff pleading for the agency occurs, original agreement out of the Bebee v. Sheikh 31.

Vairichara Surya Narayana Raja Bahadur v. Nadiminti Bhagavat Patanjali Shastri, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 120.

Held that the operation of the Law of Limitation cannot be prevented by any act of the parties or arbitrators unless as provided by law, and a suit beyond time cannot be entertained by the Courts merely because the person entitled to assert the right was by some arrangement or negotiation prevented from asserting it within the statutory period. Jehandar Khan v. Mussamut Munnoo, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 248.

Held that the subsequent purchase of a judgment-debtor’s right and entry in the Collectorate record cannot affect the right of a prior purchaser or oblige him to bring a suit within one year from the date of the second purchase. Jaugroo Sahoo v. Jeydar Singh and others, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 231.

Where plaintiff obtained a decree, and alleged that possession was yielded to him by the party against whom decree was passed, and based his suit for possession on subsequent ejectment, — Held that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding the suit to be barred by lapse of time since the date of the decree without determining the alleged fact of possession and ejectment. Salig Ram v. Meher Lall and others, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 235.

One of four children set up a deed of gift and a will, in virtue of which he was, in 1842, placed, by a summary proceeding of the Courts, in possession of the whole estate left by his deceased father. The rights and interests of two other children were, subsequently, sold in execution of a decree for debt, and purchased by the present plaintiffs. A fourth child instituted a suit against the first-mentioned one, to set aside the deed of gift and will, the result of which was that, in 1855, the will which affected two-thirds of the estate was set aside as having been made without due consent of heirs, the consent alleged in the will being held to be no consent. The plaintiffs now sued to get possession of the shares of the two children whose rights and interests they had bought. Held, reversing the decision of the High Court, that the plaintiffs, as purchasers at an execution sale, were in no better position than claimants under any other conveyance or assignment, and whose cause of action arising in 1842 they were barred by limitation. Rajah Emnayet Hussein v. Gridhara Lall, 2 B. L. R., P. C., 75; S. C., 11 W. R., P. C., 29.

Possession under an erroneous order of a Magistrate does not constitute such bond-fide possession as will prevent the Law of Limitation from running.

It is not necessary that the Court below should expressly overrule a plea of limitation; it is sufficient if the Court disposes of the question of limitation by implication. Wise v. Romanath Sen.

When a person lets land under a kubuleet, and subsequently grants a purwannah, undertaking not to ask for rent till a certain contingency occurs, the purwannah will not alter the original agreement so far as to take a suit for rent out of the Statute of Limitations. Mussamut Beebe v. Sheikh Mahomed Chousi, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 31.

The Statute of Limitations is no answer to a suit to enter judgment on a warrant of attorney. Soojan Mull v. Hyder Singh Bahadour and another, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 58.

The defendant in an action of ejectment cannot claim the benefit of the Statute of Limitations upon a possession obtained by fraud, actual or constructive, unless the plaintiff have been guilty of such laches as to disentitle him to the interference of the Court. Heeratali Shaha and another v. Jadub Chunder Chenchey, Cor. Rep., 119.

Even where the validity of a lakheraj may be questionable, the lakherajdar may plead limitation on proof of his ancestors having been in possession before 1790. Munneah Lall v. Multessur Banerjee, 1 W. R., 297.

A suit was instituted in Pubna, and on application to the High Court for authority to proceed with it in Pubna, the High Court ordered its transfer to Dacca. Instead of merely transferring the suit to Dacca, the Pubna Court returned the suit, in order to its being presented anew in the Dacca Court. For the purpose of computing limitation, the suit was held to have been instituted on the day when it was admitted by the Pubna Court. Takhuroodeen Mahomed Esthkan Choudhry v. Kurimbux Choudhry, 3 W. R., 20.

The plaint was stabbed to recover a debt which became payable in 1843 by virtue of a razinamah and petition filed in Court. The razinamah had been from time to time proceeded on as a decree of the Court and process of execution enforced. In 1866 a further application for execution was rejected on the ground that no decree had been passed on the razinamah, in accordance with a previous decision of the High Court. Held that the suit was barred by the Limitation Act.

A Court has no power to extend by indulgence the period of limitation, but when it is shown that a remedy is barred by limitation it has only to enforce the law and refuse the remedy. Sadho Singh v. Mussamut Krishna, 3 N. W. P., 318.

Suit by execution, to recover, under deeds of mortgage and sale, dated respectively October, 1837, and April, 1840, executed to the testator by first defendant’s deceased husband, certain villages which first defendant in 1848 and 1851 mortgaged to second and third defendants. Plea, the Act of Limitations. For the plaintiff it was contended that the operation of the Limitation Act was suspended from 1844 until 1867, by reason of the pendency of an equity suit, commenced by bill filed by present first defendant against testator, to set aside the deeds of October, 1837, and April, 1840, which bill was dismissed by consent in June, 1867, — Held (reversing the decision of the lower Court) that these proceedings had no such effect; that plaintiff might have brought ejectment at any time, and that the present suit was barred. Tranquebar-Sami Ayyan v. Nathambedu Ammat Ammal, 6 Mad. Rep., 234.

The plaintiff’s suit was barred by the Limitation Act.
In a suit by a Hindu widow for a declaration of right presented in the Court of the District Moonsiff's Act on the 11th of May, 1870. His plaint was rejected. He then sought redress of his cause of action by presenting a plaint in the Court of another District Moonsiff who had no jurisdiction, and it was returned by the latter District Moonsiff on the 7th May, in order that it might be presented to the Court having jurisdiction to determine the suit within one month from the date on which it was returned. Held that the plaintiff's suit was barred by the provisions of the Limitation Act (XIV of 1859). Cheiguhanthiah Gaurihangiah v. Pidatala Vencatuppaiah, 5 Mad. Rep., 407.

A decree was passed on the 6th September, 1865. Application for execution was made on the 7th September, 1866; the 6th September, 1868, was Sunday. Held that the fact of the last day of the three years within which application for execution might be made falling upon a Sunday, gave the Court no power to entertain such application on the day following. Held, also, that the day on which the application for execution is made is not to be excluded from the computation, and that the application must be made within three calendar years from the passing of the decree. Khodie Lal v. Mussamut Bissawun Kumwar, 4 B. L. R., A. C., 131; 13 S. W. R., C. R., 132.

In calculating time for the purpose of applying the Law of Limitation the computation must be made according to the English calendar.

In a suit brought on the 5th Asar, 1270 (3rd July, 1866), for recovery of a sum of money for goods sold and delivered, the debt for which the defendant acknowledged by a writing dated 8th Asar, 1270 (9th June, 1865),—Held that the suit was barred by lapse of time. Maharaja Jay Manjul Singh Bakadur v. Lal Rung Pal, 4 B. L. R., A. P., 53.

The Deputy Commissioner was held not justified in raising the plea of limitation, as it was no part of defendant's case and was never put forward at any state of the proceedings; and although there might be circumstances under which a Judge was bound to notice such a defect in the plaintiff's case, he could only properly do so when the bar was patent on the face of the pleadings. Bheem Goyallav. Asar, 1270 (9th June, 1863),—Held that the suit was barred by lapse of time. Bull Rohun v. Lutafut Hossein, 12 S. W. R., 1864, 43.

Possession by mortgagees cannot be adverse to the heir of the deceased mortgagor, so as to make limitation apply. Musamut Mohashav. Musamut Khoonoo, W. R., 1864, 68.

Limitation will not count against a party who has been out of possession under temporary leases. Calli Chunder Chowdhry v. Monihurna Chowdhrai, W. R., 1864, 149.

A suit by a Hindu widow for a declaration of right and title to dhurmutter land of which she asserted she had always been in possession, but which defendant had got registered in his own name as well as in hers, and claimed to have been in possession of with his father since the death of the husband,—Held that the entry of plaintiff's name conjointly with defendant's was a declaration of at least joint title such as nullified a plea of bar by limitation. Deepo Debia v. Gobindo Deb, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 42.

In a suit to recover land of which defendant had admittedly held adverse possession for upwards of eleven years, where plaintiff's cause of action was alleged to have arisen at the close of a contest between him and the Government, which had claimed to reserve the land, when the Collector recorded a proceeding that the plaintiff should reserve possession of his land, defendant's case was that he knew nothing of that contest, and had held possession for twenty-seven years,—Held that it lay upon the plaintiff to remove the statutory bar which defendant had set up, by showing that he, or some one under whom he claimed, had been in possession within twelve years next before the commencement of the suit. Syud Amer Ali v. Maharanee Inderpet Romer, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 43.

Certian land having been settled by Government for a period of ten years, one S. bought the benefit of that settlement at an auction sale for arrears of rent, and afterwards sold his rights to one M. On the expiration of the temporary settlement, Government effected a permanent zemindary settlement with M. In the following year (1865) the zemindary title was sold, and the purchaser now (1869) sues to recover possession of certain specified land. The lower Appellate Court, finding that none of the persons above-mentioned had possession within twelve years immediately preceding the filing of the plaint, considered the suit barred,—Held that the question was one solely of a private right, and that the plaintiff did not stand in the position of Government in regard to the Statute of Limitations. Kughoonauth Surman v. Gobind Chunder Roy, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 170.

2.—When Limitation does not apply.

A brief possession for a few weeks, under a decree subsequently set aside or modified, so as not to have effect against the persons who were previously in possession, and to whom possession was restored, is not such possession as entitles the plaintiff to calculate limitation from that time. Deygurmy Dossee v. Rajah Anundnath Roy, W. R., 1864, 43.

Possession by mortgagees cannot be adverse to the heir of the deceased mortgagor, so as to make limitation apply. Musamut Mohashav. Musamut Khoonoo, W. R., 1864, 68.

Limitation will not count against a party who has been out of possession under temporary leases. Calli Chunder Chowdhry v. Monihurna Chowdhrai, W. R., 1864, 149.

Limitation is not applicable to a suit for exigible dower, except in a case of dissolution of marriage by death or divorce. Musamut Bibet Jumula v. Mussamut Mulleekah, W. R., 1864, 252.

The non-receipt of a share of the profits of an estate is no cause of action between shareholders from which limitation runs. Shikho Sundari Dasi v. kali Churan Rai, W. R., 1864, 206.

In a suit by the purchaser of a Mahometan lady's share in her father's property against her brother, it was held that, as the property was in the hands of the brother, the plaintiff has no cause of action in adverse possession, limitation could not apply. Bacharam Chowdry v. Mahab Beebee, W. R., 1864, 377.

The plea of limitation is not applicable to a suit for declaration of title regarding a land.

When and where limitation should be pleaded.

When and where limitation should be pleaded.

3.—When and where limitation should be pleaded.

When a party does not take the ground of limitation, the Court should not take it. The party who fails to such a plea is bound to press it forward at first; if he does not, he will be held to have waived it.

An allegation of possession for more than thirty years, in answer to a claim to recover possession, was held clearly to raise the plea of limitation, though the actual words that the suit was barred by limitation were not used. The Collector of East Burdwan v. Sheikh Imdad Ali, W. R., 1864, 238.

A plea of limitation cannot be allowed in special appeal when it was not taken in either of the lower Courts, nor in the grounds of special appeal. Brindabun Chunder Sircar Chowdhry v. G. Clarke, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 9.

The order of a Judge overruling the defence of limitation, and remanding the suit for trial on its merits, if not immediately appealed against as a decree, may, as an interlocutory order, be objected to when the ultimate decision is appealed against. Mussamat Wunserun Beebee v. Sheikh Warris Ali, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 6.

The first Court having decreed the plaintiff's suit after trying the issue of limitation, the lower Appellate Court, instead of affirming the decree solely on the merits, ought to have specifically determined the issue of limitation. Greesh Chunder Roy v. Narain Doss, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 69.

Questions arising on the face of the proceedings and involving points of jurisdiction (e.g., a plea of limitation) must be taken up and decided, even though not raised in the first instance. The minor son of a decree-holder who, was not himself under a legal disability when his right accrued, is not entitled to extra time, although he (the son) was under a legal disability at the time of his father's death. Amunda Koonwar v. Thakoor Pandey, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 69.

Upon which temples have been built, and idols established by another co-sharer. If that shareholder claim exclusive use of the temple, he must prove a possession and enjoyment different from those of a Hindu co-sharer of joint property, particularly with regard to a temple added by him to an ancestral Poojah baree. Kismornath Chowdhry v. Hurra Kant Chowdhry, 2 W. R., 185.

A decree was obtained against property belonging to the debtor, but in the possession of another person, under a fraudulent or insufficient title, between whom and the decree-holder litigation ensued. Execution being applied for within three years from the close of such litigation.—Held that limitation did not apply, also that the re-transfer of the property to the legal representatives or the original debtor did not operate to prevent its sale. Kasheer Pershad Roy v. Shih Chunder Deb, 2 W. R., Mis., 10.

When a party admitting his liability for a judgment-debt of an ancestor, settles a suit in Court brought against him for the recovery of that sum by entering into a written contract by which he engages to pay the debt by instalments, the Law of Limitation cannot be applied to prevent execution being taken out within three years from the date when the suit was thus disposed of, because, previous to such written contract, the decree-holder was in laches. Okhil Chunder Surkhel v. Brohmo Moyee Debia, W. R., Mis., 3.

The right to enforce decrees of Her Majesty in Council is not affected by any Law of Limitation. Anundmoyee Dassee and another v. Purno Chunder Rai and others, 5 W. R., Mis., 239.

Limitation will not apply to a claim for a declaration of title, where the plaintiff is in possession of the land regarding which the declaration is required. Puree Jan Khuttoo and others v. Bycutn Chunder Chuckerbutty and others, 7 W. R., 96.

In a suit to recover possession, the defendant, by admitting the right of the plaintiff as the owner of the land in dispute, and acknowledging himself to be the plaintiff's tenant, precludes himself from pleading adverse possession or limitation, in whatever form it may be that the plaintiff asserts his right to the land, i.e., whether he sues the defendant as a tenant or trespasser. R. Watson and Co. v. Ranee Shurut Socordee Debza, W. R., 1864, 395.

In a suit for confirmation of title and possession, defendants cannot plead limitation if they have completely failed to prove their allegation of joint possession. Rung Lall Misser v. Roghoobor Singh and others, 9 W. R., 169.

In a suit to recover advances made from time to time for work and on other accounts, money having been entrusted to defendant to be accounted for by him, it was held that the matter partook of the nature of a trust to which no limitation at all would apply. Naran Dast Chela v. Maharaj Mahadad Chand Bahadoor, 10 W. R., 174.

So long as the relation of mortgagee and mortgagee exists between the parties to the suit, the Law of Limitation will not apply to the case. Muddun Gopaul Singh v. Lalla Hunooman Dobay, W. R., F. B., 37.

The Statute of Limitations is no bar to a suit for recovery of a share of joint family property, plaintiff and defendants, Hindus living together in commensality up to within twelve years of bringing the suit; for in such a case there can have been no adverse possession so long as the family was undivided. Rujo-neekant Mitter and others v. Premchand Bose and others, Marsh., 241.

In a partition suit by a widow for the recovery of her husband's share of property, held during his life-time jointly with his brother, although such suit be brought more than twelve years after her husband's death, her claim is not barred by the Statute of Limitations, unless the brother has for a period of twelve years before suit held adversely to her. Kistomone Chowdhry v. Sib-chunder Chowdhry and others, Marsh., 196.

An allegation of possession for more than thirty years, in answer to a claim to recover possession, was held clearly to raise the plea of limitation, though the actual words that the suit was barred by limitation were not used. The Collector of East Burdwan v. Sheikh Imdad Ali, W. R., 1864, 395.

A plea of limitation cannot be allowed in special appeal when it was not taken in either of the lower Courts, nor in the grounds of special appeal. Brindabun Chunder Sircar Chowdhry v. G. Clarke, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 9.

The order of a Judge overruling the defence of limitation, and remanding the suit for trial on its merits, if not immediately appealed against as a decree, may, as an interlocutory order, be objected to when the ultimate decision is appealed against. Mussamat Wunserun Beebee v. Sheikh Warris Ali, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 69.

The first Court having decreed the plaintiff's suit after trying the issue of limitation, the lower Appellate Court, instead of affirming the decree solely on the merits, ought to have specifically determined the issue of limitation. Greesh Chunder Roy v. Narain Doss, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 59.

Questions arising on the face of the proceedings and involving points of jurisdiction (e.g., a plea of limitation) must be taken up and decided, even though not raised in the first instance. The minor son of a decree-holder who, was not himself under a legal disability when his right accrued, is not entitled to extra time, although he (the son) was under a legal disability at the time of his father's death. Amunda Koonwar v. Thakoor Pandey, W. R., 1864, Act X R., Mis., 1.
LIMITATION.

When an application for revival of execution of a decree has been admitted and acted upon without objection, and a sale takes place, and the debtor succeeds in setting aside the sale on the ground of irregularity, the Court executing the decree cannot of its own motion raise the question of limitation, nor can the debtor urge such a plea at so late a stage as after the reversal of the sale. Gour Monee Debia v. Neel Madhub Gooco, 5 W. R., Mis., 3.

Where a case was remanded by the lower Appellate Court on a point affecting the merits, and the defendant, after that point had been tried and determined against him, then for the first time raised the question of limitation,—Held that the lower Appellate Court properly refused to enter upon that question. Busul Rukim v. Sreanath Bose, 6 W. R., 178.

The lower Appellate Court was not bound to take up the plea of limitation which was raised before it for the first time on remand and after the litigation had been proceeding for a protracted period, when it did not appear from the pleadings that limitation arose in the case. Behary Lall Roy v. Kaledass Chunder, 8 W. R., 451.

A plea of limitation overruled in the Court of first instance, and not brought before the lower Appellate Court, cannot be entertained by the High Court in special appeal. Kashee ChunderTurkobhusan v. Kally Prossunno Chowdhry, 9 W. R., 524.

A plea of limitation need not be decided before the merits of the case can be approached. Doonga Ram Surmik Chuckerbutty v. Ruttun Monee, 4 W. R., 65.

The ordinary rule of law is that a plea of limitation should be tried before a plaintiff can go into the merits, but there may be cases (e.g., in a boundary dispute) in which it is right first to get at the facts and then to apply the Law of Limitation. Mahomed Asam v. Sumeroodee, 12 W. R., 286.

If a defendant does not raise the objection of the Statute of Limitations, but merely disputes the amount of the claim, the Court ought not in its decision to allow the Statute to affect the case. Duttajee bin Narayyen v. Wamourao and Bhow-ram Ram, Bom., 19.

Where the Statute of Limitations was pleaded for the first time in a petition for review of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court,—Held that the review being part of the proceedings in regular appeal, the question was whether the Statute may be pleaded for the first time in regular appeal, and that where, upon the admitted facts, it is clear that the Statute is a bar, it may be pleaded for the first time in a regular appeal. Sarasvati v. Pachanna Setti, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 258.

Where a plea of limitation can only be properly decided with reference to facts found in connexion with the question of possession and dispossesston, and where appellants have omitted to press evidence on the point, though they had every opportunity before the lower Appellate Court, it cannot be admitted to be taken in special appeal. Ramhonne Doss and others v. Ram Rutton Dutt, 10 W. R., 425.

There are some cases in which a Court of regular appeal has power to raise the issue of limitation, although the Court of first instance has not raised it in distinct terms. Taroo Kylee v. Obhey Koolya, 11 W. R., 288.

The defendant appealed on the question of the Statute of Limitations. The Judge held that the Statute did not apply, and remitted the case to be tried on the merits. The defendant again appealed upon the merits, and these being decided against him, brought a special appeal to the High Court, urging that the suit was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Held that he could not appeal upon this ground after the case had been remitted, but that he ought to have appealed when the point was decided. Mussamut Beekun Koer v. Maharajah Bahadoor, Marsh., 66.

A plea of limitation overruled in the Court of first instance, and not brought before the lower Appellate Court, cannot be entertained by the High Court in special appeal. Kashee ChunderTurkobhusan v. Kally Prossunno Chowdhry, 9 W. R., 452.

In a suit for an account, where the defendant, while alleging the balance to be in her favour, contended that the plaintiff's claim was barred by the Limitation Act, and the accounts were afterwards referred by consent to the Commissioner, who refused without special direction to notice the defence of limitation, and the Judge of the Division Court amended the order of reference, by directing the Commissioner to investigate the accounts with reference to the operation of the Act,—Held on appeal (by Couch, C. J., and Westropp) that the order of amendment was justified by the circumstances of the case, and that the defendant having raised the defence of limitation, and not having subsequently abandoned it, that question should be first decided. Pirbhai Ranije and another v. Neubia, 3 Bom., Rep., O. C. J., 164.

The Statute of Limitations, if relied upon as a ground of defence, should be pleaded in every case in the original Court. Ramnandtha Mudali and others v. Vaithalinga Mudali, 2 Mad. Rep., 238.

When a plaintiff sues for land in the character of an owner of a lakaneraj estate, though at the same time he is the owner of the revenue-paying estate containing the village in which the lakaneraj land is situate, it is competent to the defendant in possession as a talookdar of the revenue-paying estate to plead limitation as against the lakanerajdar. Raj Luckee Chowdhra v. Tara Monee Chowdhra, 5 W. R., 58.

Where the parties intend that all goods delivered within a fixed period are not to be paid for until the end of such period of credit, limitation runs, not from the time of the purchase or delivery, but from the expiration of credit. Satcouri Singh v. Kristo Bangal, 11 W. R., 129.

In calculating the period of limitation for bringing suits, the day on which the cause of action arose should be included in the computation; and in excluding from the limitation the period during which a suit was pending, the day on which proceedings therein were commenced and the day on which they ended should both be counted. Hurro Soonderee Dabee and others v. Kallymohon and others, Marsh., 138, W. R., F. B., 46.

Limitation can be pleaded as a bar to a suit to set aside an alienation by a grandfather, the cause of action in such a case arising not from the date of the grandfather’s death, but from the date of the alienation. Setul Pershad Singh v. Gowr Dyat Singh, 1 W. R., 283.

A suit to set aside alienations of ancestral property made by a childless Hindu widow during her life-tenancy, may be brought at any time within twelve years from the death of the widow. Tilub Roy v. Phooban Roy and others, 7 W. R., 450.

In a suit for breach of contract to be performed at different times limitation will count from each breach of contract as it arises, and separate damages may be recovered for each breach. Mohesh Sahoo and others v. A. J. Forbes, 6 W. R., Act X R., 61.

For three years limitation, as provided by Clause 10 of Section 1, Act XIV of 1859, is applicable to a suit under an instalment-bond; the limitation commencing from the date of the last unsatisfied instalment. Mussamut Munna Jhunna Koonoor v. Laljee Roy, 1 W. R., 121.

the property. Held that the Statute of Limitations commenced to run from the date of A.'s death, not from the date of the deed of gift. Anund Mohun Roy v. Chunder Monee Dass and others, Marsh., 547.

If, during the pendency of an Act IV case both parties are in possession, or are struggling for possession, limitation does not begin to run against either party before the time of final ejectment under the Judge's order. J. Lyons v. Raj Chunder Shikereswar Roy, 2 W. R., 162.

A party cannot ignore an Act IV award passed against himself, and sue to establish his right to the property involved therein after the lapse of three years, as if the award was no bar to his recovery. Sheikh Jainooddeen Ahmed v. Amseroonissa, 2 W. R., 182.

A party seeking to disturb an award passed under Act IV of 1840 must date his action, not from the Magistrate's decision confirming a previous possession, but from the actual date of dispossession. Hurish Chunder Chowdry v. Huvo Soonndry Debia, 2 W. R., 300.

The period of limitation for executing a decree counts from the date on which any bond-fide act is done by the decree-holder or by the Court in furtherance of the execution of the decree. The striking off of a case is not an act in furtherance of execution. Makarajah Dheraj Mahatab Chund Bahadoor v. Boloram Singh and others, 6 W. R., Mis., 63.

Held that the limitation applicable to suits for recovery of notes lost or plundered during the mutiny is six years, and that this should be computed from the time of the losers having requisite knowledge to institute legal proceedings. Suny Ali Nusquee v. Bhawon Das, 7 Agra Rep., A. C., 213.

In a suit for the recovery of money lent upon an agreement that it shall be payable upon demand, held that the Statute of Limitations begins to run from the date of the loan. Hempammal v. Hanuman, 2 Mad. Rep., 472.

P. S. accepted a bill of exchange at three months in October, 1865, which was endorsed to M. B., and discounted for him by J. S., but being dishonoured J. S. obtained a decree thereupon, in 1861, against M. B., who paid in July, 1864, and now sued J. S. as acceptor. The defendant pleaded limitation. Suit dismissed.

In August, 1856, G. H. W., B. B., and J. W. (the two latter being sureties, and having been treated as such by the plaintiff), jointly and severally executed a promissory note to M. T. B., payable by instalments, which were irregularly paid till January, 1860, when they ceased; the instalment payable on December 10th, 1857, not having been paid till January 5th, 1858. M. T. B. instituted an action against B. B. for the balance then due, for which a decree was given. On B. B.'s moving for a new trial the Judges differed on the questions of limitation and laches of the plaintiff, and the case was referred for the opinion of the High Court, which was in favour of the defendant on the point of limitation. Held that a cause of action at once arises on, and limitation runs from, the non-payment of an instalment; that payment of subsequent instalments on a note so payable is not a waiver of the limitation which has so commenced to run against a surety. Maria T. Bruce v. B. Balfour, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 120.

A sale in execution of decree was resisted on the ground that a part of the property had been previously sold by the judgment-debtor more than twelve years prior to the application for sale in execution. The decree-holder alleged that the private sale was a mere collusive transaction. Held that if the proprietary right in the judgment-debtor's property did not pass and was never intended to pass, the judgment-creditor is at liberty at any time while his decree is in force to apply for the sale of the property as belonging to his judgment-debtor, but if the proprietary right has been transferred the limitation would run from the date of transfer. Narain Dass v. Nidhla Lall, 4 Agra Rep., A. C., 19.

The doctrine of privity does not arise in questions of limitation. In the case of a sale by a Hindu widow, which takes away both her rights and the rights of all those who claim under her, limitation runs from the date of sale. Mutammul Gourree Debra v. Rajah Anundnath Roy, W. R., 1864, 34.

In a suit by the surety of a lessee for the refund of rent paid to the wrongful heir of the deceased lessor, the cause of action as against the wrong-doers dates from the time when they were declared by a competent Court to have paid to a party without title, and the cause of action as against the lessee dates from the time when the surety was made to pay the rent to the rightful heir on default of the lessee. Roy Hurree Kishen v. Ranee Asmedh Koomwar, W. R., 1864, 57.

Suit to recover money paid by Government to the defendant as compensation for land taken for public purposes which the plaintiff alleged to belong to him and not to the defendant. Held that the plaintiff's right of action against the defendant accrued at the time when the defendant first took the money from Government, and that the ignorance of the plaintiff in regard to the accrual of his right did not prevent the time from running against his suit, unless it had been brought about by the fraud of the defendant. Arool Singh v. Lalla Gopenthath and others, 8 W. R., 23.

When a tradesman supplies goods from time to time on credit to a customer who makes payments from time to time on account, no fixed period of credit being agreed upon, the cause of action for purposes of limitation must be taken to arise on the date when each item claimed was supplied. Satoueri Singh v. Kristo Bangal, 11 W. R., 529.

In a suit for the recovery of money lent upon an agreement that it shall be payable upon demand, held that the Statute of Limitations begins to run from the date of the loan. Hempammal v. Hanuman and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 472.

Held that the limit of three years in execution of decree should be reckoned (where the decree is to be paid by instalments) from the date on which execution of the decree could be taken out under the terms thereof, and not from the date

It is not necessary for a conditional mortgagee if he be in possession at the expiry of the year of mortgage, to sue to complete his title. The limitation period should be computed from the expiry of the year of mortgage if he be in possession. Khoob Chand v. Leela Dhur, 4 Agra Rep., 103.

B. under a winding-up order, claimed salary as manager of the company. He had joined in the petition in which the order to wind up had been made. Held that three years was the period of limitation. If the debt was calculated in the lump sum on which his petition to wind up was passed, the period of limitation must be computed from the date of filing the petition. In the matter of the Ganges Steam Navigation Company, 2 Ind. Jur., S. C., 237.

In a case under the Mitackshara law, if a father and a son of full age should be dispossessed in the father's life-time of undivided ancestral property, the period of limitation against the son will begin to run from the date of dispossession. So where A., more than three years after he had attained his majority, brought a suit to set aside an absolute deed of sale of ancestral immovable property executed by his father, under which possession had been taken more than twelve years before A. came of age,— Held that the suit was barred. Held also that in the case of a mortgage, or conditional sale, limitation will run from the time when possession under a decree for possession was taken. Bissew Pershad Singh Pandey v. Luckmun Pershad, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 216.

In a suit for damages on account of a false and malicious statement made by defendant before a Magistrate, in consequence of which criminal proceedings were taken against plaintiff,— Held that limitation runs, not from the date on which plaintiff was acquitted and discharged, but from the date on which he became aware of the solenamah, which was the first act in point of time injurious to him. Rutnesur Pal Choudry v. Doolun Singh, 5 W. R., 33.

According to the former procedure, when a suit before a competent tribunal ended in a nonsuit, the period of limitation was computed from the accruing of the original cause of action, the time which the first suit was pending being deducted. Purboob Narain Singh v. Rajah Lelanand Singh, 2 W. R., 256.

The date of dispossession is the date when the cause of action arises in suits for mesne profits. Ekbal Ali Khan v. Kalee Pershad, 3 W. R., 68.

A purchaser at a private sale cannot count limitation from the date of his purchase, but from the date of accrual of the original vendor's title. Bhikarihapp sah v. Ajodhyn Pershad, 3 W. R., 176.

Two sisters, B. and P., a son being heirs, took possession of ancestral property as heirs on the death of their mother H. After a few years they quarrelled. P. adopted a son, and executed a deed of gift in his favour. B. claimed the whole property through her deceased husband as heir of B. M., who was the original vendor's title. The cause of action of the collateral heirs arose from the time that P. quarrelled with her sister and adopted a son. Bungseedur Ghose v. Tarinee Churn Singh, 3 W. R., 195.

When a lessee cuts trees contrary to the provisions of his first lease, and the lessor renews the lease, without looking to the infringement of it in this respect, limitation is held to run from the breach of contract, and not from the lessee's knowledge of it, as he might have known of it before. Rajah Indoobhoosun Deb Roy v. T. J. Kenny, 3 W. R., S. C. C. Ref., 9.

The period of limitation for taking out execution of a decree counts from the date of the final judgment in the case. Singh v. Laila Kalee Churn, 3 W. R., 100.

A. purchased a zamindary of which certain mouza, was claimed and taken possession of by B. and C., as makurree holders of a shikme talook created by the former zamindar before the Decennial Settlement. To a suit by A. for the recovery of the lands, B. and C. pleaded limitation, calculating the period from the time of the purchase in 1833. Held that limitation must be computed, not from the time of the purchase, but from the time when possession was taken from the purchaser. Wise and others v. Bhoobun Moy Debha, 3 W. R., P. C., 5.

Plaintiff, alleging that he was in possession of certain lands, sued for cancelment of a survey award demarcating the said land as a portion of lands in the defendant's possession. Held that the plaintiff's right to claim a declaration of title against the defendant arose when the defendant prosecuted the survey proceedings, and obtained the award, and not from the date of a previous possessor's award made by a Magistrate under Regulation XV of 1824, in conformity with which the survey award was passed. Rajkisto Roy v. Beer Chunder Jooobraj, 4 W. R., 100.

Limitation runs from the date of the last judgment by which the whole decree becomes final, and not from the date of an incomplete decree (i.e. when a case is partly decreed and partly remanded). Shaik Fust Imman v. Doolun Singh, 5 W. R., Mis., 6.

In a case for possession after dispossession in pursuance of a solenamah inimical to plaintiff's interests, which was executed by his guardian when he was a minor, the cause of action was held to rise from the date of the dispossession, the last of the series of acts prejudicial to plaintiff, and not from the date on which he became aware of the solenamah, which was the first act in point of time injurious to him. Rutnesur Pal Choudhry v. Dhunnunjoy Shikdar and others, 6 W. R., 18.

Where a wife demanded only a portion of her husband or dowry from her husband, limitation as to her claim to the remainder will count from the date of her husband's death, and not from the date on which she ceased to be wife of the deceased husband. Bagoo Jauan v. Gahessi Beher, 6 W. R., 19.

Where a servant is appointed on a fixed monthly salary, and there is nothing to show that the salary is to be paid in advance, the limitation as to the end of the month's salary commences from the time at which the salary became due, i.e., the end of the month, and not from the date of the dismissal of the servant. Kali Churn Mitter v. Mahomed Soleem, 6 W. R., 33.
LIMITATION.

A suit to enforce the right to preemption must be brought within one year from the time the purchaser has taken possession under the sale impeached, and not from the time when the person claiming the right obtained possession; and which forms the basis of his right. Shah Mokun Ali v. Neknam Singh and others, 6 W. R., 131.

If a party has a lien on certain property as security for a loan he is bound to obtain both a decree for the money and for the realization of it by the sale of the property, pledged within three years from the date on which the money became due under the unregistered bond. Parush Nath Misser v. Shaikh Bundah Ali and others, 6 W. R., 132.

In a suit to establish a right to land the cause of action arises when the defendant sets up an adverse holding. The mere non-payment of rent does not constitute an adverse holding; but if a tenant openly sets up an adverse title, and holds adversely, limitation runs. Horonath Roy v. Jogendur Chunder Roy, 6 W. R., 218.

In a suit to recover possession of land under a mortgage deed limitation will count as against the mortgage from the date of default, and the pendency of a foreclosure suit will not prevent limitation from running. Khelut Chunder Ghose v. Tara Chund Koonoo Chowdhry, 6 W. R., 269.

The mere absconding of an agent on a certain date is not such a determination of the agency as to cause limitation to run from that date, if the agency is one for a fixed period. Bissorsur Roy Chowdhry and others v. Ram Doolal Chund, 6 W. R., Act X R., 29.

A suit against an agent for money must be brought within one year from the date on which the plaintiff obtained knowledge of the sum due to him, which in the present case was the date on which, in a previous suit for rendering of accounts, the defendant had tendered the accounts in Court. Huro Churn Narain Singh v. Rooclet Dobey and others, 6 W. R., Act X R., 39.

Where a suit was brought upon an instalment bond, and not upon any fresh agreement between the parties, the period of limitation was held to run from the date when default was made in payment of the first instalment, in consequence of which the whole amount became due. Horonath Roy v. Meheeroolah Mollah, 7 W. R., 21.

The plaintiff's cause of action was held to arise when he paid the money to the Collector as Government revenue on account of his defaulting co-sharers, and not from the date when the money-lender, from whom he had obtained the money to make that payment, realized it from him under a decree of Court. Kally Sunkur Sundyal v. Huro Sunkur Sundyal and others, 7 W. R., 29.

A plaintiff is not bound to sue to enforce a summary decree against the immoveable property of the defendant pending a regular suit brought by the defendant in the Civil Court to set aside the summary decree. Limitation will count, not from the date of the summary decree, but from the date at which the suit brought in the nature of an appeal to set aside that decree is determined. Gyan Chund Chandra Roy Chowdhry v. Kally Churn Roy Chowdhry, 7 W. R., 48.

When a dependent talookdar, holding under a temporary settlement, has that settlement placed in abeyance by the Collector taking the collections into his own hands khas, the Collector's act is not one of dispossession from which limitation can count; but limitation will reckon from the date when the purchaser, as such, purchased that khas khas, and not from the date when the Collector could hold khas, had himself made collections, and so created a cause of action by dispossession of the former talookdar. Myenooddeen v. Ram Mony Chowdhrajin, 7 W. R., 182.

Limitation was held to apply in a case where it was stipulated in a lease that the tenant should clear a defined area in a certain time, the cause of action accruing when the defendant did not clear by the time specified. Tumeesooddeen Chowdhry v. Meer Sharwar Khan, 7 W. R., 209.

Suit by A., a Hindu lady and daughter of B., to declare invalid a will of B. made in favour of C., a relative. It appeared that D., the widow of B., instituted proceedings against C., the devisee, in which she claimed the property of B. Subsequently the widow, by a deed of compromise, admitted the rights of C., and abandoned her own. Held (per Seton-Karr, J.) that limitation in the present suit by A. against C., the devisee, runs from the date on which the widow admitted the devisee's rights, and not from any prior date, as during the period of the widow's dispute with the devisee she was protecting the interests of C., who claimed to be the revisor, who would not have been heard in the matter, and who had no right to sue during the pendency of such litigation. On the whole case the will was found valid by both Judges. Soudaminee Dossee v. Bistro Narain Roy and others, 8 W. R., 323.

In a suit brought in 1272 to recover possession of certain land alleged to have been purchased in 1265, plaintiff alleged that defendant held the property up to 1265, under an ijara, and defendant pleaded that he had been in possession under a prior purchase from the same vendor in 1257. Held that if defendant paid rent under an ijara, limitation would reckon from the time at which the ijara expired, and not from the date of the plaintiff's purchase. Mahomed Aksan and others v. Mahomed Yasin, 9 W. R., 106.

A suit was dismissed with costs in a Court of Small Causes, after which an application for a new trial was rejected, and subsequently another application was made for a new trial and referred by the Judge to the High Court, the result being the rejection of the application. After this defendant applied for execution for the costs. Held that the decree became final and conclusive when the Judge rejected the last application in accordance with the decision of the High Court, limitation beginning to run from the date of such rejection. Farr Kisto Banerjee v. Nazemoodeen, 9 W. R., 397.

The plaintiff sued on a promissory note payable on demand, dated November 14th, 1867. He filed his plaint on November 14th, 1870, that being the first day on which the Court was open after the Durga Puja holidays. The 13th November was Sunday. Held, the day on which the note was made to be excluded in computing the period of limitation, and that therefore the suit was not barred. Munshi Abdul Ali v. Tarachand Ghose, 6 B. L. R., 298.

Held in appeal that the period of limitation was to be computed from the expiration of the day on which the note was made, and therefore the suit... was not barred under Clause 9, Section 1, of Act XIV of 1859. Tarachand Ghose v. Munshi Abdul Ali, 8 B. L. R., 24; and 16 S. W. R., A. O., 1.

Chur land was held by the proprietors of the adjoining estate. The chur was resumed by Government under Regulation II of 1839. The recorded proprietors of the adjoining permanently settled estate, to which the chur was a contiguous accretion, refused to make a permanent settlement with Government at the rent demanded. The chur was then held khas by Government for some time, and subsequently leased out for temporary periods to strangers. In these temporary leases Government reserved the proprietor's rights to come in and take a permanent settlement on the expiry of the temporary settlements, and also reserved an allowance of ten per cent. on the rent as malikana on their application. Where the proprietor had kept the money in deposit in the Collectorate treasury, one of the recorded proprietors of the contiguous estate, of the entire chur, and refused the application of other shareholders in the estate to be joined in the settlement. The Collector at the request of the defendants applied the deposit in his treasury in satisfaction of the Government revenue. An unsuccessful shareholder brought a civil suit against the defendant for possession and a declaration of his right to participate in the settlement. Held that it was not necessary to make the Government a party; that the suit was not barred, the period of limitation commenced from the date of the deposit but on the date of demand. Accordingly, the cause of action arises not on the date of the deposit but on the date of demand. The cause of action arises not on the date of the decrees against the defendant for his full share of the two lacs. The defendants pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, more than twelve years having elapsed from the date of the original payment of the two lacs. The plaintiff's claim was reduced by the Privy Council on appeal, limitation arising, not to his right of action for mesne profits during the period of his dispossession runs from the date of the judgment of the Privy Council. Maskook Ali Khan v. Jowala Buksh, 2 N. W. R., 290.

A person claiming the right of pre-emption in respect of property the subject of conditional sale is bound to make his claim on the expiration of the year of grace mentioned in the notice of foreclosure. And the limitation runs from the expiration of such year of grace, and not from the final decree for foreclosure. Buddra Doss v. Doorga Pershad, 2 N. W. R., 284.

Where a mortgagee becomes a purchaser of the mortgaged property limitation runs from the date of purchase, as against a claimant by right of pre-emption.

Held that plaintiff's cause of action arose out of the result of the former suits against the debtor, but the Rs. 16,000 which the defendants received were more than that they were entitled to from the common debtor.

The present suit was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for his full share of the two lacs. The defendants pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, more than twelve years having elapsed from the date of the original payment of the two lacs. Held that plaintiff's cause of action arose out of the result of the former suits against the debtor, and not out of the original payment of the two lacs, and limitation ran, not from the date of the original payment, but from the time that the defendants received more than their share.

Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant not the full sum of Rs. 25,000 which he had lost as the result of the proceedings against the debtor, but the Rs. 16,000 which the defendants had received over and above their proper share, and which must be considered as money had and received by the defendants to the plaintiff's LIMITATION.

5.—WHEN THE OPERATION OF THE ACT IS SUSPENDED.

Where a suit is brought and dismissed for want of jurisdiction, and an appeal is preferred in which the first decree is affirmed, if a suit be afterwards brought in the right Court, the period which elapsed between the decision of the first Court and the disallowance of the appeal should be included in computing the period of limitation prescribed by Act XIV of 1859.

If the last day for preferring an appeal fall on a day when the Court has been unexpectedly and unauthorizedly closed, the appellant will not be barred by limitation if he can prove that he was prepared to file the appeal on that day, and if he did file it on the first open day thereafter.

Rajah Biskn Perkash Narain Singh v. Bababa Misser and others, 8 W. R., 73.

The operation of the Limitation Act is not suspended during the recess of the Court.

A suit for inâm lands was instituted in 1849, the cause of action having accrued nearly twelve years before. The suit was dismissed, on the ground that the plaintiff had no certificate as required by Regulation IV of 1831. Eight years afterwards, the plaintiff, having obtained the requisite certificate, commenced a suit for the lands. Held, confirming the decree of the Civil Judge, that the institution of the former suit had not suspended the Statute of Limitations, and that the plaintiff was therefore barred.

A suit for possession by a purchaser, at a sale in execution of a decree, no deduction from the period of limitation can be allowed for the time occupied by the plaintiff in unsuccessfully preferring a summary application in the execution department.

A mere agreement to refer to arbitration, if it contains no acknowledgment of the plaintiff's right of possession, does not save limitation, but the time during which a case is before the arbitrators, or the plaintiff is trying to enforce the award, may be deducted from the period of limitation.

No deduction from the period of limitation is allowable for pendency of litigation in a wrong Court.

Sham Kant Banerjee v. Gopal Lal Targor, 1 W. R., 328.

A plaintiff is entitled to deduction from the period of limitation of the period of pendency of a former suit in which he as defendant was urging the same claim as he is now preferring as plaintiff.

Maharajah Juglender Bunwarte v. Din Dyal Chatterjee, 1 W. R., 310.

In a suit for possession of moveable property by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, limitation will not reckon during the time that the judgment-debtor's case to set aside the sale was against her from the commencement of the adverse possession in her mother's lifetime.

deducted from the period of limitation. Shah Mussamut Manerun v. Mussamut Luteefun, 3 W. R., 46.

The time that the Courts are closed must be deducted in computing the period of limitation.

The time occupied in the summary department to recover excess of jumma according to a decree should be deducted from the period of limitation for the regular suit which is afterwards brought for the same purpose, and to which the plaintiff was referred by the late Sudder Court. Huromonee

The time during which a plaintiff prosecutes an appeal bonâ fide and with due diligence, as well as that during which he prosecutes his case in the Court of first instance, must be deducted in computing the period of limitation. Shumkhoonath Ref., 8.

The time occupied in procuring a copy of the order appealed from should be deducted from the period of limitation. Gopeenath Roy v. Gopeenath Chatterjee, 6 W. R., Mis., 106.

In a suit which is brought under Section 33, Act
X of 1859, more than seven years after the determination of the agency of the defendant, and in which no fraud is pleaded, no deduction can be allowed under Act XIV of 1859. W. Stephen v. P.
Gasper, 1 W. R., 265.

Where a plaintiff sues upon his jenam title, having previously instituted a suit in which he is unsuccessfully set up his kanam right, the latter suit cannot avail to prevent the Statute of Limitations from running against him. Parakut Assen Cully v.
Eda Pally Chenmem, 2 Mad. Rep., 266.

Where the defendant in a suit died before the plaint against him was filed, and the suit was some time after carried on against his representatives, the time during which the suit was being prosecuted bonâ fide against the dead man may be deducted in calculating the period of limitation against his representatives. Mohun Chand Kandu v. Azim Kast, weshedar, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 233; 12 W. R., 45.

The limitations of suits for rent in Act X of 1859 is not subject to the deductions contained in Act
XIV of 1859. Ram Sunker Sanaputly v. Gopal Kishen Deo, 1 W. R., 68.

Act X of 1859 recognizes no deduction whatsoever in computing the three years' period of limitation prescribed by Section 32. Dakhina Dabz'a v. Romesh Chunder Dutt, 1 W. R., 142.

Plaintiff brought a suit within the very verge of the period of limitation, but did not obtain a decree, as it was held that no fresh order was required in that suit, and that an order passed in a former suit was sufficient for the purpose of that case. Instead of appealing from that decision he brought the present suit, which was held barred by limitation, his cause of action remaining intact. Kalee Kishore

The time for which suits may have been pending in Courts which had not jurisdiction should be deducted in computing the period of limitation if the Judge should find that the suits were prosecuted bonâ fide and with due diligence. Nobo Coomer Chucherbutty v. Koylaschunder Baroone, 17 S. W.
R., C. R., 518.

Where limitation is pleaded in a suit for arrears of rent, deduction must be allowed to the landlord for the time he was suing to eject defendants as trespassers. Esfan Chunder Roy v. Khajah Apanullah, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 79.

In computing limitation a plaintiff is entitled to deduct the time occupied in prosecuting a suit upon the same cause of action against the same defendant bonâ fide, and with due diligence in a Court, which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause was unable to decide upon it. Khetter Paul Singh v.

6.—WHEN A FRESH STARTING-POINT ARISES.

An admission by A. of his debt to B. contained in a burat given by A. to his agent may take a suit against A. out of the Statute of Limitations. Huro Chunder Roy v. Monee Mohanee Dosser, 3 W. R., S.
C. C. Ref., 6.

Where a decree had awarded a sum as costs to one who turned a rebel,—Held that correspondence relating to the asserted right of Government to get the sum to be realized by the execution of decree did not amount to a proceeding to save limitation.
Nowab Ameenooddeen Khan v. Moosuffer Hossein
Khan, 4 Agra Rep., Mis., 5.

Where a plaintiff sued for a debt due under a carrarnama,—Held that, in order to bring the case within the exception in the Law of Limitation, it was sufficient to show, by clear and positive proof, that within the period prescribed he had asserted his right to his claim under the carrarnama, and that the defendant admitted this claim to be as of right. It was not necessary that a precise sum should have been mentioned by either party, or that a promise to pay should have been made by the defendant. Gupzikshen Goswami v. Brindabun Chandra Sirkar Chowdhr, 3 B. L. R., P. C., 37;
S. C., 12 W. R., P. C., 36.

The admission to a third party in writing that a sum is due is not such an acknowledgment of a debt as to remove such debt out of the Statute of Limitations. Perskad Doss v. Denonath Day, 2

A judgment of a Court altering a pure legal misapprehension as to rights and status between A. and B., and passed in a suit to which C. was not a party, is not binding on C., nor will it give A. a fresh cause of action as against C. in order to put him in the position in which he would have been had he never misconceived his correct legal claim; and nor does a new period of limitation run from the time of the judgment between A. and B. Syed

In calculating the period of limitation in a case where it is sought to extend the time by reason of a pauper suit having been commenced, the suit is commenced for this purpose when the plaint is presented to the Court, and not merely at the date of its allowance. Seetaram Gower and others v.
Golucknath Dutt and others, Marsh., 174, W. R., F.
B., 53.
LIMITATION.

A son has no new cause of action on succeeding to his father; the limitation that bars the father bars the son. Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry v. Buneeed Khan, 3 W. R., Act X R., 121.

A mere verbal admission of the correctness of an account, the items of which are barred by the Statute of Limitations, does not furnish a new starting-point for the operation of the Statute. Subbarina v. Eastulu Multusmi, 3 Mad. Rep., O. J., 378.

An appeal struck off the file for default does not give the decree-holder a fresh point from which to start in calculating the period of limitation when he seeks to execute his decree. Gour Chunder Shaha v. Gour Mohun Ghose, 5 W. R., Mis., 11.

The striking-off of an execution case gives the decree-holder no fresh starting-point from which to count limitation. Tarinee Churn Gangoooy v. Tiluck Chunder Ghose, 6 W. R., Mis., 63.

After adverse possession of immovable property for more than twelve years, a new period of limitation cannot commence to run by the mere circumstance of a transfer of rights or supposed rights. Brindaboo Chunder Sircar v. Bhoopal Chunder Bissus, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 377.

The burden of proof that a creditor by agreeing to an arrangement whereby a firm indebted to him conveyed to two of the partners thereof certain property in trust to pay off his and certain other debts, thereby released the remaining members of the partnership, lies upon the parties who were originally liable to such creditor.

Act XIV of 1859 requires a distinct acknowledgment of a debt as due by the person who makes the acknowledgment to entitle the creditor to a fresh period of limitation. Kalai Khan v. Madho Pershad, 3 N. W. R., 129.

When a debt is by a bond made payable by instalments, subject to a condition that in default of payment of any one instalment the whole debt shall become payable, the period of limitation commences to run as to the whole debt from the date of default, being made in the payment of an instalment.

Where a default having been made in payment of an instalment the debtor subsequently filed a suit to compel his creditor to receive his debt by instalments as they should become due, and in his plaint set out the provisions of the bond, and stated that he had tendered the instalments as they became due to his creditor, which the latter had refused to receive, and that thereupon the debtor had deposited the amount with a third person,—the relief which the plaintiff did not contain such an acknowledgment of the whole debt being due as to give a new starting-point from which the limitation commenced to run. Narayandepa bin Appa Hegde v. Bhaskar Parmayad, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 125.

In a suit against a widow for acts of waste and litiations alleged to have taken place during the lives of the plaintiffs' mothers who were then the next heirs to the property,—Held that as the mothers allowed more than 12 years to elapse, their cause of action expired, and that it did not revive in favour of the plaintiffs who had since been born and had now arrived at majority. Held that if by the death of the widow a new cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs as revisors entitled to the property, they might sue again; but they could not succeed in the present suit. Pershad Singh v. Chedee Lall, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 1.

7.—REGARDING MINORS.

Act XIV of 1859 contains no provision by which the execution of a decree is barred by limitation on account of minority or other legal disability.

A mere application for execution of a decree is not a proceeding which keeps alive the decree. Chander Coomar Roy and others v. Runee Surala Roy, 6 W. R., Mis., 37.

A suit having been instituted on behalf of minors by their guardian, he subsequently, in fraud of the minors, sold their decree to a third party, who was merely a nominee for the defendant in that suit. No execution ever was had of that decree. The minors when they came of age sued to have the sale of their decree declared fraudulent and void, and to have their name substituted on the record for that of the nominee purchaser, and they prayed that they might be allowed to take out execution of this decree. Held that the whole transaction being fraudulent, execution might be issued by the minors, although more than three years had elapsed since any proceeding had been taken under the decree. Abdool Ali v. Meer Mahomed Mosaffur Hussin Chowdury, 5 W. R., 173.

A minor is not bound to sue within three years after the attainment of his majority, but may sue within twelve years of the cause of action, if such time has not expired. Hurris Chunder Nag v. Abbas Ali, 5 W. R., 204.

The mere fact of a plaintiff not suing within three years after his attaining majority will not, in cases where there is a general limitation of twelve years, bar his suit, if brought within twelve years of the time at which his cause of action accrued. Poonun Singh, pauper, v. Kashee Nath Singh, 6 W. R., 20.

A dispossession by a stranger to a family of a portion of the family estate is only one cause of action to the family arising on the date of dispossession, and though in consequence of the minority of a certain member of the family living at the time the period of limitation may under the law be enlarged, still no new cause of action accrues to a subsequently born son at the date of his birth, so as to enable him to postpone again the period of limitation which has begun to run against the family. Gobind Coomar Chowdary and others v. Hurro Chunder Chowdary, 7 W. R., 134.

A suit to set aside alienation of ancestral property, where a period of twelve years from the date of such alienation had elapsed during the minority, may be brought within three years...

The mere fact of a plaintiff not suing within three years of his attaining majority will not, in cases where Act XIV of 1859 allows a general limitation of twelve years, bar his suit if brought within twelve years of the time when the cause of action accrued. Radhamohun Gouree v. Moses Chundra Kotwal and others, 7 W. R., 3.

8.—Mutual Dealings.

The rule that mutual accounts, if they contain some item or items within twelve years, will not be barred by limitation, though the rest of the items be beyond time, is confined to accounts between two parties which show a reciprocity of dealings; or, in other words, to transactions in which there is a mutual credit founded on a subsisting debt, or an express or implied agreement for a set-off of mutual debts.

When two co-sharers collect their rents separately, if one realizes more than his rightful share he gives a cause of action to the other from the commencement of the year following that in which the surplus collection was made, against which the Statute of Limitations would run. Rajah Syed Ahmed Reza v. Syud Enayet Hossein, W. R., 1864, 235.

The defendant in 1865 and 1866 indented on the plaintiffs for large quantities of merchandise, which were shipped to Calcutta from time to time by the plaintiffs' agents in London, who drew bills on the defendant for each shipment, forwarding such bills and the shipping documents to the plaintiffs in Calcutta. The bills were presented to the defendant by the plaintiffs and accepted by him. In the course of the transactions several of the acceptances were dishonoured by the defendant, and the plaintiffs at his request allowed him to renew the bills. Some renewals took place in August and September, 1866. In March, May, and July, 1866, the defendant made purchases from the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs made purchases from the defendant. The plaintiffs were in the habit of closing their accounts on 30th June in each year. In an action for balance of account brought on 24th February, 1870, Held that the parties were merchants and traders having mutual dealings under Section 8 of Act XIV of 1859. The year mentioned in a bond for the repayment of money as that on which the money is to be repaid is to be excluded from the period of computation under the Limitation Act. The borrower in such case has until the last moment of the day mentioned for the payment, and the right to sue accrues not on, but from that day. Palany Andy Pillay, 4 Mad. Rep., 330.

In calculating the period of limitation for bringing suits provided by Act XIV of 1859, the day on which the cause of action arose should be excluded from the computation. Munzy Chinta Comarappa Setti v. Ramasamy Chetti, 4 Mad. Rep., 409.

The date on which a contract is made is to be excluded in computing the time allowed for its performance. Lakshumar Sakharam v. Ranee bin Siji, et al., 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 51.

9.—Computation of the Statutory Period.

The decree provided that the amount should be paid in three instalments, and in default of payment of one instalment the decree-holder was empowered to execute his decree for the whole amount. When the instalment for December, 1865, fell due, the judgment-debtor paid a portion, and obtained an extension of time up to December, 1866. On application on 21st September, 1869, for execution of the decree for the instalments of 1866 and 1867, Held that the instalment for 1866 was not barred by lapse of time. Krishna Chundra Shaha v. Omed Ali, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 31; and 14 S. W. R., C. R., 414.

The day mentioned in a bond for the repayment of money as that on which the money is to be repaid is to be excluded from the period of computation under the Limitation Act. The borrower in such case has until the last moment of the day mentioned for the payment, and the right to sue accrues not on, but from that day. Palany Andy Pillay, 4 Mad. Rep., 330.

In calculating the period of limitation for bringing suits provided by Act XIV of 1859, the day on which the cause of action arose should be excluded from the computation. Munzy Chinta Comarappa Setti v. Ramasamy Chetti, 4 Mad. Rep., 409.

The date on which a contract is made is to be excluded in computing the time allowed for its performance.

The date on which a debt becomes payable is to be excluded in calculating the period of limitation. Lakshumar Sakharam v. Ranee bin Siji, et al., 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 51.

10.—Limitation under Early Acts and Regulations.

(a) Regulations of 1793 and 1799.

A suit for the recovery of malikana is barred by limitation if the malikana has not been received for a period of twelve years.

Quære.—Whether under Regulation VIII of 1793, Section 46, such suit will lie at all. Bhuli Singh v. Mussamut Nimu Behu, 4 B. L. R., A. C., 29; and 12 S. W. R., C. R., 498.

Discussion of the evidence required to prove admissions of indebtedness and promises to pay money for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of

The plaintiffs as heirs of Ramtonoo, the husband of one Bhugobuttee, more than 12 years after her death sued to recover lands alienated by her. As an answer to the plea of limitation, they alleged that, in a suit for other property brought against Bhugobuttee in her life-time, they presented a petition after her death praying to be allowed to appear as her representatives, and were opposed by one Beharry Lall, claiming to be an adopted son of Ramtonoo; that in March, 1847, and within 12 years before suit, the Principal Sudder Ameen ordered the plaintiffs' names to be substituted for that of Bhugobuttee as defendants in that suit,—

 Held by the majority of the Court (dissentient, Glover, J.) that these proceedings did not bar the operation of the old Law of Limitation (Section 14, Regulation III of 1793). Ramgopal Roy v. Chunder Coomar Mundul, 2 W. R., 65.

In a suit by a minor after attaining majority, no allowance can be made, under Regulation III of 1793, for the period of pendency of a suit brought by his guardian and eventually nonsuited. Luchman Pershad v. Jugermath Doss, W. R., 1864, 2.

A suit for proprietary right in certain rent-free land in respect of which the plaintiff had instituted a suit for rent before the Collector, which was dismissed, and the plaintiff referred to a civil suit,—

 Held that the date of accrual of plaintiff's right, and not that of the Collector's order of reference, was the cause of action in this case, and that the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation, under Section 14, Regulation III of 1793. Hossain Khan v. Dinnobundoo Pandah, 1 W. R., 35.

Suit for the recovery of costs incurred by the Government of Bengal, in virtue of the Statutes 3 and 4 Wm. 4, c. 41, authorising the Crown to appoint the East India Company to take charge of appeals and bring them to a hearing. The admission by a defendant that a demand was claimable from some quarter or other, but not as against the property in question, is not an admission within the meaning of Regulation III of 1793, excepting a suit from limitation under that Regulation. The Government having neglected for thirteen years to commence a regular suit, no "good and sufficient cause" precluding them from obtaining redress, according to the exception provided by the aforesaid Regulation, could be presumed to justify the exemption of their suit from limitation. The recovery of their costs does not constitute a "public right" exempting from limitation. The Government of Bengal v. Shurnkfoolu Chunder, W. R., 42.

A party who had been endeavouring, by resort to competent Courts, to recover his rights, was held to be entitled to avail himself of the exception in the former Law of Limitation (Regulation III of 1793, Sec. 14) although part of the proceedings was erroneous in enforcing an order made by a single Judge of the Sudder Court, which was ineffectual by reason of its not being confirmed by a second Judge. Doorgapersad Roy Chowdhry v. Tarapersad Roy Chowdhry, 4 W. R., P. C., 163.

In a suit for mesne profits, under Section 14, Regulation III of 1793, the plaintiff is entitled to wasilat for twelve years before suit, excluding from such computation the period of pendency of the suit for possession from the date of the plaint till the final decree (Steer and Kemp, J. dissentientibus). Obhoy Gobind Chowdhry v. Rana Surnoyee, W. R., F. B., 163.

The pendency of a suit to set aside a revenue sale is not a legal reason within the meaning of Section 14, Regulation III, 1793, to support a plea of limitation. Munnoo Bebe v. Nundkishore Lall and others, 6 W. R., 57.

Where a party in possession of an estate is a bond-fide purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, and the real owner had neglected for 25 years to assert her right to the estate, mere distant residence was held not to be a sufficient cause to preclude the owner from making an earlier assertion of her right so as to save her from limitation by bringing her within the exceptio of Section 14, Regulation III, 1793, and Section 3, Regulation II of 1805. Sheikh Indad Ali and others v. Musamut Koothy Begum, 6 W. R., P. C., 24.

A zemindar suing for resumption of alleged invalid lakheraj land under Section 19, Regulation X of 1793, is not limited to time, provided he can prove that, at some time subsequent to the Decennial Settlement, the land sought to be resumed was part of his mâl estate, and had paid rent. Gopal Chunder Shah and others v. Bkoho Tarinee Dossie, mother and guardian of Ashoothow Chundra and others, 7 W. R., 240.

A previous suit was brought in 1859, which was not finally decided in appeal by the High Court until December, 1865, the effect of which decision was to take the talook then in dispute out of the class of those protected by Section 51, Regulation VIII, 1793, and to make it liable to enhancement. Held that the plaintiff's cause of action for rent did not accrue until ascertainment of the rent by that decision, and that her present suit for about five years' rent from 1st July, 1859, having been brought within one year from the date of that decision, could be maintained. Madhub Chunder Ghose v. Radhika Chowkdrain, 6 W. R., Act X R., 42.

A claim to immoveable property cannot be barred if not brought within one year of the proclamation issued under Section 7, Regulation V of 1799, which applies only to moveable property. Shib Ram Lal and others v. Raj Coomar Miller and others, 6 W. R., 48.

(8) Regulation 1, 1802 (Bombay Code).

The offer of a specific sum of money by way of compromise, in no way involving an admission of the justice of the plaintiff's demand further than what may be inferred from the offer of any compromise (an inference which is never permitted), cannot bring the plaintiffs within the exception, in Section 13, Regulation I of 1800, of the Bombay Code, under which a suit is barred by limitation if not brought within twelve years from accrual of the cause of action.

The defendant's residence beyond the limits of the E. I. Co.'s Court is not a good and sufficient cause, within the meaning of the same exceptions, to excuse the plaintiff's delay in suing beyond the (c) Regulations, 1802 (Madras Code).

Where plaintiff's ancestors mortgaged land and the mortgagee obtained possession on condition that the produce should extinguish interest,—Held that the plaintiff's suit was not barred by the Law of Limitation, although the transaction took place twelve years before the passing of Regulation XI of 1802.

Held also that in such a case no cause of action could accrue until something was done to render the friendly possession hostile. Vanneri Purushot-taman Namhudiv v. Patanatil Kanju Menavan, 2 Mad. Rep., 382.

Where a bond was seized under legal process of attachment after it had become due, but before the lapse of twelve years from its date, and remained under attachment for several years,—Held that there was "good and sufficient cause" for the lapse of time within the meaning of Regulation II of 1802, Section 18, Clause 4, and that a suit on the bond was therefore not barred. Kiddarbaча Sakib v. Rangarasami Nayak, 1 Mad. Rep., 150.

A suit is not barred by limitation under Clause 4, Section 18, Regulation II, 1802, of the Madras Code, if the plaintiff prefers his claim within the prescribed period to a Court of competent jurisdiction, and is prevented from commencing his suit in proper time by no neglect on his part, but by the irregular proceedings of the Court to which his claim is preferred. Naraguntty Lushmedavamah v. Vengama Naidoo, 1 W. R., P. C., 30.

"The appellant, a zemindar, sued to recover a portion of the zemindary granted by his grandfather upwards of forty years ago, upon the ground that the grant was not made in conformity with the requirements of Regulation XXV of 1802, and that, in the absence of the observance of the formalities there prescribed, the grant was void."

Held that more than twelve years having elapsed since the title accrued to the person under whom the plaintiff derived his right to resume, the appeal should be dismissed. Sri Rajah Setu Ram Khrisna v. Sri Jogunti Setayamanna Gdru, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 67.

(d) Regulations, 1803.

The words "other good and sufficient cause" in Clause 3, Section 18, Regulation II, 1803, of the Bengal Code, include insanity, whether there has been or is a commission of lunacy or the like or not; and the word "precluded" in the same clause does not mean precluded during the whole term of twelve years or merely at its commencement, but means in effect precluded during any part of it.

In computing the twelve years' period of limitation there should not be reckoned any time elapsing while the person for the time being entitled to seek redress was not free from disablity. Troun and Solareli v. The E. I. Company; The Hostle Mr. Dyce Sombre; The E. I. Company, 4 W. R., P. C., 111.

This case which was originally instituted in the Zillah Court at the time when no regulation for the limitation of suits applicable to the suit existed but Section 18, Regulation II, 1803, but which having been appealed from the Zillah Court, was pending at the time that Regulation II of 1805, which corrected the Regulation of 1803, was passed, was held to be subject to the Regulation of 1805, as regards the forcible and violent possession taken by the defendants, who could not be allowed to plead their wrong in support of the plea of limitation. Lall Dokul Singh v. Lall Roorder Purtab Singh, 5 W. R., P. C., 95.

(c) Regulations, 1805 and 1812.

A suit by Government to establish its right and title to a julkur is barred by limitation under Section 1, Regulation II, 1805, if brought after the expiration of sixty years' adverse possession against Government.

The onus is on a plaintiff to remove the bar of limitation pleaded by a defendant, by showing that he (the plaintiff) had possession within the period prescribed by law. The Collector of Rungpore v. Prasanna Coomr Tagore, 5 W. R., 115.

Under Regulation II, 1805, sixty years is fixed as the absolute limit, beyond which neither fraud nor any other special allegation will give a cause of action.

In a suit by Government against ghatwals the defendants were found to have been in possession "for a very long time," and although they had failed to prove possession in excess of sixty years, the onus was held to lie on the Government to prove possession within sixty years. Bromanund Gossain v. The Government, 5 W. R., 136.

Limitation bars, under Regulation II, 1805, any enquiry into the title of persons who hold by purchase from one who was in peaceful possession without payment of rent for sixty years before the date of suit. Anundo Moyee Dosses v. J. Mackenzie, W. R., 5.

The nullum tempus clause of Section 3, Regulation II, 1805, does not apply to a case where the occupant was not a mortgagee or depositary, otherwise than as he was subject to pay a portion of the proceeds of the property to another during her lifetime. George James Gordon v. Khajah Aboo Ma-homed Khan, 5 W. R., P. C., 68.

A suit for rent is barred under Clause 3, Section 3, Regulation II, 1805, against a person who has been, by himself, or by those under whom he claims, in peaceful possession without payment of rent for sixty years before the commencement of the suit.

The clause takes away from the Courts all authority to take cognizance of any suit whatever if the cause of action shall have arisen sixty years before the institution of the suit; it precludes all enquiry into any original defect in the title under which the possession commenced, and makes it unavailing to show that the possession commenced under a grant made null and void by Regulation XIX of 1793. Chundrabultee Dabia v. Luckhee Doo Chowdhraw, 5 W. R., P. C., 1.

Suit for the recovery of rents by the Government of Bengal, in virtue of the Statutes 3 and 4, Wm. IV, cap. 41, authorizing the Crown to appoint the East India Company to take charge of appeals, and bring them to a hearing. The recovery of these costs does not constitute "a LIMITATION UNDER EARLY ACTS AND REGULATIONS.

Where the defendant in a suit for ejectment, on refusal to give a kubuleet, pleaded limitation generally, and it was found that the defendant had been in possession from before the Decennial Settlement, the question of limitation by reason of sixty years' possession was substantially raised, and the plaintiff was declared barred under Clause 3, Section 3 of Regulation XI of 1805. The Government v. W. Ferguson, 9 W. R., 158.

The extension of the time limited for suing in respect of rights to lands, &c., from twelve to sixty years, where the persons in possession have acquired it by violence, fraud, or by any other unjust or dishonest means as provided by Regulation XI, 1805, Section 2, is subject to the proviso in Clause 2, that "the plaintiff shall set forth the same distinctly either in his petition of plaint or in his replication." Where he has not done so the Judge cannot make a decree giving the plaintiff possession, on the ground that although there has been an adverse possession for more than twelve years, such possession was obtained by fraud or violence. Ramkany Doss v. Kissen Chunder Roy, Marsh., 22.

Section 5, Regulation XX of 1812 (concerning the registration of "bonds, promissory notes, and generally of obligations for the payment of money") is not applicable to hoondees or other similar negotiable mercantile securities. Boistub Churn Doss v. Prem Chund Mitter, 4 W. R., 98.

(f) Regulation VIII, 1819.

The special rules of limitation in Clause 5, Section 17, Regulation VIII of 1819, refer only to the disposal of the sale proceeds of a putnee sale, and do not apply to a suit to recover consideration-money paid for a dur-putnee cancelled by the sale of the putnee for arrears of rent. Such a suit is governed by the general rules of limitation under Act XIV of 1827. Judoonath Bhuttacharjee v. Nobo Kristo Moorkerjee, 3 W. R., S. C. C. Ref., 2.

Regular suit against a gomastah's immoveable property under Clause 4, Section 18, Regulation VIII, 1819, after failure to recover in execution in a summary suit under Regulation VII, 1799. Held that the cause of action in the regular suit was the same as that in the summary suit, and that the period of limitation must be reckoned from the time when that cause of action accrued, and not from the time when the summary decree in respect of it was given, or from the time at which the plaintiff first discovered that he could not obtain satisfaction of the decree in the summary suit. Sreennath Ghosal v. Kenaram Singh, 5 W. R., 100.

(g) Regulation VII, 1822.

A plaintiff who seeks in the Civil Court to establish a right to settlement under Regulation VII, 1822, and to reverse the orders of the revenue authorities in the defendant's favour, must sue within twelve years. A Court deciding a case on limitation ought also to go into the merits; so that in case a higher Court reverses the decision on limitation a re-mand may be unnecessary. Shibo Doorga Chowdhryn and others v. Syud Hossein Ali Chowdhr, 6 W. R., 218.

(h) Regulation V, 1827 (Bombay Code).

When Hindu coparceners have, for a period of more than thirty years, held shares different from these which as such coparceners they would be entitled to by law, and no separation is proved between the parties, the coparcener holding less than his propershare can sue to recover his full quantum, and his claim is not barred either by Regulation V of 1827 or Act XIV of 1859. Sako Narayan Khandal Kur v. Narayan Bhikaji Khandal Kur, 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 238.

The plaintiff in 1861 sued to recover his share in a watan. The defendants had been in actual possession of it from 1811 to 1830, when the Government attached the watan and enjoyed its revenues till 1845. In 1846 it was restored to the defendants. Held that the defendants had unimpromptuous possession for more than thirty years, under Clause 1 of Section I of Regulation V of 1827. Lado Lakshman v. Krishnaji Sadashid, et al., 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 41.

If a proprietor of certain land loses all title to it through the operation of the Statute of Limitations, but subsequently intervenes and holds it for a year or two twenty-eight years before action brought, while Regulation V of 1827 was in force, he cannot rely on this possession to defeat the statute, but must show affirmatively that this intervention was rightful and in virtue of proprietorship, and such as to supersede the previous prescriptive right acquired against him. Ram Chunder Bin Madhowrao and another v. Ajabee Wulid Yes and others, 1 Bom. Rep., 64.

A case is within the exception contained in Clause 2, Section 7, Regulation V of 1827 of the Bombay Code (Limitation of suits), by reason of a claim having been preferred to the authority that was then the supreme power in the State, although a satisfactory and binding decree was not obtained. Jeywajee and others v. Primbukjee and others, 6 W. R., P. C., 38.

(j) Act XIII, 1848.

The order of a Deputy Collector under Regulation VII, 1822, declaring the lands in dispute to be paykan jagheen lands, is an award within the meaning of Act XIII of 1848, and any suit to set it aside must be brought within three years of the order. No deduction on account of minority or other legal disability can be made from the period of limitation prescribed by Act XIII of 1848. Modhoo Adudun Singh v. Rajah Purice Bulbul Paul, W. R., 1864, 140.

Act XIII of 1848 "for the greater security of possessory titles in the Presidency of Bengal, derived from awards made by the revenue authorities und LIMITATION UNDER ACT X OF 1859.

Regulation VII of 1822, Regulation IX of 1825, and Regulation IX of 1833 of the Bengal Code, by Section 3, enacts that no suit shall be entertained for contesting the justice of any award of the revenue authorities under any of these regulations made after the passing of this Act, after the expiration of three years from the date of the final award. A suit for the amendment of a map was referred by the Deputy Collector to an Ameen for the purpose of a local investigation, and the Ameen returned that, neither of the parties appearing before him, he was unable to make the investigation, whereupon the Deputy Collector struck the case out. Held that this was not an award within the meaning of the Act. Golam Koodsee Chowdry v. Rashu Chunder Ghose, Marsh., 323.

Where the plaintiff's title was recognized by the settlement officer in 1836, who assigned an allowance of 5 per cent. on the Government demand,—Held that the Collector had no power in subsequent years during the pendency of this completed settlement to interfere with the arrangement of the settlement officer, except to the extent allowed by Section 20, Regulation VII of 1822. Where the suit was not an award as between the contending parties, it was not incumbent on the Collector the power of remodelling the arrangements completed by the settlement officer under Section 10 of the Regulation; nor can the notification of Government extend to revenue officers an authority that the law does not allow to them.

The limitation declared by Act XIII of 1848, and Clause 6, Section 1, Act XIV of 1859, applies only to suits for the purpose of contesting the justice of an award as between the contending parties, and not to those object of which is to amend a settlement and establish the right of persons who were not before the Collector. Held that the cause of action to the plaintiff did not accrue from the date of the orders of Government directing to discontinue the payment of malikana, but from that of the Collectors by which it became known to the plaintiff that he would henceforth be deprived of his proprietary title.

Where the Collector failed to give notice of his intention to dispose of the estates, it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to contest the sale within the period prescribed by Section 5, Act XXIII of 1863. Rai Hunmut Singh v. The Collector of Bijnoun, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 258.

In order to apply the provisions of Act XIII of 1848 in regard to limitation, it must be shown that there was an award, i.e., an adjudication after a contention between the parties before the survey authorities.

Under the general Law of Limitation the cause of action in a suit for possession by an auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue arises from the date of purchase. Hurree Mohun Thakoor v. David Andrews, W. R., 1864, 30.

When a person appealed from an award of a Collector under Act XIII of 1848, which appeal was struck off for default of prosecution, and he then sued to set aside the award,—Held that limitation commenced to run from the date of the award, and not from the date of the order in the ineffectual appeal proceedings. Ghulam Durbesh Chowdry v. Sham Kishore Roy, W. R., 1864, 378.

The rejection by a survey officer of a claim because it had not been brought forward sooner, is not an award within the scope of the special limitation of Act XIII of 1848. Shama Soondery Dabee v. Prosonno Coomar Tagore, 1 W. R., 114.

A suit to set aside an award made by the survey authorities is not barred by Act XIII of 1848, when the plaintiff was no party to that award, but is an auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue subsequent to the award. Pureeag Singh v. Shib Ram Chunder Mandal, 3 W. R., 165.

No deduction or allowance is made by law for legal disability from the period of limitation prescribed by Act XIII of 1848. Limitation against an adopted son will count from the time of his attaining majority. Huro Chunder Chowdry v. Kishen Coomar Chowdry, 5 W. R., 27.

Act XIII of 1848 applies only to suits for contesting the justice of an award as between the contending parties, and not to suits for the purpose of amending a settlement, and establishing the rights of persons who were not parties contesting between themselves before the Collector. Komal Kishen Surkur Bissonath Chuckerbutty, W. R., F. B., 128.

An order of a Superintendent of Survey striking off an appeal is not an award within the meaning of Act XIII of 1848. Sham Kant Banerjee v. Gopal Lall Tagore, 1 W. R., 328.

The rejection by a survey officer of a claim, because it had not been brought forward sooner, is not an award within the scope of the special limitation of Act XIII of 1848. Shama Soondery Dabee v. Prosonno Coomar Tagore, 1 W. R., 114.

A. and B. were similarly affected by a survey award. A appealed, but B did not. Held, in a suit to set aside the award, that B. had not dispute the period of limitation from the date of the order on A.'s appeal. Held also that B's co-sharers, though they did not appear in the proceedings of award, were bound thereby. Tulsiram Doss v. Mohamed Afzul alias Mirza, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 13; 10 W. R., 48.

A. appealed from the award of a survey officer to the Commissioner, who summarily rejected the appeal. The order of the Commissioner was confirmed by the Board of Revenue without entering into the merits. Held that the period of limitation runs from the date of the order of the Board of Revenue. Krishna Chundra Doss v. Mahomed Afzul, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 11; 10 W. R., 51.

11.—LIMITATION UNDER ACT X OF 1859.

Suits under Act X of 1859 are governed by the special rules of limitation therein mentioned. Rance Armad Koonwar v. Joy Kurun Lall, 1 W. R., 349.

The period of limitation within which suits must be brought for rent due at the time of the passing of Act X of 1859, must be reckoned from 29th April, 1859 (the date of the passing of the Act), and not from 1st August, 1859 (the date on which the Act came into operation).

S/nrnamoyi v. Sims/tee.Maoklu'Barmam'andot/wrr, in three years from the close of that year. Ram' possessio took place, and plaintiffcould sue with become due in the year in which that restora tion to pay the rent, and that the particular gation to pay the rent, and that the particular

The fixing of the rate of rent in an execution proceeding of the Civil Court will not save the limitation under Act X of 1859. When a suit is pending to determine the rate of rent, back rent can be sued for only within one year of the determination of the rate. Nawab Muni Siddi Nazir Ali Khan Bahadar

Limitation in rent cases must be governed by Act X and not by Act XIV of 1859. Mahomed
Kale Shikdar v. Sheikh Ali Hossein Chowdhry, 3
W. R., Act X R., 5.

A, a zemindar, sold the rights of B, his putneedar, for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819. This sale was subsequently set aside at the suit of B for irregularity. A then sued B for the arrears, under Act X of 1859, and B raised the defence that the suit was barred, more than three years having elapsed from the close of the year in which the arrear became due.

Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that, upon the setting aside of the putnee sale, the putneeedar took back the estate subject to the obligation to pay the rent, and that the particular arrears of rent claimed must be taken to have become due in the year in which that restoration to possession took place, and plaintiff could sue with in three years from the close of that year. Rani Shurmnamoyi v. Shoshet Mookhi Barmari andothers, 2 B. L. R., P. C., to; S. C., 1 W. R., P. C., 5.

Act X of 1859 does not authorize the recovery of only three years' rent. Thus, where a suit was commenced within three years from the end of the Bengal year 1268, the plaintiff was held entitled to recover the whole of that year's rent. Doorga Doss Chatterjee v. Nobin Mohun Ghosal, 6 W. R., Act
X R., 63.

The fact of a person obtaining a decree against other parties in a suit for rent under Act X of 1859, in which a third party unsuccessfully intervened, does not affect the rights of the intervenor or bar the intervenor's present suit for possession merely because it was not instituted within a year of the decree for rent which the intervenor does not ask to be set aside. Mussumat Mungrao Oobadha and others v. Mussumat Chamelee Koonwar, 6 W.
R., Act X R., 38.

12.—Limitation under Act XIV of 1859.

(a) Generally.

Under Act XIV of 1859 a suit for mesne profits may be brought within twelve years from the date on which a decree for possession was passed. John

Section 32 of Act VIII of 1859 imposes upon the Court of first instance the duty of taking any legal objection apparent on the face of the plaint, and the fact that a portion of the claim is evidently barred by the Law of Limitation from which no ground of exemption is stated, is an objection which ought to be noticed by the Court when receiving the plaint; or if not taken notice of then it may be at any subsequent stage of the suit.

The Judge in appeal is bound to decree according to the Law of Limitation applicable to the case as stated by the plaintiff himself, although the objection may not be raised in the grounds of appeal; and his omitting to do so is an error or defect in the decision of the case on the merits and a ground of special appeal. MukvamaSohiji KesaRaj andanother

Courts to which Act XIV of 1859 applies, such suit will be barred at the expiration of six years from that date. Sreemutty Heramonee Dossie v. Promothanath Ghose, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 233.

The Law of Limitation applicable to a suit by the heirs of a Mahometan wife for her dower is not confined to the period of limitation provided for by the Act. Missamut Phoollas Koer v. Lall Jaggersur Sahi, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 340.

The defendant, who was the owner of a moiety of certain property (the plaintiff and another being owners of the other moiety), mortgaged his moiety to the plaintiff; the mortgage-deed, dated 11th June, 1863, contained a covenant to pay off the principal and interest at the expiration of a year, and gave a power of sale in default of payment. The whole property, including the mortgaged portion, was conveyed to one I. D. on 27th November, 1864, by a bill of sale executed by the three owners of the property. On the execution of the bill of sale the sum of Rs. 16,250, the half of the purchase-money which belonged to the defendant, was handed over to the plaintiff in part payment as being then due on the mortgage. In a suit for the balance, brought in November, 1869, the defence was that it was barred by the Law of Limitation.

The period of limitation is three years from the date of the instrument for which the suit was brought. In the case of a suit for money lent, with interest, the period of limitation is the same if the money is due at a definite time or if it becomes payable on demand. If the money is not due at a definite time, the period of limitation is six years from the date of the last payment of such money, or the date on which the plaintiff claims to have been paid. If the suit is brought within the period of limitation, it will be held that it has been brought within the period of limitation.

A suit for specific performance of a contract must be brought within the period of limitation. If the suit is brought within the period of limitation, it will be held that it has been brought within the period of limitation.

The plaintiff's voluntary absence abroad after the suit was commenced does not bar the operation of Act XIV of 1859. Varikata Subba Pattar v. Gisami Ameazv. Shahazadee Omomdah Begum and others, 6 W. R., 111.

Where a suit for money lent is instituted after the lapse of the period of time prescribed by the Act of Limitation, Act XIV of 1859, a payment on account shown to have been made by the defendant within that period will not take the case out of the operation of the Act. Goura Beebe Kissen Misser, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 224.

In cases of application for revival of decrees struck off before the passing of Act XIV of 1859, that Act operates from the date of the Governor-General's assent thereto, and not from the date of its having come into operation. Shahzada Mahomed Buserooddeen v. Nawab Hajee Mahomed Khan Kuswlbash, 4 W. R., Mis., 13.

Where a suit was pending he sued in the Small Cause Court to recover damages from defendants for obstructing him from fishing, and his suit was dismissed as premature. After the final determination of the suit in which his title to the fishery was tried he brought the present suit to recover damages, and the Small Cause Court decided that the case being for damages to personal property, the six years' limitation was applicable to it. Shurut Soondery Debeev. Elahee Buksh v. Sheo Narain Singh, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 360.

A suit substantially to vary the boundaries laid down in a survey award must be brought within three years from the date of the award. Jankeeram Mohunt v. Haradun Banaree, W. R., 1864, 38.

The period of limitation is three years in cases where there is a written agreement or contract which could have been registered at the time and place of execution thereof, unless registration shall have been made within six months of the date of such agreement or contract.

regulation be so registered; the period of limitation is six years. Veliappen Chetty v. Notoo Thevan, 2 Ind. Jur., O. S., 11.

Where a co-sharer sues a lumberdar for profits of his share, and also states various acts of the lumberdar in taking the land and appropriating the profits, the suit was a suit by a co-sharer for the share of his profits, and the limitation applicable to such suits was three years and not one year. Sheikh Khojeyee and others v. Mahomed Taque, 2 Agra Rep., R. C., 11.

Although the relation of agents and principals subsisted between the plaintiffs and defendants, yet, where suit was brought on an account stated, and in reference to transactions of purchase and sale in which the plaintiffs were the vendors and the defendants the purchasers,—Hold that the suit was barred if not brought within three years. Hold also that an acknowledgment by one partner sufficient to save limitation will not bind another partner—Clause 9; and that an acknowledgment of the debt by the defendant, not subscribed by the vendee, is equivalent to a document of evidence of any express agreement as to when the fees are to be paid, the implied agreement must subsist between, the plaintiffs and defendants,—Hold that the suit was barred if not brought within three years, under Section 20. The consideration of the question as to the date from which the three years should be calculated was not necessary for the determination of this appeal; but the Privy Council inclined to the view that the claim for the rents of 1272 was barred if not brought within three years. Held that the right sought to be enforced; and as the question was not one of practical importance their Lordships would not express dissent from the Full Bench ruling above referred to, in which it was held that when the decree of the lower Court was reversed, modified, or affirmed the decree passed by the Appellate Court was the final decree in the suit, further than by saying that there might be cases in which the Appellate Court, particularly on special appeal, might see good reasons to limit its decision to a simple dismissal of the appeal, without confirming a decree erroneous or questionable, yet not open to examination or special appeal; and their Lordships suggested the expediency in all cases expressly to embody in a decree of affirmation so much of the decree below as it is necessary to affirm. Krishna Ghose Roy v. Burrho Kant Ghose Roy, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 292.

The plaintiff had sued the defendant at the end of the year 1272 to recover arrears of rent for 1271, and to eject him for non-payment. The litigation lasted till 1276, when the plaintiff obtained a decree, which however was not executed, as the defendant paid the amount and costs within fifteen days. In 1276 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the rents of 1272 and of subsequent years. It was held that the plaintiffs claim for the rents of 1272 was not barred by the lapse of three years, under Section 32, Act X of 1859. Dindayal Paramanik v. Radha Kishori Debi and others, 8 B. L. R., 586; and 17 S. W. R., C. R., 415.

A suit against a del-credere agent on a balance of accounts in respect of dealings in regards of which there is no express written contract is governed by the three year's limitation prescribed by Clause 9, Section 1, Act XIV of 1859. Dukur Pershad Bustooru v. Mussamut Fooloomara Dulru, 16 S. W. R., P. C., 35.

(c) Six Years.

The right to sue on a foreign judgment, as on a new cause of action, accrues on the day when the foreign decree was made, and is barred in all Courts to which Act XIV of 1859 applies at the expiration of six years from that date. Heera Monee Dossia v. Promotho Nath Ghose and others, 8 W. R., 32.

A suit for mesne profits brought after two years from the passing of Act XIV of 1859, pursuant to a decree for recovery of possession within the said two years, is governed by the provisions of that Act, and must be limited to the mesne profits due for a period of six years before its institution. James Gray and others v. Anundo Mohun Moiter, 6 W. R., 288.

In a suit instituted after Act XIV of 1859 came into force, mesne profits can only be recovered for the six years next preceding the institution of the suit.

A regular suit for mesne profits will lie after a suit for possession, if in the latter suit no question of mesne profits was raised or decided. Pratap
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

The cause of action for such profits is the date upon which they annually become due, and no deduction can be made on account of the pendency of the suit for possession. The Nawab Nazim of Bengal v. Raj Coomaree Debba, 6 W. R., 113.

In a suit for mesne profits, Act XIV allows no deduction for the pendency of the suit for possession. The only deduction which that Act allows is for the pendency of a suit not adjudicated on its merits owing to some objection as to jurisdiction, &c. Issureenund Dutt Jha v. Parbutty Churn Jha, 3 W. R., 13.

Under Act XIV of 1859 mesne profits can be decreed only for six years before institution of suit. The cause of action for the mesne profits is the date on which they become annually due. Maharaj Koore Ramprat Singh v. J. Furlong, 3 W. R., 38.

In a suit to recover from the defendant the amount of purchase money paid by the plaintiff upon a sale to him of certain land by the defendant's father, and the costs incurred by the plaintiff in defending his title to the property against a prior purchaser for the same land from the defendant's father,—Hold that the period of limitation was six years.

Held also that the cause of action arose on the discovery of the fraud upon the plaintiff, and that there was knowledge of the fraud at all events in October, 1859, the date of the judgment of the Civil Court affirming the title of the prior purchaser, notwithstanding the presentation of an appeal from that decision, and notwithstanding that the plaintiff remained in possession of the land until 1861.

The present suit, having been brought more than six years after the judgment of the Civil Court, was held to be barred. Ramaswami Mudali v. Velayuda Mudali, 4 Mad. Rep., 266.

The period of limitation for recovery of moneys deposited in a government treasury, the equivalent whereof was to be returned, does not exceed six years. Chowdree Sheoraj Singh v. The Collector of Moradabad, 2 N. W. R., 379.

M. on the 12th October, 1855, drew a bill of exchange, payable three months after date, in favour of B., which was accepted by J. Before the bill became due B. endorsed it to P., who again endorsed it for full value to M. B. & Co., of which firm M. L. was a partner. M. D. & Co. discounted the bill with G., who presented it at maturity to J., who dishonoured it. G. thereupon sued M. L., and recovered a decree, which M. L. satisfied. M. L. thereupon brought the present suit, on the 18th February, 1865, against J. as the acceptor of the bill for the amount he paid under G.'s decree. Held (confirming the decision of Norman, J.) that the suit was barred by limitation, more than six years having elapsed since the date of the bill of exchange, the plaintiff's cause of action having accrued when the bill became payable and the acceptor refused to pay. Mohendro Lall Bose v. Jadub Kissen Singh, 14 S. W. R., 5.

A suit to avoid a Butwara division by the collector may be brought within six years. Codays Singh v. Paluck Singh, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 271.

(d) Twelve Years.

Where the suit was for possession of certain land, on the allegation that it was land belonging to plaintiff's village, but submerged at the time of settlement, the plaintiff's claim, if he could show the identity of the land submerged with the land which has since been left dry, would not be barred by limitation, unless it could be shown that some other person had been in adverse possession for twelve years before the plaintiff preferred his claim, and that such adverse possession commenced from a time when plaintiff was in a position to dispute it. Hur Sahal v. Mahomed Daim Khan and others, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 64.

Neither Section 77, Act X of 1859, nor Section 5, Act XIV of 1859, but the ordinary Law of Limitation (viz., twelve years), applies to a suit to obtain a declaration of title by setting aside a plea of partition urged by the defendants in a former suit for rent under Act X of 1859. Kundur Narain Singh v. Bundoo Ram Sein, 3 W. R., Act X R., 6.

Where a creditor sues to recover money advanced by him on the deposit of title-deeds of property, his claim is governed by the limitation applying to debts; but where he seeks to have his lien realized it is a claim to realize an interest in land, to which the limitation of twelve years applies. Peery Mohun Bosev. Gobind Chundra Addy, 10 W. R., 56.

A Hindu widow was held to be barred by limitation in a suit to recover the undivided half of her husband's estate, of which she had allowed the defendant to remain in possession for more than twelve years. Brokobshano Dossia v. Hurro Sondery Dossia and others, 10 W. R., 264.

In a suit to recover possession of lands as heir where the plea of limitation is raised, the plaintiff must prove that he, or the person through whom he claims, was in possession within twelve years prior to the institution of the suit; limitation running not merely from the date on which the plaintiff's right to sue accrued, but from that on which the cause of action arose. Bholoo Mundul v. Moted Lall Ghose, 9 W. R., 251.

In deciding an issue on the Statute of Limitations in a suit for a share of a joint inheritance, the Court below found that the plaintiff had not given any evidence of possession up to the date of the suit, and decided the issue against her. Held that such finding was inconclusive, the real issue being whether the joint possession continued up to any time within the period of twelve years next before the commencement of the suit. Mussumat Indumonee Dabea, guardian, &c., v. Kupnarain Chaud Mosoomdar and others, Marsh, 172; W. R., F. B., 52.

In suits for recovery of hogs, which are of the nature of claims of money charged upon or payable out of land, the period of limitation is twelve years. Bharatangtee Manasangtee v. Navanaidhuraya Narayaraya, 1 Bom. Rep., 186.

Plaintiff sued to recover certain lands attached to two villages of which he became proprietor in 1857. It was found that the defendants had been in possession for upwards of fifty years before the suit was brought.

Held that the defendants' possession was hostile, and the suit was therefore barred by the Statute of Limitations. Naroyana Choolanghi v. T. Venkata Kondal Rao Paiutul, 2 Mad. Rep., 391.

Suit by the official assignee of a deceased insolvent to recover a talook conveyed (several years before his insolvency) by the insolvent, who was sole or chief acting executor of his father-in-law's will, as a security for his own debt to his father-in-law, not to any other person in trust for the benefit of any parties who might be entitled to the estate, but to the insolvent's wife, who was the tenant for life of the residue. Held that, in the absence of any proof of fraud, the widow's continuous and adverse possession for more than twelve years barred the suit. John Cochran v. Hurrosondry Debia, 4 W. R., F. C., 103.

The plaintiff having been dispossessed under a certificate of sale which was not conformable to or warranted by the sale itself, and having made no complaint to the Court below, the Court was executing the decree, is entitled to bring his suit for confirmation of his title, and to be restored to the possession of the property from which he was ousted at any time within twelve years from the time of his dispossess. Pertaab Chandra Chowdhry and others v. Brojo Lali Shaha and others, 7 W. R., 253.

Where a person claims possession of an increment as by ancestral right, his suit must be brought within twelve years from the formation of the increment and the possession of it by another party on adverse title. Doya Mose Dossie and others v. Luchme Naran Shaha and others, 7 W. R., 457.

Twelve and not three years' limitation applies to decrees of the High Court, as being a Court established by Royal Charter. Isahn Chunder Chowdry and others v. Ingo Dishuru and others, 8 W. R., 267.

The period of limitation in the case of a bond stipulating not merely for the personal security of the debtor, but also for a security on the land mentioned therein, is twelve years.

Such a bond gives rise to a charge and interest in the land mentioned therein, and confers a right to sue to enforce the charge by sale of the property. Nowab Oomrao Begum v. Khoozeram and another, 11, N. W. R., 181.

A suit was brought upon an unregistered and registrable mortgage-bond. The lower Courts treated the suit as one for the debt due, and held the suit barred, it having been brought more than three years after the debt was payable. Held, on special appeal, that as the relief prayed for fairly implied the recovery of the debt by the enforcement of the mortgage security, and the subject-matter stated in the plaint showed ground for that relief, the suit must be considered as brought to recover in respect of an interest in the land hypothecated, and the period of limitation was twelve years. Tonna Venkataswamy v. Busireddy Kindareday, 5 Mad. Rep., 364.

Plaintiff having been dispossessed under a certificate of sale which was not conformable to or warranted by the sale itself, was declared entitled (having made no complaint to the Court which was executing the decree) to bring his suit for restoration to his property any time within
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

In a suit for a declaratory decree as to a Magistrate's order under Section 321, Code of Criminal Procedure, the period of limitation is twelve years and not three years. Meghraj Singh v. Kushdham Singh, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 281.

Where a landlord sued, after the lapse of more than twelve years from the date of his knowledge that a tenant was setting up a mokurruri title, for a declaration that the alleged mokurruri title was invalid, held that the suit was barred by lapse of time. Sheikh Nasinadin Hussein v. Lloyd, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 130; and 15 S. W. R., C. R., 232.

In a suit by an execution purchaser to recover possession of landed property where defendant pleaded limitation and plaintiff proves facts from which the Court is unable to draw conclusions of law for itself, plaintiff ought not to be strictly bound to the accrual of the cause of action alleged in his plaint, so long as that arose within 12 years before commencement of the suit. Mariam Begum v. Rye Churn Dut, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 269.

A suit for possession of a share in a mouzah on the allegation that plaintiff had been ousted therefrom by defendants, and that her late husband was joint in estate with his brother, under whom defendants claimed as purchasers at a sale in execution of a decree, was held bound by limitation, the suit having been brought at the close of 12 years from the date of plaintiff's ouster, and it appearing that defendants had been in undisturbed possession for 11 years 11 months and 1 day, that plaintiff's husband had, in two petitions filed respectively 27 and 29 years before the sale to the defendants, made unequivocal admissions of his having separated from his brother and prayed the collector to make a settlement with him separately from his brother, while there was no trustworthy evidence on the part of the plaintiff to show that the family was joint at any time within 12 years before the sale. Beer Chunder Goohe v. Gudadhur Koonoo and others, 6 W. R., 183.

A mortgagee who was empowered by his mortgage to take possession of the mortgaged property on default of payment in 1848, sued and obtained a decree for foreclosure against the mortgagors in 1860, and now sues the purchasers from the mortgagors who have been in possession ever since their purchase in 1846. Held that the plaintiff's right of action accrued in 1848, and that the decree in the foreclosure suit gave no starting-point, and could in no way affect the right of the purchasers who were not parties to that suit. Huro Chunder Goohe v. Gudadhur Koonoo and others, 6 W. R., 183.

(c) Sixty Years.

The period of limitation for a suit to redeem a mortgage of immoveable property is 60 years, and this apparently without reference to the nature of the title the mortgagee in possession is asserting. Semelq-lt makes no difference that the hostile possession is supposed to have commenced on a claim of the defendant to a title altogether inconsistent with the mortgage. Tanji v. Naganumna, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 137.

Suits for the recovery of immoveable property against a mortgagee or his legal representatives may be instituted within 60 years from the date of the original mortgage. Ajoodya Persaud and others v. Esharee Dyal and others, 10 W. R., 219.

Act XIV of 1859, Section 1.

Wrongful seizure of goods under process of law is not an "injury to personal property" within the meaning of Section 1. Damages should be based on the fall in the market and deterioration by exposure of the goods restrained from sale. Incherund v. Nunduram Singh, Cor. Rep., 3.

Section 1, Clause 1.

The defendant, a conditional vendee, foreclosed the mortgage, and subsequently sued the auction-purchaser of the rights of the conditional vendor for possession, and obtained a decree, in execution of which he obtained possession. Held that the suit of the plaintiff who claimed pre-emption was not barred by limitation, as it was instituted within one year from the date on which the vendee, whose possession under Section 264, Act VIII of 1859, was opposed in obtaining possession by the vendor, or some other person asserting an adverse title, but not when the vendor does not oppose, and the party opposing the khas possession of the purchaser is a mere farmer claiming to pay the same rent to the purchaser which he had paid to the vendor before the sale. Bechun v. Mahomed Yakool Khan, 3 W. R., 25.

Clause 1, Section 1 (limiting a pre-emption suit to one year from the time of the purchaser taking possession under the impeached sale), is applicable when the purchaser is opposed in obtaining possession by the vendor, or some other person asserting an adverse title, but not when the vendor does not oppose, and the party opposing the khas possession of the purchaser is a mere farmer claiming to pay the same rent to the purchaser which he had paid to the vendor before the sale. Bechun v. Mahomed Yakool Khan, 3 W. R., 25.

Possession under Section 264, Act VIII of 1859, being merely symbolic, was held to have no legal effect as regards limitation under Clause 1, Section 1, in a case of pre-emption. Mahomed Hossein v. Mokham Aby and others, 7 W. R., 195.

The words "taken possession" mean an actual possession of the property to which his title, originally conditional, had become absolute. Radhey Pandey v. Nund Komar Pandey, 3 Agra Rep., 164.

Held that a suit to set aside the sale of immovable property is barred by Act XIV of 1859 if not instituted within one year, although the sale may have been in execution of a decree obtained in a suit brought before Act VIII of 1859 came into operation. Ludoo Mui v. Mussamut Nusseebun, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 277.

The words "taken possession" mean some damage directly caused by some wrong means. A suit for damages caused by the stoppage of the water is not governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 2, Section 1. Ram Nath Roy Chowdhry v. Hurro Chunder Roy Chowdhry, 5 W. R., 50.

A suit by a mookhtar for salary is not barred by the limitation of one year prescribed in Clause 2, Section 1. If the plaintiff was engaged upon a distinct contract that he would be paid a fixed monthly salary, the limitation prescribed in Clause 9 would probably apply. Nito Gopal Ghose v. A. B. Mackintosh, 6 W. R., 11.

A suit to recover personal property carried away and appropriated to the use of the defendant, or the value of such property, is not a suit for damages for injury to personal property within the meaning of Clause 2, Section 1, but is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 16. Luchmeeput Singh v. Mahomed Mooneer, W. R., F. B., 126.

Clause 2, Sec. 1, applies only to suits for wages brought by a servant against the person liable as the master in whose service he had been employed, and the section does not apply to a suit brought by one Government servant against another for the recovery of a sum of public money received by the defendant as a disbursement on account of the wages of the plaintiff, to whom the defendant was legally bound to pay it over. Siva Rama Pillai v. Turnbill, 4 Mad. Rep., 43.

Clause 2, Section 1, does not apply to a suit brought to recover damages for the total and illegal appropriation of property. Ram Mondul Debia v. Dolechurn Dey Sircar, W. R., 1864.

A suit to recover personal property carried away and appropriated to the use of the defendant, or the value of such property, is not a suit for damages for injury to personal property within the meaning of Clause 2, Section 1, but is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 16. Luchmeeput Singh v. Mahomed Mooneer, W. R., F. B., 126.

in a suit to recover damages for the total and illegal appropriation of property. Ram Mondul Debia v. Dolechurn Dey Sircar, W. R., 1864.

A suit to establish a prescriptive claim to irrigation from a running stream and for damages caused by the stoppage of the water is not governed by the limitation described by Clause 2, Section 1, but by that applicable to suits for rights appertaining to real property, and for damages done to real property. Buddun Thakoor v. Mohunt Sunker Doss, W. R., 1864, 106.

The words "taken possession" mean an actual possession of the property to which his title, originally conditional, had become absolute. Radhey Pandey v. Nund Komar Pandey, 3 Agra Rep., 164.

Held that a suit to set aside the sale of immovable property is barred by Act XIV of 1859 if not instituted within one year, although the sale may have been in execution of a decree obtained in a suit brought before Act VIII of 1859 came into operation. Ludoo Mui v. Mussamut Nusseebun, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 277.

The words "taken possession" mean some damage directly caused by some wrong means. A suit for damages caused by the stoppage of the water is not governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 2, Section 1. Ram Nath Roy Chowdhry v. Hurro Chunder Roy Chowdhry, 5 W. R., 50.

A suit by a mookhtar for salary is not barred by the limitation of one year prescribed in Clause 2, Section 1. If the plaintiff was engaged upon a distinct contract that he would be paid a fixed monthly salary, the limitation prescribed in Clause 9 would probably apply. Nito Gopal Ghose v. A. B. Mackintosh, 6 W. R., 11.

A suit to recover personal property carried away and appropriated to the use of the defendant, or the value of such property, is not a suit for damages for injury to personal property within the meaning of Clause 2, Section 1, but is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 16. Luchmeeput Singh v. Mahomed Mooneer, W. R., F. B., 126.

Clause 2, Sec. 1, applies only to suits for wages brought by a servant against the person liable as the master in whose service he had been employed, and the section does not apply to a suit brought by one Government servant against another for the recovery of a sum of public money received by the defendant as a disbursement on account of the wages of the plaintiff, to whom the defendant was legally bound to pay it over. Siva Rama Pillai v. Turnbill, 4 Mad. Rep., 43.

Clause 2, Section 1, does not apply to a suit brought to recover damages for the total and illegal appropriation of property. Ram Mondul Debia v. Dolechurn Dey Sircar, W. R., 1864.

A suit to recover personal property carried away and appropriated to the use of the defendant, or the value of such property, is not a suit for damages for injury to personal property within the meaning of Clause 2, Section 1, but is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 16. Luchmeeput Singh v. Mahomed Mooneer, W. R., F. B., 126.

A teshildar is not a "servant" within the meaning of Clause 2, Section 1. Oroon Chandra Mundul v. Romanath Rubkhet, 10 W. R., 260.

A suit for damages for injury to crops is a suit for damages for injury to personal property within the meaning of Clause 2 of Section 1. Kashidad Gouvindhrai v. The B. B. & C. F. Railway Company, 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 114.

The defendant, who was a butvarra Ameen employed by the Collector, drew from the public treasury at Backergunj a sum of money to pay the establishment, but failed to pay the plaintiff, who was a mohurrir under him. In a suit against the Ameen for recovery of his salary after a lapse of three years from the time when the salary became due,—Held that the plaintiff was not a servant within the meaning of Clause 2 of Section 1; but that his claim was for money had and received on his account, and therefore he might bring his suit within three years from the date of such receipt.

Section 1, Clause 3.

Quare.—Whether the one year's limitation (of suits to set aside sales in execution of decrees) under Clause 3, Section 1, applies to a suit brought against a person who has obtained possession of property by delivery under Section 264, Act VIII of 1859. Bebe Suboorun v. Sheikh Golam Nijee, 2 W. R., 55.

A suit to set aside a sale of land in execution of a decree against a third party is not barred by limitation under Clause 3, Section 1, if brought within a year after the sale actually took place. Sreemunti Dossie v. Sheebanee Dabea, 5 W. R., 123.

Clause 3, Section 1, applies only to suits to set aside sales on account of irregularity and the like, but not to suits to set aside fraudulent deeds under colour of which the sale was made. Kissen Bullud Makatab v. Rokoonuddun Thakoor and others, 6 W. R., 395.

Where a claimant, without attempting to impede either the proceedings in the suit or in the decree or in the subsequent sale, seeks to recover property belonging to himself in which the judgment-debtor has no right or interest, and upon which, therefore, the sale in execution could have no legal operation,—Held that a suit of this nature is not a suit to set aside the "sale of property sold under an execution" within the meaning of Clause 3, Section 1; and it is not incumbent on such a claimant to sue as therein prescribed within one year from the date of sale. The plaint might ask in terms to avoid the sale, but such an allegation cannot alter the real nature of the suit, if it is otherwise sufficiently disclosed. Though there is a specification of the date of sale, at the time of sale, yet it is not the property specified, but only the right of the judgment-debtor therein, that is offered for sale and is conveyed, there appearing no provisions in the Procedure Code to contemplate the sale or transfer of anything more than the right and interest of the judgment-debtor, and the auction purchaser at a sale in execution acquires by the express terms of the conveyance to him, not the presumed title of the person in possession, or the apparent title in the Collector's books, but the right, title, land interest of the judgment-debtor in the property sold. Mahomed Buksh and others v. Mahomed Hossein and others, 4 Agra Rep., 171.

The limitation of one year provided by Section 1, Clause 3, is not applicable to a suit brought by a judgment-debtor to set aside an execution sale, on the ground that the decree-holder fraudulently got the property sold in execution of a previous satisfied decree. Section 256, Act VIII of 1859, does not bar such a claim. Budree v. Lokmun, 4 Agra Rep., 59.

Where a person's claim to attached property was not rejected, but the sale took place subject to it,—Held that he could sue to establish his right to the property at any time within twelve years, Clause 3, Section 1, not applying to such a case. Ruineshur Koondoo v. Majedath Bilee, 7 W. R., 252.

A suit for damages for injury to crops is a suit to extend to one year under Clause 3, Section 1; but not to suitsto set aside fraudulent deeds under the provisions of Section 12, Regulation XLV of 1793, and for the reversal of a Judge's order in appeal conferring the sale, the period of limitation was held (under Section 9, Act XIV of 1859) to run at the latest from the date of the Judge's order of confirmation, and to extend to one year under Clause 3, Section 1.

Clause 3 does not bar a suit to set aside a sale of land in execution of a decree against a third party, if brought within a year after the sale actually took place. Sreemunti Dossie v. Sheebanee Dabea, 5 W. R., 123.

A purchased immoveable property at an auction sale. The same property was subsequently purchased by B. at another auction sale,—Held that a suit brought by A. against B. to recover the property was virtually a suit to set aside the last sale, and that it should have been brought within one year from the date of that sale; and that Clause 3 (and not Clause 12) of Section 1 was applicable. Krisnafo Joshi v. Mukund Chinawas, 2 Bom. Rep., 18.

Section 1, Clause 4.

Clause 4 of Section 1 of Act XIV of 1859 is not applicable where the revenue, for recovery of a portion of which suit is brought, was a payment made to the Government on account of a clear and admitted liability, the object being to save the estate from sale.

Plaintiff may be entitled to recover from a co-sharer what he has paid to the Government beyond his just share, but his case is not governed by the 4th Clause. Clause 16, allowing six years, appears rather to be applicable. Shada Lall v. Musamut Bhawanee, 2 N. W. R., 52.

A suit to set aside a transfer of land made by the revenue authorities for arrears of Government revenue comes within the words of Clause 4, Section 1.

Section 1, Clause 5.

The limitation prescribed by Clause 5, Section 1,
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

Act XIV of 1859, is not applicable to an order under Act XIX of 1841. Dipro Pershad Mytee v. Mussamut Kanya Doyee, 1 W. R., 341.

The rights and interests of one of three brothers of joint Hindu family having been sold in execution of a decree, a suit brought, not to set aside such sale, but in right of inheritance of the judgment-debtor's brother's share in the family property, is not barred by limitation under Clause 5, Section 1, and Section 246, Act VIII of 1859. Lalita Be- dlee v. D. M. Bid and others v. Lalita Modho Fer saud and others, 6 W. R., 69.

Property being attached under a decree obtained before Act VII of 1859, a third party claimed to be entitled as against the judgment-creditor under a bill of sale. The Judge enquired into his claim, found that the assignment was fraudulent, and ordered that the property should be sold under the decree—Held that the order of the Judge was a summary decision of a Civil Court within Section 1, Clause 5, and that a suit by the claimant for the recovery of the property instituted after the expiration of a year from the date of the order was barred by that clause. Sheikh Khyrut Ally v. Khurruck Dhuree Singh, Marsh., 520.

Held that Clause 5, Section 1, applies to suits to set aside summary orders passed in execution, although such orders were passed before Acts VII and XIV of 1859 were enacted. Basit Ali v. Asran Ali, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 198.

Held that the Judge's order relating to the landed property of a person dying intestate, being apparently an order made without jurisdiction, had no legal operation, and was not a summary order within the meaning of the 5th Clause of Section 1, Act XIV of 1859. Anjuthya Nath v. Doorga Gir, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 241.

A suit brought, not to set aside an order of release under Section 246 of Act VII of 1859, but to recover possession from the successful claimant of the property released, is not governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 5, Section 1. Bhryullah Bhukut v. Meer Abdool Hossein and others, 8 W. R., 93.

The final decision, award, or order contemplated by Clause 5, Section 1, is a final decision of the Court which has competent jurisdiction to determine the case finally, and not the order of a Court superior to such Court dismissing an appeal from the decision of such Court for want of jurisdiction. Mussamut Obo-unissa v. Buldeo Narain Singh, 7 W. R., 151.

Quare—Whether, with reference to Clause 5, Section 1, a suit will lie to set aside a summary order after the expiration of one year. Gobind Nath Sandyal and others v. Ramcoomar Ghose, 6 W. R., 21.

The plaintiff sued to obtain a decree declaring that the ancestral land possessed by the family of the plaintiff was not liable to seizure and sale in satisfaction of an ex-parti decree obtained by the defendant in a suit against the yejaman of the plaintiff's family, on the ground that the decree had been obtained collusively and fraudulently for a debt alleged to have been contracted for the benefit of the family. The decree against the yejaman was passed on the 22nd June, 1857, and upon attachment of the family property the plaintiffs made a claim, under Section 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, alleging their independent right to the property and resisting a sale. The claim was disallow on the 18th October, 1861, and an appeal from the decision was dismissed on the 15th November, 1861. The present suit was instituted on the 22nd February, 1864. Held that this was not a suit which the limitation provided by Section 246 of the Civil Code, or by Clause 5, Section 1, of Act X. of 1859, was applicable, and that the suit was barred.

The plaintiff was by an order of the Civil Court in execution of a decree, to which the plaintiff no party, ejected from the possession of a mutta. He brought a suit more than three years afterwar to eject the legal representative of the person whose property was so put in possession. Held (reversing the decree of the Civil Court) that the order of the Civil Court was not a summary decision within the meaning of Clause 5, Section 1, and that the suit was not barred. That clause is only applicable to orders which the Civil Courts are empowered to pass deciding matters of disputed property raised for hearing and determination by a summary proceeding between the parties disputing. Appun Iram v. Maria Varden Seth Sam, 4 Mad. Rej. 297.

Section 1, Clause 6.

On a Collector proceeding to settle a mortgage estate, both the mortgagee and mortgagor appeared before him and contended for the right of settlement. His award under Regulation VII of 1838 was in favour of the mortgagee in possession, c. the ground that the period of redemption had expired, and he settled the estate with him. Held that as the mortgagee allowed that award to remain unchallenged for three years, it became binding under Clause 6, Section 1, 1859. Sreechund Baboo v. Mullik Choolam, 9 W. R., 564.

In computing the period of limitation under Clause 6, Section 1, the day on which the award was passed should be excluded. Ramonee Soo- dery Dossia v. Punchanun Bose, 4 W. R., 105.

Clause 6, Section 1, provides that possession titles by virtue of awards under the Regulation there mentioned shall become final unless questioned within three years; but that will not enable a person to come in within three years after the date of such awards and recover possess of lands in respect of which his suit has been barred by the other provisions of the Law of Limitation. Beer Chunder Toodraj v. Ramgutta Da and others, 8 W. R., 209.

An Appellate Court can ipso motu raise the question of limitation for the first time where appears on the face of the plaint that the suit was barred.

Where A. sued for reversal of a survey award and for recovery of possession, alleging dispossession subsequent to the date of the award,—It is evident that his suit was not barred by reason of its being brought beyond three years from the date of the award. Mozaffar Ally v. Gish Chunder Dey, 1 L. R., A. C., 25; S. C., 10 W. R., 71.

Held that an order passed by revenue authority for entry of names in a proprietary register, being passed after a trial in a suit of the nature referred to in Clause 2, Section 23, Regulation VII
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

1822, was not an order in a suit to which the term of limitation mentioned in Clause 6, Section 1, applies. Madhoo Singh v. Jehanger, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 229.

Held that the plaintiffs' claim was not barred by limitation provided in Clause 6, Section 1, as they were no parties to the settlement proceeding of 1841, and no judicial award or order affecting them was passed by the settlement officer.
 Held further that, as the defendants, who were at the settlement in 1841 when the estate was farmed out, recorded as proprietors by the revenue authorities, did not hold proprietary and adverse possession till the expiry of the farming lease, the plaintiffs' suit was not barred by limitation as having been brought within twelve years after 1841. Ramesker Singh and others v. Satya Zalim Singh and others, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 8.

Held that the proceeding of the settlement officer representing a cess as a source of income to the zemindar was not a judicial award, and the limitation provided in Clause 6, Section 1, was not applicable to a suit to set aside that proceeding.
 Held, further, that the mention of the cess in the wajib-ool-urz is not conclusive proof of the right to the levy of cess against persons not parties to it.

In a thakbust map land was demarcated as belonging to A. B. claimed that it belonged to him jointly with A. On 18th November, 1858, the map rectified by demarcating the lands to A. and B. jointly. B. afterwards brought a suit against A. in the Moonsif's Court to recover the value of some mangoes which grew on two plots of the land in question, and it was decided on 12th December, 1864, in favour of B., on the ground that the plots belonged to A. and B. jointly. On 11th December, 1865, A. brought his suit against B. for a declaration of right and confirmation of possession to set aside the survey award, and for amendment of the thak-bust map. A. alleged that he was no party to the thakbust proceedings, and that he had been in possession ever since. Held (overruling the decision of the Courts below) (1) that A. was not estopped by the decision of 12th December, 1864; (2) that the suit was barred, so far as it amounted to the thakbust map amended, under Clause 6 of Section 1; (3) that a suit by a person in possession to have his title confirmed is not a suit to recover property within Clause 6 of Section 1, and is not barred by reason of its not being brought within three years from the date of the award. Mohima Chundra Chuckerbutty v. Rajkumar Chuckerbutty, 1 B. L.
R., A. C., 10 W. R., 22.

An assessment for revenue or rent by a Collector is not a judicial award within the meaning of Clause 6 of Section 1. The term "award" as used in that clause means an adjudication on rights as between rival claimants, made by a revenue officer under the judicial powers conferred by the regulations mentioned in such clause. Hurree Mohun Ghosal

An order of a settlement officer upon an enquiry made at the instance of the zemindar, and for the purpose of the preparation of the record, in the course of which enquiry information was given both in support of and against the zemindar's claim to a cess, is not an award of the nature contemplated by Clause 6, Section 1, and the three years' period of limitation is inapplicable to a suit to assert such

Section 1, Clause 7.

The limitation prescribed by Clause 7, Section 1, applies to orders respecting possession of property made under Clause 2, Section 1, Act XIV of 1838, or Act IV of 1840 (now repealed), and not to those made under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the provisions of the last-mentioned section differing from those of Act IV of 1840 in many important respects. No period of limitation is prescribed in Section 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, within which a suit must be brought to set aside the Magistrate's award made under that section, and a suit for that purpose may be brought within twelve years from the time that the cause of action arose. Gasper Gregory v. Gourdoss Shaha and others, 8 W. R., 490.

Suit to recover property comprised in an Act IV order, which, by an apparently fraudulent undervaluation, was instituted in a wrong Court before Act XIV of 1859 came into operation. The undervaluation having been brought to notice, the plaint was returned to the plaintiff, who filed it in the proper Court after that Act came into operation.
 Held that the case was governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 7, Section 1 of that Act. Rajak Indro Bhoothsin Deb Roy v. Hurroo Nath Roy, W.
R., 1864, 280.

A suit to recover property respecting which no final award has been passed under Act IV of 1840 is not barred by limitation, under Clause 7, Section 1, but may be brought within twelve years from the date of ousted. Dyram Sahoo v. Bibee Sogra, 3 W.
R., 174.

A Magistrate's order dismissing a complaint under Act IV of 1840, on finding that complainant had not been forcibly dispossessed, is not a binding award under which Clause 7, Section 1, Act XIV of 1859, would apply. Hurronath Chowdry v. Hurree Lall Shaha and others, 11 W. R., 477.

Where a plaintiff was found to have been dispossessed from land by force of a Magistrate's order, under Section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it was held that his right of suit for possession was not barred under Clause 7, Section 1, by the lapse of more than three years from the date of the Magistrate's order. Undhoob Narain v. Chuttardhare Singh, 9 W. R., 480.

Where a Magistrate passed an order for attachment on the finding that neither of the parties then at issue was in possession,— Held that it was not an order respecting possession within the meaning of Clause 7, Section 1, Act XIV of 1859, and therefore the limitation provided by that clause was not applicable. Chuj Mull v. Khyratee, 4 Agra
Rep., 65.

Section 1, Clause 8.

Goods supplied to a dealer for the purpose of retail sale by him are not "articles sold by retail" within the meaning of Clause 8, Section 1, Act
XIV of 1859. Mothaora Lall Paul v. Shrinebush
Dutt and Chunder Mohun Dutt, 3 W. R., S. C. C.
Ref., 24.
A suit for the value of articles sold by retail, and supplied for household purposes, is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 8, and not Clause 16, Section 1, Act XIV of 1859. Buchan Gope v. The Collector of Tirhut, 7 W. R., 102.

Section 1, Clause 9. 1411. 244.

Clause 9 of Section 1, and not Section 8, Act XIV of 1859, is applicable:—

To a suit for balance of account and fresh advance made for the cultivation of indigo, where the defendant fails to perform his part of the contract. S. J. Doyle v. Khossatul Khan, 3 W. R., S. C. C. Ref., 1.

Also to a suit on account stated. Nobin Chunder Shahoo v. Sarobar Chunder Doss and others, 6 W. R., 328.

To a suit for breach of contract not in writing against a dele credere agent, who, for a certain commission, was employed to sell the plaintiff's goods, it not taken out of the operation of that law by either Section 4 or Section 8. Mussamut Phool Komaree Bidoo v. Woonkar Persaud Rastody, 7 W. R., 67.

To a suit for balance of account consisting of moneys advanced in payment for goods to be subsequently supplied. The cause of action accrued at the time when the goods ought to have been delivered. Booddanath Shah and others v. Lakennis Bideos and others, 7 W. R., 164.

An action for a balance on an indigo account, comprising a balance found at the close of 1859 and advances made in 1860, was held to be governed by the limitation of three years: first, as regards the balance, for defendant's presence and assent at the time of adjustment implied a contract to which Clause 9, Section 1, would apply; and, secondly, in respect to the advances which were on account of goods to be supplied, where the same limitation would run from the time when the goods ought to have been delivered. H. D. Tripp v. Kuher Mundul, 9 W. R., 205.

A suit brought to recover fees due to plaintiff as pleader in three suits was held to be barred by limitation as instituted after three years, that being the period of limitation in one case in which the defendant had agreed to pay the fees according to law, such agreement being an obligation for the payment of money within the meaning of Section 5, Regulation XX of 1812, and that being also the limitation applicable under Clause 9, Section 1, in the other cases in which there was no written engagement to pay the fees. Rash Mohun Goswamy v. Issur Chunder Mookerjee, 9 W. R., 113.

In a suit to enforce the performance of an agreement alleged to have been entered into between the plaintiffs and the principal defendants whereby the latter, in consideration of an undertaking subsequently carried out, was to admit the former, who were his uterine brothers, to a share of the property of his adoptive father, which included an interest in land,—Held that this was substantially a suit on a contract governed by the limitation fixed by Clause 9, Section 1, that the defendant was in a position to fulfill that contract on the deaths of his adoptive parents respectively, and that plaintiff's suit, not having been brought within three years of the dates of those deaths, was barred by limitation.

Where A. screwed jute for B. down to May 16th, 1863, and a part payment on account of this work was made on May 18th, 1863,—Held that the suit for the residue in which the plaint was not filed till May 18th, 1866, comes under Section 1, Clause 9, and must be brought, therefore, within the three years. Note.—Payment does not, under this Act, take a case out of the rule of limitation. Potilpabun Sen v. Chunder Kaunte Mookerjee, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 329.

In a suit brought on the 29th July, 1867, to recover back a deposit of purchase-money paid in September, 1863, it appeared that the vendor had re-sold the estate, and that the plaintiff thereupon sued for and obtained a decree for specific performance against the vendor and the purchaser at the re-sale. On appeal by the purchaser at the re-sale the decree was reversed on the 29th August, 1865. Held that the suit to recover back the deposit was not barred under Clause 9, Section 1, since the cause of action for its recovery did not accrue till 29th August, 1865. Rajmoy Dey v. Shrinath Singh, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 170; *S. C., 11 W. R., 24.

A letter directing an advance of money to a third party, and containing a promise on the part of the writers to repay the advance with interest, is such a written engagement or contract to pay the money lent, &c., as is mentioned in the last portion of Clause 9, Section 1, and the period of limitation applicable to suits brought for a breach of such engagement is not provided in Clause 16 of the same section. Choty Lall v. Mohun Lall, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 52.

The plaintiff agreed with defendant that, in consideration of the possession and use of certain land and a third of the produce for the season, he would provide seed and labour, and carry on the cultivator's share of the produce. Held that the limitation was that prescribed by Clause 9, Section 1. Audi Konan v. Venkata Subbayan, 2 Mad. Rep., 36.

The want of an admission or acknowledgment in writing, as required by Section 4, to qualify the limitation prescribed by Clause 9, Section 1 of that Act, cannot be supplied by oral evidence to the admission of the debt sued for. Doorga Dutt Singh v. Kalika Sookul, 7 W. R., 46.

Where the plaintiff, a native artist, agreed to supply, and the defendant agreed to purchase, pictures as ordered from time to time, subject to the approval of each picture by the defendants, the prices to be fixed on delivery and acceptance,—Held that a distinct contract became complete in respect of the pictures as they were from time to time delivered and approved of, at the price the same were fixed, and that the case came within Clause 9, Section 1, and not within Clause 8 or Clause 2 of the same Section. Viraswami Niyak v. Sanyababbi Sakhid and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 6.

A suit for a pleader's fees is founded upon a contract either express or implied. If the contract is not in writing, the limitation under Clause 9, Section 1, is three years from the time when the cause of action accrues. Dwarkanath Moitra v. T. J. Kenny, 5 W. R., S. C. C. Ref., 1.

A suit for the balance of an adjusted account of an indigo factory is subject to the limitation
Where a doctor is engaged to treat a patient without any arrangement being made at the time as to his fees, there is an implied contract, an action for the breach of which is governed by the three years' limitation under Clause 9, Section 1. Harris Chunder Surmiah v. Brojoniath Chucker-buty, 13 S. W. R., C. R. 196.

The plaintiff, a Hindu widow, sold to the defendant certain land which formed part of the estate of her deceased husband, for a sum of Rs. 800. The price was paid to the plaintiff, who, on the same day, made it over to the defendant under an agreement that she should receive Rs. 6 monthly by way of interest, and that the principal sum should be repayable on demand. Interest was paid accordingly by the defendant for three years, up to the end of March, 1863, when the defendant discontinued payment of interest. The plaintiff thereupon demanded repayment of the principal, which the defendant refused. On the 4th July, 1870, the plaintiff instituted the present action against the defendant for the recovery of the principal and interest, with plaintiff's repayments. The plaintiff pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation, under Clause 9, Section 1. Held that the contract in this case was alternative, and contained two distinct and separate obligations,—first, an obligation to pay Rs. 6 month by month by way of interest; and secondly, an obligation to repay the principal on demand, and the case fell within the rule that where, by the terms of the contract, either express or implied, it is stipulated that a request or demand of performance shall be made, such demand must be made in order to complete the cause of action. The suit which was brought within three years from the date when it was withheld up to the date of suit. The defendant pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation, under Clause 9, Section 1. Held that the contract in this case was alternative, and contained two distinct and separate obligations,—first, an obligation to pay Rs. 6 month by month by way of interest; and secondly, an obligation to repay the principal on demand, and the case fell within the rule that where, by the terms of the contract, either express or implied, it is stipulated that a request or demand of performance shall be made, such demand must be made in order to complete the cause of action. The suit which was brought within three years from the date when it was withheld up to the date of suit. The defendant pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation, under Clause 9, Section 1. Held that the contract in this case was alternative, and contained two distinct and separate obligations,—first, an obligation to pay Rs. 6 month by month by way of interest; and secondly, an obligation to repay the principal on demand, and the case fell within the rule that where, by the terms of the contract, either express or implied, it is stipulated that a request or demand of performance shall be made, such demand must be made in order to complete the cause of action.

The plaintiff in the present action for the recovery of the balance due on account of principal and interest upon an unregistered bond with lien on immovable property, is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 10, Section 1. John Lyster v. Komihone and Mah Byaw, 7 W. R., 354.

Though Section 3, Act X of 1836, enables an indigo planter to join in one and the same suit two distinct causes of action,—i. e., the breach of contract on the part of the ryot, and the tort on the part of the person prevailing upon the ryot to break the contract,—yet the two causes of action are governed by different periods of limitation, the former within three years under Clause 10, Section 1, and the latter within six years under Clause 16.

A suit for damages for breach of contract by the defendant in not giving a valid title to the plaintiff, according to his contract, to the shares which the defendant professed and agreed to sell of the property in question, is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 9 or 16, Section 1. Raj Narain Singh v. Koonwar Dowlat Singh and others, 6 W. R., 49.

Where there is a bond which not merely secures a fixed salary agreed to be paid to the debtor on the 16th of December, 1863. In this suit brought on the 11th of April, 1867, for recovery of the whole amount,—Held that under Clause 10, Section 1, the claim was barred. Gaur Hari Doss v. Madan Mohan Biswas, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 16; S. C., 11 W. R., 330.

Where there is a bond which not merely secures a fixed salary, but also hypothecates lands as a further security for its due payment, and a suit is brought to recover the money (the suit in no way relating to the mortgage or charge on the lands), the limitation prescribed in Clause 10, Section 1, applies. Goro Chand Dutt v. Lokenath Dutt and others, 8 W. R., 334.

An action for breach of contract on the repudiation of a lease is provided for by Clause 10, Section 1. Pochooram Sahu v. Choto Lall Mukund Lall Sahu, 8 W. R., 442.

Held that the limitation applicable to a suit for the recovery of a fixed salary agreed to be paid to a mookhtear for conducting the plaintiff's cases is provided by Clauses 9 and 16, Section 1. Jumma Pershad v. Bheem Scion, 1 Agra Rep., M., 8.

deemed a written engagement which could be registr ted within the meaning of this clause. _Shumbho cunder Shaka v. Baroda Sounduree Debia, 5 W. R., 45._

A suit for the recovery of the amount due on a policy of marine insurance falls under Clause 10 of Section 1. In such cases the limitation (in the absence of a custom allowing a certain time of grace) begins to run from the date when the defendant has notice of the loss, and refuses or neglects to pay. _Naratandas Bhagtan das v. Dayabhai Ichkachund, 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 34._

A promissory note is a “contract or obligation” under Section 16, Act XVI of 1864, and as such might have been registered under that Act; consequently the period of limitation prescribed by Section 1, Clause 10, _viz._, three years, applies to it.
_Pyari Chaud Mitter v. Fraser, 6 B. L.R., Ap., 40._

On 9th April, 1864, the defendant, L., an attorney, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff and one
P. R. D., by which the plaintiff engaged to employ himself as cashier and accountant of L., and the plaintiff and P. R. D. engaged that they would from time to time, on the requisition of L., advance money to him subject to the proviso that there should be at no time a larger sum due by L. on account of such advances than three-fourths of the value of all bills, stocks, and other property, which L. would make over to the plaintiff and
P. R. D. provided also that the said advances should not exceed in total at any time Rs. 10,000.
L. was to pay interest on such advances at nine per cent., and the plaintiff and P. R. D. were to have a lien for such advances on all bills, stocks, and other property of L.'s which the plaintiff and
P. R. D. should have in their custody as security for such advances. L. was to be at liberty to realize such bills and sell such stocks as he should demn necessary, provided that the money was to be paid to the plaintiff and P. R. D. in payment of such advances. Should there be any surplus money remaining after the settlement of the account, such money was to be credited to the account of L. The agreement was made before the Registration Act of 1864 came into force, and it was admitted that it could not have been registered.
In a suit against L. to recover money advanced by the plaintiff and P. R. D.—_Held_ that there was such an agreement by L. to repay the advances as to constitute a contract in writing signed by the party to be bound within the terms of Clause 10, Section 1, and therefore the period of limitation was six years as provided by Clause 16, Section 1, of that Act. _S. J. Leslie v. Panchanan Mitter, 6 B. L. R., 618; and 15 S. W. R., A. C., 1._

Section 1, Clause 11.

Where a sum assigned to sons was, by the terms of the will, to be regarded as a legacy, and not as a charge on the estate for their maintenance,— _Held_ that Clause 11, Section 1, was the limitation applicable to suits under the will for recovery of the sum due as a legacy. _Held_ further that the denial of the will, by the persons under whom the plaintiffs claim, was not a bar to the present suit.
_Nana Narain Rao v. Rama Nund and others, 2 Agra
Rep., A. C., 171._

R. by his will gave the whole of his property to his brothers, making a specific provision of Rs.
4,000 for one of his daughters (the mother of the plaintiffs), which was to remain as _amanut_ in the family treasury, yielding her interest if and till she have birth to a male child, when she should also have 200 beegahs of land. Shortly after this the testator died, and the elder of the plaintiffs was born. The mother having since died without drawing the principal or taking the allotment of land, and the manager of the family estate having refused to give the plaintiffs their due, they sued to recover what was left to their mother. _Held_ that this was a suit for legacy, and that Clause 11, Section 1, applied so far as the claim for the money was concerned; and that the cause of action to the plaintiffs occurred at the time of the birth of the elder plaintiff, when his mother became immediately entitled to the principal sum of money and to the land. _Prossor Chunder Roy Cheydrv v.
Gyan Chunder Bose, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 354._

Section 1, Clause 12.

A suit to obtain possession of lands belonging to the plaintiff's zemindary which are falsely declared by the defendant to be _lakhraj_ is barred by twelve years' limitation even under Clause 12, Section 1, and cannot be brought under Section 14 exclude from the computation the time of pendency of a suit for assessment not brought by him, nor by any person under whom he claims, even were the provisions of that section otherwise applicable. _Rah Baroda-Mukta v. Sookmun Mohorjee, 1 W. R., 29._

A plaintiff can sue for the profits of property of which he has been dispossessed by the defendant, without being obliged to sue for possession. The limitation prescribed by Clause 12, Section 1, is applicable to such a suit. _Dyamodee Dayee v.
Muddoosodun Mylee, 3 W. R., 147._

A suit for recovery of possession of land and for opening a water-course through it, alleged to have been stopped by the defendant, is held to be a suit “for an interest in immovable property,” and therefore subject to the limitation prescribed by Clause 12, Section 1. _Godoyssurer v. Hurokshore
Dutt, 4 W. R., 107._

A suit not to resume or assess, but to recover possession with mesne profits, as part of the plaintiff's _mala_ tenure, of land which the defendant is alleged to be holding on an invalid _lakhraj_ tenure, must, under Clause 12, Section 1, be brought within twelve years from the time the cause of action arose,—_i.e._, from the date on which the defendant began to hold the land in dispute rent-free. _James Furlong, manager on behalf of the Rajah of Dhurbhangah v. Kusroo Mundo and others, 7 W. R., 151._

In a suit to recover possession of immovable property, the defence was adverse possession for more than twelve years, except for two short periods, during which plaintiffs had been put in possession by the High Court; first, under a decree of the High Court between the same parties, but that they had been dispossessed upon that decree being reversed on review; and second, under a misconception, by the Principal Sudder Ameen, of another order of the High Court, in another suit between the same party to the same parties; but that they had again been dispossessed after appeal by defendant to the High Court,— _Held_ per Loch, J. (Glover J., dissenting), that plaintiffs' possession during those two periods was not bonâ fide, and that the suit was barred. Mal Singh v. Rajah Lilanand Singh, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 173.

Where there was nothing to show whether the family had been a joint or a divided family, and where the suit was not against a mortgagee, but, before the plaintiff could get at the mortgagor, he had to remove the obstacle presented by the adverse title (based on a twelve years' usufructuary adverse possession) of the daughter-in-law of the original mortgagor,—Held that the limitation applicable to the case was that prescribed by Clause 12, Section 1.*

A suit for a sum of money to be recovered by the sale of mortgaged property, in which plaintiff asked for a decree to be enforced both against the person of the borrower and against the property pledged, comes within the provisions of Clause 12 (not Clause 10) of Section 1. Munoo Lall v. W. J. Pigue and others, 10 W. R., 379.

A. claimed certain immovable property as lessee, under a Government settlement made in 1859. B. had been in possession for more than twelve years before the institution of the suit. Held that the suit was barred under Clause 12 of Section 1. The mere fact that A. claimed as lessee under Government did not entitle him to the benefit of Section 17, Act XIV of 1859. Asu Mta v. Raju Mta, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 34; S. C., 10 W. R., 76.

Hypothecation creates an interest in immovable property such as is mentioned in Clause 12 of Section 1, and therefore the period of limitation for suits arising out of documents of hypothecation is 12 years. Raja Kaundan v. Multamal, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 92.

About twenty-five years before suit brought,—R. being possessed of a house allowed K. to occupy it without paying rent, on condition that K. would keep it in repair, and restore it to R. on demand. Nine years afterwards, and without any demand having been made by R., K. died, and his heirs continued to occupy the house, apparently on the same terms as K. had done. In a suit brought by R. against the heirs of K. to recover possession of the house, it was held that K. could not be deemed to have been a depositary of the house within the meaning of Section 1, Clause 15 of Act XIV of 1859, and the case was therefore governed by Section 1, Clause 12 of that Act. Held also that K. occupied the house as tenant-at-will of R., that such tenancy was on the death of K., as of course, converted into an adverse occupation, by the heirs of K., in the absence of proof of the intention of the parties to that effect, and in the absence of anything to show that R. did not assent to the heirs of K. continuing to occupy the house, apparently on the same terms as K. had done. Radhobhai v. Shama, 4 Bom. Rep., A. J., 99.

Held that a suit to enforce the charge under a mortgage deed is a suit of the nature mentioned in Clause 12, Section 1, and can be brought at any time within twelve years. Koony Behary Lall v. Raj Narain, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 244.

Where a suit was brought upon a bond to secure the payment of principal and interest, and the relief sought was that payment of principal and interest may be enforced, both as a simple contract liability and a debt secured by a collateral mortgage of immovable property,—Held that the suit was one for the recovery of an interest in land under Section 1, Clause 12, and was not barred for 12 years. A. Krishna Row and others v. H. Hachaha Sugapta, 2 Mad. Rep., 307.

A summary order made under Act XIX of 1841, and intended only to affect the question of possession, does not operate as a bar to a regular suit to try the title. Such suit may be brought within 12 years according to Clause 12, Section 1, Act XIV of 1859. Loknurain Singh v. Ranee Myna Koover, 7 W. R., 199.

Held that, though mere receipt of rent under a void or voidable lease does not operate as a confirmation of it, or show that the lessee held possession of the land at the time, yet if, with full knowledge of the existence of the putnee potthah, rents were claimed on behalf of the plaintiff, and proceedings taken under Regulation VIII of 1819 to enforce payment of the rents as reserved on a putnee tenure by the acting manager (B.) during plaintiff's infancy, and on coming to age plaintiff took no steps to repudiate the proceedings, Clause 12, Section 1, would apply to his suit. Shumoonath Shaha v. Bunwar Lal Roy, 11 W. R., 102.

The plaintiff having been dispossessed under a sale in execution against other parties, is entitled to sue, to establish his title, and to recover possession at any time within 12 years from the time at which he was dispossessed, according to Clause 12, Section 1. Baboo Jadunath Chowdury v. Radhamoney Dossee, 7 W. R., 256.

When there is an unregistered bond to secure the payment of a sum of money with interest, by which bond also lands are charged (by way of simple mortgage) with the payment of the debt, a suit to have it declared that the lands are charged with the payment of the debt, and for an order for the sale of the lands (as subject to a sale at public auction) for the satisfaction of a debt, fall within Clause 12, Section 1, and must be brought within 12 years from the cause of action. Surman Hossein v. Shaka-zadak Golam Mahomed, 9 W. R., 170.

A Hindu died, leaving two daughters, who succeeded to their father's property. One sold her half share of the property, and died in 1835. The other died in 1859, and her son instituted the present suit in 1867 for recovery of the half share which her sister had sold. The defence set up was that the suit was barred by lapse of time, as the plaintiff's cause of action arose in 1835, or more than 12 years before the institution of the suit. Held (following a dictum in the Full Bench Ruling in Nabin Chandra Chuckerbutty v. Iswar Chandra Chuckerbutty) that the words "cause of action" in Clause 12, Section 1, refer not to the new cause of action which accrues to the reversioner, but to the "cause of action" which accrued to the tenant for life; and that the suit having been brought after a lapse of more than 12 years after the death of the tenant for life was barred. Ganga Charan Roy Chowdury v. Jagannath Dutt, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 208; S. C., 12 W. R., 97.

The plaintiff's tenant having been ejected from certain immovable property of the plaintiff, under an auction sale in execution against a third party, the plaintiff made no application to the Court under Section 246 or 260 of the Civil Procedure Code to prevent or set aside the sale.

_Held that he was not bound to do so, but that he was entitled to file a regular suit to establish his title and recover possession at any time within twelve years from the date of the dispossession, under Clause 12, Section 1._

A suit to recover excess lands wrongfully taken under cover of a decree comes within the provisions of Clause 12, Section 1, _Cour Mone Moorain v. Shun Kwre Phariner, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 459._

Section 1, Clause 13.

Clause 13, Section 1, does not apply to a suit for maintenance, when the right to receive such maintenance is not a charge on the estate of a deceased person, but on the estate of living persons. _Binode Lall Chatterjee v. Luckhee Monee Debia, 4 W. R., 84._

A suit for malikana is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 13, Section 1, _Mussamut Oosterun v. Heera Nundo Shahu, 7 W. R., 336._

Clause 13, Section 1, applies to suits in which a plaintiff seeks to introduce one or more additional co-sharers into the enjoyment of property alleged to be joint, not where a plaintiff seeks to enforce his right to separate possession of that to which he is entitled. _Luckhee Monee Dossee v. Brojo Bulub Seal, 11 W. R., 132._

A Hindu died in 1840 leaving him surviving seven sons, who, after their father's death, entered into joint possession of certain immovable property which had been left by him, and continued to live in commensality until 1859, when a separation in mess took place. Subsequently, more than twelve years after the father's death, a suit was brought by the younger son for his share of the joint ancestral property belonging to the father, and to property subsequently acquired out of the proceeds of such joint estate, to which the brothers were entitled in equal shares. The plaintiff failed to show that any payment was made to him or any person through whom he claimed by the person in possession or without showing a previous consent on their part to pay him. _Gundo Anandavatel v. Krishnarain Govinda, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 55._

The plaintiff was not bound to do so, but that he was entitled to file a regular suit to establish his title and recover possession at any time within twelve years from the date of the dispossession, under Clause 12, Section 1, _Lab/we Alarm' Dosssee v. Brojo Bullub Seal, 11 W. R., 132._

_Held that the suit was barred by limitation prescribed by Clause 13, Section 1._

Section 13 applies to suits in which a Hindu widow, sue to set aside a sale made by her husband's order for his share of the joint ancestral property belonging to the father, and to property subsequently acquired out of the proceeds of such joint estate, to which the brothers were entitled in equal shares. The plaintiff failed to show that any payment was made to him or any person through whom he claimed by the person in possession or without showing a previous consent on their part to pay him. _Gundo Anandavatel v. Krishnarain Govinda, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 55._

_A mere reference to the ordinary rule that possession of one of the members of the family cannot be looked upon as antagonistic, is not sufficient for the right decision of the case when adverse right to the property is asserted; and the Court, in determining the issue of limitation, should advert to the provisions of Clause 13, Section 1, which governs suits to share in joint family property._

_Mussamut Jaraoo and others v. Fakera and others, 4 Agra Rep., 139._

_Held that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by lapse of time, they having received nothing from the property, a share of which they claimed, for a period beyond that prescribed by Clause 13, Section 1._

Section 1, Clause 13, applies to suits for the recovery of maintenance, whether the right to receive maintenance arises out of the general law, or out of a specific deed granting such maintenance. _Bamaasoondey Debea v. Shamasoondey Debea, 8. W. R., 1864, 13._

Where a suit was brought for a division of family property twelve years after the death of the head of the family,—_Held that the suit was not barred by Clause 13, Section 1._

_Held that he was not bound to do so, but that he was entitled to file a regular suit to establish his title and recover possession at any time within twelve years from the date of the dispossession, under Clause 12, Section 1._

Adverse possession for twelve years against a Hindu widow which would bar her right of suit, is also a bar to a suit by the reversioner brought after the death of the widow. _Ranpyat Gossain and others v. Kallyyane Debia and others, 8 W. R., 256, 72._

As regards property of which a Hindu widow never gets possession, which is held adversely to her and to her husband's estate, limitation runs during her life-time; and if the ordinary period of limitation has elapsed since the cause of action accrued to her, the reversioner will be barred. _Brinda Dabee Choudhrai v. Peary Lall Chowdhy, 9 W. R., 460._

A reversioner, therefore, properly awarded.

_A reversioner cannot, during the life-time of a Hindu widow, sue to set aside a sale made by her husband's order for his share of the joint ancestral property belonging to the father, and to property subsequently acquired out of the proceeds of such joint estate, to which the brothers were entitled in equal shares. The plaintiff failed to show that any payment was made to him or any person through whom he claimed by the person in possession or without showing a previous consent on their part to pay him._

_Held that the suit was barred by limitation prescribed by Clause 13, Section 1._

In a suit to establish a right to share in a watan and to recover a portion of the profits thereof for seven years,—_Held that the case was governed, as to limitation, by Clause 13, and not Clause 16, of Section 1, and that arrears for seven years were, therefore, properly awarded._

There is no law by which interest can be awarded in such a case. A volunteer, who acts as manager, cannot claim remuneration from his co-sharers without showing a previous consent on their part to pay him. _Gundo Anandavatel v. Krishnarain Govinda, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 55._

_Rash_
Behary Lal and another v. Purmessur Nath, 10 W., R., 30.

All alienation by a Hindu widow, with a life-interest only, is bound during her life, and the suit of a reversioner to set aside such alienation is not barred if brought within twelve years of the period when the succession opened out to him. Santokhee Thakoor v. Mussamut Balatee Koornwar and another, 10 W., R., 276.

A suit to recover possession of a share of land by a reversioner deriving from a party who, though she had died only four years previously, had been out of possession twenty-four years, was held to be barred by limitation. Chunder Nath Sen v. Anund Moyee Dossee and others, 11 W., R., 289.

A Hindu widow, entitled to a life-interest only, sold the estate absolutely, claiming under a pretended deed of gift from her husband. Her son questioned the validity of the deed, and the Court directed a regular suit to set aside the sale, which was not, however, brought. The son pre-deceased the widow, and his children, after the death of the widow, and within twelve years after they attained their majority, but more than twelve years after the conveyance, instituted a suit, as reversioners, for the recovery of the land. Held that the claim was not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Pearymohun Roy and others v. Chaudercant Roy and others, Marsh., 33.

Proof of payment is not necessary to bring a case within Clause 13, Section 1; but the limitation therein prescribed will apply to the case of a person entitled to a proportion of the property, and simply enjoying the property with the co-sharers, there being no division of money or any payment at all made between them. Bhujokuree Paul v. Huro Soon-doorree Debee, 17 S. W., R., C. R., 530.

The plaintiff sued the defendants for future and past maintenance, and obtained a decree for future maintenance and for arrears of maintenance for seven years. The parties were governed by the Aliyasanta law. It was found by the lower Appellate Court that for twenty years before the suit the plaintiff lived apart from the defendants and the other members of the family, and supported herself without receiving or applying for anything towards her maintenance out of the family property in the possession of the defendants, or obtaining any recognition of her right to maintenance. On special appeal, held, per Scotland, C. J., that, assuming the Aliyasanta law recognizes the right of the plaintiff to enforce separate maintenance as a charge upon the estate, the plaintiff’s claim was barred by Section 1, Clause 13.

Per Collett, J.—It is doubtful whether Section 13, which applies to cases where the right to receive maintenance is a charge on the inheritance of any estate, applies in a case where the right of the plaintiff is said to exist by reason of her being a co-proprietor with the defendants. If the suit be not within Section 13, then it was one to recover an interest in immoveable property, and was equally barred by Clause 12 of Section 1.ABBaku v. Ammu Sketati, 4 Mad. Rep., 137.

In a suit by a co-partecner to enforce a division of family property it is necessary, in order to constitute the bar provided by Clause 13, Section 1, to prove possession and enjoyment of the property as the possessor’s own separate property to the absolute exclusion of the person suing to enforce the right to share for twelve years, computed either “from the death of the person from whom the property alleged to be joint is said to have descended,” or “from the last payment to the plaintiff or the person through whom she claims by the person in the possession or management of such property or estate on account of such alleged share.” The question of fact whether there has been such exclusive possession or enjoyment must be decided upon the evidence in each case, and may be satisfactorily proved, although there may be no evidence of an express refusal to allow plaintiff any part of the benefits of the joint property. Subbiay v. Rajesvara Sastrulu, 4 Mad. Rep., 354.

The 13th Clause of Section 1 of Act XIV of 1859 does not require that the acknowledgment should be given to the mortgagor. Ujicha Kandyle v. Valia Pidigati, 4 Mad. Rep., 359.

In ruling that a suit to enforce the right to a share in certain property on the ground that it is joint family property is barred under Section 1, Clause 13, it is not enough to find that the plaintiff had occasionally received money from the defendant, and that his sister continued to live in what had originally been the joint family dwelling-house; but there must be a distinct finding as to what payments (if any) have been made to the plaintiff within twelve years next prior to the date of the institution of the suit, by the person in possession or management of the property on account of the plaintiff’s alleged share. Prosono Gunlar Mookerjee v. Shama Churn Mookerjee, 17 S. W., R., C. R., 451.

Held that a Hindu is entitled to maintenance from her husband’s brother, whether separated or not, notwithstanding the non-receipt by the latter of her husband’s assets.

In a suit for maintenance, the cause of action ordinarily arises at the time when the maintenance having become necessary is refused by the party from whom it is claimed.

Section 1, Clause 13, does not apply to all suits for the recovery of maintenance brought by a Hindu widow against her husband’s family, but only to suits in which the plaintiff seeks to have her maintenance made a charge on a particular estate.

There is nothing in the Hindu Law to prevent the Court, in its discretion, awarding a widow separate maintenance. Former decisions commented on. Timmappa Bhat et al. v. Parmeshriamma et al., 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 130.

An acknowledgment in writing, signed by the defendant, or the person through whom he claims, of the right of the plaintiff to share in a watan, is not sufficient to revive the period of limitation contained in Section 1, Clause 13, so as to give a new starting-point from the date of such acknowledgment; under that clause there must be a payment on account of the alleged share by the person in possession of, or having the management of, the watan; and Section 4 is not applicable to such a case. Amitrav bin Yeshvantra Deshmukh v. Anydha bin Abaji Deshmukh, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 50.

In a suit under Clause 13, Section 1, to enforce a right to a share in immoveable property on the ground that it was not joint family property, where... plaintiff claimed as the heir of her husband, and defendant (who pleaded a title derived by purchase from one of the co-sharers) had been in adverse possession for nine years.—Held that, under Clause 13, plaintiff would have to prove that she had been within twelve years prior to date of suit in the enjoyment of a share of the profits or rents. Kajoo Singh v. Gunneesh Monee Burmonee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 400.

Section 1, Clause 14.

According to Clause 14, Section 1, a suit by a dur-putneedar, who purchased at a sale under Regulation VIII of 1819, to resume an alleged invalid lakheraj tenure, must be brought not within twelve years from the date of his purchase, but within twelve years from the date when the right to sue accrued to the person under whom he claims. Sheikh Musserudddeen v. Shikhsiard Chowdhry, W. R., 1864, 170.

Rules (as gathered from the late Full Bench decisions) laid down for the future guidance of the lower Courts in disposing of suits for the resumption of lakheraj, instituted before the date on which Act XIV of 1859 came into operation.

In suits instituted after that date, the effect of Clause 14, Section 1 of that Act, should be taken into consideration. Khelut Chunder Ghose v. Poorno Chunder Rooy, 2 W. R., 258.

Clause 14, Section 1, applies to all suits to resume or assess lands held rent-free, whether before or after the Permanent Settlement. Krishto Mohun Doss Bukshee v. Joy Kishen Mookerjee, 3 W. R., 33.

A suit for the resumption or assessment of lakheraj land is barred by limitation under the proviso to Clause 14, Section 1, if the defendant shows possession as lakheraj before 1st December, 1790, unless the plaintiff can rebut that evidence by proving the land to be māl by payment of rent or otherwise. Sristeedhur Samunt and others v. Aoy Chowdhry, 2 W. R., Act X R., 33.

The words “rent free” in Clause 14, Section 1, are not used in contradistinction to, but merely as showing the meaning of, the term “lakheraj.” Janoke Bullub Chuckerbutty v. Nobin Chunder Roy Chowdhry, 2 W. R., Act X R., 33.

Section 1, Clause 15.

Claims to malikana are not barred by limitation if brought within thirty years, the Collector being held to be a depositary within the meaning of Clause 15, Section 1. The Government v. Rhoop Narain Singh, 2 W. R., 163.

A written acknowledgment by the mortgagee of the title of the mortgagor, or of his right of redemption, is sufficient within the meaning of Clause 15, Section 1, though made to a third party and not the person entitled to the land. Dur Gopal Singh v. Kasheeram Panday, 3 W. R., 3.

Clause 15, Section 1, applies when there is some relation of trust, whether the property is given in mortgage or pawn, or simply deposited for safe custody. Rutton Monee Debia v. Gunja Monee Debia Chowdhraon, 3 W. R., 94.

The period of limitation for a suit to redeem a mortgage of immovable property is (by Clause 15, Section 1) sixty years, and this is apparently without reference to the nature of the title the mortgagee in possession is asserting.

Semble,—It makes no difference that the hostile possession is supposed to have commenced on a claim of the defendant to a title altogether inconsistent with the mortgage. Punjji v. Nagamma, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 137.

An entry to the wajib-ool-urz was not tantamount to an acknowledgment on the part of the defendant, mortgagee, of the plaintiff’s proprietary right so as to allow him to sue within sixty years from that date as provided by Clause 15, Section 1. Joggoo Singh and Teemut Singh v. Synd Nazir Hosie, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 227.

When a mortgagor, after a mortgage has been satisfied, sues for the recovery of the property mortgaged, the case comes within Clause 15, Section 1, but when he sues for surplus collections which have been received by the mortgagee, the case falls under Clause 16 of that section. Baboo Lall Doss v. Jumal Ali, 9 W. R., 87.

An acknowledgment made by an agent which was not expressly authorized by the principal, and was not a necessary part of the agent’s duty on the occasion, cannot be dealt with as an acknowledgment made in conformity with Clause 15, Section 1. Lutchmee Buksh Roy v. Pandey Runjeet Ram, 12 W. R., 443.

During the pendency of a butwarra, the plaintiff purchased a share in an ijmal mehal; and as the proportion of the Government revenue of each shareholding had not been ascertained, the shareholders, including the plaintiff’s vendor, and subsequently the plaintiff, paid to the Collectorate what they thought due from them on account of Government revenue. Upon an account stated in 1857 it was ascertained that after all necessary deductions a sum of Rs. 655 was due to the plaintiff, who in 1864 applied to the Collector for payment of the amount, but the application was rejected, as the money had been previously drawn away by certain creditors of his vendor.

In 1867 he sued the Collector for recovery of the amount. The defence set up was that the suit was barred by lapse of time.—Held that the Collector was not a depositary under the meaning of Clause 15, Section 1; that the cause of action did not arise on the demand for and refusal of payment, but on adjustment of the account; and that the case came under Clause 16, Section 1. Gobind Chandra v. The Collector of Dacca, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 57; S. C., 11 W. R., 491.

The words “in the meantime” in Clause 15, Section 1, import the period intervening between the date of a mortgage and the expiry of the sixty years, the normal period of limitation, and not to the period between the date of the mortgage and the institution of a suit in respect thereof. Minhomed Aboor J Raschah v. Syud Asif Ali Shah and others, 3 N. W. R., 119.
The 15th Clause of Section 1 does not require that the acknowledgment should be given to the mortgagor. In a suit to redeem, the plaintiff produced a mortgage the genuineness of which the defendants denied, but they produced a mortgage from the plaintiff's ancestors to their ancestors. The principal Sadr Amin made a decree for the restoration of the lands according to the terms of the mortgage produced by the defendants. The Civil Judge reversed the decision. Held, in special appeal, that the principal Sadr Amin was justified in making the decree which he gave. Unicha Kundyib Kunhi Kitti Nair v. Valia Pidgali Kunhamed Kuti Maraccur, 4 Mad. Rep., 359.

Where B., an old judgment-creditor of K.'s father, takes out execution against K., whose rights in an estate are accordingly sold and bought by B. himself, B. buys, not K.'s right of suit, but a right determined by a decree to which Clause 15, Section 1, does not apply. Ram Sarun Singh v. Mahomed Amer, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 78.

Section 1, Clause 16.

Six years is the period of limitation for suits for mesne profits, under Clause 16, Section 2. Lalla Gobind Suhaye v. Munohur Misser, 1 W. R., 65; Ram Surn Singh v. Goooroo Dyal Singh, 1 W. R., 83.

The suit being for payment of a bill for goods supplied by retail by an ordinary trader,—Held that it was governed by Clause 8, and not Clause 16, of Section 1. Shama Churn Lal, banker, v. The Collector of Tirhoot, 1 W. R., 308.

The limitation applicable to a suit for damages arising from the act of a servant in not making payment of a sum of money which had been entrusted to him for a particular purpose, is six years under Clause 16, Section 1. Sheikh Amjud Ali v. Syud Ali Buksh, 2 W. R., 122.

Also to a suit for damages to recover the value of personal property plundered and other consequent damages. Shita Ahmedoolla v. Hur Churn Pandah, 2 W. R., 236.

Also to a suit for reimbursement of rateable shares of a joint deceree. Doorgamonee Dossee v. Doorga Mohun Doss, 2 W. R., 266.

Also to a suit for contribution by a person who became surety for the re-payment of advances received by him and the defendant from Government for manufacturing salt, and was obliged in execution of a decree against him to pay the whole sum advanced. Nobo Krishi Bhunj v. Rajbullub Bhunj, 3 W. R., 134.

Also to a suit to recover deductions made on account of revenue by the Collector from a deposit made by a sharer of a joint estate in order to protect his share from sale by reason of the default of his co-sharer. Boy-Kunt Nath Bhooya v. Ram Nath Bhooya, 4 W. R., S. C. C., Ref., 9.

The mere fact of a plaintiff not suing within three years of attaining his majority will not, in cases where Act XIV of 1859 allows a general limitation of twelve years, bar his suit if brought within twelve years of the time when his cause of action accrued. According to Clause 16, Section 1, no more than six "s" mesne profits can be recovered.

A suit for an account and for the plaintiff's share of the profits after an admitted dissolution of partnership, is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 16, Section 1. Bhutto Ram v. Pookul Chowdry, 7 W. R., 36.

Also a suit to recover moveable property seized under a sham decree against another. Kasze Nusentoollah v. Roop Sona Bibe and others, 7 W. R., 499.

Also a suit by the holder of a hoondeec against the acceptor. Boistub Churn Doss v. Prem Chand Mitter, 4 W. R., 98.

Also a suit by a widowed against the heir who has ousted her to establish her lien, or if she sues to enforce her lien on landed property as subject to the lien on landed property, Clause 12 may apply. Mussamut Janee Khanum v. Mussamut Amatool Fatima Kanum, 8 W. R., 51.

In a suit against the heirs of a gomasta to recover the aggregate amount of certain sums of money overdrawn from time to time by the gomasta to the date of his death, less the salary due to the gomasta during the whole period of his incumbency, the 15th Clause of Section 1 does not apply. Ram Sarun Singh v. Gooroo Dyal Singh, 1 W. R., 83.

In a suit against the heir of a gomasta to recover the value of a gomasta as subject to the salary of the deceased was to be set-off at all against the items overdrawn, the claim for recovery of such of the items as were drawn more than six years previous to the institution of the suit was barred by Clause 16, Section 1. Kalekotishen Paul Chowdry v. Mussamut Jugué Tara and others, 9 W. R., 334.

Plaintiff in 1842 purchased B.'s share of an ijmaiie mehal while a butwarra was going on in the mehal, and the several sharers paid in what they thought due from themselves on account of Government revenue. In 1864 plaintiff asked for the surplus payment as per account dated March, 1857, by which it had been ascertained that there stood a balance in his favour. The Collector refused the application, saying that the money was not in the treasury, having been drawn out by certain of B.'s judgment-creditors. Plaintiff brought suit. Held that Clause 16, Section 1, applied to the case, plaintiff's cause of action accruing from the date of the adjustment of the accounts. Gobind Chunder Sein and others v. The Collector of Dacca, 2 W. R., 491.

Both under Clause 16, Section 1, and under Section 14, Regulation III of 1793, a separate cause of action, in respect of the wrongful receipt by a defendant of rent or profits of land belonging to a plaintiff, arises immediately upon the receipt by the defendant of each several sum. Obkey Gobind Chowdry v. Rance Surnomoyee, W. R., F. B., 163.

In a suit to recover damages for loss caused during the years 1862, 1863, and 1864, by defendant's interference with plaintiff's right to the flow of water from a canal,—Held that Clause 2, Section 1, did not apply; that, supposing plaintiff still in possession, the period of limitation is that given by Clause 16, Section 1, viz., six years. If plaintiff was not in possession at the time of bringing the suit, the period prescribed in Clause 12, Section 1, viz., twelve years, is the limit. Held also, with regard to the loss sustained in 1864, that plaintiff's right to recover depended upon...
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

whether or not the special damage claimed had accrued at the time of the bringing of the suit. Sri Viswambara Rajendra Deevi Odu v. Sri Sri Sri Saradhi Charana Samanturya, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 11.

The limitation applicable to suits for recovery of a wife's person is the limitation provided by Clause 16, Section 1. Mussamut Bhughna v. Gungooa, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 170.

Held that the limitation provided by Clause 16, Section 1, would be applicable to suits brought by one partner against the other members of the partnerships to recover his share of the partnership funds and property, no special limitation having been provided for suits of this nature. Jwala Pershad and others v. Kedar Nath and others, 4 Agra Rep., 175.

Clause 16, Section 1, applies to suits to set aside decrees obtained by fraud. Ameen Chand v. Omeid Singh, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 114.

A suit by an indigo planter against an instigator brought under Section 3, Act X of 1836, is governed by the six years' limitation provided by Clause 16, Section 1. An instigator can, under the former law, be made liable to the extent of the damage sustained; but a plaintiff in such a case cannot obtain liquidated damages calculated on the penal amount due by the ryots under their contracts, but must prove the amount of damage done. Meer Mahomed Rasam v. Forbes, 8 W. R., 257.

Where the money is paid by a co-sharer to save the estate, without being requested by another sharer to pay on his account, the suit for contribution is not a suit for money lent or paid in pursuance of any contract, and the limitation applicable to such a suit is six years under Clause 16, Section 1, and not that provided by Clause 9. Mussamut Cho-hagur v. Thakooree Singh, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 123.

A suit against defendant for entering into plaintiff's land, cutting his crop, and carrying it away, though the plaint may use the word "damages," is clearly for the value of the crop, and is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 16, and not Clause 2, Section 1. Musst. Dhubhutty Koer v. Lloyde, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 277.

A suit brought in 1861 to establish that plaintiff had vested in him the right to the office of karnam of certain villages, from which he had been ousted by the defendant in 1857, and to recover from defendant the mirasi lands annexed to the office. The Court of first instance decreed for plaintiff. The Civil Court reversed this decision on the ground that title to the office was the principal matter of the plaintiff's claim, and the right to possession of the land merely an incident dependent upon that title; that therefore, as the period of limitation applicable to the former claim (six years) had elapsed before the institution of the suit, it was not maintainable for the land. Upon special appeal, the decree of the Civil Court was reversed, on the grounds that it was conclusively found that the land was inseparably attached to the office as a source of endowment for the services of the holder of it for the time being, and that, as against the plaintiff, the defendant was protected in the possession of the office by Clause 16, Section 1. Tamminduz Rambogt v. Pantina Narsiddh, 6 Mad. Rep., 301.

A suit to recover the balance of an account adjusted and signed by the defendant may be brought at any time within six years from the date of the adjustment, the contract to pay the amount found due on the adjustment being an implied contract, and therefore falling under Clause 16 of Section 1, and not under Clause 9, Section 1. Sembal.—That the adjustment and signing of an account by the defendant is a sufficient contract in writing to satisfy the requirements of Clause 9 of Section 1. Ummedchund Hukamchand, et al. v. Sha Bukhidas Lachchau, et al., 5 Bom. Rep., O. C., 16.

In a suit to recover certain ornaments (or their value) which had been obtained by defendant from plaintiff's ancestor, with a view to borrowing money on them, limitation was held to be governed by Clause 16, Section 1, and the cause of action to arise when defendant set up an adverse claim in respect of the ornaments. Shumboo Chunder Mullick v. Frankisto Mullick, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 322.

The plaintiff sued the defendants for declaration of his right to a turn of worship of an idol for seven and a half days in each month, alleging that the defendants, who were entitled to another turn, had in 1864 taken adverse possession of the idol and properties belonging to it, and had so deprived him (the plaintiff) of his turn of worship from that time. Held that the cause of action did not recur as the turn of worship came round. Such suits fall within the operation of Clause 16, Section 1. Gour Mohan Choudry v. Madan Mohun Choudry, 6 B. L. R., 352; and 15 S. W. R., C. R., 92.

A suit for damages to recover the value of personal property plundered is governed by the limitation prescribed by Clause 16, Section 1, and is in no sense a suit for damages on account of injury to personal property within the meaning of Clause 2, Section 2. Sheikh Ahmedoolah v. Hurs Churn Pandah, 2 W. R., 236.

Section 2.

A suit for possession against an agent or deputy in charge of endowed property is not barred by limitation according to Section 2, Act XIV of 1859. Moran Gholam Nuzzuff v. Toosoddack Hossein, 1 Tom. R., 193.

Where no steps had been taken against the assets of a defaulted executor who died in 1836,—Held that the claim of the representatives of testator was barred by limitation, the Court declining to express an opinion as to whether in another form of suit claimants might not follow their testator's assets under Section 2. Re Palmer's Estate, Cor. Rep., 68.

In 1799 an estate was purchased in the name of an idol, and immediately afterwards was mortgaged. Subsequently, when the mortgage debt had been paid off, it was re-conveyed to the idol. After this the names of the idol and of its shebait were entered in the Collector's books as owners of the estate. In 1812 the purchaser again mortgaged the property, and in 1816 his widow executed a second mortgage of it, to pay off the mortgage of 1812. In 1820 this second mortgage was purchased. The defendant held the property under titles derived from the mortgage of 1816. The shebait's representatives in 1867 sued to recover possession of the property as belonging to the idol, all the purchaser was a mere trustee for the idol; that the present holders of the property were cognizant of this, or might have learnt it by reasonable enquiry, and therefore took the property subject to the trust; that accordingly the suit now brought was a suit against a trustee within Section 2, and could not be barred by any length of time. There was no evidence of a formal dedication of the property to the idol. Held that the defendant claimed under purchasers who had purchased bond fide and for valuable consideration within Section 5, and that therefore the period of limitation was twelve years from the date of purchase, and the suit was barred. Muhrarani Broja Sundari Debri v. Rani Luchmi Kunwari, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 155.

A benemeder transaction does not create the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. A benemeder is not a trustee within the meaning of Section 2. Uma Sundari Dasi and others v. Dwarkanath Roy, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 285; S. C., 11 W. R., 72.

Section 2 is applicable to a suit against a purchaser from a trustee who is not a bond fide purchaser, although he is himself a trustee in law. Massamut Kyroomissa v. Sabhoonissa Khatoon, 5 W. R., 169.

Amortgagee, after the mortgage has been satisfied, is not a trustee for the mortgagor within the meaning of Section 2. Baboo Lall Dass and others v. Jamul Ali, 9 W. R., 187.

Section 4.

Section 4, Act XIV of 1859, is confined to an acknowledgment in writing signed by the debtor himself, and not by his agent. Budoooboorsun Bose v. Emaet Moonshie, 8 W. R., 1.

Section 4 does not require the defendant to plead uniformity of payment from the time of the Permanent Settlement, but provides that if, on the trial of a suit, it appears that the rent has not been changed for twenty years, it shall be presumed that the land has been held at that rate from the time of the Permanent Settlement. Bhoyrubhanth Sandial v. Mutty Mundal, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 100.

An admission of a debt with the appended avowal that it is not yet payable in point of time, may be an acknowledgment of a debt under Section 4. An assertion that a sum of money will be payable on the happening of an event future and uncertain is not an acknowledgment of a debt, but the allegation of incidents out of which a debt may at some time arise. John Young v. Manglapilly Rumiya, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 308.

Although part payment is not sufficient to give a new period of limitation without a written acknowledgment of the debt, within Section 4, that section does not require that the writing should express in terms a direct admission that the debt, or part thereof, is due. It is left to the Court to decide in each case whether the writing, reasonably construed, contains a sufficient admission that the debt, or part of it, is due. A. Kristna Row and others v. H. Hacapa Sugapa, 2 Mad. Rep., 307.

In a suit to recover a balance on account of indigo advances made on a kubulect executed by defendant, where defendant had broken no contract, but the discontinuation of the cultivation had been the act of the plaintiff, limitation was held to run from the date of the kubulect, which operated as a written acknowledgment signed by defendant (Section 4, Act XIV of 1859).

Held, too, that a statement of balances found in one of plaintiff's books duly verified, without any signature by defendant (who could not write), was not an acknowledgment within the meaning of Section 4. The entry of defendant's name in one column, taken in connection with a cross in another column, formed no valid signature. Bengal Indigo Company v. Koylsh Chunder Doss, 10 W. R., 293.

Section 4 is not applicable to the execution of decrees. Thus an incidental mention by a judgment-debtor, in a petition filed by him in another case in which another decree-holder had taken out execution, that he owed money to the decree-holder in the present case, was held not to be an admission within the meaning of that section to keep the decree alive. Massamut Luchman Koonour v. Luchmun Vulut, 7 W. R., 79.

An acknowledgment in writing sealed, but not signed, by a defendant, is not an acknowledgment within the meaning of Section 4. Luchmun Pershad v. Rumsan Ali, 8 W. R., 513.

A letter not signed by the debtor is not an acknowledgment in writing within the meaning of Section 4. Baboo Ramnarain v. Hurree Dass, 4 Agra Rep., 81.

The obligation of a Collector on behalf of the Court of Wards properly to manage a lunatic's estate is different from liability to pay the latter's personal debts, and the acknowledgment of an agent for the management of a seumdar's property is not the acknowledgment of the principal within the meaning of Section 4. Shaik Roesoden v. The Collector of Cuttack, 10 W. R., 175.

Held that an admission in writing of the making of a promissory note, accompanied by a repudiation of liability in respect thereof, was not such an acknowledgment as would revive a barred claim. Narbadashankor and another v. Rughnath Ishoervji, 2 Bom. Rep., 349.

Under the Punjab Code, and before Act XIV of 1859 took effect in Oude, letters offering to pay a debt by instalments, and praying to be excused from the payment of interest, were an ample acknowledgment of the debt. Shah Bukkum Lali v. Nawab Imamzood-Dowlah, 5 W. R., P. C., 18.

A letter from the Commissioner of Revenue, expressing his willingness to recommend Government to pay for certain land, is not an acknowledgment in writing within Section 4. Hills v. The Magistrate of Nudden, 11 W. R., 1.

Memoranda of payments made, indorsed on the bond and signed by the defendant, are not acknowledgments in writing within the meaning of Section 4. Gorachand Dutt v. Lokenath Dutt and others, 8 W. R., 334.

Part payment, though evidenced by writing, is not in itself an admission of debt within Section 4.

To entitle a plaintiff to the benefit of a new period of limitation under that section, he must prove that the party sued has in writing authenticated by his signature, either in express terms or by reasonable construction, acknowledged and admitted that the debt or a part thereof is due from him.

This signature need not be formally subjoined or added to an acknowledgment written by the debtor, unless it appears from the writing that such signature was intended, or unless the writing would be incomplete in itself, as an admission without a signature. If the body of the admission is in the debtor's own handwriting, and contains his signature, and was given over by him as complete in itself, it would be an acknowledgment in writing within the meaning of Section 4.

The plaintiff sued three executors for the balance due of their testator's simple contract debt of more than three years' standing. A part payment had been made by the defendants within the three years preceding the commencement of the suit. Two of the defendants had also, but during their testator's life-time, given a personal undertaking in writing to pay the debt out of a fund coming to their hands. The defendants had also signed as executors, and sent a letter to the plaintiff informing him that they had registered his claim against the testator's estate, and that notice would be given to him when the assets, if any, were to be distributed.

_Held_, first, that the case was not taken out of Act XIV of 1859 by the part payment; and secondly, that neither the personal undertaking nor the letter was such an acknowledgment in writing as to bring the case within Section 4 of the same Act.

Remarks on the English doctrine that part payment gives the creditor a new period of limitation. _Raja Jevra Das v. Richardson and others_, 2 Mad. Rep., 79.

When an indigo planter and a ryot contract, the former to make advances of money or seed for the cultivation of indigo plant, and the latter to deliver the indigo plant grown, a mere verbal admission by the ryot of the correctness of an account containing cross items due, without a written acknowledgment from him that the balance is due, does not operate to create or renew any liability with reference to the Law of Limitation. _John Doyle v. Allum Biswas_, 4 W. R., S. C. C., Ref., 1.

Section 4 applies to what is merely an acknowledgment of the debt being due, and not to a writing by which time is given for the payment of the debt, and which comes within Clause 10, Section 1. _Bissambhur Shri v. Syed Bukto Bedarul Hossein_, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 406.

The first plaintiff claimed to redeem a mortgage to defendant's ancestor for Rs. 320. Defendants pleaded that the mortgage was for Rs. 2,336,4, and redeemable only at the pleasure of the mortgagee. They also pleaded the Limitation Act. The original mortgage was not proved. The answer of the mortgagee was silent as to any event that would give rise to a right of redemption for the amount stated by the defendants. The lower Appellate Court reversed that decree, and dismissed the suit as barred. _Held_, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that an acknowledgment by the mortgagees of the mortgagor's title, sufficient to take the case out of the statute, was evidenced by their written answer in suit No. 238 of 1830, and by the answer in original suit No. 441 of 1861, as recited in the judgment in that suit, although the right to redeem and the amount of the mortgage were denied, and the acknowledgments were not made before those suits were brought. The Act for the limitation of suits does not require that the acknowledgment of the title of a mortgagor should be made to any particular person or at any particular time before the institution of the suit in which the bar is pleaded. _Narraina Tanti v. Ukkona_, 6 Mad. Rep., 267.

To bring a case within Section 4, the writing must contain within itself an admission that a debt is due, and oral evidence is not admissible to add to its meaning. _Lutchuman Chetty v. Mutta Ibaraki Marakkuyer_, 5 Mad. Rep., 90.

To render an agreement, come to orally for the payment of the balance of an antecedent debt on a settlement of accounts, available in support of a suit brought after the expiration of the period of limitation applicable to such debt, it must be clearly proved that there was an agreement to have a source of cash to pay the balance, which extinguished the original cause of action. _Hirada Karibisappakh v. Gadigi Muddappa and two others_, 6 Mad. Rep., 142.

In a suit by the plaintiff to recover money lent more than three years before suit, the plaintiff alleged an express verbal promise by the debtor to pay the amount sued for made upon a settlement of accounts,—_Held_, by Holloway and Kindersley, J. J.,—That a verbal promise was not sufficient to prevent the application of the Act of Limitation.

_Per Kindersley, J._,—If a debtor and creditor enter into a new contract, the debtor promising to pay a barred debt, that would seem to be a new cause of action, and it is doubtful whether it was the intention of the Limitation Act to insist that the new promise should be in writing. _Kittupa v. Somanna_, 6 Mad. Rep., 51.

An admission or acknowledgment in writing, under Section 4, is sufficient to give a new period of limitation, although a promise to pay on request is not inferrible from it. The word "due" in the section means no more than that the debt is owing and that there is an existing obligation to pay it.

An acknowledgment made in writing to a third party and not to the creditor is sufficient under the section.

Quer,—Whether an acknowledgment to satisfy the section must be made before suit.

An acknowledgment not coming directly from the debtor himself, but merely deduced as an inference from the tenor of a series of letters, is not a sufficient acknowledgment to satisfy Section 4. To satisfy that section, there must be some principal writing of a particular date, which can be relied on by itself, when properly construed, as constituting an acknowledgment of the debt. _Raja B. v. Mortia_, 4 W. R., 403.

A letter containing no distinct admission of a debt, but only doubtful expressions,—_Held_ not to be a written acknowledgment such as Section 4 requires for the revival of a right of suit. _Gash v. McLean and others_, 2 N. W. R., 403.

Under Section 4 an acknowledgment in writing signed by the agent or constituted attorney of the

By “bona-fide purchaser.” Section 5, does not necessarily mean a bona-fide purchaser without notice, but an honest purchaser with actual fraud. In this view, the defendants, who were purchasers from a mortgagee for valuable consideration of an estate with a doubtful title, were held as bona-fide purchasers, protected by Section 5, and entitled to plead in a suit brought for the redemption of the mortgaged estate, the ordinary limitation of twelve years from the date of their purchase. \textit{Gisborne and Co. v. Radhanath Dass}, 5 W. R., 253.

Certain landed property alleged to have been sold to an idol, and registered in the name of the vendor’s infant son as shebitah, had, after the death of that son, been mortgaged twice by the vendee, who succeeded to the office of shebitah, and was mortgaged subsequently, on the death of the vendor, by his widow to pay off the charge created by her husband. The last mortgage was foreclosed, and the mortgagee obtained a decree for possession. In a suit for the recovery of the property by descendants of the vendee, claiming as shebitah of the idol, — \textit{Held} that the last mortgagee was a bona-fide purchaser for valuable consideration, and was therefore entitled to the protection of Section 5. \textit{Narayana Roy Bhowmik v. Ranee Luchmeee Koomarree and another}, 11 W. R., 36.

Section 5 is intended to benefit only bona-fide purchasers from trustees. \textit{Mussamut Kyroonissa v. Sahloonissa Khatoon}, 5 W. R., 238.

Section 5 does not apply to a case of priority of bona-fide purchase. \textit{Kally Mohun Pal v. Bholanath Chuckladar and others}, 7 W. R., 138.

In a suit by the representative of a mortgagor against bona-fide purchasers for valuable consideration from the mortgagee,— \textit{Held} that the period of limitation was twelve years from the date of the purchase, under Section 5.

A fact from which the infirmity of the vendor’s title might be inferred is evidence of mala-fides, but is not itself mala-fides, and the question of bona-fide purchase is one of fact. \textit{Sitha Ummal v. Rungasami Iyengarand and others}, 5 Mad. Rep., 385.

\textbf{Section 8.}

A verbal admission of a balance on hearing the items of an account read, will not save a suit from being barred by limitation; nor will a subsequent advance avail to preserve any former right of suit. Section 8 does not apply to a suit for balance of accounts between ryots and an indigo factory. \textit{J. Doyle v. Edoor Gazee}, 3 W. R., S. C. C. Ref., 13.

Where in the lower Court an issue was raised whether the plaintiff’s claim was barred by limitation, and the Judge decided it was not, and decreed the case on the merits; and the decree was appealed against by the plaintiff; and the Appellate Court did not deal with the question of limitation, but remanded the case for a new trial on the merits,— \textit{Held} that, on appeal from the new decree, the Appellate Court could entertain the question of limitation; and that the lower Court might have re-tried that issue on the facts found on the new trial.

Where A. acted as del credere agent of B., and as such received commission for effecting sales of cotton for B. and guaranteeing payment by the purchasers,— \textit{Held} that A. was not a “merchant or trader” within Section 8; and the accounts of transactions which they then had together were not on accounts current between merchants and traders who have had mutual dealings. \textit{Phool Coomarree Beebee v. Onkwurherihad Boostobe}, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 50.

Repaying a debt which one has contracted does not constitute a trafficking or dealing in the capacity of “merchant or trader” in the sense intended by Section 8. \textit{Peery Mohun Bose v. Gobind Chundra Ady}, 10 W. R., 56.

In a suit for the balance of an account with interest in a case of mutual dealings between traders, where the High Court had directed the production of the defendant’s book of account, and was satisfied, after receiving the report of the District Court, that there were such books in existence, and that no satisfactory excuse for their non-production was given, and where the defendant had otherwise conducted his case in a very suspicious manner,— \textit{Held} (reversing the decree of the District Court) that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on a prima-facie case being made out by him, and that the suit as regards limitation came within the provision of Section 8. \textit{Fernandez v. Vadsdeo Shilou}, 3 Bom. Rep., A. C., 82.

The test of whether dealings were mutual within Section 8 or not, seems to be, where they are such that the balance was sometimes in favour of one party, sometimes of the other. \textit{Ghaseram v. Monohur Doss and others}, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 241.

The effect of Section 8 enacts that nothing in an account of mutual dealings between merchants and traders is to be barred, provided that there is an item indicating the continuance of such dealings proved to have occurred within the period of limitation. \textit{Hirada Basappa v. Gudigi Muddapa}, 6 Mad. Rep., 142.

\textbf{Section 9.}

In a suit to recover landed and other property to which plaintiff made title by inheritance, and endeavoured to set aside defendant’s plea of limitation by alleging fraud,— \textit{Held} that even if the allegation were true, as it did not exhibit concealment of the cause of action within Section 9, Act XIV of 1859, and the alleged fraud did not constitute an ingredient in plaintiff’s cause of action, it could not get rid of the effect of time. \textit{Bijnath Sukhaye v. Brokmo Deo Narain and others}, 9 W. R., 255.

Section 9 is only applicable when the plaintiff has been kept from a knowledge of his rights by means of fraud. \textit{Sheikh Mukood Ali v. Sheikh Gowkur Ali}, W. R., 1864, 364.

\textbf{Section 10.}

Where a deed of sale is found to be a forgery executed in fraud of a person during his minority, the date from which to compute his knowledge of the fraud practised on him, in the absence of proof that he had before majority the knowledge required by Section 10, is the date on which he attained majority. Kulyan Chunder Mookerjee v. Bipro Churn Purac, 6 W. R., 321.

In a suit against an agent for moneys received on plaintiff's account, in which defendant set up a plea of limitation, plaintiff sought to extend the period of limitation on the ground that fraudulent accounts were delivered. — Held that the Judge should have found specifically when the fraud was first known to the plaintiff; limitation in such a case running (under Section 10) from the date of knowledge of the fraud, not merely from that of suspicion of the fraud or of delivery of accounts. Dhunput Singh Doogur v. Ruhan Mundul, 9 W. R., 239.

Section II.

Persons who had attained their majority before the passing of Act XIV of 1859 are not within the provisions of Section II. Rodhamonee Dosser v. Cuckr Chunder Chuckerbutty, 1 W. R., 52.

The object of Section II is the computation of period of limitation in cases of legal disability, Katie Das Chatterjea v. Beharee Lall Mookerjee, 2 W. R., 305; not to place minors under a special disability as compared with majors, but to make a special concession in their favour. Bissambhor Siricar v. Soorodhuny Dosser, 3 W. R., 21.

Section II lays it down that, when a right of action first accrues to a person who is then under a legal disability (such as a minor, for instance), the action may be brought by such person within the same time after the disability shall have ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time when the cause of action accrued, unless such time exceed the period of three years, in which case the suit shall be commenced within three years from the time the disability ceased. Kherter Mohun Ghose v. Ramessur Ghose, 3 W. R., 184.

There is no law or rule of practice which stays the Law of Limitation in cases of execution pending the period a decree-holder may be under legal disability. Section II applies to suits, and not to processes in execution of a decree. Ralbaram Dossee v. Huro Chunder Chowdhry, 7 W. R., 134.

The object of Section II is that when a person's disability has ceased, and an opportunity to sue upon the cause of action has accrued, then no subsequent disqualification of such person, or of any person claiming through him, should be allowed to operate to extend the period of limitation. Sreekumty Obhoya Doorga v. Huroe Kishore Gope and others, 10 W. R., 285.

In computing the period of limitation under Section II, the period of the plaintiff's legal disability by reason of minority cannot be deducted. Vira Pillay v. Muruga Mutlayan, 2 Mad. Rep., 340.

Section II does not apply to execution of decrees. Tarucknath Mookerjee v. Upornchunder Chatterjee, 8 W. R., 137.

Section II merely means that no limitation will apply to a case in which the person suing was disqualified at the time when the cause of action arose, provided the suit is brought within three years of the time of the disqualification ceasing. Gwa Behary Singh v. Mssamut Bebee Washun, W. R., 1864, 302.

Section II cannot be used for the purpose of altering the limitation prescribed by Act X of 1859 with regard to rents. Dinonath Panday v. Rughoonath Panday, 5 W. R., Act X R., 41.

By Section II a person who is under legal disability when his right of action accrues has not a shorter period allowed him for suing than other parties, but has in addition three years from the date of attaining majority. Sree Persad v. Rajgooroo Trenunuchaloo Deo and others, 10 W. R., 44.

In computing the period of limitation under Section II, the period of the plaintiff's legal dis-

Under Section 11 the subsequent disability of an heir will not save a suit instituted after a lapse of twelve years from the date of cause of action, when such cause of action arose during the life-time of the ancestor. Mohabat Ali and Rahmat Ali v. Ali Mahomed Kulal, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 80; S. C., 12 W. R., 1.

The effect of Section 11 is to provide a distinct period of limitation applicable to every case in which but for legal disability the suit would be barred. In other words, to add three years from the period of limitation applicable to every case in which the disability ceases to the period of limitation made applicable by the Act to the particular case. Ramanaja Chariyar v. Venkatavaradhaiyangar, 4 Mad. Rep., 54.

In a suit for possession of landed property which belonged originally to plaintiffs' father, but which was sold by his widow to defendants, whose case was that she had received the property by hibbah in lieu of dower, plaintiffs contended that their father had held up to the year when he died, from which time up to the sale the widow had held as guardian for them. Held that as the issue of limitation raised in the first Court was a special issue as to the particular provision on the subject of minority found in Section 11, plaintiffs were entitled to be heard on the issue of general limitation under Clause 12, Section 1, and to show that the widow as guardian was in possession at any time within 12 years of the suit. Bakur Ali v. Sookeen Bibee, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 63.

Section 13.

Ignorance of defendant's residence does not fall within any of the provisions of the Limitation Act, extending the periods of limitation prescribed by that Act. But under Section 13 plaintiff is entitled to exclude from the computation of the periods of limitation applicable to his claims, the time during which the defendant is absent out of British territories. The law of limitation being a law which bars the remedy, and does not destroy the right, is by any of its sections indulgence is shown to suitors, the Court will feel bound to give full effect to the language in which that indulgence is conceded. Mahomed Musah-oed-een v. Clara Jane Mushood-deen, 2 N. W. R., 173.

Section 14.

An unsuccessful claimant, instead of bringing a regular suit to establish his right as provided by Section 246, Act VIII of 1859, chose to file an appeal against the order rejecting his claim. His appeal, though successful before the lower Appellate Court, having been thrown out in special appeal, as illegal under the section above cited, he now sues to set aside the order rejecting his claim. Held that he was not entitled under Section 14, Act XIV of 1859, to deduct from the period of limitation the time during which the appeal proceedings were pending. Ramdass Baboo v. R. Watson and Co., W. R., 1864, 371.

When a suit to recover possession of land is instituted in a wrong Court and not returned to the plaintiff until after the time described for such suits, the time so occupied is held not entitled to the benefit of Section 14. Roy Kally Prosonno Setin v. Kisto Nund Dundee, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 13.

Deduction of pendency of a former suit from period of limitation can only be claimed under Section 14, when the Court before whom the former suit was brought had no jurisdiction, and where there has been no adjudication. Nund Dootal Sircar v. Dwarkanath Biswas, 2 W. R., 9.

Section 14, which provides that when a party has bonâ-fide been engaged in prosecuting a suit in a wrong Court, the time when the suit was pending in such Court shall not be counted against him, does not apply to a case of execution of decree. A party cannot be said to be acting in good faith when he applies for the execution of a decree to a wrong Court. Kettarnath Dey v. Gossain Doss Dey, 4 W. R., Mis., 18.

Section 14 does not apply to cases in which the right of the petitioner has been judicially determined, but to suits in which no judgment has been given, but which through error have been bonâ-fide instituted in a Court not having jurisdiction. Execution of a decree should be taken out from the date of the passing, and not from the date of the commencement of that Act. Kalee Chunder Chowdhry v. Ruttm Gopal Bhadooree, 2 W. R., Mis., 1.

A former suit brought, not against the same defendants as in the present suit, but only against one of them, does not fall within Section 14; consequently the time of its pendency cannot be deducted in computing limitation. Nilmadhub Surnokar v. Kristo Doss Surnokar, 5 W. R., 281.

No deduction can be made from the computation of the period of limitation from the time of pendency of a suit wrongly non-suited on a point unconnected with jurisdiction; but a deduction is allowed under Section 14, of the time of pendency of a suit dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Dhommonee Chowdrain and others v. Brindaban Chunder Sircar Chowdhry and others, 7 W. R., 60.

Suit by purchaser of a share of a decree for his portion of the decree-money by the sale of a share of the property of the judgment-debtors, against the auction purchasers of the same property at a sale, in satisfaction of other shares of the same decree. Held that the defendants could plead limitation, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of Section 14, which refers to suits only, and not to summary applications or proceedings in execution. Sheo Narain and others v. Foogul Kishen Ram, 7 W. R., 327.

Where limitation is pleaded, a plaintiff is not entitled, under Section 14, to deduction for the time of the pendency of a suit brought by defendants upon the same cause of action, if it was a suit in which the Courts were unable to decide the question from defect of jurisdiction or other such cause. Odoymonee Debee v. Bishonath Dutt, 9 W. R., 455.

Section 14 does not apply to execution of decrees so as to take them out of the Statute. It merely provides that where a suit is instituted bonâ-fide in a Court not of competent jurisdiction, the time when the suit was pending shall not be reckoned in the period of limitation. Khetronath Dey v. Gossain Doss Dey, 1 Ind.Jur., N. S., 49.

Held that the word "suit" used in Section 14, has only one, and that the common and ordinary sense of the term.

Held, further, that the plaintiff, in preferring an appeal from a summary order, which appeal was expressly forbidden by law, cannot be considered to have been prosecuting a suit within the meaning of Section 14, and was therefore not entitled to indulgence given by the aforesaid section, even assuming that section to be applicable to suits to contest the order under Section 246, Act X of 1859. Futtench Ram v. Monohur Lall, 4 Agra Rep., A. C., 39.

Section 14 does not apply to suits barred by limitation under Act X of 1859, which are expressly exempted from the operation of Act XIV, Section 3. Souadwomanee Dossee v. Poono Chunder Roy, W. R., 1864, Act X R., 113.

According to Section 14, a plaintiff is not entitled to deduct the time occupied by him in prosecuting a former suit in which he was non-suit, much less the time occupied in appealing from that decision and the time between the non-suit and the filing of the appeal (Loch and Shumoonath Fundit, J. J., dissenting). Chunder Madhuk Chuckerbutty v. Bissessuree Deby and others, 6 W. R., 184.

The words "or other cause," in Section 14, apply to cases where the action of the Court is prevented by causes not arising from laches on the part of the plaintiff, in other words, by accidental circumstances beyond his control. Luchman Pershad v. Nimkoo Pershad, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 366.

The period during which a suit is pending in a Court not having jurisdiction is to be excluded from the period of limitation. Krishna Pershad v. Ali, 1 S. W. C. R., C. R., 93, 97.

A suit against putneedars, under Act X of 1859, to recover half the rent mentioned in their kubul having been dismissed on the objection that the plaintiff was entitled to an allowance of the period during which she was bound-fide prosecuting her claim in the Revenue Court, which from defect of jurisdiction was not able to try it. Hurrish Chunder Dutt v. Sreemath Jugodumba Dassee, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 61.

Section 15.

When a Deputy Collector, acting as agent for a minor, uses powers which belong to the Government alone for the resumption of invalid lakheraj tenures, and by virtue of those powers resumes lands for the benefit of the minor and unlawfully dispossesses the previous holder,—

Quare,—Whether such a dispossession is within the contemplation of Section 15, or not. That section does not confer on the person who unlawfully acquires possession of land the advantage of a short period of limitation, on the expiration of which the suit is barred, and B. was entitled to sue for an absolute title to recover. It gives to the dispossessed person who has been wrongfully deprived of possession a right to recover possession within six months without regard to any title, however clear, which may be set up against him. If he sues after six months have expired the parties to the suit are left in the same condition as they would have been in under the former law with reference to the production of proof. Probate Chunder Burooah v. Ranee Kantaowree Dabee, 2 W. R., 250.

A. obtained a decree against B. for possession of land. On appeal by B. that decree was reversed by the lower Court, and B. applied to the lower Court for restitution of the land and for mesne profits. She was put in possession of the land and the Principal Sudder Ameer ordered an investigation into the amount of the mesne profits, and eventually directed the same to be paid to her. On appeal, the Sudder Court reversed this last-mentioned order, holding that the Principal Sudder Ameer went beyond his jurisdiction in giving mesne profits when the decree of the Sudder Court had not awarded mesne profits, and observing that B. should have either applied to the Sudder Court for review of its judgment or should bring a separate suit. The present suit was brought by B. to recover the mesne profits.

Held by Peacock, C. J., and Kemp and Macpherson, J. J. (Loch, J., dissenting), that in the proceedings which B. took in the former suit to obtain the mesne profits, she was prosecuting a suit upon the same cause of action within the meaning of Section 15. Held by Macpherson and Kemp, J. J. (Loch, J., concurring, Peacock, C. J., dissenting), that the order of the Principal Sudder Ameer had not been reversed on the ground of "defect of jurisdiction or other cause" mentioned in Section 14, and that therefore the time during which B. was engaged in endeavouring to obtain the mesne profits in the former execution proceedings could not be deducted, and that the present suit was barred. Hurro Chunder Roy Chowdury v. Shoorodonah Debya, 9 W. R., 402.

Long anterior possession only, without proof of title, cannot avail a plaintiff suing to recover possession after ouster. If he has failed to sue within six months of the alleged ouster, as prescribed by Section 15. Ameer Bibee and others v. Lucknowissa Begum and others, 7 W. R., 232.

In a suit against a landlord to recover possession of land of which plaintiff alleged himself to have been illegally dispossessed,—Held that if plaintiff sought to recover possession without reference to any right or title, but simply on the ground of having been illegally ejected, his remedy would have been under. Section 15. Not having availed himself of this remedy, he has, bound under the law to show that he has title or interest, and that the landlord had ejected him without any right to do so. Nund Kishore Lall and others v. Sheo Dyad Oopadha, 11 W. R., 168.

In a suit for recovery of possession of a share in a certain talook, on the allegation that the plaintiff had been dispossessed under an award passed under Section 15, the defence set up was that the plaintiff was not in possession of the property within twelve years of suit,—Held that the wrongful possession which the plaintiff held during the few months before the award under Act XIV was no possession which could take his case out of the Statute of Limitations. That the dispossession under the award did not give him a fresh cause of action. Gholam Nabi v. Biswanath Kar, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 85; 12 W. R., 9.

Section 15 does not affect the general law on the matters to which it relates, but provides a special remedy for a particular kind of grievance, e.g., to replace in possession a person who has been evicted by a wrongful act from landed property of which he had been in undisturbed possession, and to prevent a powerful person from thus shifting the evidence of proof from himself to another less able to support it. Kalee Chunder Sein v. Adoo Sheikh, 9 W. R., 602.

Where a warrant is issued to the Sheriff to seize certain specific immovable property not coming within the description in the decree, possession under the warrant would not be an illegal possession under the meaning of Section 15. Jodub Chunder Checkky v. Heeraloll Saha, 1 Ind Jur., N. S., 21; S. C. Bourke's Rep., O., C., 384.

Section 15 does not abridge any rights possessed by a plaintiff, but is intended to give him the right, if dispossessed otherwise than by course of law, to have his possession restored, without reference to the title on which he holds.

Where a plaintiff sued to recover a paramba of which he alleged that he was owner and that the defendant had forcibly dispossessed him,—Held that the suit was not barred by Section 15. Kunhi Komponi Kuwapu v. Changarachan Kandul Chunbata Ambu, 2 Mad. Rep., 313.

A person forcibly dispossessed and suing for possession within six months is entitled, under Section 15, to recover, notwithstanding any other title. When a plaintiff's evidence fails to show title in him, but does not show title in another, the plaintiff may recover upon his possession against a defendant wrong-doer. Doe v. Kuppu Pillai, 1 Mad. Rep., O., C., 85.

In considering the subject of possession as creating title, irrespective of Section 15,—Held that possession for a period of sixty years and upwards is sufficient to create a title in the possessor which no one in possession, in possession or repudiate the period sufficient under the Limitation Act is itself a title, even against the rightful owner himself; that prior possession, however short, is itself a title against a mere wrong-doer. Khajah Emaatollah Chowdhry v. Kishen Soondur Surma and others, 8 W. R., 386.

The defendant having had an award under Section 15, the plaintiff's allegation of possession and dispossession by the defendant requires him specifically to prove those facts before the defendant can be called upon to prove his case. Jugwunauth Deb v. Mahomedi Mokum, 17 S. W. R., C., 161.

Section 15 is not applicable to a suit to enforce a mere right of way. Haro Dyad Bose v. Kristo Gobind Sein, 17 S. W. R., C., 70.

Plaintiff's title to the property in dispute having been invaded by an award under Section 15, the present suit was brought to establish that title, and held to be governed by the limitation of twelve years from the date of the award. Eshan Chunder Banerjee v. Zumuduranissa Khatoon, 17 S. W. R., C., 468.

A. had been dispossessed of certain land in execution of a decree which B. had obtained in a suit against C. under Section 15, Act XIV of 1859. A. applied under Section 230, Act VIII of 1859, to recover the land. Held, the decree obtained by B. was a decree within the meaning of Section 230 of Act VIII of 1859, and therefore A. had rightly applied under that section. No stamp was necessary on A.'s application. Bramka Mayi Debi v. Barkut Sirdar, 4 B. L. R., F. B., 94; and 12 S. W. R., F. B., 25.

A party dissatisfied with a legitimate finding under Section 15, Act XIV of 1859, has a special remedy by a suit in a Civil Court, and cannot claim the High Court's interference under Section 15, 24 and 25 Vic. Chap. 104, except where the Judge has exercised a jurisdiction which he has not, or has refused to exercise a jurisdiction which he has. Doorga Soonduree Debi v. Kashee Kant Chuckerbatty, 14 S. W. R., C., 212.

Although in a suit to set aside an award made under Section 15, plaintiff must establish his own title before the party in possession can be required to make good his case, a Judge should look into the summary case itself, and ascertain if there had been a proper enquiry and trial in that case. Surho Mohun Roy v. Surut Chunder Roy, 16 S. W. R., C., 34.

A zemindar cannot compel a trespasser on his land to become his ryot and execute a kubuleut in his favour, and the fact that the zemindar has obtained a money decree under Section 15, against a person, does not entitle him to treat such person either as a trespasser or a ryot on his land. Shikh Hemalee v. Kumula Kant Banerjee, 16 S. W. R., C., 133.

Where a party is restored to possession under Section 15, Act XIV of 1859, the opposite party is not deprived of the right to institute proceedings under Section 25, Act X of 1859, and an appeal against an order under this section lies to the Commissioner. Shibdass Tribedee v. Peerce Soonduree Chowdriain, 14 S. W. R., C., 417.

In cases under Section 15, it is in the discretion of the Court to give costs, either as provided in Section 1 of the rules passed by the High Court.
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

under Act XX of 1865, or (if the proceedings be a miscellaneous case) according to Section 8 of those rules. Radha Kristo Chaklanwvis v. Kalee Prasoono Roy, 15 S. W. R., 328.

Plaintiff sued upon a document promising to pay the price of grain supplied at defendant's request,— Held, that, being a contract in writing which could not have been registered by any law in force at the period of making, the time of limitation was that prescribed by Section 15 of Act XIV of 1859. Guirivi Chetty v. P. Aiyappa Naidu, 2 Mad. Rep., 329.

Section 19.

Where the High Court rejected an application for review of judgment passed by the late Sudder Court, it was held that while the decree of the Sudder Court was governed in the matter of limitation by the rule laid down in Sections 20 and 21, Act XIV of 1859, the only law applicable to the decree of the High Court was Section 19 of that Act. Hurogerishad Roy v. Manick Luskhor, 12 W. R., 343.

A Judge may admit and hear a plea of limitation after the other objections have been disposed of. Section 19, Act XIV of 1859, applies only to Courts in this country established by Royal Charter, and not to the Privy Council, the execution of whose decrees is subject to the limitation prescribed by Section 20 of that Act. A. Wise v. Jugobundoo Baboo, 4 W. R., Mis., 10.

A decree of the High Court as a decree made by a Court established by Royal Charter, falls under Section 19 of Act XIV of 1859, and is subject to twelve years' limitation.

Held, by Jackson, J., that it is a fallacy to suppose that the High Court has two parts; one representing the late Supreme Court, the other the late Sudder. It is one amalgamated Court, possessing and exercising "all jurisdiction and every power and authority whatever in any manner vested in any of the abolished Courts." (Section 9, High Court's Act.)

Held, by Hobhouse, J., that when the present High Court was intended to stand in the place of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut on the one side, and of the Supreme Court on the other, it would only have been intended that the Laws of Limitation which applied to those Courts respectively before they were amalgamated should apply to the Court which took their place. There can be no doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature that decrees of the High Court passed in appeal from Courts not established by Royal Charter should be subject to the limitation provided by Section 20, yet the terms of the law are in conflict with such supposed intention; Section 19 being declared to apply to Courts "established by Royal Charter." The High Court's decrees are therefore subject to a limitation of twelve years. Kishen Kinkur Ghose and others v. Baroda Kunt Roy and others, 8 W. R., 470.

The ruling in 8 W. R., 470 (to wit, that a decree of the High Court falls under the 19th Section of Act XIV of 1859, and is subject to twelve years' limitation), will not apply to a decree of the late Sudder Court, which was not a Court established by a Royal Charter. Thakoor Doss Gossain v. Kashee Nath Mundul, 12 W. R., 73.

The execution of decrees of the High Court is governed as to limitation by Section 19, and not Section 20 or 22, of Act XIV of 1859. Maharajak Mahatab Chand Bahadoor v. Tarucknath Mookerjee and others, 6 W. R., Mis., 30.

When once Act XIV of 1859 (the operation of Sections 19 to 23 in which was suspended by Act XI of 1861 until 1st January, 1862) actually came into operation, all cases became subject to its provisions, and a decree-holder did not get a fresh start from the beginning of 1862. Raj Bullub Bhunj v. Tarunath Roy, 6 W. R., Mis., 30.

The day on which the application for execution is made is not to be reckoned in computing the three years alluded to in Section 19, Act XIV of 1859. An order dismissing an appeal for default, under Section 346 of the Civil Procedure Code, is not a new decree from the date of which the period of limitation begins to run anew. The appearance of the person in whose favour a judgment is given as respondent on an appeal, is not an act done for the purpose of keeping the judgment in force within the meaning of Section 19, Act XIV of 1859. Virasamy Madali v. Mammonomy Ammal, 4 Mad. Rep., 32.

Where a decree of the lower Court is materially altered on appeal by the High Court, e.g., where the amount of mesne profits allowed by the lower Court is cut down by the High Court, the decree becomes a decree of the High Court, and the period within which a proceeding must have been taken to enforce the same, so that it may not be barred by the Law of Limitation, is twelve years under Section 19 of Act XIV of 1859. The Court will take notice of a question affecting its jurisdiction even when urged for the first time on appeal after remand. Chowdry Wahid Ali v. Mullick Inayet Ali, 6 B. L. R., 52; and 14 S. W. R., C. R., 288.

M. and others obtained a decree in the Court of the Agent for the Sardars. This decree was in special appeal confirmed by the High Court. Held, that the period of limitation for the execution of the decree commenced to run from the date of the decree (in special appeal) in the High Court, and not from the date of the decree in the Court below. A decree of the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction, as a decree made by a Court established by Royal Charter, falls under Section 19, and not under Section 20, of Act XIV of 1859, and is therefore subject to the twelve years' limitation. Bapuran Krishna v. Madhavrun Ramran, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C. P., 314.

Section 20.

A bond-side application for execution held to be a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20, Act XIV of 1859, and though it had to be amended
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

Where a decree-holder expends money in procuring attachment of his debtor's property, and advertising the same for sale, the proceeding must be presumed, nothing to the contrary being shown, to be a bond-fide proceeding within the meaning of Section 20, Act XIV of 1859. Juttadhurree Singh v. Wazee Singh, 12 W. R., 357.

A decree was passed in 1850, and was in force in 1859, when Act XIV of that year was passed. Between August, 1860, and 25th April, 1864, nothing effective was done in furtherance of execution. Petitions for execution were filed in May, 1861, and August, 1862, and the usual orders passed on them, but they were struck off in default. On 25th April, 1864, another petition was filed, and notice was served on the debtor. Held that at that time the petition for execution was barred by limitation. The decree was not kept alive by the petitions of May, 1861, and August, 1862, which were struck off in default. Rajak Satyansaran Goshal v. Bhyrur Chunder Brahmo, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 196.

A decree was obtained on 16th April, 1859, and execution was applied for on 28th December, 1861, when the applicant was ordered by the Court to produce a certificate of heirship. On his failing to do so the case was struck off. He next applied for execution on 13th August, 1864. Held that the proceedings taken in 1861 were not bond-fide proceedings on the part of the Court, such as would keep the decree alive, and that the application was barred. Lucknuit Singh Roy v. Wahid Ally, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 194; S. C., 11 W. R., 70.

The three years' limitation prescribed by Section 20 counts from the date of the final decree of the Appellate Court, in a case in which the judgment-debtor has appealed against the original decree. Hurdum Bungre Banerjee v. Ramnecur Banerjee, 6 W. R., Mis., 38.

The petitioners applied for the substitution of their names as heirs of a deceased decree-holder, but failed to satisfy the Judge that they were the heirs of the original decree-holder. Held that such an infructuous application was not a process to enforce or keep in force a decree within the meaning of Section 20. Lallu Bishen Dyal Singh and others v. Ram Sunkur Tewaree, 6 W. R., Mis., 38. Nor is an unsuccessful suit. Jnarnadun Doss Miller and others v. Rajak Rooknee Bullub Bahadoor, 6 W. R., Mis., 48. Nor is the act of taking out the proceeds of a previous sale in execution of a decree. Kishen Mohun Juss v. Chunder Kant Chuckerbutty, 6 W. R., Mis., 49.

An unsuccessful suit by a decree-holder to establish his right to have certain land which formerly belonged to him, and which he had sold to a third party, but which, under the belief that the third party had only purchased benamee for the judgment-debtor, he alleged to be the land of the judgment-debtor, was held to be, if bond-fide, a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20 to keep the decree in force. Eshan Chunder Bose and others v. Juggobundhoo Ghose, 8 W. R., 98.

Application for notice, notice itself, service of notice, issue of process, and execution of process, are all separate and distinct acts which the judgment of the Full Bench (6 W. R., 446) contemplates as proceedings which, if bond-fide taken, would bar the operation of the Law of Limitation, but no proceeding would be effectual within the meaning of Section 20 unless it were bond-fide. Tabbur Singh and others v. Motee Singh and others, 9 W. R., 443.

The three years "preceding the application" allowed in Section 20 must be accounted for by excluding the day on which the application is made. Brojo Behary Sahoy v. Kewal Ram and others, 10 W. R., 5.

Where a decree was in force at the passing of Act XIV of 1859 it would be barred after three years; but if steps had been taken, and an application made within that period, a second application would fall within the rule laid down in Section 20. Gregory v. Jaychunder Banerjee, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 80.

The taking out by a decree-holder of money deposited in Court by his judgment-debtor is an infructuous proceeding in Court by his judgment-debtor is an infructuous application was not a proceeding for the purpose of enforcing the decree. Jogesh Prakash Gangooly v. Kalee Coomar Roy and others, 8 W. R., 274. So also is an appeal from an order setting aside an attachment. Kallypersaud Singh v. Yankee Deo Narain, 7 W. R., 9.

Where an application for execution was made, and notice was issued thereupon to the judgment-debtor, the proceeding, being apparently bond-fide, was held sufficient to keep the decree alive under Section 20. Shooh Chand Chunder v. D. Grant, 7 W. R., 10.

Where a Court of Small Causes delivered final judgment and decree on the whole matter in dispute, and more than a year, but less than three years, had elapsed from the date of the decree without any proceeding having been taken upon it,—Held that Section 20 applied, and that the plaintiff's application for a warrant in execution of the decree was not barred by lapse of time. Punshonada Chetti v. Raman Chetti and others, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 446.

The judgments of the late Supreme Court, sitting under Act IX of 1850, are not affected by Act XIV of 1859, Section 20. Coultrup and another v. Smith, 1 Mad. Rep., O. C., 204.

In Section 20 the words "any judgment, decree, or order," mean a judgment, decree, or order which the person in whose favour it is given is at liberty to enforce by execution. An application for a review or a petition of appeal by the person against whom the judgment, decree, or order was given, would not be a "proceeding taken to enforce such judgment," decree, or order, or to keep the same in force, by the person in whose favour the judgment had been given, but secus if he had opposed the application or petition. Biprodoss Gossain and others v. Chunder Sikhar Bhutcharjee and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 248; 7 W. R., 52.

The words "some proceeding" in Section 20 include every application for execution bond-fide made, and all acts done either by the Court or by an officer of the Court, or bond-fide by the applicant, for enforcing a decree or keeping it in force.

The striking of an execution case off the file is not a proceeding for the purpose of enforcing the decree. In such a case limitation will count from the date when the application for execution was first made, or when the last bond-fide act was done.
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

in furtherance of the application. Gooroo Dass Auckhookee and others v. Modoo Koonoo and others, 6 W. R., Mis. R., 98.

By Section 20 no process of execution shall issue from any Court not established by Royal Charter to enforce any judgment, decree, or order of such Court, unless some "proceeding" shall have been taken to enforce such judgment, decree, or order, or to keep the same in force within three years next preceding the application for such execution.

Held that an issue of notice by the Court, under Act VIII of 1859, Section 216, is a "proceeding" and the service of notice by the officer of the Court is a "proceeding" within the meaning of this section, and that three years will be to run from the date of the last of the proceedings, whether a bond fide application for execution, or the last act done by the party, the Court, or its officer, in furtherance of such bond fide application. Ram Sahoy Singh v. Shew Sahoy Singh and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 421.

A joint decree for damages was obtained by several plaintiffs in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Patna in 1854, and was kept alive by endeavours to execute it till 1861. On the 15th June, 1861, the Court passed an order modifying the costs of the original decree, but this order was reversed on appeal on the 19th August, 1862. Some of the plaintiffs having died in the meantime, an application was made on the 29th July, 1863, and an order was passed thereon on the 26th May, 1864, whereby the present decree-holders were substituted for the deceased plaintiffs. A new Principal Sudder Ameen was appointed on the 10th December, 1864, and he reversed that order, and required from the present decree-holders a certificate of heirship, which they obtained on the 16th September, 1865. On the 20th of the same month an order for execution was made by the Principal Sudder Ameen, but it was reversed by the Judge on appeal, on the ground that the order of the 26th May, 1864, was not a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20; and therefore the application for execution was too late. Held that execution might have been obtained under Section 207 of Act VIII of 1859 by the survivors of the original decree-holders, for the benefit of all parties interested in it. The order of the lower Appellate Court was reversed. Teja Singh v. Rajnarayan Singh, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 62; 10 W. R., 95.

Held that the provision of Section 20 applies where there is a present right to execute the decree, and not to cases of an instalment made payable at a future date; and that in the latter case application may be made within three years from the date of the last instalment becoming due, without being barred by limitation provided in the said section. Ulatf Ali Khan v. Ram Lall, 1 Agra Rep., F. B., 83.

Where a decree-holder comes to execute his decree within three years from the date when a previous proceeding has been taken to enforce his decree, he is entitled under Section 20 to have a second process in execution, notwithstanding he may never have come within three years from the passing of Act XIV of 1859. Huro Nuth Bose v. Mudumun Mohun Chuckerbutty, 6 W. R., Mis., 39.

The mere striking off an application for execution is not a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20. Maharajah Dheraj Mahatab Chand Bahadoor v. Dino Moyo Debia, 6 W. R., Mis., 60.

A suit by a decree-holder to set aside orders passed under Section 246, Act VIII of 1859, and to declare his right to sell a certain estate as the property of his judgment-debtor in execution of his decree, is a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20, Act XIV of 1859, to enforce such decree. Ram Coomar Chowdhry v. Brojessure Chowdrasking, 6 W. R., Mis., 14.

If after a decree upon a application for review of judgment or petition of appeal the person in whose favour the original decree was given appears in person (whether voluntarily or upon service of notice) to oppose the application, and files a vakalatnama, or does anything for the purpose of preventing the Appellate Court or the Court of Revenue from setting the judgment aside, such an act being an act of the person in whose favour the judgment has been given for the purpose of preventing its being set aside, is an act done for the purpose of keeping the judgment in force. Bhuvaneshwari Debi v. Makendranath Chowdhry, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 33.

An application for execution of a decree followed by the issue of notice, if made bond fide (i.e., with a real intention and desire on the part of the decree-holder to execute his decree), is a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20 to keep alive the decree. Lucknow Chuckerbutty v. Ram Chand Sircar, 6 W. R., Mis., 63.

Where a decree passed by the late Sudder Court in 1859 was appealed to the Privy Council, and the decree-holder neither applied to the Sudder Court or to the High Court to take out execution, nor appeared before the Privy Council, by whom the appeal was struck off for default,—Held that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation under Section 20, no proceeding having been taken to enforce it within three years; and that, in such a case, the word "judgment," in that section did not mean the final judgment. Ram Ruttun Banerjee v. Maharajah Amceroomolt Bhuwaware Gobind Bahadoor, 6 W. R., Mis., 95.

Something more than the mere presentation of a petition on the part of a decree-holder for execution is necessary to keep a decree alive. Raj Bullub Bunge v. Taranath Roy, 3 W. R., Mis., 2.

A proceeding taken in execution of a decree does not serve to keep a cross-decree alive. Hemraj Chowdhry v. Aswoodun, 5 W. R., Mis., 43.

The law makes no distinction between the different defendants liable under a decree; the decree is kept in force if any effectual proceeding is taken under it within the prescribed time to keep it alive. But where a decree, though nominally in one document, really contains separate decrees against separate individuals, the Law of Limitation may be put into force in execution against the different defendants as if there were separate decrees. Mary Eliza Stephens and others v. Ummoda Dosset, 6 W. R., 13.

An attempt at settlement of accounts in Court is sufficient to keep a decree alive. Mussunath Fustutonnisax v. Chutter Dharee Singh, 6 W. R., Mis., 43.

An application for execution and an order to deposit tullubana followed by the deposit of the
LIMITATION UNDER ACT XIV OF 1859.

Proceedings in execution of a decree as to mesne profits are held to be an effectual proceeding within the meaning of Section 20, to enforce the same decree as to costs. Ooffendur Mohun Mustaftee v. H. D. Tripp, 5 W. R., Mis., 40.

Resisting an appeal against a decree (which appeal was eventually compromised) is a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20, taken to enforce or keep alive the decree. Syud Khan v. Jumal Bibee, 5 W. R., Mis., 19.

A decree-holder applying on December 24th, 1864, to execute his decree passed on December 7th, 1861, was bound, under Section 20, to show that he had taken some proceeding within three years next before the application to keep alive the decree. Bharut Singh v. Sadut Ali, 5 W. R., Mis., 20.

The attachment of a judgment-debtor's property is an effectual proceeding within the meaning of Section 20, to enforce a decree. Prosonno Coomar Mookerjee v. Ramtonoo Chunder, 5 W. R., Mis., 43.

The filling of an application by a debtor for the review of an order passed for execution of decree does not bar the operation of Section 20, nor does the order rejecting the petition of review give a subsequent proceeding taken by the decree-holder, for the recovery of any sum or mesne profits, a meaning of Section 20, taken to enforce or keep alive the decree. Chowdhry Fumennyo Mullick v. Bissambhur Panjah, 5 W. R., Mis., 45.

In 1845 K. and M. obtained a joint decree for possession and mesne profits against N. In 1846 possession was taken, and the case was struck off in 1847. In 1850 K. alone applied for execution and was refused, he not being the sole decree-holder. K. disappeared in June, 1851, and was never afterwards heard of. In February, 1852, S. S., wife of K., applied for execution in 1861, was intime under Section 20. The Court found that the various attempts to collect the debts due to her husband, which was granted in July, 1864. The present application was made by S. S. and M. on the 23rd August, 1864, S. S. having performed kooshaputra on 18th June, 1863. The Court found that the various attempts to execute were made bond fide. Held, first, that the decree was in force at the time of the passing of Act XIV of 1839; secondly, that the present application, having been made within three years of the proceedings in 1861, was in time under Section 20 of that Act. W. G. N. Pogose v. Boisstub Lall and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 1.

Where a judgment-creditor took out execution of his decree for costs against all the judgment-debtors, and recovered a portion from some of them, and released those particular debtors from any further payment under the decree, his suit to recover the amount due from the other debtors having been brought within three years from the date of the proceeding last taken by him, was held not barred by...
limitation under Section 20, Act XIV of 1859.

Sheikh Bunneed Ali and others v. Jugessur Singh and others, 6 W. R., Mis., 25.

Section 2, Act XI of 1861, does not give a fresh starting-point, but simply restricts the operation of Section 20, Act XIV of 1859, until January 1, 1862, without reference to the date of the passing of Act XIV, or without curtailing the period within which limitation under that Act bars a claim to revive a decree passed before the passing of the Act.

Where the last application to execute a decree passed in 1854 was made in November, 1862,—

Held that the case must be disposed of under Act XIV.

A proceeding against certain of a number of joint judgment-debtors, in which, in the presence of certain of them, some are released from execution and some declared liable, is a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20. Mohesh Chand Bivasw v. Toom, Toom v. Mohesh Chand Bivasw, 9 W. R., Mis., 319.

In order to keep a decree alive it is, under Section 20, not necessary that the application for execution should be made with the intention of enforcing the decree at that time. All that the section requires is that some proceeding shall have been taken to enforce the decree or to keep it in force within three years. Kondaraja Venkata Subbaya v. Rama Krishnamma, 4 Mad. Rep., 75.

Application for execution of a decree obtained in 1858 under the old law as to limitation, was made in January and disposed of in February, 1864, and a subsequent application was made in November, 1867. Held that the first application was in time, but the second application was barred by Section 20.

Section 20 is not applicable to a decree until the liability under it has become enforceable by process of execution. Gopala Satty v. Damodara Satty, 4 Mad. Rep., 173.

The period of limitation provided by Section 20 runs not from the date of a former application for process of execution to enforce the decree, but from the date of the order upon the application. An application to enforce the execution of a decree was made on the 30th August, 1865. The application was dismissed by an order of the Court dated the 14th October, 1865. The second application was made on the 6th October, 1868.

Held that the second application was not barred by the Limitation Act. Ramanaja Aiyangar v. Venkata Cherry, 4 Mad. Rep., 260.

The filing of an application for execution is a proceeding within the meaning of Section 20, sufficient to give the decree-holder a new period of three years. Virada Chetty v. Vaiyapuri Mudali, 4 Mad. Rep., 151.

Applications for execution were made more than three years from the date of the original decrees in the suit, but within three years from the date of the decrees in the regular and special appeals affirming the original decrees. Held that Section 20 did not bar the issuing of process of execution upon the application. The period of limitation applicable to decrees of the High Court on appeal from Courts in the Mofussil considered. Aruna Chella thudayan v. Veludayan, 5 Mad. Rep., 215.

The petitioners, as widow and adopted son of a decree-holder, applied by petition to the District Moonsiff for execution of the decree on the 17th June, 1864. The District Moonsiff made an order stating that execution would not be granted unless the petitioners obtained a certificate from the District Court under Act XXVII of 1860. In August, 1864, an application was made for a certificate to the Civil Court, and an order was made refusing the application, and the order was affirmed on appeal. A second application was made for execution in July, 1867. Held that the right of the petitioners to obtain execution was barred by Section 20, Act XIV of 1859.

Quare,—Whether a suit on the decree could be maintained. Lakshamma v. Venkatarama Chadir, 4 Mad. Rep., 89.

Consent of parties cannot extend the period allowed by law for enforcing a decree or keeping it in force, nor is an agreement to suspend execution for a specified time a “proceeding” within the meaning of Section 20.

A decree of the High Court on appeal from the Mofussil must be executed within three years, under Section 20. Such decree is not a decree of a Court established by Royal Charter within the meaning of Section 19.

Ramcharan Byasak v. Lakhkunth Bannik, 7 B. L. R., 704; and 16 S. W. R., F. B., 1.

An order of a Court dismissing an application for execution of a decree, on the ground that it is barred by the Law of Limitation, is not a “summary decision” within the meaning of Section 22. It is an order within the meaning of Section 20 of that Act.

So long as an actual bond-fide contest is going on in Court between a decree-holder and the judgment-debtor as to the judgment, there is a pending “proceeding” within Section 20, and the period of limitation must be computed from the Court’s decision.

S. M., on 24th April, 1866, obtained a decree against B. M., for possession of certain land, and also for certain moveable property. B. M. then appealed to the High Court against the decree so far only as it related to the moveable property. S. M. appeared as respondent. The High Court modified the decree in respect of the moveable property only on the 6th March, 1869. On the 26th April, 1869, the decree-holder applied to the Court which gave the original decree for execution in respect of the land only. He was refused execution as barred by limitation under Section 20. Held, the appearance of S. M., the decree-holder, as respondent in the appeal preferred by B. M. to the High Court (which was in respect of the moveable property only) was no proceeding to enforce the decree in respect of the land or to keep it in force. The execution of the decree in respect of the land was barred. Srinath Majumdar v. Brujah Nath Majumdar, 4 B. L. L., Ap., 99, and 13 S. W. R., C. R., 399.

A decree was obtained on 6th June, 1861, and in February, 1861, a pretended purchaser of it sought execution. On 15th March, 1864, the original decree-holder herself applied for execution of the same decree against certain of the judgment-debtors without mentioning the appellant, who was one of them. Subsequent proceedings at different times were taken between her and the alleged purchasers in order to ascertain which of them was really entitled to execution of the decree, and on the 6th March, 1867, her representatives got a decree setting aside the alleged purchase, and declaring that they might execute the decree of 6th June, 1861. Accordingly on 31st August, 1868, an application was made by her representatives for that purpose. Between the 15th March, 1864, and 31st August, 1868, no proceedings had been taken in execution.

 Held that the application was not barred by limitation. That no execution could be given till it was ascertained who were the actual decree-holders. That the intermediate proceedings for that purpose were bond-fide proceedings within Section 20 for the purpose of keeping the decree in force. Khaja Abdul Ganni v. N. P. Pogose, 4 B. L. R., A. C., 1, and 12 S. W. R., C. R., 436.

In the case of a joint decree, a bond-fide proceeding by any one of the decree-holders is a sufficient proceeding to keep the decree alive within Section 20. Oudhbehari Lal v. Brajamohan Lal, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 41; and 13 S. W. R., C. R., 128.

The holder of a decree for possession, to enforce which no proceeding had been taken, applied more than three years after the date of the decree for execution, stating that she had obtained possession by private compromise, and asking that an order might issue for the registration of her name on the tajwied of the Collectorate. Upon this the Civil Court issued a precept to the Collector for the requisite mutation of names. Held that the precept was a process to enforce the decree, and its issue was precluded by Section 20. When a copy of such a decree is sent to a Collector in pursuance of Clause 2, Section 24, Regulation XLVIII of 1793, it is for him to inquire and decide whether the mutation of names ought to take place. But where a precept is issued by the Civil Court requiring the Collector to insert a certain name in the tajwied of the Collectorate, and the holder of a decree against certain of the judgment-debtors with the assent of the Governor-General, namely, the 4th of May, 1859, and that the words "in force at the time when (by Act XI of 1861) it came into operation" are construed to mean the time when the Act received the assent of the Governor-General, namely, the 4th of May, 1859, and not the 1st of January, 1862, the 6th of May, 1859, the date of the application for execution, the application for execution was not barred.

Appeals against orders of the Court charged with the execution of a decree, having the effect of restraining execution or stopping further proceedings, are proceedings coming within the terms of Section 20. Nityanund Koondoo v. Nugendo Chunder Ghose, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 299.

A plea of limitation under Section 20 can only be raised by the defendant in the suit, and not by third parties, who neither represent nor derive title from him. Brijonauth Chowdry v. Lall Meen Munneepooree, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 391.

Sections 20 and 21.

According to Sections 20 and 21, Act XIV of 1859, read together, process of execution may be issued upon decrees in force at the time of the passing of that Act within the time mentioned in Section 21, without any prior proceeding having been taken; but if an application is made to enforce such a decree more than three years after the passing of the Act, no execution shall issue upon it, unless some proceeding shall have been taken to enforce it, or to keep it in force within three years next preceding the application for execution. If such proceeding has been taken within the time barred, although the decree may have been in force at the time of the passing of Act XIV, and the application for execution made more than three years after the passing of the Act, Mohabee Persaud v. Mussamut Pranpulty Koore, 7 W. R., 515.

Held that Section 20 (and not Section 21) applies to decrees or orders made after the 4th of May, 1859, and that the words "in force at the time of the passing of this Act" must be construed to mean the time when the Act received the assent of the Governor-General, namely, the 4th of May, 1859, and not the 1st of January, 1862, or 6th of May, 1859. The 6th of May, 1859, was the date of the passing of Act XIV of 1859 (4th of May, 1859), so that it was in force at the time of the passing of Act XIV of 1859 (4th of May, 1859), the Sudder Ameen rejected an application for execution made on the 19th April, 1865; but the District Judge reversed his order, being of opinion that decrees referred to in Section 21 of the Act might be saved from the operation of Section 20, even though no process of execution had issued within the time provided for by Section 21. Held that the right construction of the Act was to keep these sections distinct by applying Section 20 to decrees or orders made after the passing of the Act, and Section 21 to decrees or orders in force at the time of its passing; so that it was not necessary to resort to Section 20 in construing Section 21 if the word "may" in the latter section were read as equivalent to "must" or "shall," on the principle that affirmative words sometimes imply negative of what was not affirmed, as strongly as if expressed.

Semble,—Where the issuing of the execution within the time limited by Section 21 was prevented by the delay of the Court which was to execute the decree, such Court would have power to prevent an unjust prejudice to the suitor by the delay unavoidsly arising from its own act, by ordering the execution to issue as of the date when it would have been issued if there had been no such delay. Bai Ude Kuvor v. Mulji Naran, 3 Bom. Rep., A. C., 177.

Section 21.

According to Section 21, the application for execution must be made within three years from the time of the passing of the Act, and not from the time of its coming into operation, Act XI of 1851 notwithstanding. Ruchhooj Chander v. Mustsamat Velaeeck Begum, W. R., 1864, Mis., 27.

According to Section 21, process of execution cannot be issued in respect of a decree in force at the passing of that Act, except where an application has been made, either within the time previously limited by law, or within three years next after the passing of the Act, whichever should first expire.Abortive, because unauthorized proceedings, cannot give the decree-holder any fresh start for computing limitations. Baroda Debua v. Sreeam Chowdhry, 5 W. R., Mis., 21.

Section 21 applies to the first application after the passing of the Act to execute a decree in force at the time of the passing of the Act; but on the next and subsequent applications, the rule contained in Section 20 is to be followed. Gaspar Gregory v. Juggat Chunder Bannerjee, 5 W. R., Mis., 17; Doorga Churn Roy and others v. Din Moyee Debua, 6 W. R., Mis., 14.

Proceedings taken in execution of decree under either Section 20 or Section 21 are without authority of law, unless taken within the time allowed by law. Kool Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Kumal Chunder Roy and others, 6 W. R., Mis., 17.

Section 21 was passed to give an extension of time to decree-holders whose decrees would have been barred under the new law, but it in no way affects decree-holders who come within the ordinary time allowed by the new law for the execution of decrees. Huro Nath Bose v. Moddun Mohun Chuckerbutty, 6 W. R., Mis., 39.

Limitation under Section 21, Act XIV of 1859, counts from May 5th, 1859 (the date of the passing of the Act), and not from the date of its coming into operation. The Collector of Bierbhoom v. Raj Coomaree Dassia, 2 W. R., Mis., 17.

Where a decree passed before 1859 authorized the judgment-debtor to pay by instalments extending over a period of thirteen years, and no proceedings in execution were taken within the time prescribed by Sections 20 and 21, the execution of the decree was held barred by limitation even as to those instalments which were within time. Tiluck Chunder Gooho and another v. Gourmonce Debee and another, 6 W. R., Mis., 92.

It is not necessary, under Sections 20 and 21, that process of attachment should have been taken out within three years; but in order to determine whether execution is barred or not, it must be seen whether, at the time of application to execute next after the passing of the Act, any portion of the time theretofore limited by law for issuing process of execution still remains, unless these three years from the passing of the Act have already expired. Nowaraja Chowdhry and others v. Ram Kanya Dass and others, 7 W. R., 330.

Interpretation of Full Bench decision (7 W. R., 515) with regard to limitation in cases of execution of decrees under Section 21. Degendur Narain Ghose v. Hur Kishore Dutt and others, 8 W. R., 88.

Section 21 is to be read as an independent section and distinct from Section 20. Bai Ude Kuvor v. Mulji Naran, 3 Bom. H. C. Rep., A. C. J., 177.

Where the holder of a decree which was in force when Act XIV of 1859 came into operation applied for execution on the 5th of December, 1864, but allowed the application to drop, and again applied for execution on the 28th of March, 1866, it was held that he was barred by the Law of Limitation. Mukunda Valad Balachaudya v. Sitarum and Nile, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 193.

Section 22.

A decree passed under Act XIX of 1841 on a claim to a certain share of property by right of succession is a summary order, and therefore subject to the limitation of one year provided by Section 22, Act XIV of 1859. Masedoonissa Beebee v. Fueen Beebee, 5 W. R., Mis., 6.

An order awarding possession under Section 15, Act XIV of 1859, is a summary award to which the provisions of Section 22 are applicable. A summary decision is not a final one on the matter at issue between the parties. In the matter of Nobokissen Mookerjee, 11 W. R., 188.

Where a suit was brought to recover a balance due on account of advances made more than three years before, it was held that the case came within the exception contained in the last section of Act XIV of 1859. Shah Mahmun Lall and others v. Nawab Imtiazood Dowlah and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 142.

An order for costs made in execution is not of the nature of a summary award described in Section 22, but comes within the word "order" in Section 20. Puresh Narain Roy v. J. Dalrymple, 9 W. R., 458.

The words "summary decision," as used in Section 22, mean a decision of the Civil Courts not being a decree made in a regular suit or appeal. Under Section 22 the period for the enforcement of such decision is one year from the time it was passed. Ramdhun Mundle v. Ramesh Shukcharjee, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 235; 11 W. R., 117.

The words "unless some proceeding shall have been taken within one year," &c., Section 22 must be read as excluding the day on which application to enforce a summary decision is made.

The petitioner applied, under Section 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, to remove an attachment placed on his property. On the 8th of July, 1867, the Court passed an order releasing the property from the attachment with costs. On the 8th of July, 1868, the petitioner applied to execute that order as to the costs. Held that he was at time.

A judgment-creditor having in execution taken possession of lands in excess of his decree, objection was raised and a case instituted in which adjudication was made in favour of the judgment-debtor, the order for restoration of the excess land being confirmed in appeal. Held that this order was not a summary one within the meaning of Section 22, and that an application for its execution was governed by the three years’ limitation. Tekayet Roop Mungle Singh v. Tekayet Chooramun Singh, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 182.

Section 30.

Where a plaintiff, relying upon the defendant’s representation as to the latter’s place of residence, brought his suit in a Court which had not jurisdiction, the time of the pendency of the suit in such Court was held to be properly excluded under Section 30 in computing limitation. Banee Madhub Lahoroo v. Bipro Dass Dey, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 69.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

I.—PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

1.—RELATIONSHIP OF PRINCIPAL AND AGENT

The manager of an estate under a safunamah on behalf of B. cannot, without special authority from B., represent him in any suit or charge him with the acts of the defence of an action brought against him. Bholanath Sandyal v. Goïr Persaud Moïtra, S. W. R., C. R., 310.

Where the evidence goes to show that a particular person said to be the agent of the defendant was really his general agent, and did transact business of various kinds for his principal, it is unnecessary to prove any special power enabling him to enter into a particular contract of bargain and sale. Per Macpherson, J.—The extent and nature of the powers vested in an agent are not so much matter of law as matter of fact. If it be proved that a person acted ordinarily as an agent for the defendant in buying and selling articles of merchandise, the fact of his not being proved to have previously purchased a particular kind of article would not necessarily operate against the plaintiff's case. The Court, in deciding the question of agency, must look to the general evidence on the record.

A Court of first instance decreed a case ex-parte in favour of the plaintiff, and at a re-hearing did not recall the plaintiff's witnesses, whom, therefore, the defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine, and again gave a decree for the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court rejected the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses, and reversed the decree. Held that the Court of first instance should have recalled the plaintiff's witnesses, and given the defendant an opportunity of cross-examination.

A lessor's agent for the receipt of rent is not necessarily his agent to receive lessee's notice of option to renew the lease; but if he has received such notice, and given it to lessor within time, the notice is sufficient. E. Barnet v. C. B. Skinner, 2 W. R., 208.

A mere admission of an agency to sell will not necessarily raise a presumption of an authority to buy on credit, or otherwise to pledge the credit of the principal. Ram Narain Poldar v. Ramnath Shaha, 2 W. R., 231.

A principal can determine the authority given to an agent. The authority given to a manager may be revoked by a shareholder, and another shareholder cannot resist such revocation, unless there has been a stipulation in the deed providing for the appointment of a manager that the authority should continue for some definite time. Bulakee Lall v. Mussamut Induputee Kowar, 3 W. R., 41.

To establish a prima-facie case of constructive purchase by an agent out of the funds of the principal, it must be proved that at the time of the purchase the agent had in his hands funds of the principal sufficient to make the purchase. Meer Sulthan Ali v. Syed Woolfut Ali, 3 W. R., 279.

Held by the majority if it is not within the power of an agent appointed by a deed of trust to make any amount of money for his master, particularly when it was not purchased or used for the face and that the assistant, in writing to...

the vendor for the seed, styled himself in the body of the letter as the manager of the concern, yet his signing himself for another person, and not for the owner of the factory, disclosed to the vendor that the other person and not the owner of the factory was his principal. Roghpoobursadl Vundun v. Alexander Christian, 3 W. R., 123.

Although a general agent may not have power to borrow money for his principal, yet the authority to borrow in a particular case may be shown by a previous authority, either express or implied, or by subsequent ratification.

Where, by the terms of a contract, money is to bear interest, interest is as much payable by virtue of the contract as the principal; and a Court has no power in such a case to withhold interest. Baboo Bunwareelal Sahoo v. Maharajah Moheshur Singh, Marsh., 544.

An agent employed in collecting rent cannot question the title of his principal to receive the rent, but must pay him all that he collects. Dhun-nanjoy Kur v. Gobind Churn Dass Mohunt, 3 W. R., Act X R., 3.

The act of an agent being employed cannot affect the right of the principal to receive money due to him. W. Taylor v. Rance Asmerdh Koonwar, 4 W. R., 86.

The principal acquires no fresh cause of action against the agent from the date on which the agent admitted the amount which was due from him, and executed an agreement to pay it. Maharajah Makatab Chand Bahadoor v. Judoo Mohun Mitter, 5 W. R., Act X R., 91.

A person's agent for the purchase of an estate is not necessarily his agent to re-convey the same. Thus, where one member of an undivided Hindu family, with the authority of his brothers, purchased a share in certain property, and afterwards (without any authority from them) cancelled the sale, received back the consideration-money, and surrendered the kobalah,—Held that the brothers were not estopped from suing the parties in possession of the whole property to set aside the transaction.

LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL

A mercantile firm is responsible for frauds committed by one of its members or agents while acting for and in the business of the firm. Luckhee Kani Bonik v. Ram Chunder Bysack, 2 W. R., 186.

Held that an agent who is appointed for the general management and conduct of business cannot bind his principal by an unusual contract, not strictly relating to the conduct of the business, unless he has express or implied authority for the same.

The fact that a consignor dealt in good faith with the agent, who exceeded his authority, is not sufficient to bind the principal. The consignor dealing with the agent ought to satisfy himself of the agent's authority.

The defendant, not having ratified his agent's act by receiving the benefit of the contract, cannot be bound by the acts of his agent and liable to make good the losses. Madaree Lall v. A. G. Gilmore, 9 A. G. Gilmore, 262.

Where it is sought to make the agent of a foreign principal liable on a contract there is no presumption of law, but the case must be determined by the particular facts. But in the absence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed, as a matter of fact, that credit was given to the agent. McGavin and others v. Wilson, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 405.

The determinations in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made. Therefore, where the relief sought by the plaintiff is grounded on a contract, the case must not be determined upon an alleged equity resulting from a different state of facts and inconsistent with that alleged by the plaintiff.

When a principal merely authorizes an agent to bid at an auction, he is not liable for an agreement entered into by the agent with a third party pledging him to pay to such party a certain sum in consideration that he should abstain from bidding. Eshan Chunder Singh v. Shama Churn Bhutto, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 87; 6 W. R., P. C., 57.

If an agent signs a promissory note without disclosing the names of his principals, the latter are not liable. Sheo Churn Sahoo v. G. Curtis, 3 W. R., 139.

The defendant, a servant of the Government, having given orders for bricks, and the plaintiff being aware that the defendant was a servant of Government, and that the bricks were required for building bridges on account of Government—held that the Government was liable, and not the defendant personally. Sreenath Roy v. D. S. Ross, 4 W. R., S. C. C. Ref., 13.

In a suit for rent, where plaintiff was well aware that the principal was a third party, and that the defendants were the agents of such third party, defendants having successfully pleaded payment, it was held that plaintiff could not proceed against the principal. Gourree Sunker v. Bholee Pershad and others, 11 W. R., 247.

Statements fraudulently made by an agent for his own benefit are not binding on the principal. Towakir Lall and another v. Tekeit Singh, 6 W. R., 252.

Signature by an agent is insufficient to take a case out of Act XIV of 1859. Rajah Teiavara Dash v. Richardson, 2 Mad. Rep., 84.

An agent employed to effect a wagering contract is entitled to recover from his principal money paid on his account in respect thereof, his authority not having been revoked. The claim is not affected by the Act XXI of 1848. Thirinowandas Juguverandas v. Motillal Ramdas, 1 Bom. Rep., 34.

A native lady, possessing an estate in a district in which she did not reside, opened an account with a banker, through her son, as her agent, to provide for the punctual payment of Government revenue, and to meet current expenses. Held that such a course of dealing did not of itself warrant the banker in advancing to the son, as the accredited agent of his mother, large sums of money on bonds. Bidee Misrarin v. Gopal Lall Doss, 10 W. R., 376.

If a principal adopts the acts of an agent in respect of the purchase of a property, he must take the property subject to the conditions with which the agent encumbered it, notwithstanding any secret arrangement between them not known to third parties. Ishenchunder Singh v. Shama Churn, W. R., 1864, 3.

When a man allowed his wife to have control over certain property and to mortgage it—held that she acted as his agent, and that he was bound by her act. Mooradee Bebe v. Sheikh Syefoolah, W. R., 1864, 318.

Held that the appellant having delivered indigo pursuant to the terms of a smatta made by a third party professing to act on his behalf, must be considered to have assented to the engagement, and is not now competent to repudiate it. Mahomed Nuzzeroonollah v. Ferguson, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 139.

The acts of a Government officer bind the Government only when he is acting in the discharge of a certain duty within the limits of his authority, or, if he exceed that authority, when the Government in fact or in law, directly or by implication, ratifies the excess. The Collector of Masulpitam v. Cavaly Vencata Narainapah, 2 W. R., P. C., 61.

Where the proprietors of an estate, on being informed by their agent of a proposition to obtain a lease of the property, refused their consent, and the agent notwithstanding gave the applicant an amul-dustuck to enter upon the property as lessee, and gave no notice at the time to the proprietors, but subsequently informed them of it—held that the proprietors were not under obligation to take early steps to disavow the act of their agent. Mussamut Muhool Buksh v. Mussamut Suheeda, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 378.

Suit to set aside a lease as granted without authority by an agent to the defendant, who was the nabi of the estate, and as procured by fraud by the defendant in collusion with the agent, and the charge of collusion having been withdrawn at the hearing before the Subordinate Judge. The High Court remarked on the impropriety of presenting a plaint charging collusion between the agent and defendant without good grounds for such imputation, and on the withdrawal of the charge at the hearing if there were grounds for it; and agreed with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the owner of the estate in issue must be presumed to know what was being done on her behalf by her agent. The presumption is that a man acts rightly and not fraudulently. The mere circumstance that the rents were low does not give rise to the presumption that there had been fraudulent conduct on the part of the naib, or that he did not state the circumstance to the agent before obtaining the lease from him. There is also this difference between this case and other cases in which contracts between principals and agents are sought to be set aside on the ground of good faith, that here another agent is interposed, and it is not the case of the defendant principals and agents are sought to be set aside on the ground of the naib making a report to the owner in England. Even supposing the original transaction liable to be set aside, the ratification by a person having authority from the owner to make enquiries and ratify what had been done would render it invalid. A suit by a principal against an agent to recover money received by the latter during his agency and not accounted for, is subject to the limitation of six years. In case of fraud, the period of limitation will run from the time of knowledge of the fraud. A gratuitous agent is liable for any loss sustained by his principal through the gross negligence of the agent. What is gross negligence is a question on the facts of each particular case. A suit against an agent is bad in law; it should not be disclosed any cause of action. The agent of a lessor was held to have acted in excess of his power in granting a lease containing a stipulation that the lessee was to receive from the lessor the expenses which he might incur in any litigation which might take place with third parties respecting the land leased. Where such litigation did ensue, and the lessee was cast in costs, he was held entitled to recover the same, not from the lessor, but from the agent. An agent who deals with another man's goods as if they belonged to his principal, may be answerable to the true owner, notwithstanding that he acts by the command or direction of his principal. An agent who is allowed to mix up his private transactions with those of his principal by borrowing for both. An agent is personally liable who mixes up his private transactions with those of his principal by borrowing for both. An agent who is allowed to mix up his private transactions with those of his principal by borrowing for both. An agent who is allowed to mix up his private transactions with those of his principal by borrowing for both. An agent who is allowed to mix up his private transactions with those of his principal by borrowing for both. An agent who is allowed to mix up his private transactions with those of his principal by borrowing for both.
towards the owner of property purchased by him, is bound to prove that the sale was made for good and sufficient consideration, and must not only prove that the agent had authority to sell, and that the consideration alleged was in fact paid, but also that the consideration paid was a fair price for the property.

If the purchase be made by a stranger, such a purchaser need not show that the consideration paid by him is a consideration equal to the value of the property; it will be sufficient for the purchaser to show that the sale was made by a person who had authority from the owner to sell; and, unless the seller can establish a fraudulent connivance between the agent employed to sell and the purchaser, the sale will bind on the seller on proof of authority of the agent to sell.

An authority granted to an agent to purchase does not imply authority to sell; and the mere fact of the principal not questioning his agent's right to sell is no proof that he consents to the latter's exercising such right.

If it be the duty of the agent of a landholder to keep the collections he makes for his master separate from his own moneys, expending that money on his master's behalf, and handing over the balance to his master, and if he, in breach of this trust, converts the money to his own use, he is amenable to a criminal prosecution.

And where a landowner permits the agent to mix the collections with his own moneys, if the agent applies the moneys so collected to his own use fraudulently and dishonestly, and falsifies the amount so as to conceal his fraud, there is evidence of a criminal misappropriation.

There is a presumption in Calcutta that where a vendor of goods deals with a banian of a European firm, quod banian, he is only to look to the banian for the price. A banian is not amenable to a criminal prosecution for the price of the goods and the expenses incurred by him upon them, and upon being paid he affixed his receipt to them. The purchases were unusually large, and in R.'s books G. S. and Co. were debited with the amount paid for the goods, R. retaining no interest in or profit out of it. J. S., one of the vendors to R., sued G. S. and Co. for the price of some of the goods so purchased by R. Judgment for J. S. affirmed in appeal. should be produced, if it is proved from the evidence that he filled that character. Madho Singh v. Guneshie Lall and others, 2 Agra Rep., A.C., 275.

A suit was brought and decreed against the gomasta of a firm, the owner or his heir not being impleaded and properly represented in the Court for the recovery of a sum due from the firm. On execution being sought out against the firm it was held that the decree, if it was meant to be passed against the owner, was illegal, being against a party not represented in Court; and if it was passed against the gomasta, it could not be executed against the firm. Phool Chand and others v. Siva Pershad, 2 Agra Rep., Mis. 4.

6.—FACTORS.

By the Factors' Act (5 and 6 Vict., c. 39, extended to India by Act XX of 1844) pledges of securities made bond-fide by agents entrusted with them are protected, but such protection is limited to advances made bond-fide, and without notice that the agent who pledges has no authority to pledge, or is acting mala-fide in the transaction against his principal. Gobind Chunder Sen v. The Administrator-General of Bengal, 1 W.R., P.C., 43.

Factors having an interest, by reason of their advances in their principal's goods, are justified in shipping those goods for sale, either "on account of those concerned," or "on account of themselves," unless their general authority was controlled by instructions from their principal or by contract.

The evidence failing to show that any particular usage or custom qualifying the law of England as between principal and factor prevails in Calcutta,—Held that the powers and duties of the factors in making consignments of their principal's goods must be determined by the general mercantile law.

Factors entrusted with possession of their principal's goods, and having advanced upon them, shipped those goods, drawing bills against them in their own names, and selling them in the market. The acceptance of the factors' bills by the consignees, and the delivery of the shipping documents to them, made them the pledgees, but did not alter the character of the transaction, which was one whereby the factors had pledged the goods for the payment of bills on which they (and not the principal) were liable as drawers for an amount exceeding the value of the goods. In such a case no priority exists between the consignees and the undisclosed principal.

Where a servant leaves his service after giving due notice he is entitled to receive at once all pay then due to him, without reference to the custom of the office or master he serves. A. Thomas v. The Manager of the Pioneer Press, 2 Agra Rep., Mis., 1.

Every master and employer has an undoubted right to dismiss his servant or agent at any time. After the dismissal, whether wrongful or not, the servant cannot claim wages. The remedy for wrongful dismissal is by action for the damages sustained by the servant in consequence of the breach of the master's contract to employ him. Ranee Usmut Koonwar v. W. Taylor, 2 W.R., 307.

A master cannot be compelled to retain in his service a servant whose honesty he thinks he has reason to doubt. Wm. Taylor v. Ranee Asmeed Koonwar, 4 W.R., 86.

A master is not criminally responsible for the wrongful act of a servant, unless he can be shown to have expressly authorized it. Suffer Ali Khan v. Golam Hyder Khan, 6 W.R., Cr., 60.

The appellant, having obtained a decree for khas possession of a share in a remandary, had refused... to recognize the ryots whom the farmers under her co-sharers had settled in the estate; and her servants cut and carried off the crops of those ryots.

_Held_ by Glover J., that the appellant was liable for the acts of her servants, which were done in furtherance of her known wishes and for her benefit. _Held_, by Loch, J., that those acts were beyond the ordinary scope of the servants' duty; and that, unless it could be shown that the appellant ordered or ratified the acts, she was not liable. In the present case the circumstances gave rise to a strong presumption that the acts were done with her knowledge, which presumption had not been rebutted, and therefore she was liable. _Rani Shamasundari Dabi v. Dukhu Mundle_, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 227; S. C., 11 W. R., 101.

Unskilfulness in a servant is no ground for dismissal unless it amounts to absolute incompetence.

A solitary instance of insouciance is not sufficient to justify a master in dismissing a skilled servant. Where no time was specified for a day's work in a contract, whereby a company (the defendants) engaged the plaintiff, a skilled mechanic, in the capacity of an engineer, and "to make himself generally useful," any work within his capacity was held to form part of his duty. Superintendence of gas pipes is within it. By refusing when directed to work more than seven hours a day without extra pay, plaintiff disobeyed reasonable orders, and defendants were justified in dismissing him. _Owen Williams v. Great Eastern Hotel Company Limited_, Cor. Rep., 76; S. C., 2 Hyde's Rep., 166.

_Semide,—_If a master usually instructed his servant to do any work upon credit, plaintiff will be bound by his acts, even when he has prohibited him specially from buying upon credit. _Makharane Naranje Koowwaree v. Toogul Kishore Roy and others_, 6 W. R., 309.

A dismissed servant is entitled to wages for any broken period during which he may have served, at the rate he was earning when dismissed. _Rughmonath Dass v. Halla_, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 60.

A suit for wrongful dismissal by one of its servants will lie against the Government. In a suit by a subordinate officer in the P. W. D., for wrongful dismissal, against the Government, in which it was admitted that there was no time of service fixed, and in which the plaintiff put in a memorandum of agreement between himself and the Government, stipulating that he should give six months' notice of his intention to leave the service of the Government, _Held_ that the hiring was indefinite, and that although the plaintiff had bound himself to give six months' notice prior to leaving their service, there was no corresponding obligation on the Government to give notice before dismissing him. The Government, however, would not be allowed to exercise this power capriciously, or to the damage of the servant.

An indefinite hiring in India does not mean a hiring for a year. The mere payment of wages monthly is not enough to show that a hiring is a monthly hiring. _Hughes, P. F. v. The Secretary of State for India in Council_, 7 B. L. R., 688.

K. received into his godown certain goods belonging to the plaintiff and in charge of his servant, concerning which there was a dispute between the plaintiff's agent and B., of which circumstances K. was aware; and he advanced money to B. on the security of such goods, which were subsequently delivered to B., and sold by him with the acknowledgment of K., and, notwithstanding the plaintiff's servant objected to it, delivered them to the purchaser. _Held_ that K. was liable to an action for damages at the instance of the plaintiff.

A master is responsible for the acts of his servants done within the scope of his duties, and for the master's benefit. _Anant Dass v. Henry Kelly and another_, 17 N. W. R., 107.

8.—_PARTNERSHIP._

M. M. and Co., merchants in London, carrying on business with W. N. W. and Co., merchants in Calcutta, sought to make the defendant liable as a partner in the latter firm, under a particular memorandum of agreement between the members of the firm of W. N. W. and Co. and the defendant.

_Held_ that such agreement did not constitute the plaintiff a partner in or with the said firm. Participation in profits does not constitute a partnership. The question is, whether the persons ought to be made liable participated in the profits, but whether the trade has been carried on by persons acting on his behalf.

There is no rule of law which imposes partnership liability upon a man who advances to others money for the purpose of carrying on their business, and in return secures to himself a share of the profits which may arise from the employment in the business of the money so advanced by him. _Rajah Pratap Chandra Singh Bahadur v. Mottow_, _& Co._, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 238; S. C., 12 W. R., 56.

The plaintiff became banian to the defendants, under an agreement by which he had a lien upon all goods "belonging to" them in their godowns, for balances that might be due by them. Some time after the date of the agreement, while there was a balance due, the defendants' firm took in a new partner.

_Held_ that the words "belonging to" included all goods in the possession of the new firm that came to them in the way of business. _Held_ also that the new firm, not having given notice to the contrary, must be taken to have engaged the plaintiff as a banian, upon the terms expressed in the agreement with the old firm, and to have taken over the balance due at the time when the new firm was constituted as a debt due by the new firm. _Baldeo Das Agarwalla v. Alexander Kaisch and Co._, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 80.

The parties had entered into a contract of partnership to work certain supposed mines; plaintiff to receive a bonus and also six monthly payments as "rent" for the land, both parties to share the profits and bear the losses; it being stipulated that in case coal should not be discovered the bonus, and any sum paid as rent, would be refunded.

_Held_ that this was a partnership arrangement, and the payment of the money which went by the name of rent was not as by a tenant to a landlord, but as consideration-money for land forming a portion of the capital. _Sreevarunjiaree Dosses v. Poornuusittum Dass and others_, 9 W. R., 499.

The doctrine that a dormant partner, when discovered, is liable for every debt incurred for the partnership by the active partner, is not absolute in the Courts in England, and is not to be followed by the Courts of this country, unless found in particular cases to be consonant with justice, equity, and good conscience.
Where money was lent on a bond to a "malick and mookhtear" of a factory on his personal credit and the security of the entire factory, and it was afterwards discovered that other parties had a share in the factory, it was held that the lender was not entitled to go beyond his contract and recover from him a plot of ground on the Esplanade in Bombay at any rate exceeding the price at which the defend ant himself had purchased it, and agreed to give him as remuneration half of the net profit realized on the sale. The defendant subsequently revoked this authority, and the plaintiff shortly afterwards found a purchaser, whose offer the defendant did not accept.
Held that the defendant could not recover on the agreement, which had not been performed on his part ; that there was no ground for holding that the plaintiff and the defendant were partners in the transaction as between themselves; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for work done as broker, or for commission, the nature of the agreement being that the plaintiff took the risk of the authority being revoked. Hurst v. Watson, 2

In a suit of the nature of one for dissolution of partnership, it is incorrect to make an absolute decree for a specific sum of outstanding balances without anything to guide the Court in fixing that amount. No amount ought to be decreed without satisfactory proof of its having been realized and misappropriated. Mun Mohinee Dasvee v. Ichamoyee Dassee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 352.

II.—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

9.—Miscellaneous.

A. and his surety B. executed a bond to C. for the faithful discharge of A.'s duties as a gomasta. In September, 1866, upon accounts being rendered, A. was found indebted to C. in a certain sum of money. A. thereupon executed an ikrar to C., which was accepted by C., agreeing thereby to pay the amount due in February following. On default being made, C. sued A. and B. for the amount due. Elijah v. Aratoo Brothers, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 47.

Where a surety without taking precautions to see to its proper application permits the party for whom he is surety to get possession of money which by an arrangement with that party and the co-sureties had been placed in his (the surety's) hands for the purpose of indemnifying the co-sureties, he loses his remedy against the co-sureties to the extent of the security thus allowed to be withdrawn. Where money is permitted to remain in the hands of sureties in order to its being applied to the purpose to secure which they became sureties, it is the duty of each as between himself and co-sureties to see that the money is not misapplied. Woon Chit Poe v. Wee Chang, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 185.

In a case in which a surety was sued by Government for the amount of defalcations committed by the person for whom he was security during the period of six years out of a total period of eight years for which he held office, it appeared that the surety bond, was renewed only three times, the old bond being retained by Government, and that in the other years the Government did not renew the bonds, but made an inquiry into the sufficiency of the security. It was contended by the surety that by the renewal of the bond, each bond as it was renewed was in fact a novation, so that an action could no longer be maintained upon the old bond, and the surety was only responsible for the deficiencies which might have taken place subsequently to the giving of the last bond.

Held that in the absence of anything to show that the Government knew of the frauds, or that the surety had any idea that he was discharged or had a right to the old bonds, it could not in this case be inferred that it was intended to discharge the old bonds, if after the giving of the new bond a discovery was made, though unknown at the time, that frauds had been committed during the time that the old bond was in existence. *Laloo Buncseedhu v. Where a person becomes a surety in the course of the proceedings on an appeal, to pay all such sums as might be decreed against the plaintiff on appeal, the decree when passed can be executed against the surety under Section 204 of the Civil Procedure Code, and an appeal will lie from an order made in execution of such decree against the surety. Where a person became surety, and gave a security-bond undertaking to pay all sums of money that might be decreed against the treasurer of that endowment and his sureties, under a security bond executed on an optional stamp of Rs. 8 for a sum of Rs. 17,280-5-6 alleged to have been misappropriated by the treasurer, who had been committed to, but acquitted by, the Sessions Court. Held that although there was gross neglect on the part of the mutwalee in the supervision and examination of his cash balance, yet as there was no evidence of fraud or mutual connivance at the delinquency of the treasurer, the former was entitled to recover from the sureties the sum which the stamp used on the security bond would cover, viz., Rs. 1,000, with costs in proportion and interest. *Syud Keramut Ali Mutwalee v. The sureties of a naib are absolved from liability if the principal takes bonds from the naib in acknowledgment of the debts, giving him differ-

Where a person became surety for the due performance of the lessee of the obligations contained in a lease for a term of years, and afterwards became a partner with the lessee, and lessor evicted the lessee before the expiration of the lease,—Held that a suit would lie by the surety for damages arising from the illegal ejectment, although the surety was not a party to the original contract with the lessor. Raja Burudakan Roy v. Ram Tunoo Bose and others, 7 W. R., P. C., 51.

11.—LIABILITY OF SURETY.

By a bond given for the faithful discharge of the office of overseer to a ferry fund committee, the surety became bound "to make good any funds entrusted to the overseer which may be misused." Held that, under these words, the surety was liable for a loss of funds arising from the mere careless or indiscretion of the principal, independently of any dishonesty, as by his lending the money to contractors. The Secretary of the Ferry Fund Committee v. Ward and another, Marsh., 89.

In execution of decree, the debtors arranged to pay the debt by instalments, and the petitioner entered into a surety bond by which he agreed, on failure of the debtors to pay the debt, or any one of the instalments, to be liable for the debt, or to have execution at once taken out against him. Held that the surety's was a separate liability; that proceedings against one or others of the joint debtors which would keep the decree alive against all of them would not affect him; and that, if he could be proceeded against in execution of the original decree, execution should have been taken against him from the date when his liability commenced, and that the decree should have been kept alive as against him by proceedings irrespective of those taken against the judgment debtors. Flurka Singh v. Kirpal and others, 6 W. R., Cr., 36.

A principal and two sureties executed in favour of a bank a joint bond to secure the payment of a sum placed to the cash credit loan account of the principal, together with interest, and the premia on a policy of life assurance, within one year from the date of the bond. At the end of the year a considerable sum remained unpaid, but the principal continued dealing with the bank, and the account was continued for three years after the date of the bond as a running account, during which time divers sums were paid in by the principal, more than sufficient to discharge the amount due at the end of the first year from the date of the bond, and divers sums were in like manner drawn out.

In a suit brought by the bank against the sureties to recover the amount due at the end of the first year, it was held that, inasmuch as the whole account from the date of the bond to the end of the principal's dealings with the bank had been treated as a running account, all payments made by the principal to the bank were to be appropriated to the earliest items in the account, and inasmuch as all the moneys due to the bond at the end of the first year were thereby satisfied, no amount remained due on the bond.

Semble.—That a surety is not entitled to notice of default made by the principal.

Semble.—That there being no express stipulation to the contrary, the fact that the principal was allowed a greater credit than that secured would not have discharged the sureties. Koondan Lall v. E. D. Jahans and H. B. MacLeavy, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 17.

A bail bond by which the sureties bind themselves to be responsible for the appearance of the accused during the preliminary investigation cannot be forfeited if the accused abscond after the preliminary enquiry and during the trial at the Sessions Court. Kureemuddeen and another, petitioners, 9 W. If one of several co-guarantors, on the default of the principal, pays the whole debt, or more than his proportion of it, he may recover from such excess above his proper share by contribution from the others.

An action by one guarantor against his co-guarantors will lie where a single guarantor has paid the debt, and it is not necessary, in order to maintain such an action, to show that the liquidating guarantor had previously applied to, or proceeded against, the principal, with a view to recover the debt from him. Nuro Narain Doss v. Brojo Mohun Doss, W. R., 1864, 70.

The liability of a surety will not extend beyond the precise limits of his undertaking; he is not liable for any sum voluntarily paid by his principal to a third party for any purpose of his own. Kheeter Nath Seal v. Shib Nath Chatterjee, W. R., 1864, 284.

Held that a surety's liability must be measured by the contract, and where the contract is specific, and not in general and indefinite terms, the surety cannot be held liable for costs and interest incurred in suing the principal debtor. Dabee Churn v. Janick Pershad, 4 Agra Rep., 141.

Held further that the rules which govern Courts in England in matters of suretyship could not be applied to a case like this, where joint and several liability was not found as a fact, and where the sum alleged to be due was not certain but contested. Lukheekant Doss v. Sibchunder Chuckerbully, 12 W. R., 462.

A. entered into a bond to C. as surety for B.'s good conduct, &c., as C.'s servant. C. subsequently on A.'s request retained B. in his service. B. became a defaulter, and with A.'s concurrence gave C. promissory notes to satisfy the defalcations. Held that C. could sue A. on the bond, although he had sued and recovered against B. on one of the promissory notes and had received payment on another. Wiseman and others v. Gopaul Dass Sen, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 277.

A decree was obtained against a surety only, the principal debtor being dead, and his property having been attached as of an intestate, and proclamation made. Held that the property could not be taken in execution of the decree against the surety. *Kalichuru v. THE LAW OF SHIPPING.

1.—BILLS OF LADING AND SHIPPING ORDERS

Plaintiff shipped some bales of cloth from Calcutta to Rangoon under a bill of lading by which the defendants were bound to deliver, accidents, loss or damages from fire, machinery, boilers, steam, and all the accidents of the sea, rivers, land-carriage, and steam-navigation, &c., excepted. On the voyage one of the boilers burst, and steam and water escaping some of the bales were damaged. Held that the damage was within the exceptions of the bill of lading, and therefore that the defendants were not liable to make good the loss.

Quære,—Whether, notwithstanding the exceptions in the bill of lading, the defendants might not have been made liable in a suit on the implied warranty if it had been proved as a fact that the boiler was not reasonably fit for the voyage. The British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Ibrahim Moosum, 8 W. R., 35.

2.—SHIPS: THEIR OWNERS AND OFFICERS

The refusal of a master of a ship to sign bills of lading otherwise than with an "£" to the damage claimed, is a wrong that may be fully compensated for in damages. Grassemann and Co. v. J. Littlepage, 3 W. R., Rec. Rep., 1.

3.—TRANSFER OF SHIPS AND BOTTOMRY

Plaintiff sued to recover the value of certain hides which were lost in defendant's flat. The bill of lading contained, among other exceptions, the words "difficulties or casualties of navigation." In evidence it was proved that the flat was destroyed by some projection embedded in the river. Held that the casualty was comprised among the exceptions in the bill of lading; and further that, having regard to the dangerous navigation of Indian rivers, parties entering into contracts of a similar nature should protect themselves by insurance. Sheikh Dhansee v. J. G. S. N. & Co., 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 125.

In a suit instituted by a shipper to obtain bills of lading from the captain, in accordance with the terms of the order granted by the ship's charterers, —Held that the captain is entitled to vary the bills of lading in respect of any excess of measurement over the dimensions specified in the order, and that an alleged custom, precluding such variation, after the goods have been received on board ship, is contrary to law.

It is the duty of the shipper to comply strictly with the terms of the shipping order. Gentle v. Thomson, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 69.

By a charter-party made in London, the ship W. was chartered to carry a cargo from Liverpool to Calcutta, where she was to load from the factors of the charterer a full homeward cargo to be carried by her to Europe. Freight for the whole round, out and home, was made payable on safe delivery of the homeward cargo, but at so much per ton of the outward cargo delivered in Calcutta. The master was to have a lien on the cargo for freight, &c.; cash not exceeding £800 was to be advanced to the ship in Calcutta, on account of freight, but subject to insurance; and £600 was to be advanced by the charterer's acceptance at three months, or in cash under discount, at charterer's option, on the sailing of the vessel from Liverpool, less five per cent. for insurance. The charterer himself loaded the ship, and the master signed a bill of lading which declared the cargo to be shipped by the charterer to be delivered at Calcutta, as the agents of the charterer might direct, unto order or to his assigns, freight to be paid as per charter-party.

In the margin of the bill was written, "Received in advance of the within freight, £600 as per charter-party." The £600 had been paid, not in cash, but by the charterer's bill at three months. The charterer became bankrupt and the bill was dishonoured, and the fact of the bankruptcy and dishonour was known in Calcutta when the ship arrived there. On the ship's arrival in Calcutta, J. O. and Co., who were the holders for value of the bill of lading, demanded delivery of the cargo. The master claimed a right of lien, and refused to deliver unless J. O. and Co. would pay the £600 bill which had been dishonoured, and would further advance £800 for the ship's use, and load a homeward cargo, according to the terms of the charter-party.

_Held_ that J. O. and Co. took the bill of lading with notice of the charter-party, but that, under the circumstances, the master had no lien, and was bound to deliver the cargo to J. O. and Co. _John Ogle and others v. Nashholm_, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 171.

_Held_ that a clause in bills of lading vesting jurisdiction in a Court which has no jurisdiction can have no legal effect, and cannot be pleaded in bar of a suit brought in a Court competent to try it. _J. P. Crawley v. Luchme Ram_, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 129.

A. was the consignee and holder of a bill of lading signed by B. at Bombay, as master of the steam-vessel _John Bright_, for the safe carriage and delivery of a box addressed to A., in which contained diamonds of the value of Rs. 11,670, 3 rubies, and 3 emeralds, in all of the value of Rs. 15,940. On the face of the bill of lading was printed, "This bill of lading is issued subject to the printed, This bill of lading is issued subject to the circumstances, the master had no lien, and was bound to deliver the cargo to J. O. and Co. Yoml.

_Held_ that _I.O. and Co. took the bill of lading for Calcutta. Yours, &c." The box was lost by the negligence of B. or his servants. In a suit by the shipper to recover the value of the diamonds lost. _Mateenjee Naserevanjee Padsik_, 4 Bom. Rep., O. C. 169.

A bill of lading contained a provision that any claim for short delivery or for damage done to goods should be made at the port of Calcutta and not elsewhere. _Held_ that this clause did not affect the plaintiff's right of suit in the Court at Rangoon, and that if the defendants meant to object that no claim had been made in Calcutta before the commencement of the suit, they should have done so in proper time, viz., in their written statement. An objection on that ground taken for the first time at the hearing of the appeal was disallowed. _The British Indian Steam Navigation Company, Limited v. Ibrahim Moosum_, 8 W. R., 35.

On 6th April, 1865, A., who resided and carried on business at Bombay, through his gomastah at Calcutta, shipped on board the _Sir Jamsetjee Family_ 268 bags of sugar, and received from the captain a bill of lading, by which he certified that they were shipped in good order and well conditioned on board the said ship bound for Bombay, to be there delivered in like good order and well conditioned to B., or his assigns, on payment of freight at Rs. 16 per ton. The bill of lading was subject to the usual exceptions. The vessel was at the time chartered to H. A., and C. and C. were agents for the owners. H. A. being unable to carry out the terms of the charter, there was a delay in the departure of the vessel. On 26th May, 1865, A. wrote to C. and C., addressing them as agents of the ship: "I beg to inform you that I have shipped per _Sir Jamsetjee Family_ 268 bags of sugar for Bombay; I hold the bills of lading for the same, and the ship is still detained here. I hope you will be kind enough to let me know what you will do about the cargo,—if the said ship will sail for Bombay or transfer to any other vessel, or deliver the cargo here." To which C. and C. on the same day replied: "We shall be able to tell you in the course of a week or so what we propose doing with the ship _Sir Jamsetjee Family_; as soon as anything has been decided due notice shall be given to the shippers of cargo already on board." On 1st June C. and C. again wrote: "H. A. having failed to carry out his charter of the _Sir Jamsetjee Family_..." in terms of the shipping order, and sundry goods having been sent on board by him, of which the following are believed to be to your order, and for which bills of lading have been signed and delivered to H. A., we shall be glad to know whether you are willing that the said goods, 268 bags of sugar, be transhipped to a steamer going to Bombay, at the current rate of freight, the bills of lading for the same being sent to the owners of the Sir Jamsetjee Family to be delivered to the consignees of the goods upon production of the bills of lading already signed. You will, of course, understand that the goods are liable for the chartered rate, viz., Rs. 20-10 per ton; and the charterer having failed to complete the loading, the difference of freight between what H. A. granted you a shipping order at and the freight charged by the steamer will have to be paid by the shipper previous to the goods being delivered in Bombay." On the 8th June A. replied: "I am agreed that my goods be transhipped to a steamer going to Bombay at the current rate of freight, but I must not pay the difference of freight, whatever it may be. In regard to H. A., I have nothing to do with them, as the bills of lading per Sir Jamsetjee Family for 268 bags of sugar being signed by the captain of the same at the rate of freight Rs. 16 per ton, I am liable for the same only. If you are willing to tranship my said goods to a steamer at the same rate of freight, I am willing and may carry it; otherwise you will kindly order to deliver my goods from Sir Jamsetjee Family here." C. and C. accepted and acted on the proposal in the last letter. The sugar was transhipped from the Sir Jamsetjee Family to the Gunga, from the mate of which C. and C. obtained a receipt, stating that the goods had been shipped in good order, &c. The goods were afterwards removed without the knowledge of C. and C. from the Gunga to another steamer, the Mula, which belonged to the same owners. Subsequently C. and C. gave up the receipt from the mate of the Gunga, and obtained in exchange a bill of lading granted subject to this express condition contained in the bill of lading, were transhipped at Galle. "The owners of a steamer by their bill of lading stipulated that they would not land specie, but would deliver it on presentation of bills of lading, or carry it on at the consignee's risk, if delivery were not taken during the steamer's stay in port. The steamer arrived in port late on Saturday, and sailed at day-break on Monday without delivering the specie shipped by the plaintiff, who sued for damages. Held that the Lord's Day Act, 29 Charles II., c. 7, did not apply to Moulmein; and that even if it had done so it could not prevent the shipowners from availing themselves of the stipulation they had made, and that no action for damages was maintainable against them. Grasemann and Co. v. Gardner, Brooke, and Co., 3 W. R., Recorder's Ref., 3. Where a bill of lading contained a clause to the following effect: "Any claim for short delivery or damage done to goods, and all other claims whatsoever to be made at the port of Calcutta, and at no other port, the goods are shipped and this bill of lading granted subject to this express condition," it was held by the Recorder of Rangoon to operate so as to make the preferring of a claim in Calcutta a condition precedent to a suit in this Court. Held by the High Court that this opinion is correct, and that a suit for short delivery, under the bill of lading, cannot be maintained without a claim being made in Calcutta. Mahomed Ishmauljee Nada v. The British Indian Steam Navigation Company, 9 W. R., 396. Porter and Co., agents for the ship F. A., contracted by a shipping order with G. for freight, with option to G. to cancel the contract if the F. A. should not arrive at the port of Calcutta by the 15th of January. On that day she anchored at Atcheepore, and remained there till the morning of the 16th. G. refused to fulfil the contract, and P. and Co. sued him thereupon. Suit dismissed. Held that there is no custom governing the construction of the words "the Port of Calcutta" in shipping orders; that an arrival at Atcheepore is not an arrival at the Port of Calcutta. Porter and Co. v. Gentle, Bourke's Rep., O. C. A. 407. The defendants by a condition annexed to their bill of lading stipulated that they should not be responsible for "leakage or breakage, or other consequences arising from the insufficiency of the address or package." The plaintiff shipped for conveyance from Hong-Kong to Bombay certain goods on board a steamer of the defendants, in packages which were proved to be insufficient. These goods, in accordance with a condition to that effect contained in the bill of lading, were transhipped at Galle. On their being landed in Bombay it was found that all the packages were broken, and in a much more damaged condition than is usual in the case of such goods carried from Hong-Kong to Bombay in similar packages. The contents had, to a large extent, escaped from the packages, but were otherwise undamaged.

Held that, under a bill of lading in the above form, the onus of proving that the packages were insufficient, and that the injury which they had sustained was the consequence of such insufficiency, lay upon the defendants, but that when the result of the evidence on both sides was to leave it in doubt whether the injury was caused by negligence, or was the consequence of the insufficiency of the packages, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

The plaintiffs agreed with the defendant K. M. to purchase and ship cotton on account of K. M., and to retain the mate's receipts for the cotton so shipped until the purchase-money should be paid by K. M.

Under this agreement the plaintiffs shipped 609 bales on board the Teresa. Before the greater part of the 609 bales had been shipped, and before paying for the same, K. M., without production of the mate's receipts, induced the master of the ship to sign bills of lading for the said 609 bales, and endorsed over the bills of lading for 310 of such bales to J. C. and Co., bond-fide endorses for value without notice.

In a contest between the plaintiffs, holders of the mate's receipts, and J. C. and Co., endorsers for value of the bills of lading of the said 310 bales, it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of the 310 bales to the exclusion of J. C. and Co. Râfârâm Govindram and Nârâandas Mulchand v. M. B. Brown, M. Donald, and Kârândás Nâdâhâvâlâs, 7 Bom. Rep., O. C., 97.

Neither by the custom of the port of Bombay, nor by the provisions of the Customs Act, is the master of a ship bound to wait fifteen days before commencing to land his cargo, but within a reasonable time after the arrival of his ship—forty-eight hours in the case of a sailing vessel, and somewhat less in the case of a steamer—he is at liberty, if the consignee has not then sent boats for them, to land the goods at the Custom House bandar, or other place sanctioned by the Customs authorities, and such landing is not unlawful, or a breach of contract as carrier, on the part of the master.

The landing of goods under the above circumstances, and setting them apart on the Custom House bandar for the consignee, do not constitute a delivery of them to the consignee, but such goods, after being so landed, continue in the possession of the master as carrier.

Course of legislation with reference to the landing of goods on the Custom House bandar reviewed.

Whether (under the special circumstances of this case stated in the text) the goods when so landed remained in the custody of the master in his capacity of common carrier or as a warehouseman, questioned.

The master of a vessel who receives goods on board under a bill of lading which exempts him from loss occasioned by the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation, of whatsoever nature or kind, and lawfully lands the goods at the port of discharge, is, so long as the goods remain in his custody after being so landed, protected from liability from loss of fire under the above exception in his bill of lading. The Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation v. T. Baker, 6 Bom. Rep. O. C., 71, and 7 Bom. Rep., O. C., 186.

Where a shipping order authorized the receipt of "300 bales of cotton not exceeding 52 cubic feet measurement at the screw house," the fair meaning of the contract was taken to be, considering that it was a mercantile contract, and looking at the surrounding circumstances, that the measurement by which the parties were to be bound was a measurement at the screw house; and that if the agent of the defendants was present there and passed the bales as of the proper measurement, or waived the right to measure and did not measure, the defendants could not afterwards insist upon a right to measure or go into an enquiry of what was the size of the bales. Schillizie and Co. v. Cox, Steel, and Co., 17 S. W. R., C. R., 545.

2.—SHIPS: THEIR OWNERS AND OFFICERS.

A Government brig employed in supplying pilots to vessels at the Sand Heads was arrested under proceeding in rem. Held that the brig by 21 and 22 Vic., c. 126, had become the property of the Crown, and, as such, was entitled to the same exemption from arrest as all other Queen's ships, and that the proceeding in rem was therefore illegal.

A party having two tugs, A. and B., undertakes to supply tugs to two vessels, P. and Q., in the order of their engagements as soon as the tugs are free. A. is first free, and tows P., which has the prior claim, to Diamond Harbour, where she becomes disabled. B. subsequently tows Q., and finding A. disabled at Diamond Harbour, leaves Q. and tows P. out to sea, returning subsequently for Q. Held that B. was not justified in leaving Q., but that she ought to have towed her out to sea without interruption. Nowurjee Nusserrwanjee and others v. Johannes and others, 1 Hyde's Rep., 293.

In an action for breach of contract in not shipping certain goods, the defendants pleaded the unseaworthiness of the vessel. It was found that the ship was unseaworthy at the time of sailing, and that the defendants had placed part of the goods on board. Held that it is a condition precedent that a vessel shall be in a proper state to take the goods on board for the purpose of the particular voyage; or in such a state that she may be made fit for the voyage with the goods on board, without such a delay as to frustrate the object of the merchant in shipping his goods. Held that the putting part of the goods on board, without knowledge of the unseaworthiness of the vessel, was not a waiver of the performance of the condition.

Semble: Unseaworthiness at the time of sailing is not a breach of the condition. Turner, Morrison, and others v. Ralli and Mavrojani, 2 B. L. R., O. C., 127.
It appeared on evidence that a ship was not by the repairs done to her put in a better condition than she had been in before sustaining the damage which constituted the partial loss.

Held that the rule by which a deduction of one-third new for old is calculated in favour of the insurers who pay for the repairs did not apply. Hajee Seedich Ghosaul v. Apear, Bourke's Rep., 418.

In an action for repairs, where the ship had been lost, the Court granted an order for personal arrest. The third new for old is calculated in favour of the insurer, the Court granted an order for personal arrest.

Held that the act of the servant is done by him to forward some purpose for the owners for repairs, and anything incidental thereto, can only exist by reason of his being their special agent for the purpose, which he will be presumed to be in particular cases of necessity. James Bayley and others v. Taraknath Pommanic, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 263.

Where a servant in the course of his employment, and in doing what he believed to be for the interests of his master, acts carelessly, recklessly, wantonly, or improperly, the master is liable. But where the act of the servant is done by him to forward some purpose of his own, the master would not be responsible.

The master, not the owners, of a merchant ship is primarily responsible for damage done in the course of his employment by one of his subordinate officers or crew to the person who is injured. Anonymous, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 144.

Where the captain of a ship consents to the discharge of a seaman, who also desired to be discharged, the shipping master has no discretion in the matter, but is bound to sanction the discharge of the seaman under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts of 1854 and 1862, and the Regulations of the Board of Trade. R. v. The Shipping Master of Calcutta, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 371.

A boat which S. let to G. A. & Co., for unloading the ship, was lost in consequence of the negligence of the ship's dubash in Bombay, where the defendant ship's dubash in Bombay, where the defendant acknowledged was then given to him by which the dubash promised to pay the bill for Rs. 574-5-0, and costs, which judgment as to the principal sum was affirmed by the High Court, but costs on the sum of Rs. 500, originally paid to and returned by the plaintiff were disallowed. Allarakbid Ali v. Greael, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C., 150.

The Government may prohibit its pilots from allowing any vessels under their pilotage charge to be taken in tow of a steamer, the owners of which will only render their services on exorbitant terms. Thomas Eales Rogers v. Rajendro Dutt, 2 W. R., P. C., 51.

The local tribunal in India, appointed under Sections 201 and 202 of Act I of 1859, can suspend or cancel the British certificate of a master or mate, and for that purpose its report need not be confirmed by the local Government. In the matter of British Steamship, 1 Mad. Rep., O. C., 270.

The Sessions Court has jurisdiction to hear appeals from the sentences of a Justice of the Peace acting under the Merchant Seamen's Act (No. I of 1859). William Martin Evans and others, prisoners, 2 Mad. Rep., Cr., 473.

A., the captain of a man-of-war, gave written instructions to B., his lieutenant, concerning a certain ship which was stranded. The official instructions contained the following passage: "You will in all emergencies act as your discretion and judgment direct." At the same time A. sent a demiofficial letter to B., in which, after several directions having reference to the disposal of the cargo, he added, "after getting all you can, I should think that the wreck ought to be burnt; but all is left to your discretion and judgment." In pursuance of these orders the wreck was burnt without the consent of the owner. A. subsequently ratified the act of his subordinate.

Held, first, that A., by the expressions used in the demiofficial letter, rendered himself liable as principal; and second, that B., as the agent directly concerned in causing the burning of the ship, was liable jointly with A. to the owner for the damage occasioned thereby. Hajee Aldooolan Bin Sheikh Ally v. F. Stephens and E. Peever, 2 Ind. Jur., O. S., 17.

The taking of a steam-vessel in a trial trip from Mazagan to the sea and back again is a moving of such vessel within the meaning of Section 12 of Act XXII of 1855. For such a trip, therefore, the employment of a pilot is compulsory.

Where the employment of a pilot is compulsory on board a vessel, and such pilot being on board, an accident happens through negligence in the management of the vessel, it lies upon the owners, in order to exempt themselves from liability, to show that the negligence causing the accident was that of the pilot. If such negligence is partly that of the master or crew and partly that of the pilot, the owners are not exempted from liability.

If it be proved on the part of the owners that the pilot was in fault, and there is no sufficient proof that the master or crew were also in fault, in any particular which contributed, or may have contributed, to the accident, the owners will have relieved themselves of the burden of proof which the law casts upon them. Mahomed Yusuf v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, 6 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 98.

The Persia, on a return voyage from Jedda to Singapore, was driven into Bombay harbour through stress of weather. The owner, resident at Singapore, though frequently applied to, omitted to furnish funds to repair her, or to pay the wages of the mariners; and the master being unable to raise funds for these purposes on the credit of the ship or owner, on the application of the mariners the ship was, in order to levy their wages, sold by the Magistrate under the provisions of Sections 55 and 56 of Act 1 of 1859.

The master, who had been engaged at Singapore, then brought a suit on the Admiralty side of the High Court, to recover out of the surplus proceeds of the ship his wages up to the time when he could return to Singapore, and his passage money to that port. Held that he was entitled to recover such wages and passage money. In re the Persia, 6 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 138.

Rules of Bombay harbour with regard to the showing of lights by vessels in the harbour considered.

Independently of special regulation or legislation, there is no general obligation by maritime law on sailing vessels, either under way or at anchor, to carry a light throughout the night, although, for the sake of avoiding a misfortune, it may under particular circumstances become their duty to carry or show a light.

Although that is so, yet the Court will go some way to treat the dark boat as the wrong-doer; and if a vessel be either under way or at anchor at night in a channel, fair way, or ordinary track or path of other vessels, she is bound by general maritime law either to carry or show a light in order to indicate her position when other vessels are approaching her, and in sufficient time to enable them to avoid her. Muhammad Yusuf v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, 6 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 98.

The shipping master of Bombay has a discretion vested in him of refusing to sanction the discharge of a seaman shipped from a foreign port whose articles have not expired, though the seaman consents to such discharge. In re George Lewis, 6 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 42.

Service of a summons on an agent to whom a permit, and immediately afterwards a number of quantity of salt on board than was allowed by its spoliatorum," the High Court held that, where a vessel was seized on suspicion of having a greater quantity of salt on board than was allowed by its permit, and immediately afterwards a number of men boarded the boat, and with the assistance of the agent of the owner, threw a considerable quantity of salt overboard, a presumption arose that there was an excess of salt on board at the time of the seizure beyond the amount allowed by the permit.

Here, under a permit to pass a certain number of mounds of salt on which duty has been paid, an amount in excess of each number is removed, the whole of such salt must be considered as removed contrary to the provisions of the Salt Acts (Act XXVII of 1837, and Act XXXI of 1850), and the whole of such salt, and not merely the excess, is, under these Acts, liable to confiscation. Interest should not be awarded on unliquidated damages. Frandji Hormasji v. The Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Custom, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 89.

Where defendant had been plaintiff's servant in charge of plaintiff's shop, on the understanding that he was to be remunerated by a small share of the profits in lieu of fixed wages, a suit to recover the balance after deduction of such remuneration was held to be a suit on a demand cognizable by a Small Cause Court, and not for balance of partnership account. Ram Kanoye Shaha v. Bykaninath Shaha, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 89.

The Statute 7 Geo. 1., Chapter 21, Section 2 (which declared void all contracts by way of bottomry made by any subject of his Majesty on any ship in the service of foreigners bound or designed to trade to the East, and all contracts for loading or supplying such ships with goods, &c., or with any provisions, stores, or necessaries, &c.) is repealed by implication.

The Statute 3 and 4 Vict., Chapter 65, Section 6, does not confer jurisdiction upon the High Court of Bombay on its Admiralty side to entertain causes for necessaries supplied to foreign ships, that Statute not extending to India.

The Statute 24 Vict., Chapter 10, (Admiralty Act of 1860) does not extend to India.

The jurisdiction of the High Court on its Admiralty side is the same as that exercised in the Court of Admiralty in England prior to the passing of the above Statutes. The extent and nature of that jurisdiction considered and explained.

When a ship is brought by material men for necessaries supplied to a foreign ship against the surplus proceeds of such ship lying in the registry of the Court, and there is no opposition on the part of the owners of these proceeds, the Court has a discretionary power to allow the claim of the material men to be paid out of such unclaimed proceeds. The Proceeds of the Asia Hormasji and Ukarji, 5 Bom. Rep., O. C., 164.

3.—TRANSFER OF SHIPS AND BOTTOMRY.

A., not a British subject, contracted with B., a British subject, for the purchase of a ship which was registered in the port of Calcutta in the name of C. (also a British subject). A. and B. entered into the contract as if both had been British subjects. Held that, on the evidence, the parties contracted with reference to the Merchant Shipping Act, and that the intention was that a title under that Act should be given. Held also that, although it turned out that A.'s nationality prevented the possibility of his being registered as owner, this did not affect the liability taken upon himself by B. to have himself put on the register as owner, or his liability to put A. in a position to have a change of ownership noted in the register under Section 53 of the Merchant Shipping Act.

Held further that B., not having had himself put on the register as owner, and not having put A. in a position to have a change of ownership noted under Section 53, and B. having declined to take any further steps towards attaining either of these objects, A. was entitled, although he had got possession of the ship, to rescind the contract, and to recover back a portion of the purchase-money which he had paid, and also to recover damages for the breach of contract. The Calculutta Court of Small Causes has power to seize and sell a vessel in execution of a decree of that Court, and the bailiff who sells the vessel is the person who ought to execute the bill of sale to the purchaser.

A British ship having, in execution of a decree of the Calculutta Court of Small Causes, been sold to a person qualified to be the owner of a British ship, held that it was necessary that the transfer to the purchaser should be by bill of sale as prescribed in Section 55 of the Merchant Shipping Act, and the mere sale and delivery to the purchaser did not pass a title to him. Esau Ahmed and others v. Fassin Binsaf, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 251.

The transfer of a ship should be in the form, or as near the form as may be, laid down by the Merchant Shipping Act; therefore where a ship sold in execution was transferred by the Clerk of the Court, in a form usual in sales in execution, but quite irregular, having reference to the Merchant Shipping Acts, the Court refused a mandamus to order the Registrar to register the transfer.

Quare,—Whether a ship can be sold in execution of a decree of the Calculutta Small Cause Court, and, quare, whether the Clerk of the Small Cause Court can execute a transfer of a ship, supposing she is saleable, in execution of that Court's decree. In the matter of the ship "Shah Callander," 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 263.

A ship-owner having mortgaged his ship has still an interest in her seizable in attachment under the Civil Procedure Code. An attachment on a vessel in respect of the mortgagor's right and interest therein affects the vessel right of sale under a prior mortgage. Aukin, Ah Singh, Hadjee Abdoel Rohoman, and Hadjee Solomon Molodina v. Ahmed Mahomed, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 241.

The defendants, M. Gregory and Co., entered into a contract of guarantee with the plaintiffs, P. and C. Nusserwanjee, Cama, and Co., which was contained in the following letter: "In consideration of your paying us on account of Abraham Cohen, Esq., the owner of the ship Caroline, chartered by you to load at Rangoon with timber, as per charter-party executed by him and your good selves, dated this day, the sum of Rs. 21,500, to be paid in advance and in part freights of the said vessel payable as follows: viz., Rs. 18,000 at Calcutta, and Rs. 3,500 at Bombay for the disbursement of the vessel there;—we hereby guarantee and engage to hold you harmless against all losses, damages, and consequences arising from the non-performance of any of the acts, covenants, or agreements to be done, kept, observed, or performed by or on the part of the said Abraham Cohen in terms of the said charter-party; and we further agree to allow you interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, to be charged by you for the said advance in the event of its being refunded by us. We also agree to see the voyage performed by the said vessel in full terms and conditions of the said charter-party this day executed by Abraham Cohen, Esq., in your favour." To this the plaintiffs replied on the same day: "In consideration of your having guaranteed to keep us harmless for the advance made by us to Mr. Abraham Cohen, owner of the ship Caroline, against freight of that vessel, to be earned by her on the anticipated voyage from Rangoon to Bombay, with a cargo of timber, as per charter-party executed this day between ourselves and the said Abraham Cohen, as per your letter of guarantee dated this day, we hereby agree and engage ourselves to make you over a mortgage bond on the British barque Moulmein of 305 tons, executed in Moulmein by the said Mr. Abraham Cohen, in favour of Mr. Nanabhoy Burjorjee, of Rangoon, for certain debts due to him by the said Abraham Cohen, duly transferred to you free from Mr. Nanabhoy's claim on the said barque Moulmein."

The charter-party was of even date, and was made by Cohen on the one part and the plaintiffs on the other part, and it was thereby agreed that the ship Caroline, being tight, strong, and staunch, and in every way fitted for the voyage, and now at Bombay, shall with all convenient despatch proceed to the port of Rangoon in British Burmah, or so near thereto as she may safely get, and there load from the charterer's agents or their order a full and complete cargo of timber, and proceed to Bombay, and deliver the same to the charterers at Bombay, free of all costs and charges, and shall proceed to Bombay, &c., and deliver the same on being paid freight in the manner below at and after the rate," &c., the act of God, &c., excepted. The freight to be paid as follows: "Rs. 18,000 in Calcutta on the signing of this charter-party, Rs. 3,500 also in advance at Bombay towards defraying the disbursements of the vessel at that port, and the balance to be paid by transfer on account and to credit of Mr. Nanabhoy Burjorjee, of Rangoon, for money due and owing to him by the said Abraham Cohen," &c. The said Abraham Cohen hereby binds himself, &c., that the said vessel Caroline shall be ready for the voyage on the date hereof at the rate of to per cent. per annum, to be charged by you for the said advance, and in the event of its being refunded by us. We also agree to see the voyage performed by the said vessel Caroline, against freight of that vessel, to be earned by her on the anticipated voyage from Rangoon to Bombay, with a cargo of timber, as per charter-party executed this day between ourselves and the said Abraham Cohen, as per your letter of guarantee dated this day, we hereby agree and engage ourselves to make you over a mortgage bond on the British barque Moulmein of 305 tons, executed in Moulmein by the said Mr. Abraham Cohen, in favour of Mr. Nanabhoy Burjorjee, of Rangoon, for certain debts due to him by the said Abraham Cohen, duly transferred to you free from Mr. Nanabhoy's claim on the said barque Moulmein."
TRANSFER OF SHIPS AND BOTTOMRY.

Rangoon in a disabled state, and the time for repairs to make the ship seaworthy in every respect exceeding twenty-five days. Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, the estimated amount of freight.

The plaintiffs were acting on behalf of Nanabhoy Burjorjee, and the defendants on behalf of Cohen, during the whole of this negotiation, and Cohen was at the time largely indebted to Nanabhoy. The ship Caroline turned out to be unseaworthy, and the charter-party was not carried out.

In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants on the guarantee.—Held that the covenant to transfer the mortgage of the Moulineau was independent, and not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action.

Held also on the facts that the representation in the charter-party that the Caroline was, while lying at Bombay, "tight, strong, and staunch," &c., amounted to a contract that the ship should be so, and the defendants' guarantee covered it.

Held also that the defendants not being parties to the charter-party, and not having bound themselves to any assessment of damages, were not called on to pay the penalty specified in the last clause of the charter-party, but that the damages against them must be the actual damages which the plaintiffs on Nanabhoy's behalf suffered in consequence of Cohen's breach of contract, that is, Rs. 21,500 paid under the contract, and the balance of freight of Cohen's breach of contract, that is, Rs. 21,500 paid under the contract, and the balance of freight.

A letter, purporting to create a charge on a ship, was not registered as a mortgage under the Merchant Shipping Act. The ship not having a British register, it was held that the letter created a valid charge on the ship. A ship in the river cannot be said to be delivered over to the possession of those with exclusive repairs; consequently no lien arose for repairs done.

Secus.—If the ship had been under repair in a dock belonging to the plaintiffs. Shib Chunder Doss v. John Cochran, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 388.

An attachment on behalf of the rights of the mortgagee of a ship will not debar the mortgagee from his power of sale under the Merchant Shipping Act. Ahmed Mahomed v. Auhin, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 95.

In construing powers of attorney, the special purpose for which the power is given is first to be regarded, and the most general words following the declaration of that special purpose will be construed to be merely all such powers as are needed for its effectuation.

Where the owner of a ship by power of attorney constituted the master his agent, and authorized him to raise or borrow upon the ship's papers such sums of money as he should deem necessary for the repair of the ship, "and to act in the premises as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as I might or could do if personally present." In a suit for the amount of a mortgage bond upon the ship executed by the master,—Held that the master had no authority to sell or mortgage the ship.

Sansone Ezekiel Judha and others v. Addi Raja Queen Bibi, 2 Mad. Rep., 177.

A ship was chartered for a voyage from Calcutta to Jedda and back. While at Jedda, the master found it necessary to borrow money for the wages of the crew and other purposes; and with the consent of the owner, tenders were invited by advertisement for a sum for which a bottomry-bond was to be given. Several tenders were made, and one by the charterer of the ship was accepted. A bottomry-bond was executed by the master, with the consent of the owner, in which was included the expense of certain repairs which had been found necessary at an intermediate port on the voyage from Calcutta, and for which the master had made himself liable. By the bond the master bound himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators for the payment of the sum named therein, and part of the consideration was expressed to be the payment of the debt which the master had incurred at the intermediate port. On arriving in the Hooghly, the ship was taken in charge by a pilot, under whose advice the master engaged a steamer to tow her to Calcutta. He was sued in Calcutta for the hire of the steamer, and had to pay the claim. When the ship arrived in Calcutta, the bond-holder obtained a decree on his bond, and had the ship arrested and sold; but on the application of the master, who had put in a claim for wages, the Court ordered that the proceeds should remain in Court, pending the consideration of the master's claim. In a suit by the master to recover the balance of wages due to him as master of the ship, and for the expense of the steamer which towed the ship up the river to Calcutta,—

Held, the towage was a disbursement fairly made, and of which the bond-holder had the benefit; the master therefore had a lien on the ship for such disbursement.

Semble.—The master also had a lien for wages down to the time when he was duly discharged, and not merely down to the time of the arrival in port and arrest of the ship.

The master, however, having bound himself by the mortgage, the bond was excluded thereby from setting up his lien against that of the bond-holder, to whom, on the face of the bond, he had constituted himself a debtor. 24 Vict., C. 10 (The Admiralty Act, 1861); and 26 Vict., C. 24.

The Vice-Admiralty Act, 1863, extends to India. The High Court, as constituted by the Charter of 1862, had not, by virtue of the Admiralty Act, 1861, or otherwise, any jurisdiction over claims for disbursements by the master. But after the passing of the Charter of 1865 the Vice-Admiralty Act, 1863, applied to the High Court, as being "a Vice-Admiralty Court established after the passing of that Act in a British possession." Held, therefore, that the High Court had jurisdiction, as a Vice-Admiralty Court, to entertain the claim of the master for wages and disbursements on account of the ship. Re Portug, 6 B. L. R., 323.

The charterer of a ship advanced money to enable her to complete the voyage, and obtained as security a "bottomry bond" signed by both the master and owner. On the completion of the voyage the charterer got the ship arrested and sold, and the money was brought into Court. Before any order had been made for the payment
An insurer relying on the certificate of a competent surveyor that the ship is seaworthy is entitled to recover, in the event of the ship's loss, notwithstanding it be shown that she was unseaworthy at the time the policy attached.

A sued B and Co. on a policy of insurance on the ship Alaye, from noon of the 24th November, 1865, to noon of the 24th February, 1866, "at and from and to all ports and places." The words "at and to all ports and places" were written, the rest being printed. B and Co. in their written statement admitted the policy, but set up the following exception: "All risks or losses arising from detention, &c., also from storms and gales of wind, or other perils of the sea, while touching or trading on the coast of Coromandel from Point Palmyras to Ceylon, and within soundings between the 15th October and the 15th December inclusive, are hereby accepted, which risks or losses are to be borne by the assured, and not by the assured, notwithstanding anything to the contrary hereinafter expressed."

Held, firstly, it lay upon A. to prove that the loss did not fall within the exception.

Held, secondly, that the meaning of the policy was that the ship was to be at liberty to proceed to or stay at any port she pleased, but that the insurers were not liable for any loss arising from perils of the sea in which the three following events were combined: first, that she was at the time touching or trading on the coast of Coromandel; secondly, that she was at the time within soundings; thirdly, that the loss happened between the 15th October and 15th December.

Held, thirdly, upon the facts, the loss was within the policy, notwithstanding the exception.

In a suit on a policy of insurance as for a total loss where goods were shipped for the voyage from Surat to Kurrachee, and the vessel, having sprung a leak, was forced to put into Dwarka, at which place the goods, with the front fore-stay, (overboard during the voyage) were landed and placed in a warehouse, from which a portion (some castor oil and jagari) was carried off by robbers; and the residue of the cargo, consisting principally of cotton seeds which were dried and cleaned, was sold; and the proceeds, after deducting freight expenses, remained in the hands of mahajans, to be paid to whomsoever might be entitled to them,—

Held, first, that the loss by robbers, although not expressly mentioned in the policy, was one of the perils insured against; second, that the Judge below being erroneously of opinion that when the goods were once landed damaged there was nothing to do but to send everything for the benefit of underwriters, and having consequently recorded no finding on the material question whether the whole or any part of the cargo was practically capable of being sent in a marketable state to the port of destination, the suit must be remanded, in order that the Judge may determine whether there was a constructive total loss which entitled the plaintiffs to abandon; and if not, that he may award such a proportion of the value of the iron and of the jagari and oil which were actually lost, and of the amount of the deterioration in the cotton seeds and... other articles, as the sum insured by the defendant bore to the whole sum, taking into account also in that case what proportion the sum insured bore to the actual value of the goods. Dwarakadas Labh-kai v. Adam Ali Sultan Ali, 3 Bom. Rep., A. C., J., 1.

In this suit, which was instituted to recover the amount of insurance on a ship which had been abandoned on an alleged constructive total loss, it appeared that the ship had sustained severe injury from foul weather, but that her value, after being repaired, would exceed the cost of repairing her by about 3,000 dollars. The suit was dismissed. Held that, in order to establish a constructive total loss, there must have been a threatened destruction, or absolute temporary privation, of the insurer's ownership, or an alienation of his property in the thing insured. Gahan v. Owen, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 17; 1 Cor. Rep., 149.

M., M., and Co. shipped aboard the Barmelia goods, which were insured under general average. The ship having been wrecked, part of her cargo, including some of M., M., and Co.'s, was jettisoned and forwarded to its destination. M., M., and Co. sued on a constructive total loss, but their plaint laid no claim for jettison. Suit dismissed. Held that after the defendant's case was opened the plaintiff could not amend by claiming upon the jettison, although jettison is a general average loss. That some of the goods having been saved, there was not a constructive total loss. W. Mackinnon and others v. H. Dundas, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 228.

Where an insurance office is sued on a constructive total loss, there must be a distinct and decided abandonment of all right on the part of the insured. The notice of abandonment should be immediate. The question always is whether the delay in giving notice is reasonable, with reference to the particular circumstances and the owner's means of ascertaining the position of the ship; where the suit is for a total loss, the judgment may be as for an average loss. Hadjee Sedick Dhoosal v. A. G. Apclar, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 591.

A cargo consisting of railway sleepers has been affected on a gross quantity of sugar, the fact that sugar has been described in the margin of the policy as being in different lots containing different species of sugar, and being separately priced, does not raise any presumption that a separate insurance upon each separate species of sugar was intended by a policyholder. Hadjee Jooosop v. Vardon, 1 Hyde's Rep., 198.

In an action on a policy of insurance to recover the value of a portion of the goods insured lost by jettison, the protest of the nacoda and the Custom House vouchers showing that, on the return of the ship to her port of sailing (being driven back by stress of weather), the goods alleged to have been lost were not on board her, are not sufficient as even prima-facie proof of the loss. Rumbai Girdhubai v. Ali Akbar Kajrani, 1 Bom. Rep., 6.

A cargo, consisting of railway sleepers, was insured by the plaintiffs in the ship Heimdhal from Geography Bay to Calcutta, and expressed in the policy to be warranted from all risks, except total loss. In proceeding up the river Hoogly in charge of a pilot, on the 30th April, the vessel grounded on the Rungafulla Sand, heeled over, and lay im-bedded in the sand. Endeavours were made unsuccessfully to get her off. On 5th May, Lloyd's surveyor inspected the vessel, and reported that, considering her position, the state of the tide at that season, and the expense of getting her off, it was unadvisable to go to further expense in doing so; and that the cost of repairs would in all probability amount to much more than the value of the ship when repaired. Some of the sleepers had been then jettisoned, and the surveyor recommended that the vessel and cargo should be abandoned, and sold by public auction to the highest bidder. Attempts were made, but unsuccessfully, to get some of the cargo off, and the sleepers were of such a quality that they would not float. The signers accordingly caused the ship and cargo to be sold by public auction in Calcutta on 12th May. No notice of abandonment was given. The sleepers realized the sum of Rs. 450. The purchaser hired boats and began unloading the ship; he unloaded 78 sleepers in all. On 14th May the ship floated off and came up the river, with the rest of the cargo in safety, proving not to be so much damaged as was supposed. Held that there was not such a total loss of the cargo as entitled the plaintiffs to recover as for a total loss without giving notice of abandonment. East India Railway Company v. Australasian Insurance Company, 6 B. L. R., 218.

A cargo consisting of railway sleepers was consigned to, and insured by, the plaintiff in the ship Heimdhal from Geography Bay to Calcutta. The sleepers were valued at £2,230 in the policy, which was against total loss only. In proceeding up the river Hoogly, in charge of a pilot, on 30th April, the vessel grounded on the Rungafulla Sands, heeled over, and lay imbedded in the sand. Endeavours were made to get her off, but without success. On May 5th Lloyd's surveyor inspected the vessel, and made a report in which he recommended that the ship and cargo should be abandoned, and sold for the benefit of all concerned. On 7th May the ship and cargo were accordingly advertised for sale on 12th May, on which day the sale took place, and the cargo was purchased for Rs. 450. No notice of abandonment was given. The cargo was removed by the purchaser on the 13th May, and on the 14th May, on which day there was a very high tide, the vessel floated, and on the 18th May, with the remainder of the cargo on board, arrived at and was anchored off Armenian ghat, Calcutta. In an action on the policy by the plaintiffs, Held, on appeal,— Per Phear and Macpherson, J.J.—The plaintiffs failed to prove any necessity for the sale of the ship, or that it was impracticable to convey the sleepers, or a material portion of them, to their destination. But if the insured were legally justified in abandoning and claiming as a total loss, notice of abandonment ought to have been given. The condition and behaviour of the ship when she got off the shoal should be looked at as indicating her real state and strength while she was on it. Per Paul, J.—Considering upon the evidence of the circumstances at the time of the sale that the ship was not worth repairing, and that she was expected to sink at any time, the sale of her was justifiable. The sale of the cargo was also justifiable; it could not have been carried, in a merchantable sense, on shore, much less to its destination. The sale LIEN—FREIGHT.

5.—LIEN.

M. chartered a ship to load a cargo at Cardiff, and proceed thither to Madras, the freight to be paid in London on unloading and right delivery of the cargo; one-third by M.'s acceptance at three months from the sailing of the ship (the same to be returned if the cargo were not duly delivered), and the remainder by like bill at three months from the date of delivery in London of the certificate of right delivery of the cargo. The charter-party provided for payment of a commission on the contract, ship lost or not lost, that the £150 should be advanced in cash at the port of discharge on account of the freight against the captain's draft on M.

The cargo was loaded accordingly, a bill of lading was given for the same, and the ship sailed from Cardiff on the 8th October, 1863, M. having consigned the cargo to A. and Co., who carried on business at Madras. On the same day the owners drew a bill on M. at three months for £261 1:10d., being one-third of the freight.

On the 10th October, 1863, the general agents in London, A. and Co. undertook to advance to M. on A. and Co.'s account and out of their funds £700, received as security for such advance the bill of lading blank, and endorsed and forwarded the same bill to A. and Co.

On the 29th October, 1863, M. accepted the bill for £261 1:10d.; and in the following December he suspended payment, and the bill was protested.

On the 14th January, 1864, the ship arrived at Madras, and thereupon A. and Co., as holders of the bill of lading, applied for the delivery of the cargo, and offered to advance the £150 in cash pursuant to the charter-party, but the captain claimed to retain the cargo for the value of the discharge of the freight due.

 Held that the terms of the contract were at variance with the right of lien so claimed, and that it was not suspended by the bill, nor revived by the freighter's insolvency. Arbukhnat and others v. Daigre, 2 Mad. Rep., 88.

The master of a ship has by Statute (Act I of 1859, Section 58) a lien upon the ship for the recovery of wages due. In the matter of Burge Ann, 2 Hyde's Rep., 273.

The captain of a ship has no lien on the cargo in respect of a portion of the freight stipulated to be advanced, and advanced by bills afterwards dishonoured, nor in respect of a portion of the freight stipulated to be advanced at the port of discharge. A lien cannot arise in any case when the master has not a right to retain the goods till the freight is paid. Such advances are not freight, but advances to be made under discount, and upon the security of the captain's bill on the freighter.

The master has no lien at law or in equity in respect of breaches of covenants in the charter-party, other than those relating to the payment of freight for goods actually carried. The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company v. Small, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 309.

A., the agent for a ship in port at Bombay, lent the master money on a bond, in the nature of a bottomry bond, which he obtained from the master under pressure of necessity. It appeared that A. at the time of the making of the bond had funds of his principal's in hand. Held that the master's lien for wages has priority over the bondholder. In the matter of the "Good Success," Macqueen, master, promonent, Fuzzul Mahomed Essau and Co., intervenors, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 303.

6.—FREIGHT.

An action will lie for the recovery of the difference in the rate of exchange against the assignee of a shipping order under which part of the freight was to be paid on delivery at specified rates of exchange. Gladstone v. Joakin, Cor. Rep., 148.

Goods were shipped deliverable to the order of the shippers or their assigns. The bill of lading stated that "freight for said goods was to be paid as per charter-party, with average accustomed, reserving lien in full on cargo for full amount as stipulated therein." The charter-party showed "that H. and Co. undertook to supply a full cargo for the ship, and that R. H., agent for the ship, agreed with H. and Co. that the said ship should proceed to London dock, or any other suitable dock, for loading salt at party's option, or so near thereto as she can readily get, to be loaded in cases afloat and in safety, and then load for the charterer's agent a full and complete cargo of salt, not exceeding what the master considers sufficient cargo, which the charterers engage to ship, not exceeding what she can reasonably carry with her stores, provision, and furniture, and being so loaded shall therewith proceed to Calcutta, or so near thereto as she may safely get, and there deliver as per bills of lading, and on being paid freight at the rate of twenty-three shillings per ton." The freight to be paid thus: "£500 by charterer's acceptance at two months on sailing, less 24 per cent. insurance; or cash on sailing, less 5 per cent. interest and insurance, at charterer's option, and the balance in cash in discharge of freight due in discharge of freight due in discharge of freight due in discharge of freight due."

 Held that a sum of money payable before the arrival of the ship at her port of discharge, and payable by the shippers of the goods at the port of shipment, is not freight in the strict legal acceptance of the term, with all the incidents of freight in giving the shipowner the right of lien, unless it is stipulated for." Here the owners had a lien upon the goods for freight, notwithstanding that the bill of exchange for £500 had been given. Thomas v. Ogle, Bourke's Rep., A. O. J., 100.
CHARTER-PARTY—SALVAGE.

The plaintiff chartered a ship of which he was master to one C. H. C., of Calcutta, under a charter-party by which it was agreed that the ship (which was then at Melbourne) should proceed to certain ports and there load a cargo for Calcutta, "the cargo to be delivered to the charterer at Calcutta, on being paid freight at and after the rate of the lump sum of £1,150 for the full reach of the ship; the said freight to be paid on the unloading and right delivery of the cargo as customary, less any advances that may have been made." On the arrival of the ship at Calcutta C. H. C. requested the plaintiff to deliver the cargo to the defendants as his agents, which the plaintiff agreed to do on having payment of the freight guaranteed by the defendants. The defendants were bond-fide holders of the bills of lading which had been signed by the plaintiff in respect of the cargo. They sent to the agents of the plaintiff in Calcutta the following letter: "As it will be necessary for us for the protection of our interests to get delivery of the cargo, and as we do not care about further trouble in the matter, we agree to guarantee payment of the balance of freight due on the charter-party, less any claims for short delivery," &c. On unloading there was found to be a deficiency in quantity between the goods mentioned in the bills of lading and those actually shipped and delivered. Held that notwithstanding this the plaintiff was entitled to the whole of the freight specified in the charter-party, and was justified in keeping the cargo until the freight was paid. "J. S. Dois and others v. C. E. Stewart, 8 B. L. R., 340; and 17 S. W. R., C. R., 340.

7.—CHARTER-PARTY.

The plaintiffs chartered a ship of the defendant, and by the charter-party it was stipulated that the said ship, being tight, staunch, and strong, should receive from the plaintiffs a full cargo of rice or grain, and being so loaded should therewith proceed to St. Denis, the freight to be paid there on right delivery of cargo. The penalty for non-performance of the charter-party was to be the estimated amount of freight. The plaintiffs began to load on May 3rd, and continued doing so until June 10th, having then shipped very nearly the full cargo; they then stopped loading in consequence of a notice from the defendants that the ship was leaking. In consequence of the leakage the cargo had to be shifted, and a portion of it, found to be damaged, had to be replaced after the leak was stopped. The charges of shifting the cargo and the cost of the cargo substituted were paid by the defendant. Considerable delay occurred in consequence of the leak, and the loading was not completed until the end of July. On May 28th, when the plaintiffs had loaded a portion of the cargo, and had obtained bills of lading, they drew a bill of exchange at sixty days for the value of the cargo covered by the bills of lading on their agent at St. Denis, which they sold to the Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, hypothecating the cargo for the amount of their draft. Other similar drafts were subsequently drawn and sold. When the plaintiffs received notice of the leakage, they in anticipation of the delay which would occur in consequence, arranged with the Comptoir d'Escompte that the bills should not be forwarded forthwith, but should be held by the Comptoir d'Escompte, and renewed by the plaintiffs on the completion of the loading, the plaintiffs paying interest on the bills in the meantime at 9 per cent. per annum. On renewing the bills the plaintiffs, in consequence of the difference in the rate of exchange, were out of pocket Rs. 400. In an action against the owner for breach of the charter-party in not supplying a ship tight, staunch and strong, as stipulated, the plaintiffs sought to recover, as damages arising out of such breach of the charter-party, the interest paid by them on the drafts in pursuance of their arrangement with the Comptoir d'Escompte, the sum they had to pay on renewing the bills, a further sum for interest on bills they could not negotiate in consequence of not being able to obtain bills of lading from the defendant, and the value of the stamps on the bills which had been cancelled in pursuance of the plaintiff's arrangement with the Comptoir d'Escompte. Held that such damages were too remote. "Roberts and Charriol v. Issal, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 20.

A charter-party made between the defendants (the owners of the Seaforth) and H. and C. (the freighters), provided that the owners should employ at the ports of discharge the consignee nominated by the freighters to transact the ship business there inwards and outwards on the customary terms, not exceeding 21 per cent. on amount of freight payable inwards and 5 per cent. outwards. H. and C. nominated the plaintiffs to transact the ship's business in Bombay (a port of discharge) with the knowledge and consent of the master of the Seaforth, and the plaintiffs accepted and acted under such nomination. The defendants refused to pay the plaintiffs' commission on the outward freight of the Seaforth, on the ground that, under the circumstances under which such freight was procured, the plaintiffs were not under the charter-party entitled to receive commission on it. Held that the plaintiffs were sufficiently within the consideration of the charter-party to maintain a suit for the breach of such clauses of it as were inserted for their benefit. Meaning of the mercantile expression of ship "going seeking" discussed. "Blackwall and Co. v. Jones and Co., 7 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 144.

8.—SALVAGE.

Where a ship is in condition of actual peril, and the services of a tug are sought for, and directed to the purpose of releasing her from that condition, such services are salvage services. But where there is nothing in those services as regards risk or exertion or other conduct of the salvors to make them differ from ordinary towage services, their reward should not be estimated on for towage with salvage liberality. "The Alabama," Harrison, master, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 139.

In estimating the value of salvage service, the Court is bound to consider the time, labour, skill, enterprise, and risk of the salvors, as well as the value of the property engaged in the service, and also the degree of danger from which the property is rescued and the value of the property so rescued. Steamboats are entitled to a higher rate of reward.
COLLISION.

than other vessels by reason of the promptness with which they are enabled to render services in such cases. The "Lady Joceleyn," 2 Mad. Rep., 335.

A dinghee laden with gilders valued at Rs. 20,000 was being propelled across the river when a squall came on and the dinghee being in some danger, the gilders were taken on board a flat for safety, and kept there till the squall subsided. Held that the owners of the flat had no claim for salvage, and that 150 rupees was a fair remuneration for services rendered. Urra Churn Chetty v. W. Gordon, 1 Hyde's Rep., 212.

9.—COLLISION.

The owners of the ship A. having obtained a decree against the T. for damages occasioned by collision, the T. appealed on the grounds, 1st, that she was not liable, as she had a harbour-master on board, who was in charge of the ship at the time of the collision; 2nd, that the mere fact of her cable having some hours previously jammed, and thereby rendered it necessary for her to take up a comparatively unsafe position, her being in which was the immediate cause of the accident, did not render her liable; and, 3rd, the A. could not recover damages, as she was bound to be ready at her moorings in case of any emergency, and might have avoided the collision if she had been so. Appeal dismissed without costs.

Held that an accident to the gear of a ship does not of itself alone render her liable for damages for a collision of which it is a remote occasion.

That a ship at anchor in the port should keep a look-out, and be ready to take all reasonable means for her own safety in an emergency. The "Thaletta," “Anne,” Bourke’s Rep., A. O. C., 87.

The ship Thames was lying a mere hulk, waiting for repair, when a bore drifted her stern foremost up the river, and she came into collision with another ship. No negligence was proved against the master, and the accident was held to be inevitable, and no costs were decreed on either side. Hadjee Abdulla Rohoman Moosan v. The Owners of the ship "Thames," Bourke’s Rep., O. A. J., 21.

The ship T. having got adrift in a dark night, in consequence of a collision, the harbour-master tried to anchor her, but failing to, as her cable jammed, finally brought her up inside the ship A., which was moored off the Howrah side of the Hooghly, this being the only berth the T. could then secure. The next flood swung both ships, and the T. fouled the A., damaging her, and causing her to part her cables, in consequence of which she suffered further damage from subsequent collisions. The owners of the A. sued the T. for the whole damage done. The defence was that the promoter, by adopting certain precautions, might have prevented the accident; that the T. being in charge of the port authorities was not liable, and that no care or skill on her part could have prevented the accident.

The T. did not allege a liability of any of the vessels subsequently collided with. Judgment was given for the plaintiffs for the whole amount of damages sued for.

Held that liability for damages occasioned by collision rests, primâ-facie, on the colliding vessel. That a ship in port is bound to be prepared for such exigencies only as might be expected to arise from the circumstances she knew to surround her, that is, a ship is protected by the port rules from liability for damage only when it is due to the acts or omissions of the officials in charge of her. Held also that the ship is liable for all the consequences occasioned by an accident that results from any defect in her equipment, or want of care or skill of her crew, &c. The "Thaletta," William Harvey, master, Bourke’s Rep., Ad., 1.

The ship H. in charge of a pilot (acting as harbour-master) when proceeding across the bow of the ship I. S., which was at anchor, to take up a clear mooring, came into collision with and slightly damaged her, and this suit was for the damage so occasioned. Both sides relied on Act XXII of 1855 and the Port Rules of 1856, the plaintiff contending that the officer in charge was not such officer as the said Act and Rules referred to; and the defendant that he was. The suit was dismissed with costs.

Held that a ship is primâ-facie liable for damages occasioned by a collision resulting from an error in judgment of the officer in charge of her. Held also that a vessel is exempted from liability for the fault of a pilot in charge of her,—first, where a master is authorized to employ a pilot, and is exempted from responsibility if he elects to do so; and, secondly, where the employment of a pilot is compulsory, and the owners of the vessel so employing him are relieved from responsibility for his misconduct. That the legislation regarding the employment of pilots and other officers in the port of Calcutta is contained in Act XXII of 1855 and the Port Rules of 1856. That where no special requisition is made by the port authorities, under Rules 2 and 7, a ship may move at her discretion in the port. That it is unlawful, under Section 12 of Act XXII of 1855, to moor a vessel in the port without having a port officer on board to take command of the ship. The "Hanover," James Browne, master, Bourke’s Rep., Ad., 15.

One who has sued for damages caused by a collision at sea, and out of the jurisdiction of the High Court, subjects himself to a cross-suit for damages caused by the same collision, although himself residing out of the jurisdiction of the Court.

An order rejecting, for want of jurisdiction, a plaint brought under such circumstances, was set aside on appeal, and the costs of the appeal ordered to be costs in the suit. Bombay Coast and River Steam Navigation Company v. René Heóunt, 4 Bom. Rep., O. C., 149.
XVII.

THE LAW OF PERSONAL STATUS.

1.—STATUS

The law allows a person the right to cease to be a Hindoo or Mahometan in the fullest sense of the word, and to become a Christian, and to claim for himself and his descendants all the rights and obligations of a British subject. Hogg v. Greenway and others, 2 Hyde's Rep., 3.

A stated that he was born in 1848; that his great-grandfather was, according to the tradition of the family, a European (but of what country in Europe he did not know) residing at Madras, and his great-grandmother, a native Hindu or Mahometan; that he did not know whether his great-grandfather and great-grandmother were married, or who his grandmother was, or whether his grandfather was married; that his father married a lady bearing an English name; that he himself and all his relations were Christians; that he was born in Calcutta, and knew of no relatives in Europe. Held that he was a legitimated descendant of a European British subject, and therefore his age of majority was twenty-one years. Plaintiff being a minor, his suit was not dismissed, but he was directed to appoint a next friend to sue for him. Rollo v. Smith and others, 1 B. L. R., O.C., 11.

A deaf and dumb person is not on that account alone to be deemed incompetent to sue or to be sued. Buggee Ram v. Buldeo Singh, 2 N. W. R., 414.

2.—GUARDIAN AND WARD.

A minor is bound by all acts of his guardian done in good faith, particularly if he, when he comes of age, gives an acknowledgment to the guardian admitting himself liable for all debts of his ancestor, and for all debts incurred by his guardian, except certain specified ones. Hurrel Chunder Chowdhry v. Bungsee Mohun Dass, 1 W. R., Mis., 16.

Suits for or against minors can only proceed when they are duly represented by a guardian or next friend. Sama Soondery Debia v. Gris Chunder Banerjee, 3 W. R., Act X R., 138.

The appellants made a claim upon the respondents in respect of certain bonds given during their minority by their executor and guardian. On attaining majority, the respondents, being desirous of avoiding payment, were advised that they could only do so by instituting a suit to which the executor must be a party, and in which a settlement of his accounts would be required. Rather than do this, they came to terms with the appellant in order to obtain time for the payment of the debt by instalments, and a kist bundee was accordingly executed. Held that the respondents could not now, after the death of their guardian, dispute their liability for a debt which they had thus deliberately undertaken to pay. Gholah Khoonwarree Bebee v. Eshur Chunday Chowdhry, 2 W. R., P. C., 47.

Suit for the recovery of a minor's share of the consideration paid for a mouroree lease granted by the minor's co-proprietors on their own behalf and as his guardians, in order to raise money required for the expenses of the joint estate, which lease was cancelled (on the suit of the minor when he came of age) so far as his share was concerned. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover without proof of fraud, and that the evidence tendered by the plaintiff (namely, the record of the case instituted by the minor for the cancellation of the lease) was not admissible to prove the allegation of fraud. Doorga Churn Bhuttacharjee v. Shohee Bhosun Mittler, 5 W. R., S. C. C., Ref., 24.

A minor is one who is not yet of age and is thus not capable of managing his own affairs. The law applies to a Hindoo or to a person of another race, and to himself and to his agents and others. A minor's next friend or guardian must be appointed if one is not already appointed. A deaf and dumb person may be appointed as a guardian. When a person is of full age and is not of sound mind, a guardian may be appointed for him. A person who has no relations or friends in the United States may be appointed as a guardian for himself.

sum of money to the defendant, and died without having received back the money, and the account was continued with the defendant by the mother and guardian of the minor, and a balance was struck during the minority of the infant, it was held that the cause of action arose at the time such balance was struck; and that, as the cause of action accrued to the minor during his disability, his representatives could sue to recover the balance at any time during the time of disability, and that any claim by the minor on attaining his majority, or, if he should die, by his representative, would not be barred if preferred within three years from the cessation of the disability. Further, the extension of the period of limitation conceded to a minor on account of legal disability is not affected by the fact that during his minority he is represented by a guardian. Mahipatrave Chundrarav v. Nensuk Anandraw Shet Marvadi, 4 Rom. Rep., A. C. J., 175.

Held that a decree obtained against a minor and his property represented by an unauthorized guardian may be set aside by a lawful guardian without imputation of fraud or collusion, and that such decree would have no effect, and will not be binding on the minor and against his property. Mussamut Khooshalo v. Subookh, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 175.

Where the plaintiff was a minor, and his interest could not prima-facie be alienated,—Held that the onus of proving that due enquiries were made as to the necessities for the loan, and that it was incurred by the manager for the benefit of the estate, lay on the defendant. It is not necessary to show that such necessities actually existed, but that reasonable enquiry was made as to the existence of such necessities, and the object for which the loan was intended. Foolunder Singh v. Ram Pershad, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 147.

A minor's estate is not liable under bonds contracted by his guardian otherwise than for the minor's benefit, and without legal necessity. Dhamoo Lall and others v. Government, 11 W. R., 240.

Held that there was no error in law in an order of a lower Appellate Court directing that a minor should be excluded from the category of defendants in a suit, inasmuch as the minor, not having been represented by a guardian, would not be bound by any decree of the Court, as the law does not recognize any act of a minor when not having a guardian before the Court. Radhakishore Surnah v. Ram Chunder Doss and others, 11 W. R., 300.

Although purchasers are not bound to look to the application of the purchase-money, or to enquire whether there were goods sufficient to redeem the mortgage, and so to obviate the necessity of a sale of a minor's property, yet the purchaser not proving necessity or not satisfying himself of the existence of necessity, and the unwillingness of the minor's other to disposed of the property in his minority, are sufficient legal grounds for reversal of the sale. Gomain Sircar v. Praoathm Goopth, 1 W. R., 14.

The bond-fide act of a guardian for the benefit of a minor's estate, in giving a farm of the estate, is not one which a Court ought to set aside except for strong reasons. Huro Mohan Mookerjee v. Kalenath Mookerjee, 2 W. R., 270.

A guardian cannot grant his ward's lands in perpetuity except on clear proof of benefit to the minor. Oddooyto Chunder Koondoo v. Prasunno Koomar Bhutlacharjee, 2 W. R., 325.

The guardian, at the time of the suit, and not the former guardian of a minor, is held liable, to the extent of the funds in his hands belonging to the minor, for a debt incurred for the benefit of the minor. Sheikh Assemooddeen Ahmed v. Moassheh Author Ali, 3 W. R., 17.

A sued B. to recover possession of an hereditary joint of which he alleged he had been dispossessed by B. during his minority. B. raised the defence of relinquishment by A.'s grandmother and guardian. The Lower Court decided on the merits against A., but on special appeal the High Court held that it was not shown that the relinquishment was for the benefit of the minor, and therefore the decree of the Court below must be reversed.

On review, Loch, j., held that the judgment of the High Court on special appeal must be reversed, being ultra vires, for that the question of injury to the minor was not urged in the Court below; no issue was raised on that point, and even if the relinquishment of the jote by the guardian did turn out to the disadvantage of the minor, that was not sufficient ground for setting aside the act of the guardian as invalid, provided that, at the time it was done, it appeared to be for the interest of the minor and was done in good faith.

Glover, j., held that the conclusion of the High Court on special appeal was not justified, but was willing to remand the case to the Judge below to find the fact whether or not the relinquishment by the guardian was made in good faith for the interest of the minor. Muthuranath Dutt v. Kadernath Mookerjee, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 127.

The validity of a compromise effected by the father as the natural guardian of an expectant heir during his minority, by which immediate possession of half the property was obtained on the surrender of all claim to the reversion of the other half, was declared to depend on whether the transaction was at the time one reasonably beneficial to the minor. Lall Boodhmul v. Lala Gourree Sunkur, 4 W. R., 71.

Where a person representing herself as a guardian neither took out a certificate under Act XL of 1858, nor obtained the permission of the Court under Section 3 of that Act to appear in the suit without a certificate,—Held that the minor was not bound by any act of the alleged guardian, nor was he bound to sue within three years from the order passed by the Court under Section 246, Act VIII of 1859, rejecting her petition of objection to a sale of attached property. Sreenath Coondoo v. Hurree Narain Mudduck, 7 W. R., 399.

Where a party after attaining full age allowed his mother to give him out to the world as a minor, and as his guardian to mortgage his ancestral property, and permitted the mortgagee to retain possession for five years,—Held that he could not afterwards turn round and repudiate arrangements which were made for his benefit, and for which an innocent party had given valuable consideration. Purmessur Ojah v. Mussamut Goolbee and others, 11 W. R., 446.

If a guardian or next friend of an infant retain an attorney to act for the infant, no contract is created between the attorney and the infant upon which the attorney can sue for the costs. Radhakunth Bose v. Suttiproseno Ghouse, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 269.

The acts of guardians on behalf of minors must show the strictest good faith, and must be based on considerations of actual necessity and advantage, not on calculations of possible benefit. In this case the Court refused to sanction a compromise effected between the guardian and the widow, by which the minor received immediate possession of half the property as consideration for the surrender of the reversion of the other moiety, no interest or advantage to him being shown in the arrangement. Both Null v. Cowree Sunkur, 6 W. R., 16.

Sale by a guardian of a minor upheld, there being proof of pressing valid necessity, and no proof either of undue advantage taken of the guardian by the purchaser, or of the existence of fiduciary relations between the guardian and the creditors, or of the inadequacy of the price at the time when the property was sold. Komola Pershad Narain Singh v. Nokk Lal Shahoo and others, 6 W. R., 33.

Held that the institution of a suit by a guardian on behalf of minors, without due authority having been obtained, is illegal. Mussamat Dhumraj Kooeree v. Rajak Roodur Pertab Singh, 3 Agra Rep., 300.

In the absence of a competent and unobjectionable male relative, ready and willing to act as guardian ad litem of an infant, the mother of the infant may be appointed such guardian, if it is to be no objection to her on any ground but that of her sex. In the matter of Danapa bin Soobrat, 1 Bom. Rep., 134.

Though the lender of money borrowed by the guardian of a minor for the payment of a family debt is bound to enquire into the necessity for the loan, and to satisfy himself as well as he can that the guardian is acting for the benefit of the estate, yf if he does so enquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably created necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and he is not, under such circumstances, bound to see to the application of his money. Maha Beer Pershad Singh v. Dumreeam Opadhyia, W. R., 1864, 166.

Held—that the act of the guardian was binding on the minor unless it be proved that it was an unreasonable one, and that the payment by the debtor before any certificate was obtained was not an invalid payment. Motee Ram Sahoo v. Newab Khuleelooliah and others, 3 Agra Rep., 338.

Guardians appointed by Civil Courts ought to file the accounts of their estates annually as required by law. A guardian is not necessarily accountable for sums paid by him in discharge of debts barred by limitation. Chowdrey Chattersal Singh v. The Government, 3 W. R., 57.

The guardian at the time of the suit, and not the former guardian of a minor, held liable to the extent of the funds in his hands belonging to the minor for a debt incurred for the benefit of the minor. Sheikh Asseemooddeen Ahmed v. Athur Ali, 3 W. R., 137.

A mother as guardian has no power to make a compromise on behalf of a minor daughter, unless the compromise is beneficial to the daughter's interests. Ranee Rowshun Jahan v. Syed Enaet Hossein, W. R., 1864, 83.

A father, as guardian of his minor son, can sue to recover damages for personal injuries received by the son. Mohsho Soodun and another v. Ramooleris Biswas, 9 W. R., 327.

When a sale by the guardian of a minor is reversed, with a direction that the purchaser be reimbursed the amount of his purchase-money, he having been a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration, the minor is liable for the purchase-money. Agoree Hurthur Churn v. Gonga Opadhyia, W. R., 1864, 208.

The sale of a minor's property is reversible when it can be shown that the purchaser did not satisfy himself of the necessity of the sale, and bought in spite of the unwillingness of the minor's mother to have the property disposed of during her son's minority. Gomain Sircar v. Prannath Gooper, 1 W. R., 14.

A sale by an elder brother during a younger brother's minority having been set aside, and the vendee ejected, the vendee alone, and not the vendor, whose connection with the property ceased with the sale, is liable for mesne profits received and expended by the vendee whilst in possession. Shurutkhande Dey Sircar v. Jadubnarain Nunday, 1 W. R., 90.

A suit is not premature when brought by the guardian of minors to set aside a sale made by an adult member of a joint Hindu family without the consent of his wards. Sheo Pershad Jha v. Gung Ram Jha, 5 W. R., 221.

In a suit to set aside a sale effected by plaintiff's mother during his minority, it appearing that plaintiff, eleven months after attaining his majority, signed for his mother a written statement in another suit, to the effect that the property had been sold by her to the defendant, and that he in that suit conducted his mother's defence, which was that the purchaser from her was entitled to what he claimed, it was held that he must be considered to have acquiesced in and ratified the sale. Kebulkristo Dass v. Ramcoomar Shah, 9 W. R., 571.

The plaintiff was entitled, in right of her deceased husband, to the equity of redemption in a mortgaged estate. Her guardian, in collusion with the mortgagee, instituted a foreclosure suit, in which she was represented by the guardian who submitted to decree; and under that decree the property was sold, and the defendant became the purchaser.—Held that the defendant being a bona fide purchaser, the sale was not liable to be set aside. Kettermoney Dassie v. Kishenmohon Mitter and others, Marsh., 313.

In a suit in which it is not necessary for a minor defendant to take an active part, no guardian is ever justified in taking any step prejudicial to his ward. If he can do nothing positively for the minor's benefit, he ought to leave the matter to the Court. Court of Wards on behalf of Raj Coomer Sheoraj Nundun Singh v. Raj Coomer Deo Nundun Singh, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 143.

Where an act done by a guardian is one arising naturally out of the management of the minor's estate, and especially where it is concurred in by other co-sharers of the same property, the liability for such act attaches not to the guardian, but to the
GUARDIAN AND WARD.

In the case in which Regulation X of 1793 has no application, the Court may, under Section 3, Act XL of 1858, allow a friend or relative of the minor to institute a suit on his behalf, and where the guardian omits to take steps for the protection of the infant the Court may allow another person to sue for the benefit of the latter. An infant is as much bound by a judgment in his own action as if of full age, and if an application for review is made on his behalf it must be subject to the conditions of the 376th and 377th Sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. Madhoo Soodun Singh v. Rajah Pritha Bullab Paul, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 231.

A suit by the plaintiff's guardians for the plaintiff's mother's share of the dower was an eighth, he came of age.

That sale as collusive.

The plaintiff brought the present suit to set aside that sale in the plaint in the original suit the fact stated in the plaint in the original suit the plaintiff brought the present suit to set aside that sale as collusive.

 Held that it was incumbent on the defendants in this suit to prove that they paid the Rs. 51,000 to the plaintiff when he came of age, or at least that the money reached the plaintiff's hands when he came of age.

A compromise set up by the defendants in the present suit having been rejected, a decree was given to the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 62,913 calculated on the allegation in the plaint that such share was a third of the entire amount of dower. That suit having been sold by the plaintiff's guardians for the alleged sum of Rs. 51,000, the plaintiff brought the present suit to set aside that sale as collusive.

A suit by the plaintiff's guardians for the plaintiff's interest in that suit; and the question raised in the present suit having already been raised and decided in the former suit, the plea of res-adjudicata was held to apply. Bonamally Kesh v. Hemghessur Roy, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 492.

A Collector appointed guardian, under Section 12 Act XL of 1858, has power to make arrangements for a minor's education, and is not so far amenable to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Ramendra Bhuttacharjee v. Collector of Rajshyhe, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 113.

The plaintiff on coming of age sued to set aside a sale of his ancestral property which had been made by his guardian during minority. No legal necessity was proved, but it appeared that he had the benefit of the sale proceeds. A decree was passed in his favour, but subject to the condition that he should first refund the proceeds of sale. Paran Chandra Pal v. Karunamayi Dasi, 7 B. L. R. 90; and 15 S. W. R., C. R., 268.

Where application is made under Act IX of 1861, and an estate is taken charge of by the Collector under Section 12, Act XL of 1858, the interference of the Civil Court is precluded alike by the former Act (Section 7) and by the latter. Rajah Mohessur Roy v. The Collector of Rajshyhe, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 263.

A manager has no authority to deal with the claims or debts and liabilities attaching to the estate of a minor without having taken out a certificate under Act XL of 1858. An order for a certificate may be revoked under Section 21, Act XL of 1859, if the Judge sees sufficient cause for its revocation in the conduct of the party in whose favour it was granted. Tusneef Hossein v. Bibee Sookhoo, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 453.

Where a Judge cancels his own order under Act XL of 1858 appointing the Collector to take charge of a minor's estate, a friend of the minor on behalf of the minor as the party interested is at liberty to appeal under the provisions of Section 28. Sheo Persham Chobey v. The Collector of Sarun, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 256.

The marriage of a minor is not a sufficient cause within the meaning of Section 21, Act XL of 1858, for withdrawing a certificate as manager granted under that Act; there must be some neglect in the performance of duty, or some cause of a similar kind rendering it improper to continue the manager in the appointment.

Where two persons were fighting to get hold of the property, and the probability was that the minor would suffer if the property lay in the hands of either, the Court could not say that either person was a fit person to be appointed manager, and therefore, under Section 12, ordered the property to be made over to the charge of the Collector, with direction to appoint a manager of the property and a guardian of the person of the minor. Musst. Ingooluma Koer v. Musst. Mrocha Koer, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 269.

 Held that the lower Court could not, in the summary department, pass an order declaring invalid a sale of a house made by a manager as being beyond the scope of Section 18, Act XL of 1858, and granting an injunction to prevent the demolition of such house, but should have left the title of the parties to be established in a regular suit. Mukrumanissa v. Abduol Indobar, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 171.
It is not necessary that a party who represents the interests of a minor should take out a certificate under Act XL of 1858 before he can be heard on behalf of the minor, or be able to institute or defend a suit in his name, but the Court is competent under Section 3 of that Act to permit any relative of the minor to institute or defend a suit on his behalf although a certificate of administration has not been granted to such relative. Bononally Kish v. Hungesshur Roy, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 492.

It is undoubtedly the duty of guardians scrupulously to regard the interests of minors in dealing with their estate, and the Court will, when necessary, enforce the performance of this duty. But the interests of infants would seriously suffer if a notion were to prevail that guardians were bound for their own security to contest all claims against an infant’s estate, whether well or ill-founded, and such a notion might prevail if the compromise of a claim of debt confirmed by a decree of a Court were to be set aside after sixteen years without distinct proof of fraud. Lakraj Roy v. Mahlabchaund, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 117.

Held that the lower Appellate Court had properly exercised its discretion under Act XL of 1858, when it found that the minor plaintiff was not properly represented, in refusing to allow decree to be passed against him so as to be binding upon him when he came of age. Baboo Dhaonndh Bakadoor Singh v. Baboo Prizang Singh, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 314.

It is not necessary to institute a regular civil suit in order to obtain the revocation of a certificate of guardianship. Mahomed Nukshind Khan v. Musumut Afzal Begum, 3 N. W. R., 149.

Guardians ad litem should always be appointed by the Court in which the litigation is pending. 5 Mad. Rep., Rul. VII.11

3.—MINORITY.

A purchase from a minor is not ipso facto invalid. L. Renni v. Gunga Narain Chowdhry, 3 W. R., 10.

A minor when he comes of age is not precluded from suing in his own name for anything that his guardian, either through ignorance or negligence, has omitted to prosecute. Koylash Chunder Sircar v. Gooro Churn Sircar, 3 W. R., 43.

Section 2, Regulation XXVI of 1793, extends the term of minority of proprietors of estates paying revenue to Government from the end of the 15th to the end of the 18th year, in respect of all acts done by such proprietors, both as to matters connected with real estate and matters of personal contract.

Minors have a qualified power of contracting, and an implied or express contract for necessaries is binding absolutely on a minor.

As a minor cannot himself, by reason of insufficient capacity for business, state and settle an account so as to be bound thereby, so neither can he authorise another party to do for him that which he cannot do for himself. Bhaksinath Roy Chowdhry v. N. P. Pogue, 5 W. R., 2.

The acts of a minor are only voidable, and not absolutely void. The purchaser of the right, title, and interest of a judgment-debtor sued to obtain immediate possession of the property purchased at a sale held in execution of a decree, after setting aside an usurious mortgage executed by the judgment-debtor while a minor.

Held that the sale in execution was merely transferred to the purchaser the reversionary right of the judgment-debtor in the property, after the satisfaction of the usurious mortgage, and not the right to set aside an act done during minority.

Held that until a transaction by a minor was avoided by some distinct act on attaining majority, it must be considered valid. Hari Ram v. Jitan Ram, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 426; *S. C., 12 W. R., 378.

The age of majority fixed by Act XL of 1858 is not only for proprietors of land paying revenue to Government, but for all persons not being British subjects. Lakhikant Dutt v. Jugabundhu Chuckerbury, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 79; *S. C., 11 W. R., 561.

Regulation XXVI of 1793 (fixing 18 years as the legal age for the exercise of the powers of a proprietor of an estate paying revenue to Government) applies to a co-sharer, as well as to the proprietor of an entire estate. Ronce Roushan Jahan v. Syed Enaet Hossein, W. R., 1864, 83.

When a certificate of guardianship has been granted under Act XL of 1858, it is by the terms of that Act, and not by reference to Mahometan or Hindu law, that the period at which the ward is to be considered of full age must be determined. Mahomed Arwind Chowdhry v. Oosun Bebee, 2 W. R., 217.

Every person, not being a European British subject, who has not attained the age of 18 years, is a minor for the purposes of Act XL of 1858; and unless he is a proprietor of an estate paying revenue to Government, who has been taken under the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards, the care of his person and the charge of his property are subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court, and he is a minor, whether proceedings have been taken for the protection of his property or the appointment of a guardian or not. Mudhossowati Munji v. Dehegobinda Neuji, 1 B. L. R., F. B., 49; 10 W. R., F. B., 36.

According to Section 2, Regulation XVI of 1793, the minority of a proprietor of an estate paying revenue direct to Government extends to the end of the eighteenth year. Bher Kishore Sukhe Singh and others v. Hur Bullub Narain Singh and others, 7 W. R., 502.

Act IX of 1861 applies to Pegu and also to minors, the lawful children of European natural-born British subjects. Recorders appointed under Act XXVI of 1863 possess all the jurisdiction relative to minors referred to in Section 1, Act IX of 1861, or intended to be given by that Act. In re W. H. Hutton and another, 3 W. R., Recorder’s Ref., 5.

Where a bond (usurious mortgage) was signed in presence of a Deputy Commissioner by the agent of a minor, in open Court, and duly registered by him, the transaction was held to be the same as if the minor himself had executed the deed. Hooroo Ram v. Jeelun Ram, 12 W. R., 378.

A minor interested in contesting the execution and validity of an alleged will, and his legal guardian having been improperly joined with the alleged executors of the said will as co-plaintiff, the decrees of the Courts below were reversed and the suit remanded.
Where a mother under colour of a change of religion forms a connection or leads a life which by persons professing her husband's faith would be deemed immoral, she thereby ceases to be a proper person to be entrusted with the education of the children of her deceased husband.

If the Court finds a case made out for its interference, it will not be deterred from the exercise of its powers because the persons setting it in motion may be actuated by motives other than the interests of the minor. Skinner v. Orde, 2 N. W. R., 275.

Appellant having presented a petition to a Zillah Judge under Act IX of 1861, claiming the possession and custody of his two minor children alleged to be detained by their mother, the parties being European British subjects,—Held that such Judge had no power to entertain the application. Shunnum, 2 N. W. R., 79.

Where a person (a native of this country) has not attained the age of eighteen years, he is not competent to institute and maintain a suit without the intervention of a guardian appointed under Section 3 of Act XL of 1858.

A suit against a minor whose estate exceeds Rs. 250 in value cannot be proceeded with unless he be represented by a person holding a certificate of administration under Act XX of 1864. The plaintiff may apply to the District Judge to appoint an administrator if none such has been appointed.

A suit on behalf of a minor for partition will lie, unless the interests of the minor are likely to be prejudiced by the property being left in the hands of the co-parceners from whom it is sought to recover it. Kamakshi Ammal v. Chidambaram Reddi, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 94.

Where property belonging to three brothers, one of whom was a minor, was sold for an ancestral debt on which execution proceedings had been taken, the rights and interests of the two elder brothers alone being advertised for sale, and the deed of sale making no mention of the minor's rights and interests,—Held that the minor's rights and interests were not conveyed to the purchaser. Neetye Roy v. Oodit Roy and others, 10 W. R., 241.

The father, if a proper person, cannot be deprived of his legal right to the custody of the legitimate children of whatever age. 2 & 3 Vict., c. 39, which gives a discretionary power to a Judge in England, has not been extended to this country; therefore the law applicable to cases which occurred in England previous to the passing of that statute is applicable here. Re Holmes, 1 Hyde's Rep., 99.

The High Court, in its equitable jurisdiction, has authority to interfere with the legal right of a father to the custody of his child, if he be an improper person. Re A. F. Curran, an infant, 1 Hyde's Rep., 143.

The holder of an estate paying revenue direct to Government, whether the settlement of that estate be temporary or permanent, is a proprietor within the meaning of Section 3, Regulation XXVI of 1793; and the minority of such a proprietor extends to the end of the 18th year. Anromonee Dibea v. Tumeejoodene Chowdhy and others, 7 W. R., 181.

A sale under Regulation XXVI of 1793 does not extinguish under-tenures or incumbrances created by the delinquent or those through whom he claims. Juggomohun Bukhree v. Ram Mothoranaath Chowdhy and others, 7 W. R., P. C., 18.

In a suit by a minor through her guardian for the recovery of property sold more than 3 years before the plaint was filed, plaintiff was held to be entitled to rely on the provisions of Section 11 of Act XIV of 1859, and to be therefore not barred by limitation. Ramghose v. Greedur Ghose, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 429.

Under Act XIV of 1859 the disability of a minor is to be considered absolute, and any benefit which the minor is to have accrues to him, not during his disability, but when his disability ceases. Mussammat Phooloois Koer v. Lall Juggesoor Sahi, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 340; Bikrammut Lall v. Mussammat Phooloois Koer, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 340.

A judge, in the exercise of his jurisdiction under Act XL of 1858, is justified in having respect to the religion professed by the father of a minor, and in passing such orders with regard to the custody of the person of such minor as he may hold to be in accordance with what would have been the minor's father's wishes had he been alive to express them.

In a suit for possession of landed property, which originally belonged to plaintiff's father,—Held that any act done by the widow, and any decree given against her, as sole proprietor of the lands, and not as guardian, would not bind the plaintiff. Bakhor Ali v. Sookea Bibe, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 69.

Appeal from an order of the High Court, confirming an order of the Zillah Judge, removing an infant ward and her property from the custody and guardianship of her mother and the mother's second husband. The minor was the issue of a Christian marriage, the child of a Christian father, who was massacred at Delhi in 1857, and was under the protection of her mother, who was of Mahometan ancestry. In 1867 the mother and second husband, after cohabiting together for some time, both became Mahometans, and contracted a Mahometan marriage, the second husband being already the husband in Christian marriage of a living Christian wife. The Privy Council, without relying on the rule in force in the Courts of Chancery requiring that, in the matter of religious education, great and (in absence of controlling circumstances) paramount weight should be given to the expressed or implied wishes of the deceased father, affirmed the order of the High Court, being of opinion that, from the very necessity of the case, a child in India, under ordinary circumstances, must be presumed to have his father's religion, and his corresponding civil and social status, and that therefore it was ordinarily, and in the absence of controlling circumstances, the duty of a guardian to train his infant ward in that religion.

The Privy Council agreed with the High Court in doubting the validity of the Mahometan marriage, and suggested, in the selection of a school in such cases, the desirability of having some independent person as guardian, to whom the ward could apply, in whom the Court and the ward could confide, and whose duty it would be to communicate to the Court any matter which might arise. Skinner v. Orde, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 77.

In a suit against a minor's father, as the minor's guardian, during the minor's minority, when the good faith of the parties is not impugned, the minor is liable. Sherafutoollah Chowdry v. Abdoenissa Bibe, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 374. Held that the Judge had not improperly exercised the discretion vested in him, by Act IX of 1861, S. 3, in not removing a minor of 51 years old from the custody of his natural mother. Senamonee Dosset v. Joy Doorga Dasset, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 551.

Held that a Hindu of the age of seventeen years was competent to apply for the execution of a decree obtained by a deceased person of whom he was the representative. Reg. V. of 1827, Sec. VII, Cl. 3, does not prevent a Hindu less than eighteen years of age from suing, but restricts him to a particular period, after which he is no longer a minor. Ganmieran Ray and others v. Chinnajy Keshtam Dhamle, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 95.

A suit by a guardian on behalf of a minor is the suit of the minor, and is governed by the law of limitation applicable to the minor. Sreemutty Sufferoninissa Bibe v. Moonishe Noorul Hossein, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 419.

An appeal from an order under Act XL of 1858, appointing a person to be guardian of a minor and manager of his property, bears no value and cannot be carried to her Majesty in Council. Mussamut Harasundari Baizabi v. Mussamut Fayyadurga Baizabi, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 36.

A manager has no authority to borrow money on a bond which does not recite for what purpose it is required, and the greater portion of which is said to have been previously borrowed by the principal. Makarajy Tayyunnah Sakee Dee v. Kiera Ram Chuckerberry, 6 W. R., 43.

To wrong a minor's estate is bound to satisfy himself that the loan is for the benefit of the estate. Lalliah Bunseedhur v. Koowar Bindeseere Dutt Singh, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 165.

A manager of the estate of a minor appointed by will is liable to removal only upon proof of actual malversation, or that by reason of mental incapacity, conviction of felony, or by some other incapacitating cause, he has become incapable of managing the property; but not merely on the ground that another person would manage the property better.

He is, it seems, subject to removal upon summary application under Act XL of 1858, Section 21, but if the ground upon which his removal is applied for involves an investigation of accounts, such investigation must be made in a regular suit under Section 19, previous to such summary application under Section 21. Musdoosoodun Singh v. The Collector of Madinpur, Marsh., 244.

Where a case is started showing that elder sons are neglecting their duty as managers of an estate to the material injury of a minor son, the Judge is bound to institute enquiry.

Where particular persons have been appointed by will to be managers, and any of them become incapable and refuse to act, it does not follow that others should be appointed in their stead.

Where managers by becoming vedantists are incapable themselves of performing ceremonies contemplated in the will, they may make over to any person concerned the requisite expenses for such ceremonies. Anund Coomar Gangoolsy v. Rakhal Chunder Roy and others, 8 W. R., 278.

The conveyance of property while the owner is a minor is not necessarily inoperative; if the sale is effected by the guardian, and acquiesced in by the minor when he comes of age, it may be valid notwithstanding. Kummuroadhen Shatkh v. Shaik Khahmadho and others, 11 W. R., 134.

An appeal from an order under Act XL of 1858, appointing a person to be guardian of a minor and manager of his property, bears no value and cannot be carried to her Majesty in Council. *Mussamut

6.—RULINGS UNDER ACT XL OF 1858.

A father cannot sue on behalf of his minor son without having obtained the certificate prescribed by Act XL of 1858, and any decision passed in the case would be irregular, as being passed in the absence of the party prima facie principally interested. Shiam Soonder v. Narain Doss and others, 2 Agra Rep., 343.

A Judge is not precluded, by reason of a will and the existence of executors under the will who have taken out certificate under Act XL of 1858, from enquiring into a complaint against the executors. Nund Coomar v. Rakhal Chunder Roy and others, 6 W. R., Mis., 123.

Without a certificate under Act XL of 1858 a Court may refuse to hear even a natural guardian of right. When the Court in the exercise of the discretion vested in it does hear him, the absence of the certificate will not vitiate the proceedings. Lalla Bhoodmul v. Lalla Gowree Sunkur, 4 W. R., 71.

The private acts of a natural guardian without a certificate under Act XL of 1858 are not vitiating by law. Lalla Bhoodmul v. Lalla Gowree Sunkur, 4 W. R., 71.

A father cannot sue on behalf of his minor sons without a certificate under Act XL of 1858, unless allowed to do so by the Court under the provisions of the said Act. Madho Rao Apa v. Thakoor Pershad and others, 3 Agra Rep., 127.

Held that the plaintiff, not being legally or formally appointed manager or guardian of minor's estate or person, was incompetent to maintain the suit on his (the minor's) behalf, especially when the minor's natural father has been appointed as such under Act XL of 1858, and has not been discharged from his office. Setul Pershad v. Birj Mohun Dass, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 25.

A surbarakar cannot sue on behalf of a minor without permission of the Court, or a certificate under Act XL of 1858. Thakoor Bodh Singh v. Lochun Singh, 4 Agra Rep., 220.

In the grant of a certificate to a guardian under Act XL of 1858, unless under peculiar circumstances, fitness is to be preferred to mere nearness of relationship. Aman Khan v. Mussamut Ho-seena Khatoon, 9 W. R., 548.

The lapse of six years was held to be no sufficient ground for a Judge's refusal to enquire into the merits of an application for a certificate under Act XL of 1858, that law providing no limitations as to the time within which such applications are to be made. Puroma Sondvery Dasse v. Tara Sondvery Dossie, 9 W. R., 343.

A Civil Court may defer passing orders on an application for a certificate under Act XL of 1858, pending an enquiry by the Collector as to the alleged fraud of the manager, and the state of the accounts and the assets of the property. Mohesh Chuender Stein v. The Collector of Dingapore, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 312.

The order of a Judge, rejecting an application for the removal of a guardian under Act XL of 1858, is appealable. Mahindrauth Mookerje, In the matter of the petition of, 7 B. L. R., Ap., 6; and 15 S. W. R., C. R., 493.

The fact that a guardian, appointed under Act XL of 1858, had executed a bond without an order of the Court was held not to be sufficient ground for removing him from office. Brijendro Narain Roy v. Bussunt Coomar Ghose, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 300.

Act XL of 1858 authorizes a Court to select a guardian irrespective of the law of the parties (e.g., Mahometan law) but does not prevent the selection of a guardian indicated by such law if he be a fit person. Where charges of immorality were brought against the holder of a certificate under Act XL of 1858, it was held to be the duty of the Judge to enquire into the truth of the charges and the fitness of the certificate-holder. Mohunuddy Begum v. Mussamut Oomuntoonissa, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 454.

A certificate under Act XL of 1858 having been granted to a party as guardian of an adopted minor, it was objected that the minor's adoption had not been legal. Held that as there was no doubt of the fact of adoption, whether the adoption should on enquiry prove legal or not, the certificate was rightly given, and as the objector did not claim to be appointed guardian, he had no locus standi to object to the appointment of another person. Kist Kishore Roy v. Issur Chunder Roy, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 166.

The Civil Court to which the charge of minors and their property is entrusted by Act XL of 1858 is the Court of the Judge of the district. Mussamut Mohumuddee Begum v. Mussamut Oomuntoonissa, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 271.

Under the Mitackshara law a brother's widow is not entitled to the management of her husband's share of a joint family property. Order giving her a certificate under Act XL of 1858 set aside, but certificate of guardianship allowed to stand. Sheo-nundun Pershad Singh v. Mussamut Guhnskam Kooerce, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 237.

Section 3.

A person who does not hold a certificate under Act XL of 1858 is not debarred by Section 3 from representing a minor as plaintiff or defendant in a suit; but the Court has the fullest discretion, when the property is of small value, or for any other sufficient cause, to dispense with the production of a certificate. Sreemunt Koondoo v. Sharoda Sondvery Dossee, 8 W. R., 197.

Under Section 3, Act XL of 1858, a Court may, in its discretion, if the property be small, or for any other sufficient reason, allow any relative of a minor to sue on his behalf, although a certificate of administration has not been obtained by that relative. Hurendur Lall Sahoo v. Maharajah Rajen-dur Purtoh Soher, 1 W. R., 260.

A grandmother is not competent to represent her minor grandson without having obtained the certificate prescribed by Section 3, Act XL of 1858. Mussamut Kutnee and others v. Misser Rophobers Dyal, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 278.

A mother may be allowed, under Section 3, Act XL of 1858, to sue as guardian of her minor son without having taken out a certificate. Mussamut Munra Jhunna Koowur v. Laljie Roy, 1 W. R., 121.

RULINGS UNDER ACT XL OF 1858.

6.—Rt

A father of a minor without having been provided for by Act XL of 1858 would be entitled to the absence of the minor's natural mother. The order of the District Judge and the executor have taken the case of the minor's natural father, and the executors have taken the case of the minor's natural mother. Chunder Roy

Without prejudice to the Court may, in its discretion, make an order for the settlement of the estate or property of the minor.

Without prejudice to the Court may, in its discretion, make an order for the settlement of the estate or property of the minor.

A father of a minor without a certificate of title to the estate or property of the minor's natural mother. Pershad ana

Held that a formal appointment of the minor's natural father without peremptory order of the District Judge, in the cases of a minor's natural father and mother under Act XL of 1858, is not sufficient. Lochun Sing

In the granting of a certificate of title under Act XL of 1858, the court may, in its discretion, make an order for the settlement of the estate or property of the minor in the event of a fraudulent claim. Soondery Do

A Civil Court may, in its discretion, make an order for the settlement of the estate or property of the minor in the event of a fraudulent claim. Stein v. The C. R., 312.

The order of the Court for the removal of fraud of the assessor. Jhunna Koonwar v. Laljee Roy, 1 W.
A Court of Small Causes constituted under Act XI of 1865 is competent, under Section 3, Act XL of 1858, to allow any relative of a minor to institute or defend a suit in his behalf without a certificate of administration, where it has jurisdiction in relation to the subject-matter of the suit. Khanto Bewak v. Nund Ram Nath, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 259.

In a suit for a kubuleut against and for himself and as guardian of a minor, the defendant denied that he was the guardian, but the Deputy Collector holding that he had a share in the land, and was also guardian, gave a decree against both. The aunt of the minor then applied for a re-hearing, and on being refused appealed. In appeal the Judge held that L. could only have been made liable as guardian if he held a certificate under Act XL of 1858, and that the minor’s estate was exonerated from the decree. Held that, under Section 3, Act XL of 1858, the Judge had authority to permit the aunt to represent the minor without a certificate under that law, but he should have sent back the case for trial on the merits as between plaintiff and such representative. Sheoburrun Singh v. Laljeet Chowdry, 13 S. W. R., C. R., 202.

When a Court of first instance allows a mother to institute a suit on behalf of her minor son, the Judge on appeal has no reason to dismiss the suit on the technical ground that no certificate had been granted to her under Section 3, Act XL of 1858.

It is not necessary for the mother to describe herself as guardian in the plaint, when the suit is evidently brought by her as mother of her minor son. Gooro Monee Debia v. Ram Kunial Sandee, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 44.

A certificate under Section 3 of Act XL of 1858 is purely an authority for the administration of property, and ought not to be issued where there is neither present right nor prospective possession. Nobin Chunder Shaha v. Rajnaraam Shaha, 9 W. R., 582.

Section 3, Act XL of 1858, gives discretion to the Court to admit a party to sue without a certificate. Anund Chunder Ghose v. Komul Narain Ghose, 2 W. R., 219.

Sections 4, 5, and 6.

The summary enquiry provided by Section 6 of Act XL of 1858 refers to the grant of the certificate to the parties claiming it, but no part of the Act allows third parties to demand an enquiry into matters which have nothing to do with the genuineness of the grant. Melton Bibee v. Gibbon, 12 W. R., 101.

Under Sections 4, 6, and 7, Act XL of 1858, the Court has power to appoint a guardian other than the father of a minor, for the purposes of instituting suits and protecting the property of the minor. Mussamut Etwari v. Ram Narayan Ram, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 71 ; 13 S. W. R., C. R., 230.

One manager cannot shift off the responsibility from himself and resign the appointment, and another one take up the appointment without the previous notice of such application or the fixing of a day for the hearing of the application) being duly carried out. Musst. Inrodamba Koer v. Musst. Inrodamba Koer.

where the minor may be dwelling at or about the time when the application for a certificate under the Act is made, but the paternal family house or the family residence of the minor in which every member of the family has an interest, and in which they usually reside; Ainslie, J., being of opinion that though ordinarily that might be taken to be the meaning of the word, yet circumstances might arise in which it might be taken to mean otherwise. Sheikh Mahomed Hosssein v. Akbur Hosssein, 17 S., W. R., C. R., 275.

Section 7.

Act XL of 1858 comprises the cases of all minors not under the Court of Wards and not being European British subjects, and acts irrespective of the Mahomedan law, which can be no guide to the Civil Court in determining whether an applicant should or should not have letters of administration.

Section 7 looks as much to the fitness of the relative as to his propinquity; and when two relatives claim the right to administer, the Court is at liberty to disregard the latter qualification and look to the former. Akima Bibee v. Azem Sarung, 9 W. R., 336.

Under Section 7, Act XL of 1858, a manager appointed to the estate of a minor cannot in any way get rid of or resign that trust without the permission of the Court, and without duly accounting to his successor for all moneys received and disbursed by him. Kala Pershad Singh v. Poorne Deb, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 398.

Under Section 7, Act XL of 1858, a person claiming a right to have the charge of the property of a minor by virtue of a will is entitled, if the will be a genuine instrument, to a certificate of administration, notwithstanding the existence of a natural guardian of the minor in the person of his mother. Bhoobun Mohinee Deba v. Poorno Chunder Banerjee, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 99.

The Civil Court has power by summary proceedings, for any sufficient cause, to recall a certificate of administration granted under Section 7 of Act XL of 1858 to a person claiming a right to have charge of the property of a minor, by virtue of a will or deed, or to a near relative of the minor, and to direct the Collector to take charge of the estate, or may grant a certificate to the public curator, &c., and exercise the other powers conferred upon the Court by Section 21, notwithstanding the manager could not be compelled to render his accounts without a regular suit. Khaja Surwur Hosssein Khan and others v. Mussamut Nimnee Beebee, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 200.

The Civil Court has power by summary proceedings, for any sufficient cause, to recall a certificate of administration granted under Section 7 of Act XL of 1858, to a person claiming a right to have charge of the property of a minor, by virtue of a will or deed, or to a near relative of the minor, and to direct the Collector to take charge of the estate, or may grant a certificate to the public curator, &c., and exercise the other powers conferred upon the Court by Section 21, notwithstanding the manager could not be compelled to render his accounts without a regular suit. Khaja Surwur Hosssein Khan and others v. Mussamut Nimnee Beebee, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 200.
MARRIAGE.

Section 14.

Under Section 14, Act XL of 1858, an estate ceases to be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards when any of the co-proprietors attain majority; but the Judge may, on the representation of the Collector, direct him to retain charge of the persons and shares of the still disqualified proprietors during the continuance of their disqualification, or until such time as it is otherwise ordered.

Section 21.

A Zillah Judge, having ordered the grant of a certificate under Act XL of 1858 to a widow with reference to the property of her deceased husband, afterwards at the instance of the Collector, and on hearing all the parties claiming or objecting, set aside his order and directed the Collector to take charge of the estate. Held that the order, though the Judge professed to make it under Section 12, Act XL of 1858, was really made under Section 21. Chunder Coomar Roy v. Collector of Jessore, 13 S. W. R., 243.

An applicant for a certificate under Act XL of 1858 having alleged that the appointed guardians had neglected their charge in various ways, the Judge called upon the guardians to produce their accounts, and on their failing to do so took away their certificate, and gave it to the applicant. Held that the Judge would have been justified by Section 21 in cancelling the guardians' certificate, if sufficient cause were shown; but he had no authority to do what he did, the accounts which a Judge can call for under that section being those which a discharged guardian is to furnish to his successor in office, and the only way in which a guardian retaining office can be made to furnish such accounts is by a regular suit brought by a relative or friend of the minor.

Held that before appointing a guardian the Judge should satisfy himself, under Section 9, of the applicant's fitness for the office. Ram Dyal Gooye v. Amrit Lal Kamaroo, 9 W. R., 555.

A certificate granted under Section 7, Act XL of 1858, may, under Section 21, be recalled summarily without the accounts having been previously taken in a regular suit under Section 19, where the application of the recall is based on charges of waste and mismanagement. Namne Bbee v. Khojah Surwar Hossein and others, 7 W. R., 522.

A Judge has no power under Section 16 or 21, Act XL of 1858, to order a discharged guardian of a minor to file his accounts. Section 21 refers to the procedure as between discharged guardians and their successors, and not to a case where the contest is between the owner of the estate and a discharged guardian. Doolun Singh v. Torul Narain Singh, 4 W. R., Mis., 3.

A person apprehending danger to the health or life of a minor should ask the Court's interference under Section 21, Act XL of 1858. Maharajah Fuchhe Narain Aung Bhcem v. Soorij Monee Pat Mohadaye, 2 W. R., Mis., 6.

Section 26.

Discussion as to the proper construction of Section 26. Monsoor Ali v. Ramdyal, 3 W. R., 50.

Section 28.

Only persons who claim a right to have charge of property in trust for a minor under a will or deed have a right to make applications under Act XL of 1858, and they alone have a right of appeal under Section 28. A mere creditor has no locus standi in the proceedings before the Judge, and not right to have his objections gone into. Meltoon Bbee v. Gibbon, 12 W. R., 101.

7.—MARRIAGE.

The marriage of an East Indian, domiciled in Calcutta, with the sister of his deceased wife, is not void under 5 and 6 Wm. IV., c. 45. Das Merces v. Cones, 2 Hyde's Rep., 65.

A married woman is capable of contracting in respect of her separate estate. The doctrines of the Roman and English law upon the subject examined. Ndrayanan Chetty v. Jensen and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 383.

Marriage is a valuable and not merely a good consideration. Chintalapati Chhina Simkadrinj v. The Zemindar of Vizianagaram and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 128.

A nikah marriage falls within the purview of Sections 494 and 495 of the Penal Code. Queen v. Judeo Mussulmanee and Beedhy Bewah, 6 W. R., Cr., 60.

Jewels given to a married woman during coverture by a relative or a stranger,—Held to be property belonging to the separate use of the wife. Held, further, that the subsequent investment of the same in the purchase of real estate conveyed to the wife does not cause a change in the nature of such property. Cohen v. Auction and Co., 1 Hyde's Rep., 130.

A deed conveying the interest of a native married woman in land will not be set aside on the ground of want of legal advice or misapprehension, where the husband is aware of the alienation, and it is not shown that there is a gross inadequacy of price. Monohur Doss v. Khoolsun Begum and others, Cor. Rep., 121.

It is not necessary that knowledge of a separation between husband and wife should be brought home to the plaintiff in an action for goods sold and delivered to the wife after separation where plaintiff has long dealt with the wife as the husband's agent. Sham Chund Doss v. W. H. Cor, Cor. Rep., 82.

A Parsee residing in Bombay after the passing of Act XV of 1865, but before it came into operation, contracted a second marriage during the lifetime of his wife, from whom he had not been divorced, and whom he moreover wilfully deserted for two years.

On appeal from an order by the Judge of the Parsee Chief Matrimonial Court rejecting a plaint for divorce by the first wife, on the ground that the subject-matter of the plaint did not constitute a cause of action under Section 30 of Act XV of 1865, and Act VIII of 1859, Section 53.—Held that the facts alleged in the plaint did not amount to "bigamy coupled with adultery,” nor to "adultery coupled with wilful desertion,” within the meaning of Section 30 of Act XV of 1865, as a second marriage contracted by a Parsee husband during the lifetime of his first wife was not unlawful before
The Supreme Court of Bombay, on its Ecclesiastical side, declared incompetent to entertain a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights at the instance of a Parsee wife against her husband. Ardaseer Cursetjee v. Peroseboye, 4 W. R., P. C., 91.

A decree in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights should not decree possession of the person of the wife, but should declare the husband entitled to his conjugal rights, and order the wife to return to his protection. Koobur Khansama v. Jan Khansama, 8 W. R., 467.

A suit by husband against wife for restitution of conjugal rights will lie in the Civil Courts. Held (by Jackson, J., and Macpherson, J.) that the decree in such a suit ought to be declaratory only, and to be enforced in case of disobedience. Held (by Seton-Karr, J.) that the wife may be ordered to be delivered over to her husband. Jhontun Beebee v. Ameer Chand, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 317.

In suits for restitution of conjugal rights the decree should be in the form that the wife do return to her husband, with which decretal order if she fails to comply she may be dealt with under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to attachment and imprisonment for non-performance of the act decreed, for a wife cannot be delivered in execution as a chattel. Musamut Toofeath and others v. Jussouda, 2 Agra Rep., 337. Held that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights should be passed in the form that the husband is entitled to conjugal rights, that his wife do return to live with him, and that her parents do not interfere in any manner to prevent her so doing. Ram Topal v. Madhoo and others, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 111.

Held that a suit by a husband to recover possession of the person of his wife will lie. Hur Sookha v. Pooran, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 115.

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights the proper form of decree is a direction to the wife to return to cohabitation, which direction on disobedience by her may be enforced as provided in Section 200, Act VIII of 1859. Mussamut Imamund v. Mahomed Mujidoolah, 4 Agra Rep., 88.

A suit will not lie by a husband to recover possession of the person of his wife; but a suit will lie by the husband, in the nature of a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, for a decree declaratory of those rights, to be enforced, in case of disobedience, by the imprisonment of the wife or the attachment of her property, or both (Seton-Karr, J., dissentient). Chotun Beebee v. Ameer Chand, 6 W. R., 105.

Quarry.—Whether under the present procedure the Court can enforce its order upon a wife to return to her husband, by giving her over bodily into her husband's hands. Such disobedience would seem to fall within Section 200 of the Code, and to be enforceable only by imprisonment, or attachment of property, or both. Jadoodath Bose v. Shumsoonisa Begum, 8 W. R., P. C., 3.

A Civil Court cannot pass a decree for the recovery of the person of a wife, the proper order being for the restitution of conjugal rights. Melaram Nudial v. Thanooram Bamun, 9 W. R., 552.

The Indian Divorce Act was intended to apply to such marriages as are recognized as marriages by Christians, and not to polygamous contracts, such as are the unions known as marriages to the Mahometan law.

Such polygamous contracts are not subject to the jurisdiction of the Courts created by the Indian Divorce Act of 1869.

S sembl,—That where persons of that faith are married according to the Mahometan law, and either party becomes a convert to Christianity, a claim for restitution of conjugal rights cannot be supported. Zuburdhust Khan v. His Wife, 2 N. W. R., 370.

A petition to make decree nisi absolute. Willis v. Willis, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 52.

A certain amount of money had been paid by one Hindu to another in consideration of a promise by the latter that he would give his sister in marriage to the former. The girl's mother was alive. In a suit for recovery of the amount on the ground that the latter had failed to fulfill his promise, held that the suit would lie. Jogeswar Chuckrabutti v. Panch Kaur Chuckrabutti, 5 B. L. R., 395; 14 S. W. R., C. R., 154.

When a wife obtains a decree for judicial separation on the ground of her husband's cruelty and adultery, and there is nothing to impeach her own conduct, the Court will allow her to have the custody of the children. Macleod v. Macleod, 6 B. L. R., 318.

A District Judge ought in all cases to enquire into, and set out in his judgment, the facts relied on as giving jurisdiction to the Court to pronounce a decree of dissolution of marriage. Durand, N., in the matter of, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 416.

A suit is not maintainable by a wife for an allowance from her husband on an agreement, for which the sole consideration is a stipulation that the wife is not to communicate with or molest her husband, such stipulation falling within the general rule that a deed of separation entered into by husband and wife without the intervention of trustees is void. Hughes v. Hughes, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 250.

The High Court has jurisdiction to admit a petition for divorce, where the parties are resident, and the adultery is committed, in the District of the 24-Pergunnahs.

Principle on which the Court will assess damages discussed. Kelly v. Kelly and Saunders, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 67.

In an application for alimony, it is sufficient to set out the fact of the marriage in the petition; an affidavit to that effect is unnecessary. In making this application it is sufficient to show the Court that there has been a ceremony which might be a valid marriage; and therefore where the petitioner was shown to be the respondent's deceased wife's sister alimony was granted. Crump v. Crump, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 101.

Pending a suit for divorce by the husband, an application by the respondent that an estimate of her probable costs of suit should be made by the taxing office, and the amount thereof as estimated should be paid out of Court to her, was refused; but the Court granted an application that the respondent's costs incurred should be taxed, and the amount thereof be paid out of Court to her proctor. Kelly v. Kelly and Saunders, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 5.

The petitioner sued for a divorce on the ground of his husband's adultery. The adultery was admitted, but the respondent proved that her husband had been guilty of various acts of cruelty towards her, which disentitled him to have an unconditional divorce, and claimed on this ground a right to a judicial separation with alimony, under Section 15 of the Indian Divorce Act. She was at the time of the suit living with the co-respondent. Held that the respondent was not entitled to a decree for judicial separation with alimony. The Court has discretion, under Section 14 of the Act, to refuse a decree for divorce if the petitioner has been guilty of cruelty, although the cruelty may have been condoned.

The respondent is entitled to have brought into Court letters written by her to the petitioner, while the facts to which they speak were fresh in her memory. If the petitioner has none he should make an affidavit to that effect. Gordon v. Gordon, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 100.

Where a wife is living apart from her husband under such circumstances that she does not pledge her husband's credit, the Court will not grant alimony. Gordon v. Gordon and Dr. Saran, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 13.

Alimony may be ordered to commence from the date of the service of the citations, and to run until the final decree. Kelly v. Kelly and Saunders, 3 B. L. R., Ap., 4.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, where at the time of the presentation of the petition the respondent does not reside within the jurisdiction of the Court, the jurisdiction of the Judge and the right of the petitioner to petition him will depend on where the parties "last resided together." Wingrove v. Wingrove, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 416.

A wife brought a suit for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery and desertion. The desertion took place twenty-four years before the suit was brought, and ever since the husband had made his wife an allowance. Latterly his circumstances had considerably improved. The Court gave a decree for dissolution, but in determining the suitable amount of permanent alimony it took into consideration the circumstances of the husband at the time of the desertion, and refused to give the wife the full advantage of the present improved circumstances of the husband. Smyth v. Smyth, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 153.

A husband brought a suit for divorce against his wife on the ground of her adultery; the co-respondent was not a party to the suit. The respondent appealed on the ground (inter alia) that, on the evidence, the Court ought to have held that the adultery was not proved. Held that in that appeal the co-respondent was not entitled to be heard in opposition to the appeal.

The Court has power under Section 37 of Act IV of 1869 to order permanent alimony to the wife when a husband obtains a divorce on the ground of her adultery. Who the marriage is dissolved on account of the adultery of the wife she is not entitled to have access to the children of the marriage. Kelly v. Kelly and Saunders, 5 B. L. R., 71.

Principle on which the Court will grant permanent alimony. Ord v. Ord, 5 B. L. R., Ap., 34.

Where a man and woman, after cohabiting for some time, became Mahometans and contracted a Mahometan marriage, the man being already the husband in Christian marriage of a living Christian wife, the Privy Council, agreeing with the High Court, N. W. P., doubted the validity of the Mahometan marriage. Skinner v. Orde, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 77.

The defendant, a married woman living with her husband, both domiciled in British India and resident in Calcutta, where they had been married on 21st May, 1866, and having property to which she was absolutely entitled under the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, signed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff for a debt due by her to the plaintiff, at the same time giving a verbal promise to pay the amount out of her own property. In a suit on the promissory note, in which the husband and wife were made parties, the wife pleaded her coverture,—Held that she was liable to pay the amount of the promissory note out of her own property, and the Court would, if necessary, make a personal decree against her.

The defendant was at the time of making the promissory note of the age of 19 years. The evidence showed that her father was born at sea, and lived the greater part of his life at Calcutta. It was not shown of what country his parents were, or whether the ship in which he was born was a British ship or not. The defendant pleaded minority at the time of making the note. Held the defendant was not a European British subject, and not exempted from the operation of Act XL of 1858. She therefore attained her majority at 18 years. Archer v. G. J. Watkins, 8 B. L. R., 372.

9.—INSANITY AND LUNACY.

Case in which the prisoner, notwithstanding that he had been convicted and sentenced to death, but before confirming the sentence, as doubts were entertained of her sanity, the case was referred to the Sessions Judge, was convicted by the High Court on the ground of insanity, under Section 393 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and directed to be kept in safe custody, pending the orders of the local Government to be applied for by the Judge. Queen v. Pursoram Doss, 7 W. R., Cr., 42.

The prisoner was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death; but before confirming the sentence, as doubts were entertained of her sanity, the case was referred to the Sessions Judge, with instructions for further inquiry. *Queen v. INSANITY AND LUNACY.

Where a Magistrate has kept in custody an insane prisoner, and reported the case to Government, his successor, instead of striking off the case, is bound to resume the investigation under Section 391, Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen v. Rugkhoa, 6 W. R., Cr., 3.

Where an accused person was found after examination to be of unsound mind,—Held that the Magistrate should not have proceeded to acquit the prisoner, and directed him to be kept in custody, but should have stayed further proceedings. Queen v. Dataram, 6 W. R., Cr., 54.

The enquiry as to alleged lunacy under Act XXXV of 1858 must be made by the Judge, and not by a subordinate Court, to which the Judge can only issue commission under Section 8 of the enactment, in cases where the alleged lunatic resides at a distance more than fifty miles from the place where the Court is held. Ordinarily to such enquiries the members of the family are proper and sufficient parties, but other persons interested may, under special circumstances, be permitted to take part. Thakoor Ram Purgass Singh and others v. Syad Ameer Ali, 3 Agra Rep., Mis., 3.

When, on the trial of a prisoner, the Court entertains doubts as to his sanity full enquiry upon the point is necessary. Reg. v. Heera Poonja, 1 Bourke's Rep., 33.

A Judge, instead of striking off a case because an alleged insane person does not appear after service of notice, ought in such event to prosecute the enquiry contemplated by Act XXXV of 1858. Missamut Moorti Koomvar v. Dhurm Narain Singh, 2 W. R., Mis., 7.

A Collector appointed under Section 11, Act XXXV of 1858, to take charge of the estate of a lunatic, cannot sue himself on behalf of the lunatic, but must appoint a manager for the purpose. Gouranath and another v. The Collector of Monghyr and another, 7 W. R., 5.

Section 5, Act XXXV of 1858, never intended that an alleged lunatic should be summoned into a public Court as a witness, and subjected to examination as a witness by the vakeel of the person on whose petition the enquiry was instituted. R. T. Allen for petitioner, 7 W. R., 246.

Applications made under Section 293 of the Lunacy Act XXXV of 1858 must be verified. Busrut Ally Chowdhry v. Eshun Chunder Roy, moookhteer, on behalf of Arfanissa Chowdhrain, 7 W. R., 267.

A lunatic had been for a number of years in involuntary confinement in Bhowanipore Lunatic Asylum, within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, and was possessed of property out of that jurisdiction. On an application to the Judge to appoint a manager of his property,—Held that as the lunatic was residing within the jurisdiction of the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs, the Judge could, under Act XXXV of 1858, Section 2, enquire into the fact of his insanity, and order a manager to be appointed to the estate. 7. C. Durant v. Chundranath Bhattacharjee, 2 B. L. R., A.C., 246.

Where a prisoner was declared by the Civil Surgeon to be insane at the time he was called on to make his defence, it was held that it was irregular to acquit him; proceedings should have been stayed, and the prisoner detained, pending the orders of Government. In the case of Romon Aundhekar, 10 W. R., Cr., 37.

The application for an enquiry under the Lunacy Act, Act XXXV of 1851, should be verified, and proper notice should be given to the alleged lunatic or his friends in case of necessity. In examining him the greatest care and delicacy should be observed, and everything likely to cause unnecessary pain or excitement to him avoided. If also he be a person of rank, exempted from personal appearance in Court in ordinary civil proceedings, his personal appearance in Court in an enquiry into the state of his mind should be dispensed with. Maharaj Jugunnath Sahee Deo v. Burra Lal Open- droshan Sahee Deo, 5 W. R., Mis., 54.

A Magistrate rightly commits for trial at the Sessions a prisoner charged with murder, whom he finds to be sane at the time of the preliminary investigation, although he was insane when he committed the act.

When a prisoner is found to be insane at the time of his trial, the proper procedure applicable to his case is that prescribed by Sections 391 and 392 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Queen v. Ram Ruttun Doss, 9 W. R., Cr., 23.

A Court cannot, under Act XXXV of 1858, make over charge of the property and person of an alleged lunatic to a guardian until it has adjudged him to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. Bholanath Mookerjee v. Grish Mohineet Debia, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 259.

On an enquiry as to the fact of lunacy under Act XXXV of 1858, any finding as to the actual time when the lunacy began is beyond the jurisdiction of the judicial officer making the enquiry.

Where the fact of lunacy was admitted, and the question was the date at which it commenced, the evidence of a planter in the neighbourhood as to common report for years in the village as to the lunacy having been admitted by the Lower Court, the Judicial Committee refused to reject it.

The rule as to the admission of evidence laid down by Dr. Lushington in Unde Rukhia Bommaranze Bahadur v. Pemmazamy Veukutady Naidoo followed. Bodwarayan Singh, by revisor, and Ajodhya Prusad Singh v. Umrar Singh, 6 B. L. R., 509; and 15 S. W. R., P. C., 6.

On an application for the appointment of a guardian to the estate of a lunatic under Act XXXV of 1858, the Judge should only appoint a person to take charge of the estate of the lunatic, without specifying of what that estate consists. Nitambini Choudhrain v. Shashi Mukhi Chowdrain, 4 B. L. R., Ap., 24; and 12 S. W. R., C. R., 518.

Where the mother of an alleged lunatic presented a petition to the Collector, and the Collector, after certain enquiries, forwarded it to the Judge for orders thereon,—Held that no application was regularly before the Judge under Act XXXV of 1858, for if the application was one by the mother it was bad for want of verification, and if by the Collector it was also bad because he was not the duly constituted agent of the lady, 7th day of July, 1870, he had no authority to set the Civil Court in motion without the order of the Court of Wards. Chuckursurun Narain Singh v. The Collector of Sarun, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 180.
The doctrine of the Hindu law that a widow succeeding as heir to her husband cannot recover property of which he was not possessed, does not apply when the husband has a vested interest under a will or deed, the actual enjoyment being postponed.

By Hindu law, the assignee of a debt can sue the debtor in his own name. Kadar Vocha Sahib v. Rangas Nayak, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 150.

A widow under the Court of Wards cannot, in the summary department, appeal from an order passed by the Judge in execution of a decree assented to by the Court of Wards. Kustoora Koomareev v. Binoderam Stein, 4 W. R., Mis., 5.

Where a widow who is under age is properly represented in a suit, the matter stands precisely as if she were of age and acted on her own behalf, and as representative of the entire estate, involving the interests of her deceased husband and her minor sons. She has the same control with respect to compromise as she has with respect to the assertion of rights and appeal against an adverse decision. Tariye Churn Gangooly v. Watson and Co., 12 W. R., 414.

Purdanush women, or women who according to the usage of the country ought not to be compelled to appear in public, are not exempt from arrest in execution of a decree. The Maharani of Burdwan v. Srimati Baradasundari Debi, 1 B. L. R., F. B., 31; 10 W. R., F. B., 21.

A held (by Macpherson, J.) that accumulations are not income, and cannot be dealt with by a Hindu widow as such; they should be treated in the same way as the corpus of the estate. Grose v. Amir krishna Dasi, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 3; S. C., 12 W. R., A. O. J., 13.

A Hindu becoming a Byragee, if he chooses to retain possession of, or to assert his right to, property to which he is entitled, may be doing an act which is morally wrong, but in which he will not be restrained by the Court.

A became a Byragee, and went on a pilgrimage. He alleged that before his departure he made over his property to B., on the condition that it should revert to him on his return. B. sold it to C. Upon his return after several years A. claimed the property from C., who refused to give up possession. D. purchased A.'s rights, and then sued the widow of C. to obtain possession. She denied that the property was made over to B. upon trust for A. on his return, and contended that the suit was barred under Clause 12 of Section 1 of Act XIV of 1859. The lower Appellate Court held that it was not barred, on the ground that B.'s possession was not adverse. On special appeal the case was remanded, that it might be found whether B. had been in possession in trust for A. or adversely to him for more than 12 years.

Civil Courts cannot compel Hindus, against their will, to ask other Hindus to their houses or their entertainments. Joy Chunder Sirdar and others v. Ramchurn and others, 6 W. R., 323.

Where a contract is proved to have been entered into, but no memorandum thereof in writing has been signed by the parties, a Hindu defendant is not entitled to plead the Statute of Frauds. John Borradaile and another v. Chinnook Buzyram, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 70; 1 Hyde's Rep., 51.

Plaintiff brought a suit to procure delivery to her of a share of land purchased with money, subject to the provisions of a deed of partition executed by her husband and the undivided members of his family. Plaintiff's husband has been since 1854 absent in a foreign country. Held that the plaintiff sufficiently represented her absent and divided husband to enable her to sue for his share. Papamtal v. Rama swami Chetti, 2 Mad. Rep., Ap., 365.

Held that the mother who is in possession of her daughter's shares in her husband's estate in lieu of dower is not at liberty to sell them, and the sale can be invalidated, although the daughters may not be entitled to immediate entry upon their shares. Mussamut Ghufoorun Beebe v. Khwajeh Mustukedeh and others, 3 Agra Rep., 300.

The Pattam, or office of dignity in a family governed by the Aliya Santana law, is indivisible, and, whether the family be divided or not, the Pattam, no special arrangement having been made about it, descends to the eldest male of the surviving members of the family.

There is no difference between the position of a Rajah holding an impartible raj, and that of an ordinary zemindar, in respect of his power to relinquish the property in favour of his next legal heir. Such a relinquishment is not forbidden by the Hindu law. Luchmee Narain Singh v. Gibbon, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 197.

Under the Benares law a man's immoveable property, though self-acquired, is not within his power of disposal so absolutely by gift in his lifetime as to enable him to give it all to one son or grandson in exclusion of the rest. Maha Sookh v. Budree, 1 N. W. R., 103.

Administration—(See Administration).

The sale by a widow (who has obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to collect the debts due to her husband's estate) of a money decree belonging to her husband's estate, cannot be set aside except on the ground of fraud, either as not being the heir and selling what she had no power to transfer, or as making a paper transfer to avoid the effect of execution. Bhagwan Doss v. Luchme Narain, 2 W. R., Mis., 19.

In estimating the value of a suit, the costs must not be included in the amount in dispute. Nilmadhob Dass v. Biswamohar Dass, 3 B. L. R., P. C., 27; S. C., 12 W. R., P. C., 29.

A registered deed of permission to adopt, which contained no words of devise, was held not to be of a testatory character, there appearing no intention on the part of the maker that the document should contain any disposition of his estate, except so far as such disposition might result from the adoption of a son under it. An adopted son, as such, takes by inheritance, and not by devise. A son cannot be adopted to the great-grandfather of the last take after the lapse of several successive years, when all the spiritual purposes of a son, according to the largest construction of them, would have been satisfied.

When the estate of a son is unlimited, and that son marries and leaves a widow his heir, she acquires a vested interest in her husband's property as widow, and a new heir cannot be substituted by adoption to defeat that estate, and take as an adopted son what a natural born son would not have taken. By the mere gift of probate of adoption to a widow, the estate of the heir of a deceased son vested in possession cannot be defeated and divested. Bhoobun Mooye Debia v. Ramkishore Acharjee, 3 W. R., P. C., 15.

According to Hindu law a power to adopt may be given verbally. The widow of a childless member of a divided Hindu family is entitled to a lifetime interest in her husband's estate after the death of an adopted son before attaining majority. Soonder Koornaree Debea v. Gudadhur Pershad Tewaree, 4 W. R., P. C., 116.

A Hindu will contained the following clause: "I give out of my two-anna share of the whole of my personal estates Rs. 7,000 to my mother (one of the defendants) and Rs. 5,000 to my wife (the plaintiff). Besides the two-anna share of the wealth in ready money and landed property which remains, you, my brother, will keep under your own charge; you are at present malik of the whole of the property; you will perform all acts; you will cause one of your sons to be received in adoption." The brother died leaving a will, by which he committed to his wife and mother the charge of his own property and that of his brother, and also the duty of giving his son in adoption to his brother. The defendants, viz., his wife and mother, proved the will, and took possession of the property. The plaintiff omitted to adopt. Her husband died in 1857, and the suit was brought in 1867.

Held that the estate descended to the widow, plaintiff, subject to the two legacies, notwithstanding her refusal to adopt; and that she did not forfeit it even if she refused to adopt. Prasannamayi Dasi v. Kadambini Dasi, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 85.

An attempt at a false adoption of a son does not render a widow liable to the penalty of absolute forfeiture of the property for the benefit of reversioners. Komul Monee Dossat v. Alhammonee Dossat, 1 W. R., 256.

decesed husband.—Held that she had power to dispose of the land for any purpose for which as administratrix she might properly do so.

Held also that an improper disposal of the property was not to be presumed against a purchaser from her, but that the sale must be taken to be proper and valid, unless it appeared that to the purchaser's knowledge she was for an unlawful purpose converting the estate. Held also that she having the right to sell as administratrix, it could not be presumed that she sold as a widow. Loganada Mudali v. Rasvami and others, I Mad. Rep., 384.

The security required from the administrator of effects of a deceased Hindu extends, as in the case of an English administrator, only so far as to cover the personalty of the deceased. In the goods of Gour Chunder Thakoor, deceased, I Ind. Jur., N. S., 229.

A widow is entitled (in preference to a cousin who also claimed as surviving partner) to a certificate to collect the debts, joint as well as separate, of her late husband. Roy Baboo Shib Golam Sahoo Bahadur v. Mussamnul Gungo Koornaree, 1 W. R., Mix., 29.

A Hindu widow, as holder of a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, is not necessarily the proper person to continue a suit for the recovery of immovable property, though she is entitled to do so as heir of the deceased, if he died without issue, and was the sole owner of the property. Sevithia Pillay v. Mootosawmy and others, 8 W. R., 2.

3.—ADOPTION.

(a) Generally.

A Hindu died after having made a hibbanama or deed of gift, giving the bulk of his property to the eldest son of one of his brothers, designating him as his pallok-putra. The donee thereof died without issue, but leaving a widow him surviving. On the death of his widow his cousins sued his heir, as heirof the deceased, if he died without issue, and was the sole owner of the property. Sevithia Pillay v. Mootosawmy and others, 8 W. R., 2.

Held by the Privy Council, reversing the judgment of the High Court, that the words of the hibbanama ("but as I had no son or daughter, I took you as my pallok-putra, in the month of Agharan 1211, B. S. (1803), with the anumati (permission) of your parents, for the purpose of securing future oblations of water and funeral cake, and having brought you up like a son, performed the ceremonies of your Sangskar, &c., and have constituted you my representative") were not those which properly import the adoption of a son by gift—Dat-taka Putra.

Held that the presumption which arose from the religious duty of a childless Hindu to adopt was, in this case, opposed to as strong a presumption that a Hindu would not break the law by giving in adoption an eldest or only son.
HINDU LAW—ADOPTION.

The validity of an adoption was questioned in a case. The issue was settled by the Court. The law was as follows:

widow of a Hindu who died without male issue, and made in accordance with his request, divested the property from the widow and vested it in the adopted son, the widow sued for an undivided share in the joint property, and a decree was made directing her to be put in possession. Held that the widow must be assumed to have prosecuted the suit only as guardian for her adopted son; that the decree must be considered to be for his benefit, and that she was put in possession as trustee for him and accountable to him as guardian and trustee for the maintenance out of it. Dhamro Doss Pandey and others v. Mussamut Shama Soondery Debia, 6 W. R., P. C., 43.

Plaintiff sued as the widow of an adopted son for the property of the adoptive father, and also on the ground that the adopted son was the devisee of the adoptive father. The Civil Judge decided that the adoption of the plaintiff's husband was invalid according to Hindu law, and that the devise, having been made to the plaintiff's husband as adopted son, was invalid.

Held (reversing the decision of the Civil Judge) that as the language of the testator sufficiently indicated the person who was to be the object of his bounty, the person so indicated was entitled to take, although the testator conceived him to possess a character which in point of law could not be sustained. Javani Bhai v. Jivan Bhai, 2 Mad. Rep., 462.

A sale in execution of a decree against an adoptive mother is good as against the adopted son, when made, not personally, but as guardian of the adopted son, and not for a personal debt, but for payments made by co-sharers of Government revenue on account of the adopted son to preserve their joint property. The estate of the adopted son is not liable for a debt without proof that the debt is other than personal. Roopmonjooree Chowdhranee v. Ramdall Sircar, 1 W. R., 144.

The theory of an adoption is a complete change of paternity; the son is to be considered as one actually begotten by the adoptive father, and he so in all respects save an incapacity to contract marriages in the family from which he was taken. Narasamal v. Balaramacharly, 1 Mad. Rep., 420.

A Hindu whose adoption is invalid is entitled to maintenance in his adopter's family (overruled, 363). A son, whether adopted or begotten, can claim maintenance of his father until he put into possession of his share of the ancestral estate.

As against an adopted son suing for his share of the ancestral estate, the Law of Limitation does not begin to run until the allotment of such share has been demanded and refused. The share of an adopted son is one-fourth of the share of a son born to the adoptive father after the adoption. Ayydvu Muppandr v. Niladatchi Amml and others, 1 Mad. Rep., 45.

Where an adoption had been acquiesced in for a period of thirty-three years, it was presumed that the necessary consent of some person competent to give away the adopted son had been obtained. Anandvudri Sircjyt al v. Ganesh Eshant Biki, 7 Bom. Rep., Ap., XXXIII.

A childless Hindu is bound to adopt a son if he, but an imperative obligation. Rajendra Narain Lahore v. Saroda Soondaree Debia, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 548.

The decision of an Appeal Bench of the High Court upon a point of law, or the construction of a document in the case before them, is not necessarily binding on a single Judge of that Court, where the same question again arises in another suit before him.

A Hindu testator died, leaving a widow, and leaving also a will which contained the following clause: "My wife is supposed to be pregnant with a child; if a daughter be born she will in that case adopt the twin mentioned below (the plaintiff and one S. G.), and whatever property there shall exist, consisting of moveable and immovable, my executors shall divide into three equal shares, and give the same to the daughter and adopted sons on their attaining the age of majority. S. G. died; no child was born by the widow. The plaintiff having attained his majority brought a suit for declaration that as the language of the testator sufficiently in as against their father, had been made long before they were born. The right of an after-born son to share as a coparcener divided property depends upon his mother being pregnant with him at the time of a partition.

The father of the plaintiffs adopted the third defendant. After the adoption the wife of the father gave birth to a son. Thereupon the father effected a division of the property with the adopted son, and gave the latter a larger share than he was entitled to receive by law. The father married a second wife, and the plaintiffs were the issue of the marriage. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a...

In order to establish a valid adoption in a Brahmin family, proof of the performance of the datta homam is not essential.

The giving and receiving a boy who is capable of being adopted is sufficient to constitute a valid adoption according to Hindu law. Singamma v. Vinjamuri, 4 Mad. Rep., 165.

A suit to set aside the adoption of a second son must be made within 12 years from cause of action. The maxim "ignorantia legis nil excusat" applies to questions of the Hindu law of inheritance and adoption, as well as to other laws. Radhakissen Mahapater v. Sreekissen Mahapater, 1 W. R., 62.

A bond executed by a widow in possession of a zemindary was held binding on the adopted son of the late zemindar, the inference from the evidence being that the bond was given for debts which the defendant (the adopted son), as owner of the zemindary, might be liable to pay, and that by his own acts he had admitted that he actually was liable to the payment. Chitty Culum Coomara Venkatachella Radhyar v. Rajah Rungasanwey Jyengar Bakadoor, 4 W. R., P. C., 71.

(b) Double Adoption.

P., a Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta, of the Sudra caste, having two wives,—M., the elder wife, and N., the younger,—but no issue by either of them, adopted two sons, the plaintiff and S. This double adoption took place on one and the same occasion, but the plaintiff went through the necessary ceremonies in point of time before S. P. gave the plaintiff in adoption to his wife M., and S. to his wife N. P. afterwards died, leaving M. N., the plaintiff and S., and leaving property and a will in which he said,—

"Having adopted two sons, I have given my elder son to my elder wife to bring him up, and they both are respectively nurturing the two sons, as sons born of their own womb. For the purpose of protecting and preserving the property after my decease, I appoint my elder uterine brother A. executor, and my said two wives M. and N. executrices. If either of these my two sons depart this life without issue (which God forbid!), I direct either of my wives whose foster son shall have died to take another son in adoption pursuant to this my direction, and having done so, should a similar misfortune happen, she shall have the option of adopting other sons in succession, and that son shall inherit the share of my deceased son. Further, besides one-half share of the moveable and immovable properties of which I am possessed jointly with my elder uterine brother, whatever, &c., belonging to me in my separate, &c., account, my said executor and executrices shall become possessed of the whole after my decease, and shall recover my dues and pay the aforementioned legacies, &c., &c.

Afterwards, when my adopted sons shall have attained their ages of majority, my executor and executrices shall account for and give them their shares on their becoming of age. If they continue to be unanimous, well and good; if not, they may divide and receive their respective shares of the property and live separate as to food, &c., &c."

The executor and two executrices proved the will. Afterwards S. died, an infant and unmarried, and thereupon N., his mother in adoption, assuming to act under the will, adopted the defendant O. in his place, the other son, the present plaintiff, still living.

The plaintiff and O. afterwards, while still infants, filed a bill by their next friend against P.'s executor and executrices for the administration of the estate. N. afterwards died before the present suit, which was brought by the plaintiff against M., the surviving wife, and O., praying that the plaintiff might be declared the only son and heir of P., and that an account might be decreed against the defendants. Held by the Court below that the adoption by P. of two sons at the same time was void; that consequently there was no validly adopted son living at the time N. exercised the power given her by the will, and that the adoption by her of O. was void.

Secondly, by the Court below and the Court of Appeal, that there was a clear designation of the plaintiff and S., and of O., the subsequently adopted son, to enable them to take under the will.

Thirdly, by both Courts, that the administration suit was no bar to the present suit.

And held by Trevor, J., dissenting from the rest of the Court on the appeal, that the instrument executed by P. was partly a will and partly a permission to adopt; that as to the first part of the instrument, there was sufficient designation of the persons as held by the rest of the Court; and as to the second part, that it was a condition precedent to any one taking under that permission that he should be a validly adopted son according to the Hindu law. Monemothanath Day v. Onothanath Day and Nemoyemoney Dasser, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 24; Bourke's Rep., O. C., 189.

According to Hindu law, a second adoption (the first adopted son still existing and remaining in possession of his character of a son) is invalid.

The acquiescence of the first adopted son, after he came of age, in the division of property made by the adopting father between his two adopted sons, was not equivalent to a previous consent (binding on the first adopted son) to the disposition of the ancestral property by the father, but was binding on the first adopted son with regard to other property of which the father had the power of disposing by an act inter vivos without the consent of the first adopted son. Aitchama v. Ramakishada Baboo, 7 W. R., P. C., 57.

(c) Evidence of Adoption.

When a Hindu lady adopted a son in the lifetime of her husband, the fact that she carried on a law-suit during his lifetime, calling herself his wife and the mother of the adopted son, and that neither the husband nor any one else denied the adoption, would be strong corroborative evidence that the adoption was made not only with the husband's consent, but that the ceremonies usual on the occasion of an adoption were done in his actual presence. Timnicorie Chatterjee v. Denonah Banerjee, W. R. 1864, 153.

strict proof of power to adopt, and under which it will assume the power to have been given. The acquiescence of parties interested in opposing an adoption is not pr\textit{im}d-facie evidence of its validity. The precise contingency contemplated by the donor of the power must happen to make an adoption valid. \textit{Mohindra}ial\textit{Mo}skir\textit{jee} v. \textit{Rook}\textit{ney}i\textit{Dube}, Cor. Rep., 42.

In cases of adoption careful scrutiny is necessary. The party seeking to establish an adoption is bound to produce the best evidence procurable. The rule for testing the validity of a deed of adoption is contemporaneity of execution and publication of the deed of permission. In the absence of original deed, all the circumstances bearing upon the alleged deed, and all the probabilities for and against its genuineness, must be considered. \textit{Roopmonj}o\textit{jee} \textit{Chowd}r\textit{i} v. \textit{Ram}l\textit{ial} \textit{Sirc}ar, 1 \textit{W. R.}, 144.

In a former \textit{bona-fide} litigation to which the defendant was no party, the \textit{status} of the plaintiff as an adopted son was in issue and disposed of in his favour. \textit{Held} that that was good evidence of the adoption in this case, in the absence of better evidence for the defendant. \textit{Seetaram} v. \textit{Juggobun}do \textit{Bose}, 2 \textit{W. R.}, 16.

An adoption made by a Parsee immediately before his death would render extremely improbable the execution of a will by him a very short time previous thereto, and therefore call for very clear proof to establish its existence.

Although in cases of adoption by dhurm-putr (a partial adoption) it is not indispensably necessary that a declaration should be made on the third day after the decease, yet it is usual to make such a declaration and to take a writing from the dhurm-putr.

In the absence of any such writing, and upon the whole evidence, the adoption in this case was pronounced to be as a paluk-putr, and not merely as a partial adoption. \textit{Homabhae} v. \textit{Punjabhae} \textit{Dosabheen}, 5 \textit{W. R.}, P. C., 102.

According to Hindu law, neither registration of the act of adoption, nor any written evidence of that law having been completed, is essential to its validity. In no case should the rights of wives and daughters be transferred to strangers or to more remote relations, unless the fact of adoption by which this transfer is effected be proved by evidence free from all suspicion of fraud, and so consistent and probable as to give no occasion for doubt of its truth. Although the Hindu law does not require that adoptions should be acknowledged in writing, it is usual, when persons in the situation of a zemindar adopt sons, to acknowledge such adoption in writing, to give notice to the ruling power, and to invite the neighbouring zemindars and others to be present at such an adoption. \textit{Su}trogon \textit{Sub}puty v. \textit{Sab}itra \textit{Dye}, 5 \textit{W. R.}, P. C., 109.

(d) Rights of Adopted Son.

\textit{Held} (following the rule of the Privy Council in the case of Shumbhoo Chunder Chowdhry, dated 6th Feb., 1844) that, according to the authorities on Hindu law and the weight due to them, an adopted son succeeds, not only lineally, but collaterally, to the inheritance of his relations. \textit{Tara Mohun Bhutto} v. \textit{Kh}i\textit{ra}, 9 \textit{W. R.}, was all the rights of a son born. When, however, an adopted son rests his title on a confirmatory sunudd, he is bound to prove the sunudd. \textit{Maharaj}a\textit{Jugger}nath \textit{Sahaie} v. \textit{Mussamut Mukkun Koonwar}, 3 \textit{W. R.}, 24.

An adopted son has all the rights and privileges of a son born, and is also entitled to succeed to the stridhun of his mother in the absence of daughters, in like manner as a son born, whether there be a will in his favour or not.

A woman cannot execute a will regarding any property she inherits from her husband or father. But she can dispose of the stridhun by gift, will, or sale, except immovable property given to her by her husband.

A son adopted by one wife may succeed to a co-wife's stridhun. \textit{Teencowree Chatterjea} v. \textit{Din}nath \textit{Baner}jea, 3 \textit{W. R.}, 49.

Where a Hindu has adopted a son, he acquires the right of a son in the hereditary immovable property of the adoptive father; and he cannot be deprived of these rights by the adoptive father afterwards assuming to adopt a second son, and settling the hereditary property upon such second adopted son, coupled with declarations that the first son was disinherit. According to Hindu law, an adoption of a second son during the lifetime of a previously adopted son is inoperative.

A childless Hindu adopted A. as his son; afterwards he adopted B. as his son and made a will, dividing his property, ancestral as well as acquired, between A. and B. A. filed a petition denying the right of his adoptive father to adopt B., and protesting against the will; but afterwards he signed a consent to the will. \textit{Held} that as the father afterwards endeavoured to deprive A. of all his rights, as well those under the will as by the adoption, the consent did not bind A., since it was given on the basis of a family arrangement, from which the adoptive father afterwards departed.

\textit{Seemle,}—That if the consent were given by A. in ignorance of his right it would not be binding upon him. \textit{Sudanund Mohapattra} v. \textit{Bonomalte and others}, Marsh., 317.

According to Hindu law, an adopted son succeeds not only lineally, but also collaterally, to the inheritance of his adoptive father's relations. \textit{Sumbhoo}chunder \textit{Chowdhry} v. \textit{Naraini Debia}, 5 \textit{W. R.}, P. C., 100.

Where money derived from ancestral estates is invested, before the adoption of a son, in the purchase of immovable property, which continues to exist at the time of the adoption, the adopted son has equally a vested right in that property as he has in any other similar immovable property which the father had it in his power before the adoption to alienate, but which he did not alienate. \textit{Sudanund Mohapattra} v. \textit{Soorjoomonee Dayee and others}, 11 \textit{W. R.}, 436.

An adopted son represents his adoptive father, and is entitled to the share which his father would have obtained. When he comes to share with heirs other than the legitimately begotten sons of his adoptive father in the property of kinsman, he takes the same share that they would have. \textit{Tara Mohun Bhuttacharjee} v. \textit{Kripa Mayee Debia}, 9 \textit{W. R.}, 423.

Adoption is tantamount to the birth of a son to the adopter, and the property inherited from the adoption must be regarded as ancestral; during the lifetime of his father a son cannot claim to have a specific share declared and defined, but is only entitled to a decree declaring the property to be ancestral. Herra Singh v. Burzar Singh, 1

Agra Rep., A. C., 256.

Property vests in an adopted son immediately on his adoption, though he be a minor. A Hindu wishing to adopt cannot be compelled to act up to that permission. Sreemutty Deeno Moyee Dossee v. Doorga Pershad Mitter, 3 W. R., Mis., 6.

An adopted son is not actually precluded from questioning acts done by his mother during his minority or before his adoption; but a sale by a widow, with the consent of all legal heirs at the time existing, and ratified by decrees of Court, is binding on reversionary as well as on an adopted son adopted long after the sale. Rajkisto Roy v.
Kishore Mohun Mojonmadar, 3 W. R., 14.

A member of a Hindu family cannot, as such, inherit the property of one taken out of that family by adoption. The severance of an adopted son from his natural family is so complete that no mutual rights as to succession to property can arise between them. Rayan Krishnamachariyar v. Kuppannay-yanger, 1 Mad. Rep., 50.

The adopted son of one whose alleged adoption has been held invalid can make no claim through his adoptive father to be maintained by the alleged father. The severance of a person adopted remain unaffected when the adoption is invalid.
Quere,—Whether a right to maintenance can descend as an estate. Bwuni Sankara Pandit v.
Ambabdy Amaral, 1 Mad. Rep., 363.

A son adopted by the widow of a deceased Hindu (in respect of whose estate no probate, letters of administration, or certificate of heirship has been granted), is the legal representative of the deceased, and as such is entitled to maintain a suit, under Act XII of 1855, for the benefit of the persons, if any, entitled to compensation for the injury occasioned to them by the death of the deceased against those whose negligence caused that death.

The adopted son is not, however, entitled to have any portion of the damages awarded in the suit allotted to him as a child of the deceased.
Quere,—Whether a son, if adopted by deceased in his lifetime, would be entitled to damages under Hindu law. An adopted son cannot succeed

he remains a minor. Morun Moyee

An adopted son cannot adopt his own natural

A male cannot be adopted into a family governed by the law of Aleya Santana. Munda Chetti v.
Temuju Hensw, 1 Mad. Rep., 381.

(f) Who may or may not be Adopted.

In the Maratha country a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband, and without the consent of his kindred, adopt a son to him if the act is done by her in the proper bonâ-fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capri-ciously nor from a corrupt motive.

An elder Hindu widow has the power to adopt a son to her deceased husband without the consent of a younger widow. Rakhmbaddâ v. Rdâkhbaddâ, 5 Born.
Rep., A. C., 181.

A Hindu widow has no power to adopt a son to her deceased husband if she has been expressly prohibited from doing so by her husband in his lifetime.

Whether according to the Maratha school she can adopt without the authority of her husband given prior to his decease, quere. Where a Hindu childless husband, when at the point of death, positively refuses to adopt a son, and died without retracting that refusal, it was held that a subsequent adoption by his widow was null and void, as authority from her husband to adopt could not in such a case be implied (per Wesstropp, J.).

Dictum of the High Court of Madras, "that the opinion of Devanda Bhatta must have been that the assent of the husband was not "required, as the same was of the same scope, in the case of giving and receiving" (a son in adoption by the wife) questioned.

Where an adoption by a young Hindu widow is set up against her and to defeat her rights, the Court will expect clear evidence that at the time she adopted she was fully informed of those rights, and of the effect of the act of adoption upon them; and if it find that fraud or coajelry was practised upon the widow to induce her to adopt, or that there has been suppression or concealment of facts from her,
HINDU LAW—ADOPTION.

An adoption is not invalidated by the mere fact of the adoptive father being a minor, if he has attained the years of discretion. Such an adoption is not attended by any civil disability. Rajendra Narain Lahoree v. Saroda Soondaree Debia, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 548.

A Hindu widow, who has become unchaste, is living in concubinage and is in a state of pregnancy resulting from such concubinage, is incompetent to receive a son in adoption. Sayinpallatt Dasti v. Sudammini Dasti, 5 B. L. R., 362.

An adoption may be made either by a man in his lifetime, or by one of his wives after his death under a power conferred upon her for that purpose by her husband. Haradhn Mookerjee v. Mothooranath Mookerjee and others, 7 W. R., P. C., 71.

Under the Hindu law, current in Mithila, a Hindu widow has power to adopt a son in the kritrima form, with or without her husband's consent, but such son would not, by virtue of such adoption, lose his position in his own family, nor would he succeed to the property left by the husband of his adoptive mother, but would be considered heir, and entitled to succeed to her only. The Collector of Tirhoot, on behalf of the Court of Wards v. Hurppersaud Mohunt, 7 W. R., 500.

A widow succeeding as heir to her own son does not lose the right to exercise the power of adoption. Bykant Mony Roy v. Kristo Soondery Roy, 5 W. R., 392.

A widow in the Mithila province is capable of adopting in the kritrima form without her husband's consent. Boobe Singh and others v. Mussamut Buxnut Koeree and others, 8 W. R., 155.

A claim to adopt disallowed in the case of a Hindu woman, who, so long as any male member of her husband's family was alive, took no steps to carry out her husband's permission to adopt, but who, as soon as the last male member died, and the property devolved on her widow, tried to obtain possession by means of the alleged dormant permission to adopt. *Gobind Soonduree Debia v. (g) Validity of Adoption. 1/2112 1/3.

Uninterrupted and undisputed possession for a long period of time constitutes sufficient prima-facie evidence of title; but if this possession is admitted to be under an adoption it will avail nothing if the adoption fails. In the district of Bareilly the authority of the husband is essential to the validity of an adoption. Rajah Haumin Chull Singh v. Koomer Gunsheam Singh, 5 W. R., P. C., 69.

No cause of action to set aside illegal acts of an adopting mother arises to the adopted son, either from the date of his obtaining possession or from the date of the final decisions in any case brought for him or against his mother, or by or against him to prove or disprove the validity of his adoption. Kishen Mohun Koond v. Muddun Mohun Te-ware, 3 W. R., 32.

A formal adoption is not invalid because it has not received the sanction of the ruling power, and (where the ruling power does not interfere) an adoption without such sanction entitles the adopted son to succeed to property of the nature of a service watan. Radchandra Vasudev v. Nandji Zimaji, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C., 26.

An adoption amongst Sudras is not necessarily invalid because the person adopted is an only son and is married, and has been given in adoption by his mother after her husband's death and without his authority.

There is nothing in the books of authority amongst Hindus to show that a Vaishya who has undergone the ceremony of Vilhut Vida is incapable of adopting a son. If a custom to that effect exists it should be proved by satisfactory evidence. Mhalski v. Vithoba Khandappa Gulte, 7 Bom. Rep., Ap., XXVI.

The doctrine that the consent of all her husband's relatives is requisite to make an adoption by a Hindu widow valid is erroneous. Gopal Skirdhar Dikshit Patwardhan v. Naru Vinayak Dikshit Patwardhan and another, 7 Bom. Rep., Ap., XXIV.

According to the highest authorities in repute in the Maratha country the express sanction of the husband is indispensable to render valid an adoption made by the wife in his lifetime.

Comparative weight, as legal authorities on this side of India on the question of adoption, of the Mitakshara, Mayakha, Dattaka Mimansa, Dattaka Chandrika, Smriti Chandrika, Viramitrodaya, Dharmasindha, and the Nirmayasindha pointed out.

Dictum in the case of The Collector of Madura v. M. Ramalinga Sathaapati "that the opinion of Devanda Bhatta must have been that the assent of the husband stood upon precisely the same footing, and was of the same scope, in the cases of giving and receiving" (by the wife in adoption) questioned. Nandiyu Bdbti and Sundrabai v. Nand Manchar et al., 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 153.

The consent of the party adopted is essential to the validity of an adoption in the Kritrima form. Luchmun Lall v. Mohun Lall Bhoya Gayal, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 179.

A Hindu Sudra adopted the plaintiff, his brother's son, 1247 (1840), who upon the death of his adoptive father performed his sradh, and obtained possession of all his property as such adopted son. The adoption had not been questioned except in 1256 (1849), when the defendant sued the plaintiff, who was then still a minor, through his guardian, and obtained possession from the plaintiff of certain of the property of the deceased, on the ground that the adoption was invalid. The plaintiff now, within twelve years of such dispossession, sued to recover possession, stating that the decree in the former suit had been obtained by the defendant in collusion with the guardian. The defence was that the adoption was invalid, the proper ceremonies not having been performed. The Court refused to entertain such defence.

Per Bayley, J.—"Ceremonies which are necessary to be observed for a valid adoption among Hindus of the superior classes are not necessary in the case of an adoption by a sudra. In the case of adoption by a sudra of a brother's son, mere giving and taking may be sufficient to make the adoption valid. Nittanund Ghose v. Krishna Doyal Ghose, 7 B. L. R., 1, and 15 S. W. R., C. R., 300.

Where it was not intended by the widow that her adopted son should succeed her in the management and enjoyment of the property with her consent, she may resist the claim of the adopted son to eject her, on the ground of the invalidity of the adoption under the Hindu law, notwithstanding her previous treatment and recognition of the plaintiff as her adopted son and her acknowledgment having been received and acted upon by the authorities without question. In cases of adoption in the dattaka form, it must be proved that the widow had the authority of her husband to adopt, and that she made the adoption when the boy adopted was under six years of age, and with the prescribed ceremonies. Although, according to the Dattaka Mimansa, the ceremony of homa, or burnt-offering, is an essential part of adoption, it is not necessary that it should take place in the dwelling of the adopted. Thakoor Chunder Vagh v. Thakooranee Mahab Koonwar, 2 Agra Rep., 103.

The weight of authority is against the validity of the adoption of one upon whom the Upanayana has been already performed. In strictness, there is no authority upon the other side. Venkatesaiy v. Venkatacharlu and others, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 28.

A simultaneous adoption of two sons is invalid. In order to constitute a valid adoption there must be an actual bodily transfer and giving in adoption of the son by the natural to the adoptive parent.

Assuming that the testator, in using the words, 'According to our Shastras, the said two adopted sons will perform our obsequies, and shall become successors of our ancestors and self-acquired property,' intended to make a substantive gift to named individuals,—Held that the gift is inoperative if the individuals do not fulfil the character of adopted sons. Siddeswor Dossee v. Doorachurn Sett and others, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 22; S. C., Bourke's Rep., O. C., 360.

Objection that the respondent's adoption was not valid because made when the adopter was under pollution in consequence of the death of a relative. Upon a conflict of evidence as to the time of the relative's death, the Privy Council decided in favour of the respondent. The period of pollution according to Hindu law is sixteen days. Ramalinga Pillai v. Sudasiva Pillai, 1 W. R., P. C., 25.

Held that the adoption by a Hindu widow of an only son, if valid in every other respect, cannot be set aside by reason of the adopted being an only son of an advanced age. An adoption by a widow has a retrospective effect, and, relating back to the death of the deceased husband, entitles the adopted son to succeed to his estate. A document purporting to be a deed of adoption does not require to be stamped. Raje Vyanakrav Anandru v. Jayavanakravin Malharrao Ramadive, 4 Bom. p., A. C., 191.

Consanguinity does not invalidate where the parties involved do not belong to any of the three regenerate castes. An adoption de facto must be supposed to be a valid adoption until it is of a relative of the husband's must generally be legal if valid.

A transaction may raise a question. At all events, the widow is not entitled to sell. If her late husband's estate was purchased by the widow, she is not entitled to sell.

The transaction may be treated as a gift. The transaction may be treated as a legal gift. The subject of alienation rests with the widow's late husband, unless she gives an estate.

e's lifetime,
According to Indian law, adoption is a formal process not received in a casual manner. In the case of Bhaksar v. A, a formal adoption was not received, invalidating the adoption. The son was unable to succeed to the property of the adopter, Rama, and was taken into his mother's authority.

There is no formal adoption in Hindu law, and it is considered invalid because it is not received in a formal manner. An adoption must be proved by the ceremony of adoption being a son. Any such act of adoption must be proved by the ceremony of adoption being a son.

The doctrine of adoption in Hindu law is that the widow, Dikshit Pat, is not a relative of the Hindu widow. According to the Shiva law, the husband is the only relative of the widow. The son of the husband is also a relative, and is considered as such in the adoption ceremony.

Comparatively, in the Maratha law, the widow is not considered a relative of her husband. The adoption ceremony must be performed in the presence of the husband, and was of the occasion made by the husband and received in the ceremony of adoption being a son.

Dictum in 27. M. Ram: Devanda Bl and was of the husband and received in the ceremony of adoption being a son.

The consent of the husband and the validity of the adoption were considered. The husband was obtained possession, and the suit had been entertained.

set aside, and a party so adopted is entitled to object to other parties receiving a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860.

A conveyance by a Hindu widow, without necessity, of ancestral property, can only operate as a conveyance of her life-interest. The purchase of a kismut sold for Government revenue does not destroy the pre-existing rights of the holders of the tenure. Reversioners are as much entitled to have a sale of their share in such a kismut set aside as a sale of any other property by the widow without necessity. Tarinee Churn Banerjee v. Nund Coomar Banerjee, 1 W. R., 47.

A purchaser is not bound to prove the necessity of a sale. Ramkulpo Mundul v. Shokoharree Dossee, 4 W. R., 64.

Where a Hindu widow sells as guardian of her minor son and for his maintenance, the purchaser need only satisfy himself of the necessity of the sale, and is not bound to see to the application of the money. Radha Kishore Mookerjee and another v. Mirtoonjoy Gow and others, 7 W. R., 33.

A sale by a manager with necessity may be valid, although the vendor does not describe himself as manager. Jodunath Chuckerbutty and another v. James Tewdee and others, 11 W. R., 20.

A sale by a Hindu widow of her husband's estate, under legal necessity, cannot be set aside upon payment of the amount which it was necessary for the widow to raise, or in the proportion which that sum bears to the amount for which the estate was sold. Suggeram Begum v. Juddobuns Suhaye and others, 9 W. R., 284.

Where certain landed property in the possession of a Hindu widow was sold, on the alleged ground of necessity, and the execution of the deed of purchase was attested by the then next heir, it was held that the assent implied in such attestation was not conclusive in law as to the necessity for the sale, though the fact of persons most interested in contesting the sale being called in to execute the deed is the strongest possible proof of good faith on the part of the purchaser. Madhup Chunder Hajrah v. Gobind Chunder Banerjee, 9 W. R., 350.

In a suit by reversioners to set aside a deed of sale by a Hindu widow of part of her husband's estate, on the ground that the money which it was necessary to raise could have been raised by other means, it was held that if the widow sold a larger portion of the estate than was necessary to raise the amount which the law authorized her to raise, the sale would not be absolutely void as against the reversioners, who could only set it aside by paying the amount which the widow was entitled to raise with interest. Held also that if a widow elects to sell when it would be more beneficial to mortgage, the sale cannot be set aside as against the purchaser, if the widow and the purchaser are both acting honestly. Poot Chund Lall v. Rughoobuns Suhaye, 9 W. R., 107.

A recital in a deed of sale by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's property, setting forth that the alienation was necessary for the purpose of paying his debts, is not of itself evidence of such necessity; nor does the attestation of a relative import his concurrence. Such a transaction may become valid by the consent of the husband's kindred, but the kindred in such case must generally be understood to be all those who are likely to be interested in disputing the transaction. At all events there ought to be such a concurrence of the members of the family as suffices to raise a presumption that the transaction was a fair one, and justified by Hindu law. Rajjakti Debi v. Gobul Chandra Chowdhry, 3 B. L. R., P. C., 57; S. C., 12 W. R., P. C., 74.

Purchase from a Hindu widow is invalid, but the purchaser may remain in possession during the widow's lifetime, on proof of his purchase being preferable to an alleged gift made by the widow to the defendant. Chandernath Surma v. Romonath Surma, 1 W. R., 69.

A purchaser from a childless Hindu widow is bound to satisfy himself as to her right to sell. If he does not act with due care in the matter he cannot be said to have acted legally in good faith, although he may have fully believed, or taken for granted, that all was right. Ramdhone Bhuttacharjee v. Ishanee Dube, 2 W. R., 123.

The existence of a debt, the liquidation of which is provided by lease of ancestral property, is no justification for alienation of such property by a Hindu widow during her life-tenancy. Teluck Roy and others v. Phoolman Roy and others, 7 W. R., 450.

Held that a widow who is in possession of her husband's estate in lieu of her dower is not competent to alienate the whole estate permanently, but can only sell what belonged to her by right of inheritance. Mussamut Kummar-ool-nissa v. Mahomed Hussun, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 287.

A Hindu widow cannot endow an idol with her husband's property or a portion thereof, to the detriment of the reversioners. Kartick Chunder Chuckorbutty v. Gour Mohun Roy, 1 W. R., 48.

The burden of proving property (the subject of a gift by a Hindu widow) to be stridhon rests with those claiming under her. A deed of alienation by a childless Hindu widow of her late husband's property is not good against any one, unless made either with the consent of the immediate heirs, or under one of those exigencies which give a widow a power of sale. Sreemutty Chunder Monee Dossee v. Joykissen Sircar, 1 W. R., 107.

A conveyance by a Hindu widow, without proof of necessity to justify an alienation of ancestral property, can only operate as a conveyance of her life-interest. Tarinee Churn Banerjee v. Nund Coomar Banerjee, 1 W. R., 47.

A widow is not competent to alienate property which she has purchased with funds derived from her husband's estate after his death, and purchases with such funds would not belong to the widows otherwise than as the land from which the money arose belonged to them. Nihal Khan and others v. Hurr Churn Lall, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 219.

A conveyance by a Hindu widow, for other than assignable causes, of property descended to her from her husband, is not an act of waste destroying the widow's right and vesting the property in the reversioners, but is binding only during the widow's lifetime.

The reversioner can, during the wife's lifetime, sue to obtain a declaration that the conveyance is not binding beyond the lifetime of the widow, and also to prevent waste. Muthooram Sein v. Gour Chunder Ghosee, W. R., F. B., 165.

A Hindu widow, entitled to a life-estate only, granted a putnee of the lands. Held, first, that this did not work a forfeiture entitling the reversioners to enter. Secondly (Steer, J., dissenting), that the reversioners were not entitled to have the putnee set aside. Thirdly, that the putnee, being a party to the suit, was entitled to appear against the part of it which set aside his putnee. Loll Lomder Doss v. Hurrykissen Doss, 2 Mad. Rep., 393.

A sale by a Hindu widow of land inherited by her from her husband is valid only when made either with the consent of the immediate heirs or under one of those exigencies which give a widow a power of sale. Sreemuty Chunder Monee Dossae v. Joykissen Sircar, 1 W. R., 107.

A deed of alienation by a childless Hindu widow is only valid when made with either the consent of the immediate heirs or under one of those exigencies which give a widow a power of sale. Sreemuty Chunder Monee Dossae v. Joykissen Sircar, 1 W. R., 107.

A sale by a Hindu widow of land inherited by her from her husband is valid only when made either with the consent of the immediate heirs or under one of those exigencies which give a widow a power of sale. Sreemuty Chunder Monee Dossae v. Joykissen Sircar, 1 W. R., 107.

A mere declaration of necessity is not enough to justify a purchase from a Hindu widow. Gungoobind Bose v. Sreemockey Dunnee, 1 W. R., 60.

When the legal necessity for a sale by a Hindu widow is questioned, its existence must be shown by the party standing on the conveyance. Bisse Nath Roy v. Lall Bahadoor Singh, 1 W. R., 247.

In the case of an alienation by a Hindu widow, the mere fact that a sale isthalor is proved to have been issued about the time of the transfer, is not evidence of necessity. Nund Koomar Muntal and others v. Gayetra Dosset and others, 6 W. R., 323.

The purchaser from a Hindu widow who is still living is entitled to possession of the property sold, whether there was necessity for the sale or not. Bogooa Tta v. Lall Doss, 6 W. R., 36.

Where a party does not sue as an heir of a Hindu widow or her husband to set aside a sale by her on the ground of its illegality under the Hindu law, but sues as a decree-holder to have the same set aside as fraudulent, he cannot raise the question of necessity. Kishen Bullub Mahatab v. Kughonnder Thaboor and others, 6 W. R., 905.

A widow has no power to dispose by will of immoveable property inherited by her from her husband. Held that the word "inherited" used in the Mitack-shara in regard to a woman's stridhan does not include immoveable property so as to make it her peculium, but refers only to personal property over which alone she has absolute dominion. Gubur-dhun Nath v. Onoog Roy, 3 W. R., 105.

A childless widow Rama has no power to alienate her deceased husband's property as against his collateral heir by a wasseebinam, a deed of gift. Keerut Singh v. Koolahul Singh, 5 W. R., P. C., 131.

There is no rule of Hindu law which compels a widow alienating any portion of her late husband's property to have recourse to a mortgage, instead of to a sale, to raise funds for her maintenance. The question whether she has exceeded her powers or not depends upon the necessities of the case. Nabakunnar Haldar v. Bhabasundari Dassae, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 375.

A Hindu widow, while in possession granted a putnee lease of property which was afterwards sold and purchased by B.

Held that if there was no legal necessity to justify the alienation, the putneeacquired no more than the life-interest of the widow, but if there was, then B.'s purchase was subject to the putnee granted by the widow as a valid alienation of prior date. Bisonath Chunder v. Radha Kristo Mundle, 1 W. R., 554.

The widow of an undivided Hindu has no right to sell his property for payment of his debts, even though it be self-acquired. Namasiyovoy Chetti v. Sivagami and others, 1 Mad. Rep., 374.

A sale by a widow of property derived from her husband, who is divided in interest from his own family, is valid for her life. Such a sale will not be set aside at the instance of a divided brother of the husband. Bhagvantamma v. Pamapana Yaud and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 393.

Held that a Hindu widow having a life-interest only in immoveable property inherited from her husband, has an independent power of sale over the same to the extent of such life-interest and further. Mayeram Bhairam v. Motiram Govindram, 2 Bom. Rep., 331.

A Hindu widow has power, with the consent of the reversionary heirs, to make a valid alienation, for religious purposes, of property, moveable or immoveable, left by her husband.

Where a Hindu widow dedicated property by deed to the worship of an idol, and the property was given to trustees in trust, after the death of the widow, to permit the male heirs of her late husband to receive the rents,—Held that such heirs were entitled to actual possession and to the rents of the estate, provided they devoted it according to the provisions of the deed to the worship of the idol.

Held (by Glover, J.) that where the family property was small there was no reasonable necessity for contracting a large loan to provide for the minor's investiture according to the Hindu religion. Dorkyar Roy v. Dulsingar Singh, 12 W. R., 367.

Held that a widow cannot under Hindu law dispose of immovable property given to her by her husband which has become a portion of her stridhan.

A childless Hindu widow who is the nearest heir of her deceased husband has, under the Mitackshara law, an absolute right over all the moveable property left by him, and can alienate it to any one she pleases. Douga Deyte v. Poorun Deyte, 5 W. R., 141.

A sale by a Hindu widow under necessity, where the vendee pays a fair price and acts bond fide, the mere fact of only two-thirds of the purchase-money being paid to creditors does not invalidate his conveyance, as he is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money. Ram Gopal Ghose v. Bullodeb Bose, W. R., 1864, 385.

A conditional sale is an alienation, the validity of which a reversioner to a Hindu widow is by Hindu law entitled to question. Odit Narain Singh v. Dhurm Makhooon, W. R., 1864, 265.

A Hindu widow takes with her husband's estate, the power of alienation, and conveyances made by her give a good title, liable only to the superior claim of such of her husband's heirs as may be alive at the time of her death.

A sale by a Hindu widow under necessity, made in conformity with the Hindu law, and with the consent of the immediate reversioner, during the widow's lifetime, cannot dispense with the necessity of taking such security. G. Rodgers v. Banda Sooderry Debs, 6 W. R., Mis., 22.

A party claiming immovable property by virtue of an alienation by a Hindu widow during her son's minority is bound, whether he be a plaintiff or a defendant, to prove that he made reasonable enquiry, and that he in good faith believed that such circumstances existed as would justify the widow in alienating her son's estate. Keshinath Sitaram Oze v. Dadi et al., 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 7.

The payment of a time-barred debt of her deceased husband is not a valid cause for the absolute alienation by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's immovable estate.

Alienation by a Hindu widow of property inherited from her deceased husband is valid for the period of her own life, though the conveyance may purport to convey a greater interest. Meilgirappá bin Salbáppá Teli v. Shíváppa bin Eráppa, 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 270.

The sádh of the widow's husband, the marriage of his daughter, the maintenance of his grandsons, and the payment of the husband's debts are admitted by Hindu law as legitimate grounds of necessity for alienations. Lalla Gunput Lall v. Mussamut Toorun Koonwar; Chunder Lall v. Lalla Gunput Lall, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 52.

A Hindu died in 1808, leaving five sons, and possessed of considerable property. In 1813 the four younger sons obtained a decree for partition against their elder brother, but themselves continued to live together as a joint Hindu family, and so did their widows after their death. After the death of the widow of one of the brothers, J. D., the widow of another brother brought her suit for partition; but subsequently, by the consent of all parties, the matters in dispute were referred to arbitration, and an award was made as follows: Selling their (the widows') respective ryoty land, bati, or house, they will pay the costs of their respective vakels; in that way the land, bati, or house that shall remain with the proceeds belonging to their respective shares, the raiment and food of C. D. (the widow of another brother) and J. D. will be supplied during their lives; they will be unable to make a gift, sale, &c.; should the proceeds of the land, bati, or house not be sufficient for their food and raiment, and for the purity of their respective husbands in a suitable manner, the jetta dharma, then showing good reason, regulation, conformably to the dharma shastra what is expedient as necessary, according to usage, informing the other shareholders, they shall be able to sell the ryoty land, bati, or house of their respective shares. This award, which directed a partition, according to the terms of a chinitnamah or written description of the land, which was executed by all the parties, was made a rule of Court on 26th July, 1858. J. D. took possession of her husband's share of the estate, some portion of which she alienated. In a suit brought by the reversionary heirs against J. D. and the purchasers of what she had sold, it was alleged that the alienations were without necessity and contrary to the award, and it was prayed that they might be declared void as against the reversionary heirs, and that J. D. might be restrained from further alienations. Held that the suit could be maintained in the lifetime of J. D.
As there was no waste proved, the prayer for an injunction to restrain further alienation was refused.

Semple,—In purchasing from a Hindu widow the purchaser is not bound to look to the appropriation of the money, nor is he affected by the fact that the alienation was made for a larger sum than the necessity of the case required. Kamikha Prasad Roy v. Srimati Jagadamba Dasi, 5 B. L. R., 508.

A step-son made over property to his step-mother for her support. Out of the produce she bought properties for her nephew in the name of other parties. Held, under the circumstances, that the purchased property, on her death, went to the nephew, and not to the step-son as heir of her husband.

Although the defendant, by his written statement, denied the fact of the purchases being with the widow’s money, and it was proved that they were made with her money,—Held that this did not remove from the plaintiff the burden of proving that the purchases were made benami for her. Raja Chundranath Roy v. Kumjai Musunard, 6 B. L. R., 303, and 1 S. W. R., P. C., 7.

A Hindu, R. C., died possessed of considerable property, and leaving five sons. One of them died, leaving a widow, B. She brought a suit to recover her husband’s share in R. C.’s estate, together with the profits thereof. The suit was conducted by G. R. A large amount became due to him for costs. To secure this B. executed a bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment. The suit failed. In order to obtain the means of bringing another suit, B., by deed dated 4th April, 1859, assigned her interest in the estate in the right of her husband, and all benefit to be derived from the suit to be instituted, to G., one half absolutely, the other in trust, to retain thereout what he might advance to her for maintenance and for the costs of suit, with interest at 12 per cent., and to pay her the residue. In November, 1859, G., by deed sub-assigned to H. S., in consideration that H. S. should undertake the management of the suit, retaining only five-sixteenths out of the eight-sixteenths assigned to him (G.) absolutely. On 19th August, 1861, G. obtained a decree in the Supreme Court declaring her entitled to the accumulations on her husband’s one-fifth share in the estate of his father, R. C., and to all profits made on such accumulations since her husband’s death. In September, 1861, G. R. caused judgment to be entered on R. C.’s property at the date of his death, and the sheriff seized and was about to sell B.’s interest in the estate of her husband. Thereupon B., being entirely without means, F. S., brother of H. S., paid off G. R., and in consideration thereof took an assignment by deed, dated 19th December, 1861, in the name of one J. S. from B., of five-eighths of the half-share reserved to her by the deed of 4th April, 1859, but subject to the assignment by that deed to G. On 20th December, 1869, Rs. 84,685 were paid into Court as B.’s husband’s share of the accumulations on R. C.’s property at the date of his death, and Rs. 1,55,255 as the profits made thereon since her husband’s death. P. S. now sued for a declaration that the deed of 18th December, 1861, was binding upon B. and the reversionary heirs, and for an order that the precise amount due to him be ascertained and paid to him out of the moneys paid into Court. At the trial he abandoned his claim against the Rs. 84,685, on the ground that he could not prove legal necessity on the part of B. when she executed the assignment. Held the deed could be supported only so far as it charged the profits made since R. C.’s death with the repayment of the Rs. 12,500 advanced, with interest at 12 per cent. P. S. was entitled to have that amount paid out of the Rs. 1,55,255 in Court.

A Hindu widow is entitled to the accumulations of income from her husband’s estate. Pannalal Seal v. Srimati Bamasundari Dasi, 6 B. L. R., 732.

A Hindu widow cannot alienate moveable or immoveable properties acquired by her out of the funds derived from the income of her husband’s estate. Such properties descend to the heirs of the husband and not of the widow. Where, however, a widow held under a deed which conveyed the property to her to enjoy for her lifetime, and to incur all needful expenses, she was entitled to invest sums out of the income for the benefit of her daughter and granddaughter in the purchase of immoveable property for their maintenance. Chowry Bhola Nath Thakoor v. Mussamut Bhagabati Deyi; Must. Bhagabati Deyi v. Chowry Bhola Nath Thakoor, 7 B. L. R., 93; and 1 S. W. R., P. C., 63.

A, a Hindu widow, obtained a loan of a sum of money by mortgage of a certain parcel of property belonging to her husband. The mortgagee obtained a decree, and in execution thereof caused the property to be sold. In a suit by A.’s daughter’s son, the next reversionary heir, for a declaration that the sale was invalid as against him, the lower Appellate Court held that there was no cause of action.

Held, in special appeal, that the existence of a cause of action depended upon whether the widow incurred the debt under legal necessity, and the case was remanded for trial of that question. Bistabhari Sahay v. Lala Brij Nath Prusen, 7 B. L. R., 213; and 16 S. W. R., C. R., 49.

A compromise by which a Hindu widow gives up all her rights in her husband’s estate, receiving only a life-interest in a part of it, cannot be regarded as an alienation. A Hindu widow is not hindering against the reversioners. Mussamut Indro Koor v. Shaik Abdool Burkut, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 146.

Hindu law does not regard “pious purposes” as the only “necessary purposes” which justify alienation of inherited property by Hindu ladies. Self-maintenance, discharge of just debts, protection of or preservation of the estate, may be regarded as such necessary purposes also. Soorjoo Pershad v. Rajah Krishan Pershad Bahadur Sahib, 1 N. W. R., Par, 1, p. 49.

5.—Alienation of Ancestral Property.

The power of a son under Hindu law to prevent alienation of ancestral property by his father extends to acts of waste, and not to alienation for the payment of joint family debts and for the maintenance of the family. Bisambhur Naik v. Sudasheeb Mohapatra, 1 W. R., 96.

Under the Mitakshara law a son is entitled to recover from a purchaser from his father ancestral property improperly sold by the father, and in the absence of proof of circumstances which would give the purchaser an equitable right to compel a refund from the son, the latter would be entitled to recover without refunding any part of the purchase-money.

But if it is proved that the son got the benefit of his share of the purchase-money the son must refund his share of the purchase-money before he can recover his share of the property sold; and where the purchase-money has been applied to pay off the encumbrance on the estate, the right of the son to recover will be subject to that of the purchaser to stand in the place of the encumbrancer.

The onus in such cases to prove the application of the purchase-money lies on the purchaser. Modhoo Dyal Singh v. Golbur Singh and others, 9 W. R., 511.

Where ancestral property is sold by the father, the son is entitled to sue for cancelment of such sale, as the decree should not be that the property is ancestral and will pass to the father's heirs on his death, but a decree cancelling the sale so far as it obstructs him in asserting his right and in effect declaring the sale to be invalid, without interfering with actual possession, that may have been obtained by purchaser. Baboo Ram and others v. Gajadhar Singh and others, 1 Agra Rep., F. B., 86.

In a suit brought by a Hindu son for himself and on behalf of three infant brothers to set aside a sale of certain ancestral lands which had been made by his father without his concurrence,—Held that the onus of proving that the payment of the debts, on account of which the property was sold, was not a common family necessity, was properly laid by the District Judge upon the plaintiff. Babji Sekoji v. Ramshek Pandushet, 2 Bom. Rep., 23.

In a suit by the sons and grandson of one N. to set aside a sale by N. of a part of the ancestral estate to S., whose right and interests in the estate were purchased at auction by the defendant N. L., it was held that the consent of the elder brother would not make the transfer valid, inasmuch as by the Mitackshara law the consent of all the heirs, was necessary to prove the application of the purchase-money. Purmeshur Ojha v. Mussumunt Gooldee and others, 11 W. R., 446.

Held that a nephew is not competent by Hindu law to object to any alienation of ancestral property directly or indirectly made by his uncle. Gunga Deen Rawut v. Modhoo Sudun and others, 3 Agra Rep., A C., 4.

According to the Mithila law, a sale made by an adult member of a joint Hindu family, without the consent of all the heirs, is void if it is made without legal necessity, and not for the benefit of the minors. Sheo Pershad Jha v. Gunga Ram Jha, 5 W. R., 221.

According to the Mitakshara law, a conveyance or transfer of joint property by one member of a family is illegal without the consent of the other members.

By the same law widows have no part in their husband's joint estate, and the mere fact of the husband having treated a property as his own so far as to mortgage it during his lifetime, is no sufficient reason for the conclusion that the property was his separate property, and as such descended to his widows. Babji Sekoji v. Gunga Ram Jha, 5 W. R., 221.

By the same law an estate cannot be burdened with the debts of one of its joint owners after that person's decease. Lewis Cosserat v. Sudaburt Pershad Sahoo, 3 W. R., 210.

A son may sue to obtain a declaration that sales by his father, without his consent, are as against him void and inoperative to pass or to affect any rights possessed by him in the property, and also that property still in his father's hands is ancestral, and cannot be alienated, except under circumstances recognized by the Mitakshara law as justifying alienation and with the consent of those whose consent is by that law requisite. Kauth Narain Singh v. Prem Lal Paurey, 3 W. R., 102.

A member of an undivided Hindu family has a right to mortgage his own share of the family estate, and, if he be acting as representative and manager of the undivided family, to mortgage the interests of the other members of the family therein on any common family necessity, or for the common benefit and use of the undivided family. Goondoo Mahadeo v. Rambhut Bin Baboo Bhut, 1 Bom. Rep., 39.

A Hindu father has no power to settle ancestral property by conveyance in his lifetime, or by a will to take effect after his death, without the consent of all his sons living at the time. Where such a settlement is not assented to by the sons living at the time, and another son is afterwards born, no subsequent assent would be binding on the latter. Hurro Door Narain Singh v. Beer Narain Singh and others, 11 W. R., 480.

A sale by a father is valid by Hindu law to the extent of his own share of the undivided estate. There is no distinction according to the Madras school between a father and other co-parceners. Palani velappoo Kaundan v. Mannuru Naikan and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 416.

In the absence of authority in the eldest brother from his brothers to sell their rights, the sale by the eldest brother is not the act of all the brothers. Caees Oshad Khush v. Bindeo Basheene Dossee, 7 W. R., 298.

An alienation made by a Hindu with the consent of his son cannot, under the Mitakshara, be questioned by the grandson. Buraik Chutteo Singh and another v. Grehkaree Singh and others, 9 W. R., 337.

A mortgagee acquiring by operation of law the possession of an estate mortgaged by a Hindu father, without the son's consent, is bound to enquire
The fact of his being an outcast would not prevent him from exercising his right over the property to self-acquired property under the Mitakshara law, and therefore, if the son seeks the aid of the Court to set aside the purchase-money, unless he can show that no part of the price received by the father became a part of the assets of the joint family; and therefore, if the son seeks the aid of the Court to set aside the purchase, he must do equity and offer to repay the purchase-money, unless he can show that no part of such purchase-money or the produce of it has ever come to his hands.

There is a distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property under the Mitakshara law, with regard to the right of a father to dispose of it. The fact of his being an outcast would not prevent him from exercising his rights over the property to the same extent as he might otherwise have done.

Under the Mitakshara law, according to which the father and son are joint owners of the ancestral estate, the son's power to prevent alienations by the father extends to acts of waste, and not to alienations for the payment of joint family debts, and for the maintenance of the family.

A sale of property may be valid according to the law of the country, but the same rule strictly applies to the relation of the head of the family, and his descendants holding vested rights in his estate, in regard to alienations by the head of the family to which the descendants did not expressly consent.

Possession is not necessarily essential by Hindu law to give validity to a transfer by sale of immovable property. Possession, whether actual or constructive, is essential to the transfer of immovable property in Hindu law, although not accompanied by actual

A sale by a father is valid by Hindu law to the extent of his own share of the undivided estate. There is no distinction according to the Madras school between a father and other co-parceners. Palanivelappaa Kaundan v. Mannaur Naikan, 2 Mad. Rep., 416.

According to the Mitakshara law, a son acquires by birth a right in ancestral property, and has a right during his father's lifetime to compel a partition of his property. The father cannot, without the consent of the son, alienate such property, except for sufficient cause; and the son may not only prohibit the father from so doing, but may sue to set aside the alienation if made. The cause of action to the son accrues when possession is taken by the purchaser. A new cause of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a younger brother, either to the elder brother alone, or to him and his brother jointly.

Held by the majority of the Court (dissentient E. Jackson, J.) that when (notwithstanding a separation in food and residence) no formal partition of the family estate has taken place, the family must be considered joint and undivided; and that, in such a case, a widow cannot succeed to, or retain possession of, her husband's share as against his surviving brothers, but is only entitled to maintenance. Badamoor Koer v. Wasser Singh, 5 W. R., 78.

According to the Mitakshara law, a son has an equal right with his father in ancestral property. He can compel the father to divide the property during his lifetime, and any alienation by the father made after the birth of the son, without the consent of the son, unless for a purpose justified by the Hindu law as a legal necessity, will not bind the son. If the father, during the minority of the son, alienated any property in fraud of his creditors, such fraud would not bind the son, who was neither a party nor was privy to such fraud. Bier Kishore Saha Singh and others v. Huir Bullub Narain Singh and others, 7 W. R., 502.

Assuming that an alienation by a father, who at the time of such alienation was a member of a Hindu family living in commensality, may be questioned by a son, it will have to be seen whether the alienation was made for purposes which justified it. Noor Ahmed v. Lulla Pershad, 2 N. W. R., 189.

A brother acting as manager of the family property and for the benefit of the minors, although he has not obtained a certificate of guardianship under Act XL of 1858, may make a temporary alienation of the family property for necessary purposes and for the benefit of the minors. Lalita Seetul Pershad v. Chand Khan, 2 N. W. R., 428.

Mere decree of decum will not establish the propriety and necessity of a sale of ancestral property. There should be evidence of the nature of the debts on which such decrees originated. Reotee Singh v. Ramjee, 2 N. W. R., 50.

The sale of joint property governed by the Mitakshara law, in execution of a decree made on a debt which was not a necessity, is not valid and cannot be upheld, even though the proceeds are used to satisfy another decree on a bond by which money was borrowed on necessity. The parties suing for annulment of such invalid execution sale are bound to pay the auction-purchasers so much of the debt as would have been a burden on the estate. Bhoyo Pershad v. Basist Narain Panday, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 31.

Where property in which two members of a Hindu family are jointly interested is sold in order to raise money for the payment of a debt jointly contracted by both, the son of one of them cannot sue to recover his own, or his own and his father's share, in the absence of the other. In such a suit, if it is alleged that the father is connected with the institution of the suit with a view to defraud creditors, an important issue is raised which should be tried and decided. Sheo Churn Narain Singh v. Chukurn Pershad Narsing Singh, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 436.

On the death of R. S. his eldest son, R. K., undertook the management of the family property, plaintiff (a grandson of the deceased through his third son) being then an infant. Not long after R. K. purchased some land, which he subsequently sold to H. D. and H. S. D., who were now represented by the defendants, H. S. and L. N. D. In the present suit plaintiff alleges that the property had been purchased by R. K. with money belonging to the joint funds of the family. The first Court found for plaintiff, and adjudged him one-fourth share of the property in suit. From that decree H. S. and L. N. D. did not appeal, but R. R. did appeal. The Judge, assuming the lower Court's finding to be correct, held that as plaintiff, who was of age at the time, did not object to the sale, he could not recover possession of property sold by R. K. as the recognized agent and manager.

Held that R. K. could not found any right upon the presumption of plaintiff's consent, however such presumption might have avoided the other defendants, purchasers from R. K., who had not appealed. Gopal Chunder Lahoory v. Roy Kishore Lahoory, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 467.

Quaere,—Where it has been found that, as to a certain portion of the consideration money of a deed of sale of joint ancestral property, there is a legal necessity, is it a correct principle to uphold the deed as to that portion of the land which bears the same proportion to the whole quantity conveyed as the money borrowed for the discharge of the legal necessity bore to the whole amount of the consideration money? Rajaram Tewari v. Lachman Prasad, 4 B. L. R., A. C., 118, and 12 S. W. R., C. R., 478.

A., a Hindu, subject to the Mitakshara law, sold his right and interest in the undivided ancestral estate of his family without the consent of his co-sharers, and not for the benefit of the estate, but in order to pay off a personal debt. The sale was by auction to an innocent purchaser for value. Held that, in a suit brought within twelve years from the date on which the purchaser obtained possession, the sons and grandsons of A., deceased, were entitled to recover possession, without making any refund of the purchase money. Nalthee Lal Choudry v. Chadi Sahi, 4 B. L. R., A. C., 15, and 12 S. W. R., C. R., 446.

A member of an undivided Hindu family living under the Mitakshara law, in his father's lifetime brought a suit for a declaration of his future right to a one-sixth share in a portion of the immoveable property of the family, and to set aside an alienation.
HINDU LAW—ALIENATIONS, VALIDITY OF.

A member of a Hindu family may mortgage his undivided share of the joint property without the consent of his co-sharers, in order to raise money to pay debts or to meet the benefit of the family e.g., to pay debts or liquidate demands under legal necessity. Juggernath Khootia v. Dooobo Misser, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 80.

According to Sadabert Prasad Saha v. Foolbash Koer, a sale of undivided ancestral property by a father without any legal necessity and without the consent of all the co-sharers is, under the Mitakshara law, invalid. It is not valid even as regards the father's share. A son going to set aside such an alienation is, according to that case, entitled to a declaration that the alienation is void altogether.

The son suing in the father's lifetime on behalf of the family may be entitled to a decree for possession. Upon what terms that decree should be made will, according to the decision in Modhoo Dyal Singh v. Golbur Singh, depend on the equity which the purchaser may have to a refund of the purchase money, or to be placed in the position of an encumbrancer as against the joint family in the particular case. Hunuman Dutt Roy and another v. Baboo Kishen Kishoo Narayan Singh, 8 B. L. R., 358; 15 S. W. R., F. B., 6.

To justify an alienation of ancestral property, a legal necessity for the sale must be strictly proved to have existed, and such necessity cannot be inferred from hereditary custom and general character of the alienor. Mittrajit Singh and others v. Raghunath Singh and others, 8 B. L. R., Ap., 5.

A., a Hindu, sued B., the widow of C., claiming to have acquired under it a title to the property, that it was to be retained by B. for life, and after her death to be divided according to specified shares between A. and the other claimants. After B.'s death A. obtained possession of his share under the deed of compromise. A. alienated the property, and during his lifetime his sons sued to set aside the alienation on the ground that it was not an ancestral property, held that the transfer was not the capacity to alienate or charge the share of his minor co-parcer in immovable ancestral property except for the purpose of providing for some family need or the performance of an indispensable religious duty, or except the alienation or charge be for the benefit of the joint estate; and every case in which the rule is applicable, the onus of showing either by direct or presumptive proof a prima facie case in support of the existence of the condition necessary to give the legal capacity to make the disputed disposition, lies upon the party claiming to have acquired under it a title to the minor's share of the property. Upon the question of what is the amount of proof which the law renders necessary to discharge that burden of proof —held that where the dispute as to the validity of a sale or mortgage of family property is with the person to whom it was made, and the pecuniary consideration for it has not been advanced for the
The purpose of discharging an antecedent charge on the property or an old debt incurred by an ancestor; the case of the vendee or mortgagee, as regards the existence of a family need or sufficient beneficial purpose requiring the advance of the consideration money, must be established by positive proof. But that between a bond-fide sale or mortgage for an advance made to pay off a pre-existing mortgage claim or an unsecured debt of an ancestor, and one not made for that purpose, there was this distinction.

It is not incorrect to accept the rates paid by cultivators of low caste, with rights of occupancy for lands of the same description and with similar advantages as a basis for calculating the rates to be paid in future by a cultivator of high caste, but it is necessary to consider and allow for the difference of castes. Kunuk Singh and others v. Gholaam Jeeleanee, 2 Agra Rep., 329.

According to the family custom the sons of a Rajah of Keonghur, by wives of a lower caste than the Rajah, rank after the sons by wives of the same caste as the Rajah. Ranee Bistaopra Patnadea v. Basoodab Dal Bewaste Patnaik, 2 W. R., 232.

The general Hindu law being against a marriage between persons of distinct castes (e.g., Domes and Harees), local custom can alone sanction it. Mela Ram Nundal v. Thanooram Bamun, 9 W. R., 552.

A suit will lie for restoration to caste, and for damages and compensation for cost of restoration to caste. When the defendant denies that he made any accusation, and it is proved that he did make one, and that it alone led to the excommunication of the plaintiff, the defendant should be allowed an opportunity of proving that the accusation was not false, before a decree for damages is passed against him. Gopal Gourain v. Gurain, 7 W. R., 299.

Exclusion from caste of a Hindu for an alleged intrigue does not involve deprivation of his civil rights to hold, deal with, and inherit his property. According to the family custom the sons of a Rajah of Keonghur, by wives of a lower caste than the Rajah, rank after the sons by wives of the same caste as the Rajah.

An estate which a mother has inherited from her son is not divested by reason of her subsequent renunciation of religion or exclusion from inheritance. Bhujphen Lall v. Gya Pershad, 2 N. W. R., 446.

An estate which a mother has inherited from her son is not divested by reason of her subsequent chastity. It is a general rule of Hindu law that when the descent of an estate has taken place before the cause of exclusion from caste has arisen, the estate is not divested by the owner becoming an outcast.

An estate which a mother has inherited from her son is not divested by reason of her subsequent unhappiness. There is no authority to show that it does not apply to a mother.

While the Courts have generally accepted the decisions of properly-constituted punchayets on questions of caste, they have accepted them subject to the qualification that the decision of the punchayet does not estop the Courts from enquiring into the civil rights of any member of the caste, and securing to him the enjoyment of such rights, if he be found not to be precluded from the enjoyment of them by the Shastras or the particular usages of his caste.

It would be extremely inconvenient to hold that by a deprivation of caste, which may be temporary, a member of a caste loses his marital rights, so as

7.—CASTE.

An Englishman lived with a Brahmin woman living apart from her husband, by whom he had two sons. Held that the sons are Hindus, and their rights are determined by the rights of the class of Hindus to which they belong.

Held also that they are to be regarded as Sudras, or as a class still lower, and that, in the absence of preferable heirs, they inherit the property of their mother and of one another. Mayna Bai v. Uttaram and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 196.

It would be extremely inconvenient to hold that by a deprivation of caste, which may be temporary, a member of a caste loses his marital rights, so as to confer on his wife the power of contracting a second marriage.

It is a general principle of Hindu law that the degradation of the husband from caste does not dissolve the marriage tie. Bisheeru v. Mutagholam, 2 N. W. R., 300.

The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendant certain fees alleged to be due to them, as mehtars of the caste, on the marriage of the daughter of the defendant.

The defendant denied that the plaintiffs were his mehtars. Held that the question between the parties was a caste question with which the Courts were precluded from interfering by Reg. 11 of 1827, Sec. 21. Murur Ddaya et al. v. Nagriya Ganeshchand, 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 17.

A Hindu by becoming a byragee does not divest himself of all title in his family estate, which on his death devolves on his heirs, and not on a kept mistress, although she may have performed his funeral rites on account of his being an outcast. Khooderam Chatterjee v. Rookh inne Bostobee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 197.

An instrument was executed by the defendant, a Hindu, to his wife, stipulating that the defendant and his wife should continue to enjoy certain immovable property jointly, with a right of survivorship, and containing a promise by the defendant to surrender the property to his wife if he married again.

Held that the instrument did not operate by way of gift, there being no change in the possession of the property, nor as a declaration of trust, and that it did not create a binding obligation which the law would enforce.

Quare.—Whether the Hindu law admits of the applicability of the principle on which Courts of Equity in England hold voluntary declarations of trusts to be binding against the declarant. Venkuchella Marjimarikan v. Thathumal, 4 Mad. Rep., 460.

8.—CONTRACTS.

The word “sontan” occurring in a deed of agreement between co-sharers, members of a Hindu family, was construed to mean issue generally and not male issue merely. Kristo Kishore Bhuttacharjee and others v. Seetamony Bhuttacharjee and others, 7 W. R., 320.

An agreement entered into by two brothers, who never were constituted by Hindu law members of an undivided family, provided for the mode in which self-acquired property, to a moiety of which they were each entitled, should be managed during their lives, for the right of survivorship, and for its descent upon the death of the survivor. One clause of the agreement, literally translated, was in these words: "To the married wives of both of us, if there is not male offspring, in the event of there being sons not born in wedlock, must divide into equal shares for their own benefit." Upon the construction of this clause, held that the estate was to be equally divided amongst the wives and the sons born in concubinage. Sri Gajapotee Horerekruston v. Sri Gajapotee Neelemony Patta, 2 Mad. Rep., 359.

According to Hindu law, not only is the beneficial interest in the subject-matter of the contract, but the contract itself assignable. The assignee therefore may sue in his or her own name. This doctrine is applicable to suits brought in the Madras Small Cause Courts. Venbakum Somayagee Yaneekee Ammal v. Mooneswamy Chetty, 4 Mad. Rep., 176.

A suit may be maintained against a surety, according to Hindu law, although the principal debtor has not been sued. Totakot Shangummi Menon v. Keeru Saigal Kuku Varid, 4 Mad. Rep., 190.

Quare.—Whether Hindu law admits of the principle in which Courts of Equity in England hold a voluntary declaration of trust to be binding against the declarant. Venkuchella Marjimarikan v. Thathumal, 4 Mad. Rep., 460.

According to mercantile usage amongst Hindus, where a hundi, drawn "payable to owner" (shah jogi) is paid at maturity by the drawee to the shah or holder of the hundi, and such hundi afterwards turns out to be forged, the shah, though a bond-fide holder for value, is bound to repay to the drawee the amount of such hundi with interest from the date of payment, provided that the drawee has been guilty of no laches in discovering the forgery and communicating the fact of such forgery to the shah.

By the Hindu as well as by the English law, a creditor in whose hands a pledge has accidentally perished is notwithstanding entitled to recover his debt in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. Vithobd Valub et al. v. Chot Ldi Tukdrain, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 116.

Though, by Hindu law, on a sale of land it is not absolutely necessary that the purchaser should be put in possession, it is requisite that the vendor should at the time of sale be in possession of the property sold. Girdhur Parjdram v. Daji Dulubhärám and Moti Dulabhrám, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 4.

It is very questionable in any case whether the effect of the execution of a bill of sale by a Hindu vendor is to pass an estate, irrespectively of the actual delivery of possession. Where the vendor sells an estate of which he is not in possession, in consideration of advances to enable him to sue for its recovery, it is not open to the purchaser, after failing to complete his part of the contract, to claim specific performance and delivery of the recovered estate on tendering the balance of the purchase-money.

It is the established practice of the Courts in India, in cases of contract, to require satisfactory proof that consideration has been actually received, according to the terms of the contract, and a contract under seal does not of itself, in India, import that there was a sufficient consideration for the agreement. A plaintiff, however, suing to set aside a security admittedly executed by himself, must make out a good prima-facie case before the defendants can be called on to prove consideration. A zemindar has, as such, a firmd-facé right to the gross collections from all the mouzahs within his zemindary. It is for parties setting up an intermediate tenure to prove their grant.

Defendant claimed to hold a mokurruree tenure under deeds executed by plaintiff, zemindar. The plaintiff denied the authenticity of the deeds, and sued to set them aside. The lower Courts dismissed his suit as barred by limitation, on the ground that plaintiff had, in a petition before the Collector, admitted that defendant was mokurrureedar of the tenure, and that this being so limitation ran against him from the date of the deeds. Held that the case should have been tried on the merits, as the petition was not a conclusive admission of the genuineness of the deeds, and it was not right to infer from it that plaintiff knew of their existence at the time of their professed date.

A thakbust award of boundary made in the Lower Provinces may be an award under Regulation IX of 1815, within the meaning of Act XIII of 1848. It would in any case be material evidence of possession.

The pendency of an appeal to England does not put the party who, subject to that appeal, is the owner of an estate, under a legal disability to bring a suit in that character against third parties.

In England the law gives to the purchaser of land a right to have a good title to it shown by the vendor. No such rule appears to exist in the Hindu law, and in contracts between Hindus for the purchase and sale of land in Bombay the intention of the parties must be ascertained from the terms of the agreement, without regard to any implication.

By Hindu law a purchaser may recover in an action for breach of contract to deliver goods, not only double the earnest-money, but also damages for the non-delivery.

Upon the conversion of a Hindu to Christianity, the Hindu law ceases to have any continuing obligatory force upon the convert. He may renounce the old law by which he was bound, as he has renounced the old religion, or, if he thinks fit, he may abide by the old law, notwithstanding he has renounced the old religion. The profession of Christianity releases the convert from the trammels of Hindu law, but it does not of necessity involve any change of the rights or relations of the convert in matters with which Christianity has no concern, such as his rights and interests in, and his powers over, property.

The convert, though not bound as to such matters, either by the Hindu law or by any positive law, may, by his course of conduct after his conviction, have shown by what law he intended to be governed as to these matters.
Held that there was evidence of a power of selection the actual observance of seniority, even in a considerable series of successions, could not of itself defeat a custom which established the right of succession.

Where family custom required the union of two things to constitute the legal heir, viz., seniority in age and nearness of kin, and the claimant has but one of these qualifications in himself, viz., seniority, he does not entitle himself to succeed. Where a custom is proved to exist, it supersedes the general law, which however still regulates all beyond the custom.

According to the Pachees Sawan, a brother of the Raja of Attaghur, one of the tributary meahds of Cuttack, has a preferential title over the Raja's son by a phoolbeba wife to succeed to the raj.

The effect of a devise of his estates by a raja would be to alter the course of succession, and therefore contrary to Section 3, Regulation XI of 1816. Nittanund Murdinaraj v. Sreekrurn Juggernath Bewartah Patnaik, 3 W. R., 116.

Custom, when it is ancient, invariable, and established by clear and positive proof, overrides the usual law of inheritance. Musamut Kistooara Koomaree v. Monohur Deo; The Government v. Monohur Deo, W. R., 1864, 39.

By the custom of a Hindu family, no distinction was made between the issue of a Sagyi marriage and a Lyahi marriage. Held that the issue of the son of a Sagyi wife first married was entitled to inherit the property of the grandfather, in priority to the issue of a son of a subsequent Lyahi wife.

On the accession of the British Government to the Deewany, Rajah Futtah Sahie, in 1767, having refused to acknowledge allegiance to, and having openly rebelled against, the Government, was expelled from his estate of Hosiapore. The Government retained the estate in its own possession until 1790, when, setting aside the sons of Futtah Sahie, it conferred the estate upon Chatterdhaaree, at that time living, the son of the eldest unmaried branch of the family. Two of the grandsons of Chatterdhaaree having sued to establish their right to a moiety of his property,—Held that the Hosiapore property was a raj, and that by the rule of the family it was to descend entire to a single heir; that the Government, by setting aside a particular branch of the family, did not, in intent or in fact, confiscate the property, and thereby extinguish the rights of every member of the family; that the family custom and the custom of the raj were not destroyed by the infringement of the custom by virtue of which Chatterdhaaree acquired the estate; and that he having acquired the estate subject to a particular custom, and having himself not having done effect to that custom, his heirs were bound by the same custom, to the exclusion of the ordinary law of Hindu inheritance.

Ram Gopal Singh v. Teluckdhaaree Sahie and others, W. R., F. B., 97.

The plaintiffs claimed to succeed to the Shoosung estate as sole proprietor, alleging a family custom according to which the property was a raj and indivisible, and descended to the eldest son or nearest male heir of the party in possession. Held that there was no proof of such custom; that if there had been it was waived by the sons of Raj Singh (the plaintiff's grandfather) on his death in 1822; that the documents submitted to the Court did not prohibit alienation; that at a period previous to the British rule alienation of two-sixteenths of the property took place, and was acquiesced in by the successors; that the property was during the Mahometan government a military jagheer, resumable at pleasure, and not a raj; and that the succession to it went not by right or family custom, but by the will of the sovereign power.

Promoda Debia v. Rajah Prankishen Singh, 2 W. R., 80.

Held that a custom of the Talapada Holi caste that a woman should be permitted to leave the husband to whom she has been first married, and to contract a second marriage (nátra) with another man in his lifetime and without his consent, was invalid, as being entirely opposed to the spirit of the Hindu law; and such marriage was "void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband," and therefore punishable as regards the woman under Section 494 of the Penal Code; and that the man with whom the woman so married having had sexual intercourse with her, and it being found that he did not honestly believe that she had become his wife, was guilty of adultery under Section 497. Reg. v. Karson Goja; Reg. v. Bai Kupa, 2 Bom. Rep., 124.

According to Hindu law, in order that a custom may have the force of law it must be shown to have existed from time immemorial.

Upon the authority of decided cases as well as the evidence of custom in the family, it was held that the raj or remandaree of Ramghur being an ancestral impartible estate, and the family an undivided family governed by the Mitakshara, the plaintiff as eldest male heir was entitled to succeed to the dignity and estates of the family in preference to the mother of the late infant rajah and widow of his father, the last actual rajah.

According to the principles of Hindu law, when regarded apart from any special custom prevailing in a particular district or family, where there are sons by different wives, priority of birth, and not marriage certainly as regards the sons by any wives after the first, must determine the succession of an impartible inheritance. Accordingly the son of a third wife born before the son of the second wife was held entitled to inherit.

Semblo.—No just analogy can be established between the status of the first wife and that of any subsequent wife, the title of the first wife to special rank and privileges resting upon grounds peculiar to her and which can have no application to others.

According to the same rule that usages modifying the ordinary law of succession which they should be ancient and invariable, and that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence.

11.—Dwelling House.

A Hindu died, leaving a widow and an adopted son, who continued, after his death, to reside in the same dwelling-house in which they had resided with the deceased during his lifetime, and which formed a portion of his estate. The son being an infant, the widow had the management of the house, and let a portion of it to tenants at a monthly rent. Subsequently the son sold the house, as his property by inheritance, to a stranger, who gave the widow and tenants a week's notice to quit.

Held that the son, even if he had attained his majority, could not evict the widow, or authorize a purchaser to do so, without providing some other suitable dwelling for her; nor in any case could the tenants be turned out without a month's notice.

It seems that the passage in Katyayana, 2 Colebrooke's Digest, p. 133, is a restriction, and not a moral precept only, and that the heir of the deceased has not such a right in the dwelling of the family that he can at once, of his own pleasure, turn out the females of the family, or sell it and give the purchaser a right to turn them out. Monograph v. Dinornath Bose, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 72; S. C., 12 W. R., O. C., 35.

In a suit for possession by the auction-purchaser of a judgment-debtor's share in a family residence, possession was ordered to be given to him so as not to annoy or insult the inmates of the house; and as the plaintiff could not use the family staircase without exposing the ladies of the family to annoyance, and was obliged to build a separate staircase, he was held entitled to compensation to the value of his share in the family staircase. Oodhoy Chunder Mullick and others v. Pitamber Pyne, 6 W. R., Mis., 75.

A person who, at a sale in the execution of a decree, has purchased the share of a member of a joint undivided Hindu family, and subsequently sued for and obtained a decree against other members of the family for possession of such share in property, consisting of the joint family dwelling-house and land, in execution of the decree, is entitled to be put into actual possession of a portion of the dwelling-house (dissentient, Kemp, J.). Koonwar Bijoy Keshub Ray Bahadoor v. Shama Sounderee Doss, 2 W. R., Mis., 30.

Suit by purchaser of a decree for the debtor's share in a family dwelling-house, with gardens and tanks. Held that, as the suit was for chambers and ground, however worthless the land might appear without the residence, or however inconvenient might be the intrusion of a stranger into the family dwelling-house, the plaintiff was entitled to an adjudication of his claim to the land. Buddun Chunder Maduck v. Chunder Coomar Shaha, 5 W. R., 218.

Partition of a dwelling-house may be claimed as of right by a Hindu. Hulodhur Moorkerjee v. Raynath Moorkerjee, Marsh., 35.

Where there is joint occupation of some portions of a joint family dwelling-house, and the separate occupation of other portions of the same property appears to be merely permissive, such separate occupation does not necessarily imply that the properties occupied are separate properties. Gour Lall Singh v. Mohesh Narain Ghose, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 484.

12.—EVIDENCE.

The mere fact of the proceeds of any land being used for the support of an idol may not be proof that those lands formed an endowment for the purpose; but where there is apparently good evidence going back for more than half a century that the land was given for the support of an idol, proof that from that time the proceeds had been so expended would be strong corroboration. Muddun Lall v. Sreemuty Konul Bibe, 8 W. R., 43.

Clear proof is necessary to support a gift, made orally by a person at the point of death, of all the donor's property to idols.

A member of a joint Hindu family, alleging separate acquisitions by himself and his father (the managers of the family property), is bound fully to prove his allegation; but the law does not impose upon him so high a degree of proof as to require him to trace the funds with which each purchase of his father and himself has been made from the time of their having been acquired in a given year to the time when they were paid to the seller of the property. Bippro Pershad Mytee v. Mussamut Kena Doyer, 3 W. R., 165.

When joint acquisition is alleged, the facts of the purchase having been made in the name of only one member of the family, of the registration of his name alone in the Collector's books, of his having carried on a law-suit singly with regard to the boundary of their lands, and of the refusal of the Judge to give the other members of the family a share of the costs decreed on that suit, are wholly insufficient proof of separate acquisition. Deela Singh v. Toofance Singh, 1 W. R., 397.

Thakbst papers are prima facie evidence against the proprietors of estates comprehended in them. Kalee Tara Debia v. Nittanund Shaha, 12 W. R., 90.

No transaction of Hindu law absolutely requires a writing.

Where a party who claimed to be heir-at-law to the estate of a deceased Hindu was opposed on the ground that he was disqualified from inheriting by leprosy, but volunteered to state that he had performed the penance required by the Shastras for the expiation of the disease, he was held to have admitted thereby that the leprosy was of that grievous nature which demanded expiation before he could succeed to the inheritance, and to lie under the onus of proving the fact that expiation had been performed. Bhoobuneshuree Pahea and others v. Gourjee Doss Turkapunshamun and others, 11 W. R., 535.

That a Hindu widow, entitled to her husband's share of the joint property, continues to live in the family and mes with them, is sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to show that she is receiving payments on account of her share. Gobind Chunder Bagche v. Kripamoyee Dabee, 11 W. R., 338.

In no case does Hindu law absolutely require writing. Mantina Rajajapa Raj v. Chekkara Venkaratjar, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 100, and Crimiva X X.
HINDU LAW—GIFT.

A verbal grant of land followed by possession is valid under the Hindu law. 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 135.

13.—Gift.

Plaintiff sued to enforce a gift to him of immovable property by a woman living under his guardianship as against her husband. Held that such taking of the woman’s property by her kinsman is wholly repugnant to Hindu law.

Quere,—Can a woman, without the consent of her husband, during coverture, absolutely alienate her own landed property? Duttuluure Rayapparay v. Malapude Rayalu, 2 Mad. Rep., 360.

By Hindu law a man may make a gift of any of his property binding as against himself. Even when a deed of gift is voidable, on the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake, it is a question for the discretion of the Court whether cancellation or delivery up ought to be ordered.

Where a Hindu made a gift to a person whom he said he has taken as his mansaputra,—Held that he could not set it aside, on the ground that he erred in supposing that the donee could perform the duties of a son.

A voluntary gift by a husband to his wife is not invalid against the husband’s creditors if at the time of the gift the husband was solvent, and the wife was in possession under the gift, especially if the plaintiff became a creditor of the husband long after the gift. Sheikh Enaet Ali v. Mussamut Ramprah Koowar, 1 W. R., 21.

In establishing the validity of a deed of gift taken from a woman stricken with a mortal disease, and in expectation of death, proof at least of equal strictness, as is required to prove a testamentary disposition, must be given, and the proof to support such a transaction ought to be sufficient to establish that she knew what she was about, and intended to make such disposition of her property. Mussamut Thakoor Dayhee v. Rai Balack Ram and others, 10 W. R., P. C., 3.

Appeal dismissed, the appellant being unable to prove from Hindu law that a person becoming a leper was incapable of making a gift of property to which he had previously succeeded. Shamachurn Audicarem Byragee v. Roop Dass Byragee and others, 6 W. R., 68.

The absence of seisin is no objection to the validity of a gift by a Hindu.

Where a cadet member of the Doomraon family gave, for the support of his illegitimate sons, certain properties which he purchased out of the savings and profits of his appanage, even admitting that he was in possession of such properties during his lifetime, his possession would be that of a trustee for his illegitimate sons. Maharajah Moheshur Buksh Singh Bahadoor v. Mussamut Gunooor Koowar, 6 W. R., 245.

Held that a gift of land is not complete, by Hindu law, without possession or receipt of rent by the donee. Harjivan Anandram v. Naran Haribhai, 4 Bom. Rep., A. C., 31.

By an ikkar executed by A., a Hindu widow, in favour of B., a son of another wife of her deceased husband, after reciting that her husband had given her a talook as stridhom, but that he had not empowered her to adopt a son, it was thus directed: "You are the son of my co-wife; you are still living; the funeral cake will be preserved to us by you; and on my death the talook is your rightful property. After my death, out of the whole profits for my two daughters, separating by demarcation ryots with jummas to the extent of Rs. 200, whatever shall remain you shall gain. Held that the vesting of the gift was contingent upon B. surviving A.; and that upon the death of B. during the lifetime of A., the gift lapsed. Kishla Soondery Deebeh v. Ramesh Kislattee, Marsh, 367.

To make a gift of land complete under the Hindu law, there must be either possession or receipt of rent by the donee. The receipt of rent may be by an agent, and, if the transaction is bona-fide, it is immaterial that such agent has before the gift received the rent for the donor. Bank of Hindustan, China, and Japan v. Premchand Raichaud; Amedbhai Hubibkhal v. Premchand Kooychand, 5 Bom. Rep., O. C., 83.

A., a Hindu living under the Mitakshara law, executed a petition to the Collector, stating that he was in possession of all his ancestral property; that he had only one son, that he had no wife; that his son had left a widow, B., and two daughters, and no other children or heirs; the petitioner went on to state, "I declare her (B.) my heir; and as, with the exception of the said B., I have no other heir or malik, nor can there be any, of which circumstances I have already preferred information in my petition of 16th April, 1830, and life is uncertain, I consequently request that the name of B., the widow of my late son, be registered in the Collectory mutation book as proprietor and maulguzar in the place of my name with regard to the property," &c.

"Further, as of B., there are two daughters who, after marriage, by the blessing of Providence, may be blessed with children; they and their children, therefore, are and will be heirs and malikis. But as long as I live I shall keep the management of my own affairs in my own hands, and look after all the transactions of dhat, &c., myself, as heretofore." B. sold and conveyed parcels of the property. In a suit by her daughter’s son against the purchasers for a declaration of his reversionary right to the property sold,—Held that, under the terms of the petition, there was an absolute gift to B. That as the gift was not fettered by any restrictions, the alienation by B. was good and valid. Chattar Lal Singh v. Shewukram, 5 B. L. R., 123; 13 S. W. R., C. R., 285.

A Hindu, executed a dan patro (deed of gift) of a talook in favour of his youngest wife, B., wherein he stated: "You are my youngest wife, and your two sons are minors, therefore for your charitable expenses (dan o khairath) and for the maintenance of your minor sons, I make a gift of the above talook to you. You from this day becoming possessor thereof, after deduction of the government revenue, with the balance of the profits will perform acts of charity (dan o khairath) and maintain the sons. For this purpose I execute this dan patro."
A. died, leaving C., a son by his first wife, two minor sons by B., and B., his widow. The minor sons of B. died unmarried and without issue. B. made a gift of the property to D., her daughter's son. In a suit by C. against B. and D. for a declaration of his reversionary right to the property after the death of B.,— Held that the gift to B. under the dan patro was absolute. An appellant in regular appeal may not at the hearing raise a contention of law expressly abandoned by him in the Court below, and not contained in the memorandum of appeal. Srimati Pabitra Dasi v. Damudar Jana, 7 B. L. R., 697.

The Hindu law makes no distinction in favour of gifts in contemplation of death, as respects the legal requisites to constitute a perfect disposition by gift. Those requisites are, a giving, either orally or by writing, with the intention to pass the property in the thing given, accompanied by its actual delivery and acceptance in the donor's lifetime.

When all these requisites have been fulfilled there is nothing in Hindu law to prevent effect being given to a gift in contemplation of death. N. Visalatkhmi Ammal v. N. Subbu Pillai and others, 6 Mad. Rep., 270.

Plaintiff sued to recover certain land in virtue of an alleged gift from her deceased husband. The parties were subject to the Marumakkattayam law. The facts were that the land being in the hands of tenants, a deed of gift with the counterpart lease was delivered by the donor to the plaintiff. It did not appear that there were any title-deeds belonging to the property. Held, reversing the decision of the principal Sadr Amin. that the rule of law applicable is that a gift is perfectly valid if such delivery is made as the nature of the object permits, and that this has been done in the present case. Wannathan Kandite Chiruthai v. Keyakadath Pydel Kyrup, 6 Mad. Rep., 194.

A voluntary transfer of property by way of gift, if made bona fide, and not with the intention of defrauding creditors, is valid as against creditors.

14.—INTEREST.

By Hindu law the amount recoverable at any one time for interest or arrears of interest on money lent cannot exceed the principal; but if the principal remained outstanding, and the interest be paid in smaller sums from time to time, there is no limit to the amount which may be thus received in respect of interest. The previous decision of the Sudder Court to the contrary overruled.

A signed account showing a balance up to date, and containing a promise to pay interest upon the consolidated balance, cannot be made use of in evidence to support a claim to interest on that balance, unless it be stamped; but it may be used as a samadusakt or simple admission of a balance due, although not stamped. Dhondo Jogoosath v. Narayen Ramchunder, 1 Bom. Rep., 47.

By the Hindu law, interest exceeding in amount the principal sum cannot be recovered at one time.

In a suit under the Bills of Exchange Act to recover Rs. 1,200 on a promissory note, the Court gave a decree for Rs. 700 only, that being shown to have been the full consideration received for the note.

There is nothing illegal in the true holder of a promissory note endorsing it to another person, with the express object of allowing him to sue upon it. Held, by Peacock, C. J., that the suit being between two Hindus must be decided by Hindu law.

By Hindu law a promissory note does not impart consideration, and therefore where it was proved that the defendant actually received only Rs. 700, that sum was all the plaintiff was allowed to recover.

Act XXVIII of 1855 did not repeal the Hindu laws as to the rate of interest. Such rate is governed by the strict rules of Hindu law, as originally laid down by Menu and other lawgivers. Ramloll Mookerjee v. Haran Chandra Dhur, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 130.

Regulation XXXIV of 1802 having been repealed, a claim in a suit between Hindus for an amount of interest exceeding the principal sum due is maintainable. V. Annaji Ram v. Raghubai, alias Sithubai, 6 Mad. Rep., 400.

Act XXVII of 1857 does not affect or supersede the rules of the Hindu law as to interest.

A promissory note, payable two months after date, given for money lent and interest in advance at the rate of 12½ per cent. per mensem, contained an agreement to continue to pay that rate of interest after the due date if the money was not then repaid. Held that the high rate of interest so agreed to be paid did not constitute a penalty against which the Courts would relieve. Hakma Mungi et al. v. Memun Ayab Haje et al., 7 Bom. Rep., O. J., 19.

The rule of Hindu law which declares that interest exceeding in amount the principal sum cannot be recovered at any one time is not applicable to mortgage transactions. Narsiyan bin Bhiyaji et al. v. Gangadrain bin Krishnaji, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., 157.

The rule of Hindu law that interest beyond the amount of the principal sum cannot be recovered at any one time applies as well to mortgage transactions as to other loans.

But where the mortgagee enters into possession of the mortgaged property, and in taking the accounts between the mortgagor and mortgagee credit is given to the latter for the rents and profits received by him as against the principal and interest due, the above rule cannot equitably be applied. Nathubai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand, 5 Bom. Rep., A. C., P. 196.

15.—JOINT FAMILY. 18*

A debt incurred by the head of a Hindu family residing together under ordinary circumstances, presumed to be a family debt; but when one of the members is a minor, the creditor seeking to enforce his claim against the family property must show that the debt was contracted bona fide and for the

The fact of the members of two branches of a Hindu family being separate in food and worship is quite compatible with their never having been separate in estate.

A document of dividing separate house accommodation for the members of each of the two branches points rather to a division of enjoyment than to a division of ownership or estate.

The absence of attestation by caste-men to documents by which a Hindu affects to deal with his property as though he were separate in estate, is a circumstance which throws suspicion on the truth of an alleged separation, as the presence of such would be satisfactory evidence of a state of things generally believed to be true at the time.

Bequest of property in dharma to the caste. Chhabila Manchaud v. Fadadzowe and others, 3 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 87. A member of an undivided Hindu family invests the proceeds of the joint ancestral estate in the purchase of other estates, he does so for the benefit of the joint family. Without the consent of all the members, or a legal necessity, or a declaration and acts amounting to a division, he cannot alienate so as to bind even his own share. Mussamut Bona Koeree v. Boolee Singh and others, 8 W. R., 182.

Where, with small aid from paternal property, separate and distinct properties are acquired principally through the exertions of particular members of a joint Hindu family, such members are entitled to a double share upon separation. Sree Narain Berah v. Gooro Persaud Berah, 6 W. R., 219.

Illegitimate sons of a Christian father, by different Hindu women, although by agreement they may constitute themselves parencers in the enjoyment of their property after the manner of a joint Hindu family, are not a joint Hindu family according to Hindu law. On the death of each his lineal heirs representing their parent would, by the effect of the agreement, enter into that partnership. *Quere.—Whether the Hindu law gives a right of inheritance to collaterals also. In a partition suit instituted by one of the illegiti-

A family joint in mess is not necessarily joint in estate, nor is a partition by metes and bounds necessary before a division can take place. An agreement between members that the ownership is to be in certain defined shares takes away the character of joint enjoyment.

On the death without issue of one of several uterine brothers undivided in estate, the surviving brothers succeed equally to his share. Shib Narain Bose v. Ram Nidhee Bose and others, 9 W. R., 87.

Purchases made when a family is joint by individual members thereof are presumably made out of the common funds, and for the common benefit. And it is incumbent on any member of the family alleging that a purchase made whilst such family was joint was made out of his separate funds to establish his allegation by proof. Haiit Singh v. Dube Singh, 2 N. W. R., 308.

The debt of a member of an undivided Hindu family is not justified in paying his debt to the eldest member of the family unless such eldest member be also the manager of the undivided family. If there is no manager the debtor should obtain a release from all the members of the undivided family. Sangappa bin Chanbasappa v. Sahelabandee Kengedappa, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 141.

Where part of the family property is proved to be joint, and the members live in commensality, there is a very warrantable presumption, according to Hindu law, that the family is joint. Golam Mustafa Khan v. Sheto Sounduree Burmone, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 304.

The word "ijmala" expresses joint tenancy, even where commensality is not implied. Peere Monee Bibee v. Madhub Singh, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 93.

A managing member of a joint Hindu family is bound to render an account of his management to his co-sharers, and he is liable to a suit if he refuses to do so. And such suit will lie even if the parties suing were minors during the period for which the account is asked. Abhayandra Roy Chowdury v. Pyarimohan Ghno, 5 B. L. R., 347; 13 S. W. R., F. B., 75.

Every member of a joint family is not bound by an agreement made by the head of that family. The rent of a joint undivided tenure cannot be enhanced on the strength of an ekrar executed by one of the co-parcers. Hemayetoolah Chowdury v. Nil Kanth Mullick, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 139.

Where one brother of a joint undivided family transferred his interest in the joint property to the other brothers after a decree had been passed against him, although before attachment, Held that when a question arose in such a case the onus was on the brothers to whom the transfer was made to prove the bond-side character of the transaction. Brojo Lall Sundaray v. Bhobo Sounduree Debra Chowdrei, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 499.

Where one of the members of a joint undivided family purchases for the benefit of, and with funds belonging to, the family, he is entitled to such a share of the property covered by that purchase as is equal to his original share in the corpus of the estate, on the principle that the increment must follow the same rule as the corpus. Kalee Sunkur Bhadooree v. Eshan Chunder Bhadooree, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 529.

The fact of one brother (plaintiff's husband) remitting certain sums of money to another brother (defendant) and no receipts being taken for them, and no accountability being stated, leads to the conclusion of the brothers being joint in property and not in mess.

*Per Markby, J.—So also the fact of the two brothers being sued jointly upon a bond given by both, and of defendant discharging the debt alone, raises the presumption that the defendant discharged the debt out of the joint funds. Hurish Chunder Mookerjte v. Mokkoda Debia, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 565.

16.—Joint Estate.

(a) Miscellaneous.

Under the Mitakshara law a son is equally entitled with his father, as well as to the profts of ancestral property belonging, from the moment of his birth or adoption.

When there is in terms a gift of the interest and dividends or produce of the estate, and that gift is indefinite in point of time, such a bequest will generally carry the corpus absolutely. But when the gift is in its terms simply a gift of so much a year, its effect is to give an annuity for life only.

Property purchased by a father in possession of ancestral property; as manager for himself and his sons, from the profits of such ancestral property, is itself ancestral property. Skudamund Mahapattra v. Bonometae Doss Mahapattra and others, 6 W. R., 256.

Ancestral property is not confined to such property as the father derives from his father or any ancestor, but means at least immovable property derived from the father, however acquired by him. Rajmohon Gossain v. Gourmohan Gossain, 4 W. R., P. C., 47.

Shares in ancestral property may be sued for whether they are held jointly or separately. Koonwar Narain Nundy v. Gocoolchurn Day, 3 W. R., 108.

Under the Mitihala law, as expounded by the Vivada Chintamony, and supplemented where deficient by the Mitakshara, a son has ownership in ancestral property, even during his father's lifetime; and such ownership accrues on the son's death, from which period the father and son are joint owners. Kantoo Lall v. Greedharee Lall, 9 W. R., 75.

On this side of India a member of an undivided Hindu family can, without the consent of his co-partners, sell his share in the undivided property. Tukadram Ambaita v. Ramchundra Salal Bhamana Dhurji, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 291.

In the case of an undivided Hindu family, the burden of showing that property in the hands of one of the members of the family is self-acquired and impartible lies upon the person who alleges it to be so.

Gains of science acquired at the family expense, and whilst the acquirer is receiving a family maintenance, are liable to partition, and upon the death of the acquirer form part of the family property, and do not pass to his widow. Bha Mancha v. Bhas/Jal Majwadda Khashidra c. al, 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 47.

Where a member of a joint Hindu family built (at his own expense, with borrowed money) a house upon ground belonging to the family, it was held that each of the co-partners was entitled to a share in the house and the site upon which it was built equal in value to his share of the site. Vithabha Basu v. Haribah Bava, 6 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 1.

In a suit for property acquired from the proceeds of an alleged joint trade, the joint character of which is neither admitted nor proved, the onus lies in the first instance on the plaintiff, who is not entitled under the circumstances to the ordinary presumption of Hindu law arising from the existence of joint family estate. Hurish Chunder Doss v. Gourree Pershad Chatterjee, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 163.

The father in an undivided family under the Mitakshara law has no interest in the ancestral property which can form the subject of a sale beyond the proceeds; having merely a life-interest in a common property, which he can neither give away nor sell. Bho Ray Pershad v. Basstho Narain Pandey, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 31.

The fact of a settlement being made with one member of a joint Hindu family does not negative the rights of other members to a participation in the property so settled; nor is it necessary for such other members, if living in commensality with the former as joint proprietors, to prove that they actually contributed money towards the acquisition of the property. Hur Soondharee Debia v. Doorga Doss Bhutacharrjee, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 215.

Suit by a brother's widow against his brothers to recover his share of joint ancestral property. Defendants pleaded separation, self-acquisition, &c. Held that in the absence of some written record of the terms of the separation at the time, the plea of separation was most improbable: and that, considering there was a certain nucleus of ancestral property from which a beginning might have been made, while on the other hand there was no evidence of self-acquisition by the defendants, the only inference was that the property had been acquired from the ancestral funds. Although the widow was unable to satisfy the Judge below as to each item of property for which she sued, and did not obtain a decree for the full amount claimed, yet she was held entitled to recover the whole of the costs incurred by her in a suit into which she had been forced by the defendants for the recovery of her property. Shik Pershad Chuckernatty v. Gunja Mose Debia, 16 S. W. R., 79.

Concurrent findings of the lower Courts, based upon admissions made in written documents, that property which had been originally self-acquired had come into a common stock and become joint property, upheld. Chellayamat v. Multialamul, 15 S. W. R., P. C., 1.

Where a member of a family claims an exclusive right to a house which he has built, the presumption of Hindu law against his claim arises only if the family is joint, having possession of joint property. Meengadhor Chatterjee v. Soorja Nath Chattarjee, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 446.

In a suit involving the question whether certain property which was sold in execution was the judgment-debtor's own separate property, or the joint property of plaintiffs and judgment-debtor, no presumption in favour of the property being joint was held to arise from the fact of plaintiffs and the judgment-debtor being members of a Hindu family; and as plaintiffs had once alleged separation, the onus was held to have been rightly placed on them of proving that the property was held jointly. Prem Chund Deo v. Darinba Debia, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 238.

The wives and mothers of the members of a joint undivided Hindu family, so long as they continue to live in the family and are supported out of its income, are just as much members of that family as their husbands and sons; and where property is purchased in the name of one such female member during the life of her minor son, the presumption of joint acquisition arising in such cases cannot be rebutted by the mere fact that her name was used.
Where property is proved to be ancestral, the mere registration of one brother as proprietor is of little value as supporting a case of the property not being joint, and the burden of proving that the property is not joint rests on him who alleges that to be the case.

There was no sufficient proof of a family or local custom that the descent of the Zemindari, the subject-matter of dispute, was regulated by the rule of primogeniture.

The wrongful possession of a portion of a joint estate, in every portion of which the sharers have equal rights, by one of them is no bar to the partition of the whole, and does not warrant the exclusive assumption of another portion by another of them.

Assuming a plaintiff's right in the family estate not to have been lost, a deed of gift of a portion thereof is a violation of his right not justified by the circumstance that he had wrongfully appropriated some of the joint property in which the defendants might have recovered their rights by an action-at-law.

Plaintiff's hereditary right does not however entitle him to claim a partition of a portion only of the ancestral property. Vague and general evidence of plaintiff’s gambling and licentious propensities is not sufficient to justify a finding that he has disqualified himself by “addiction to vice” for the performance of obsequies and such like acts of religion, and such evidence must disclose something like habitual maltreatment, or active and malignant hostility, to authorize a Court to pronounce the plaintiff “a professed enemy of his father,” for the purpose of declaring him to have forfeited his right of inheritance by misconduct.

Whilst the members of a Hindu family are found in possession of joint ancestral estate, all property in the possession of any member of the family is presumed to be joint, and it is incumbent on the member who claims property in his possession as his separate property to prove his sole title to it.

Separate property may be acquired by a member of an undivided family by gift, and the character of impartibility attaches to gifts made by a father to his unseparated sons.

What is acquired by the father's favour will subsequently be declared exempt from partition. Separate property may be acquired by the exertions of a member of the family without detriment to the family funds.

It may be acquired with money borrowed on the security of the borrower, and it may be acquired by the mutual agreement of the members of the family.

It is not necessary for the preservation of the joint nature of family property that the members of the family should live in commensality; they may dwell and mess apart, and yet remain joint in property.

Parties who allege that the acquisitions of the several members of a Hindu family are not to be brought into hotchpot, and divided per stirpes, must show that they were acquired in such a manner as to constitute them separate property and impartible.

And it is incumbent on those parties who admit that a partition has been made of certain portions of the family estate, and seek a repartition of the portion so partitioned, to show that a condition attached to the partition which rendered it inoperative, or that the members of the family have consented to a repartition of it.

Arrangements relating to the enjoyment of joint family property and acknowledgments of the right of the several members of the family to acquire separate property made by the adult members of the family, are to be held binding on the minor members of the family if they are not detrimental to their interest, and such arrangements consented to by a father should be held binding on his minor child.

The several members of a family may agree to take loans from the common fund, and treat the profits on such loans as the separate property of the several members by whom the loans have been respectively taken.

Under Hindu law the interest in ancestral property taken by sons immediately on their birth is an estate and interest in immovable property in respect of which a certificate of administration under Act XL of 1858 may be granted during the lifetime of their father.

A son during the life of his father, has as co-parcener, a present proprietary interest in the ancestral property to the extent of his proper share; but beyond that he has vested in him no legal interest whatever whilst his father is alive.

Except in respect of his co-parcenary rights, a son is not in a different position as to the corpus of the ancestral property from that of any other relation who is an heir-apparent of the owner of property.

Though the Limitation Act may have been decided to be a bar to a suit by the son for partition, his right as co-parcener has not thereby been destroyed, and it may be that he is entitled to relief against the improper disposal by the defendant of more than his proper share of the property.

(b) Presumption.

In a suit for certain property as belonging to plaintiff's judgment-debtor, in which the defendant, the adoptive mother of the judgment-debtor, claimed the property as purchased by her bond fide in the name of her son, but with her own funds,— Held that this case could not be judged by the criterion laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Gossain versus Gossain, viz., whence came the purchase-money; for the question in that case related to property acquired by a member of a joint Hindu family, where the presumption would ordinarly be that all the property is joint.

Where a Hindu family lives joint in food and estate, the presumption of law is that all the property they are in possession of is joint property.

The purchase of a portion of the property in the name of one member of the family, and the existence of receipts in his name respecting it, may be perfectly consistent with the notion of its being joint. The criterion in such cases in India is to consider from what source the purchase-money comes.

Dhurm Dass Pandey and others v. Mussamut Shama Soondery Debia, 6 W. R., 43.

Moony Surmav v. Lomun Surmav, 2 W. R., 289.

Certain Hindus descended from a common ancestor, after having lived in commensality and joint estate, separated, no deed of separation being executed, or reservation expressed of any kind. About eleven years after one of the parties to the separation sued the others, alleging that certain immovable property, which stood in the name of the defendants, or their ancestor, had remained in the possession of the defendants on the allegation of exclusive purchase; but that it could be proved to have been acquired by joint ancestral income during the time the family was joint.

Held that the common presumption of Hindu law in favour of members of a joint family did not apply to such a case, and it lay on the plaintiffs to show why they were silent so long.

Badul Singh v. Chutterkaree Singh and others, 9 W. R., 558.

A suit to establish the right of plaintiff's judgment-debtor in certain lands, in regard to which a claim was set up in the execution department, on the allegation that claimant had obtained it as a gift from her husband, the broker of the judgment-debtor, whose self-acquired property it was,—Held that plaintiff, having proved commensality and joint trade, and the existence of some joint property in the family before it separated, had sufficiently started a prima-facie case to throw the burden of proof on the defendant; but that it could be proved to have been acquired by joint ancestral income during the time the family was joint.

Held that the common presumption of Hindu law in favour of members of a joint family did not apply to such a case, and it lay on the plaintiffs to show why they were silent so long.

Badul Singh v. Chutterkaree Singh and others, 9 W. R., 558.

The mere circumstance that one of several brothers of a Hindu family occupied a separate dwelling-house does not rebut the presumption of the family being joint, if it appear that they dealt with the family property as joint property.

Moony Surmav v. Lomun Surmav, 2 W. R., 289.

The presumption obtains of a continuance of the joint right to ancestral property of a member of a joint Hindu family, unless it is shown that he, either by his own act or by the act of some one competent to bind him, parted with that right.

Moony Surmav v. Lomun Surmav, 2 W. R., 289.

One brother's name was used in documents relating to property afforded no presumption of his being sole proprietor, especially when he is the eldest brother, or is shown to be the managing member of the family.

Suit by a member of a joint Hindu family. The plaintiff stated the family to be joint; the defendant admitted that it had once been joint. Held that the onus of proving a separation was on the defendant, failing which the property must, under Hindu law, be regarded as joint at the time of defendant's purchase; and that the status of the family was sufficient notice to the defendant that in purchasing from one member of the family alone he was not making a bonâ-fide purchase.

D. claiming as a widow of A., brought a suit of ejectment against the sons of A.'s brother, deceased.

D. admitted that the property had originally been the joint ancestral property of A. and his brother. Held that the mere appearance on the face of the revenue records that A. was sole owner was not sufficient to rebut the presumption of Hindu law that the property remained joint.

Where property is not expressly shown to be separate, the presumption of Hindu law is that it is joint, and when one brother has managed the property and made collections and acquired property out of such collection, he is accountable to his other brothers who are entitled to share in the property so acquired.

Prankissen Paul Chowdry v. Mothooram Mohun Paul Chowdry, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 73.

The normal condition of a Hindu family being joint, it must be presumed to remain joint, unless some proof of a subsequent separation is given, and where property is shown to have been once joint family property it is presumed to remain joint until the contrary is shown; but the mere fact of a family being joint is not enough to raise a presumption in law that property acquired by one member of that family is joint property.

Where A., as purchaser, claimed a share in property as being joint family property,—Held that A. was not only bound to show that the family was joint, but that the property in question became joint property when acquired, or that at some period since its acquisition it had been enjoyed jointly by the family.

The presumption of Hindu law as to joint property cannot apply in a case where the property is claimed through a son-in-law living in the house of his father-in-law.

Dossess Mone Dossess v. Ram Chand Mohur, 7 W. R., 249.

So long as no partition of a joint estate is proved, the presumption is that the property is joint. The fact that certain parcels are admittedly held in severalty does not rebut the presumption as regards the rest of the joint estate.

The presumption is that a Hindu's property is ancestral, and not self-acquired.

A debt incurred by the head of a Hindu family residing together is, under ordinary circumstances, presumed to be a family debt.

When the manager of a joint Hindu family repurchases benami property sold for arrears of revenue, the presumption is that the property so purchased is held by him for the benefit of the joint family.

A son cannot control his father's act in respect of a property the succession to which is liable to obstruction. It is only in respect of property not subject to obstruction that the wealth of a father and grand-father becomes the property of his sons or grandsons.

According to the Mitakshara law, sons have a vested interest in ancestral property, which interest is saleable at any time in satisfaction of claims against them. Goor Surun Dos v. Ram Surun Bhukut, 5 W. R., 54.

The rule of Hindu law in cases of joint family property (i.e., that it must be presumed to be joint until proved to the contrary) is applicable in a case where the property has passed by sale into the hands of third parties, and has been redeemed by private purchase by one of the former share-holders. Goroo Persaud Doss v. Dece Persaud Tewar, 6 W. R., 58.

The presumption of Hindu law is that property not shown to be separate is joint. When an elder brother is long in the management of the joint estate, and in the receipt of the collections from it, and is accountable for them to his younger brother, if the money employed in the purchase of certain talooks formed part of those drawn from the joint estate, the younger brother, on a reunion, is entitled upon the general principles of Hindu law, and independently of the express provisions of any deed of agreement executed between the parties, to share in them as acquisitions made by the use of the joint funds. Ramkissen Paul Chowdhyr v. Mothooramohun Paul Chowdhyr, 5 W. R., P. C., 11.

(c) Onus Probandi.

Suit for share of joint ancestral property. The plaintiff claimed under A., who, when sued in 1812 as trustee for the defendant's father, then a minor, never pleaded that he was a co-parcener. Held that the plaintiff, if not estopped from contending that the property was joint, had still the full burden of proving that it was joint. Surnomoyee Debey v. Gunga Gobind Roy, 2 W. R., 264.

In a suit for a share of ancestral property, the onus is on the defendants to prove their allegation of separation at a certain time, for having admitted that the family was joint up to that time, and claiming the property as separately acquired subsequent to that date. Bissumbur Sircar v. Soordhun Doss, 3 W. R., 21.

In a Hindu family the presumption of law is that they are joint, and the onus of proving that the family is separate lies on the party making such assertion. The mere fact of property standing in the name of one brother does not prove that it is his separate and self-acquired property. Munmohinee Dabee v. Sooodamonee Dabee, 3 W. R., 31.

Suit by widow of defendant's brother for half share of an alleged joint ancestral property. Held, under the circumstances of the case (the plaintiff making a stale claim), that very moderate proof was sufficient from the defendant. The defendant's evidence and the plaintiff's own conduct established that the original estate, which was the nucleus of the subsequent acquisitions, was the mother's estate and the acquisitions of the defendant made after the mother's death upon the estate to which he had succeeded after her. Dukeena Dabee v. Kishen Chunder Sandyal, 3 W. R., 97.

The burden of proof, in cases of alleged separate acquisition by a member of an undivided family possessed of joint estate, is on the person who advances such a claim. Bipro Persha Kena Dayer, 5 W. R., 82.

In a suit for a share in a joint family the onus of proving joint enjoyment of the property within 12 years is on the plaintiff. For plaintiff of receipt of payment on a share within 12 years will save his suit if a claim is not shown to be separate. Umbika C v. Bhugobully Churn Shet, 3 W. R., 17.

In a suit for partition of joint family property, if the defendant pleads that a partition already taken place, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove the alleged partition. Goor Mookerjee v. Kalee Pershad Mookerjee, 121.

Where a party admits that a family but sets up a partition, the onus prohimg. Treclochun Roy v. Rajkissen Roy, 214.

In a case of separate messing by Hindu law the same enclosure, and with no separate incomes, the onus of proof is, though, as mere presumption the estate was in the possession of the defendant is, it should be joint. Goor Persaud Roy and others v. Dece Persaud Tewar, 6 W. R., 58.

The onus of proof is on the defendant to prove the alleged separate acquisitions obtained by a special gift. Lukhun Chunder Dalla v. Mockhee Doss, 5 W. R., 278.

In a suit to enforce the right to a moveable property on the ground that property, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the alleged separate acquisitions of any evidence as such separate property. Bydonath Ojh Mal and others, 6 W. R., 170.

The mere fact of certain property the name of one member of a joint index to the real owner, nor is the separate possession of any evidence as acquisitions, unless such separate possession can be proved to the other sharers by a special gift. Lalla Beharee Lal v. Lalla Modho Persaud and others, 6 W. R., 278.

In a suit for possession of certain property the ground that they were joint, and that they had been wrongfully kept out of their separate property, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove the alleged separate possession. Lalla Beharee Lal v. Lalla Modho Persaud and others, 6 W. R., 170.

In a suit for possession of certain property the ground that they were joint, and that they had been wrongfully kept out of their separate property, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove the alleged separate property. Lalla Beharee Lal v. Lalla Modho Persaud and others, 6 W. R., 124.

The original status of all Hindu families must be presumed to be joint and undivided. The onus probandi is on those who put forward claims upon the basis of separation and self-acquisition. Proof of separation of shares is not sufficient to shift the burden of proof. Mussamut Bilash Koowar v. Bhawannee Buksh Narsey, W. R., 1864, 1.

When a father and son live as a joint family, and property is purchased in the name of the son, the presumption is that the property was joint estate, and purchased in the name of the son, with a resulting trust in favour of the father. The burden of proving that it was separate estate is on those who claim it as such. Sreemuttee Poornimah Chowdhrrain v. Dropeede Dossee, W. R., 1864, 103.

Where one member of a Hindu family claimed to participate in the property possessed by certain other members, alleging that it had been acquired from the proceeds of their joint estate, and it was found that the family property was not sufficiently large, after supporting the members, to leave surplus funds for the acquisition, and that the defendants were at the time pursuing lucrative employments, the plaintiff being a minor, it was held that there was no ground for the usual presumption as to joint family estate, and the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove his allegation. Held that the fact of defendant having received his education from the joint estate did not entitle plaintiff to participate in every property acquired by defendant by the aid of such education.

It is not incumbent on a Hindu, in every case in which he pleads self-acquisition, to show the source from which the money came. Dhunook-dharee Lall v. Gunput Lall and others, 10 W. R., 122.

Where the purchaser of the rights and interests of one member of a Hindu family, in suing for possession, claimed a share of certain property which had been irregularly purchased, it was held upon the ground that it had been purchased from joint funds,—Held that, before it could be presumed from the fact of the members having lived in com-mensality that the property was purchased from joint funds, plaintiff is bound to show that there were joint funds or other ancestral property, from which such funds could be derived. Khelut Chunder Ghose v. Koonjiall Dhor, 10 W. R., 333.

Although, under a recent ruling of the Privy Council, direct evidence of a butawra in the shape of a deed, or of partition by metes and bounds, is no longer required to prove separation in estate, yet every Hindu family is presumed to be joint until circumstances clearly point to the contrary conclusion. Dharoo Sooklal and another v. The Courts of Wards, 11 W. R., 336.

The father and the son under the Mitakshara law are in the position of a joint Hindu family; and where ancestral estates are admitted to exist, the presumption of law is that all the property they are in possession of is joint property, until it is shown by evidence that one member of the family is possessed of separate property. The burden of proof, therefore, is on the member alleging self-acquisition. Sudanund Mohapattar v. Soorjoomnee Daye and others, 11 W. R., 436.

Every one who is entitled to a share in a joint-family property must account for such portion as may have come into his hands. Gour Pershad Mookerjee v. Kalee Pershad Mookerjee, 5 W. R., 121.

The presumption being that an estate purchased by one of several Hindu brothers living in commensality is the joint estate of all, if a plaintiff seeks to dispossess the other brothers under a title acquired from the brother in whose name the estate was purchased, the onus of proving that it was the sole property of such brother lies upon him. Anund Mohun Roy and others v. Lamb and others, Marsh., 169.

Where a party sues for a moiety of certain property on the ground that it is joint property, the onus is on him to prove that the property is joint, failing which his suit is liable to be dismissed. Mussamut Sooheddur Dossee v. Boloram Rewan, W. R., F. B., 57.

Where plaintiff, a member of a Hindu family, suing for a division of the family estate, admitted on the face of his plaint that he had taken possession of part of the family property, and for sixteen years lived separately, the onus probandi lies on him to show that the circumstances under which he became possessed of the portion of his property were consistent with his statement that the family remained undivided. Somungowda Bin Dagamungowda v. Bhrumungowda, 1 Bom. Rep., 43.

Held that the admission of certain property being joint ancestral, throws the burden of proving exclusive and adverse possession beyond limitation upon the sharer refusing to admit other heirs. Dabee Suhai v. Sheo Doss Rai, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 285.

In a suit against a brother's widow for contribution, in respect of a decree for rents from 1259 to 1264, under a lease acquired in 1255, by the father of the parties in the name of the plaintiff before the family separated in 1258,—Held that the onus of proving that the lease was not joint was on the party who set up the plea that it was the self-acquired property of one member of a joint family. An admission by the widow's husband that the lease was the joint property of himself and the plaintiff, though not an estoppel, was held to be good evidence to be rebutted by the widow. Sreenath Nag Mossomdar v. Monnohanee Dossee, 6 W. R., 35.

The onus probandi is on the party who pleads separate property. Lalla Beharee Lall and others v. Lalla Modho Persaud and others, 6 W. R., 29.

The onus of proving the partition of a joint Hindu family rests upon the person who alleges that such partition has taken place. Katee Nanchoer v. The Rajah of Shivagungah, 2 W. R., P. C., 31.

The onus of proof is on the party seeking to except any property from the general rule of partition according to Hindu law. Laximon Row Madasneer v. Mullar Row Bajees, 5 W. R., P. C., 67.

After a general separation in food and a partition of estate, and after the brothers have commenced to live separately, if any one of them comes into Court alleging that a particular portion of property originally joint continues to remain so, the onus of proof lies on him. Ram Gobind Koon and others v. Syud Hossein Ali and others, 7 W. R., 90.

Where one member of a joint family claims a property as separate the onus is on him to prove.
HINDU LAW—LIABILITY OF PURCHASER.

Where the ancestor of a joint Hindu family purchased a property in the name of his youngest son, the onus was held to be on those claiming under the youngest son to prove that the property was his separate possession. Joynarain Roy v. Rajah Punchanund, W. R., 1864, 10.

Where a son under the Mithila law sued to set aside sales by his father,— Held that the purchasers were not bound to show an absolute necessity for the sales, it being sufficient if they have acted bonâ fide and with due caution, and were reasonably satisfied, at the time of their respective purchases, of the necessity of the sales in order to meet debts which the father had a right to discharge.

The onus probandi in such cases will vary according to the circumstances. Mussumat Bhoorum Koer and others v. Sahembadee and others, 6 W. R., 149.

Where a reversionary heir sues to recover property, on the allegation that it had been improperly alienated, it is incumbent on the aliee to show that there was actual necessity for the sale transaction under which he claims, or that he was reasonably led to suppose that such necessity existed. Nundkoomar Singh and others v. Gunga Persaud Narain Singh, 10 W. R., 94.

The plaintiff’s cause of action as reversioner accrued from the death of his grandmother who had the life-interest. The defendant who had purchased from the grandmother was bound to prove his title deeds, and the existence of legal necessity for the sale. Wooma Churn Banerjee v. Harradhun Moojoomdar, 1 W. R., 347.

In a suit by a son to annul an alienation of ancestral property by his father, the onus is not on the son to prove the absence of necessity for the sale, but on the purchaser to prove the existence of the necessity. Jugdil Nairain Swhaye v. Lalla Ram Probash, 2 W. R., 202.

Where both parties are descendants of the same common ancestor, and plaintiff proves that the property belonged to that common ancestor, and separation between the parties had taken place within statutory limit, it lies on the opposite party asserting it to be divided to show exclusive title by separate acquisition by some ancestor, apart from the right of succession by inheritance from the common ancestor, or a distinct severalty of interest and a clear adverse possession for more than twelve years. Bainee Singh v. Bhurut Singh, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 162.

In a suit for a declaration of a judgment-debtor’s rights in a portion of certain joint landed property, where defendant pleaded that it was self-acquired property,— Held that the onus of proving self-acquisition was on defendant, and the lower Court was right in not fixing an issue on a plea (of separation) not taken in the written statement. Radharmon Kooondoo and others v. Phoolcomary Bebee and others, 10 W. R., 28.

A plaintiff suing for a share of joint property which she claimed under a family arrangement said to have been reduced to writing as an ikramanah, and upon the happening of the necessary conditions, it was held that the rules, with regard to the onus proof which are applicable to a suit for a share of joint family property were not directly applicable, and the plaintiff was bound to give some prima facie proof of her cause of action. Ram Chunder Mitter v. Kistoo Kaminee Bossee, 10 W. R., 194.

Plaintiff alleged that she and her deceased husband’s minor brother had, with his other three surviving brothers, held joint possession, but that these three had wrongfully sold the land to the other defendants, and she prayed for possession by reversal of the sale. The purchasers appeared and filed a written statement to the effect that the vendors had separated from their father in his lifetime, and that they (the purchasers) had been in succession to the vendors for more than twelve years in possession. Held that the onus lay on the plaintiff, who would have to show not only that she represented one of the heirs of her husband’s father, but also that the land in dispute was part of the estate left by the father at his death. Phoookun Pandey v. Mussumat Sookkia, 10 W. R., 436.

When the presumption of joint property in a joint Hindu family is rebutted by production of an exclusive and separate title, the party against whom such a title is produced is bound to show that the title is not really exclusive and separate. Lokenath Surma v. Ooma Mayor Debee, 1 W. R., 107.

The mere fact of a Hindu family living in commonness is not sufficient to raise a presumption of their property being joint. The existence of joint funds out of which the property might have been purchased must also be proved to raise the presumption of the property being joint. Radhika Prasad Dey v. Mussumat Dharma Dasi Debi, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 124.

17.—LIABILITY OF PURCHASER.

The members of a joint Hindu family entered into an agreement not to partition their estate, which was to “continue in one joint undivided occupation as at present.” Held that a purchaser at a sheriff’s sale of the share of one of the contracting parties was not bound by the agreement. Such an agreement does not prevent a party to it from alienating his interests in the estate. Anand Chandra Ghosh v. Prankisto Dutt, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 14.

A person lending money on the security of the property of an undivided Hindu family is bound to make enquiries as to the necessity that exists for such loan. If he lends the money after reasonable enquiry, and bonâ fide believing it will be properly expended, he is not bound to see to the application of it. The rule is the same whether all the members of the family are adults or minors. Gane Bhive Parab et al. v. Kane Bhive et al., 4 Bom. Rep., A. C., 169.

In a suit by a son to annul an alienation of ancestral property by his father, the onus is not on the son to prove the absence of necessity for the sale, but on the purchaser to prove the existence of the necessity for the sale. When the necessity is shown the lender is not responsible for the application of the money. Jugdil Nairain Swhaye v. Lalla Ram Probash, 2 W. R., 292.

The onus of proving the necessity for a sale by a Hindu widow and the adequacy of the purchase-money lies on the purchaser. Jodu Nath Sircar.
HINDU LAW—LIABILITY OF HEIRS.

The law clearly lays down that the estate of a deceased Hindu is held in trust by his heir, and that the heir is liable to pay the debts of the deceased out of the property in his hands, if he is the sole beneficiary or if he contributively owns the property. In Deb Roy v. Chunder, 6 W. R., it is held that the heir is also liable if he is a brother, wife, or illegitimate child of the deceased, or if he is an adopted son or posthumous son. In Buruj, 6 W. R., it is held that the property from which the debts are to be paid must clearly be the property of the deceased and not that of his heir. In Coomaree, v. Tirbheee, the debts of a deceased Hindu are held to be payable out of the property of the deceased, and not out of the property of his heir. In Ali, W. R., it is held that the heir does not act as if by an absolute trust, but as if he were to deal with the debts of the deceased for the benefit of the heir. In the case of a Hindu widow, the right to the property is held to be absolute, and she is therefore liable to pay the debts of her deceased husband. In Luck Chunder, 9 W. R., it is held that a Hindu widow is liable to pay the debts of her deceased husband, and that she must act by her and not by her property.

When a plaintiff who claims property on the allegation that he purchased it from a person to whom it exclusively belonged, fails to prove that the property was the separate property of his vendor, he cannot have a decree for the share of the property to which his vendor was entitled as a member of a joint family. Gour Behary Ram Bhuggut v. Sheo rulton Koonwar and others, 10 W. R., 243.

It is incumbent on the purchaser of realty from a Hindu widow to enquire whether the circumstances are such as to confer on her the power of alienation. Heralall Shaha and another v. Jadub Chunder Cheucheu, Cor. Rep., 119.

The first duty of a purchaser from a Hindu childless widow is to satisfy himself as to her right to sell. If he does not act with due care and attention in the matter he cannot be said to have acted legally in good faith, although he may have believed or taken for granted that all was right. Rham Dhoke Bhutliakarjee v. Ishanee Dabee, 2 W. R., 123.

A purchaser for value is not bound to prove the antecedent economy or good conduct of a Hindu widow who alienates a portion of her husband's estate, nor to account for the due appropriation of the purchase-money, but he is bound to use diligence in ascertaining that there is some legal necessity for the loan, and he may be reasonably expected to prove the circumstances connected with his own particular loan. Kali Coomar Chowdhry v. Nund Coomar Chowdhry, W. R., 1864, 153.

Where a Hindu widow raises money by mortgaging her husband's property, the mortgagee is not bound to look to the appropriation of the money so raised, his responsibility ceasing when he has satisfied himself that there was legal necessity for the loan. Ram Pershad Singh v. Mussamut Nagbungshee Koer, 9 W. R., 501.

Where the validity of an alienation by a Hindu widow is the question for the consideration of the Court, the onus of proving the necessity for the alienation rests with the defendant. Where in such a case the plea of necessity fails, the Court will not grant a decree for immediate possession, unless a very strong case of waste and deterioration be made out. What is sufficient evidence to support a sale by a Hindu widow of property in which she has only a life-interest. Chutter Dharree Singh and others v. Mussamut Hurcoomaree and others, 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 99.

If a larger sum is borrowed or raised on property subject to the Mitakshara law than was legally necessary, or a larger portion of the estate mortgaged or sold than was required to raise the sum legally necessary, the vendees or mortgagees would be entitled to a charge upon the lands mortgaged or sold to the extent of the money required and taken up for purposes recognized by Hindu law. Rijaram Te wnum v. Lucumun Pershad, 12 W. R., 478.

Character of "strict proofs" which an auction-purchaser of the rights of one member of a joint Hindu family can be expected to give, in order to rebut the presumption in favour of joint estate in a joint Hindu family. Lalla Sreedhur Narain v. Lalla Modho Pershad and others, 8 W. R., 294.

18.—Liability of Heirs.

Where a Hindu died leaving a widow and brother, and the brother took possession of the deceased's estate during the widow's lifetime,—Held that the brother was liable to pay a debt of the deceased out of the estate come into his hands. Held also that he was liable as legal representative of deceased, the widow having relinquished her rights as heiress. Jummal Ali v. Zirbhee Indurmuni, 1 Agra Rep., F. B., 71.

A Hindu wife seeking to exempt property from responsibility for her husband's debts must clearly prove that she had stridhun, and that the property was purchased bond fide with her exclusive funds. Brojomohon Mytee v. Mussamul Radha Coomaree, W. R., 1864, 66.

An adopted son as heir is not liable for the debts of his adoptive parent unless he succeeds to and appropriates his estate. Jammal Ali v. Tiribhe Lall Doss, 12 W. R., 41.

The grandson of a Hindu is bound to pay the debt of his grandfather, independent of assets, but without interest, according to the doctrines of the Maharasta school. Naraseninhara Krishnaroe v. Autaji Virupakshah, 2 Bom. Rep., 64.

The liability of an heir for the debts of his ancestor is only to the extent of the inheritance which he has received. If he has waived all his rights to the inheritance his property acquired altunde is not liable. Mussamul Joomai v. Wahid Ali, W. R., 1864, Mis., 33.

When a Hindu dies indebted his estate does not in whole or in part vest in the creditor as if by hypothecation, but the entire estate absolutely passes to the heirs, with full power to deal with the whole estate before satisfaction of the debts. The creditor has no lien on the estate preferential to him who takes the estate in pledge from the heirs, nor can he, after the alienation thereof by heirs for bond fide and valuable consideration, follow it in the hands of the alienee. He has merely a right of suit against the heirs personally who are held liable for the same to the extent of the assets they receive by inheritance. Zhuderust Khan v. Indurmuni, 1 Agra Rep., F. B., 71.

A widow is liable for a debt contracted by her husband. Such debt may be set off against any debt due to her. Grish Chunder Lahoor v. Koomaree Dabea, 1 W. R., Mis., 24.

Where a decree is obtained against a Hindu widow, as guardian of her son, as well as in her own right, for a debt contracted jointly by her and her husband, the husband's property is liable to satisfy the whole decree, and the wife is therefore entitled to sell as much of the estate as is necessary to raise the full amount of the debt. Goluck Chunder Paul v. Mahomed Rohim and others, 9 W. R., 316.
By Hindu law a widow is allowed, during her lifetime, to make the fullest use of the usufruct of her husband's estate; but whatever part of it she leaves behind at her death becomes the property of the next heir, and is not liable for her personal debts, unless such debts have been contracted under legal necessity and for the benefit of the estate. Chundrabala Deka v. Brody, 9 W. R., 584.

_Held_ that a party succeeding as heir to an estate, the sale of which, by the widow of the person from whom he inherits, has been set aside, is bound to refund the purchase-money paid to the widow for the purpose of discharging liabilities on the estate. Roostum Singh v. Alum Singh and Indur Singh, 1 Agra Rep., A. C., 291.

_Property inherited from another and distinct branch of the family cannot be sold for a father's debts. Bissambhur Roy v. Luckhee Kant Neogy, 3 W. R., 137._

According to Hindu law, a son who has not inherited his father's estate is not liable for his debts. Maharajah Dheraj Mahatab Chand Bahadoor v. Hurro Mohun Acharjee, W. R., 1864, Mis., 1.

According to Hindu law, a man's property is liable for his debts, and the debts of an ancestor must be satisfied before the heir has any interest in ancestral property. Gunga Narain Paul v. Umesh Chunder Bose, W. R., 1864, 277.

Heirs are liable for the debts of the person from whom they have inherited to the extent of the property which they have inherited. Raj Rop Singh v. Buldeo Singh, 2 W. R., 258.

According to Hindu law, a creditor cannot follow the property of a deceased debtor, but he may hold the heir personally liable. Unnopoorna Dassee v. Gunga Narain Paul, 2 W. R., 258.

19.—LIMITATION.

Where a decree is passed against ancestral property on confession of the ancestor, and the suit is brought by the sons to establish their reversionary right, or to obtain possession by setting aside the decree and confession, _Held_ that the twelve years' limitation is applicable to such suits.

_Held_, further, that in case of ancestral property the admission of a father may be used as evidence against his sons, but is not conclusive, and does not stop the sons from contending that such admission was collusive or erroneous.

Before partition a Hindu father has no definite share in joint ancestral property which he can alienate. Nowbut Ram v. Durbaree Singh and others, 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 145.

A Hindu of Tirhoot died in 1849, leaving two widows and a brother. A compromise was made by the three, whereby they agreed that the brother should remain in possession of the property left by the deceased; and that some land should be assigned to the widows for maintenance. The elder widow died in 1867, and the younger sued the heirs of the brother for recovery of possession of the property. The defence set up was that the suit was barred by limitation, as her cause of action arose not on the death of her co-widow, but on the death of her husband.

_Held_ that as to recovery of possession of moiety of the property, the cause of action arose on the death of the co-widow; that the possession of the elder widow was not adverse to the younwidow, as the elder widow was permitted to be the possession of the husband's property during lifetime, the younger widow receiving an allowance from the profits of the estate. Mussamut Jhansi Kunwar v. Mussamut Grithirun Kunwar B. L.-R., A. C., 289.

The possession of one member of a joint Hindu family is not an adverse possession, so as to be a suit between members of the same family with the Law of Limitation. Benud Naik v. Do Churn Naik, 1 W. R., 74.

20.—MAINTENANCE.

_Suit by a widow for arrears of maintenance._

Plaintiff's allegation of her separate maintenance was found to be inconsistent with her allegations of living in commensality in a former petition where she made to obtain the guardianship of the minor, and as her principal witness, the former guardian, the minor, failed to corroborate his statement as to the alleged payments in way of maintenance by production of any entries of account, her claim held to be not proved. Mussamut Raj A Koowp v. The Collector of Shahabad, 1 W. R., 252.

Where the maintenance of a Hindu widow not made by her deceased husband dependent upon her living with his family, she is entitled to it, notwithstanding she leave the house of his family and go to that of her father. Sunumoye, Dasie Gopaul Lall Doss, Marsh., 497.

The heir who takes and becomes possessed of an estate of the deceased must be held to continue primarily responsible both in person and prop for the maintenance of the widow, even though she should have fraudulently transferred that estate otherwise have improperly wasted it, and the widow is bound to look to the heir for her maintenance and to claim it from him primarily rather than the estate transferred or wasted, which may notwithstanding be in the last resort answerable to her cl. Ramchurn Tewaree v. Muss. Jussooda Koon 2 Agra Rep., A. C., 134.

_A Hindu died possessed of no property, leaving a widow. On his death she left the house of her father-in-law, and went to reside at her father's house. Her father-in-law was not posses of any ancestral property._

_Held_ that she could not sue her father-in-law for a sum of money or count of maintenance. Khetramani Das v. Knath Das, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 15.

_A Hindu died possessed of no property, leaving a widow. On his death she took the house of her father-in-law, and went to reside at the father's house. Her father-in-law was not possessor of any ancestral property._

_Held_ that she could not sue her father-in-law for a sum of money or count of maintenance. Khetramani Das v. Knath Das, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 15.

By Hindu law, the husband's debts are paid from his lifetime, to make the next heir worthwhile. In the event of the husband's death, the next heir must pay the debt, unless there is legal necessity.

Chunderbalucke

Held that a husband's debts are to be paid by his next heir, unless there is legal necessity. In the case of Roostum Sing v. 1 Agra Rep., the sale of which he inherited, the purpose of the property is to be followed.

According to Singh v. Bu., 3 W. R., 137, the property is to be inherited by the next heir, who must refund the purpose of the property.

Chunder Banerjee

Heirs are liable for his debts. Mah, door v. Hur, Mis, 1.

According to Singh v. Bu., the property must be satisfied by the next heir. Chunder Baluckee Held, further, that the admission of the property is to be followed against the next heir, unless there is legal necessity. Singh v. Bu., 3 W. R., 137.

Before property is sold by the heir, the next heir, should it be the deceased, is to remit the property to the next heir. Singh v. Bu., 3 W. R., 137.

A Hindu's property is to be inherited by the next heir, unless there is legal necessity. Singh v. Bu., 3 W. R., 137.
natural son of such zamindar, and recognized by him as such, it not having been essential to the plaintiff's title to maintenance that he should be shown to have been born in the house of his father, or of a concubine possessing a peculiar status therein. Case remanded for the Courts in India to try whether such maintenance can be a charge upon an impartible zamindary or, if not, out of what property or fund, if any, the son was entitled to be paid. Muttuswamy Jagawara Yettappa Nai- ken v. Venutuswara Yettappa, 2 B. L. R., P. C., 15.

The fact of A. having been long supported by B., or of his having been purchased either as a slave or as a chela, will not entitle him to claim perpetual maintenance for himself and his heirs, especially where A. does not show that he has been deprived of ordinary means of livelihood which he might otherwise have commanded. Narain Dass v. Maha- harshah Mahatab Chund Bakadoor, 7 W. R., 137.

A Hindu widow who had been supported by her father-in-law after his death sued his eldest son for maintenance, and obtained a decree for Rs. 150, notwithstanding the defendant's objection that, being one of three brothers who inherited their father's estate, he was not solely liable for the maintenance claimed. Held that as this was a Small Cause Court suit an appeal did not lie. The maintenance of a widow is by Hindu law a charge upon the whole estate, and therefore upon every part thereof. The defendant might have the question raised by him decided by suing his brothers for contribution. Ramchandra Dikshit v. Savitribai, 2 Mad. Rep., 409.

A Hindu adulteress living apart from her hus- band cannot recover maintenance from him so long as the adultery is uncondoned. Illatra Swatra v. Illata Narayin Nambidir, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 372.

A Hindu wife is not entitled to maintenance if she leaves her husband without a justifying cause. The husband's marrying a second wife is not such justifying cause.

Where, therefore, a Hindu husband married a second wife, and his first wife thereupon left him,—Held that the first wife had no implied authority to borrow money for her support. Seemle.—The prohibition against a plurality of wives, save under certain circumstances, is merely directory and not imperative. Viraswami Chetti v. Apaswami Chetti, 1 Mad. Rep., O. C., 375.

The widow of an undivided Hindu who leaves a co-parcener him surviving, has, like the widow of a divided Hindu who leaves male issue, merely a right to maintenance. Where, therefore, a widow sued for a Paliyappattu as heir to the surviving brother of her husband,—Held that the suit must be dismissed. Peddamuthu Viramani v. Apper Raw and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 117.

Held that the appellant had failed to establish the alleged marriage of his father with his mother, and that consequently his claim as a legitimate son of the late Rajah of Rannuggur could not be sustained; that he was not entitled to inherit- ance as the illegitimate son of the Rajah, because his father, who was a Rajput, was a Khatri, or one of the three regenerate or twice-born races whose illegitimate sons could not inherit; but that he was entitled to maintenance out of his father's estate. Chusturya Run Murdun Syr v. Sahub Purushad Syr, 4 W. R., P. C., 132.

On a division of an estate, the Hindu law recognizes the right of a grandmother to maintenance, but not her title to any share of the estate. Padum- mookee Dossee v. Rameesonee Dossee, 12 W. R., 469.

According to Hindu law, a son's widow is entitled to maintenance so long as she leads a chaste life, whether she elects to live with her father-in-law or with her own relations. Koodee Monee Dabea v. Tara Chand Chuckerbutty, 2 W. R., 134.

A Hindu widow who, for no improper purpose, leaves her husband's family, does not thereby forfeit her right to maintenance. Aholyta Bhai Dabea v. Luckhee Monee Dabea, 6 W. R., 37.

There is no rule of Hindu law which recognizes any authority in a widow entitled only to main- tenance to make contracts for necessary supplies binding upon the heir in possession of the family property and liable to maintain her. Ramasamy Aiyu v. Minakshi Ammal and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 409.

Held that the widow's right to maintenance, being a charge on the property forming her deceased husband's estate, remains claimable out of the property, notwithstanding its alienation by the heirs, unless she bargains to forego it. Heera Lall v. Mussamul Konsillah, 1 Agra Rep., 42.

In a suit by a Hindu for arrears of maintenance, she not being able to show that she had lived apart from her family and had a separate maintenance, her claim was held to be not proved. Mussamul Raj Kale Koowar v. The Collector of Shahabad, 1 W. R., 252.

There is nothing in the law to prevent an in- crease or a decrease of the amount of maintenance granted to a Hindu widow, should sufficient cause be shown for either. The increase, if allowed, should be made from date of suit. A widow's right to maintenance does not cease on her leaving her husband's house. Sreeram Bhuttacharjee v. Pudumokee Devia, 9 W. R., 152.

A Hindu widow's claim to maintenance upon an estate does not necessarily render the sale of the property subservive of her right; for even if there be no other property out of which that maintenance can be derived, there is nothing to prevent her from suing to establish her right to make her main- tenance a charge upon the property sold. Anund Moyee goopio v. Gopal Chunder Banerjea, W. R., 1864, 310.

The High Court remanded the case for the determination of issues regarding the circumstances of a widow who claimed maintenance from her hus- band's father. Seemle.—Separation from her husband's family does not deprive a Hindu widow of her right to claim maintenance from them, if she happens to be

A Hindu widow has a right to be treated with kindness, and suitably maintained by her father-in-law. Deben Ramnath Roy Chowdhry v. Sreemunti Arnu Kally Debia, W. R., 1864, 777.

It is not necessary that a Hindu widow should be maintained in the same state in which her husband would maintain her. Kalleepersaud Singh v. Kupoor Koovaree, 4 W. R., 65.

A Hindu widow's right to maintenance out of lands which belonged to her husband and have devolved on her son, is a purely personal right, which cannot be sold in execution of a decree or otherwise transferred. Bhryub Chunder Ghose v. Nuba Chunder Gooho, 5 W. R., 111.

A father is not obliged by Hindu or Jain law to support a grown-up son, even if the son is labouring under a temporary disorder. Prem Chund Pepara v. Hoolas Chand Pepara, 12 W. R., 494.

Where property had descended to the possession of the brothers of a deceased Hindu.—Held that his widow had a right of subsistence from them, on condition of her residing with them as a member of their family. Wooma Churn Chowdhry v. Niltumbeene Dabia, 10 W. R., 359.

Plaintiff was brought from his native place by defendant's adoptive father, D., who had no one to inherit his property, except his daughter's daughter, with a view to give her to plaintiff in marriage, and confer on him all he possessed. After marriage D.'s granddaughter died; but owing to defendant's being adopted plaintiff was deprived of all the cherished hopes of his wife's future inheritance. Accordingly the adoptive mother and defendant executed a moshairah-potro in plaintiff's favour, promising him, in consideration of the above facts, a monthly allowance for maintenance. The present suit was to recover a balance due of this allowance.

Held that, whether the English law is applied, or the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience, the deed disclosed a good and sufficient consideration for the promise to pay, and defendant was bound to pay the stipulated allowance. Shy Nundan Roy v. Sree Naran Roy, 11 W. R., 415.

The illegitimate son of a Sudra by a concubine, not being a female slave, is entitled to maintenance according to Hindu law. Muthusamy Tagavutra Yellapa Naikar v. Venkatasubha Yelita, 2 Mad. Rep., 293.

A Hindu widow, if destitute of the means of living, is entitled to maintenance from her husband's relatives, although she may have shared her husband's estate, and supported herself for a long period by trading. Bae Lukmee v. Lukmee Doss Gopal Doss, 1 Bom. Rep., 13.

No rule of Hindu law precludes the recovery of arrears of maintenance. The only bar to the enforcement of a purely legal right is the lapse of the time required by the Law of Limitations to bar the remedy. Venkopenadhyaaya v. Kdovari Hengusu, 2 Mad. Rep., 36.

A woman divorced for adultery who had continued in adultery during her husband's life, and in unchastity after his death, is not entitled to maintenance out of the property of her deceased husband according to Hindu law. Muttammal v. Kamakshy Ammal and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 337.

Under the Hindu law, a wife who, without her husband's sanction, leaves him to live with her own family, has no right to ask maintenance from her husband. Kuliyansuuree Debee v. Dwarkanath Surma, 6 W. R., 116.

Held by Peacock, C. J., and Macpherson, J. (reversing the decree of the lower Court), that, according to the law as current in Lower Bengal, the widow of a son who has died without leaving any estate cannot compel her deceased husband's father to make her a pecuniary allowance by way of maintenance if she refuses to live with him as a member of his family. Held by Loch and Kemp, J. J., Kashenath Dass v. Khettur Money Dasee, 9 W. R., 413.

A right to maintenance bequeathed to a person is not affected by any private arrangement entered into by the members of the testator's family, who are liable to pay the maintenance as a charge on the testator's estate.

A plaintiff, however, who has resided in and been supported by the family for twelve years after the testator's death without claiming the maintenance bequeathed to her, is presumed to have waived her right. Ran Lall Mukerjee v. Mussamm Tala Soondery Debia, W. R., 1864, 3.

A Hindu father and son lived joint in food and worship, but separate in estate. Held that the widow of the son has no legal claim upon the father for maintenance. Rujjomoney v. Sibchunder Mullick, 2 Hyde's Rep., 193.

A son, whether adopted or begotten, can claim maintenance of his father until put into possession of his share of the ancestral property. Ayyavu Muppanar v. Ntadatchi Ammal and others, 1 Mad. Rep., 45.

In a suit by a Hindu widow for administration under the will of her deceased husband, the Court will not give a decree for her general right to maintenance. Bijzie Bebee and Amrit Bebee v. Monohour Dass, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 118.

Arrears of maintenance due to a Hindu widow at her death do not necessarily revert to the estate from which they were to be derived, on the ground that they were not separated from the corpus of that estate during her life. Court of Wards v. Rajah Mohessur Roy, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 76.

A female, who is a member of a family governed by the *Aliyasantana system of law, living apart from the family with her husband is not entitled to a separate allowance for maintenance out of the income of the family property.

Semble,— The husband is bound to maintain his...

A Hindu widow does not forfeit her right to maintenance by quitting the family residence of her deceased husband. Undoubtedly it is more consonant with Hindu law that a widow should remain in the house of her deceased husband, but although her conduct in quitting the house and residing elsewhere may expose her to blame, it is not a conclusive as to whether in her right to maintenance. It has never been ruled with respect to Hindu widows that they are not entitled to recover arrears of maintenance because the amount of maintenance has been settled by neither private agreement nor by judicial decision. The claim for arrears can only be decreed up to the date of the institution of the suit. Rajah Pirthu Singh v. Ranee Raj Kooer, 2 N. W. R., 170.

The question of the adequacy of the maintenance granted to widows and daughters must depend in each case on its own peculiar circumstances. Dinbandhoo Chowdry v. Rajmohinee Chowdry, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 73.

A Hindu widow's maintenance is a charge upon the family estate in whosesoever hands the estate may fall. Mussamut Khukroo Misrain v. Hoomuck Lall Dass, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 263.

A Hindu kept a Mahometan mistress, and by such conduct compelled his wife under her religious feelings to leave the house. She went and resided with her mother, and continued to live in chastity. Held, the husband was bound to give maintenance to his wife. Lala Gobind Prasad v. Doulut Batti, 6 B. L. R., Ap., 85; and 14 S. W. R., C. R., 451.

Plaintiff sued his elder brother for maintenance, calculated at Rs. 300 per month. The first Court gave a decree for Rs. 50 per month, which was reversed on appeal by the Judge, on the ground that he could recover no smaller amount than that claimed in his plaint. Held, in special appeal, that plaintiff had a right to a finding by the Judge as to what amount and what kind of maintenance he was entitled to receive from defendant. Neladree Singh v. Rajah Rughoonauth Singh, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 411.

The Appellate Court agreed with the Court below as to the propriety of the practice, whenever a widow sued to have her right of maintenance declared, for her to ask not that her right should be declared generally, but that it should be enquired what is fit and proper sum for her maintenance; but acting upon the rule in Courts of Equity that, if the plaintiff should mistake the relief to which he is entitled under his special prayer, the Court may yet afford him the relief to which he has a right under the prayer of general relief, provided it is such relief as its terms by the context made out to be, and that the suit ought not to have been dismissed on the ground that it was only for a declaration of right, and did not ask for any relief, because, although no proposal was made for amending the form of the suit, the Court might, upon the plaint as it then was, have framed issues for the purpose of determining what should be allowed for the maintenance and expenses if the plaintiff should be found to be entitled to them, and remanded the case for retrial accordingly. Sreemutty Nistarini Dassee v. Mukhum Lall Dutt and Chunder Mohun Soor, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 432.

As against an heir who has taken the property, the widow has a right to have her maintenance treated as a charge against the property, and she may follow the property in the hands of any one who takes it with notice of her claim against the heir. But the widow's maintenance is not in Bengal a charge on her husband's estate in the hands of an alienor without notice of her claim. Sreemutty Bhuegobuddy Dassee v. Kinney Lall Mitter, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 324.

A Hindu widow cannot alienate for any purpose property entrusted to her solely that from its profits she may maintain herself. Seith Gobin Dass v. Ranchora, 3 N. W. R., 324.

A Hindu widow is entitled to charge on account of her maintenance a piece of land in the possession of her father-in-law (the defendant), which formed a portion of the ancestral property of the family, and had been allotted on partition to defendant, encumbered with a mortgage-debt of the family to the full value, and which had, subsequently to the partition in the lifetime of the plaintiff's husband, been redeemed by the defendant with self and separately acquired funds. Held, also, that the plaintiff's refusal to live in the defendant's house as one of his family did not disentitle her to maintenance. Visalatchi Anmath v. Anunsamy Sastry, 5 Mad. Rep., 150.

21.—MALABAR LAW.

According to Malabar Law, a sale of family property is valid when made with the assent, expressed or implied, of all the members of the tarawad, and when the deed of sale is signed by the karanavan and the senior anadravan, if suj juris.

By the law of Malabar all acquisitions of any member of a family which he has not disposed of in his lifetime form part of the family property. The acquirer, however, may, during his lifetime, hold, alienate at once, and encumber his self-acquisitions. A karanavan, in possession of the family funds, is presumed to have made all acquisitions with them and for the benefit of the corporate body. But such presumption is not irrebuttable, and his alienation or charge of such acquisitions made during his lifetime may be set aside. Kallati Kunju Menon v. Palat Erracha Menon, 2 Mad. Rep., 162.

An individual member of a tarawad governed by the Marumakkatayam rule has no right to an account from the karanavan.

Each member of a tarawad has a right to succeed by seniority to the management of the family property.

Semeble,—An anandranvan's right to maintenance is merely a right to be maintained in the family house. Kunigaratu and others v. Arrangaden, 2 Mad. Rep., 12.

Property assigned by the males of a Nayar family for the support of their females is still family property, and liable as such to be taken in execution of a judgment against the karanaivan. Parabel Kondi Menon v. Vadakenttil Kunni Pennud, 2 Mad. Rep., 41.

The right of the eldest member of a Nambudiri family to manage the illoom is absolute, and where a junior member has in fact managed it, then this is presumed to have been with the permission of the former, who may at any time take up the actual control. Nambitan Nambudiri v. Nambitan Nambudiri, 2 Mad. Rep., 110.

A kanamdar's right to hold for twelve years depends on his acting conformably to usage and the interest and interest of the janny's title. It makes no difference when this is first done in his answer. Mayavanjadi Chumaren v. Nimini Mayuran, 2 Mad. Rep., 109.

An otti-holder, like a kanamdar, forfeits his right to hold for twelve years by denying the janny's title. Kelu Eradi v. Pupalli and others, 2 Mad. Rep., 161.

It is the unquestionable law of Malabar that tarwad property is inalienable, except in cases of adequate family necessity. In such cases alienations will be upheld; but it lies upon the purchaser to make out with abundant clearness that the purpose was a proper one. The assent of the senior anandranvan is some (but rebuttable) evidence that the purpose was proper.

Semeble,—That, considering the state of Hindu families, a purchaser would be affected with notice by much slighter evidence than a purchaser in other countries. Koyelothpurupurazil Manoki Koran Wayur v. Putenpurpurazil Manoki Chanda Nyvar, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 294.

When the demisor of land under a kanam agreement is unable to give possession, the demisee may repudiate the contract and recover the amount advanced. Vayall Pudia Madathemmil Motdin Kuttiniyapa and others v. Udaya Varmaolini Rajah, 2 Mad. Rep., 315.

Division of family property cannot be enforced by one of the members of a family governed by the law of Aliya Santana.

In Canara females only are recognized as the proprietors of family property.

The Aliya Santana system of inheritance differs only from that of Malabar in more consistently carrying out the doctrine that all rights to property are derived from females. Munda Chetti v. Timajee Hensu, 1 Mad. Rep., 308.

Suits by a branch karanaivan of a Malabar tarwad to recover certain lands belonging to his branch tarwad, which had been mortgaged by a former branch karanaivan. Plea that the plaintiff had no right to sue without the authority of the senior member of the family, the velia kaimal. Upon an issue sent in (special appeal) by the High Court, it was found by the Civil Judge that there was no binding and peculiar custom in the family deprivings the senior member of all management of the property, and vesting it in the branch karanaivans. Upon the final hearing it was contended that the contrary had been so irrevocably fixed by judicial decision as to prevent the matter from being open to question, and that this finding was bad in law, as being opposed to binding decrees of competent Courts.

Held by Holloway, J.—(1) That there was nothing compelling the Court to decide, contrary to the plain rules of law, that this delegation was irrevocable; that perhaps it was not so even by the delegator, and still less was it so by his successors; (2) That the fact of the setting apart of samtan property, if it was set apart, can make no difference, and as little can the circumstance of the income reserved; (3) That there was nothing to prevent the Court from deciding that the Civil Judge was right in saying that this was an ordinary Malabar tarwad; and (4) That the renunciation before the Sadr Court was not even irrevocable as against him who made it, and certainly could not have the effect of depriving the senior member, for all future time, of the rights which the law of the country conferred upon him, with the correlative duties of all future time.

By Scotland, C. J.—That the Court was not constrained to hold that the irrevocability of the arrangement effected in 1866 by the former head of the family, as to the apportionment of the family property between two taverafs, and the management of each taveraf's allotment by its senior member, was a matter conclusively adjudicated in the course of the litigation, of which there was proof in the records. That such arrangement operated only as a personal renunciation and delegation of the rights of management possessed by the then head of the tarwad; and that, even if it should have been irrevocable by him, it was not binding on the third defendant, admittedly the head of the family by right of seniority. Ajjuni the present Velia Kutinal of Ekanatha, styled Ayampalli Ramas Kumarrun v. Ayanepalli Ekanatha Thavini Vairkaravan Shanguni Velluthudutha Shamu and three others, 6 Mad. Rep., 401.

In Malabar the word "taveraf" has several distinct meanings. In the families of the princes all the houses have separate property, and the senior in age of all the houses succeeds to the royalty with the property specially devoted to it. This mode of succession may be regarded as rather due to public than to private law. Private families have sometimes adopted the same customs, but there is the strongest presumption against the truth of this in the case of a private family. Families becoming very numerous have often split into various branches. In the language of the people, there is community of purity and impurity between them, but no community of property. In the only sense of the word with which Courts of Justice are concerned, people so related are not of the same tarwad. Where there are several houses bearing the same original tarwad name, but with an added and original, and there is no evidence of the passing of a member of one house to another, there is the strongest ground for concluding that this separation has taken place. Erambahalli Kenor Nyvar and two others v. Erambahalli Chemr Nyvar and nine others, 6 Mad. Rep., 411.

The mere fact of the name of the managing member of a joint Hindu family standing as the recorded proprietor of an estate is not, per se, sufficient to give title to a purchaser for valuable consideration from him, unless at the time of the purchase the purchaser was ignorant of the real state of the family, and was really led by that circumstance to believe that the recorded proprietor was the sole owner. Gour Chundra Biswas v. Greesh Chundra Biswas and others, 7 W. R., 120.

The manager of a joint Hindu family is not, by reason of his occupying that position, bound to render an account to the other members of the family. There is no analogy in this respect between a joint Hindu family and a partnership. Where it was arranged amongst the members of a joint Hindu family that the accounts of a banking business were to be carried on by them should be kept on the understanding that the profits when realized should be divided amongst the individual members in certain proportions, and that the expenses of each member should be credited and charged in the name of each member,—Held that this was in the nature of a manager fixed or confirmed the rent of the tenure, and agreed that the rent should not be enhanced,—

Held that the effect of the solehnaham was to confer upon the tenant and his descendants a mourosee mokurruye right in the land at a fixed rent, as far as the manager was capable of conferring such a right. Bhoobunmohinee Dassee v. Denaye Karigur, 15 S. W. R., C. R., 434.

23.—MARRIAGE.

According to the law and custom of marriage prevailing at Tipperah, the Rajah can legitimize his children born of a kachooa by going through a marriage ceremony with the mother. Assuming that no marriage ceremony is necessary to institute a gondhorbo marriage, mere co-habitation, without any intent and mutual agreement to enter into a binding contract of marriage, is not sufficient. Chuckrodhuj Thakoor v. Beer Chunder Joobraj, 1 W. R., 194.

According to the Hindu law prevalent in Madras, legitimate children of illegitimate parents of the Sudra caste can contract a legal and valid marriage. According to the Hindu law, illegitimate children of the Sudra caste can inherit, and are entitled to maintenance.

The marriage between persons of different sections of the Sudra caste is valid and legal. Inderan Valungypuly Taver v. Ramaswamy Panda Talaur, 3 B. L. R., P. C., 1; S. C., 12 W. R., P. C., 41.

In case of husband and wife living together, the presumption is that the wife is the husband's agent for contracting debts for the necessities of the family. But by Hindu law perhaps this presumption is not so strong as it is by English. Verasvami Chetti v. Apposvam Chetti, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 375.

The proposition that everything acquired by a woman during coverture is the property of her husband has foundation in Hindu law. Ramasami Padeiyatchi v. Verasami Pedeiyatchi, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 272.

The mere taking of a first wife's jewels, or the marrying of a second wife by the plaintiff, cannot be set up as a bar to his claim against the former for restitution of conjugal rights. Jeebo Dhon Bangah v. Mussamut Sundhoo, 17 S. W. R., C. R., 522.

The Court will not order the father of a Hindu girl, in a suit to which the girl is a party, to specifically perform the marriage of his daughter with a person to whom the daughter has been betrothed. It will, however, award damages against the father for breach by him of the contract of betrothal.

Semble,—That according to Hindu law, a betrothal is not to be treated as an actual and complete marriage. Umed Kika v. Nagindas Narotum, 7 Bom. Rep., O. C. J., 122.

A custom which authorizes a woman to contract a nātrā marriage without a divorce, on payment of a certain sum to the caste to which she belongs, is an immoral custom, and one which should not be judicially recognized. Uji, daughter of Hargovan Ranchhod v. Nāthī Lāla, 7 Bom. Rep., A. C. J., 133.

The question whether the ceremony of Rasee Bibaho was a part of the marriage ceremony during the continuance of which gifts to the bride came under the denomination of yantuka, was held in this case to depend on the custom of the district in the caste to which the parties belonged. Bisam Pershad Burral v. Radha Soondar Nath, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 304.

"Given before the nuptial fire" is only a term to signify all gifts during the continuance of the marriage ceremonies. Bisam Pershad Burral v. Radha Soondar Nath, 16 S. W. R., C. R., 115.

Suit by a Hindu mother, as the guardian of her infant daughter, to have an alleged marriage of that daughter with the defendant set aside as null and void.

Held (Mitter, J., dissenting) that the Civil Courts have no power to declare a marriage null except as incidental to some right to property involved in the suit; and that plaintiff's remedy was to bring a suit as guardian to recover possession of her minor daughter, or for damages for loss of her daughter's services. Anjona Dassee v. Proladh Chunder Ghose, 14 S. W. R., C. R., 132.

The plaintiff sued the defendants, his wife and her father (first and second defendants) to recover damages for the non-performance of a contract, whereby the defendants agreed to deliver to the plaintiff a specified quantity of grain. It was found that the award of the punchayat was in accordance with the custom of the caste in cases in which the wife refused to live with the husband.

Held that the plaintiff was enabled to maintain the suit. Sooba Tevan v. Moorthookody, 6 Mad. Rep., 40.

The plaintiff, the divided brother of the defendant's deceased husband, sued to obtain a declaration of his legal right to betroth the infant daughters of his deceased brother by the defendant to persons of his own choosing without the interference of the defendant, and of her obligation to accept any persons whom he may select and provide for the celebration of their marriages.

Held that the exclusive right sought to be enforced by the plaintiff was not warranted by Hindu law, apart from the legal position and rights of the defendant as the guardian of her daughters and possessor of her husband's property, which however presented still stronger grounds of objection to the plaintiff's claim. Namasaeyeram Pillay v. Annanmai Unnand, 4 Mad. Rep., 339.

An agreement entered into between the plaintiff and defendants, members of the same caste, contained a stipulation that in the event of the defendant objecting to the receiving of a girl from, or the giving a girl to the plaintiffs in marriage, the defendant should be bound to return Rs. 500 with interest, which the plaintiffs had paid to the defendant under the agreement. It was found by the Civil Judge that the fifteenth defendant's son was engaged to be married to the second plaintiff's daughter, and that the marriage was broken off on the part of the fifteenth defendant.

Held, on special appeal, that this was primid facie a breach of the agreement which entitled the plaintiffs to recover, and that it was for the defendants to show that it did not bring them within the terms of the agreement. Keni Chetty v. Veriappa Chetti, 4 Mad. Rep., 325.

24.—MINORITY AND GUARDIANSHIP. (See LAW OF PERSONAL STATUS.)

The legal age of discretion of Hindus in India is uniformly sixteen years. Up to that age the father has an undoubted right to the custody of his children. Re Henmauth Bose, 1 Hyde's Rep., 111.

A suit cannot be brought on behalf of a Hindu minor to secure his share in undivided family property, unless there is evidence of such malversation as will endanger the minor's interests if his share be not separately secured. Chokalingam Pillai v. Suamiyar Pillai, 1 Mad. Rep., A. C., 105.

The marriage of a Hindu minor is a legitimate cause of expense in regard to which his guardian can bind him, unless it is shown that the amount of the loan was extravagant for the purpose, considering the social or pecuniary circumstances of the minor, or that it was not duly applied and expended. Juggeswar Sirscar v. Nilambar Biswas, 4 W. R., 217.

Held that the paternal grandmother has the right to the guardianship of a Hindu minor, in preference to the step-mother. Held also, in the present case, that the paternal grandmother, with the assent of the nearest male relative, had power to dispose of the minor in marriage.

Held that the guardian of the infant must have a specified quantity of grain. It was found that the award of the punchayat was in accordance with the custom of the caste in cases in which the wife refused to live with the husband.

Held that the plaintiff was enabled to maintain the suit. Sooba Tevan v. Moorthookody, 6 Mad. Rep., 40.

The plaintiff, the divided brother of the defendant's deceased husband, sued to obtain a declaration of his legal right to betroth the infant daughters of his deceased brother by the defendant to persons of his own choosing without the interference of the defendant, and of her obligation to accept any persons whom he may select and provide for the celebration of their marriages.

Held that the exclusive right sought to be enforced by the plaintiff was not warranted by Hindu law, apart from the legal position and rights of the defendant as the guardian of her daughters and possessor of her husband's property, which however presented still stronger grounds of objection to the plaintiff's claim. Namasaeyeram Pillay v. Annamai Unnand, 4 Mad. Rep., 339.

An agreement entered into between the plaintiff and defendants, members of the same caste, contained a stipulation that in the event of the defendant objecting to the receiving of a girl from, or the giving a girl to the plaintiffs in marriage, the defendant should be bound to return Rs. 500 with interest, which the plaintiffs had paid to the defendant under the agreement. It was found by the Civil Judge that the fifteenth defendant's son was engaged to be married to the second plaintiff's daughter, and that the marriage was broken off on the part of the fifteenth defendant.

Held, on special appeal, that this was primid facie a breach of the agreement which entitled the plaintiffs to recover, and that it was for the defendants to show that it did not bring them within the terms of the agreement. Keni Chetty v. Veriappa Chetti, 4 Mad. Rep., 325.
undivided family, comprising infant members, can show that, after reasonable enquiry, he believed in good faith that the person so representing himself was entitled to act, and was acting for the family, and that the transaction entered into with him by such manager was entered into for some common family necessity, or for the benefit of the infants, such act of the manager is valid and binding on the minor members of the family. Trimuch Amunt v. Gopalshet Bin Munkhadeet Mahadoor, 1 Bom. Rep., 27.

In a suit to set aside sales made by a minor's guardians, on the ground that the sales were not justified by any recognized legal necessity, the onus is on the defendant to prove the necessity. Nature of proof sufficient to discharge such onus explained. Looloo Sing and others v. Rajinder Laha, 8 W. R., 364.

According to Hindu law, a paternal grandmother has a preferential right over a stepmother to the guardianship of a minor.

The paternal grandmother, with the assent of the nearest male kinsman on the father's side has (in preference to the stepmother) the right to dispose of a minor in marriage. Maharane Ram Bunsee Koonwara v. Maharane Soobh Koonwarae and others, 7 W. R., 121.

The Hindu law does not prohibit a father from appointing, by writing or by word, any other person than the mother to be the guardian of his minor children. A person who disputes the authority of another to act as his guardian, and repudiates the acts done by such guardian in that capacity, cannot take advantage of those acts so far only as they are beneficial to him. Soobah Brithe Lall Jha and others v. Soobah Doorgah Lall Jha and others, 7 W. R., 73.

Though by the Hindu law no one but the father while he is alive can give his daughter in marriage, yet the father can delegate his authority to another. Golamee Gopee Ghose v. Juggessur Ghose, 3 W. R., 193.

A koolin Brahmin is not so much the natural guardian of his daughter as her mother. The want of a guardian's consent will not invalidate a will in which was the following direction:-

"In order to look after the affairs, to conduct suits, and manage the debts and dues relative to my real and personal estates, my eldest son, H. C. G., who has attained the age of eighteen, remains my executor, for my younger son, G. C. G. is an infant; but as my eldest sister, S. H. D., is prudent and sensible, all the affairs of the estates shall be under her superintendence; and my eldest son shall do all the acts according to her advice and direction. But when my younger son, G. C. G., will then come of age, both the brothers shall be competent personally to manage the affairs; at that time the advice and superintendence of my said sister shall not remain." G. C. G. after attaining the age of sixteen, but before he had reached the age of eighteen, applied for grant of probate of his father's will to himself, jointly with his brother, H. C. G., in respect of property in Calcutta. Held that he had not attained the age contemplated in his father's will at which he was to be joined in the executorship with his brother. Ganga Prasad Gossain, In the goods of, 5 B. L. R., 80.

The period of minority among Hindus, by the operation of Act XL of 1858, extends to eighteen years, as well within the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, as within the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in the Mofussil, and that whether the father is alive and of full age or not. Jadunath Mitter v. Bolychaund Dat, 7 B. L. R., 607.

A girl under sixteen years of age has not such a discretion as enables her, by giving her consent, to protect any one from the criminal consequences of inducing her to leave the protection of a lawful guardian; but where the return to the writ of habeas corpus stated that a girl was above the age of sixteen (though her mother stated her to be of the age of thirteen years and nine months), the Court held that she was of years of discretion to choose for herself under whose protection she would remain. Queen v. Vaughan, In the matter of, S. M. Ganesh Sundari Debi, 5 B. L. R., 418.

25.—MORTGAGE.

The same principle exists both in the English and the Hindu law, that the right of the mortgagee to redeem does not, in the absence of any circumstances or language indicating a contrary intention, arise any sooner than the right of the mortgagee to foreclose, and therefore a suit for redemption of a mortgage-money. Sakslmm NaraJr'm/ra Sara'esaiv.

A dhrislabandhaka, or Hindu instrument by which visible property is mortgaged, which names a time for payment of the money borrowed, and stipulates that on default the mortgagee shall be put into exclusive possession and enjoyment of the property, will not be treated strictly as a conditional sale, even though the instrument expressly provides that on default the transaction shall be deemed an outright sale, and in a suit by the mortgagee for possession the Court, in decreeing the right thereto, will give the mortgagor a day for redeeming. Vmkala Reddz'v.

Where a plaintiff fails to show that a mortgage, created by certain persons as executrix and executors of a Hindu will, has been validly created by them in that capacity, the Court will, unless it is manifestly inequitable to do so, allow him to raise an issue that the mortgage was validly created by the parties in another character. Held (per Markby, J.) that the executors of the will of a Hindu cannot, by virtue only of their character of executors, mortgage the estate of the testator, in the absence of any power, express or implied, contained in the will. Held, on appeal, that a creditor who purchases under an execution against the general assets of a testator's estate takes subject to a mortgage created in pursuance of a power contained in the will, and in a suit to enforce the purchaser is rightly made a party. Though the payment of debts is a charge on the property of a testator, it is not a charge on any specific portion of that property. Nikhit Chaturjee v. Pearly Mohan Dass, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 7; S. C., 11 W. R., O. C., 21.

26.—PARTITION.

Where there is a partition after the father's death between several brothers, some of whom are by one wife, some by another, and either wife survives at the time of partition, the property should be first divided between all the brothers, and the widow takes an equal share with her own sons of the whole portion allotted to them.

Following the decisions quoted by Sir F. Macnab, the courts have considered the Hindu law, but doubting their propriety. Cally Churn Mullick v. Janaiva Dassee and others, 1 Ind., Jul., N. S., 284.

Under the Hindu law two things at least are necessary to constitute partition: the shares must be defined, and there must be distinct and independent enjoyment.

Whatever is acquired at the charge of the patrimony is subject to partition; but if the common stock is improved an equal share is ordained. Where a co-parcener, with comparatively small detriment to the joint estate, acquires any separate property by his own labour or capital, the property is nevertheless to be considered joint, although the acquirer gets a double share. Judoonath Tewaree v. Bissoonath Tewaree, 9 W. R., 61.

An actual partition by metes and bounds is not necessary to render a division of undivided property complete. But when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves, with regard to particular property, that it shall henceforth be the subject of ownership in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and each member henceforth has in the estate a definite and certain share which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severality, although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided. Appoovrir v. Rama'subba Aiyon and others, 8 W. R., P. C., 1.

Where the members of an undivided Hindu family have divided a portion of the estate, and held their respective shares separately, such shares will be liable to the incidents attached to separate estates, although the whole of the joint property has not been divided. A partition of joint property is valid as between the members of a Hindu family, although it has not been sanctioned by the Board of Revenue, it being shown that for several years after the partition the members of the family had separately enjoyed the shares which fell to them by the partition. Musammit Hoolas Koonwer v. Man Singh, 4 Agra Rep., A. C., 37.

The doctrine that when, after a partition of a joint family estate, a portion of the estate remains undivided, the portion which remains undivided will not afterwards be partitioned, refers to a partition made by a father amongst his sons and their co-heirs.

It does not refer to the case where a partition has been made by the joint owners amongst themselves. Sremunty Shamsawondery Dasse and Sreemunty Bermomoye Dassoe v. Kartick Churn Mittra, Bourke's Rep., O. C., 326.

Although there has been no actual partition by metes and bounds, a co-parcener holding an ascertainment in immoveable property is competent to alienate it without the consent of the other co-parceners. Hurdwar Singh and others v. Lukhram Singh and others, 3 Agra Rep., A. C., 218.

Following a ruling of the Privy Council, it was held that separate appropriation as well as separate holding and enjoyment of distinct shares are all that is necessary under the Hindu law of the Benares school to constitute a legal partition of a joint estate.

Every member of a joint undivided family has an indefeasible right to demand a partition of his own share. Musst. Deo Binsee Koer v. Dwarkanath and others, 10 W. R., 273.

Though actual partition by metes and bounds is not necessary to a separation between the members of a joint Hindu family, yet there must be some unequivocal act or declaration on the part of the family of their intention to separate. A suit by one member for a declaration of his right was held not to be a sufficient indication of such intention. Debee Persad v. Phool Roora, 12 W. R., 510.

An act or declaration showing an intention on the part of any shareholder to hold his share separately, and to renounce all rights to the shares of his co-parceners, constitutes a complete severance

Separation in dwelling and food would give rise in Hindu law to a presumption of separation in estate. {Tagan Koor and others v. Rughoonundun Lall Sahoo and another, 10 W. R., 145.}

Where there has been a re-union or partition, but same of the property remains joint, the widow of a deceased brother will not participate in the undisputed residue. Mussamut Badamoo Kooar v. Wuszeer Singh and others, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 144.

Where there has been an agreement as to division of property, the Court will hold it to apply to property subsequently acquired accruing from the ancestral estate. Maharanee Inderjeet Kooar v. Mussamut Isunut Kooor and Soonuet Koonwar, 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 141.

A suit on behalf of a minor for partition will lie, if the interests of the minor are likely to be prejudiced by the property being left in the hands of the co-parceners from whom it is sought to recover it. Kamakshi Ammal v. Chundambara Reddi, 3 Mad. Rep., A. J., 94.

According to the Mitakshara, an agreement for a partition, although not carried out by actual partition of the property, is sufficient to constitute a division of the family, so as to entitle the widow of a deceased brother to succeed to his share of the ancestral property in preference to the surviving brothers.

The fact of the family having separate house and held is, according to the Mitakshara, sufficient evidence of partition.

The onus of proving re-union is upon the party pleading that there has been a re-union after partition. Raja Suraneni Venkata Gopala Narashima Roy Bahadur v. Raja Suraneni Lakshmi Venkama Roy, 3 B. L. R., P. C., 41; S. C., 12 W. R., P. C., 40.

A partition can take place notwithstanding the minority of some of the co-parceners, and it is not necessary for the application of this rule that there should be more than one adult member in the family, or that they should be brothers only. The law of partition applies equally to all joint families, whether the number of the members or the number of their relationship. Mussamut Deobunsee Koor v. Dwarkanath and others, 10 W. R., 273.

In cases of joint ownership each party has a right to demand and enforce partition. A shareholder of a putnee talook can claim and enforce a partition of such putnee talook as against his co-sharers, but such partition would not affect the liabilities of the parties under their contract with the zamindar. The costs of the suit as well as for affecting a partition must be borne by each party, as such expenses are not caused by any wrongful act of either party, but by the nature of their tenancy. Ramee Samasundari Debi v. Jardine, Skinner, and Co., 3 B. L. R., Ap., 130.

In a suit brought by a son against his father to compel a division of moveable and immovable property inherited by the latter from his paternal cousin.—Held that as regards the jewels of which plaintiff required an account the plaintiff had no right of complaint, although his father, the defendant, had made an unjust and partial distribution of them. Held also that the suit to enforce a division of the immovable property could not be maintained, inasmuch as neither the plaintiff nor the defendant acquired any right to such property by birth. Rayadar Natlambo Chetti v. Rayadar Mukunda Chetti, 3 Mad. Rep., O. J., 455.

A member of an undivided family who suught a suit for partition against his father as a managing member, and eight others, of whom second, third, and fourth defendants were plaintiffs infant brothers, and obtained a decree. The Judge proceeded to ascertain the amount of the plaintiff's share in the following manner. He assessed what he considered to be the sum received by the first defendant from the estate, deducted from that sum what he considered should have been the gross expenditure of the defendant, and decreed delivery by the defendant of one-fifth of the remainder. Held that such a decree is erroneous. Tara Chand v. Rub Ram, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 177.

Under the Mitakshara law there may be a partition in estate without any actual division of the lands into parcels, and allotment of those parcels to the different sharers to be held by them in severalty. Mussamut Jozoda Koonwar v. Gourie Byjanaath Sooe Singh, 6 W. R., 139, and Lala Sheer-unsaud Mussamut v. Akoonjoo Koonwar, W. R., 488.

According to Hindu law, the declaration of an intention to become divided in estate amounts to a valid separation, not immediately perfected by an actual partition of the estate by metes and bounds. Mussamut Vato Koer and others v. Rowshun Singh and others, 8 W. R., 83.

An arrangement contained in a deed duly executed by the members of a joint Hindu family, to effect a separation of the property, is sufficient prima-facie evidence of a valid separation under Hindu law, and in such a case an actual division by metes and bounds is not necessary. Kulonath Dass v. Mewah Lall and others, 8 W. R., 302.

According to the Mitakshara, the mother, or the grandmother, is entitled to a share when sons or grandsons divide the family estate between themselves; but she cannot be recognized as the owner of such share until the division is actually made; she has no pre-existing right in the estate, except a right of maintenance. Judderath Teewaree v. Bisnonath Tewaree, 9 W. R., 61.

Suit by a widow to recover her husband's share, whom she alleged to be a divided member of a Hindu family, under an agreement to the following effect: "When we lived together, a disagreement arising amongst females, we have divided. . Thus we shall from this date divide and enjoy the income of the land. When the moiety of lands belonging to our uncle S. in the said three villages shall be equally divided, we shall also share our moiety equally, and obtain separate pottahs. . We hold no pecuniary concern."

Held that when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to the particular property that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership in certain defined shares, each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share in the estate, which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not been actually divided. Narayan Ay-yan v. Lakshmi Ammal, 3 Mad. Rep., A. C., 280.

A, one of four brothers in joint possession of ancestral property, separates himself in food, worship, and estate, leaving his three brothers jointly possessed of their undivided three-fourth shares. A. dies unassociated, leaving a son and heir, B. The three brothers continue and die associated, two without heirs, and a third leaving a son and heir, C. B. has no claim to any part of the undivided three-fourth shares as against C., who takes the whole absolutely. Jatub Chunder Ghose and another v. Benodebhowry Ghose, 1 Hyde's Rep. 214.

In a suit for division of a village between members of the same family, the defendant alleged that a former division relied upon by the plaintiff was merely nominal, and never intended to be carried out, and also that the village was in 1839 granted to his father for his sole use, and both these allegations were found against defendant, who appealed on the ground that the village, which is an inam, was granted to defendant for his sole use in 1857 on the death of his father. Held that the grant to defendant was not a new grant, and was subject to the rights of the other members of the family. Per Innes, J.—The defendant not having been prejudiced by the circumstance that no issue was framed upon the question whether a fresh grant was made to defendants, the decision of the lower Court ought to be confirmed. Nattam Venkataramaun v. Nattara Ramaiah, 2 Mad. Rep.

Suit by plaintiff to recover from his brother's widow, the defendant, one and a quarter share at the Mailaveram Mutta, which he alleged to have been wrongfully delivered by the revenue authorities to the defendant, in accordance with a certificate granted by the Civil Court of Masulipatam. Plaintiff alleged that he was undivided, although there was an agreement for a division. Defendant pleaded that there was a complete division under the agreement, and that her husband after division had made a will bequeathing to her what the plaintiff now claimed. The Civil Judge found separate residence, and, on the authority of paras. 282, 283, and 284 of Mr. Justice Strange's Manual, decided that the family was undivided. Held, on appeal, that the agreement partially acted upon and not denied is conclusive evidence of the division previously come to by mutual consent; that, whether the property was actually divided or undivided, the family was divided, and the brothers became capable of contracting, and did contract, and that the right to sue upon the contract clearly survived to the defendant, who must have recovered; that she had, therefore, a perfectly valid defence to the present action. Rajah Surendratty V. Rajah Surendratty Venkata, 3 Mad. Rep. A. 1. 40.

An actual partition by metes and bounds is not necessary to render a division of undivided property complete. According to Hindu law, there is a coparcenership between the different members of a united family, and survivorship follows upon it. Lalita Mohanbehr Pershad and others v. Mussammut Kundan Kooswar, 8 W. R. 116. A grandchild has a right to a share in an undivided estate which includes and carries with it a right to claim and enforce a partition of that share, must be a right of an absolute and unlimited nature, and does not belong to a Hindu widow who has been placed in possession of her deceased husband's share for her maintenance; consequently, where the widow is not an absolute proprietor, but simply an assignee of the profits for a maintenance, she cannot claim partition of the share so assigned. Bhoop Singh v. Mussamut Phool Kewar, 3 Agra Rep. 168.

The ordinary gains of science are divisible when such science has been imparted at the family expense and acquired while receiving a family maintenance, sects, where the science has been imparted at the expense of persons not members of the learner's family. Chalakonda Alaun v. Chalakonda Ratnachalan, 2 Mad. Rep. 56.
