(5) S. 87, post.
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 21.
(7) Ib.
(8) In Van Omeron v. Dowick, 2 Camp., 44.
(11) Taylor v. Barclay, 2 Sim., 221. See also The Charkieh, 42 L. J., Adm., 17. Cited in Lachmi Narain v. Reja Partab, 2 A. 17 (1878). law; (1) and the same Court also once made enquiry as to the practice of the enrolment office in the Court of Chancery; (2) while Lord Hardwicke asked an eminent conveyancer respecting the existence of a general rule of prac tice in the latter's profession. (3) So the Lord Chancellor made enquiry at the India House, upon which it appeared from the proceedings of the Governor-General of Bengal that a certain person was a Magistrate; (4) and the Vice-Chancellor made enquiry of the United States Legation whether credit would be given in the Courts of America to a document in a particular shape with a view to its admission in evidence; (5) and in a recent case enquiry was made as to the Colonial Office as to the status of the Sultan of Johore. (6) So a similar practice has been followed in this country where in applications under the Civil Procedure Code, section 380, that the plaintiff be required to furnish security for the costs of a suit, it was necessary to determine whether the cantonments of Wadwhan and Secunderabad were within the limits of British India, the Bombay Court (7) directed its Prothonotary to make enquiries from the Secretariat; (8) and the Calcutta Court (9) directed the Registrar of the Court to write to the Foreign Office to ascertain the circumstances under which the place came into existence as a British cantonment and the real character of its connection with the British Government. (10) It being suggested in the Insolvency Court of Bombay that it was desirable to enquire what had been the practice of the High Courts at Calcutta and Madras, the Bombay High Court directed letters to be written by the Prothonotary to the officers of both these Courts, requesting them to give the required information. (11)

58. No fact need be proved in any proceeding which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing, or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time, they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings:

Provided (12) that the Court may, in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions.

Principle.—Proof of such facts would ordinarily be futile. The Court has to try the questions on which the parties are at issue, not those on which they are agreed. (13) See Notes, post, and Introduction, ante.

---

(2) Doe v. Lloyd, 1 M. & Gr., 685.
see Taylor, Ev., § 21.
(4) Hutchison v. Mannington, 6 Ves., 823, 824.
(5) In re Davis's Trusts, L. R., 8 Eq., 98, 99.
(6) Mitchell v. Sultan of Johore, 1 Q. B. (1894), 149, 161. In reply a letter was sent written by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. It was contended that the letter was not sufficient, but Kay, L. J., observed, "I confess I cannot conceive a more satisfactory mode of obtaining information on the subject than such a letter," and the statement was held to be conclusive.
(7) Bayley, J.
(8) Triccam Panachand v. Bombay, Banda, dc., Railway, 9 B., 244, 247 (1885).
(9) Sale, J.
(1893). See also Lachmi Narain v. Baja Pantab,
2 A., 7 (1878).
(11) In re Bhagwandas Hurjivan, 8 B., 511, 516 (1894).
(12) See, as to the proviso and application of the section, Oriental, etc., Assurance Co. v. Narsimha Chari, 25 M., 205 (1901).
(13) Burjorji Curreji v. Munchajji Kewrji,
5 B., 143, 162 (1886).
FACTS ADMITTED.

COMMENTARY.

The section deals with the subject of admissions made for the purpose of dispensing with proof at the trial, which admissions must be distinguished from evidentiary admissions or those which are receivable as evidence on the trial. (1) A Court, in general, has to try the questions on which the parties are at issue, not those on which they are agreed. (2) Thus the admission of a defendant's vakil in Court was held to be evidence of the receipt of a certain sum of money, and to do away with the necessity for other proof. (3) So also the admission of a fact upon the pleadings will dispense with proof of that fact. (4) Although a plaintiff, when the defendant denies his claim, is bound to prove his case by the document on which he relies, still if the defendant admits any sum to be due, that admission, irrespective of proof offered by the plaintiff, is sufficient to warrant a decree in the plaintiff's favour for the amount covered by the admission. (5) It appears to be doubtful upon the English cases whether admissions for the purpose of trial amount to more than a mere waiver of proof, and whether if a party seeks to have any inference drawn from facts so admitted, he must not prove them to the jury. (6) But the terms of the present section seem to show that proof of such facts is dispensed with for all purposes, and that inferences may be drawn from them in all respects as if they had been proved by the party who seeks to draw from them such inferences.

Admissions for the purpose of a trial in civil cases may be divided into (a) admissions on the record, which are either actual, i.e., either on the pleadings or in answer to interrogatories or implied from the pleadings; and (b) admissions between the parties, which may either be by agreement or notice. (7) Such admissions may thus be made either (a) pursuant to notice; (8) (b) by agreement at (9). or before (1) the trial; (c) by the pleadings. (2) In the case of admissions made before the hearing, the section requires that the admissions be in the handwriting of the party or of his agent. The admissions mentioned in this section take the place of witnesses called to prove the facts admitted, but in any case the Court may in its discretion require the facts howsoever admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission. When an admission, as frequently happens, is made at the hearing, the Judge’s note is sufficient record of the fact. Generally as to what takes place before a Judge at a trial, civil or criminal, the statement of the presiding Judge or his notes are conclusive. Neither the affidavits of bystanders, nor of jurors, nor the notes of counsel nor of shorthand writers are admissible to controvert the notes or statement of the Judge. (3) It has been held that an admission in a civil case is conclusive if made for the purpose of dispensing with the proof at the trial. (4) But an admission made by a party to a suit or his attorney that a certain fact exists and need not be proved, does not dispense with proof of the existence of that fact subsequent to the date of the admission. (5) The function of admissions made on the pleadings is to limit the issues and therewith the scope of the evidence admissible. (6) Where in a suit for specific performance of an agreement the defendant admitted in his written statement the terms of the agreement and its execution, the Court held that the plaintiff was not called upon to prove the execution of the agreement, or to put it in evidence, and citing the case of McGowan v. Smith (7) and Gresley on Evidence, (8) remarked as follows:—‘A Court, in general, has to try the questions on which the parties are at issue, not those on which they are agreed; and ‘admissions,’ which have been deliberately made for the purposes of the suit whether in the pleadings or by agreement, will act as an estoppel to the admission of any evidence contradicting them. This includes any document that is by reference incorporated in the bill or answer.’ (9) The point is not in issue; and as to the counter-statements of the parties, ‘a plea or a special replication’ admits every point that it does not directly put in issue. The same rule applies to an answer when it assumes the form of a demurrer or plea by submitting a point of law or by introducing new facts. Thus a submission that the defendants would not be in any way affected by the notice set forth in the bill, precluded them from disputing the validity of this notice.’ (10) Such rules are to be applied with discretion in this country, where a strict system of pleading is not followed; (11) but here, as I suppose everywhere, the language of Lord Cairns holds true, ‘that the first object of pleading is to inform the persons against whom the suit is directed, what the charge is that is laid against them.’ (12) The principle is in order to obtain the relief to which upon a true construction of the law he may be entitled; Tagore v. Tagore, I. A., Sup. Vol., 71 (1872); Surenndra Keshav v. Doorga Sundari, 19 I. A., 115 (1892); Gopee Lall v. Chandraoose Bukorjes, 11 B. R., 395 (1872). An erroneous admission by counsel or pleader on a point of law does not bind the party; Makarami Beni v. Dudd Nath, 1 C. W. N., 274 (1899); Krishnaji Narayan v. Rajnai Manick, 24 B., 360.

(1) S. 58, and see Civ. Pr. Code, s. 128, supra.
(2) S. 58, etc. p. 351, post.
(3) R. v. Pandanji Dinabha, 10 Bom. H. C. R., 75, 81 (1873), where the cases are collected. Norton, Ev., 428. In an earlier case in the Calcutta High Court it was stated that a judgment deliberately recording the admission of a pleader must be taken as correct, unless it is contradicted by an affidavit; or the Judge’s own admission that the record he made was wrong; How v. Tindal, 16 W. R., 107 (1871).
(4) Urugburi v. Butterfield, 37 Ch. D., 357; Harvey v. Croydon Union, 26 Ch. D., 249; Gresley, Ev., 629; Taylor, Ev., 783.
(6) Wills, Ev., 101.
(7) 25 L. J., Ch., 8.
(8) Law of Evidence, 457, 22.
(9) Id., 457.
(10) Gresley, Ev., 457, 22.
(11) See next paragraph.
equally valid as applied to either party in the cause. The Court is to frame the issues according to allegations made in the plaint or in the written statements tendered in the suit... But the issues, as they stand, were suggested by the defendant’s counsel. They waive controversy as to the actual execution of the document, assume it to have been executed, and raise questions only that depend for their pertinence on that assumption. Under such circumstances the plaintiff is not, I think, called on to prove the execution of the document or to put it in evidence. If the document being pronounced absolutely invalid for some purpose on considerations of public policy it were sought to defeat the law through the effect usually given to an admission in pleading, such an attempt could not be allowed to succeed, but for its proposed purpose in this case it is not invalid. ’’(1) An admission may be implied. Thus where a suit is so conducted as to lead to the inference that a certain fact is admitted, the Court may treat it as proved, and a party in appeal cannot afterwards question it and recede from the tacit admission.(2) And this is so not only for the particular issue, but for all purposes, and for the whole case.(3) So, where counsel, in his opening, states, though he does not subsequently prove, his client to be in possession of a certain document, this will, after notice to produce, admit secondary evidence thereof from his adversary. (4)

A vakil’s general powers in the conduct of a suit include the power to abandon an issue which in his discretion he thinks it inadvisable to press.(5)

The effect given in the English Courts to admissions on the pleadings has always been greater than that given to admission in the less technical pleadings in the Courts in India.(6) A written statement put in by a defendant is not a plea by way of confession and avoidance, whereby the defendant is bound by the confession and so compelled to prove the avoidance; it is a statement of the grounds of his defence, and he must verify the statement. It is like an answer in Chancery which, if read as an admission, the whole must be taken together. A defendant’s written statement may, like every other statement made by a defendant, be used as evidence against him, but like every other statement made by a defendant, the whole statement must be taken together.(7) The rule that whenever a material averment well pleaded is passed over by the adverse party without denial, it is thereby admitted, is not applicable to the Indian

---

(1) Barjorji Curretti v. Muncherji Kuverji, 5 B. 143, 152, 153 (1860); see Bandhaya v. Ganyaya, 13 M. 312 (1860); but as to admissions with respect to unstamped or unregistered documents, see a. 65, post, cl. (b).

(2) Mohima Chunder v. Ram Kishore, 23 W. R., 174 (1875); s. c., 15 B. L. R., 142, 155; following Stracy v. Blake, 1 M. & W., 168; Doe v. Roe, 1 E. & B., 279.

(3) Bolton v. Sherman, 2 M. & W., 403.

(8) Anand Moyee v. Sheeb Chander, 2 W. R. (F. C.), 19 (1862); 9 M. I. A., 301. See, as to this case, Musat Ahmedee v. Dobre Peraoud, 18 W. R., 287 (1872); Soonataun Saka v. Ramjoe Saka, Marsh., 549 (1863); Kridebeesh Mutee v. Ram Dhen, 7 W. R., 629 (1867); Shado Singh v. Ramanuopah Lall, 9 W. R., 60 (1865); Bhooden Chunder v. Ram Dayal, 14 W. R., 56 (1870). [The system of procedure in this country is not such that if a defendant fails to dispute or contest a under the Civil Procedure Code issues have been settled, averments upon which no issue is framed should be taken to be admitted, as the Court, before proceeding to frame and record the issue, is directed to enquire and ascertain upon what questions of law or fact the parties are at issue. If a party really intends by his pleadings to raise a particular question, he should request the Court to frame an issue upon it. The other party then has notice of such a question being raised and is enabled to produce evidence upon it. (1)

So where in a suit praying for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff’s possession of certain land the plaintiff in the plaint alleged obstruction by the defendant, and it was not denied by the defendant in his written statement or put in issue at the hearing; it was held that it might be presumed that the defendant did not deny the fact of obstruction. (2)

Where there was merely an admission by implication in the denial of the legal effect imputed to the fact alleged, it was held that an admission of a fact on the pleadings by implication is not an admission for any other purpose than that of the particular issue and is not tantamount to proof of the fact. (3)

In re-casting the Code of Civil Procedure it was at first proposed to enact that every allegation of fact in any written statement, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication or stated to be not admitted by the opposite party, shall be taken to be admitted for the purposes of the suit. This section was, however, struck out in Committee, and instead thereof it has been enacted that, at the first hearing of the suit, the Court shall ascertain from the defendant or his pleader whether he admits or denies the allegations of fact made in the plaint and shall ascertain from each party or his pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of fact as are made in the written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party, against whom they are made and shall record such admissions and denials. (4)

When the defendant admits a sum to be due for rent, the Court may rightly give a decree for it, irrespectively of the claim made in the plaint. (5)

A written statement cannot be read as evidence against any party to the suit save the person by whom it is made and those who are bound by admissions made by him. (6)

The section only deals with the authority of agents to make admissions of particular facts in the suit. There is a considerable difference between the case where a pleader by way of compromise purports to give up a right claimed by the client, or to saddle him with a liability that is not admitted, and the case where a pleader makes admissions as to relevant facts in the usual course of litigation, however much those admissions affect the client’s interest. The power to bind by such admissions, which, in effect, is but dispensing with proof of the facts admitted is one of the well-recognised incidents of a pleader’s general authority. To deny power so to bind the client or to do any act actually necessary for the due conduct of litigation point, he thereby admits it. On the contrary if he allows judgment to go by default, the plaintiff is just as much bound to prove his case; Shaiik Hameedoolah v. Gendu Lall, 17 W. R., 171 (1872); Burjorji Cursetji v. Muncherji Kucertji, 5 B., 43, 152 (1880); contra Chandee Churn v. Mobaruck Ali, 12 W. R., 469 (1870); as to “pleading over,” see Norton, Ev., 61, 115.

(2) Apaji Patil v. Aya, 26 B., 735 (1902).

(4) Field, Ev., 164, 165; Civ. Pr. Code, s. 117; see s. 58, post.

(5) Roobhini Kant v. Sharikatuneh, 13 B. L. R., 246a (1873); Lmtime Kanto v. Summendri Lusker, 13 B. L. R., 243, 253 (1874); Moomand Akaobhuthy v. Heera Ram, 24 W. R., 82 (1878); see notes to s. 165, post.

would so embarrass and thwart a pleader as in a great measure to destroy his usefulness. But no such undesirable results would follow from holding that in the absence of specific authority of a pleader cannot bind by compromises strictly such.(1)

In a civil case there is no doubt that the party or his pleader may at any time relieve his adversary from the necessity of proof; and the generality of the language used in this section might lead to the inference that this was so in a criminal trial also. But as to admissions before the hearing it is certain that in a criminal case they can only be used as evidence, and for this purpose it does not signify whether they are in writing or not; and it is generally supposed that in a criminal charge admissions made after a plea of not guilty can also only be made use of as evidence.(2) In England the rule has been stated to be that in a trial for felony the prisoner (and therefore also his counsel, attorney or vakil) can make no admissions so as to dispense with proof, though a confession may be proved as against him, subject to the rules relating to the admissibility of confessions.(3) In cases of felony it is the constant practice of the Judges at the Assizes to refuse to allow even counsel to make any admission.(4) In a case also of indictment for a misdemeanour (perjury) where it appeared that the attorneys on both sides had agreed that the formal proof should be dispensed with and part of the prosecutor's case admitted, Lord Abinger, C. B., said: "I cannot allow any admission to be made on the part of the defendant unless it is made at the trial by the defendant or his counsel;" and the defendant's counsel declining to make any admission the defendant was acquitted.(5) Prior to this Act the reported decisions are not uniform.(6) It has been suggested that the section applies to civil suits only.(7) Though it is not in terms so strictly limited, the suggestion receives warrant from the phraseology employed which is more suitable to civil than to criminal proceedings. Whether this section applies to criminal cases or not, the Court may, by the express terms of the section, in its discretion require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions. It is not the practice of counsel or vakils to make admissions in criminal cases, and even if they have the power, they will seldom, if ever, assume the responsibility of making such admissions. Were such an admission made, the Court would doubtless in most criminal cases require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions under the provisions of the last paragraph of the section.(8) As to a plea of guilty see s. 43, pp. 83-84, ante.

---

(1) In the previous editions this subject which does not belong to the Law of Evidence will be found treated.
(2) Markby, Ev., Art. 51.
(3) Steph. Dig., Art. 60.
(4) Phil., Ev., 10th Ed., 391, n. 6; Wills, Ev., 119, see Roscoe, Cr. Ev., 120, 121.
(5) E. v. Thoras I., 8 C. & F., 575; it will be observed that this was a case of admission before trial, the Judge assuming that an admission could be made at the trial by the defendant or his counsel.
(6) E. v. Kazim Mundle, 17 W. R., Cr., 49 (1872), it was held that admissions made by a prisoner's vakil cannot be used against the prisoner. But in E. v. Gopralu, 12 W. R., Cr., 80 (1869), proof of a fact was dispensed with on the admission of the prisoner's counsel; in the case of R. v. Surroop Chunder, 12 W. R., Cr., 76 (1869), it was said, with reference to a particular arrangement, "so far as prisoners can consent to anything, that arrangement was assented to by the vakils of each party."
(7) Norton, Ev., 238.
(8) v. also notes to s. 5, ante.
CHAPTER IV.

OF ORAL EVIDENCE.

Oral evidence has been defined by the Act to be all statements which the Court permits or requires to be made before it by witnesses in relation to matters of fact under enquiry.(1) This Chapter declares (a) that all facts except the contents of documents may be proved by oral evidence, a proposition of law which, though obvious, was lost sight of in several cases anterior to the passing of the Act. So it was held that oral evidence, if worthy of credit, is sufficient without documentary evidence, to prove a fact or title; (2) such as boundaries; (3) the existence of an agreement, e.g., a farming lease; (4) the quantity of defendant’s land and the amount of its rent; (5) the fact of possession; (6) a prescriptive title; (7) a pedigree; (8) an adjustment of accounts; (9) the discharge of an obligation created by writing; (10) in short (as the Section now declares), all facts except the contents of documents.

It is an error to suppose that oral evidence not supported by documentary evidence, is of no importance whatever for the determination of the true merits of a case.(11) There is no presumption of perjury against oral testimony, but before acting upon such testimony its credibility should be tested both intrinsically and extrinsically.(12) And in the contradiction of oral testimony, which occurs in almost every Indian case, the Court must look to the documentary evidence, in order to see which side the truth lies.(13) Much greater credence also is to be given to men’s acts than to their alleged words, which are so easily mistaken or misrepresented.(14)

The contents of documents may not (except when secondary evidence is admissible)(15) be proved by oral evidence because it is a cardinal rule, not one of technicality but of substance, which it is dangerous to depart from, that where written documents exist, they shall be produced as being the best evidence of their own contents.(16) But the rule is confined to documents. Though the non-production of an article may afford ground for observations.

(1) S. 3, ante, as to testimony by signs, see note to s. 59, post.
(2) Ram Soodur v. Akina Bibee, 8 W. R., 366 (1867).
(3) Ranee Surat v. Rajender Kishore, 9 W. R., 125 (1868); but see Goluck Chander v. Rajah Breamurd, W. R., (1864), 135.
(10) Ramanadamuniar v. Rama Bhat, 2 Mad. H. C. R., 412 (1865); Guman Gullabai v. Storabji Barjarji, 1 Bom. H. C. R., 11 (1860); Dalip Singh v. Durga Prasad, 1 A., 442 (1877) [even though there be a written receipt not produced]; see s. 91, ill. (e), post.
(12) In the matter of Goomee, 17 W. R., Cr., 59, 60 (1872).
(15) See s. 65, post.
more or less weighty, according to the circumstances, it only goes to the weight, not to the admissibility of the evidence. When the question is as to the effect of a written instrument, the instrument itself is primary evidence of its contents, and until it is produced, or the non-production is excused, no secondary evidence can be received. But there is no case whatever deciding that when the issue is as to the state of a chattel, e.g., the soundness of a horse, or the quality of the bulk of goods sold by sample, the production of the chattel is primary evidence, and no other evidence can be given till the chattel is produced in Court for its inspection. (1)

(b) Secondly, this Chapter declares that oral evidence must in all cases be direct. That is, it must consist of a declaration by the witness that he perceived by his own senses the fact to which he testifies. Thus if A is charged with the murder of B, and the facts alleged by nine witnesses in support of the charge and shown to be relevant under Part I, are as follows: (a) A came running from the scene of the murder at 12 o'clock. (b) Some one screamed out at the same time and place, "A, you are murdering me." (c) A left his house at 11½, vowing that he would be revenged on B for pressing so hard for his debt. (d) There was blood at the scene of the murder and on A's hands and clothes. (e) There were tracks of footsteps from the scene of the murder to A's house, which correspond with A's shoes. (f) The wound which B received was, in my opinion, of a character to cause death, and could not have been inflicted by himself. (g) The deceased said: "The sword-blow inflicted by A has killed me." (h) The prisoner said to me, "I killed B because I was desperate." (i) The prisoner told me that he was deeply indebted to B. The prisoner was a man of excellent character.

All these various circumstances, statements and opinions could be relevant facts under Part I, and the rule now under consideration provides that, in each instance, they must be proved by direct evidence; that is, the fact that A came running from the scene of the murder, as alleged, must be proved by a witness who tells the Court that he himself saw A so running; the fact of the screams heard by the second witness must be proved by the second witness telling the Court that he did hear such screams; the fact of A, having vowed, shortly before the murder, to be revenged on B must be proved by the third witness, who heard the vow; so, the blood by the person who saw it; the footsteps, by the person who tracked and compared them; the doctor's opinion as to the wound, by the doctor testifying that that is his opinion; the dying man's statement, and the prisoner's confession by a person who heard them. They must not be proved by the evidence of persons to whom any of the witnesses above-mentioned may have told what they heard or saw, or thought.

On the other hand, the evidence of the following seven witnesses would be indirect: (k) My child came in and said "I have seen A running in such a direction." (l) The police told me that screams had been heard at such time. (m) Father said, "I am sure there will be murder, for A has just left the house, vowing to be revenged on B." (n) The police said that they had compared the footsteps and found that they exactly fitted. (o) The doctor said that the man could never cut himself like that. (p) Everybody said that there was no more doubt, for the deceased man had identified the prisoner. (q) B's wife told me the day before that A was heavily indebted to him.

All the evidence of witnesses, (k) to (q), would be inadmissible, not because the facts to which it refers are irrelevant, but because it is not 'direct,' that is, not given by the persons who with their own senses perceived the facts described, or in their own minds formed the opinions expressed. The only use that could be made of it would be for the purpose of corroborating some other witness by proving a former consistent statement made by him at the time: (1) or of discrediting him by proving a former inconsistent statement. (2) Except for these purposes it would be inadmissible. (3) The section, however, provides by way of exception that if the fact to be proved is the opinion of an expert who cannot be called (which is the case in the majority of instances in this country), and if such opinion has been expressed in any published treatise, it may be proved by the production of the treatise. (4)

---

(1) B. v. Francis, 12 Cox C. C., 612, 616, per Lord Coleridge, C. J., and as to notice to produce things other than documents, see Editor's Note to Line v. Taylor, 3 E. & F., 731 at p. 733; as to parol evidence of inscriptions on banners, etc., see The King v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald., 566, 574.

Upon the respective values of oral and documentary testimony, see the Introduction to Chapter V, post. The prevalence of false testimony in this country has been the subject of frequent judicial comment. In the case of Ranga v. Athama, (5) the Judicial Committee observed as follows: "These instruments are produced, and the facts tending to this conclusion are sworn to by a vast number of witnesses. There appears to us to be no objection to this testimony, beyond the observation which may be made on all Hindu testimony that perjury and forgery are so extensively prevalent in India, that little reliance can be placed on it." But all native evidence must not be doubted. "It is quite true that such is the lamentable disregard of truth prevailing amongst the native inhabitants of Hindustan that all oral evidence is necessarily received with great suspicion: and when opposed by the strong improbability of the transaction to which they depose, or weakened by the mode in which they speak, it may be of little avail. But we must be careful not to carry this caution to an extreme length, nor utterly to discard oral evidence merely because it is oral, nor unless the impeaching or discrediting circumstances are clearly found to exist. It would be very dangerous to exercise the judicial function as if no credit could necessarily be given to witnesses deposing voce vico how necessarily soever it may be always to sift such evidence with great minuteness and care." (6) "It would, indeed, be most dangerous to say that, where the probabilities are in favour of the transaction, we should conclude against it solely because of the general fallibility of native evidence. Such an argument would go to an extent which can never be maintained in this or any other Court, for it would tend to establish a rule that all oral evidence must be discarded; and it is most manifest that, however fallible such evidence may be, however carefully to be watched, justice never can be administered in the most important causes without recourse to it." (7) "The ordinary legal and reasonable presumptions of fact must indulge and for which some districts are notorious. The upper and more educated classes are as free from them as the same classes in other countries of equal civilization; and they regard their existence among their less enlightened countrymen," ib., p. 50. It must also be remembered that (in the word of Jackson, J.), as witnesses, "we have to do almost universally with the meaner classes; that the respectable native avoids being made a witness, as we should shun the small-pox and that witnesses, therefore, are scarcely a fair sample of the population. R. v. Khaki Bux, B. L. R., F. B. 432 (1868). See also Marshall, R., 178, 182.

(1) See s. 157, post.
(2) See s. 155 (3), post.
(3) Cunningham, Ev., 38-40.
(4) S. 60, Proviso (1).
(5) 4 Moo. I. A., 106 (1848); see also Mudhol Soodun v. Surpop Chunder, 4 Moo. I. A., 441 (1849); cited in R. v. Tiluk, 6 Bom. L. R., 330 (1904); in which the High Court commented on the profitless generalization as to the unreliability of native testimony; Bunwarli Lal v. Mahorojah Heitarain, 7 Moo. I. A., 167 (1858); Ramamani Anmol v. Kulanthai Natchear, 14 Moo. I. A., 354 (1871); R. v. Khaki Bux, B. L. R., F. B., 452 (1866); Sowarji Vignet v. Channa Nayaran, 10 Moo. I. A., 162 (1864); Musomut Eden v. Museumut Buchon, 11 W. R., 345 (1880); and Field, Ev., pp. 47-50, 57-63, where the subject is discussed. "It would, however, be a great mistake to suppose that all natives of India are addicted to these vices in which some natives not be lost sight of in the trial of Indian cases, however untrustworthy much of the evidence submitted to these Courts may commonly be; that is, due weight must be given to evidence there as elsewhere; and that evidence in a particular case must not be rejected from a general distrust of native testimony nor perjury widely imputed without some grave grounds to support the imputation. Such a rejection, if sanctioned, would virtually submit the decision of the rights of others to the suspicions, (1) and not to the deliberate judgment of their appointed Judges, nor must an entire history be thrown aside, because the evidence of some of the witnesses is incredible or untrustworthy. (2) Evidence of witnesses though not independent, but not shaken in cross-examination and accepted by the Judge who heard them and saw their demeanour, should not be rejected on mere suspicion where the story itself as told by them is not improbable. (3) The whole evidence is not to be rejected because part is false. The maxim "Falsus in uno falso in omnibus" must be applied in this country with great discretion; (4) for it not uncommonly happens in this country that falsehood and fabrication are employed to support a just cause. (5) In the words of the Calcutta High Court: "The Court will bear in mind that the use of fabricated written evidence by a party, however clearly established, does not relieve the Court from the duty of examining the whole of the evidence adduced on both sides, and of deciding according to the truth the matters in issue. The person using such evidence may have brought himself within the penalties of the criminal law; but the Court should not, in a civil suit, inflict a punishment under the name of a presumption. Forgery or fraud in some material part of the evidence, if it is shown to be the contrivance of a party to the proceedings, may afford a fair presumption against the whole of the evidence adduced by that party, or at least against such portion of that evidence as tends to the same conclusion with the fabricated evidence. It may, perhaps, also have the further effect of gaining a more ready admission for the evidence of his opponents. But the presumption should not be pressed too far, especially in this country, where it happens, not uncommonly, that falsehood and fabrication are employed

Moo. I. A., 167 (1858), 4 W. R., P. C., 128.

(1) Suspicion is not to be substituted for evidence; see Brennan Chandler v. Gopal Chandler, 11 Moo. I. A., 28 (1866); Fose Buz v. Fakiruddin Mohamed, 9 B. L. R., 458 (1871); Kali Chandra v. Skibchandra Bhaduri, 6 B. L. R., 501 (1870); Opherty v. Mahabir Pershad, 10 I. A., 30 (1882); R. v. Ram Saran, 8 A., 315 (1886), and cases cited next note.

(3) Mag jedula v. Ahmed Hussain, 8 C. W. N., 241 (1905); s. c., 26 A. 08, 116. In this case it was also held that the description of a witness in the heading of deposition taken down in Court is no part of the evidence given by the witness on solemn affirmation; S. C., 6 Bom. L. R., 223.

(5) Banee Burmawyece v. Maharajah Buttee- chunder, 10 Moo. I. A., 149, 150 (1864); Wise v. Sundaloomiress Charodane, 11 Moo. I. A., 163 (1867), 7 W. R., P. C., 13. ["In a native case it is not uncommon to find a true case placed on a false foundation and supported in part by false evidence, ... and it is not always a safe conclusion that a case is false and dishonest in which such falsities are found;"

Pattabhisramier v. Venkat aroo Naicken, 7 B. L. R., 142, 143 (1871); Gobiroola Gaze v. Goorooedas Roy, 2 W. R., Act X, 99 (1865); Bengal Indigo Co. v. Tarineepershad Ghose, 3 B. R., Act X, 149 (1865); Kuttu Mouhed v. Hardeb Doss, 19 W. R., 107 (1873), See also Komto Bhobor v. Roy Mathooamath, 1 W. R., 155 (1864), in which case it was held that the Judges should not have dismissed the whole claim on the ground that great part of plaintiff's claim being shown to be untrue, none of it could be reliable.

Digitized by Google
to support a just cause."
(1) If a part of the evidence of a witness is disbelieved other evidence coming from the same quarter must be viewed warily but that does not exonerate the Court from weighing whatever evidence has actually been tendered and the mode in which it has been met.
(2) In Meer Usdoolah v. Beeby Imamam(3) Baron Parke said:—"There are some other facts which are established beyond all possibility of doubt, and there is no better criterion of the truth no safer rule for investigating cases of conflicting evidence, where perjury and fraud must exist on the one side or the other, than to consider what facts are beyond dispute, and to examine which of the two cases best accords with these facts, according to the ordinary course of human affairs and the usual habits of life;" and in another case the Privy Council said: "In examining evidence, with a view to test whether several witnesses who bear testimony to the same facts are worthy of credit, it is important to see whether they give their evidence in the same words, or whether they substantially agree not indeed concurring in all the minute particulars of what passed, but with that agreement in substance and that variation in unimportant details which are usually found in witnesses intending to speak the truth and not tutored to tell a particular story."
(4) In the undermentioned case (5) the Court observed with regard to discrepancies in evidence as follows:—"No doubt it may be contended that if these witnesses were tutored ones, care would have been taken to see that they should tell the same story. But care is not always taken or effectually taken, in such cases, and discrepancies are not less informative of testimony because a greater sagacity on the part of the witnesses would have avoided them."

In short, oral evidence must be considered in conjunction with the documentary proofs on the record, and the probabilities arising from all the surrounding circumstances of the case; and the only satisfactory mode of dealing with a disputed point of fact is to consider the full force and joint result of all the evidence, direct or presumptive, bearing upon the point, a precaution which is no where more necessary than in this country where oral evidence per se is looked upon with so much distrust.

"The consideration of a case," observed their Lordships in the Privy Council in the case of Maharajah Rajendro v. Sheopursun Misser,(7) "on evidence can seldom be satisfactory, unless all the presumptions for and against a claim arising on all the evidence offered or on proofs withheld, on the course of pleading, and tardy production of important portions of claim or defence be viewed in connection with the oral or documentary proof which per se might suffice to establish it." "The observance of this rule is nowhere more necessary than in the Courts of Justice in this country. We cannot shut our eyes to the melancholy fact that the average value of oral evidence in this country is exceedingly low; and although in dealing with such evidence we are not to start with any presumption of perjury, we cannot possibly take too much care to guard against undue credulity. There is hardly a case involving a disputed

(2) Komoswar Koer v. Bharat Persaud, 4 C. W. N., 18 (1899), P. C.; as to disbelief of one statement and setting up alternative case, see Casperos v. Kedarnath Surbadhikari, 5 C. W. N. 858 (1901).
(3) 1 Moo. I. A., 19, 44 (1838); s. c., 5 W. R., P. C., 26.
(4) Nama Narain v. Huree Punth, Marshall's Rep., 436 (1862) [analysis of conflicting evidence in a suit setting up a will]. In Haranund Roy v. Raw Gopal, 4 C. W. N., 430 (1899): the Privy Council speak of "small differences quite consistent with the truthfulness of the witnesses who, it will be remembered, were speaking of conversations some 12 or 14 years after they took place" and see remarks at p. 431. It.
(6) Rajah Lecianund v. Musunam Basheereeniam, 16 W. R., 102 (1871), per Dwarkanath Mit- ter, J.
(7) 10 Moo. I. A., 453.
question of fact, in which there is not a conflict of testimony; one set of witnesses swearing point blank to a particular state of facts, the other swearing with equal distinctness to a state of facts diametrically opposed to it. If therefore we were to form our conclusions upon the bare depositions of the witnesses, without reference to the conduct of the parties and the presumptions and probabilities legitimately arising from the record, all hope of success in discovering the truth must be at an end.

In the case last mentioned the same learned Judge observed as follows:

"It is a truth confirmed by all experience, that in the great majority of cases fraud is not capable of being established by positive and express proofs. It is by its very nature secret in its movements, and if those whose duty it is to investigate questions of fraud were to insist upon direct proof in every case, the ends of justice would be constantly, if not invariably, defeated. We do not mean to say that fraud can be established by any less proof or by any different kind of proof from that which is required to establish any other disputed question of fact, or that circumstances of mere suspicion which lead to no certain result should be taken as sufficient proof of fraud, or that fraud should be presumed against anybody in any case; but what we mean to say is that in the generality of cases circumstantial evidence is our only resource in dealing with questions of fraud, and if this evidence is sufficient to overcome the natural presumption of honesty and fair dealing and to satisfy a reasonable mind of the existence of fraud by raising a counter-presumption, there is no reason whatever why we should not act upon it.

If a Judge in dealing with a question of facts forms his conclusion upon a portion of the evidence before him, excluding the other portion under an erroneous impression that it is not legal evidence but conjecture, there can be no doubt that the investigation is erroneous in law, and that the error thus committed is likely to have produced an error in the decision of the case upon the merits inasmuch as it is impossible to say whether the Judge would have arrived at the same conclusion if he had looked into all the evidence upon the record without excluding any part of it from a mistaken idea that it was not admissible in law. And if the Judge has illegally rejected the evidence on the question of fraud, does it not necessarily follow that he has committed an error in law in the investigation of the case which goes to vitiate his whole decision on the merits."

59. All facts, except the contents of documents, may be proved by oral evidence.

Principle.—See Introduction, ante.

s. 3 ("Fact.")

s. 3 ("Oral evidence.") ss. 61—66 (Proof of content of documents.)

COMMENTARY.

The distinction between primary and secondary evidence in the Act applies to documents only. All other facts may be proved by oral evidence. See Evidence.

(1) In some cases effect can be given to testimony without discreditting witnesses who have given opposing testimony. See Mohan Mohun v. Bank of Bengal, I C. L. R., 614 [in which case it was argued that the fact the case in favour of plaintiff without impeaching the honesty and veracity of two European gentlemen of position, the secretary and manager of the Bengal Bank respectively].

(2) Mathura Pandey v. Ram Syaha, 3 B. I. R., A. C. J., 112 (1889), per Mitter, J.

(3) Ib., p. 110.
Introduction, ante, where this section is discussed. It is not very happily worded. Contents of documents may be proved by oral evidence under certain circumstances; that is to say, when such evidence of their contents is admissible as secondary evidence. (1) Where a fact may be proved by oral evidence it is not necessary that the statement of the witness should be oral. Any method of communicating thought which the circumstances of the case or the physical condition of the witness demand may, in the discretion of the Court, be employed. Thus a deaf mute may testify by signs, by writing, or through an interpreter. So where a dying woman, conscious, but without power of articulation, on being asked whether the defendant was her assailant, and if so, to squeeze the hand of the questioner, the question and the fact of her affirmative pressure were held admissible in evidence. (3)

60. Oral evidence must, in all cases whatever, be direct; that is to say—if it refers to a fact which could be seen, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he saw it; if it refers to a fact which could be heard, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he heard it;

if it refers to a fact which could be perceived by any other sense or in any other manner, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he perceived it by that sense or in that manner;

if it refers to an opinion or to the grounds on which that opinion is held, it must be the evidence of the person who holds that opinion on those grounds: (3)

Provided that the opinions of experts expressed in any treatise commonly offered for sale, and the grounds on which such opinions are held may be proved by the production of such treatises if the author is dead or cannot be found, or has become incapable of giving evidence or cannot be called as a witness without an amount of delay or expense which the Court regards as unreasonable:

Provided also that, if oral evidence refers to the existence or condition of any material thing other than a document, the Court may, if it thinks fit, require the production of such material things for its inspection.

Principle.—This is the best evidence. Derivative or second-hand evidence is excluded owing to its infirmity as compared with its original source. (4) See Introduction, ante, and Notes, post.

s. 3 ("Oral evidence.")
s. 3 ("Fact.")
s. 3 ("Evidence.")
s. 3 ("Court.")
s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 45—51 (Opinion when relevant.)
s. 61 (Grounds of opinion.)
s. 43 (Opinions of experts.)
s. 165 (Judge's power to put questions or order production.)

(1) Norton, Ev., 239; see s. 63, cl. (5), post.
(2) Best, Ev., p. 108; see E. v. Abdallak, 7 A., 366 (F. B.), (1886), cited at p. 200, note 4 ante.
(4) Best, Ev., § 402, et seq.; Taylor, Ev., § 507, et seq.; Powell, Ev., 157, and see Notes, post.

COMMENTARY.

This section enacts the general rule against the admission of hearsay. "Hearsay evidence has been defined to be, and in its legal sense denotes, 'that kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit given to the witness himself, but which rests also in part on the varacity and competence of some other person.' (1) Another definition is: 'the evidence not of what the witness knows himself but of what he has heard from others.' It has also been defined as 'A statement made by a witness of what has been said and declared out of Court by a person not a party to the suit.' Bentham's definition is: 'The supposed oral testimony transmitted through oral: supposed orally delivered evidence of a supposed extrajudicially narrating witness judicially delivered via voce by the judicially deposing witness.' It must be borne in mind that the term 'hearsay' is not only used with reference to what is done or written, but also to what is spoken. The general rule with regard to hearsay evidence is, that it is not admissible, and within the scope of this rule is included all statements, oral or written, the probative force of which depends either wholly or in part on the credit of an unexamined person, notwithstanding that such statements may possess an independent evidentiary value derived from the circumstances under which they were made, and also where no better evidence of the facts stated is to be obtained. The fact, therefore, that a statement was made by a person not called as a witness, and the fact that a statement is contained in any book, document, or record whatever, proof of what is not admissible on other grounds, are respectively deemed to be irrelevant to the truth of the matter stated." (2) This is the general rule, but there are several exceptions to it as will be seen from a consideration of sections 32, 33, ante. The late Mr. Justice Stephen asserted that the phrase 'hearsay is no evidence' had many meanings: its common and most important meaning, he said, might be expressed by saying that the connection between events and reports that they have happened is generally so remote that it is expedient to regard the existence of the reports as irrelevant to the occurrence of the events except in certain cases. Another meaning is, that it expresses the same thing from a different point of view, and is subject to no exceptions whatever. It asserts that, whatever may be the relation of a fact to be proved to the fact in issue, it must, if proved by oral evidence, be proved by direct evidence; e.g., if it were to be proved that A, who died 50 years ago, said that he had heard from his father, B, who died 100 years ago, that A's grandfather C, had told D, C's elder brother, died without issue, A's statement must be proved by someone who, with his own ears, heard him make it. If (as in the case of slander) the speaking of the words was the very point in issue, they must be proved in exactly the same way; i.e., the fact of their utterance by the defendant must be deposed to by some person hearing them used. Evidence given as to character or general opinion is not an exception to this rule, for, when a man swears that another has a good character, he means that he has heard many people, though he does not particularly recollect what people speak well of him or recollect all that they said.

The grounds for the exclusion of hearsay evidence are these: (a) the irresponsibility of the original declarants for the evidence is not given on oath or

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 370. As to the history of the Rule, see Wigmore, Ev., § 1384. Down to the middle of the 17th century, hearsay statements were constantly received.

(2) Law Times, p. 4, May 2nd, 1896.
under personal responsibility; (b) it cannot be tested by cross-examination; (c) it supposes some better testimony and its reception encourages the substitution of weaker for stronger proofs; (d) its tendency to protract legal investigations to an embarrassing and dangerous length; (e) its intrinsic weakness; (f) its incompetency to satisfy the mind as to the existence of the fact; for truth depreciates in the process of repetition. 'It is matter of common experience that statements in common conversation are made so lightly and are so liable to be misunderstood or misrepresented that they cannot be depended upon for any important purpose unless they are made under special circumstances,' (1) and (g) the opportunities for fraud its admission would open.' (2) A statement which 'if made by a witness' would be perfectly relevant is when so made, excluded because it is wanting in the sanction and the tests which apply to sworn testimony and admitted only when in respect of the persons making it, or of the circumstances under which it was made, there is some security for its accuracy, which counteracts the absence of those safeguards. (3) The exceptional cases in which such statements are admitted are dealt with in ss. 17-39, ante. (4) Oral or written statements made by persons not called as witnesses, are generally speaking, and subject to the exceptions mentioned, not receivable to prove the truth of the matters stated; that is, such a statement is inadmissible as hearsay when it is offered as proof of its own truth. But statements by non-witnesses may be original evidence, and as such admissible, that is, where the making of the statement and not its accuracy is the material point. (5) The test whether a statement belongs to one class or the other is the purpose for which it is tendered.

The intention of this section is to take care that whatever is offered as evidence shall itself sustain the character of evidence. It must be immediate. It may not be mediate or delivered through a medium, second-hand, or to use the technical expression hearsay. (6) A who saw, heard, &c., must be produced.

(1) Steph. Intro., 161.
(4) See notes to these sections: §§ 17-31 (admissions and confessions); 32-33 (statements by persons who cannot be called as witnesses), 34-38 (statements made under special circumstances). To these may be added statements made in the presence of a party. See n. 8.
(5) e.g., statements which are part of the res gestae, whether as actually constituting a fact in issue (e.g., a libel) or accompanying one (ss. 5, 8) statements amounting to acts of ownership, as leases, licenses and grants (ss. 13, statements which corroborate or contradict the testimony of witnesses (ss. 155, 157, 158.) Enquiries made of, and answers received from, parties (themselves not called) tendered to the Judge to show reasonable search for a lost document or an absent person are admissible: (R. v. Braintrice, 1 E. & E., 51; Wyatt v. Bateman, 7 C & P., 586; see notes to s. 32. In some cases what is called a verbal fact ("There is a category of cases in which a man's words are his acts, sometimes indeed the most important acts of his life," per Erle, J., Shilling v. Accidental Death Co., post), may be admissible as original evidence, although the particulars of it may be excluded as hearsay, e.g., the fact that a person made a communication to another, in consequence of which an act was done (R. v. Williams, 4 Cox, 92; R. v. Wainwright, 13 Cox, 171), or consulted him on a given subject (Shilling v. Accidental Death Co., 4 Jur. N. S., 244, see s. 8, and Cunningham, Ev., 94, or complained of an injury (see s. 8, Illustr. 6), (f): in this case, however, according to Indian law, the particulars are receivable), or had a dispute prior to the publication of a libel (s. 9, Illustr. 6), see Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 188. 'Hearsay,' in its legal sense, is confined to that kind of evidence (whether spoken or written), which does not derive its credibility solely from the credit due to the witness himself, but rests also in part on the veracity and competency of some other person from whom the witness may have received his information. Phillips, Ev., 143.
(6) In his notes on this Act, Markby, J., says that the first four paragraphs of this section have
The fact cannot be proved through the medium of B who did not himself see, hear, &c., but is prepared to swear that A told him he had seen, heard, &c. So with respect to the fourth case, opinion evidence; when such is admissible; this section necessitates the production of the witness who holds the opinion; it excludes the evidence of any witness who can merely say that he has heard another express such an opinion. It is admissible evidence for a living witness to state his opinion on the existence of a family custom and to state as the grounds of that opinion, information derived from deceased persons and the weight of the evidence would depend on the position and character of the witness and of the persons on whose statement he has formed his opinion. But it must be the expression of independent opinion based on hearsay and not mere repetition of hearsay.

(1) The same rule of excluding hearsay, second-hand, or mediate—evidence prevails with regard to circumstantial evidence, as to direct evidence. Circumstantial evidence must be established by 'direct'—evidence within the meaning of this section, namely, by witnesses who themselves saw, &c., the facts to which they depose, and which are the material for inference respecting the existence of the fact in issue.

(2) This section provides that when it (i.e., the oral evidence) refers to a fact which could be seen, it (i.e., the oral evidence) must be the evidence of a witness who says he saw it. This last 'it' is somewhat indefinite; but I think that this 'it' has reference to the fact previously spoken of; and I think the fact previously spoken of is the fact deposed to, and therefore not always the fact which it is ultimately intended to prove. In other words, I do not think it was intended by this section to exclude circumstantial evidence of things which could be seen, heard, and felt, though the wording of the section it undoubtedly ambiguous, and at first sight might appear to have that meaning.

(3) In the undermentioned case the Privy Council held that the evidence of certain witnesses was hearsay and, to use the language of the Evidence Act, nor relevant, and should be disregarded. Where evidence, such as hearsay, is improperly admitted the question for the Judicial Committee is whether, rejecting that evidence, enough remains to support the finding.

The admissions of a person whose position in relation to property in suit is necessary for one party to prove against another are in the nature of original evidence and not hearsay, though such person is alive and has not been cited as a witness.

(6) For the general rule excluding hearsay evidence does not apply to those declarations to which the party is privy, or to admissions which he himself has made. Hearsay evidence amounting to evidence of general repute is admissible for the purpose of proceedings under Chap. VIII been supposed to have been intended to exclude that kind of evidence which is called hearsay, but that for the reason he states it is difficult to believe this, and moreover hearsay would not be excluded by the language here used. For statements are facts and are so treated in ss. 17, 29, nasum. If therefore, A, a witness, had been told something by B and A, were asked what B had told him, the evidence of A would refer to a fact which would be heard, and A is a witness who says he heard it; this section would therefore not exclude it. He states that the following universally recognised rule has been in fact omitted from the Act, viz.:-'No statement as to the existence or non-existence of a fact which is being enquired into made otherwise than by a witness whilst under examination in Court can be used as evidence.' Markby, Ev. 82, 83, 19.

(1) Gargadhusaja Prosad v. Superintendent, Prosad, 23 A., 37, 51, 52 (1900).

(2) Norton, Ev., 240. The proof of the circumstances themselves must be direct. That is the circumstances cannot be proved by hearsay. Thus, if the circumstance offered in evidence is the correspondence of the prisoner's shoes with certain marks in mud or snow, the party who has made comparison and measurement must himself be called; not a third party, who heard from the measurer of the correspondence,' ib., 28.

(5) Mohur Singh v. Ghuroba, 6 B. L. R., 496 (1870).

HEARSAY. [s. 60.]

of the Criminal Procedure Code. (1) Under the provisions of section 165, post, the Judge may, in order to discover or to obtain proper proof or relevant facts, ask any question he pleases, in any form, at any time, of any witness, or of parties about any facts relevant or irrelevant.

The evidence offered in a Court of Justice is of two kinds: (a) substantive evidence, or evidence of facts necessary and relevant to the determination of the issue; and (b) evidence of facts affecting the trustworthiness of the media by which the former evidence is presented to the Court, namely, evidence touching the credibility of the witnesses examined. This credibility is the subject of cross-examination. Hearsay is always inadmissible as substantive evidence whether that evidence be elicited in examination or cross-examination. But hearsay may be admissible in cross-examination in so far as it touches the question of the credibility of the witness examined. (2) "The rule against hearsay applies in strictness to the proof of the relevant facts in the course of cross-examination just as much as to their proof by examination-in-chief, that is to say, a party is not entitled to prove his case merely by eliciting from his opponent’s witness in cross-examination not his own knowledge on the subject, but what he has heard others say about it, but not verified for himself. The application of the rule is, however, obscured by the fact that the opponent is entitled to test the witness’s own conduct and consistency, and for that purpose to interrogate him as to statements made to him by other persons, so that the party by whom the witness was called is not entitled to exclude the question but only to comment to the jury on the effect and value of the witness’s answer. Similar considerations apply with even greater force to the witness’s admissions in cross-examination of his own previous statements about the relevant facts." (3)

The first proviso, which makes an exception to the general rule analogous to the exceptions made in section 32, should be read with section 45, ante, and is an alteration of the rule of English law, which does not admit this evidence. (4) The treatise in order to be admissible must be one commonly offered for sale, and the author of it must be not producible within the meaning of the section. Strictly the burden of proving these facts will be upon the person who desires to give such treatise in evidence. (5) Section 45, ante, refers to the evidence of living witnesses given in Court. This section makes scientific treatises and the like, commonly offered for sale, evidence, if the author be dead, or under any of the circumstances specified in section 32, which render his production impossible or impracticable. The Court has thus referred to Taylor’s Medical Jurisprudence. (6)

In regard to foreign law, section 38, ante, makes certain books admissible which would not be probably regarded as treatises under this section. And it would be difficult to say that under the words of section 57, any books on science or art could not be consulted by the Judge without any restriction as to whether any person could be called or not. (7) In respect of the second proviso it has already been observed (8) that the production of a chattel is not primary evidence of it. A witness may, therefore, without infringing the rule relating to

2. See Gorsev Lall v. R., 16 C., 210, 211, 215 (1880). * This case is, however, no authority for the contention that such evidence (hearsay) is admissible in cross-examination, except under the provisions of s. 146, post. * Field, Ev., 381.
3. Wills, Ev., 98, 99; see Notes to s. 137, post.
(4) Field Ev., 381; Norton, Ev., 200; according to English Law, scientific treatises are not evidence, whether the author be producible or not; Collies v. Simpson, 5 C. & P., 74
5. S. 104, post.
7. Markby, Ev., 53.
8. v. ante, p. 355.
direct evidence, give evidence with reference to the existence or condition of any material thing, other than a document, without that material thing being produced in Court. This proviso, however, permits the Court, if it thinks fit, to require the production of such material thing for its inspection. Under section 165 also the Judge may, in order to discover or to obtain proper proof of relevant facts, direct the production of any document or thing.
CHAPTER V.
OF DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

DOCUMENTARY evidence means all documents produced for the inspection of the Court; (1) and the definition given of a document is very wide, covering many things which would not be considered documents in the popular acceptation of the word. (2) Aside from real evidence of which the Court or jury are the original percipient witnesses, (3) and evidence of matters of which judicial cognisance is taken, (4) all evidence comes to the tribunal either (a) as the statement of a witness, or (b) as the statement of a document. (5) As the last chapter dealt with the mode of proof in the case of the statements of witnesses, so the present deals with the mode of proof of statements which are contained in documents. But documents, being inanimate things, necessarily come to the cognisance of tribunals through the medium of human testimony; for which reason they have been denounced dead proof (probatio mortua) in contradistinction to witnesses who are said to be living proofs (probatio viva). (6) The superiority in permanence and in many respects in trustworthiness, of written over verbal proofs has been noticed from the earliest times. Vox audita perit; litera scripta manet. The false relations of what never took place; and, even in the case of real transactions, the decayed memories, the imperfect recollections, and wilful misrepresentations of witnesses; added to the certainty of the extinction, sooner or later, of the primary source of evidence by their death— all show the wisdom of providing some better or at least more lasting, mode of proof for matters which are susceptible of it, and are in themselves of sufficient consequence to overbalance the trouble and expense of its attainment. (7) There is, moreover, often a great difficulty in getting at the truth by means of parol testimony. (8) But in the case of documents their genuineness may be shown by many facts and circumstances very different from mere oral evidence and, moreover, the witnesses who are to prove a written document cannot resort to that latitude of statement which affords such opportunity of fabrication to purely oral evidence. There are more means of trying the genuineness of a written instrument than there can be in disproving purely oral evidence. For the truth of the transaction may be investigated by reference to the handwriting, to the seal, to the stamps,(9) the description of the paper, the alleged habits of past, and of which they were desirous to establish the remembrance, either as rules for their guidance or to have therein a lasting proof of the truth of what they write. Domat cited, ib., § 217; and see observations of Best, C. J., in Strother v. Barr & Bing. 151.

(1) S. 3, ante; Best, Ev., § 123.
(2) v. ib., and Best, Ev., p. 13, where it is suggested that the definition of document might with advantage be narrowed in certain instances to the single case of writing as a means of conveying thought. See also ib., § 215, et seq., as to the difference between actual and symbolical representations, e.g., between writings and models or drawings.
(3) v. ante, pp. 8—13.
(4) v. ante, s. 57, and p. 15.
(6) id., § 218.
(7) Best, Ev., § 60: "The force of written proofs consists in this, that men have agreed together to preserve by writing the recollection of things..."
conveyance purporting to have been executed in 1855 was engrossed on a stamp-paper bearing the Royal Arms of England with V. R. and a crown above. This paper was not manufactured till 1859, when Her Majesty assumed the Government of India. The paper in use previously bore the arms of the East India Company with the letters V. R. and the Crown: but the minute device on the arms and the difference of the motto wholly escaped him. The author has also more than once detected forgeries by the presence or absence of the distinguishing mark impressed on stamps issued before the mutiny, see Act XIX of 1858. It would be very easy to mark all stamp-paper with the date of issue by means of an instrument, such as is used to mark railway tickets, and the author is convinced that this simple contrivance would do much to stop forgery by facilitating detection. In a large number of forgeries it is necessary to antedate, and the difficulty of procuring a stamp with a suitable date could be increased if stamp vendors were made to account more strictly for their sales than is at present the practice. The check of having the purchaser's name endorsed on the stamp is useless, as fictitious names are used. The author has detected more than one stamp vendor having stamp-paper ready endorsed with such fictitious names. Too great reliance should not be placed upon an apparently ancient document by reason of the genuineness of the stamp for, as above stated, it is well known that blank stamped papers, may be obtained which extend for very many years past.

(2) v. ante, Introduct. to ch. iv.

(3) See s. 64, post. This rule as applied to documents is as old as any part of the Common Law of England; Taylor, Ev., § 396, and cases there cited; Best, Ev., p. 15; 'The best evidence of which the subject is capable ought to be produced, or its absence reasonably accounted for, or explained, before secondary or inferior evidence is received;' Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal, 14 Moo. I. A., 388 (1872); 'if the best evidence be kept back, it raises a suspicion that, if produced, it would falsify the secondary evidence on which the party has rested his case:' Strother v. Barr, 5 Bing., 151.

(4) See s. 64, post.

(5) See ss. 91, 92, post.

(7) S. 62, post.

(8) Ss. 64—66, post.

(9) See notes to s., ante: but this rule will not apply to admissions made under s. 58, ante; see Sheikh Ibrahim v. Parbota, 8 Bom., H. C. R., 163. [A party's admission as to the contents of a document not made in the pleadings, but in a deposition, is secondary evidence, and cannot supply the place of the document itself.]
principles on which the authenticity and value of evidence rest should be observed; (1) thus secondary evidence should not be accepted without a sufficient reason being given for the non-production of the original; (2) nor should documents be considered as proved because they have not been denied by the opposite side. (3) And notwithstanding the general value of documentary evidence, regard must be had to the habits and customs of the people of this country, and their well-known propensity to forge any instrument which they might deem necessary for their interest and the extreme facility with which false evidence can be procured from witnesses. Under such circumstances the probability or improbability, (4) of the transaction forms a most important consideration in ascertaining the truth of any transaction relied upon. (5) The use of fabricated written evidence by a party, however clearly established, does not relieve the Court from the duty of examining the whole of the evidence adduced on both sides, and of deciding according to the truth of the matters in issue. (6) The presumption against the party using such evidence must not be pressed too far, especially in this country, where it happens, not uncommonly, that falsehood and fabrication are employed to support a just cause. (7) In addition to guarding against fraud care must be taken that the documentary evidence is in itself admissible, lest documents which are not strictly evidence at all should be used to prop up oral evidence too weak to be relied on. (8)

Documents are of two kinds, public and private. Under the former come Acts of the Legislature, judgments and acts of Courts, Proclamations, public books, and the like. They are also divided into 'judicial,' and 'not-judicial,' and also into "writings of record" and "writings not of record." (9) Public documents other than those mentioned in the section are private. (10) The Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes regulate the production of documents, (11) and the former, the discovery, admission and inspection of documents in civil cases. (12) In criminal cases it is the duty of the Judge to decide

(1) Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sirivantha Perumal, 14 Moo. I. A., 588 (1872); see the judicial criticisms on the laxity of documentary evidence, prior to the passing of this Act, in Bunnaree Lal v. Maharajah Hira Rani, 7 Moo. I. A., 148, 168 (1858); s. c., 4 W. R., P. C., 128; Unide Rajas v. Pemmason Venkatadry, 7 Moo. I. A., 137 (1858); see p. 50 ante. The provisions of the Act must now, however, be strictly observed; Ram Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad 7 A., 713 (1865); v. p. 370 post.

(2) Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sirivantha, 14 Moo. I. A., 588 (1872); Ram Gopal v. Gordon Stuart, 14 Moo. I. A., 481 (1872); s. 61; post; Syed Abbas v. Yadeen Ramy, 3 Moo. I. A., 156 (1843).

(3) Kirttebais Magees v. Ramdun Khuria, B. L. R., B., 658 (1887); Reason issa v. Bokoo Choudrain, 12 W. R., 267, 268 (1869). Every document must first be started by some proof or other before the person who disputes that document can be considered in any way bound by it.

(6) Goribolla Gasee v. Gooroodas Boj, 2 W. R., Act X, 99 (1885); Sevaji Vijaya v. Cholu Nayan, 10 Moo. I. A., 151 (1864); v. ante, p. 357.

(7) See cases cited at p. 357.

(8) Eckowree Sing v. Hoeural Scal, 11 W. R., P. C., 2 (1883); ante, p. 29, note (9).

(9) Best, Ev., § 218; see s. 74, post.

(10) S. 75, post.

(12) The Court may send for papers from its own records or from other courts; ib., s. 137; the provisions as to documents are applicable to all other material objects; ib., s. 445. See Field Ev., 442. As to the production of documents and other moveable property in criminal cases, see Or. Pr. Code, Chap. VII. As to applications in respect of endorsements made on exhibits, see Ratan Koer v. Chotey Narain, 21 C., 476 (1894).

(12) Civ. Pr. Code, Chap. X.
upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial.(1)

There are three distinct questions which are dealt with in the Act in regard to documentary evidence—(a) firstly, there is the question how the contents of a document is to be proved; (b) secondly, there is the question how the document is to be proved to be genuine; (c) thirdly, there is the question how far and in what cases oral evidence is excluded by documentary evidence.

(a) The first question is dealt with in ss. 61—68 and is also affected by ss. 59 and 22. Taking s. 59 with ss. 61 and 64, the result may be stated as follows:—The contents of a document must in general be proved by a special kind of evidence called primary evidence; but there are exceptional cases in which such contents may be proved otherwise. Evidence used to prove the contents of a document which is not primary is called secondary. Primary evidence is said (s. 62) to be the document itself produced for the inspection of the Court. Later on in the section this is called the original document. The contents of public documents being provable in a particular manner, this matter is dealt with separately in ss. 74—78. The question how far witnesses may be cross-examined as to written statements made by them without producing the writings is dealt with by s. 145, post. (b) Besides the question which arises as to the contents of a document, there is always the question, when it is used as evidence—is it what it purports to be? In other words is it genuine? The signature or writing, sealing or mark and attestation where the latter is a necessary formality of execution must be proved. This matter is dealt with in ss. 67—73. Lastly, the Chapter deals ss. 79—90, with the presumptions which the Courts are enabled or directed to make in respect of certain documents or specified classes of documents tendered in evidence before them. (c) The exclusion of oral by documentary evidence is the subject-matter of the next Chapter to the Introduction, to which the reader is referred.(2)

As to the stamping and registration of documents, see Appendix.

61. The contents of documents may be proved either by proof of contents of documents, or by secondary evidence.

62. Primary evidence means the document itself produced for the inspection of the Court.

Explanation 1.—Where a document is executed in several parts, each part is primary evidence of the document.

Where a document is executed in counterpart, each counterpart being executed by one or some of the parties only, each counterpart is primary evidence as against the parties executing it.

Explanation 2.—Where a number of documents are all made by one uniform process, as in the case of printing lithography or photography, each is primary evidence of the contents of the rest; but where they are all copies of a common original, they are not primary evidence of the contents of the original.

(1) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 298. (2) Markby. Ev., 56, 57, 60.
Illustration.

A person is shown to have been in possession of a number of placards, all printed at one time from one original. Any one of the placards is primary evidence of the contents of any other, but no one of them is primary evidence of the contents of the original.

Secondary evidence.

63. Secondary evidence means and includes—

(1) Certified copies given under the provisions herein-after contained;

(2) Copies made from the original by mechanical processes which in themselves insure the accuracy of the copy, and copies compared with such copies;

(3) Copies made from or compared with the original;

(4) Counterparts of documents as against the parties who did not execute them;

(5) Oral accounts of the contents of a document given by some person who has himself seen it.

Illustrations.

(a) A photograph of an original is secondary evidence of its contents, though the two have not been compared, if it is proved that the thing photographed was the original.

(b) A copy compared with a copy of a letter made by a copying machine is secondary evidence of the contents of the letter, if it is shown that the copy made by the copying machine was made from the original.

(c) A copy transcribed from a copy, but afterwards compared with the original, is secondary evidence; but the copy not so compared is not secondary evidence of the original, although the copy from which it was transcribed was compared with the original.

(d) Neither an oral account of a copy compared with the original, nor an oral account of a photograph or machine-copy of the original, is secondary evidence of the original.

s. 3 ("Document.")  s. 3 ("Proved.")

s. 3 ("Evidence.")  s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 76-78 (Certified copies.)

COMMENTARY.

Reference should be made to the definition given in the third section. Exchequer tallies and wooden scores used by milkmen and bakers have been included in the term. (1) So also an inscription on a ring; (2) or coffin plate; (3) and perhaps a direction on a parcel. (4) On the other hand it has been held in England that inscriptions on flags and placards exhibited to public view and of which the effect depends upon such exhibition bear the character rather of

(1) Best, Ev., § 215.
speeches than of writings and are not subject to the rules relating to documents. (1)

The contents of documents may be proved either by primary or secondary evidence. "Primary" and "secondary" evidence means this: primary evidence is evidence which the law requires to be given first; secondary evidence is evidence which may be given in the absence of the better evidence which the law requires to be given first, when a proper explanation is given of the absence of that better evidence. (2) Primary evidence of a document is defined by the Act to mean the document itself produced for the inspection of the Court. (3) Secondary evidence is defined by section 63. Section 61 lays down that "the contents of documents may be proved either by primary or secondary evidence" within the meaning given to those terms in the Act; and this rule means that there is no other method allowed by law for proving the contents of documents. Whatever the law may have been upon the subject before the passing of this Act, the rules contained in this enactment must now be strictly observed. (4)

Primary evidence means the document itself produced for the inspection of the Court. As the law requires that the particulars of a claim should be embodied in the decree, recitals of the contents of the plaint made in a decree are not secondary evidence of the contents of the plaint but are admissible as primary evidence of the statement of facts made to the Judge as the basis of the plaintiff's claim. (5) Written receipts for payments are important, but by no means necessary as proof; nor are they of the nature of primary evidence, the loss of which must be shown in order to let in secondary. (6)

If accounts be merely memoranda and rough books from which regular accounts are prepared, the former, it has been said, can hardly be treated as the original account. (7) Though different classes of books of account may, and in fact in the larger number of instances must, deal with the same matter, it does not follow that one only of such classes constitute the original document. So where entries in a ledger were tendered and it was objected that the ledger was secondary evidence, being merely a copy of the cash-book, the Court admitted the ledger entries. (8)

The first portion of the first Explanation of section 62 refers to what are known as duplicate, triplicate or the like, originals. The expressions "executed in parts" and "in counter-part" refer to the mode in which documents are sometimes executed. It is convenient sometimes that each party to a transaction should have a complete document in his own possession. To effect this the document is written but as many times over as there are parties and each document is executed—that is, signed or sealed as the case may be—by all the parties. No one of these is more the original than the other, and any one of them may be produced as primary evidence of the contents of the document. When an instrument is executed by all the parties in duplicate or triplicate, and each party keeps one, each instrument is treated as an original and each is primary evidence of all the others. When each of the instruments is signed

---

(2) Per Lord Esher, M. R., in Lucas v. Williams & Sons, L. R., 2 Q. B. (1892), 113, 116; and see Taylor, Ev., § 394.
(3) S. 62.
(4) Ram Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad, 7 A., 738, 743 (1885).
(5) Mohammed Ismail v. Bhogoboduti Barmanya, Appeal from original decree, Cal. H. C., No. 303 of 1897 (25th June 1900); as to the statement of a witness deposing that another person gave evidence being primary evidence, see Haranand Roy v. Ram Gopal cited in notes to s. 65, post.
(7) Raja Peary v. Narendra Nath, 9 C. W. N., 421, 431 (1905), see s. 34, ante.
by one party only, and each delivers to the other, the documents are termed ‘counterparts,’ and each is primary evidence against the party executing it, and these in privity with the executing party, and secondary evidence(1) as against the other parties.(2) Execution in counterpart is a method of execution adopted when there are two parties to the transaction. Thus if the transaction is a contract between A and B the document is copied out twice, and A alone signs one document, whilst B alone signs the other. A then hands to B the document signed by himself and B hands to A the document signed by himself. Then as against A the document signed by A is primary evidence; whilst as against B the document signed by B is primary evidence.(3)

Second Explanation.—‘A printed paper does not differ from a written one, in respect of both being copies; they can alike, therefore, only be received as secondary evidence of the original under such circumstances as render secen-dary evidence admissible; for instance, if the original is shown to be lost or destroyed, or to be in the possession of the opposite party, notice having been given to produce it. There is no more guarantee for a printed copy being a true copy than a written one; indeed being a copy at all. But there is a far better guarantee for a number of printed papers struck off from the same machine at the same time being correct fac-similes of each other than of a number of written papers; for here the draftsmen or draftsmen may introduce differences impossible with the machine. In this case, each machine-made copy is accepted as primary evidence of all the others, inter se, and not of the original from which they were copied; for instance, if it is desired to prove the publication of a libel in a newspaper, any copy of the issue in which the libel appeared would be primary evidence of publication in all the other copies of that issue. But if it were necessary to prove the original libel from which the article was set up, the printed paper would not be primary, but only secen-dary, evidence of the manuscript and admissible only under the conditions which render the reception of secondary evidence admissible.’(4)

First Clause.—Section 76 enables certified copies of public documents to be given; and such document may be proved by the production of a certified copy.(5) Certain other official documents especially designated may be also proved by certified copies.(6) Section 79 deals with the presumption as to the genuineness of certain certified copies, and section 86 as to certified copies of foreign judicial records.

Second Clause.—The copies must be made from the original by such mechanical processes as in themselves insure the accuracy of the copy; such for example as the processes mentioned in the second Explanation, section 62.(7) Illustration (a) must be read with the first portion of this clause, and means that provided it can be shown that the original which is sought to be proved was really photographed, such photograph will be receivable as secondary evidence. Illustration (b) must be read with the second portion of this clause, and means that a copy of such copy (compared) is receivable as secondary evidence of the original and cannot be rejected as being a copy of a copy.(8)
The reason of this rule is that the accuracy of the first copy being insured by the mechanical process, it is not necessary to compare it with the original

---

(1) S. 63, cl. (4).
(2) Taylor, Ev., § 426; Norton, Ev., 241, 242;
 s. 62, post.
(3) Markby, Ev., 57; Phipson, Ev., 3rd
 Ed., 479.
(4) Norton, Ev., 242, and see R. v. Watson, 32 Hew. St. Tr., 82.
(5) S. 77, post.
(6) S. 78, post : as to certified copies of decrees or orders made by the Queen in Council, see Civ.
Pr. Code, s. 610.
(7) Field, Ev., 382: cf. s. 35, Act II of 1855.
‘An impression of a document made by a copying machine shall be taken without further proof to be a correct copy.’
which it will be taken to correctly reproduce; but there is ordinarily no such guarantee, or at least not an effective one, in the case of copies taken from such first copy, and they must therefore be proved to have been compared with it before they will be receivable as secondary evidence of the original. An oral account of a photograph or a machine-copy of the original is not secondary evidence of the original [Illustration (d)].

Third Clause, see Illustration (c). In the first case here put, the party who made the copy can swear to its being a true copy. If he is not produced, then a witness must be called who can swear to his own comparison; or, as sometimes, two witnesses, one of whom read the original, while the other read the copy or the revise. But it will save time and trouble to have the comparison made by one and the same person. (1) Reading together second and third Clauses and Illustrations (b) and (c), it will appear that a copy of a copy, i.e., a copy transcribed from and compared with a copy is inadmissible, (2) unless the copy with which it was compared was a copy made by some mechanical process which in itself insures the accuracy of such copy. (3) But copies of copies kept in a registration-office when signed and sealed by the registering officer are admissible for the purpose of proving the contents of the originals. (4) The correctness of certified copies will be presumed, (5) but that of other copies will have to be proved, v. post. This proof may be afforded by calling a witness who can swear that he has made the copy or a witness who can swear that he has compared the copy tendered in evidence with the original or with some other person read as the contents of the original, and that such copy is correct.
It is not necessary for the persons examining to exchange papers and read them alternately both ways. If the document be in an ancient or foreign character, the witness who has compared the copy with it must have been able to read and understand the original. (6) In the undermentioned case (7) a copy of a deed which was filed in another suit and was still on the records of the Court was let in as secondary evidence. That deed was endorsed “copy in accordance with the original,” and was signed by the Judge presiding in the Court. The Privy Council accepted and concurred in the opinion of the Judicial Commissioner upon the value of that copy. His words were:— “there can be no doubt that the Judge, in the course of the suit, in 1864, did accept and file, with the proceedings, a copy of a deed of gift by K B, and the only question is whether that copy had been compared with the original, when the copy is enshrined, in accordance with practice, “copy according to the original,” and the Judge’s order to file is also found on it. I cannot doubt that the copy was duly compared. Except the Judge, there was no person who was authorised to compare and accept a copy, and his signature to the order must, it seems to me, guarantee the genuineness of the copy.” (8)

It is scarcely necessary to observe that proof of a copy being a correct copy is no proof of the execution and genuineness, etc., of the original. (9) And

---

(1) ib. See Reali v. Gun Kim, 9 C., 943, 944 (1883).
(2) Ram Prasad v. Raphunandan Prasad, 7 A., 735, 743 (1888); see Taylor, Ev., § 553; the following cases are no longer law so far as they relate to copies: Udaya Rajaka v. Pemmama Vakuladity, 7 Moo. I. A., 128 (1858) (dictum followed in Ajodhya Prasad v. Umrao Singh, 6 B. L. R., 509 (1870); Jayakannasa Bibi v. Kesar Shastri, 7 B. L. R., 627 (1871); Makhul Ali v. Srimati Manmai, 3 B. L. R., 54 (1859); Ram Gopal v. Gordon Stuart, 14 Moa. I.A., 453 (1873); Norton, Ev., 243; Field, Ev., 263. Even before the Act a copy of a copy was rejected: Bajia Nekomund v. Nasheeb Singh, 6 W. R., 80 (1866).
(3) S. 63, cl. (2), v. ante; but a copy transcribed from a copy and afterwards compared with the original is secondary evidence, Illust. (c).
(4) Act III of 1877, s. 37.
(5) S. 79, post.
(7) Lucknow Singh v. Pund, 16 C., 753 (1889).
(8) 16 L. A., 125.
(9) ib. at p. 766.
(10) See Field, Ev., 363; Ramjaado Gangoity v. Luckhes Narain, 5 B. C., and Cr. Reporter, Act X, Rule 23 (1867); Shookram Sokul v. Bam.
secondary evidence cannot be given by means of a copy until it be shown that such copy is accurate. (1) The correctness of certified copies is directed to be presumed by this Act. (2) And other Acts, such as the Registration Act, (3) declare that copies given thereunder shall be admissible for the purpose of proving the contents of the original documents; that it shall be taken to be true copies without other proof than the Registrar’s certificate of their correctness. (4)

Fourth Clause. A counterpart is primary evidence only as against the parties executing it. (5) The most usual case of counterparts is that of patish and kabuliat. (6)

Fifth Clause.—The person must have seen the original. It will not be sufficient that he heard it being read. Moreover it must have been the original. It will not be sufficient for the person to have seen a copy. Thus a written statement of the contents of a copy of a document, the original of which the person making the statement has not seen, cannot be accepted as an equivalent of that which this clause renders admissible, namely, an oral account of the contents of a document given by some person who has himself seen it. (7) It is moreover plain that even if parol evidence be admissible as secondary evidence of a document it may, owing to its character or the circumstances of the case, be such that the Court cannot rely upon it for the purpose of proving those contents. (8) Secondary evidence in actions for libel should give the actual words used and complained of. (9)

The general rule is that there are no degrees in secondary evidence and that a party is at liberty to adduce any description of secondary evidence he may choose. So a party may give oral evidence of the contents of a document, even though it be in his power to produce a written copy. For, if one species of secondary evidence were to exclude another, a party tendering oral evidence of a document would have to account for all the secondary evidence that has existed. He may know of nothing but the original, and the other side at the trial, might defeat him by showing a copy, the existence of which he had no means of ascertaining. Fifty copies might be in existence unknown to him, and he would be bound to account for them all. Further, there is the inconvenience of requiring evidence to be strictly marshalled according to its weight. But if more satisfactory proof is withheld, that will go to the weight of the evidence. If, for instance, the party giving such oral evidence appears to have better secondary evidence in his power, which he does not produce, that is a fact from which the Court may presume that the evidence kept back would be adverse to the party withholding it. (10) There are, however, exceptions to the general rule. For the Act declares that when the existence, condition, or contents of the original have been admitted in writing, the written admission is admissible, (11) and where the original is a public document, (12) or a document of which a certified copy is permitted by this Act or by any other law in force Lal, 9 W.R., 248, 250 (1868); Museumat Amemoonisa v. Museumat Abaddonisa, 23 W.R., 208 (1875); Appathura Parar v. Gopala Panikkar, 25 M., 674, 676 (1901).

(2) S. 79, post.

(3) Act III of 1877, s. 57.

(5) S. 62, Explanation (1), ante.

(6) v. ante.

(7) Kanayatol v. Pyrabai, 7 B., 139 (1882); see Illust. (d).

(9) Rainy v. Bravo, L.R., 4 P.C., 287.

(10) Doe v. Reas. 7 M. & W., 402; Brown v. Woodman, 6 C. & P., 206; Hall v. Hall, 3 M. & G., 242; Taylor, Ev., §§ 650—653; Best, Ev., § 483; Wills, Ev., 285. The rule applies whether the original evidence be itself oral or documentary; Taylor, Ev., § 500; see e.g., Notes to s. 47, ante.

(11) S. 65, post, see cl. (b).

(12) Within the meaning of s. 74, post; see s. 65, cl. (e). in India to be given in evidence, (1) a certified copy of the document, but no other kind of secondary evidence, is admissible. (2)

64. Documents must be proved by primary evidence except in the cases hereinafter mentioned.

Principle.—This rule is one of the most forcible illustrations of the maxim that the best evidence that the case admits of must always be produced. (3) It is said to be based on the "best evidence" principle; but the rule is, however, probably older than its reasons, being a survival of the doctrine of profert which required the actual production of the document pleaded. (4)

s. 8 ("Document.")
s. 3 ("Proved.")

COMMENTARY.

Lord Tenterden said: "I have always acted most strictly on the rule that what is in writing shall only be proved by the writing itself. My experience has taught me the extreme danger of relying on the recollection of witnesses, however honest, as to the contents of written instruments; they may be so easily mistaken, that I think the purposes of justice require the strict enforcement of the rule." (5) An additional but important reason for the application of the rule is that the Court may acquire a knowledge of the whole contents of the instrument, which may have a very different effect from the statement of a part. (6) This section deals with the class of cases falling within the rule that a written document can only be proved by the instrument itself, (7) and embraces every writing. Thus newspapers and account-books are the best evidence of their own contents, and therefore a witness cannot be asked whether certain resolutions were published in the newspapers; neither can he be questioned as to the contents of his account-books; nor can a plaintiff be asked in cross-examination whether his name is written in a certain book described by the questioner, unless a satisfactory reason be first given for the non-production of the book itself. (8) The provisions of this section must be distinguished from those of section 91. The latter deals with matters which the parties have put in writing or which the law requires to be in writing. In such cases except where secondary evidence may be given, the document is the exclusive record of that which it embodies. The parties are not at liberty to resort to other evidence. All that the present section says is that if it is desired to prove the contents of a document, the document itself must, save in certain exceptional cases, be produced. But if a writing does not fall within either of the classes already described, no reason exists why it should exclude oral evidence. For instance, if a written communication be accompanied by a verbal one to the same effect, the latter may be received as independent evidence, though not to prove the contents of the writing nor as a substitute for it; the payment of money may be proved by oral testimony, though a receipt be taken; a verbal demand of goods may be shown, though a

---

(1) s. 65, cl. (j).
(2) s. 66, post; see Notes to that section.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 396; and v. post and Introduction, ante.
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 396.
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 409.
(8) Taylor, Ev., § 40.
demand in writing was made at the same time; the admission of a debt is provable by oral testimony, though a written promise to pay was simultaneously given; and the like.\(^{(1)}\) With regard to objections as to the improper reception of secondary evidence, see pp. 10—12, ante.

Admissions.

Oral admissions as to the contents of a document are not relevant, unless and until the party proposing to prove them shows that he is entitled to give secondary evidence of the contents of such document, or unless the genuineness of a document produced is in question.\(^{(2)}\) But secondary evidence may be given when the existence, condition, or contents of the original have been proved to be admitted in writing by the person against whom it is proved or by his representative in interest.\(^{(3)}\) The rule laid down by this section does not of course apply to documents which are admitted and the contents of which are not in dispute. For a fact which is admitted need not be proved at all.\(^{(4)}\) So where a party admits by his pleading the terms of an agreement and its execution, the other party is not called upon to prove the execution of the document or put it in evidence.\(^{(5)}\) It is further common practice to allow copies of documents to be tendered in evidence by the consent of all parties concerned.

65. Secondary evidence may be given of the existence, condition or contents of a document in the following cases:—

(a) When the original is shown or appears to be in the possession or power—of the person against whom the document is sought to be proved, or of any person out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court, or of any person legally bound to produce it, and when, after the notice mentioned in section 66,\(^{(6)}\) such person does not produce it;

(b) when the existence, condition or contents of the original have been proved to be admitted in writing by the person against whom it is proved or by his representative in interest:

(c) when the original has been destroyed or lost, or when the party offering evidence of its contents cannot, for any other reason not arising from his own default or neglect, produce it in reasonable time;

(d) when the original is of such a nature as not to be easily movable;

---

\(^{(1)}\) Taylor, Ev., § 415; see n. 50, ante. See the passage in Best, Ev., p. 292, 2nd Ed., cited and approved in Balhodar Prasad v. Maharajah of Bodo, 9 A., 356 (1887).

\(^{(2)}\) See notes to n. 22, ante.

\(^{(3)}\) S. 55, cl. (b), post.

\(^{(4)}\) S. 55, ante; see Taylor, Ev., § 409.

\(^{(5)}\) Burjorji Cursetji v. Muncherji Kwarji, 5 B., 143 (1880); but a party's admission as to the contents of a document not made in the pleadings but in a deposition is secondary evidence only. Shekh Ibrahim v. Parsads, 8 Bom. H. C. R., A. C. J., 163 (1871).

\(^{(6)}\) Kameshwar Pershad v. Aminuddulle, 26 C., 53 (1896).
(e) when the original is a public document within the meaning of section 74;

(f) when the original is a document of which a certified copy is permitted by this Act, or by any other law in force in British India, to be given in evidence;

(g) when the originals consist of numerous accounts or other documents which cannot conveniently be examined in Court, and the fact to be proved is the general result of the whole collection.

In cases (a), (c) and (d), any secondary evidence of the contents of the document is admissible.

In case (b), the written admission is admissible.

In case (e) or (f), a certified copy of the document, but no other kind of secondary evidence, is admissible.

In case (g), evidence may be given as to the general result of the documents by any person who has examined them, and who is skilled in the examination of such documents.

Principle.—The general rule having been stated in the preceding section, the present one states the exceptional cases in which secondary evidence is admissible. Some of these exceptions rest upon considerations which are obvious. This is the case with exceptions (c) and (d). The exceptions (e) and (f) are based on considerations of convenience. In the case of exception (g) it is not, properly speaking, secondary evidence which is admitted in substitution for the originals, but the general result as stated by a person who has examined them. (1) The written admission in cl. (b) affords a reliable guarantee of truth. With regard to cl. (a) as in the case of (c) and (d), the production of primary evidence is out of the party's power; see Commentary, post.

---

v. 63 (Meaning of "secondary evidence.") v. 3 ("Document.") v. 86 (Rules as to notice to produce.) v. 22 (Oral admissions as to contents of documents.)

s. 74 (Public documents.) s. 76-79, 89 (Certified copies.) s. 89 (Presumption as to documents called for and not produced after notice to produce.)

Taylor, Ev., 429, 437, 439-460; 918, 919; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 7-14, 154-156; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 486-491; Powell, 591-609; Steph. Dig., Arts. 72, 118, 119; Wharton, Ev., Ch. III; Greenleaf, Ev., §§ 91-97; Burr Jones, Ev., 197-232.

COMMENTARY.

The last section having declared the general rule as to the proof of documents, the present deals with the exceptions to that rule, namely, the cases in which secondary evidence may be given. Secondary evidence of the contents of a document cannot be admitted without the non-production of the original being first accounted for in such a manner as to bring it within one or other of the cases provided for in section 65 of this Act. (1) By the law of evidence administered in England, which has been in a great measure, with respect to deeds made the law of India, the first condition of the right to give secondary evidence of the contents of a document not produced in Court is the accounting for the non-production of the original. (2) It must, in the first place, be shown that there is, or was, a document in existence capable of being proved by secondary evidence, and, secondly, that the circumstances are such that secondary evidence may be given, or, to use the technical expression, a proper foundation must be laid for the reception of such evidence. (3) There are cases in which secondary evidence is admissible even though the original is in existence and producible, as in the case of clauses (e) and (f), (4) and (b) and (g) of section 65, but ordinarily it must be shown that the document is not producible in the natural sense of the word, for this is the general ground upon which secondary evidence is admitted. When one of the questions on appeal to the Privy Council was whether secondary evidence had been properly admitted on a case that had arisen for its admission, such question was decided in the affirmative on the ground that whether the evidence offered would itself prove the making of the document or not, it formed good ground for holding that there was a document capable of being proved by secondary evidence admissible with reference to sections 65 and 66 of this Act. (5) This section is applicable to both civil and criminal cases. (6)

---

(1) Markby, Ev., 57; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 458.

The last four paragraphs provide what kind of secondary evidence is to be given in the particular cases mentioned in the section; and in cases (b), (e), (f), (g) establish exceptions to the general rule that there are no degrees of secondary evidence. (7) With reference to these paragraphs it will be observed that there is no provision for cases in which two causes for non-production of the original are combined: as for instance, when the original is a record of a Court of Justice, which has also been lost or destroyed; a case which has occurred more than once in India. (8) But it has been held that the rule laid down in this section that a certified copy is the only secondary evidence admissible when the original is a document of which a certified copy is permitted by law to be given in evidence does not apply where the original has been lost or destroyed. In such a case any secondary evidence is admissible. (9) So where one B B, an official in the Sikhur Court in the Native State of Jeypore, gave evidence of litigation there between R B and one C, and said that in his presence evidence of C was taken by the Judge, Moonshi M M, and that in his presence the suit was adjudicated.

---

3. This is a matter to be judicially determined by the Court which tries the case; its conclusions on this head will not generally be disturbed in Special Appeal; Shookram Sookul v. Ram Lal, 9 W. R., 249 (1868); see also Harriprisa Debi v. Rukmini Debi, 19 C., 438 (1892).
5. Luckman Singh v. Puna, 16 C., 733 (1889); s. c., L. R., 16 I. A., 125.
7. v. ane.
8. Field, Ev., 396; see Baboo Gareo v. Darbhun Lal, 7 W. R., 18 (1867); [record lost in transit]; secondary evidence ordered to be given. Basam uncertainty Lall v. James Furlong, 8 W. R., 38 (1867); record lost; direction to take further evidence; Ram Soman Emanum v. Hardyal Singh, W. R., 1864, 301 [lost decree].
9. Kusnath Odinpat v. Vayota Pallipat, 6 M., 80 (1882); In the matter of a collision between the "Ar" and the "Brenshilda," 5 C., 558 (1879).
and the order passed; and he put in a document which he swore was a copy of C's deposition, in the handwriting of one of the Court Amlas, endorsed "copy corresponding with the original" in the handwriting and bearing the signature of the Sheristadar of the Court; the High Court excluded these proceedings in the Sikur Court on the ground that they were not proved according to the mode mentioned in section 86 of this Act. The Privy Council, however, held that that section does not exclude other proof and observed as follows:—"The assertion of B B that R B sued C and that she gave evidence before Moonshi M M in his presence is primary evidence of these matters. His proof of the Sikur records is secondary evidence; and by sections 65 and 66 of the Evidence Act, secondary evidence may be given of public documents, which these are under section 74, without notice to the adverse party, when the person in possession of the document is out of the reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court, which is the case here." If the Privy Council held that the effect of B B's evidence was to supply proof that the copy produced was a certified copy (there being no presumption under either section 79 or 86) and the document was admitted as a certified copy, then it was so admitted in accordance with the last paragraph but one of the section. This, however, appears for several reasons not to be the case, for amongst others, the Privy Council say that no notice was necessary as the person in possession of the document was not subject to process. But the provisions as to notice apply to cl. (a) only and not to cl. (c). It would appear, therefore, that it was held that the case fell under both clauses, and that as it also fell under cl. (a) any secondary evidence was admissible. (1)

The question whether secondary evidence in any given case rightly admitted is one which is proper to be decided by the Judge of first instance and is treated as depending very much on his discretion. This conclusion should not be overruled except in a very clear case of miscarriage (2) With regard to objections on appeal to the admission of secondary evidence, see note below. (3) And as to the inadmissibility of secondary evidence in the case of unstamped or unregistered documents, see the Appendix.

Although the nineteenth section of the Limitation Act provides that "when the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed, but no oral evidence of the contents shall be received;" still this was not meant to exclude secondary evidence of the contents of the acknowledgment, under section 65 of the Evidence Act, when a proper case for the reception of such evidence is made out. (4)

CLAUSE (A).

The first case in which secondary evidence of a written document is admissible is when a document is in the possession or power of the adversary, or other persons mentioned in this clause, who withhold it at the trial, and a notice to produce (5) the original has been duly served, where such notice is requisite. (6) The rule applies equally both in civil and criminal cases. In

---

(1) Haranwund Roy v. Ram Gopal, 4 C. W. N. 470 (1896).
(2) Ningowa v. Ramappa, 5 Bom. L. R. 708 (1893).
(3) See cases cited ante, pp. 31 - 33 and notes; and Gour Burun v. Kanya Singh, 2 W. R. 237 (1865); Kaheee Nath v. Mohoseh Chunder, 25 W. R., 108 (1876); James Fogredo v. Mahomed Maddeeswar, 10 W. R., 267 (1863).
(5) Chakru v. Viranayen, 15 M., 491 (1892). The contrary appears to have been held in Shalinoo Laloo v. Motidev Ratander, 12 B., 238 (1877), but the report does not show that the earlier decisions were cited. When the date has been altered, see Sayad Gulamati v. Miyabhai, 26 B., 128 (1901), and s. 106, post.
(6) See s. 66.
(7) See Taylor, Ev., § 440; and Lucknow Singh v. Pun, 16 C., 755 (1889). either mode of proceeding, in order to render the notice available, it must be first shown that the document is in the hands or power of the party required to produce it. (1) The reason of this rule is self-evident, for otherwise the party calling for the document might foist upon the Court an alleged copy of an original which never had any existence. (2) Slight evidence, however, will suffice to raise a presumption of this where the document exclusively belongs to, or in the regular course of business ought to be, in the custody of a party served. (3) What is sufficient evidence is in the discretion of the Court. If papers were last seen in the hands of a defendant, it lies upon him to trace them out of his possession. (4) When a party has notice to produce a particular document which has been traced to his possession, he cannot, it seems, object to parol evidence of its contents being given, on the ground that, previously to the notice, he had ceased to have any control over it, unless he has stated this fact to the opposite party, and has pointed out to him the person to whom he delivered it. (5) Neither can he escape the effect of the notice, by afterwards voluntarily parting with the instrument, which directs him to produce. (6) The documents must be traced to the possession of the party on whom notice is served or some one in privity with him, such as his banker, agent, servant, deputy, or the like. Such persons need not be served with a subpœna duces tecum, or even be called as a witness, but a notice given to the party himself will suffice. (7) Possession may be proved by showing that the document was last seen in the adversary’s possession or power; or by calling his solicitor, who may be compelled to testify to its possession; (8) or by the admission of his counsel; (9) or presumptively, by showing that it belongs exclusively to him, or would, in the ordinary course of business, be in his custody. (10) The adversary may, on the other hand, interpose evidence to disprove the possession. (11) Secondary evidence tendered to prove the contents of an instrument which is retained by the opposite party after notice to produce it, can only be admitted in the absence of evidence to show that it was unstamped when last seen. (12) A copy of a document should not be received in evidence until all legal means have been exhausted for procuring the original. Where a document is alleged to be in the possession or power of a certain party, such party’s denial in pleading that he has ever had the document is not sufficient to justify the omission of the processes the law provides for his testimony, and his being called on to produce the original. If a Judge is satisfied of a plaintiff’s inability to produce an original pottah on which he relies, he ought to allow secondary evidence to be given of the contents of the document, but he should be satisfied, on reasonable grounds, that the evidence gives a true version of its contents, and he should require sufficient evidence of the execution of the pottah. (13) Any secondary evidence is admissible in a case falling within clause (a). (14)
Secondary evidence may also be given when the original is in the possession or power of any person who is out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court. (1) No notice is required when the person in possession of the document is out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court. (2) If a document be deposited in a foreign country and the laws or established usage of that country will not permit its removal, secondary evidence of the contents will be admitted, because in that case it is not in the power of the party to produce the original. (3) But ordinarily, being filed in another Court, is not sufficient reason for non-production. (4) Any secondary evidence will be admissible. (5)

The third case in which secondary evidence is admissible under this clause is when the original is shown or appears to be in the possession or power of any person legally bound to produce it. The construction of these, as of other words in this section, raise difficulties which it is not easy to satisfactorily solve. It is therefore necessary in the first place to state the English law upon the subject of the admissibility of secondary evidence where the party served with notice to produce a document is not compellable to produce it in evidence.

The general rule which requires primary evidence assumes that it can be given; when it cannot, secondary evidence may be adduced. So where a party calls for a document in the possession of another, which document the latter is entitled to refuse to produce on the ground of privilege (e.g., as being his title-deed), (6) secondary evidence may be given of the document as everything has been done to obtain it. (7) The English rule on the point has been thus summarised. Secondary evidence may be given of the contents of a document ‘when the original is shown or appears to be in the possession or power of a stranger not legally bound to produce it, and who refuses to produce it after being served with a subpoena duces tecum, or after having been sworn as a witness and asked for the document and having admitted that it is in Court. (8) Further, according to English law, the disobedience of a person served with a subpoena duces tecum will not render admissible secondary evidence of the contents of the document which he is called upon to produce. (9) To do this the witness must be justified in refusing the production, for otherwise the party will have no remedy, except as against him. (10) Again, when a document is withheld not on the ground of privilege, but on that of lien, secondary evidence may be inadmissible. So, if a solicitor refuses to produce a deed as claiming a lien upon it, (11) secondary evidence of its contents cannot be received provided the party tendering such evidence be the person liable to pay the solicitor’s charges. (12) But a witness will not be allowed to resist a subpoena duces tecum on the ground of any lien he may have on the

(1) See Ralli v. Gau Kim, 9 C., 939 (1883); Bishop Mellus v. Vicar Apostolus, 2 M., 205 (1879). In s. 36 of Act II of 1885, it was the document that must be out of the process of the Court; here it is the person in whose possession it is.

(2) S. 66, cl. 6. From s. 65 (which is not happily worded in this respect) it might be gathered that notice was necessary; see last para. of cl. 6, and Ralli v. Gau Kim, 9 C., 939 (1883).

(4) Sreenamty Gow v. Huree Kishore, 10 W. R., 328 (1868).

(5) S. 65.

(6) See ss. 130, 131, post.

(8) Steph. Dig., Art. 71, see Taylor, Ev., § 457.

(9) Jesus Coll. v. Gibba, 2 Y. & C., Ex. R., 156.

(10) R. v. Llanfashley, 2 E. & B., 940; Taylor, Ev., § 457, by an action for damages. See Act XIX of 1853, s. 20, X of 1855, s. 10 (liability for damages on failure to give evidence or produce a document).

(12) Attorney-General v. Aske, 10 Ir. Eq., R. N. S., 309.
document called for as evidence, unless the party requiring the production be himself the person against whom the claim of lien is made.(1)

The question then arises how far such rules or any of them are applicable under this Act. As already observed no construction of this clause is free from difficulty.(2) In the first place it must be noted that every person summoned to produce a document must, if it is in his possession or power, bring it to Court, notwithstanding any objection which there may be to its production or to its admissibility. The validity of such objection is a matter to be decided on by the Court.(3) Assuming the present clause to have reference to that class of documents only which a person is not justified in refusing, on the ground of privilege, to produce; in other words, documents which a person is legally bound to produce in evidence on receiving a notice to that effect: if such person does not produce it in evidence, that is either by not handing over the document if it be in Court with him, or by not attending in Court with the document, he being ex concessis legally bound to produce it, and its non-production being therefore unjustifiable, secondary evidence will be admissible forthwith upon such non-production, under the terms of this clause. It will appear, therefore, that the English rule abovementioned according to which secondary evidence is not admissible of a document which is, without justification, withheld, is not law under this section.(4) Much, however, may be

---

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 458, and cases there cited.
(2) In Norton, Ev., 244, 246, 248, it appears to be considered that the clause ought, and was meant, to run "if any person not legally bound to produce it," the word "not" having been omitted by accident. Mr. Markby also thinks it probable that the word "not" has been omitted by mistake, though he concedes that no question of there being any misprint in the Act seems to have been raised in this country: Ev. Act, p. 58, v. post. If this be correct, the clause would then be in agreement with the rule of English law as above stated, and there would be no difficulties of construction on the points hereafter dealt with.
One point of variance from English law is, however, suggested, by Mr. Norton as arising out of a later portion of the section, viz., that whereas under that law, where a person refuses to produce a document which he is legally compellable to produce, the party calling for the document cannot give secondary evidence and has no remedy except as against him; on the other hand, under the Act such a case may have been provided for in the second portion of cl. (c) dealing with inability to produce in reasonable time. The learned author says: "Perhaps under this, too [cl. (c), portion referred to, supra], a party might give secondary evidence of a document which a person having no legal right to refuse the production of, nevertheless refuses on notice to produce." Ib., 248.
(3) S. 162, post.
(4) Mr. Markby says (Ev. Act, p. 58): "We have now to consider s. 65 (a), and to understand this we must refer to the Code of Civil Procedure. That Code only speaks of a 'notice to produce documents in connection with their production before the trial so that they may be inspected and preparation made to meet them (s. 131). Still it can hardly be doubted that if A and B were in litigation and A were to give B notice to produce a document in the possession of B at the trial, and B did not do so, the Court would consider this to be reasonable notice within the meaning of s. 66 and would admit secondary evidence under the first clause, s. 65 (a). So again if the document were not in the possession of A or B but of C, a third person, and C were out of reach, secondary evidence could be produced without any notice of any kind [s. 60(a), cl. 6, s. 66]. But suppose C is within reach and subject to the process of the Court. By the Code of Civil Procedure s. 159, a summons to produce, the document must be issued, and if it is not obeyed, then proceedings may be taken to compel C to reduce the document, and special powers are granted for that purpose. If, however, we are to take the words 'of any person legally bound to produce it' as they stand, there is no necessity to take any steps to procure the production of the document, as secondary evidence of it at once becomes admissible. I can hardly believe that this is what was intended. I think it probable that the word 'not' has been omitted here by mistake; and that the case intended to be dealt with here is the case of a person who, though within reach of the Court, is not legally bound to produce the document. Several such cases are mentioned in ss. 122-131. This would be quite intelligible and in accordance with English law. It must, however, be admitted that no question of there being any misprint in the Act seems to have been raised in India; if there is no misprint then, if in the case above put, C, having been summoned to produce the said in favour of a departure from the English rule upon this point. It may be argued that it is not reasonable that a party’s right to give evidence, should be taken away by the wilful, negligent and possibly fraudulent refusal of another to produce a document which the law requires him to produce. It may be that the person refusing to produce the original does so at his own peril and is liable to an action for damages in which he may be required to make good to the party calling for a document the loss which he has sustained by its non-production. A remedy of this kind would, however, in many cases be illusory. Thus a suit for severals lakhs of rupees might be dismissed or decreed owing to the inability of the parties to give secondary evidence of a document, while the person in possession of the original against whom an action would lie might be a man of straw. On the other hand, the danger of collusion must not be overlooked.

The question, however, next arises whether the Act has made any, and if so what, provision for the giving of secondary evidence of documents which the person in possession is justifiably refusing to produce. If, for example, a person summoned to produce a document brings it to Court, as he must,(1) but, as he may, objects to its production in evidence on the ground of privilege, being his title-deed, or the like,(2) and the Judge decides that the objection is a valid one,(3) may secondary evidence, in such a case, be given by the party calling for the original as he would be undoubtedly entitled to do according to the English rule abovementioned? According to the wording of the section as it now stands, the person so summoned would not be a ‘person legally bound to produce.’ It has been suggested that in such case he is not qua such production, ‘subject to the process of the Court,’(4) for he cannot be compelled by the Judge to produce the document.(5) But this is open to the objection that by section 66, clause (b), no notice to produce is necessary where a person is ‘not subject to the process of the Court.’ And not only is it difficult to suppose that notice would be excused in such a case, but such notice would clearly be necessary in order that the document be produced for adjudication by the Court on the question of privilege, and moreover the last paragraph of this clause expressly and plainly requires such notice to be given. Another construction is that which reads the words ‘legally bound’ as meaning legally bound by virtue of the subpoena to produce in Court. The clause would in such case include all persons in possession of documents which they are summoned to produce, whether those documents be privileged or not (section 162). But this construction is also open to objection. ‘Produce’ in this clause seems to mean to produce in evidence, for section 162 makes a distinction between ‘bringing to Court’ and ‘production.’ Further, a person is only legally bound by virtue of a process of Court, e.g., a subpoena duces tecum. Process emanating from a party such as a ‘notice to produce’ in its technical and English sense of a ‘notice by a party or the attorney of such party, to the other party or to his attorney strictly speaking creates no legal obligation. The only penalty, if it be one, attached to refusal to produce on such a notice, is that secondary evidence may be given. If then ‘legally bound’ means legally bound by virtue of the subpoena, it is plainly unnecessary to give a person already affected with notice to produce by virtue of the subpoena any further notice to produce. But the section would then read ‘or of any person subpoenaed to produce it and when after the notice mentioned, &c.’. On the other hand, this argument is weakened by the fact that there has, in respect of another matter, been a clear error of draughtsmanship in the last paragraph of this clause.(6)

---

(1) S. 162, post.
(2) Sec ss. 130, 131, post.
(3) S. 162.
(4) Whitley Stokes, Anglo-Indian Codes ii, 892.
(5) S. 165, post.
(6) v. ante, p. 381, n. (2).
Mr. Markby says that if the word "not" has been omitted in the fourth paragraph of clause (a) then by the express provisions of that section secondary evidence is admissible, and this is also the English law. (1) By implication, therefore, he would consider secondary evidence inadmissible under the clause as it now stands. And this also appears to be the view taken by Mr. Field, who says that "as section 65, clause (a), para. 4, admits secondary evidence of the existence, condition or contents of a document only when a person legally bound to produce it refuses after notice to do so, it may appear that neither the owner nor any one else can be called to give secondary evidence of a document which the person in possession of it is not legally bound to produce. If this be so, it is contrary to the rule of English law, which admits secondary evidence of a document in the hands of a stranger, who is not compellable by law to produce it, and who refuses to do so." (2)

If the case is not covered by the words of the section according to those constructions already given favouring the admissibility of secondary evidence, there has been either an intentional or accidental omission to provide for the admission of secondary evidence under the circumstances mentioned. It is difficult to assign any reason for its intentional omission. For the effect of such omission should be to establish a rule contrary to English law, and to the general principles controlling the reception of secondary evidence, which might in many cases cause serious and unreasonable injury to a litigant. If, therefore, it be held that this section does not make provision for the case mentioned, it may perhaps nevertheless be held upon the English cases and the general principles and considerations adverted to, that where a person is justified in refusing to produce a document on the ground of privilege, secondary evidence may be given by the party calling for the document, for he has, in the words of Parke, B., (3) done everything in his power to obtain it. (4) It is also apprehended that the rule with regard to documents, the subject of lien is the same under this Act as it is in England. (5)

Where oral evidence was given to prove the contents of a letter, which was neither produced nor called for, but no objection was raised to the giving of the evidence, held that this was secondary evidence of the contents of a document and could not be given without satisfying the conditions of this section. Section 66 rendered it legally inadmissible, although no objection was raised to the giving of it. (6) This decision is unsustainable and has been disentert from. (7) It fails to draw the distinction between evidence which is irrelevant and relevant evidence proved in a particular manner without objection. An objection to the irregularity of proof should not be entertained in the Appellate Court where no objection on this head has been taken in the Court of first instance. (8)

CLAUSE (B).

Oral admissions of the contents of documents are ordinarily inadmissible, unless and until the party proposing to prove them shows that he is entitled to give secondary evidence. (9) The present clause, however, provides that a written admission is receivable as proof of the existence, condition, or contents of a document, even though the original is in existence and might be, but

---

(1) Markby, Ev., Act, 94.
(2) Field, Ev., 603.
(3) See Hibbard v. Knight, 2 Ex., 12 ante, p. 381, note. (7).
(4) But see also Field, Ev., 603; Cunningham, Ev., 213.
(5) v. ante, p. 382.
(6) Kameshwar Pershad v. Amanusilla, 26 C., 53 (1898); s. c., 2 C. W. N., 649; Rampal J., observing that "there is no law in this country that the absence of objection to evidence, which is legally inadmissible, makes it admissible."
(8) See Notes to a. 5 ante "Objections by parties."
(9) S. 22., ante.
is not produced. (1) The written admission is the secondary evidence admissible in the case mentioned in this clause. (2) This clause will not apply or avail a party where the original document is inadmissible for want of a stamp (3) or of registration. (4) In the undermentioned criminal case (5) it was held that inasmuch as the record of the statement of the accused was not admissible, secondary evidence thereof could not be given; the Court observing as follows:—“Reference is made by the Sessions Judge to section 65 of the Evidence Act, the words appearing in clause (b) of that section being quoted: but for the reasons above stated, I am of opinion that it was not open to the Magistrate to procure an admission in writing—if the affixing of his whole statement by the accused can be held to constitute an admission in mark to the writing for this purpose—in respect of the contents of the previous statements.”

This clause must be read with section 22. The result seems to be this:—The written admission may always be proved. The oral admission can only be proved in the cases stated in section 65, (a), (c) and (d). Of course admissions as to the contents of documents are frequently made by the parties or their pleaders at the hearing. The reference now under consideration has no application to such admissions (6) which are governed by section 58. The admissions spoken of in sections 22 and 65 are evidentiary admissions. Admissions under section 58 dispense with proof.

CLAUSE (C).

When the original has been destroyed (7) or lost (8) or when the party offering evidence of its contents for any other reason, not arising from his own default or neglect, produce it in reasonable time, (9) any (10) secondary evidence of the contents of the document is admissible. ""If the instrument be destroyed or lost, the party seeking to give secondary evidence of its contents must give some evidence that the original once existed (11) and must then either prove its destruction positively (12) or at least presumptively, as by showing that it has been thrown aside as useless (13) or he must establish its loss, by proof that a search has been unsuccessfully made for it, in the place or places where it was most likely to be found. What degree of diligence is necessary in the search cannot easily be defined, as each case must depend much on its own peculiar circumstances (14) but the party is generally expected to show that he has, in good faith, exhausted in a reasonable degree all the sources of information and means of discovery, which the nature of the case would naturally suggest and which were

(2) See last para. but two of s. 65.
(5) R. v. Firan, 9 M., 234, 240 (1886).
(9) See Womesh Chunder v. Shana Sundari, 7 C., 98, 100 (1881), and post.
(10) R. v. Firan, 9 M., 234, 240 (1886).
(13) See Womesh Chunder v. Shana Sundari, 7 C., 98, 100 (1881), and post.
accessible to him. (1) As the object of the proof is merely to establish a reasonable presumption of the loss of the instrument and as this is a preliminary inquiry addressed to the discretion of the Judge, (2) the party offering secondary evidence need not on ordinary occasions have made a search for the original document, as for stolen goods, nor be in a position to negative every possibility of its having been kept back. (3) If the document be important, and such as the owner may have an interest in keeping or if any reason exist for suspecting that it has been fraudulently withheld, a very strict examination will properly be required; but if the paper be supposed to be of little or no value a very slight degree of diligence will be demanded, as it will be aided by the presumption of destruction or loss, which that circumstance affords. (4) It is not necessary that the search should be recent or made for the purpose of the trial, (5) though it will be more satisfactory if the search be made shortly before the trial. Hearsay evidence of the answers given by persons likely to have had the document in their custody is admissible. (6) Where there is one person chiefly interested in a document, enquiry should be made of him; where two persons have an equal title to its custody as a lessor and lessee, enquiry should be made of both, though perhaps such strictness is not legally necessary. (7) If the party entitled to the custody of the document be dead, enquiries should generally be made of his heirs and representatives, though such steps will not be necessary should it appear that another party is in possession of the papers of the deceased. (8) It has been already observed that before copies of other secondary evidence will be admissible there must be evidence of a search for the originals. (9) Whether or not sufficient proof of search for, or loss of an original document, to lay a ground for the admission of secondary evidence, has been given, is a point proper to be decided by the Judge of first instance and is treated as depending very much on his discretion. His conclusion should not be overruled, except in a clear case of miscarriage. (10)

Where the plaintiff stated the accidental destruction of a document and prayed leave to put in evidence a registered copy which the Court allowed, and at the same time ordered the fragments of the original bond to be produced, which was done, and the Court admitted the registered copy as evidence, the Judicial Committee reversed this finding, on the ground that the registered copy, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of the destruction of the original bond, was improperly admitted as secondary evidence. There was nothing to show that the fragments produced were fragments of the original. (11) In a suit by the purchaser of a debt, the plaintiff stated that, in 1873, A executed a bond in favour of B to secure there payment of Rs. 1,000, and that he had purchased the interest of B at a sale in execution of a decree against him. The plaintiff now sued A upon the bond, making B a party. At the trial, A denied the execution of the bond, and it was not produced by the plaintiff who, having served B with notice to produce, tendered secondary evidence of its contents, B was

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 23; ante, p. 378, note 3, and post.
(3) M. v. Aiston, 2 M. & W., 214; Hart v. Hart, 1 Hare, 9.
(5) Fitz v. Rabbits, 2 M. & Rob, 60; Taylor, Ev., § 436.
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 432.
(8) D., § 434.
(9) Meer Uscoollah v. Musammat Babi, 1 Meo. I. A., 41 (1836); Bhurannahwari Debi v. Harisam Surana, 6 C., 723, 724 (1881); Kishan Kishori v. Kisbhi Lal, 14 C., 490 (1887); Harripria Debi v. Rukmuni Debi, 19 C., 438 (1893).
(10) Harripria Debi v. Rukmuni Debi, 19 C., 483 (1893); see also Shuklam Sonak v. Ram Lal, 9 W. B., 249 (1868), ante p. 378 note 3.
not examined as a witness, and no evidence was given of the loss or destruction of the bond. It was held by Pontifex and Morris, JJ. (Prinsep, J., dissenting), that secondary evidence was not admissible. (1) Secondary evidence of the contents of a document requiring execution, which can be shown to have been lost in proper custody, and to have been lost and, which is more than 30 years old, may be admitted under this clause and section 90, post, without proof of the execution of the original. (2) In the Court of Probate where a will itself has, after the death of the testator, been irretrievably lost or destroyed, if its substance can be distinctly ascertained (either by the original instructions, by a copy of the will, or even by the recollection of witnesses who have heard it read), probate may be granted of a copy embodying such substance. (3)

It was held prior to the Act that when a party himself fraudulently destroys a document he is not entitled to give secondary evidence of it. (6) But a party in possession of a document cannot refuse to produce it and give secondary evidence because the document has been in the possession of the opposite party who might have, or had, tampered with it. (5)

The second position in this clause is that of a person, by no fault of his own, being unable to procure the production of the original. It has been said that perhaps under this portion of the clause [if the word 'not' has been omitted from the penultimate paragraph of clause (a)], (6) a party might give secondary evidence of a document which a person having no legal right to refuse the production of, nevertheless refuses on notice to produce. (7) If the party interested in the production of a document appears after diligent efforts to have had difficulty in producing it, the Court ought to give him more time. (8) It is not enough for a party desirous of adducing secondary evidence of the contents of a document which ought to have been registered, to show that he cannot produce it because it is not registered: he must show that its non-registration was not due to any fault or want of diligence on his part, or he must show that the party against whom he desires to use it was guilty of such fraud in the matter of non-registration that he cannot be allowed to object on that ground to the production of the secondary evidence. (9) In the aforementioned case (10) it became necessary to prove that in July 1877 certain immovable property vested in one K S as a purchaser at an auction-sale. A certified copy under section 57 of the Registration Act was tendered and objected to. The case was remanded by the Appellate Court in order that a subpœna duces tecum might be served on K S, the Court observing that if the party seeking the production of the document could not compel K S to produce it and could show that the non-production was not due to his own default or neglect, then secondary evidence could be given under this clause; and in such a case by section 57 of the Registration Act a copy of the entry made in the registration-record was admissible.

Any secondary evidence may be given in this case. (11) So where a registered deed of sale had been lost, it was held, that oral evidence of the transaction

(1) Womasth Chunder v. Shama Sundari, 7 C., 98 (1881).
(2) Khasiti Chunder v. Kheittar Paul, 5 C., 806 (1880); 6 C. L. R. 199.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 436, and cases there cited, and see Harris v. Knight, L. R., 15 P. D., 170; Woodward v. Goulstone, L. R., 11 Ap. Cas., 409.
(4) Supple v. St. Leonards, 1 P. D., 154; see Act XI of 1855 (Indian Succession), ss. 208, 209; Philippson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 284. See notes to ss. 101—104, post sub voc. "Wills."
(6) v, ante, p. 310, note 1.
(11) S. 65.
might be received, and that it was not necessary to insist upon the production of a certified copy. (1) Where a deed has been executed and lost or destroyed it is not necessary that the witnesses called to give oral testimony of its contents should be attesting witnesses; if they have seen and know the contents of the deed it will be sufficient, provided the Court gives credit to them and is satisfied of the due execution. (2)

CLAUSE (D).

Secondary evidence may be given when the production of the original is either physically impossible or highly inconvenient. Thus inscriptions on walls (3) and fixed tables, mural monuments, gravestones (4), surveyor's marks on boundary trees, notices fixed on boards to warn trespassers, and the like, may be proved by secondary evidence, since they cannot conveniently, if at all, be produced in Court. For instance, on one occasion, a man was convicted of writing a libel on the wall of the Liverpool gaol, on mere proof of his handwriting. In order, however, to let in this description of secondary evidence, it must clearly appear that the document or writing is affixed to the freehold, and cannot be easily removed; and, therefore, where a notice was merely suspended to the wall of an office by a nail, it was considered necessary to produce it at the trial. If, too, a document be deposited in a foreign country, and the laws or established usage of that country will not permit its removal, secondary evidence of the contents will be admitted, because in that case, as in case of mural inscriptions, it is not in the power of the party to produce the original. (5) Any secondary evidence of the contents of the original is here admissible. (6)

CLAUSE (E).

Secondary evidence may be given when the original is a public document within the meaning of section 74. (7) This provision is intended to protect the originals of public records from the danger to which they would be exposed by constant production in evidence. (8) In this case a certified copy (9) of the document but no other kind of secondary evidence is admissible. (10) But this provision applies only when the public document is still in existence on the public records, and does not interfere with the general rule in clause (e) that any secondary evidence may be given when the original has been destroyed or lost. (11)

---

(2) Syed Lootfoollah v. Musammat Nuseebun, 10 W. R., 24 (1868).
(3) See s. 3 (definition of "document").
(4) See s. 32, cl. (6), ante.
(5) Taylor, Ev., § 438, and authorities there cited. The case last cited in the text would not strictly come within the wording of s. 65, clause (d), which refers to originals not easily moveable. In the instance given, the originals are not moveable at all. In Whitley Stokes, Anglo-Indian Codes ii, 892, it is suggested that such a case is not provided for unless perhaps by the latter part of cl. (c). But it can hardly be said that the original cannot be produced in reasonable time when it cannot be produced at any time. It is apprehended that the case would come within the purview of the third paragraph of cl. (a), because the document would under the circumstances given be in the possession or power of a person or persons out of reach or not subject to the process of the Court. See ante, p. 38.
(6) S. 65.
(7) See Notes to s. 74, post: no an examined copy of a quinquennial register was held to be evidence without the production of the original; Sreemutty Oodoy v. Bisashath Dutta, 7 W. R., 14 (1867). See as to this clause, Krishna Kishori v. Kishori Lal, 14 C., 401 (1877).
(8) Kunnath Odangat v. Vayoith Pallyi, 8 M., 80, 81 (1882); Doe v. Rose, 7 M. & W., 106.
(9) See ss. 76, 77, post.
(10) S. 65.
(11) Kunnath v. Vayoith, note (8) supra; see also in the matter of a collision between the "Ave" and the "Brenhilda," 5 C., 598 (1879); Bishnup dum Sing v. Must. Khadea, Marshall's Rep., 213 (1892).
A certificate of sale granted under the Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859, and before section 107 of Act XII of 1879 was enacted is a document of title, but is not a public document so as to allow secondary evidence of it to be given under this clause. (1) See further p. 378 ante, as to cases in which two causes for non-production of the original are combined, and notes to s. 86, post.

CLAUSE (F).

When the original is a document of which a certified copy is permitted by this Act, (2) or by any other law in force in India, (3) to be given in evidence, a certified copy is the only evidence admissible (but v. post). The words "to be given in evidence" mean to be given in evidence in the first instance without having been introduced by other evidence. (4) A registered deed of sale is not a document of which a certified copy is permitted by law to be given in evidence in the first instance without having been introduced by other evidence. Section 57 of the Registration Act only shows that when secondary evidence has in any way been introduced, as by proof of the loss of the original document, a copy certified by the Registrar shall be admissible for the purpose of proving the contents of the original; that is, it shall be admitted without other proof than the Registrar’s certificate of the correctness of the copy, and shall be taken as a true copy; but that does not make such a copy a document which may be given in evidence without other evidence to introduce it. (5) Section 86 of this Act contains an instance of documents to which this clause seems to refer. (6) The Bankers’ Books Evidence Act (XVIII of 1891) is an instance of an Act, other than the present one, which permits certified copies of original documents to be given in evidence. (7) So also under the Powers of Attorney Act a certified copy of an instrument deposited shall without further proof be sufficient evidence of the contents of the instrument and of the deposit thereof in the High Court. (8) Although the section provides that in clause (f) a certified copy of the document, but no other kind of secondary evidence is admissible, yet in a case, falling under clause (f) and also under clause (a) or (c) of the same section, any secondary evidence is admissible. (9)

CLAUSE (G):

This provision is for the saving of public time. If the point to be ascertained were, for instance, the balance in a long series of accounts in a merchant’s books, evidently great inconvenience would arise, and much public time be wasted, if a witness were compellable to go through the whole of the books and to make his examination and calculations before the Court. He is allowed, therefore, to do this before he comes to be sworn, and then to give the general result of his scrutiny. He can, of course, be tested by cross-examination,

(1) Pasanji v. Harihrai, 2 Bom. L. R., 533 (1900), per Candy, J.
(2) See s. 78; and as to this clause, Krishna Kishori v. Kishori Lall. 14 C., 491 (1887).
(3) e.g., Act XVIII of 1891 (The Bankers’ Books Evidence Act), v. post, see also Civ. Pr. Code, s. 610.
(5) Harish Chander v. Prasunno Coomar, 22 W. R., 303 (1874); and although such a copy may be taken as a correct copy of some document registered in the office, this circumstance does not make that registered document evidence, or render it operative against the persons who appear to be affected by its terms. A document registered in and brought from a public registry office requires to be proved when it is desired that it should be used as evidence against any party who does not admit it, quite as much as if it came out of private custody. Satish Pate v. Omedee Singh, 21 W. R., 265 (1879).
(6) Harish Chander v. Prasunno Coomar, supra.
(7) Act XVIII of 1891, s. 4: see Appendix.
(8) Act VII of 1882, s. 4, cl. (d).
(9) In the matter of a collision between the "Ava" and the "Brenhilda," 5 C., 668 (1879).
and the books should always, where it is practicable, be in Court and open to the opposite side's inspection and to that of the Court. (1) So a witness who has inspected the accounts of the parties, though he may not give evidence of their particular contents, will be allowed to speak to the general balance without producing the accounts; and where the question is as to the solvency of a party at a particular time, the general result of an examination of his books and securities may be stated in like manner. (2) But the word "result" must be construed strictly to mean the actual figures or facts arrived at. The exception under consideration will not enable a witness to state the general contents of a number of letters received by him from one of the parties in the cause, though such letters have been since destroyed, if the object of the examination be to elicit from the witness not a fact but merely an opinion or impression; for instance, the impression which the destroyed letters produced on his mind with reference to the degree of friendship subsisting between the writer and a third party. In the other cases mentioned the fact in question is one which simply depends on the honesty of the witness, whereas he might from the perusal of the documents, conscientiously draw a very different opinion or inference from that which would be drawn by a jury. (3) In case (g) secondary evidence may be given as to the general result of the documents by any person who has examined them and who is skilled in the examination of such documents. The competence of the witness must, therefore, be proved to the satisfaction of the Court before such evidence is tendered.

Upon the analogy of the rule contained in this clause, if bills of exchange or the like have been drawn between particular parties in one invariable mode, this may be proved by the testimony of a witness conversant with their habits of business, who speaks generally of the fact, without production of all the bills. (4) But if the mode of dealing has not been uniform, the case does fall within this exception, but is governed by the rule requiring the production of the writings. (5)

68. Secondary evidence of the contents of the documents referred to in section 65, clause (a), shall not be given, (6) unless the party proposing to give such secondary evidence has previously given to the party in whose possession or power the document is, (7) or to his attorney or pleader such notice to produce it as is prescribed by law, and if no notice is prescribed by law, then such notice as the Court considers reasonable under the circumstances of the case:

Provided that such notice shall not be required in order to render secondary evidence admissible in any of the following cases, or in any other case in which the Court thinks fit to dispense with it:

1. When the document to be proved is itself a notice;
2. When, from the nature of the case, the adverse party must know that he will be required to produce it;

---

(1) Norton, Ev., 248; see also Civ. Pr. Code, art. 394 (Commission to investigate and adjust accounts).
(2) Taylor, Ev., § 462.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 462.
(5) Taylor, Ev., § 462, and Note 6, 6, 9th Ed.
(7) These words in s. 66 were inserted by Act XVIII of 1872, s. 6.
when it appears or is proved that the adverse party has obtained possession of the original by fraud or force;

(4) when the adverse party or his agent has the original in Court;

(5) when the adverse party or his agent has admitted the loss of the document;

(6) when the person in possession of the document is out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court.

Principle.—Notice is required in order to give the opposite party a sufficient opportunity to produce the document and thereby to secure, if he pleases, the best evidence of its contents. Notice to produce also excludes the argument that the opponent has not taken all reasonable means to secure the original.(1) See further, Notes, post, as to the ground of the rule and of the provisos.

s. 63 (Meaning of secondary evidence.) s. 3 ("Document."")
s. 65. Cl. (a) (Proof by secondary evidence.) s. 3 ("Court.")

Steph Dig., Art. 72; Taylor, Ev., §§ 441A—456A; Civ. Pr. Code, ss. 70, 94, 131—134, 163—167, 171—178; Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 94—96, 485; Ch. VI, ib.; Penal Code, s. 175.

COMMENTARY.

A proper notice to produce is, in the cases mentioned in section 65, clause (a), necessary before secondary evidence becomes admissible. The true principle on which a notice to produce a document on the trial of a cause is required is not to give the opposite party notice that such a document will be used by a party to the cause in order to enable him to prepare evidence to explain or confirm the document, but is merely to give him a sufficient opportunity to produce it, and thereby to secure if he pleases, the best evidence of the contents; and, therefore, when a document is shown to be in Court, a request to produce it immediately is sufficient.(3)

Section 65, clause (a), refers to documents in the possession of both parties and strangers. According to English practice a notice to produce is used for an adversary in the cause; while a stranger legally compellable to produce a document is served with a summons to produce or subpoena duces tecum. A notice to produce is a notice by a party or his solicitor to another party or his solicitor, calling upon the latter to produce at the trial a particular document or particular documents specified in the notice. A subpoena duces tecum is a process used not by the party but by the Court. It would appear from clause (a) of section 65 that the notice to produce referred to in sections 65 and 66 is a notice served either on an adversary or on a stranger,(4) and is a notice issued by a process of Court under the Civil.(5)

---

(1) Dwyer v. Collins, 7 Ex., 639—647.

(2) In s. 65, "existence, condition, or contents" are spoken of. In s. 66 secondary evidence of the "contents" is alone mentioned. Quere, whether secondary evidence of "existence" or "condition" can be given in any case without notice; Field, Ev., 388. Apparently yes.

(3) Dwyer v. Collins, 7 Ex., 639; further notice to produce excludes the argument that the opponent has not taken all reasonable means to procure the original, ib., 647, v. post, Proviso (4) p. (393). But see also Bate v. Kinsey, 1 C. M. & R., 38.

(4) Field, Ev., 389; *Whitley Stokes ii, 893.

(5) See Civ. Pr. Code, ss. 70, 94, 131—134, post [the 163—167, 171—178; and see s. 165, Court may order the production of any document or thing], and s. 162, post. or Criminal(1) Procedure Code. In the Mofussil all notices are served through the Court, but on the Original Side of the High Court, the English practice is followed which permits a party himself or his solicitor to serve a notice to produce on the opposing party or his solicitor. Where, however, the person in possession of the document is a stranger to the suit, a subpœna duces tecum will be necessary in the High Court as in the English Courts, whose practice in this respect is followed.

The notice to produce must be such as is prescribed by law ;(2) and if no notice is prescribed by law, then such notice as the Court considers reasonable under the circumstances of the case. The notice may be directed to the party or to his attorney or pleader and may be served on either.(3) It must be shown that the party to whom the notice has been given has the document in his possession or power. Possession is the very foundation of notice; reasonable evidence of possession must be given, and then on proof of service of notice and non-production secondary evidence may be offered.(4) If the document is in the possession or power of the person who desires to use it as evidence he must produce it.(5) "It is difficult to lay down any general rule as to what a notice to produce ought to contain, since much must depend on the particular circumstances of each case. No mis-statement or inaccuracy in the notice will, however, be deemed material if not really calculated to mislead the opponent. Neither is it necessary by condescending minutely to dates, contents, parties, etc., to specify the precise documents intended. Indeed to do so may be dangerous, since if any material error were inadvertently made, the party sought to be affected by the notice might urge, with possible success, that he had been misled thereby. If enough is stated on the notice to induce the party to believe that a particular instrument will be called for, this will be sufficient."(6) The form of notice may be general, e.g., to produce "all accounts relating to the matter in question in this cause;"(7) or "all letters written by the plaintiff to the defendant relating to the matters in dispute in the action."(8) But a notice to produce "letters and copies of letters and all books relating to the cause" has been held to be too vague to admit secondary evidence of a letter.(9) Inaccuracies will not vitiate a notice unless the recipient has been misled thereby.(10) As to the time and place of the service, when not fixed by law, no more precise rule can be laid down than that it must be such as to enable the party, under the known circumstances of the case, to comply with the call.(11) The sufficiency of the service is a question for the Judge who must be satisfied that it was such that the recipient might, by using reasonable diligence, have complied with the notice.(12) If the notice has not been properly served, or if served in insufficient time,(13) or if the party calling for a document does not take all the means in his power

---

(1) See Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 94—98, Ch. VI., ib.; s. 485, ib.; and ss. 182, 186, post.; persons omitting to produce documents after service of notice may be proceeded against under s. 176 of the Penal Code.

(2) See Civ. and Cr. Pr. Codes, sections cited ante, p. 391, notes (5) and (1) supra.

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 442.

(4) See Sinclair v. Stevenson, 1 C. & P., 585; as to the order in which the evidence may be given, see s. 136, post.

(6) Taylor, Ev., § 443.

(11) Taylor, Ev., § 445; see ib., § 446, when the papers are in a foreign country.

(12) Lloyd v. Mostyn, 10 M. & W., 483, 484.

(13) Sugg v. Bray, 54 L. J. Ch., 132; Taylor, Ev., § 445; but if a party, on being served with a notice to produce a document, states that it is not in existence, parol proof of its contents will be received, and no objection can be taken to the lateness of the service; Roster v. Pointer, 9 C. & P., 720.
to compel its production, (1) secondary evidence will not be permitted to be given.

When a party calls for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce, and such document is produced and inspected by the party calling for its production, he is bound to give it as evidence if the party producing it requires him to do so. (2) And when a party refuses to produce a document which he has had notice to produce, he cannot afterwards use the document as evidence without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court. (3) The rules with regard to the admission of secondary evidence are the same in criminal as in civil trials, and the necessity for notice the same; though it will comparatively seldom happen that documents are required to be produced at a criminal trial and notice will consequently have but seldom to be issued. (4) The Court shall presume that every document called for and not produced after notice to produce was attested, stamped and executed in the manner required by law. (5)

Notice is not required in order to render secondary evidence admissible Provision. in any of the following cases:

(a) When the document to be proved is itself a notice. This exception appears to have been originally adopted in regard to notices to produce, for the obvious reason, that if a notice to produce such a document were necessary, the series of notices would become infinite. The exception has subsequently been extended to other notices and now lets in proof by copies of a notice to quit; of a notice of dishonour, provided the action be brought upon the bill, but not otherwise; and of all such notices of action, or written demands as are necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover. (6)

(b) When from the nature of the case, the adverse party must know that he will be required to produce it. The second of the cases is where from the nature of the action, or indictment, or from the form of the pleadings, the defendant must know that he will be charged with the possession of an instrument, and be called upon to produce it. Thus in an action of trover for converting a bond, a bill of exchange for other writing or in a prosecution for stealing any document, the counsel for the plaintiff or the Crown may at once produce secondary evidence of its contents, even though the defendant should offer to produce the document itself. (7) A like rule prevails in an action on contract against a carrier for the non-delivery of written instruments, as also in indictments for conducting a traitorous correspondence. It has, however, been held inapplicable in a charge of forging a deed; and no doubt can be entertained in that an indictment for arson, with intent to defraud an insurance office, does not convey such a notice that the policy will be required, as to dispense with a formal notice to produce. Similarly it is the necessary (though reverse) consequence of this rule that if the maker of a note or cheque, or the acceptor of a bill, does not, as defendant in an action, deny by the plea his making or acceptance, the plaintiff who is not bound to produce the instrument as part of his case, since it is admitted on the record, may object to the defendant's giving secondary evidence of its contents for the purpose even of identification, unless a notice to produce has been duly served or unless the instrument is shown to be in Court. (8)

(2) S. 163, post; see Notes to that section.
(3) S. 164, post; see Notes to that section, and see Civil Procedure Code, ss. 131, 63.
(4) Norton, Ev., 251.
(5) S. 89, post.
(6) Taylor, Ev., §§ 450, 451, and cases there cited. Quere, whether the 'notices' referred to in Cl. (1) is a notice to produce only or includes also the other notices which the doctrine has been extended by the English cases.
(7) See Whitney v. Scott, 1 M. & Rob., 2,
(8) Taylor, Ev., § 452, and cases there cited.
(c) When it appears or is proved that the adverse party has obtained possession of the original by fraud or force; as where, after action brought, he has received it from a witness, in fraud of a subpoena duces tecum. (1) In such cases in odium spoliatoris a notice to produce is not required to be given to him before admitting secondary evidence of the contents of the document of which he has improperly obtained possession. (2)

(d) When the adverse party or his agent has the original in Court. For the object of the notice is not, as was formerly thought, to give the opposite party an opportunity of providing the proper testimony to secure the document, but merely to enable him to produce it, if he likes, at the trial, and thus to secure the best evidence of its contents. (3)

(e) When the adverse party or his agent has admitted the loss of the document; for in such case the notice would be nugatory. (4) The loss must be admitted. Under this exception, however, a party cannot call witnesses to prove the destruction of a document that has been traced into the hands of his opponent and then show its contents by secondary proof, unless he has first served a notice to produce, since (notwithstanding the evidence to the contrary), the document may still be in existence, or, at any rate the opponent may dispute the facts of its having been destroyed. (5)

(f) When the person in possession of the document is out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court. (6) On this point, sections 65 and 66 are not happily drafted. Section 65 appears to require a notice to be given in this case, for the last paragraph of Clause (a) applies to everything that has gone before; while the present Clause expressly enacts that notice is not necessary. (7) Where a commission to take evidence is issued to any place beyond the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the commission, it is not necessary, in order to admit secondary evidence of the contents of a document, that the party tendering it should have given notice to produce the original, nor is it necessary for him to prove a refusal to produce the original. (8)

It will be observed that under this section, besides the specified cases in which notice is not required the Court has the power of dispensing with the notice "in any case in which it thinks fit." This is a relaxation of the procedure in force in the English Courts. (9)

67. If a document is alleged to be signed or to have been written wholly or in part by any person, the signature or the handwriting of so much of the document as is alleged to be in that person's handwriting must be proved to be in his handwriting.

Principle.—The person who makes an allegation must prove it. See Notes post.

s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 45 ("Expert evidence in handwriting.")

s. 73 ("Comparison of handwriting.")

---

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 453.
(3) Dugger v. Collins, 7 Ex., 639, ante, p. 391, see Taylor, Ev.; § 456.
(4) Taylor, Ev., § 455.
(7) See the argument in Balli v. Gau Kim, 9 C., 939 (1883).
(9) Cunningham, Ev., 218.
PROOF OF HANDWRITING.

COMMENTARY.

In addition to the question which arises as to the contents of a document dealt with in sections 61—66, the further question arises when a document is used as evidence, namely, whether it is that which it purports to be; whether, in other words, it is a genuine document. The latter question is dealt with in sections 67—73. The nature of the evidence will greatly depend upon the nature of the document. Proof of handwriting, signature and execution must be given. Formalities attend or form part of such execution of either an universal or special nature. Signature is almost universal for which sometimes, but less rarely, sealing is substituted. Sometimes both are used. If a person cannot write and has no seal he generally makes a mark and some other person writes his name. Attestation, as to which see sections 68—72, is sometimes an imperative formality. Whatever the document may be, it cannot be used in evidence until its genuineness has been either admitted or established by proof, which should be given before the document is accepted by the Court.(1) The word “signing” means the writing of the name of a person, so that it may convey a distinct idea to some body else that what the writing indicates is a particular individual whose signature or sign it purports to be. A mark is a mere symbol and does not convey any idea to the person who notices it—very often probably even to the person who made it.(2) This section has not provided for the case of marks and seals, as to the proof of which, however, see ante, notes to section 47, pp. 310, 311 and section 73 which assumes that seals are capable of proof. This section merely states with reference to documents what is the universal rule in all cases that the person who makes an allegation must prove it. It lays down no new rule whatever as to the kind of proof,(3) which must be given. In that respect the rule is precisely the same as it stood before. It leaves it, as before, entirely to the discretion of the presiding Judge of fact to determine what satisfies him that the document is a genuine one.(4) So in the undermentioned case,(5) it appeared that the evidence which was given in support of the document upon which the defendant’s case depended was that of a Cazi before whom the vendor came and admitted the deed to be his, and caused it to be registered, bringing witnesses to his execution thereof. Upon that evidence the lower Court came to the conclusion that the deed was proved; but it was contended in appeal that the present section rendered it necessary that direct evidence of the handwriting of the person who was alleged to have executed the deed should have been given by some person who saw the signature affixed. But the Court, making the observations cited above, held, that it was not so expressly stated in this section, and that that was not the intention of the Legislature.(6) So also this Act does not require the writer of a document to be examined as a witness; nor does the present section require the subscribing witnesses to a document to be produced.(7)

It has been stated(8) to be commonly the practice with Subordinate Judicial Officers, when taking the evidence required by this section to record merely that the witness verified (“tasik kiga” or some similar expression) the document without stating the exact nature of the evidence offered, or the statement

---

(1) Markby, Ev., Act 60.
(2) Nirmal Chunder v. Brimati Saratmani, 2 C. W. N., 642, 648 (1898); as to “signature” including a mark, see ante, notes to s. 47, pp. 310, 311.
(3) The proof required by this section may, of course, be by any of the recognized modes of proof, and amongst others by statements admissible under s. 32, ante; Abdulla Paru v. Gannya, 11 B., 690, 691 (1867); v. ante, p. 202 as to the method of proof, see s. 47, ante.
(4) Neil Kanto v. Jugobundho Ghose, 12 B., L. R., App. 18 (1874), per Markby, J.
(5) Ib.
(6) Ib.
(7) Abdoor Ali v. Abdoor Rahman, 21 W. R., 429 (1874); as to attesting witnesses, see s. 68.
(8) Field, Ev., 389.
made by the witness. In Gunga Persad v. Inderjit Singh(1) the Judicial Committee said:—"The Documentary evidence on which the defendant’s case principally rested consisted of two amanatnamas and the endorsements of payment thereon, which purported to have been signed by the plaintiffs; because these, if really signed by them, were proof of settled accounts comprehending most of the disputed payments. In this country, or in any country where the administration of justice is conducted with any degree of formality and regularity, one would have expected to find that these documents had been put into the hands of the plaintiffs; and that they had been called upon to admit or deny their alleged signatures and that the proof of these documents to be given by the defendants would have been far more specific than a mere statement that they were identified and verified, as the Judge says, by the witnesses; the witnesses would have been called upon to state whether they saw B. S. sign the first or B. S. and J. sign the second, or, if not, whether they could speak to the handwriting, and generally what took place on the two occasions on which the accounts are vaguely said by one of the witnesses to have been adjusted."(2) As to the presumptions which exist in the case of documents thirty years old, see section 90, post.

Proof of execution.

"'Executed' means completed. 'Execution' is, when applied to a document, the last act or series of acts which completes it. It might be defined as formal completion. Thus execution of deeds is the signing, sealing, and delivering of them in the presence of witnesses. Execution of a will includes attestation. In each class of instruments we have to consider when the instrument is formally complete."(3) Thus the contract on a negotiable instrument is, until delivery, incomplete and revocable.(4) The execution of documents to the validity of which attestation is not necessary may be proved by the admissions of the party against whom the document is tendered, whether such admissions are of an evidentiary nature or made for the purposes of the trial only. In the case of attested documents the admission of a party to such document of its execution by himself is sufficient proof of its execution as against him (section 70, post), whether such admissions be evidentiary or made at the trial for the purpose of dispensing with proof. When there has been no admission as to the execution of a document which has been produced, it becomes necessary to prove the handwriting, signature, or execution thereof.(5) As to the various methods of proving handwriting, see section 47, ante, and the Notes to that section. The English cases with regard to deeds and their sealing are of much importance in this country where writings under seal, or, as they are technically called, "deeds" are not generally required, and contracts under seal have no special privilege attached to them, being treated on the same footing as simple contracts. According to English law where the signature of a deed has been proved and the attestation-clause is in the usual form, sealing(6) and delivery may be presumed; so if signature and sealing are proved, delivery will be presumed.(7) Where the seal of a corporation is not judicially noticed(8) it may be proved by anyone who knows it, without calling a witness who saw it affixed.(9)

If the writing which is tendered in evidence is one which receives its character from being passed from one hand to another, the delivery, if necessary,

---

(1) 23 W. R., 390 (1875).
(2) 23 W. R., 390 (1875).
(3) Bhawanji Harbhun v. Devji Punja, 19 B., 635, 638 (1894), per Farran, J.
(4) Ib.
(6) See last Notr.
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 149; Roscoe, N. P. Ev. 135.
(8) v. a. 57, ante.
(9) Buxton, Thornton, 8 T. R., 397, see as to this case Taylor, Ev., § 1852; as to the presumption of genuineness of certain seals, see a. 53, post; and as to comparison of seals, a. 73, post.
must be proved. So until delivery a hundi is not clothed with the essential characteristics of a negotiable instrument. (1) No particular form of delivery is necessary. (2) Lastly, certain special rules exist as to the proof of execution of documents which are required by law to be attested. (3) An attested document not required by law to be attested may be proved as if it was unattested. (4) In respect of the proof of plans, it is not a sufficient reason for admitting a plan in evidence, that a witness says it was prepared in his presence, unless the witness also says that to his own knowledge the plan is correct. (5)

68. If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attestation witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence.

69. If no such attesting witness can be found, or if the document purports to have been executed in the United Kingdom, it must be proved that the attestation of one attesting witness at least is in his handwriting, and that the signature of the person executing the document is in the handwriting of that person.

70. The admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested.

71. If the attesting witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence.

72. An attested document not required by law to be attested may be proved as if it was unattested.

Principle.—Attestation of documents is a common formality, and in some cases is imperative. The object with which it is made or required is to afford proof of the genuineness of the document. It is clear that the provisions of the law prescribing attestation would be defeated if a document required to be attested were to be allowed to be used in evidence otherwise than in accord with the provisions of the following sections, 68—71. Where, however, attestation is optional, a party is free to give such evidence as he pleases, the case not being one in which the law has required a particular form of proof. See Notes post.

(1) Bhawani Harbhun v. Devji Punja, 19 B., 638 (1894).
(2) Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 462, and cases there cited; see as to the presumption in favour of the due execution of instruments, Taylor, Ev., §§ 148, 149; and as to presumption of delivery, v.
ATTESTATION.

s. 3 ("Document.")
ss. 45, 47, 77 (Proof of handwriting.)

s. 47 ("Evidence.")
s. 17 ("Admission.")

s. 50 ("Court.")
s. 89, 90 (Presumption of attestation.)

s. 3 ("Proof.")

Steph. Dig., Arts. 66-69; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1839-1861; Act X of 1865, ss. 50, 331; Act XXI of 1870, s. 2; Act IV of 1882, ss. 50, 123; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 462-467; Harris' Law of Identification in §§ 327-381.

COMMENTARY.

There are but few documents which are required by law to be attested in India. Wills made after the first day of January 1866, by persons other than Hindus, Muhammadans, or Buddhists; (1) and Wills made by Hindus, Jains, Sikhs and Buddhists, on or after the first day of September 1870 in the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and in the towns of Madras and Bombay, or relating to immovable property situated within those limits, must be attested. (2) In the case of wills attestation either of the execution or of the admission of execution by the testator is expressly made sufficient for the purpose. (3) So the signature of the Registrar at the foot of the registration endorsement embodying the admission of the executant has been held to be sufficient attestation within the meaning of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act. (4) But this does not, however, hold good in the case of mortgages. (5) A mortgage, the principal money secured by which is 100 rupees or upwards, can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses. Where the principal money is less than 100 rupees, a mortgage may be effected either by an instrument signed and attested as aforesaid, or (except in the case of a simple mortgage) by delivery of the property. (6) The attestation here contemplated, is attestation of the act of signing by the executant and cannot, in the absence of any express provision to that effect, be taken to include the attestation of the executant's admission of having signed the document. Therefore the requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act are not satisfied when a mortgage-bond is signed by the mortgagor attested by one witness and contains the Sub-Registrar's signature to the endorsement, recording the admission of the execution by the executant. (7) The Madras High Court has held that a mortgage for more than 100 rupees which has been prepared and accepted, but which is not attested, is invalid; and that it cannot be used in proof of a personal covenant to pay. (8) But this view has not been accepted by the Calcutta High Court, which has held that an unattested mortgage, so far as it creates a mere money or personal liability, does not require to be attested, and if so, section 68 of this Act does not apply. Therefore it was held that though a document purporting to hypothecate immovable property was not registered and attested, a personal decree could be passed on it, inasmuch as it was evidence of a money-debt. (9) A gift of

(1) Act X of 1865 (Indian Succession), ss. 50, 331.

(2) Act XXI of 1870 (Hindu Wills), s. 2. As to whether strict affirmative proof of due attestation is absolutely necessary, see Sibo Sundari Debi v. Hemangini Debi, 4 C. W. N., 204 (1899).

(3) Act X of 1865, s. 50; Girindra Nath v. Bejoy Gopal, 25 C., 246, 248, 249 (1898).

(5) See last two cases cited and post.

(6) Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property), s. 59.

(7) Tofaluddi Peeda v. Mahar Ali, 26 C., 78 (1899); Girindra Nath v. Bejoy Gopal, 26 C., 246 (1898); followed in Abdul Karim v. Salim, 27 C., 100 (1899).

(9) Sonatun Shaha v. Dina Nath, 26 C., 222 (1898); a. c., 2 C. W. N., 221, 3 C. W. N., 228; Tofaluddi Peeda v. Mahar Ali, 26 C., 78 (1898).
immoveable property can only be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses.(1)

"To attest" is to bear witness to a fact. Take a common example; a notary public attests a protest; he bears witness not to the statements in that protest, but to the fact of the making of those statements; so, I conceive, the witnesses in a will bear witness to all that the statute requires attesting witnesses to attest, namely, that the signature was made or acknowledged in their presence."(2) To 'attest' an instrument is not merely to subscribe one's name to it as having been present at its execution, but includes also, essentially, the being in fact present at its execution.(3) The ordinary sense of the expression "attestation by witnesses" is attestation by witnesses of the execution of the document not of the admission of execution.(4) When a document is produced and tendered as evidence, the first point for consideration is whether it is one which the law requires to be attested. There are many such documents in England. In India they are comparatively few. The above sections contain the rules relative to the admission in evidence of attested documents. Sections 68—71 apply only to documents required by law to be attested. Their general object is to give effect to the law relating to the attestation of documents which is itself enacted for the purpose of ensuring the genuineness of certain documents in respect of which claims are made. An attested document not required by law to be attested may be proved as if it was unattested.(5) For a long time it was held that when a document was attested, even though the law did not require attestation one at least of the attesting witnesses should be produced. But as this worked great hardship on suitor, the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854(6) in England, and the Indian Evidence Act of 1855(7) (whose provisions on this point are reproduced in section 72, (ante) introduced the present more reasonable practice. In respect of the persons who may be attesting witnesses, it has been held that a party to a deed is not a competent witness to attest it,(8) and in the case of a Will, it will not be considered as insufficiently attested by reason of any benefit thereby given, either by way of a bequest or by way of appointment, to any person attesting it, or to his or her wife or husband; but the bequest or appointment will be void so far as concerns the person so attesting or the wife or husband of such person, or any person claiming under either of them. A legatee, however, under a Will does not lose his legacy by attesting a codicil which confirms the Will.(9) A deed may be legally proved by the evidence of the scribe thereof who has signed his name, but not explicitly as an attesting witness on the margin, and has been present when the deed was executed.(10) The Madras High Court has held that a document which is required by law to be attested but which is unattested, is inadmissible in evidence for any purpose.(11) But the Calcutta High Court has dissented from this view, holding

---

(1) Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property), s. 123. As to the special rules relating to proof of attested documents under the Merchant Shipping Act, see 17 & 18 Vic., c. 104, s. 536.
(2) Hudson v. Parker, 1 Robert, 26.
(3) S. 72, ante; see Dastary Mohanio v. Jugo Bundhoo, 23 W. R., 293, 295 (1875).
(4) 17 & 18 Vic., c. 129, c. 26; and see 28 & 29 Vic., c. 18, ss. 1, 7 (criminal cases).
(5) 8. 37.
(7) Act X of 1865 (Indian Succession), s. 54, and see further, Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 463, as to the signatures of the directors and secretary of a company.
that though a document may be invalid and inadmissible in so far as it purports to operate for a purpose for which attestation is required, it may be admissible for other purposes.\(^{(1)}\)

(a) An attested document not required by law to be attested may be proved as if it was unattested.\(^{(2)}\) The words "required by law" apply to documents of which attestation is required by some Act.\(^{(3)}\)

(b) The Court shall presume that every document called for and not produced was attested in the manner required by law.\(^{(4)}\) The Court in such a case shall presume, that is, it shall regard attestation as proved unless and until it is disproved. And the person so refusing to produce, if he be a party to the suit, cannot rebut this presumption by subsequent production of the document.\(^{(5)}\)

(c) There is a presumption of due attestation in the case of documents thirty years old. The Court may in such case dispense with proof of attestation.\(^{(6)}\)

(d) Where a document is required by law, to be attested and there is an attesting witness available, at least one attesting witness must be called.\(^{(7)}\) When the original document is in the possession of another and not forthcoming after notice to produce, and secondary evidence is given of its contents, the Court shall, as has been already observed, \(^{(8)}\) presume that the document was duly attested. It is not, however, clear from the section whether the attesting witness, when producible, must be called if the original document itself is not forthcoming (by reason of loss or the like) and is therefore not itself "used as evidence"; but secondary evidence is offered of its contents under section 95, ante.\(^{(9)}\) The English rule requiring the production of the attesting witnesses, provided their name be known, holds although the document is lost or destroyed.\(^{(10)}\) And the same rule would seem to apply under this Act, since a document is "used as evidence," whether the mode of proof by which it is brought before the Court is primary or secondary only. A witness must be available, that is, the production of the witness must not be legally or physically impossible. Thus if all the witnesses be proved to be out of the jurisdiction of the Court or dead, or incapable of giving evidence, as if they be insane,\(^{(11)}\) the next following rule will be applicable.

(e) If there be no attesting witness available, or if the document purports to be executed in the United Kingdom, the attestation of at least one attesting witness and the signature of the person executing the deed must be proved by other evidence to be in their handwriting.\(^{(12)}\)

This rule will apply when the document purports to have been executed in the United Kingdom, or the witnesses are dead, insane or out of the jurisdiction, or when they cannot be found after diligent enquiry, or have absented

---

\(^{(1)}\) Sonatan Shaka v. Dino Nath, 26 C., 222 (1898); s. c., 3 C. W. N., 228.

\(^{(2)}\) S. 72, ante, corresponding with s. 37 of the Repealed Act II of 1855 and with s. 26 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854.

\(^{(3)}\) Field, Ev., 393; as to the documents of which attestation is necessary, v. ante.

\(^{(4)}\) S. 88, post; the rule is, therefore, not limited to the case of possession by the adverse party; see Taylor, Ev., § 1847.

\(^{(5)}\) S. 184, post.

\(^{(6)}\) S. 89, post.

\(^{(7)}\) S. 88, ante.

\(^{(8)}\) S. 89, post.

\(^{(9)}\) Field, Ev., 393.

\(^{(10)}\) Gillics v. Smithers, 2 Stark., R., 528; Keeling v. Ball, Peake, Add., Cas., 88; Taylor Ev., § 1843; or the case in which the names are unknown, v. post.

\(^{(11)}\) Taylor, Ev., § 1851; with respect to capability of giving evidence, it has been held in England that the attesting witness must be called though subsequently to the execution of the deed he has become blind, and that the Court will not dispense with his presence on account of illness, however severe; ib., § 1843; but both of these decisions have been doubted or reluctantly followed, and it is submitted that under this Act in both of these cases the witness would be incapable of giving evidence under the terms of the section.

\(^{(12)}\) S. 69, ante; see Taylor, Ev., § 1851.
themselves by collusion with the opposite party. (1) The degree of diligence required in seeking for the attesting witnesses to a document, the attestation of which is required to be proved by an attesting witness, is the same as in the search for a lost paper. The principle is in both cases identical. (2) If an instrument be necessarily attested by more than one witness, the absence of them all must be duly accounted for in order to let in secondary evidence of the execution. (3) As to proof of handwriting, see sections 45, 47, 67, ante, and section 73, post. Section 69 might seem to imply that the attestation of the attesting witness must be in his own handwriting, which implication assumes that the witness knows how to write. As a matter of fact, however, the greater number of attesting witnesses in India are marksmen. (4) The Act further contains no definition of the term “signature.” But having regard to the definition of the word given in the General Clauses Acts of 1887 and 1897, (5) Registration Act, (6) and the Civil Procedure Code, (7) and the general policy of our law, (8) the term includes the affixing of a mark. In the case last cited it was argued that as the only attesting witness examined was a marksmen, the bond in suit not legally established as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and by section 68 of this Act which, read with section 69, shows that an attesting witness must be one who can sign his name. It was, however, held that this contention was not correct; that there was no good reason for holding that a marksmen cannot be an attesting witness within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and section 68 of this Act; that according to the general policy of our law a signature includes a mark and that there was no reason why the case of a mortgaged-deed should form an exception. It was further argued that marksman in this country often only touch the pen, and even the mark, generally a cross, is not made by them, but is made by the writer of the deed. But it was held that in this case no question arose as to whether a mark made by a person other than the witness can be sufficient, the mark being shown to have been made by the witness himself. (9)

(x) The admission of a party to the document will, so far as such party is concerned, supersede the necessity either of calling the attesting witnesses or of giving any other evidence. (10) This provision is a relaxation of the English rule, according to which the attesting witness must be called even although the deed be one the execution of which is admitted by the party to it. (11) The admission here spoken of, which relates to the execution, must be distinguished from the admission mentioned in section 22, ante, and from that mentioned in section 65, clause (b), ante, which relate to the contents or to the existence, condition, or contents of a document. Section 70 relates only to the admission of a party in the course of the trial of a suit. It does not include evidential admissions made before, and sought to be proved by witnesses in a suit. (12)

[2] Ib., § 1855 and cases there cited; v. ante, s. 65.
[4] Field, Ev., 392; the attesting witnesses to a bill must affix their signatures and not merely their marks. Nitya Gopal v. Nagendra Nath, 11 C., 229 (1856); Fernandez v. Afroz, 3 B., 382 (1879); and see Basunath Bindu v. Dayaram Jana, 5 C., 738 (1880); but see Amoyee v. Yalamalai, 16 M., 381, 663 (1891).
[5] Act I of 1887, s. 3, cl. 12; Act X of 1897, s. 3 cl. 62.
[7] Act XIV of 1882, s. 2; and see Act X of 1885 (Indian Succession), s. 50.
[9] Ib., as to proof of marks, v. Index.
[10] S. 70, ante; which is the same as s. 38, Act II of 1855.
[12] Abdul Karim v. Salimun, 27 C., 190 (1899); this case, though in some respects distinguishable, appears in substance to be at variance with the decision in Prynam Chatterjee v. Bineswar Dose, 1 C. W. N., cxii, in which it was held that the admission of execution of a mortgage in the recitals of subsequent further charges rendered the calling of an attesting witness to the mortgage...
The view here taken that the admission of a party (at any rate during the course of the trial) will dispense with the necessity of calling the attesting witnesses appears to be at variance with the mentioned case, (1) in which it was held that the only effect of section 70 is to make the admission of the executant sufficient proof of execution and that the section is not sufficient to dispense with the necessity of proof of attestation to make a mortgage valid under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. It seems to have been assumed in Abdul Karim v. Salimun (2) which was not referred to in the last case that provided the admission was made during the course of the trial it would have the effect here submitted. Section 70 is a special provision dealing with attested document. If the admission of the executant has not the effect of dispensing with proof of attestation, there was no necessity for the section at all, as recourse may be had to the general provisions of the Act relating to admissions if the admission of execution is to be used only in the sense of an admission of signing only. Attestation is only a form of solemn proof required in certain contested cases by special Legislative Enactment, and it is difficult to understand why witnesses should be called to prove a document against a party who formally admits that it is a valid document as against him. It is therefore respectfully submitted that this decision, if it has the effect here attributed to it, is erroneous. The observation, moreover, was obiter as in the case it was found that there was proof of attestation independent of the admission.

(2) If the attesting witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence. In such case it is the same as if there were no attesting witness, and the execution may be proved by any other evidence obtainable. (3) If one of two or more attesting witnesses being called, denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, it is not clear whether other evidence can be given to prove it, if there be another attesting witness alive, subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence, who is not produced. (4) In proving the execution of a document the attesting witness frequently states that he does not recollect the fact of the deed being executed in his presence, but that, seeing his own signature to it, he has no doubt that he saw it executed; this has always been received as sufficient proof of the execution. (5) As to the presumptions which may exist relative to this section, see section 114, post.

73. In order to ascertain whether a signature, writing or seal is that of the person by whom it purports to have been written or made, any signature, writing or seal admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the Court to have been written or made by that person may be compared (6) with the one which is to be proved, although that signature, writing or seal has not been produced or proved for any other purpose.

unnecessary, the further charges having been proved in the usual way by the evidence of attesting witnesses,

(1) Jogendra Nath v. Nitai Churn, 7 C. W. N. 384 (1903).

(2) 27 C., 190.

(3) See Talbot v. Hodgson, 7 Taunt., 251; Bowman v. Hodgson, L. R., 1 P. and M., 362; Wright v. Rogers, 6a., 270; the same rule applies where the instrument is lost and the names of the witnesses are unknown; Keeling v. Ball, Peake, Add. Cas., 88.

(4) Field, Ev., 392.

(5) Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 134; and cases there cited.

(6) 'By comparison of handwriting is meant the examination of writings brought at the time into juxtaposition.' Lawson's Export and Opinion Evidence, 323; in order by such comparison to ascertain whether both were written by the same person; Starkie, Ev., Part IV. 854.
The Court may direct any person present in Court to write any words or figures for the purpose of enabling the Court to compare the words or figures so written with any words or figures alleged to have been written by such person.

(This section applies also, with any necessary modifications, to finger-impressions.)

Principle.—Facts which are not otherwise relevant to the issue are admissible when they can be shown to be for the particular purpose in hand identical with some relevant fact. It is on a similar principle that documents not otherwise relevant to the issue are admissible for the purpose of comparison of handwritings when proved to be in the handwriting of the party whose signature is in question. And see Note, post.

s. 3 ("Proved.")

s. 3 ("Court.")

COMMENTS.

In addition to the modes of proving handwriting which have already been dealt with by sections 47 and 45, ante, there remains direct comparison of the disputed document with one proved or admitted to be genuine under this section, which is in general accordance with the present English law upon the subject as amended by Acts of the years 1854 and 1865. Although all proof of handwriting except when the witness either wrote the document himself, or saw it written, is in its nature comparison, it being the belief which a witness entertains upon comparing the writing in question with an exemplar formed in his mind from some previous knowledge, yet the English law until the first of the abovementioned dates, did not allow the witness or even the jury except under certain special circumstances, actually to compare two writings with each other, in order to ascertain whether both were written by the same person. But the English rule is now otherwise. By the terms of the section any writing, the genuineness of which is admitted or proved, to the satisfaction of the Court, may be used for the purposes of comparison, although it may not be

(1) The words in brackets were added by s. 3, Act V of 1899: see s. 45, ante.

(2) Wills, Ev., 47; thus where the issue was to the line of boundary of a particular state, evidence having been given that the estate was contiguous with a certain hamlet, evidence was admitted to prove the boundary of the hamlet; Thomas v. Jenkins, 6 A. and E., 625.

(3) Wills, Ev., 48.

(4) The section differs in its terms from the corresponding section (48) of the repealed Act II of 1855 which was as follows:—"On an inquiry whether a signature, writing or seal is genuine, any undisputed signature, writing or seal of the party, whose signature, writing or seal is under dispute, may be compared with the disputed one, though such signature, writing or seal be on an instrument which is not evidence in the cause."

As to s. 48 of Act II of 1855, see R. v. Amonoolah Mollah, 6 W. R., Cr., 5 (1866).

(6) See 28 & 29 Vlio. o. 18, ss. 1, 8; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1869—1874.

(7) See p. 310 ante.

(8) See Breeunty Phodes v. Gobind Chunder, 22 W. R., 272 (1874); R. v. Kartick Chunder, 5 R. C., & C. R., Crim. Rul., 56, 62 (1868); R. v. Amonoolah Mollah, 6 W. R., Cr., 5 (1866); Puran Chunder v. Griek Chunder, 9 W. R., Civ. R., 400 (1868), In Tara Prasad v. Lukkes Narain, 21 W. R, 6 (1873), certain ryots swore that they got their pottalas from the hands of the person who purported to sign them: this was held to be sufficient proof under this section that the signatures were those of the lessee.
relevant or admissible in evidence for any other purpose in the cause. (1) The comparison can be made either by witnesses acquainted with the handwriting, (2) or by expert witnesses skilled in deciphering handwriting, (3) or, without the intervention of any witnesses at all, by the jury themselves, (4) or in the event of there being no jury, by the Court. (5) The genuineness of ancient documents, i.e., more than 30 years old, may be proved by comparison with other ancient documents which have been shown to have come from proper custody and to have been uniformly treated as genuine. (6) The witness should generally have before him in Court the writings compared. It has, however, been held in America that where the loss of the original writing has been clearly proved, the opinion of an expert is receivable as to the genuineness of the signature to the lost instrument, he having examined the signature prior to its loss and compared his recollection of such signature with the admitted genuine signature of the same persons on papers already in the case. (7) The original and not the copy is what the Court must act upon. Copies of any kind, whether photographic or otherwise, are merely secondary evidence and cannot be used as equivalent to primary evidence. But when the use of photographic copies is not objectionable, as being an attempt improperly to use secondary evidence as equivalent to primary evidence, magnified photographic copies of the writing in dispute and of admitted genuine writings of the same person have been received in evidence, competent preliminary proof having been given that the copies were accurate in all respects except as to size and colouring. (8) The party whose writing is in dispute may also be required to write, for purpose of comparison, in the Judge’s presence, and such writing will then itself be admissible. (9) Though this provision is useful, yet the comparison will often be less satisfactory as a person may feign or alter the ordinary character of his handwriting with the very view of defeating a comparison. (10) It is, moreover, to be observed with regard to documents not written in Court that many men are capable of writing in several different hands; and consequently, where the object they have in view is to relieve themselves from liability nothing can be easier than to produce to the Court genuine documents which have been written for the express purpose of proving that no similitude exists between them and

(1) See Birch v. Ridgway, 20 Foot. & Fin., 270; Creswell v. Jackson, 20 Foot. Fin., 24; Brookes v. Tichborne, 3 Ex., 929; it makes no difference what the writing is which is proved for purposes of comparison; it may be a love letter or it may be a testament, Wharton, Ev., § 711.

(2) S. 47, ante, the witness need not be a professional expert or a person whose skill in the comparison of handwritings has been gained in the way of his profession or business, such a question is one of weight only. R. v. Silverlock, [1894], 2 Q. B., 766. As to the opinions of native Judges on native writing, see Rajendra Nath v. Jogendra Nath, 7 B. L. R., 216, 233 (1871).

(3) S. 45, ante.

(4) See Cobbett v. Kilminster, 4 Foot. & Fin., 490; and observations as to comparison by a jury in R. v. Harvey, 11 Cox, 546, 548.

(5) Taylor, Ev., § 1870.

(6) Taylor, Ev., § 1874.

(7) Rogers’ Expert Testimony, § 139.

(8) ib., § 140. In Hayne v. McDermott, 82 N. Y., 41, the New York Court said: “We may recognise that the photographic process is ruled by general laws that are uniform in their operation and that almost without exception a likeness is brought forth of the object as before the camera. Still somewhat for exact likeness will depend upon the adjustment of the machinery, upon the atmospheric conditions and the skill of the manipulator, etc.” Other circumstances were mentioned in a preceding case (Taylor, Will case, 10 Abr. Pr., N. S., 300), such as the correctness of the lens, the state of the weather, the skill of the operator, the colour of the impression, the purity of the chemicals, accuracy of forming the angle at which the original was inclined to the sensitive plate, the possible fraud of the operator, etc.

(9) See second clause of section, and Cobbett v. Kilminster, supra; Doe d. Devon v. Wilson, 10 Moo. P. C. R., 502, 530; Rogers, op. cit., § 142. In America it has been held that a party cannot be compelled in cross-examination to write his name; ib., and the section says “the Court may direct.”

the writing in dispute. (1) A comparison of writings, therefore, for these and other reasons is a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great caution, (2) especially if no skilled witness has been called to make the comparison. (3) So with regard to seals it has been judicially observed that "at the best, the test of comparison between the impression of one native seal with another is but a fallible one and must always be received with extreme caution." (4) Writings which it is sought to use against accused persons for purposes of comparison should be clearly proved before being so used. (5) Comparison of writings is one of those tests which, ordinarily, Appellate Courts are quite as competent to apply as Courts of first instance. (6) "In all cases of comparison of handwriting, the witnesses, the jury, and the Court may respectively exercise their judgment on the resemblance or difference of the writings produced. In doing so, they will sometimes derive much aid from the evidence of experts with respect to the general character of the handwriting,—the forms of the letters, and the relative number of diversified forms of each letter,—the use of capitals, abbreviations, stops and paragraphs,—the mode of affecting erasures or of inserting interlineations or corrections,—the adoption of peculiar expressions,—the orthography of the words,—the grammatical construction of the sentences,—and the style of the composition,—and also on the fact of one or more of the documents being written in a feigned hand." (7) It has been held under the English Act that all the documents sought to be compared must be in Court. (8) As to finger-impressions, see ante s. 45, ante.

In all cases the knowledge of witness who is called to prove handwriting can be tested in cross-examination by the opposite party, by the latter first showing him other documents, which are neither admissible as evidence in the cause, nor proved to be genuine, then asking him whether such documents were written by the same hand as the paper in dispute, and on the witness expressing his belief that all the documents are in the same handwriting, proving that those produced by the cross-examination counsel were not genuine and then putting them in evidence in order to enable the jury to appreciate the testimony given by the witness. (9)

---

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 1872; the method of proof dealt with by this section, commonly called "by comparison of hands," has met with strong opposition both in England and America from its doubtful value and supposed dangers. Best, Ev., p. 239.
(2) Sreemuty Phodco v. Gobind Chunder, 22 W. R., 272 (1874), per Markby and Romesh Chunder Mitter, JJ., see Nobin Krishna v. Barseck Lal, 10 C., 1047, 1061 (1884) [evidence by comparison held not to be sufficient]; Kurali Prasad v. Amanullah Haji, 8 B. L. R., 490, 502 (1871); 16 W. R., P. C., 18 [finding of forgery on comparison of handwriting only disapproved].
(4) R. v. Amanullah Mollah, 6 W. R., Cr., 5 (1866), per Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ.
(6) R. v. Amanullah, supra, 6; and see Sreemuty Phodco v. Gobind Chunder, 22 W. R., 272 (1874).
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 1871.
(8) Arbon v. Fussell, 3 F. & Fr., 152; v. ante.
(9) See Taylor, Ev., § 1873, which, while stating the English case-law prior to 1865 to be conflicting on this point, is in favour of the admission of this evidence; and it has been said that there is nothing in this Act which is opposed to its reception. Field, Ev., § 395; and see Wharton, Ev., § 710, but see Rogers, op. cit., § 144.
PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Documents are of two kinds, public and private. Section 74 accordingly supplies a definition of the term "public document," and section 75 declares all documents other than those particularly specified to be private documents. The following sections (74—78) deal with (a) the nature of the former class of documents, and with (b) the proof which is to be given of them. Section 74 defines their nature; and sections (76—78) deal with the exceptional mode of proof applicable in their case; the proof of private documents, as defined by section 75, being subject to the general provisions of the Act relating to the proof of documentary evidence contained in sections (61—73).

An enquiry as to public documents may be directed (a) to the means of obtaining an inspection or copy of them; (b) to the method of proving them; (c) to their admissibility and effect. (1)

With respect to (a) the means of obtaining an inspection or copy of a public document, the matter is one which is not dealt with by this Act. Section 76 provides for the giving of certified copies of public documents which the public have a right to inspect; but there is no general provision as to the right of inspection in the case of public documents in any enactment in force in British India. Every person, however, has a right to inspect public documents, subject to certain exceptions, provided he shows that he is individually interested in them. When the right to inspect and to take a copy is expressly conferred by statute, the limit of the right depends on the true construction of the statute. When the right to inspect and take a copy is not expressly conferred, the extent of such right depends on the interest which the applicant has in what he wants to copy and in what is reasonably necessary for the protection of such interest. The common law right is limited by this principle. (2) It may be inferred that the Legislature intended to recognise the right generally, that is, the right to inspect public documents, for all persons who can show that they have an interest for the protection of which it is necessary that liberty to inspect such documents should be given. In such cases in the absence of a statutory there is a common law right. (3) There are some special provisions applicable to particular cases. Though these special provisions do not generally contain any particular remedy to which resort may be had if inspection or copies be refused; yet an order in the nature of a mandamus directing the public officer concerned to do his duty in the matter may be obtained from the High Court under the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Specific Relief Act. (4)

(b) The method proving public documents is, as already observed, the subject of sections 76—78, post, (5) and (c) the admissibility and effect of non-judicial public documents is dealt with by sections 35—38, and of judicial public documents by sections 40—44, ante. (6) The question of the

---

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 1479.
(2) R. v. Arunagam, 20 M., 189, 191, 192 (1897), per Subramania Ayyar and Davies, JJ., Collins, C. J., held that the accused was a person interested in the documents in question, and that if they were public documents he would be entitled to inspect and have copies of them: at p. 194, Shephard, J., was of the same opinion as the referring Judges as to the right of inspection, but held that two of the documents in question were not public documents: at p. 196.
(4) Act I of 1877; Field, Ev., §§ 388, 398: as to the means of obtaining an inspection or copy in England, see Taylor, Ev., §§ 1479—1522; and see Greenleaf, Ev., § 471.
(5) See post and as to the English law, Taylor, Ev., §§ 1523—1559, 1747 A, et seq.
(6) See pp. 298—292 ante, and as to the English admissibility and proof of a public document involves four points of consideration: (a) The contents must relate to a fact in issue or a fact relevant under the earlier sections of the Act. (b) If the contents are a statement of such facts and are not acts forming such facts, the statement must be relevant under sections 35—38, chiefly section 35. (c) The contents of the original document must be proved subject to, and with the benefit of, section 65, clause (e), and sections 76—78. (4) The accuracy of the preparation of the original may be proved or presumed as provided by sections 80—87, and the correctness of certified copies may be presumed under section 79. In this connection section 57 relating to judicial notice should also be considered.

Firstly, as to the nature of public writings. They have been defined to consist of "the acts of public functionaries, in the Executive, Legislative and Judicial Departments of Government, including under this general head the transactions which official persons are required to enter in books or registers, in the course of their public duties and which occur within the circle of their own personal knowledge and observation. To the same head may be referred the consideration of documentary evidence of the Acts of State, the Laws, and Judgments of Courts of Foreign Governments. Public documents are susceptible of another division, they being either (a) judicial or (b) non-judicial." (2) Under the latter head come Acts of State, such as proclamations and other acts and orders of the Executive of the like character, Legislative Acts, Journals of the Legislature, Official Registers or books kept by persons in public office in which they are required to write down particular transactions occurring in the course of their public duties; such as parish register; the books which contain the official proceedings of corporations and matters respecting their property, if the entries are of a public nature; the books of the post-office and custom-house and registers of other public offices; prison-registers; registers of births, deaths and marriages; registers of patents, designs, trade-marks, copyrights; and other like documents, an enumeration of the whole of which would be practically impossible. (3) Under the former head come all judicial writings, whether domestic or foreign. (4) Section 74 is in substantial accordance with the abovementioned definition, but also includes therein public records kept in British India of private documents. In the case of Sturla v. Freccia, (5) it was said that "a public document" means a document that is made for the purpose of the public making use of it, especially where there is a judicial or quasi-judicial duty to enquire. Its very object must be that the public, all persons concerned in it, may have access to it. That case dealt with the admissibility of statements in public documents. It will, however, be observed that under section 74 of the Act the question whether a document is or is not a public document, within the meaning of that section is distinct from the question whether or not the public have a right to inspect it. It is only of public documents which the public have a right to inspect that certified copies may be given in evidence, but it may well be that a document may be "public" within the meaning of this Act, and also one which is not open to the inspection of the public and of which, therefore, no proof by certified copy may be given.

Secondly, with regard to the proof of public documents. As has been already observed, (6) the contents of documents must be proved either by the production of the document, which is called primary evidence, or by copies or

---

(2) Greenleaf, Ev., § 470.
(3) ib. §§ 479—484; Taylor, Ev., § 1695; Powell, Ev., 370—395; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 361—365;
(5) L. R., 5 App. Ca., 630, 642, 643, per Lord Blackburn.
(6) See Introd., Ch. V.
oral accounts of the contents, which are called secondary evidence. Primary evidence is required as a rule, but this is subject to seven exceptions(1) in which secondary evidence may be given. The most important of these are (a) cases in which the document is in the possession of the adverse party;(2) and (b) cases in which certified copies of public documents(3) are admissible in place of the documents themselves.(4) The grounds upon which the last mentioned exception rests are grounds of public convenience. Public documents are, "comparatively speaking" little liable to corruption, alteration or misrepresentation—the whole community being interested in their preservation and in most instances entitled to inspect them; while private writings, on the contrary, are the objects of interest but to few, whose property they are, and the inspection of them can only be obtained if at all by application to a Court of Justice. The number of persons interested in public documents also renders them much more frequently required for evidentiary purposes; and if the production of the originals were insisted on, not only would great inconvenience result from the same documents being wanted in different places at the same time, but the continual change of place would expose them to be lost, and the handling from frequent use would soon insure their destruction. For these and other reasons, the law deems it better to allow their contents to be proved by derivative evidence, and to run the chance, whatever that may be, of errors arising from inaccurate transcription, either intentional or casual. But true to its great principle of exacting the best evidence that the nature of the matter affords, the law requires this derivative evidence to be of a very trustworthy kind, and has defined with much precision, the forms of it which may be resorted to in proof of the different sorts of public writings.(5) Thus, it must, at least in general, be in a written form, i.e., in the shape of a copy;(6) and as already mentioned, must not be a copy of a copy, in very few, if in any, instances, is oral evidence(7) receivable to prove the contents of a record or public book which is in existence. "(8) With regard to the proof of documents of a public character in England, and the legislation relating thereto, see the notes to section 82, post. Proof of public documents under this Act may be given either by means of certified copies under the provisions of sections 76 and 77 or in the case of certain public documents particularly mentioned in section 78, in the particular modes referred to and allowed by that section. When such proof has been offered, certain presumptions arise in respect of the documents which form the subject of the third division of this Chapter of the Act.(9)

Public documents.

74. The following documents are public documents:—

(1) documents forming the acts or records of the acts—

(i) of the sovereign authority,

---

(1) S. 65, ante.
(2) Ib., cl. (a).
(3) Ib., cl. (c).
(4) Step. Intro., 170. It will be noticed, therefore, that the so-called "best evidence rule" has in strictness no application to the case of public writings, a properly authenticated copy being a recognized equivalent for the original itself. Best, Ev., Amer. Notes, 432; Greenleaf, Ev., 482.
(5) By several modern Acts of Parliament special modes of proof are provided for many kinds of records and public documents: see 31 and 32 Vic., c. 37; 14 and 15 Vic., c. 99; 8 and 9 Vic., c. 113; 42 Vic., c. 11; 40 Vic., c. 50; a large number of similar enactments are to be found in the recent statute-books; see Taylor, Ev., Ch. IV.
(6) In England the principal sorts of copies used for the proof of documents are (1) Exemplifications under the great seal. (2) Exemplifications under the seal of the Court where the record is. (3) Office copies, i.e., copies made by an officer appointed by law for the purpose. (4) Examined copies as to which, see a. 82, post. (5) Copies signed and certified as true by the officer to whose custody the original is entrusted. This Act refers to certified copies (s. 76) and certain other copies particularly specified (s. 78).
(7) See Best, Ev., Amer. Notes, p. 433.
(8) Best, Ev., § 485, and see §§ 218, 219, 22.
(9) See Introduction to ss. 79—90, post.
(ii) of official bodies and tribunals, and
(iii) of public officers, legislative, judicial and executive, whether of British India, or of any other part of Her Majesty's dominions, or of a foreign country;

(2) public records kept in British India of private documents.

75. All other documents are private.

See Introduction, ante. It has been held that in construing section 74 it may fairly be supposed that the word "acts" in the phrase "documents forming the acts or records of the acts" is used in one and the same sense; that the act of which the record made is a public document must be similar in kind to the act which takes shape and form in a public document; that the kind of acts which section 74 has in view is indicated by section 78 in which section the acts are all final completed acts as distinguished from acts of a preparatory or tentative character. Thus, the enquiries which a public officer may make, whether under the Criminal Procedure Code or otherwise may or may not result in action. There may be no publicity about them. There is a substantial distinction between such measures and the specific act in which they result, and it is to the latter only that section 74 was intended to refer. (1) Consult the definition given in the second section of the Civil Procedure Code of a "public officer," (2) and see the following sections for references to documents which are of a public nature—sections 35, 38, 57, 78, as well as the following decisions which have nearly all been given under this Act. A certificate of sale granted under the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859) and before section 107 of Act XII of 1879 was enacted is a document of title but is not a public document. (3) The Loan Register of the Public Debt Office in the Bank of Bengal is a public document, and under section 76 any person having an interest therein is entitled to inspect the same and obtain certified copies thereof. (4) A jamabandi prepared by a Deputy Collector while engaged in the settlement of land under Regulation VII of 1822 has been held to be a public document within the meaning of this section on the ground that the act of the Collector in making a settlement or even an enquiry under the provisions of that Regulation is that of a public officer, whether it be judicial or executive (it probably partaking of both characters), and that the record of such acts is a public document. (5) But this decision has been since said to be open to some degree

---

(1) R. v. Arumugam, 20 M., 189, 197 (1897), per Shepherd, J. So also Benson, J., at p. 204, said: "It may, I think, well be doubted whether the word 'acts' in s. 74 is used in its ordinary and popular sense and not rather in the restricted and technical sense in which it is used in s. 78:" but see also remarks of S. Aiyar, J., at p. 203 and note on this case, post.

(2) A policeman is a public officer; R. v. Arumugam, 20 M., 189, 194 (1897), as to the Secretary of a Municipal Board, see reference to Full Bench, 19 A., 293, 296 (1897). The Gorait of a village is a public servant; R. v. Sudu, 1 All. L. J., 243 (1903): the following are public officers:—The Official Trustee: ShahbuzADER Shahunnahah v. Ferguson, 7 C. 499 (1881); Official Assignee: Jooreb Haji v. Kemp, 26 B., 809 (1902); The Administrator-General since the passing of the Act of 1902: Bhokram Chowdhary v. Administrator-General, 8 C. W. N. 913 (1904).

(3) Vasani v. Harihah, 2 Bom., L. R., 43 (1900), per Cady, J.

(4) Chandi Charan v. Boisab Charan, 31 C., 284 (1903); 8 C., W. N., 125.

(5) Taru Patut v. Abinash Chander, 4 C., 79 (1878).
of doubt. (1) In any case, however, it is evident that the questions whether a document is admissible in evidence as a public document, and the question whether that which is in it is binding upon tenants without reference to the question of consent or notice, are entirely separate matters. (2) An anumalipatra or instrument giving permission to adopt is clearly not a public document; (3) nor is a teis khana register (so called from the number of columns in the statement or register), prepared by a patwari under rules framed by the Board of Revenue under the 16th section of Reg. XII of 1817, nor is the patwari preparing the same a public servant. (4) It has been held that the record of a confession of an accused person recorded by the Magistrate of Bhind in Gwalior is probably a public document. (5) Where a suit was compromised and a petition presented in the usual way, and the Court made an order confirming the agreement which with the order, as well as the power of attorney, were all entered upon record, it was held that these papers became as much a part of the record in the suit as if the case had been tried and judgment given between the parties in the ordinary way, and that that record was a public document and might be proved by an office-copy. (6) In the case cited below, (7) which was a suit arising out of an alleged trespass, certified copies of the judgment of the Munsiff in a previous suit between the parties as well as the decree, were admitted in evidence as public documents; certified copies of the plaint and written statement were also tendered in evidence on the ground of their being public documents and objected to. The plaint was admitted, but the written statement was rejected. The correctness, however, of this decision so far as it held the plaint to be admissible has been for a long time doubted (8) and has not been followed on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court. The decision is, it is submitted, erroneous; there being no principle upon which the case of a plaint can be distinguished from that of a written statement. Both are the acts or record of the acts of private parties and not of a public tribunal or its officers.

That class of documents which consists of plaints, written statements, affidavits and petitions filed in Court, cannot be said to form such acts or records of acts as are mentioned in the section, and are, therefore, not public documents. But depositions of witnesses taken by an officer of the Court are public documents (1) and so of course are judgments, decrees and other orders of the Court itself. In a suit for ejectment the defendant pleaded a compromise. As evidence of it he tendered a certified copy of a petition which bore an order of the Court on it. This document was rejected by the lower Court as not proved, but it was held by the High Court that the document did not require to be proved and was admissible in evidence under section 77 of this Act. (2) A quinquennial register is a document of a public

(1) Akshaya Kumar v. Shama Charan, 16 C. 586, 590 (1889); Ram Chandar v. Banseedhar Naik, 9 C. 741, 743 (1883).
(2) Akshaya Kumar v. Shama Charan, supra at p. 590.
(3) Krishna Kishor v. Kishori Lal, 14 C. 486, 491 (1887); s. v. R. L., 14 I. A., 71; nor of course are kobalas, conveyances and the like; Harendra Mody v. Churn Mahier, 22 W. R. 35 (1874); Harish Chandar v. Prosunno Coomar, 22 W. R., 303 (1874).
(4) Rai Kishor v. Suklu Mahbun, 18 C. 534 (1891); Samart Dassah v. Jugpli Kishor, 23 C. 366 (1895), in the judgment in which case s. 35, ante, is fully considered.
(7) Saksada Mohamed v. Daniel Wedgeberry, 10 B. L. R App., 31 (1873).
(8) Field, Ev., 400, see as to the admissibility of quasi records; Taylor, Ev., § 1354.
(1) Haranud Roy v. Ram Gopal, 4 C. W. N., 429 (1899) [Foreign Judicial Record]. A witness's deposition is part of the records of the acts of an official tribunal; witness the meaning of s. 74, Reg. App. No. 110 of 1900: 10 June 1902, Cal. H. C.
(2) Mangal Sen v. Hira Singh, 1 All. L.J., Part L., p. 101 (1904). 1 All. L. J., 396 (1904). [Certified copy of application for compromise with an order of the Court it is admissible in evidence under s. 77 and need not be proved].
nature. (1) Letters which have passed between district authorities are public documents forming a record of the acts of public officers. (2) But an abstract or copy of a Government measurement chitta which has been produced from the Collectorate, but as to which there is nothing to show that it is the record of measurements made by a public officer is not admissible as a public document; (3) nor would it seem is a chitta prepared by a public officer with a view to resumption proceedings being taken a public document, for it is made by Government as an ordinary landlord for a private purpose. (4) A Master's certificate granted by the Board of Trade is not a public document. (5) As to ayakut accounts prepared for administrative purposes by village officers, see case below. (6) Entries in a register made under (B.C.) Act VII of 1876 by the Collector are entries made in an official register kept by a public servant under the provisions of a statute, and certified copies of such entries are admissible in evidence for what they are worth. (7) It has been held by the Madras High Court that reports made by a police-officer in compliance with sections 157 and 168 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not public documents, and that consequently an accused person is not entitled before trial to have copies of such reports. (8) There is, however, a difference of opinion in that Court whether the same rule applies to reports made in compliance with section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code, (9) or whether reports under that section are public documents of which an accused person is entitled under section 76 to have copies before trial. (10) The fifth Clause of section 78 brings the records of the proceedings of a municipal body in British India within the second clause of the first sub-section of section 74 as the record of the acts of an official body. The records of the proceedings of a Municipal Board is a public document, and the officer who is authorized by the ordinary course of his official duties to give copies of public document is for these purposes a public officer. (11) In support of a claim instituted in a Court in British India for a share in her deceased father's estate, plaintiff tendered in evidence a document which purported to be a certified copy of the will executed by her late father at Colombo where he was said to have been at the date of the execution of the alleged will. The document was filed as an exhibit in the suit, but the Subordinate Judge held that it was not admissible in evidence. It bore an endorsement purporting to be signed by the Assistant Registrar-General for Ceylon to the effect that it was a true copy of a last will and testament made from the Protocol of record filed in his office. No evidence was tendered before the Subordinate Judge that the copy had been made from and compared with the original. On the question

(2) Pintee Singh v. Court of Wards, 23 W. R., 272 (1875).

(4) Ram Chunder v. Bunersedhar Naini, 9 C., 741, 743 (1883); see Dwarka Nath v. Tarita Mohi, 14 C. 129 (1886).

(5) In the matter of a Collision between The Ams and The Brehilda, 5 C., 588 (1879).

(6) Sivasubramanin v. Secretary of State, 9 M., 286, 284 (1884).

(7) Skeeby Shooch v. Girish Chunder, 20 C., 940 (1893).

(8) B. v. Arumugam, 20 M., 189 (1897). F. B. Subramania Aiyar, J., dissentiate. Whatever may be said upon the matter from the point of view of convenience and public policy, which do not strictly touch the pure question of construction, there is, it is submitted, great force in the argument of Subramania Aiyar, J. (at p. 293), that even if such a document be not a record, of at least some of the investigating officer's acts, it is itself a document forming an act of his, he being enjoined to act in a particular way, that is, to submit such a report.

(9) B. v. Arumugam, 20 M., 189 (1897). F. B. Subramania Aiyar, J., dissentiate, per Collins, C. J., and Benson, J.

(10) Ib., per Shephard, J., and Subramania Aiyar, J.

(11) Reference to Full Bench under s. 46 of Act I of 1879. 19 A., 293, 295 (1897).
of the admissibility in evidence of the said document; held that it was inadmissible, that it was not a public document within the meaning of clauses 1 (iii) or 2 of this section, and that in the absence of evidence that it had been made from and compared with the original, the provisions of that Act relating to secondary evidence of public documents were inapplicable.

Public records kept in British India of private documents are also under the second Clause public documents within the meaning of the section. Thus certain register-books are directed to be kept in all registration-offices. Under this clause entries of the copies of private documents in Books Nos. 1, 3 and 4 of the registration-office being public records kept of private documents are public documents, and as such may be proved by certified copies; that is, certified copies may be offered in proof of those entries, but neither those entries nor certified copies of those entries, are admissible in proof of the contents of the original documents so recorded unless secondary evidence is allowable under the provisions of this Act. Section 91, second exception provides that Wills admitted to probate in British India may be proved by the probate. Public documents are provable in the exceptional modes provided for in sections 76—78.

All documents other than those specially mentioned in section 74 are private documents and are provable under the general provisions of the Act relating to the proof of documents.

76. Every public officer having the custody of a public document, which any person has a right to inspect, shall give that person on demand a copy of it on payment of the legal fees therefor, together with a certificate written at the foot of such copy that it is a true copy of such document or part thereof, as the case may be, and such certificate shall be dated and subscribed by such officer with his name and his official title, and shall be sealed, whenever such officer is authorised by law to make use of a seal, and such copies so certified shall be called certified copies.

Explanation.—Any officer who, by the ordinary course of official duty, is authorised to deliver such copies, shall be deemed to have the custody of such documents within the meaning of this section.

77. Such certified copies may be produced in proof of the contents of the public documents or parts of the public documents of which they purport to be copies.
78. The following public documents may be proved as follows:—

(1) Acts, orders or notifications of the Executive Government of British India in any of its departments, or of any Local Government, or any department of any Local Government,— by the records of the departments, certified by the heads of those department respectively, or by any document purporting to be printed by order of any such Government:

(2) The proceedings of the legislatures,— by the journals of those bodies respectively, or by published Acts or abstracts, or by copies purporting to be printed by order of Government:

(3) Proclamations, orders or regulations issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council, or by any department of Her Majesty’s Government,— by copies or extracts contained in the London Gazette, or purporting to be printed by the Queen’s Printer.(1)

(4) The acts of the Executive or the proceedings of the legislature of a foreign country,— by journals published by their authority, or commonly received in that country as such, or by a copy certified under the seal of the country or sovereign, or by a recognition thereof in some public Act of the Governor-General of India in Council:

(5) The proceedings of a municipal body in British India,— by a copy of such proceedings, certified by the legal keeper thereof, or by printed book purporting to be published by the authority of such body;(2)

(6) Public documents of any other class in a foreign country,— by the original or by a copy certified by the legal keeper thereof, with a certificate under the seal of a Notary Public, or of a British Consul or diplomatic agent, that the copy is duly certified by the officer

(1) See The Documentary Evidence Act, 1868; 41 & 42 Vic., c. 37. Which is in force in every British Colony or Possession subject to any law that may be from time to time made by the Legislature of any such Colony and Possession.

(2) See Reference under s. 46, Act I of 1879, 19 A., 293, 295 (1897), in which it was held that the record of the proceedings of a Municipal Board is a public document, and the officer who is authorised by the ordinary course of his official duties to give copies of public documents is for those purposes a public officer. having the legal custody of the original, and upon proof of the character of the document according to the law of the foreign country.

Principle.—As one of the exceptions to the rule requiring primary evidence to be given rests on grounds of physical impossibility or inconvenience, so the objection to the production of public documents rests on the ground of moral inconvenience. They are, comparatively speaking, little liable to corruption, alteration or misrepresentation—the whole community being interested in their preservation, and, in most instances, entitled to inspect them. The number of persons interested in public documents also renders them much more frequently required for evidentiary purposes; and if the production of the originals were insisted on, not only would great inconvenience result from the same documents being wanted in different places at the same time, but the continual change of place would expose them to be lost, and the handling from frequent use would soon insure their destruction. (2) For these and other reasons their contents are allowed to be proved by derivative evidence at the risk, whatever that may be, of errors arising from inaccurate transcription either intentional or casual. (3)

s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 74 ("Public Document.")

s. 63, Cl. (1), & 65, Cl. (e) (Secondary evidence by certified copies.)

s. 78 (Presumption as to certified copies.)

s. 69—80 (Presumptions as to other documents.)

Taylor, Ev., Ch. IV (on Public Documents); Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 478; Willis, Ev., 288—310; Best, Ev., 424—430; Rousse, N. P. Ev., 98—130.

COMMENTARY.

The Explanation to section 76 declares who is to be considered the legal custodian under this section which limits the right to obtain a copy of a public document from such custodian to such documents as the applicant has a right to inspect. This limitation saves and excludes all such documents as the Government has a right to refuse to show on the ground of State Policy, privileged communication, and the like. (4) Whether or not, therefore, a person will be entitled to a copy of a public document will depend upon the question whether or not he has a right to inspect it. In England the right to inspect public documents varies with respect to their nature. There is a common law right to inspect some. As to others the right rests upon particular Acts. (5) This Act is silent as to the right of inspection, and there is no general provision on the subject in any other enactment in force in British India, though there are certain special provisions applicable to particular circumstances only. Thus, Registers prepared under the provisions of Chapter IV of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, are declared to be public documents and the property of Government, and are declared to be open to public inspection. (6) If a person

---

(1) As where characters are traced on a rock or engraved on a tombstone or the like; see s. 65, cl. (d).

(2) See Lady Dartmouth v. Roberts, 16 East., 341. "A proceeding in a Court of Justice is proveable by an examined copy. This rule has arisen from the convenience of the thing that the originals may not be required to be removed from place to place," per Bayley, J.; and see Doe v. Ross, 7 M. & W., 106, per Lord Abinger.

(3) Best, Ev., § 485.

(5) See Taylor Ev., §§ 1490—1522; v. ante. Introd. to ss. 74—78, as to the right of inspections.

(6) Act XVII of 1876, s. 67; so also the books of account of the Administrator-General are open to public inspection: Act II of 1874, s. 44 (for present Act, see V of 1902,) and as to the right to inspection and to certified copies in the case of other public Registers, see ante, notes to s. 35. Act III of 1877 (Registration), ss. 18, 51, 55, 57; Act XX of 1874, s. 3: 5 & 6 Vic., c. 65, s. 11: 23 & 26 Vic., c. 65, s. 5 (Copyright): 46 & 47 Vic., c. 57, ss. 23, 55, 87—89; Act V of 1888.
is personally interested in a public document it would seem that in the absence of a right conferred by statute, he has a common law right to inspect it. It may be inferred that the Legislature intended to recognise the right to inspect public documents generally for all persons who can show that they have an interest for the protection of which it is necessary that liberty to inspect such documents should be given. When the right to inspect and take a copy is expressly conferred by statute the limit of the right depends on the true construction of the statute. When the right to inspect and take a copy is not expressly conferred, the extent of such right depends on the interest, which the applicant has in what he wants to copy and on what is reasonably necessary for the protection of such interest. If therefore a person has a right to inspect, it becomes necessary to see what is the extent of his right to inspection. Every officer appointed by law to keep records ought to deem himself for the production of documents a trustee.(1) An act may both give a right of inspection and provide a penalty and remedy in case of its refusal. Thus by Act VI of 1882, section 56 (Indian Companies Act), if inspection or copy of the Register of members is refused, the company incur by such refusal a specific penalty and in addition to that penalty any Judge of a High Court may by order compel an immediate inspection of the Register. Where such Acts give a right of inspection but do not enact any particular remedy to which resort may be had if inspection or copies be refused, an application may be made, in Presidency Towns, to the High Court under the Provisions of Chapter VIII of the Specific Relief Act. If there exists no such special provision, and the disclosure of the contents of any of the general records of the realm, or of any other documents of a public nature, would, in the opinion of the Court or of the chief executive Magistrate, or of the head of the department under whose control they may be kept, be injurious to the public interests, an inspection would certainly not be granted.(2)

The Civil Procedure Code provides that certified copies of judgments(3) and decrees of all Original and Appellate Courts shall be furnished to the parties at their expense on application to the Court.(4) There is no express provision of the Legislature entitling parties or others to copies of any other portions of the records of the Civil Courts; but, as a matter of practice, copies are usually given to any of the parties who may apply for them.(5) The Calcutta High Court has, however, made the following rules on the subject:—(a) A plaintiff or a defendant, who has appeared to the suit, is entitled at any stage of the suit to obtain copies of the records of the suit, including exhibits, which have been put in and finally accepted by the Court as evidence. A party who has been ordered to file a written statement is not entitled to inspect or take a copy of a written statement filed by another party until he has filed his own; (b) A stranger to the suit may after decree obtain, as of course, copies of the plaint, written statements, affidavits and petitions filed

(1) Chandi Charan v. Boishtab Charan, 31 C., 284, 293 (1903).
(2) Taylor, Ev., § 1483; Field, Ev., 396, 397.
(3) In the case last mentioned in the preceding note an application was made to Court in the suit calling upon the Bank of Bengal to comply with an order of Court.
(4) In matters before the Calcutta Small Cause Court, for “judgment,” read “proceedings.”
(5) Field, Ev., 396.
in the suit, and may, for sufficient reason shown to the satisfaction of the Court, obtain copies of any such document before decree; (c) A stranger to the suit may also obtain, as of course, copies of judgments, decrees or orders at any time after they have been passed or made; (d) A stranger to the suit has no right to obtain copies of exhibits put in evidence except with the consent of the person by whom they were produced. (1)

In criminal cases, an accused person, committed under the Code of Criminal Procedure to the High Court or the Court of Session, is entitled to a copy of the charge, free of all expense; and, if he apply within a reasonable time, to copies of the deposition; these latter copies to be made at his expense unless the Magistrate see fit to give them free of cost. (2) He is entitled free of cost to a copy of the evidence of any witness examined by a Magistrate (other than a Presidency Magistrate) after commitment. (3) Under the provisions of the undermentioned section, (4) "on the application of the accused a copy of the judgment, or when he so desires, a translation in his own language, if practicable, or, in the language of the Court, shall be given to him without delay. Such copy shall, in any case other than a summons-case, be given free of cost. In trials by jury in a Court of Session a copy of the heads of the charge to the jury shall, on the application of the accused, be given to him without delay and free of cost. And "if any person affected by a judgment or order passed by a Criminal Court desires to have a copy of the Judge's charge to the jury or of any order or deposition or other part of the record, he shall, on applying for such copy, be furnished therewith; provided that he pay for the same, unless the Court for some special reason, thinks fit to furnish it free of cost." (5) A previous conviction or acquittal may be proved in addition to any other mode provided by any law for the time being in force (a) by an extract certified under the hand of the officer having the custody of the records of the Court in which such conviction or acquittal was had to be a copy of the sentence or order; or (b) in case of a conviction either by a certificate signed by the officer in charge of the jail in which the punishment or any part thereof was inflicted, or by production of the warrant commitment under which the punishment was suffered—together with, in each of such cases, evidence as to the identity of the accused person with the person so convicted or acquitted. (6)

Proof of public documents. Private documents must generally be proved by the production of the originals coupled with evidence of their handwriting, signature, or execution, as the case may be. (7) An exception to this rule exists under the Act in the case of Wills admitted to probate in British India which may be proved by the proctor. (8) The contents of public documents may be proved either by the production of certified copies (9) under section 77, or if they be documents of the kind mentioned in section 78, by the various modes described in that section. The contents of private documents such as kobolas, conveyances, leases, and the like, though filed in a Court or public office for purposes of evidence in a suit, are not provable in another suit by means of certified copies. (10)

The word "may" in section 77 is used only as denoting another mode of proof (optional to the party) than the ordinary one, namely, the production of

---

(2) Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 210, 548.
(3) ib., s. 219.
(4) ib., s. 371.
(5) ib., s. 548.
(6) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 511; [See also as to certified copies of convictions, Reg. III of 1827]; as to offences committed by European British subjects in Indian Allied States, v. ib., s. 189.
(7) See ss. 59, 61—73, supra.
(8) S. 91, Exception 2, post.
(9) It is doubtful whether ss. 76 and 79 apply to copies given before the passing of the Act; Jakir Ali v. Raj Chander, 10 C. L. R. 476.
(10) Hareskar Mojoomdar v. Chun Mophar, 22 W. R., 555 (1874); as to the decision in Saka Moohom Al-Mahomed v. Wedgeberry, 10 B. L. R., App. 31; ante; notes to ss. 74, 75.
the original. For when the original is a public document within the meaning of section 74, a certified copy of the document, but no other kind of secondary evidence, is admissible. So, accordingly, the Privy Council rejected a document upon the record of a previous judicial proceeding which purported to be an authenticated copy of the original document, but was not certified to be a true copy as required by section 76, and was not shown to have been examined by any witness with the original.

This last provision, however, must be read subject to the provisions of sections 78 and 82, post, and the last paragraph of the second section ante. Thus by virtue of the provisions contained in section 82, post, a foreign and colonial document may be proved by an authenticated copy within the meaning of 14 and 15 Vic., c. 99, s. 7; such authenticated copies being declared by the statute to be admissible in evidence without proof of seal, signature or judicial character of the person making such signature. Secondary evidence, therefore, other than a certified copy, is admissible both in the cases expressly mentioned by this Act and in those where an unrepealed or other Act has especially enacted that such other evidence shall be admissible.

Section 79, post, raises a presumption of genuineness in the case of certified copies. Proof of a special character may be offered as to the official documents which are the subjects of individual mention in section 78. In connection with the third clause of that section may be read the provisions of the Documentary Evidence Act, 1868, as amended by the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, which, subject to any law that may be from time to time made by the Legislature of any British Colony or Possession (including there in India), is declared to be in force in every such Colony and Possession. As to the fifth clause v. ante, p. 413, n. 1. Fourth and sixth Clauses deal with foreign public documents.

The words "of any other class," in the sixth clause mean "other than the documents mentioned in the fourth clause." Where a foreign judgment is relied on, the production of the judgment duly authenticated is presumptive evidence that the Court which made it had competent jurisdiction unless the contrary appear on the record; but such presumption may be removed by proving the want of jurisdiction. As to the presumption declared by the Act with regard to certified copies of foreign judicial records, see section 86, post; and for the presumption as to documents admissible in England without proof of seal or signature, see section 82, post. See also Note to sections 74, 75, ante.

---

1. S. 65, ante: the provisions of which appear to have been overlooked in Norton, Ev., 258.
3. So in cases governed by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vic., c. 90, s. 695), examined copies are admissible equally with certified copies. The difference between a certified and an examined copy, is that the former is made by an official whose duty it is to furnish such copies to parties who have an interest in the subject-matter, and a right to apply for them, on payment or otherwise; the latter are those which any private individual makes from the original with which having himself compared it by examination, he is enabled to swear that it is a true copy. Norton, Ev., 258.
4. 31 & 32 Vic., c. 37.
5. 45 Vic., c. 9.
7. As to the proof of foreign judicial records v. s. 86, post, and s. 65, ante; Harannand Boy v. Ram Gopal, 4 C. W., N., 439 (1899).
8. Civ. Pr. Code, s. 13, Explanation VI.
PRESUMPTIONS AS TO DOCUMENTS.

When a document, whether private or public, has been offered in evidence, certain presumptions may arise in respect of it which are enumerated in the following sections (79—90). Those presumptions, however, are not conclusive. An inference is drawn from certain facts in supersession of any other mode of proof. That inference may be one which the Court is bound to accept as proved until it is disproved; in this case it is said that the Court "shall presume;" or the inference may be one as to which the Court is at liberty either to accept it as proved until it is disproved, or to call for proof of it in the first instance; in this case it is said that the Court "may presume." All that the law does for this last class of inferences is to allow the Court to dispense with evidence should it think fit to do so. The two latter class of inferences play an important part in the proof of documents. Sections 79—85, and section 89 provide for cases in which the Court shall presume certain facts about documents; sections 86—88, 90, provide for cases in which the Court may presume certain things about them. In the one case the Court is bound to consider the presumption as proved until the contrary is shown; on the other, the Court may, if it pleases, regard the presumption as proved until the contrary is shown, or may call for independent proof in the first instance. (1) Many classes of documents, which are defined in the Act, are presumed to be what they purport to be, but this presumption is liable to be rebutted. Two sets of presumptions will sometimes apply to the same document. For instance, what purports to be a certified copy of a record of evidence is produced. It must by section 76 be presumed to be an accurate copy of the record of evidence. By section 80 the facts stated in the record itself as to the circumstances under which it was taken, e.g., that it was read over to the witness in a language which he understood must be presumed to be true. (3) All the following sections down to section 90 inclusive are illustrations of, and founded upon, the principle omnia probantur rite esse acta. (3) The presumption which is directed to be raised by the last-mentioned section is of great importance in obviating the effects of the lapse of time as to the proof of documents. As years go on, the witnesses who can personally speak to the attestation or execution of a document, or to the handwriting of those who executed or attested it, gradually die out. If strict proof of execution or handwriting were necessary, it would, after a generation, become impossible to prove any document. On the other hand, there is some reason to suppose that documents, of which people take care for a long series of years, are authentic. The law acts upon this probability and provides the presumption that in the case of document proved or purporting to be thirty years old, and produced from proper custody, that is the place in which, the care of the person with whom it would naturally be, the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of such a document is in the handwriting of the person by whom it purports to be written, and that it was duly executed and attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested. (4) This section concludes the express provisions contained in the Act as to presumptions in the case of documents, but other presumptions may of course be raised under the provisions of section 114, as is indeed indicated by Illustration (i) to that

(1) Cunningham, Ev., 45, 46; see ante, notes to a. 4.
(2) Steph. Introd., 170, 175.
(3) Norton, Ev., 260.
(4) Cunningham, Ev., 48, 49.
section, according to which the Court may presume that when a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor, the obligation has been discharged, though, in considering whether such a maxim does or does not apply to the particular case before it, the Court will also have regard to such facts as the following, viz., that though the bond is in the possession of the obligor, the circumstances of the case are such that he may have stolen it.(1) There are many other presumptions as to documents, known to English law, for which no express provision is made in the Act, and which, therefore can be raised only under the general provision contained in section 114, post,(2) under which section the more important of those presumptions will be found considered.

79. The Court shall presume every document purporting to be a certificate, certified copy or other document, which is by law declared to be admissible as evidence of any particular fact and which purports to be duly certified by any officer in British India, or by any officer in any Native State in alliance with Her Majesty, who is duly authorised thereto by the Governor-General in Council, to be genuine:

Provided that such document is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by law in that behalf.

The Court shall also presume that any officer by whom any such document purports to be signed or certified, held, when he signed it, the official character which he claims in such paper.(3)

Principle.—_Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta_—a maxim of peculiar force when applied to official acts and documents. The last clause of the section is also based upon the above quoted maxim. It is very old law that where a person acts in an official capacity, it shall be presumed that he was duly appointed, and it has been applied to a great variety of officers and illustrated by many cases. For it cannot be supposed that any man would venture to intrude himself into a public station which he was not authorized to fill. See Introduction, ante, and note, post.

a. 3 ("Court.")
3. 4 ("Shall presume.")
3. 3 ("Document.")

ss. 68, Cl. (1), 65, Cls. (e), (f). 76, 77 (Certified copies.)
s. 3 ("Evidence.")

Norton, Ev., 260, 261; Field, Ev., 404, 405; Taylor, Ev., § 171.

COMMENTS.

As is indicated by its terms, this section applies only to certificates,(4) certified copies, or other documents certified by officers in British India, or by duly authorized officers in allied Native States. Section 82, post, provides for similar presumptions in the case of documents of a like character certified by

---

(1) S. 114, ill. (i), post.
(2) Cunningham, Ev., 222.
(3) It is doubtful whether this section is applicable to copies given before the passing of the Act; _Jahar Ali v. Raj Chunder_, 10 C. L. R., 476.
(4) e.g., a certificate given by a registering officer under s. 60, Act III of 1877; and see Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 467, 473, 511.
officers other than those specially designated in this section. The presumption that the document itself is genuine of course includes the presumption that the signature and the seal, (1) where a seal is used, are genuine. (2) The presumption to be raised by the section is, however, made subject to the proviso that the document is substantially in the form, and purports to be executed in the manner directed by law in that behalf.

This section, as indeed all the following sections down to section 90 inclusive, is an illustration of, and is founded upon, the principle omnia rite esse acta. But though the Courts are directed to draw a presumption in favour of official certificates, it is not a conclusive but a rebuttable presumption. It is but a primâ facie presumption, and if the certificate or certified copy be not correct, such incorrectness may be shown. (3) The presumption raised by the last clause also is a presumption which shall only stand donec probatur in contrarium—until the contrary be proved. (4) And when a public officer is required by law to be appointed in writing, and it is shown that any particular person has acted as such officer, the writing by which he is appointed need not be proved. (5) So also as to documents admissible in England without proof of seal or signature, the Court shall presume that the person signing it held, at the time when he signed it, the judicial or official character which he claims. (6)

80. Whenever any document is produced before any Court, purporting to be a record or memorandum of the evidence, or of any part of the evidence, given by a witness in a judicial proceeding or before any officer authorised by law to take such evidence or to be a statement or confession by any prisoner or accused person, taken in accordance with law, and purporting to be signed by any Judge or Magistrate, or by any such officer as aforesaid, the Court shall presume—that the document is genuine; that any statements as to the circumstances under which it was taken, purporting to be made by the person signing it, are true, and that such evidence, statement or confession was duly taken.

Principle.—This section also gives legal sanction to the maxim "Omnia presumuntur rite esse acta," with regard to documents taken in the course of a judicial proceeding. (7) When a deposition or confession is taken by a public officer, there is a degree of publicity and solemnity which affords a sufficient guarantee for the presumption that everything was formally, correctly, and honestly done. (8) See Introduction, ante, and Notes, post.

s. 3 ("Document.")
s. 3 ("Court.")
s. 3 ("Evidence.")

ss. 24-30 (Confessions.)
ss. 33 (Relevancy of depositions.)
s. 4 ("Shall presume.")

COMMENTARY.

The presumptions to be raised under this section (9) which deals with the subject of depositions of witnesses and confessions of prisoners and accused

(1) See s. 78, ante.
(2) Field, Ev., 404.
(3) Norton, Ev., 260; see s. 4, ante.
(5) S. 91. Excep. (1), post.
(6) S. 82, post.
(8) Norton, Ev., 261, 262.
(9) See the following cases as to the law prior to the Act: R. v. Fauth Beyarcs, 1 B. L. R., A. Cr.
RECORDS OF EVIDENCE.

persons are considerably wider than those under section 79. They embrace not only the genuineness of the document, but that it was duly taken and given under the circumstances recorded therein. This section, occurring as it does in that part of the Act which deals not with relevancy but with proof, does not render admissible any particular kind of evidence, but only dispenses with the necessity for formal proof in the case of certain documents taken in accordance with law, raising with regard to documents taken in the course of a judicial proceeding, the presumption that all acts done in respect thereof have been rightly and legally done. (1) The law allows certain presumptions as to certain documents, and on the strength of these presumptions dispenses with the necessity of proving by direct evidence what it would otherwise be necessary to prove. (2)

As already observed, (3) two sets of presumptions may apply to the same document. For instance, what purports to be a certified copy of a record of evidence is produced. It must by section 79 be presumed to be an accurate copy of the record of evidence. By the present section the facts stated in the record itself as to the circumstances under which it was taken, e.g., that it was read over to the witness in a language which he understood must be presumed to be true. As to the relevancy of depositions, see section 33, ante, and notes thereto.

The first portion of the section only refers to documents produced as a "Record of evidence." It is only a document which purports to be a record or memorandum of the evidence, (4) or any part of the evidence given by a witness in a judicial proceeding or before any officer authorized by law to take such evidence, with regard to which the presumptions prescribed by this section are to be made. Statements, therefore, made by persons to police-officers during the course of a police-enquiry do not come within the purview of this section. Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code deals with the powers of investigation of the police. A police-officer making an investigation under this Chapter may examine witnesses and reduce their statements into writing. (5) But no statement, other than a dying declaration, made by any person to a police-officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall be used as evidence against the accused. (6) Such statements, therefore, are not and cannot have the effect of deposition, do not prove themselves, and cannot be treated as evidence. (7) The heading of a deposition descriptive only of the witness forms no part of the evidence given by him on solemn affirmation. (8)

The document, if it purports to be a statement or confession by any prisoner or accused person, must have been taken in accordance with law. As to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code relating to the recording of confessions, v. ante, s. 24, and the cases cited in the notes to that section.

The section only raises a presumption in the case of documents taken in the course of a judicial proceeding. Therefore statements by way of a confession recorded by a Magistrate in his character of an executive officer, there being no law authorizing the taking of such statements, are not receivable under this section (9) v. post. As to statements made to the police, v. ante.

The statements as to which this section says that certain presumptions are to be drawn are statements or confessions taken in accordance with law. This section does not render admissible any particular kind of evidence, but only

---

13 (1868); R. v. Joga Pol, 11 W. R., Cr. 36 (1869); R. v. Misser Sheikh, 14 W. R., Cr. 9 (1870).

(1) R. v. Viran, 9 M., 224, 227 (1880).

(2) R. v. Shicp, 1 B., 219, 222 (1876); see, for example, Budree Lall v. Bhooser Khan, 25 W. R., 134 (1876).

(3) Anm., Introduction to ss. 79-90; Steph. Index, 170, 171.

(4) See n. 3, ante.

(5) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 161.

(6) Ib., s. 162.

(7) Roghuni Singh v. R., 9 C., 455, 458 (1882); v. c., 11 C. L. R., 569; R. v. Bisheram Vithal, 11 B., 657 (1887). They may, however, be used for the purpose of refreshing memory, see s. 159, post.

(9) R. v. Viran, 9 M., 224, 227, 228 (1880).
dispenses with the necessity for formal proof in the case of certain documents taken in accordance with law. If a document has not been taken in accordance with law, section 80 does not operate to render it admissible. The section merely gives legal sanction to the maxim "Omnia prosumuntur rite esse acta," with regard to documents taken in the course of a judicial proceeding.(1) So in the case last cited it was contended that when the confessions there in question were taken by the Deputy Magistrate, he was acting not under the Criminal Procedure Code but under the provisions of the Mapilla Act (XX of 1859); it was, however, held that there was nothing in that Act authorizing the examination of a suspected person or the taking from him of any statement or confession, and that though such a course might not be improper but even advisable, this section did not, therefore, apply. The Deputy Magistrate might have been acting in an Executive capacity under the orders of the District Magistrate, but the statements if recorded by him as an Executive officer were not receivable under this section.(2) See also ante, Note to s. 24 and post. As to the manner in which evidence should be taken and recorded in Civil and Criminal Proceedings, see Civil Procedure Code, sections 179, 197, 633, 650; Criminal Procedure Code, sections 353—365. As to confessions, see sections 24—30, ante; and the Criminal Procedure Code, sections, 164, 364, 533.

With respect to these presumptions, firstly, if the provisions of the first clause of the section are fulfilled, the Court must in all cases presume that the document is genuine; viz., that it is, as it purports to be, a record of evidence given or of a confession made, and that the signature appended is that of the Judge, Magistrate, or other officer by whom it purports to be signed. This presumption is, however, independent of the others. Thus, it may well be that the document is genuine in the sense abovementioned, and yet it may not have been duly taken under the general provisions of the law regulating the recording of depositions and confessions. If there be no obligation to do an act, and it is not stated upon the document that such act has been done, there may be a presumption of genuineness and due taking, but there will be none as to that act having been done. Thus, before the deposition of a medical witness taken by a committing Magistrate can, under section 509 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, be given in evidence at the trial before the Court of Session, it must either appear from the Magistrate's record, or be proved by the evidence of witnesses to have been taken and attested by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused. The Court ought not, if it do not so appear, or if it be not so proved, presume either under section 80 or section 114, ill. (e) of this Act, that the deposition was so taken and attested.(3) There is no provision in the Code which makes the attestation of the deposition by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused obligatory. Unless it is made obligatory the concluding words of this section as to its having been "duly taken" cannot apply. The document may be genuine and yet not attested in the presence of the accused; and if there be no obligation to so attest the deposition, the statement might have been duly taken though not so attested.(4) Though this section will not be of assistance in a case under section 509 of the Criminal Procedure Code where there are no "statements as to the circumstances under which the deposition was taken purporting to be made by the person signing it," yet if a Magistrate records a statement at the foot of the deposition to the effect that the deposition was taken in the presence of the accused and was attested by him, the Magistrate, in the presence of the accused, and signs such statement, the Court would be bound to presume that such statement was true and to admit the deposition under section 509 of the Criminal Procedure Code.(5) If there be no such statement,

---

(1) R. v. Pairra, 9 M. 224, 127, 228 (1886).
(2) Ib.
(5) Kachali Hari v. R., supra, 133.
it must be proved in such a case aliunde that the requirements of the Code have been fulfilled.

Secondly.—The Court must presume that any statements as to the circumstances under which the document was taken purporting to be made by the person signing it are true. The memorandum endorsed upon or appended to the record of evidence on confession is to be taken as evidence of the facts stated in the memorandum itself.(1) Thus, if the evidence has been recorded in a different language from that in which the witness spoke, the Court will presume that the records contain the equivalent of the words spoken by him, if from the memorandum attached to the deposition it appears to have been read over to the witness in his own language and to have been acknowledged by him to be correct.(2) There may be a presumption that the statements as to the circumstances under which the document was taken are true and none as to the document having been duly taken for the circumstances, if assumed to be true, may not disclose a due taking.(3) Such statements if made are to be taken as true whether or not there is any obligation either to do the acts recorded or to make a record of them.(4)

Thirdly.—The document must be presumed to have been duly taken. In certain cases the document will not be presumed to have been "duly taken" unless it purports to give all the facts as to which such presumptions is to be raised.(5) In the case last cited it was said that the law allows certain presumptions as to certain documents and on the strength of these presumptions dispenses with the necessity of proving by direct evidence what it would otherwise be necessary to prove. One of these presumptions relates to confessions. This section says that, such confession is to be presumed to be duly taken. But as a necessary basis for this presumption the document must purport to show all the facts of which it would otherwise be necessary for the Court to be satisfied by direct evidence before the confession could be used against the accused. Those facts are, firstly, that the confession was accurately taken down or repeated; secondly, that the confession was taken in the immediate presence of a Magistrate; thirdly, that no inducement had been held out to the accused. If these three facts, viz., the accuracy of the record, the presence of a Magistrate, and the voluntary nature of the confession, would otherwise have to be proved by direct evidence, they must all be stated on the face of the document before the Court can draw a presumption of their having occurred; and these are the very three facts which are stated in the memorandum and certificate mentioned in sections 164 and 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If therefore such a memorandum and certificate in the terms required by the Code be not attached to the confession no presumption will be raised, and it will not be admissible in evidence.(6)

In other cases, however, the presumption of due taking may be raised independently of the question whether facts are expressly stated on the record which may form the basis of the presumption.(7)

---

(2) R. v. Gomouri, 22 W. R., 2 (1874); R. v. Munsi Dass, 23 W. R., 28 (1876). In the former case the deposition of the prisoner had been taken in English. The only evidence offered for the purpose of satisfying the Court that this deposition represented a true translation of the words which the accused person actually spoke in Hindustani was an endorsement or memorandum to be found at the foot of the deposition signed by the Magistrate in these words: "The above was read to the witness in Hindustani, which he understood, and by him acknowledged to be correct." It was held that the memorandum was evidence of the facts stated in the memorandum itself which facts themselves afforded some evidence that the translation was correct.
(4) Kachali Hari v. R., 18 C. 129 (1880).
(6) R. v. Shitya, supra, 222.
(7) Cf. Budree Lall v. Shoose Khan, 25 W. R., 134 (1876); R. v. Saniappa, 15 M., 63 (1891);
The distinction between these cases is that no presumption that a document is duly taken can arise when, on the face of the document, it appears that it has not been duly taken. (1) Therefore (a) if the law expressly requires a statement of the circumstances under which a document was taken to be recorded and appended to that document, (2) there will be, in the absence of such statement or of a perfect statement, no presumption of due taking. (3) In such a case it appears on the face of the document that it has not been duly taken and that an express statutory provision has not been carried out. (b) Where the law casts no obligation upon the Magistrate or Judge to record the circumstances under which a statement was made and taken, it will be presumed that the statement was "duly taken," that is, that all the conditions required by law have been fulfilled notwithstanding that the document does not purport to give the facts as to which such presumption is to be raised; for when the law creates an obligation to take a statement in a particular manner it will be presumed upon the maxim omnia rite acta that it has been duly taken. (4) (c) Unless an act with regard to the taking of a statement is made obligatory, the concluding words of the section as to the statement having been "duly taken" cannot apply to raise a presumption of the act having been done; for, if the act be not obligatory, it may well be that the statement may have been duly taken and yet that that particular act has not been done. (5)

One of the presumptions arising under this section is that the witness did actually say what is recorded. The section provides inter alia that the Court shall presume that the evidence was duly taken, and it cannot be considered to have been duly taken if it does not contain what the witness actually stated. (6)

The presumptions raised by this section are applicable in the case of confessions recorded by Magistrates of Native States. (7) All the presumptions are rebuttable; (8) thus a person who questions the accuracy of the record

---

R. v. Pokh Singh, 10 A. 174 (1887); R. v. Viran, 9 M., 224 (1886). The case, however, of R. v. Nasseruddin, 21 W. R. Cr. 5 (1874), does not appear to be in conformity with the text or the words of the section, but the grounds of the decision in this case are not at all clear. A statement of a witness in the shape of a former deposition can only be used as evidence against an accused person if it was duly taken in his presence before the Committing Magistrate (Cr. Pr. Code, s. 288). In this case, a document purporting to be the deposition of a witness made before a Magistrate appeared on the record, but there was no evidence to prove that the document exhibited evidence of this witness duly taken by the committing Magistrate in the presence of any of the persons who were tried in the Sessions Court and against whom it was used. The Court observed that a certificate was, no doubt, appended to it, initialed by some person, and on the supposition that this person was a Magistrate that certificate would under this section afford prima facie evidence of the circumstances mentioned in it relative to the taking of the statement. But this certificate was merely in these words—"Read to deponent and admitted correct," and did not give any of the facts necessary to render a deposition admissible under s. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was held, therefore, that the presumption of due taking could not be raised under this section. But s. 338 of the Code requires all evidence (except when otherwise provided) to be taken in the presence of the accused. And though there was no evidence in the case to show that the deposition had been so taken, this section should, it would seem, have dispensed with the necessity of such proof. The statement in the Magistrate's certificate was a complete statement required by law for the purpose of affecting the witness himself and had nothing to do with any possible future use of the deposition against the prisoner.

(1) See R. v. Viran, supra, 240.
(2) As in cases under ss. 164, 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
(3) R. v. Shikap, 1 B., 222 (1876).
(4) See cases cited, ante, in note (7), p. 423.
(6) R. v. Somappa, 15 M., 63, 65 (1891). The case of R. v. Patik Bina, 1 B. L. R., A. Cr., 13 (1868), is now of no authority, the decision having been given before this Act and based upon the ground of the non-existence of any general provision of the law such as is enacted by the present section.
(8) See s. 4, definition of "shall presume."
will be at liberty to give evidence to show that the statements made and language used have not been accurately recorded. Witnesses confronted by their former depositions often swear that they were never explained to them before signature or that what they said has not been correctly taken down. (1) Where a witness when examined before the Sessions Court and asked about his deposition taken before the Committing Magistrate denied that it was the deposition made by him, it was said that the presumption allowed by this section could not be made. (2) It is conceived, however, that in such cases the presumption may still be operative notwithstanding the statement of the witness; for though such a statement is given on oath, and affords some evidence against the presumption, still the Court may consider the fact to which the presumption relates not "disproved," and that the deposition was in fact duly taken. (3)

Evidence must be given of the identity of the person making the deposition, for there is, of course, no presumption as to such raised by the section. A deposition given by a person is not admissible in evidence against him in a subsequent proceeding without its first being proved that he was the person who was examined and gave the deposition. Thus, a pardon was tendered to an accused and his evidence was recorded by the Magistrate. Subsequently, the pardon was revoked and he was put on his trial before the Sessions Judge along with the other accused. At the trial the deposition given by him before the Magistrate was put in and used in evidence against him(4) without any proof being given that he was the person who was examined as a witness before the Magistrate. It was held that the deposition was inadmissible without proof being given as to the identity of the accused with the person who was examined as a witness before the Magistrate. (5)

81. The Court shall presume the genuineness of every document purporting to be the London Gazette or the Gazette of India, or the Government Gazette of any Local Government, or of any colony, dependency or possession of the British Crown, or to be a newspaper or journal, or to be a copy of a private Act of Parliament printed by the Queen's Printer, and of every document purporting to be a document directed by any law to be kept by any person, if such document is kept substantially in the form required by law and is produced from proper custody.

Principle.—Omnia praesuntur rite esse acta, the documents mentioned are official documents or in the nature of such. See Introduction ante.

s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 4 ("Shall presume.")

s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 37 (Relevancy of statements in Gazettes.)

s. 57, Cl. (2) (Judicial notice of Acts.)

s. 35 (Entries in public records.)

s. 90 (Definition of "Proper custody.")

---

(1) Norton, Ev., 262.

(2) R. v. Nisamuddin, 21 W. R., Cr., 5 (1873). The ground of this ruling and the exact nature of the denial made by the witness do not appear in the report; possibly there may have been a question as to the identity of the document, in which case, of course, no presumption would arise until that was proved; v. post.

(3) See s. 3, ante, definition of "disproved."

(4) See Cr. Pr. Code, s. 339.

COMMENTARY.

The presumption effects a primâ facie inference of genuineness which may be rebutted. (1) See as to the relevancy of statements made in notifications appearing in the Gazette, section 37, ante, and as to notifications in the Gazette of the appointment of public officers, section 57, seventh clause, ante. (2) All public Acts are the subject of judicial notice as are also all local and personal Acts directed by Parliament to be judicially noticed. (3) The last part of the section refers to and includes the documents mentioned in section 35, ante, and most of which are declared to be public documents by section 74. As to the meaning of "proper custody" reference should be made to the Explanation to section 90, post, which is declared by that section to apply also to this. According to that Explanation documents are said to be in proper custody if they are in the place in which, and under the care of the person with whom, they would naturally be; but no custody is improper, if it is proved to have had a legitimate origin, or if the circumstances of the case are such as to render such an origin probable.

82. When any document is produced before any Court, purporting to be a document which, by the law in force for the time being in England or Ireland, would be admissible in proof of any particular in any Court of Justice in England or Ireland, without proof of the seal or stamp or signature authenticating it, or of the judicial or official character claimed by the person by whom it purports to be signed, the Court shall presume that such seal, stamp or signature is genuine, and that the person signing it held, at the time when he signed it, the judicial or official character which he claims, and the document shall be admissible for the same purpose for which it would be admissible in England or Ireland. (4)

Principle.—See Introduction, ante, and notes, post.

s. 3 ("Document."), s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 4 ("Shall presume.")

8 & 9 Vic., Cap. 113, s. 1; 14 & 15 Vic., Cap. 99, ss. 9—11, 14; Steph. Dig., Art. 78, 90; Wills, Ev., 288—310; Taylor, Ev., §§ 7, 8, 1596, 1597, 1599 A., 1600, 1601, pp. 1055—1061, 1064—1070; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 473; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 96—102.

COMMENTARY.

This section which reproduces the provisions of the 9th and 10th sections of 14 & 15 Vic., Cap. 99, a statute making certain documents admissible throughout the Queen's Dominions (5) lays down a rule both of presumption and admissibility with regard to the documents therein mentioned. The Court must presume (a) that the seal or stamp or signature is genuine; and (b) that the person signing the document held at the time when he signed it, the judicial or official character which he claims. But over and beyond such presumptions, which are the proper subject-matter of this portion of the Act, the section further enacts that the document shall be admissible in India for the same purpose for

(1) s. 4, ante, "shall presume."
(2) See p. 343 ante; as to proclamations, orders, and regulations contained in the London Gazette, see s. 78, cl. 3; and as to the King's Printer, 45 Vic., c. 9, §§ 2, 4.
(3) 8, 57, cl. (2); and see ante, notes on that clause.
(4) See 14 & 15 Vic., (ap. 99, ss. 9—11, and post, notes to this section.
(5) Steph. Dig., Art. 80.
which it would be admissible in England or Ireland. As the documents which are the subject-matter of the section are documents admissible in England without proof of seal, (1) stamp or signature, it is necessary shortly to consider the provisions of the abovementioned statute and the English law anterior thereto in respect of the proof of documents of a public character.

At common law when a document was of such character that its preservation and settled custody was of concern to the public at large, or to a considerable section of the public, the production of the original was generally either excused or disapproved of by the Court, and the document was admitted to proof by means of a copy. The ordinary mode of proof of such documents was by means of an examined copy, that is, a copy taken on behalf of the party, generally by some clerk or other private person who produced it in the witness-box and proved that he had examined it with the original and that it was correct. It was, however, a matter of doubt what evidence, if any, it was necessary in such case to give of the original, but it seems that, whereas judicial notice would be taken of the existence, authenticity and custody of those of wide public importance, such as the journals of the Houses of Parliament, some evidence would be necessary on these points with regard to documents of less notoriety such as the rolls of a manor Court. In cases of the latter description the witness who proved the examined copy or some other person would ordinarily give some evidence to verify the original document. In order to put the admissibility of copies of public documents on a clearer and more settled footing Lord Brougham’s Act 14 and 15 Vic., Cap. 99, by section 14 enacted that:

Whenever any book or other document is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no statute exists which renders its contents provable by means of a copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom shall be admissible in evidence in any Court of Justice or before any person now or hereafter having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive and examine evidence provided it be proved to be an examined copy or extract, or provided it purports to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is entrusted, and which officer is hereby required to furnish such certified copy or extract to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same, upon payment of a reasonable sum of the same, not exceeding four pence for every folio of ninety words.

It will be observed that this section does not define what is intended by the words "of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence, on its mere production from the proper custody;" and it is doubtful whether this description would be held to comprise the rolls of manor Courts or any others which ordinarily require some verification as abovementioned. (2) This section of Lord Brougham’s Act refers only to such documents as are not provable by means of copies under any other statutable provision. But there are many registers and documents, certified copies of which are receivable in evidence by virtue of some special enactment having special reference to them. (3) Before this general Act several statutes had enacted provisions with regard to the proof of particular public documents by means of certified and other copies, and various documents were made by them receivable in evidence of certain particulars, provided they were authenticated in the manner prescribed by such statutes, but in consequence of the omission of any provisions dispensing with the proof of the genuineness of such copies, the beneficial effect of the enactments was much diminished. In order to remove this inconvenience, the statute 8 and 9 Vic., Cap. 113, by section 1 enacted that (4):

---

(1) As to the seals of which English Courts take judicial notice, see ante, s. 57, cl. 6 and notes on that clause.
(2) Willis, Ev., 288—290.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1001, where some of the principles of these registers are enumerated.
(4) This Act which is known as "The Documentary Evidence Act, 1845," does not extend Whenever by any Act now in force or hereafter to be in force any certificate, official or public document, or document or proceeding of any corporation of joint stock or other company, or any certified copy of any document, bye-law, entry in any register or other book or of any other proceeding, shall be receivable in evidence of any particular in any Court of Justice, or before any legal tribunal, or either House of Parliament, or any committee of either house or in any judicial proceeding, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence provided they respectively purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone, as required, or impressed, or impressed with a stamp and signed, as directed by the respective Acts made, or to be hereafter made, without any proof of the seal or stamp, where a seal or stamp is necessary, or of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same and without any further proof thereof in every case in which the original record could have been received in evidence.

The general result of these two statutes therefore seems to be this, that save where some special statutory provision exists as to the mode of proof of a public document, the proof of an examined copy, or the mere production in court of a copy purporting to be certified by a person purporting to have the due custody of the original, will be sufficient prima facie proof of a public document, except in the cases where verification of the original was necessary by the common law before an examined copy could be given in evidence. (1) Where therefore either under the provisions of some special enactment, a certificate, certified copy or other document, or under the general provisions of 14 and 15 Vic., Cap. 99, section 14, a certified copy is admissible in proof of any particular, provided they are respectively authenticated in the manner prescribed, they will be so admissible, if they purport to be so authenticated, without proof of the seal, stamp, signature and official character of the person appearing to have signed the same. Where in short a particular is provable by an authenticated document, the Act dispenses with proof of authentication.

Besides the section referred to, Lord Brougham’s Act of 1851 (14 and 15 Vic., Cap. 99) contains several clauses which greatly facilitate the proof of English documents in Ireland, of Irish documents in England and of English and Irish documents in the Colonies. Thus it enacts (2) that:—

Every document, which, by any law now in force or hereafter to be in force, is, or shall be, admissible in evidence of any particular in any Court of justice in England or Wales, without proof of the seal, or stamp, or signature, authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, shall be admitted in evidence to the same extent, and for the same purposes, in any Court of justice in Ireland, or before any person having in Ireland, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive and examine evidence, without proof of the seal, or stamp, or signature, authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same.

It also enacts (3) that:—

Every document, which, by any law now in force or hereafter to be in force, is, or shall be, admissible in evidence of any particular in any Court of justice in Ireland, without proof of the seal, or stamp, or signature, authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, shall be admissible in evidence of any particular in any Court of justice in Ireland, without proof of the seal, or stamp, or signature, authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same.

1857. The effect of this statute has been thus concisely stated:—It is provided by many statutes that various certified copies and other documents are receivable in evidence of certain particulars, provided they are authenticated in the manner provided by such statutes. Whenever by virtue of any such provision any such certified copy or other document as aforesaid is receivable, it is admissible if it purports to be authenticated in the manner prescribed by law without proof of any stamp, seal or signature required for its authentication or of the official character of the person who appears to have signed it. Steph. Dig., Art. 79.

(1) Wilks, Ev., 290, 291; in the Appendix to which is given a tabular list of some of the public documents in most frequent use and their mode of proof.

(2) S. 9.

(3) Ss. 9, 10.
documents admissible in england.

official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, shall be admitted in evidence to the same extent and for the same purpose in any Court of Justice in England or Wales, or before any person having in England and Wales by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive and examine evidence, without proof of the seal, or stamp, or signature, authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same.

it further enacts (1) that:

Every document, which, by any law now in force or hereafter to be in force, is, or shall be, admissible in evidence of any particular in any Court of Justice in England or Wales or Ireland, without proof of the seal, or stamp, or signature, authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, shall be admitted in evidence to the same extent and for the same purposes in any Court of Justice of any of the British colonies, or before any person having in any of such colonies by law or consent of parties, authority to hear, receive and examine evidence, without proof of the seal or stamp, or signature, authenticating the same, or of the judicial or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same.

As already observed, the present section reproduces the provisions of the 9th and 10th sections of this statute. The eleventh section already cited which contains similar provisions rendering admissible to the same extent and for the same purpose in the British colonies (including thereby India) (2) without proof of seal, etc., such documents as are so admissible in England, Ireland, or Wales, as also so much of the 19th section as relates to British India are repealed by the second section and the Schedule of this Act, as also by the Statute Law Revision Act of 1875, and in lieu thereof the provisions of the present section are substituted.

Even if practicable it would unduly lengthen the Note to this section, which is itself not of frequent applicability to enumerate the particular documents which are in England admissible without proof of authentication. It will be necessary, as the occasion arises, to refer either to the English text-books on evidence (3) which mention a large number of these documents, or if the document in question be not there found, to the statutes dealing with the subject, or, if none, to the general statutes 14 & 15 Vic., Cap. 99, section 14, abovementioned. The following are some of the documents which in England can be proved by certified copies and which are of like occurrence in Indian Courts:—Birth, Marriage or Death Registers (6 & 7 Will. IV., Cap. 86, as amended by 37 & 38 Vic., Cap. 88, §§ 32, 38, 35), and other similar Registers mentioned in Taylor, Ev., pp. 1056, 1057; certain documents relating to Companies (8 & 9 Vic., Cap. 16, § 40; 25 & 26 Vic., Cap. 89, §§ 61, 174, rr. 4, 5, 8; 40 & 41 Vic., Cap. 26, § 6); Copyright Registers (5 & 6 Vic., Cap. 45, § 11; 7 & 8 Vic., Cap. 62, § 8; 25 & 26 Vic., Cap. 68, §§ 4, 9); Orders in Lunacy (53 Vic., Cap. 5, §§ 144, 152; Lunacy Orders, 1883, Order CX); Newspapers Proprietors' Register (44 & 45 Vic., Cap. 60, § 15); Patent Office Registers (46 & 47 Vic., Cap. 57, §§ 89, 100); Registers and other Documents under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vic., Cap. 60; see Taylor, Ev., pp. 1060, 1061). The best mode of proof of official registers and other public documents is by producing the books or documents themselves and showing that they come from the proper repository. And in some cases, moreover, this is the only legitimate mode of proof.

(1) 8, 11 repealed by this Act; see s. 2 and schedule, and post.
(2) 8, 19.
(3) See Shipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 478; Wills, Ev., 268-310; Steph. Dig., Arts. 73-84. For a list of the various Statutes referred to by 8 & 9 Vic., Cap. 113, making certified copies of documents of a public nature evidence; see Taylor, Ev.

foot note to § 1601 and pp. 1064-1070; Rose, N. P. Ev., 90-102. For a list of some of the principal public documents which may be proved under a. 14 of 14 & 15 Vic., Cap. 99; see Taylor, Ev., §§ 1599A, 1600; Rose, N. P. Ev., 101, 120.

(4) Taylor, Ev., §§ 1596, 1597; and see notes to those paragraphs as to the principal instances.
In the case of a document tendered in evidence under this section the question for determination will be whether, assuming that the fact to be proved thereby is a relevant fact, the document is or is not one which is admissible in England in proof of that fact without proof of its authentication. If it is so, then the document is admissible in India to prove that fact; and if so admissible, the Court must raise the presumptions relating to its authenticity which are declared by this section. Again, the question whether the evidence, admissible in England must be determined by reference to the particular statute governing the case, or if there be none to the general provisions of 14 and 15 Vic., Cap. 99, section 14, above-mentioned. If under either statute proof by means of an authenticated document is admissible, then under 8 and 9 Vic., Cap. 113, no proof of the authentication is necessary, and the document is one which in England is the subject of the provisions of sections 9, 10, and 11 of 14 & 15 Vic., Cap. 99, and in India the present section.

Thus the Chief Magistrate of the City of Glasgow being a person lawfully authorized to administer oaths, a declaration as to the execution of a power-of-attorney taken before him and authenticated by his certificate and the common seal of the City of Glasgow, and by a Notarial certificate was held to be sufficient proof of the execution of the power. (3) Both declarations in this case were made under section 16 of the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835. (4) It was held that since a declaration as to the execution of a power taken under this Act or the Probate and Letters of Administration Amendment Act, 1858, (5) at any place to which the Act extends before a person "lawfully authorized to administer oaths" would be admissible in England or Ireland as evidence of the execution of the power, it should for that purpose, if both conditions be fulfilled, be also admissible in this country under the provisions of the present section. (6)

In the following cases (7) decided on the Original Side of the High Court at Calcutta similar evidence was held to be admissible. A power-of-attorney executed in England in the presence of the Mayor of Lyme Regis and the Mayor of Godalming, each of whom made a declaration under the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835, before a Commissioner to administer oaths in the Supreme Court of Judicature in England was accepted as proved. (8) A power-of-attorney executed in England in the presence of a solicitor and a clerk in his service, the former of whom made a declaration before the Mayor of the Borough of Guildford, who was also a Justice of the Peace, and who authenticated the declaration by his certificate and official seal was accepted as proved. (9) A power-of-attorney executed in Scotland in the presence of a writer to the signet and a law clerk, and certified by a declaration of the writer to the signet, and which in which it is necessary to produce the original document itself. Quere, whether this is so in regard to such documents in India.

(1) See Taylor, Ev., § 1600.
(2) Ibo., § 1601; pp. 1055—1061, 1084—1070.
(3) In the goods of Henderson, deceased, 22 C., 491 (1895).
(4) 8 & 6 Will. IV, Cap. 62.
(5) 21 & 22 Vic., Cap. 96.
(6) It is not clear why in this case it should have been considered necessary, in the matter of the seals appended to the certificates, to have recourse to the provisions of s. 57, cl. (6) (judicial notice of seals), since if the document in question was one which was admissible in England without proof of seal or signature (and only in such cases was the evidence offered within the scope of this section), the Court was bound to presume the genuineness of the seal and signature under the provisions of the present section, wholly independent of the question whether the seal was one which came within the purview of s. 67, cl. (6).
(7) The authors are indebted for the notice of these cases to Mr. Belchambers, the late Registrar of the High Court, Original Side.
(8) In the goods of John Kiot, deceased, December 15th, 1886, per Trelvyn, J.
(9) In the goods of William Abbot, deceased, November 19th, 1887, per Trelvyn, J. declaration was authenticated by a certificate of the Lord Provost of Edinburgh under the seal of the Corporation of the City of Edinburgh, was rejected as not having been executed before and authenticated by any of the persons mentioned in section 85 of this Act. (1) The present section does not appear to have been considered. It is submitted, however, with reference to the observations in that case to section, 85, post, that this latter section is an enabling section, its object being to add to the facilities of proof and not to exclude any other mode of proof than that allowed by that section. It has been since so held, it being pointed out that in arriving at this decision, Norris, J., seems to have assumed, contrary to the fact, that the provision contained in section 85 is of an exhaustive character, and that no other mode of proving the execution of a power is admissible. So on an application for letters of administration with the will annexed, made by the attorney of the executors therein named, it appeared that the applicant’s power-of-attorney was not executed in the presence of a notary public; but with regard to the execution by each of the executors, one of the attesting witnesses had made a declaration before a notary public to the effect that he witnessed the execution of the power-of-attorney by one of the executors, and that the signature of the other attesting witness was the proper signature of the person bearing that name, and each declaration was signed, sealed and certified by a notary public; it was held that the power-of-attorney was sufficiently proved. (2) In another case an application for Letters of Administration was made under a power-of-attorney executed in England in the presence of unofficial witnesses, one of whom made a declaration as to the execution of the power before the “Lord Provost and Chief Magistrate of Aberdeen.” The declaration was authenticated by the certificate of the Lord Provost under his signature and seal of office and the Lord Provost’s certificate was authenticated by the certificate of a Notary Public under his hand and official seal. The declaration was accepted. (3) An application for Letters of Administration was made under a power-of-attorney executed in England in the presence of unofficial witnesses, one of whom under the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835, made a declaration as to the execution of the power before a Notary Public who authenticated the declaration by a certificate under his signature and official seal. The declaration was accepted. (4) An original will executed in England was sent to Calcutta with a power-of-attorney authorizing the person named therein to apply to this Court for Letters of Administration with a copy of the will annexed. The power was executed in England before two solicitors. One of the attesting witnesses, who was also an attesting witness to the will, made a declaration as to the execution of the power under the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835, before a Notary Public who authenticated the declaration by a certificate under his signature and official seal. The only evidence of the execution of the will was a declaration made under the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835, before a Commissioner to administer oaths in the Supreme Court of Judicature in England. The will and the power were both (as they would have been in England or Ireland) deemed to have been sufficiently proved. (5) An application for Letters of Administration with a copy of the will annexed was made under a power-of-attorney executed in England before two persons described as solicitor’s clerks. One of these persons made a declaration as to the execution of the power under the Act above-mentioned before the Lord Mayor of London. The declaration authenticated by a certificate of the Lord

(1) In the goods of Primrose, deceased, 16 C., July 13th, 1889, per Norris, J., see s. 85, post.
(2) In re Bladen, 21 M., 492 (1888).
(3) In the goods of Henderson, deceased, April 6th, 1892, per Hill, J.
(4) In the goods of Henry Parker, deceased, June 20th, 1892, per Hill, J.
(5) In the goods of H. W. Agar, deceased, Aug. 31st, 1892, per Hill, J.
Mayor under his signature and seal of office was accepted. (1) An application for Letters of Administration with a copy of the will annexed was made under a power-of-attorney executed in England before a solicitor, who made a declaration as to the execution of the power under Statutory Declarations Act, 1835, before the Lord Mayor of London. This declaration authenticated by a certificate of the Lord Mayor under his signature and seal of office was accepted. (2) An application for Letters of Administration with the will annexed was made under a power-of-attorney executed in England. In order to furnish proof of the execution of the power, one of the attestings witnesses made a declaration under the above-mentioned Acts of the facts before a Notary Public who authenticated the declaration by a certificate under his signature and the official seal. It was held that as a certificate of a Notary Public in the Queen's Dominions authenticating a declaration made before him as to the execution of the power would be admissible in England or Ireland in proof of the execution of the power, such a declaration was also admissible for the same purpose under the present section. (3)

It is to be noted that the provisions of this section are, as are also those of section 85, post, cumulative (v. ante). Thus in addition to the mode of proof here admitted other methods are, in particular cases, provided for by section 78, ante.

83. The Court shall presume that maps or plans purporting to be made by the authority of Government were so made, and are accurate; but maps or plans made for the purposes of any cause must be proved to be accurate.

Principle. — The presumption in this as in other sections, is based on the maxim omnia rite esse acta; for it will be presumed that Government in the preparation of maps and plans for public purposes will appoint competent officers to execute the work entrusted to them, and that such officers will do their duty. But maps and plans made for the purposes of any cause are not the subject of such a presumption being made post iudicem motam.

See Note, post.

s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 4 ("Shall presume.")

s. 36 (Relevancy of statements in maps or plans made under the authority of Government.)

COMMENTARY.

The map must purport to have been made by the authority of Government, that is, by the Government, as such, for public purposes. Therefore a map prepared by an officer of Government, while in charge of a khas mehal, Government being at the time in possession of the mehal merely as a private proprietor, is not a map purporting to have been made under the authority of Government within the meaning of this section, the accuracy of which is to be presumed, but such a map may be evidence under the 13th section of this Act. (4)

(1) In the goods of William Cornwell, deceased. Sept. 16th, 1892, per Pigot, J.

(2) In the goods of Henry Francis deceased May 2nd, 1893, per Sale, J.

(3) In the goods of Anna Hinde, deceased, January 11th, 1886, per Ameer Ali, J.

(4) Jummajay Mullick v. Dwarka Nath, 5 C., 287 (1879); s. c., 4 C. L. R., 574; Rama Chandra v. Bunsodhar Naik, 9 C., 741, 742 (1883); Kona Prasad v. Jagat Chandra, 23 C., 335, 338 (1886); Dinomoni Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohini, 29 C., 191, 199 (1901) [in which the map was held to be sufficiently proved], but see Tarocknath Nandoraj v. Mohendra Nath Ghose, 13 W. R., 66 (1870).
The maps and plans mentioned in the section are maps and plans made by the Government for public purposes as for instance a Government survey-map, (1) and a map or plan made by the Government for private purposes or where the Government is acting otherwise than in a public capacity, is not the subject of this section. (2) In the case which is undermentioned a map was tendered in evidence purporting to be a map of the silted bed of the river Sankho. It was held that, as the map upon the face of it was neither a thak map nor a survey-map, such as is made by, or under the authority of, Government for public purposes, and as it appeared to have been made by Government for a particular purpose, which was not a public purpose, namely, the settlement of the silted bed of a certain river, the provisions of section 36 and of the present section were not applicable to this map. (3) But though in the case of a map not coming within this section no presumption of accuracy can be made: the mode in which the case has been dealt with and the absence of objection may lead to the inference that any objection to want of proof of its accuracy has been waived. (4)

The word 'accurate' in this section means accuracy of the drawing and correctness of the measurement. It may be assumed that the map was correctly drawn according to the scale on which it is said to have been prepared, but that is all. (5) Thus the accuracy of a thakbust Ameen's map which may be assumed under this section does not refer to the laying down of boundaries according to the rights of the parties. If it were so, a Deputy Collector would be usurping the functions of the Civil Court. To be binding on the parties to a suit such a map must be supported by evidence that it was drawn in their presence or in that of their agents. (6) Nor can a thakbust map be regarded as raising a presumption of correctness as to the amount of debutter land in one of the villages shown in the map, as the ameen who made it had no authority to determine what lands were debutter but only to lay down, and to map, boundaries. (7) The presumption in regard to the accuracy of a map is in no way affected by the fact that such map has been superseded by a later survey-map made under the same authority, and by an order of the Board of Revenue. It does not disprove the presumption to show that the general survey has been set aside, because it is quite consistent with that order that the actual bearing of the land in suit should be correct. (8) Where a Civil Ameen makes a local enquiry as to the situation of certain disputed lands with reference to the Collectorate map put in by the plaintiffs, and not objected to by the defendants who are present and recognise the boundary as that whereon the enquiry is to be based, the map must be taken to be one which the parties recognise as correct and trustworthy, irrespective of the question whether it was prepared with the authority of Government. (9)

Maps or plans made for the purposes of any cause must be proved to be accurate. They must be proved by the persons who made them. They are post item motam and lack the necessary trustworthiness. Where maps are made

(1) Jogeeswar Singh v. Bycunct Nath, 5 C., 822 (1880); Omirto Lall v. Kalee Parsad, 25 W. R., 179 (1876); Niamrtoollah Khadim v. Himmat Ali, 22 W. R., 519, 520 (1874); survey-maps and survey-proceedings being public documents are provable by certified copies (see ss. 74-77); sometimes, however, these copies and occasional-ly the maps made by public officers are prepared with little skill. See observations in Field, Ev., 4th Ed., p. 221, note; and in Protob Chunder v. Bome Surnomoyee, 19 W. R., 361, 364 (1873).

(2) Rom Chunder v. Bunseedhur Naik, supra, 9 C., 743.

W, LE

(3) Kanto Prasad v. Jagat Chandra, 23 C., 335 (1905).

(6) Ib.

(7) Jarao Kumari v. Lalomoni, 18 C., 224 (1890); s. c., 17 I. A., 145.

(8) Jogeeswar Singh v. Bycunct Nath, 5 C., 822 (1880); s. c., 6 C. L. R., 519.

for the purposes of a suit, there is, even apart from fraud, which may exist, a tendency to colour, exaggerate, and favour which can only be counteracted by swearing the maker to the truth of his plan. (1) The rights of property as between two parties cannot be affected by a map drawn for a totally different purpose, and a purpose totally irrelevant to the subject of the dispute between them. (3)

84. The Court shall presume the genuineness of every book purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of any country, and to contain any of the laws of that country, and of every book purporting to contain reports of decisions of the Courts of such country.

Principle.—See Introduction, ante, and notes to section 38, ante.

s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 4 ("Shall presume.")

s. 38 (Relevancy of statements as to any law contained in law-books.)

COMMENTARY.

When the Court has to form an opinion as to a law of any country, any statement of such law contained in a book purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of such country and to contain any such law, and any report of a ruling of the Courts of such country contained in a book purporting to be a report of such rulings, is relevant. (3) This section, which corresponds with the 12th section of the preceding Act, lays down a rule of presumption in relation to such books, which is, however, rebuttable and dispenses with proof of the genuineness of the books of any country containing laws and rulings. Section 57, first and second clauses ante, requires Courts to take judicial notice of the existence of all laws and statutes in British India and in the United Kingdom. Section 74, ante, declares statutory records to be public documents, and section 78, ante, enacts a method of proof in the case of Acts and Statutes.

85. The Court shall presume that every document purporting to be a power-of-attorney, and to have been executed before, and authenticated by, a Notary Public, or any Court, Judge, Magistrate, British Consul or Vice-Consul, or representative of Her Majesty, or of the Government of India, was so executed and authenticated. (4)

Principle.—See Introduction, ante. The fact of execution before, and authentication by, persons of the position and office of those in the section mentioned affords a guarantee and prima facie proof of such execution and authentication respectively.

s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 4 ("Shall Presume.")

s. 57, cls. (6), (7), (Judicial notice.)

(1) Norton, Ev., 200, 201.

(2) John Kerr v. Nusur Mohamed, 2 W. R. (P. C.), 59 (1864).

(3) S. 38, ante; see ante, notes to that section and Act XVIII of 1876 (Indian Law Reports).

(4) See s. 60 of the earlier Act, which contained a restriction which is not in the present section viz., that the power should have been executed at a place distant more than 100 miles from the place of production, in order that its execution and authenticity could be presumed.
POWERS OF ATTORNEY

Act VII of 1882 (Powers-of-attorney); Act III of 1877, ss. 32, 33 Registration), 52 & 53 Vic., Cap. 10, s. 6.

COMMENTARY.

A power-of-attorney is a writing given and made by one person authorizing another, who, in such case, is called the attorney of the person (or donee of the power) appointing him to do any lawful act in the stead of that person, as to receive rents, debts, to make appearance and applications in Court(1) before an Officer of Registration(2) and the like.(3) It may be either general or special to do all acts, or to do some particular act. The nature of this instrument is to give the attorney the full power and authority of the maker to accomplish the acts intended to be performed. Provision is made for these instruments by Act VII of 1882 (Powers-of-Attorney), which, among other things, enacts that where an instrument creating a power-of-attorney has been duly deposited in a High Court or the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon, a certified copy of such instrument shall, without further proof, be sufficient evidence of the contents of the instrument and of the deposit thereof in the High Court. This section enacts a presumption of due execution and authentication in favour of powers-of-attorney executed before, and authenticated by, the persons therein mentioned. The Court may be required to take judicial notice of the seals, signatures and office of the persons so authenticating the power.(4) A Notary Public has by the law of nations credit everywhere,(5) There is in India no general law relating to Notaries Public.(6) It has been said that, according to English law, the seal of a foreign or Colonial Notary Public will not generally be judicially noticed, although such a person is an officer recognised by the whole commercial world.(7) Sixth clause of section 57, of this Act, does not, however, draw any such distinction. In order to comply with the provisions of this section, the power-of-attorney must be executed before, and authenticated by, one of the persons mentioned therein.(8) So on an application for letters of administration to the estate appointed by the Governor-General in Council to perform the functions of a Notary Public under this Act. As to Notarial acts by persons abroad and judicial notice of the seal and signature of such person, see 52 & 53 Vic., Cap. 10, s. 6; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1567, 1568.

(1) See a. 37, Civ. Pr. Code.
(2) See as to powers-of-attorney executed in favour of persons authorized hereby to present documents for registration, Act III of 1877, ss. 32, 33. By the terms of the latter section any power-of-attorney mentioned therein may be proved by the production of it without further proof, when it purports on the face of it to have been executed before, and authenticated by, the person or Court therein before-mentioned. Except for registration purposes there is no presumption as to the genuineness or otherwise of a registered power-of-attorney. Field, Ev., 409; and mere registration is not in itself sufficient evidence of its execution: Salimati-Patima v. Koylashputi, 17 C., 903 (1890), dissenting from the report in Kristo Nath v. Brown, 14 C., 176, 180 (1886).
(3) Wharton, Law Lexicon, sub voc. See also Belchamber, Practice of the Civil Courts, p. 405.
(4) See a. 57, cl. (6) and (7), ante.
(5) Hutchinson v. Mannington, 6 Vez., 823.
(6) But under Act XXVI of 1881 (Negotiable Instruments), s. 138, the Governor-General is empowered to appoint any person to be a Notary Public under this Act and to make rules for such Notaries Public. See also ss. 399, 100—102 3d.; under the first of these sections a "Notary Public" is defined to also include any person appointed by the Governor-General in Council to perform the functions of a Notary Public under this Act. As to Notarial acts by persons abroad and judicial notice of the seal and signature of such person, see 52 & 53 Vic., Cap. 10, s. 6; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1567, 1568.
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 6 and cases there cited which are not uniform. But see Armstrong v. Storkeham, 24 L. J., Ch., 175, in which a power-of-attorney executed in British Honduras and in the presence of a Notary Public was proved in England under the Chancery Procedure Act, by the production of the Notary's certificate under his hand and official seal. See also Hayward v. Stephens, 36 L. J., Ch., 135. A distinction has, however, been drawn between foreign Notaries Public in countries not under the King's Dominions and Notaries Public within the King's Dominions. In the former case proof is required in verification of the signature of the Notary Public: Lord Kin- naird v. Lady Saloun, 1 Maddock, 227; Garvey v. Hibbard, 1 J. & W., 180; 5 D. M. & G., 910; In re Marias Trusts, 4 K. & J., 300; In re Davis' Trusts, L. R., 8 Eq., 98; Cook v. Wilby, L. R., 25 Ch. D., 769. In the other case no proof is required. See also Nye v. Macdonald, L. R., 3 P. C., 331.
(8) In the goods of A. J. Primrose, deceased, of a deceased who was domiciled in Scotland, and to whose estate one P had been appointed executor daive qua Father, the application being made by one K under a power-of-attorney granted by P, such power not having been executed and authenticated in the manner prescribed by this section, it was held that the application must be refused. (1) Though the power-of-attorney was not admissible under this section it seems to have been assumed that the provision herein contained is of an exhaustive character and that no other mode of proving the execution of a power is admissible. That assumption is not warranted by the language of the section, nor can it have been intended to exclude other legal modes of proving the execution. (2) When a document purporting to be a power-of-attorney and to have been executed before and authenticated by a Notary Public is produced before the Court an affidavit of identification as to the person purporting to make the power being the person named therein is unnecessary. (3) A power-of-attorney executed in England before a Justice of the Peace and authenticated by his signature alone without his official seal was, in the undermentioned case, accepted. (4) The presumption raised by the section is rebuttable. (5)

86. The Court may presume that any document purporting to be a certified copy of any judicial record of any country not forming part of Her Majesty's dominions is genuine and accurate, if the document purports to be certified in any manner which is certified by any representative of Her Majesty or of the Government of India [in or for] (6) such country to be the manner commonly in use in that country for the certification of copies of judicial records.

[An officer who, with respect to any territory or place not forming part of Her Majesty's dominions, is a Political Agent therefor, as defined in section 3, clause (40) of the General Clauses Act, 1897, (7), shall, for the purposes of this

16 C., 776., 779., the judgment in that case says "executed before or be authenticated by;" the section, however, says "executed before and authenticated by."

(1) Ib.; referring to Anonymous case in Fulton, 72 (1837); in the goods of Macgowan, Morton, 370 (1841); see, however, observations on this case in notes to s. 82, ante, the note of cases referred to under s. 82, and In re Sladen, 21 M., 492 (1898), in which case the power-of-attorney was not executed in the presence of any of the persons designated in this section. There is a clear distinction between the two modes of proof. There declarations of execution having taken place were made before Notaries Public; in the case of the present section the power must be executed before and authenticated by the Notary Public to be admissible.

(2) In re Sladen, 21 M., 492, 494 (1898). v. ante, s. 82.

(3) In the goods of Myine, 9 C. W. N., 986 (1905).

(4) In the goods of Briddon, Nov., 19th, 1889, per Wilson, J. In another case (In the goods of Homfray, June 27th, 1891, per Wilson, J.) a power-of-attorney executed in England in the presence of unofficial witnesses, and accompanied by an original letter from the person who executed the power, which letter was proved by the affidavit of the applicant, was accepted. But this was apparently under the provisions of s. 82., ante.

(5) See s. 4, ante. "shall presume."

(6) These words in s. 86 were substituted for the original words by Act III of 1891, s. 8.

(7) The words in brackets were substituted by s. 4, Act V of 1899, for the words "of the Foreign Jurisdiction and Extraterritorial Act, 1879, and section 190 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882." According to the General Clauses Act, 1897, the term 'Political Agent' includes (a) the principal officer representing the Government in any territory or place beyond the limits of British India, and (b) any officer of the Government of India or of any Local Government appointed by the Government of India or the Local Government to exercise all or any of the powers of a Political Agent for any place not forming part of British India under the law for the time being in force.
section, be deemed to be a representative of the Government of India in and for the country comprising that territory or place.](1)

Principle.—See Introduction, ante. In addition to the presumption of accuracy, which exists in the case of the certified copy itself, there is an additional guarantee afforded by authenticating certificate.

s. 3 "(Court.)"  s. 78, Cl. (6) (Proof of foreign public documents.)

s. 4 "(May presume.)"

COMMENTARY.

This section says that if a copy of a foreign judicial record purports to be certified in a given way the Court may presume it to be genuine and accurate. But it has been recently pointed out by the Privy Council that though this be so, the section does not exclude other proof. So to prove that a particular suit was brought in a certain foreign Court between R and C, one B was examined who deposed that in his presence the evidence of C was taken by the Judge and the suit was adjudicated and the order passed. He also put in a document which he swore was a copy of C's deposition and was in the handwriting of one of the officers of that foreign Court. In the same manner he proved the deposition of R in that suit. The High Court rejected this evidence on the ground that it did not comply with the provisions of the present section. But it was held that this section does not exclude other proof than that provided by it. That the statement of B, that R sued C, and that C gave evidence in his presence was primary evidence of those matters. That the depositions of C and R were public documents under section 74, and the proof of those records by B was secondary evidence and as such admissible under sections 65 and 66.(2) Foreign judicial records are provable in this country under the provisions of section 78, clause sixth, ante. The present section enacts a presumption in the case of certified copies of such records when authenticated in the manner mentioned therein. Having regard to the definition of "may presume,"(3) the Court may either regard the genuineness and accuracy of such copies as proved, unless and until it is disproved, or it may call for proof of it. This section is an instance of documents to which section 65, clause (f), refers.(4)

The substitution in the first clause of this section of the words 'in' and 'for' in place of 'resident in,' as also the addition of the second clause,(5) were occasioned by the ruling in the case undermentioned,(6) in which it was held that there was no representative of Her Majesty or of the Government of India residing in the State of Kuch Behar, and that consequently certified copies of judicial records of that State could not be received in evidence in the Courts of British India under the provisions of this section as then framed. In the case cited below(7) a copy was admitted of a judgment of the Court of a French Colony, at which neither Her Majesty nor the Indian Government

---

1.

2.

3.

4.

5.

6.

7.

relating to foreign jurisdiction and extradition." As to the position of Political agents, see Sir William Harcourt's argument in Damodar Gondhan v. Deoram Kanji, 1 B., 443 (1876).

(1) This para., other than the words added by s. 4, Act V of 1890, was added to s. 86 by Act III of 1891, s. 8.

(2) Hareman Roy v. Chaliangia Ram, 4 C. W. N., 439 (1890), s.c., 27 C., 639; see s. 65, ante.

(3) S. 4, ante.

(5) By s. 8 of Act III of 1891.

had a representative, on the testimony of a witness who was acquainted with the handwriting of the Registrar of such Court, and who swore that such Registrar was the keeper of the Court's records and had duly signed and sealed the document.

87. The Court may presume that any book to which it may refer for information on matters of public or general interest, and that any published map or chart, the statements of which are relevant facts, and which is produced for its inspection, was written and published by the person, and at the time and place, by whom or at which it purports to have been written or published.

Principle.—See Introduction and Notes to sections, 36, 57, ante.

s. 3 ("Court.")
s. 4 ("May presume.")
s. 3 ("Relevant.")
s. 3 ("Fact.")
s. 57 (Documents of reference.)
s. 36 (Relevancy of statements in maps, charts and plans.)
s. 83 (Maps or plans made by the authority of Government.)
s. 90 (Maps or plans 30 years old.)

COMMENTARY.

In all the cases when the Court is called upon to take judicial notice of a fact and also in all matters of public history, science or art, the Court may resort for its aid to appropriate books or documents of reference.(1) The Court under this section may presume (2) that such books were written and published by the person, and at the time and place by whom, or at which, they purport to have been written or published. Further, statements of facts in issue or relevant facts made in published maps or charts generally offered for public sale, or in maps or plans, made under the authority of Government, as to matters usually represented or stated in such maps, charts, or plans are themselves relevant facts.(3) Under this section the Court may presume(4) that any published map or chart was written and published by the person and at the time and place by whom, or at which, it purports to have been written or published. The section raises no presumption of accuracy, but this might, if the case were a proper one, be presumed under the general provisions contained in section 114, post. In the case, however, of maps and plans purporting to be made by the authority of Government, the Court must presume that they were so made and that they are accurate ; but maps or plans made for the purposes of any cause, that is, maps specially prepared for that purpose and with a view of their use in evidence must be proved to be accurate.(5) In the case of any map 30 years old the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of it which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person is in that person's handwriting.(6)

88. The Court may presume that a message, forwarded from a telegraphic office to the person to whom such message purports to be addressed, corresponds with a message delivered for transmission at the office from which the message

(1) See s. 57, penultimate clause, and ante, notes on that clause.
(2) See s. 4, ante.
(3) S. 36, ante; see notes on that section, ante.
(4) See s. 4, ante.
(5) S. 83, ante.
(6) S. 90; see s. 3, ante, illus. A map or plan is a "document."
purports to be sent; but the Court shall not make any presumption as to the person by whom such message was delivered for transmission.

Principle.—See Introduction, and Notes, post.

COMMENTS.

If a telegraphic message is forwarded, that is, delivered by the office to the person to whom such message purports to be addressed, the Court may make the presumption mentioned. The section itself therefore does not, in the first place, raise any presumption of delivery, but assumes, on the contrary, that such delivery has taken place. But, in the case of the post office, there is a presumption that a letter properly directed and posted will be delivered in due course: (1) and this presumption will be extended to postal telegrams, now that the inland telegraphs form part of the Government postal system. (2) Proof that the message was sent over the wires addressed to a particular person at a particular place, he being shown to be at the time resident at such a place, may present a prima facie case of the reception of such telegram by the sender. (3) Such a presumption may be raised under section 114, post [see Illustration (f)], and where there is a question whether a particular act was done, the existence of any course of business, according to which it would naturally have been done, is a relevant fact and may be proved. (4) But the sending of a telegram addressed to a person at a given place and the receipt of an answer purporting to be from him in due course are not admissible to prove that he was in the place at the time in question. (5) Though, if it were shown that he was in the place at the time in question, the receipt of an answer would be evidence of the delivery of the message. (6) The presumptions raised by this section are of a two-fold character; firstly, a presumption of conduct that the due course of business has been followed (omnia rite esse acta), viz., that the officials of the telegraph office have forwarded a message which is in the same terms as that which they have received for transmission; secondly, a presumption based upon an experience of a physical law, viz., that the message as sent by wire from the office of transmission corresponds with that which has been received at the office of despatch. The Court shall not, however, make any presumption as to the person by whom such message was delivered for transmission. (7) Presumably this refers to the entries on telegrams indicating the persons by whom they are sent. It is obvious that there is no guarantee that the person named in the telegram as the sender thereof was in fact the actual sender. As to the proof of the contents of telegrams, see section 91, post.

89. The Court shall presume that every document, called for and not produced after notice to produce was

---

(1) See British and American Telegraph Co. v. Colson, L. R., 6 Ex., 122 per Bramwell, B., Stockton v. Collin, 7 M. & W., 515; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 43; Wharton, Ev., § 1123.
(2) Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 43.
(3) Wharton, Ev., § 76, and see id., §§ 1323, 1329.
(4) S. 16, see notes to that section.
(5) Wharton, Ev., § 76. The rule with regard to replies by telegram appears to stand on a different footing from that relating to letters, see Woods Practice, Ev., 2, note (3).
(6) See ib., § 1328.
(7) S. 88. See, as to mode of proof of telegrams, Burr. Jones, Ev., § 209.
attested, stamped and executed in the manner required by law.

Principle.—See Notes, post.

s. 3 ("Court.")
s. 4 ("Shall presume.")
se. 65, cl. (a), 66 (Notice to produce.)

COMMENTARY.

There is here not only a presumption in favour of innocence, whence it may be assumed that everything has been done which the law required, but a presumption which is, or is in the nature of, that which is raised contra spolia torem from the non-production of the document.(1) As against the party refusing or neglecting to produce it on notice, there is a presumption that it has been properly stamped,(2) attested,(3) and executed. Evidence to the contrary that the document was not properly stamped, attested or executed may be given. So it was held that if secondary evidence be tendered to prove the contents of an instrument either lost or detained by the opposite party after notice to produce,(4) it will be presumed that the original was duly stamped, unless some evidence to the contrary, as for example that it was unstamped when last seen,(5) can be given.(6) But this power of giving rebutting evidence is subject to the rule enacted by section 164, post, namely, that, when a party refuses to produce a document which he has had notice to produce, he cannot afterwards use the document as evidence without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court. Thus A sues B on an agreement, and gives B notice to produce it. At the trial A calls for the document, and B refuses to produce it. A gives secondary evidence of its contents. B seeks to produce the document itself to contradict the secondary evidence given by A, or in order to show that the agreement is not stamped. He cannot do so.(7)

As already observed, English Courts presume that a lost document was duly stamped unless and until evidence to the contrary is given.(8) Under this Act also in the case of documents not coming within the terms of this section, either by reason of notice not being necessary, or the document having been lost or the like, the Court has power in a proper case to make a similar presumption under the provisions of section 114, post.(9)

90. Where any document, purporting(10) or proved to be thirty years old, is produced from any custody which the Court in the particular case considers proper, the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of such document, which purports to be in the handwriting of any

---

(1) Norton, Ev., 265.
(2) Hart v. Hart, 1 Hare, 1; Taylor, Ev., § 117.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1847; in this case a party who is driven to give secondary evidence of the contents of the document need not call an attesting witness.
(4) See se. 65, cl. (a), 66, ante.
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 148, and cases there cited;
(7) S. 164, post, Illust.
(8) Taylor, Ev., § 148.
(9) In Markby, Ev., 67, 68, the opinion is expressed that the section is restricted to cases where a notice to produce is delivered to the adverse party, and that it does not extend to cases where a summons to produce is delivered to a stranger to the suit.
(10) That is "stating itself to be." s. 62.
particular person, is in that person's handwriting, and, in the case of a document executed or attested, that it was duly executed and attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested.

Explanation.—Documents are said to be in proper custody if they are in the place in which, and under the care of the person with whom, they would naturally be; but no custody is improper if it is proved to have a legitimate origin, (1) or if the circumstances of the particular case are such as to render such an origin probable.

This explanation applies also to section 81.

Illustrations.

(a) A has been in possession of landed property for a long time. He produces from his custody deeds relating to the land, showing his titles to it. The custody is proper.

(b) A produces deeds relating to landed property of which he is the mortgagor. The mortgagee is in possession. The custody is proper.

(c) A, a connection of B, produces deeds relating to lands in B's possession which were deposited with him by B for safe custody. The custody is proper.

Principle.—The ground of the rule is the great difficulty, indeed in many cases the impossibility, of proving the handwriting, execution and attestation of documents in the ordinary way after the lapse of many years, as also the presumption that the attesting witnesses, if any, are dead. (2) Proof of custody is required as a condition of admissibility to afford the Court reasonable assurance of the genuineness of the document as being what it purports to be. (3) See also Note, post.

s. 3 ("Document."

s. 3 ("Proven.")

s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 4 ("May presume.")

COMMENTARY.

This section in no way touches the question of the relevancy of a document, but deals only with the amount of credit which is to be attached to certain documents whose age and custody raises a presumption of genuineness. It does away ordinarily with the necessity of proving those documents. (4) For documents thirty years old are said to prove themselves, that is, no witnesses need, unless the Court so requires, be called to prove their execution or attestation. (5) This presumption is not affected by proof that the

(1) See Bharrudy v. Govind, 27 B., 452, 462 (1803); a., s., &c. voc. Tjindin v. Govind, 5 Bom. L. R., 144.

(4) Pever Nicholas v. Ashfar, Suit 775 of 1894 (Calcutta High Court), per Ameeer Ali, J.

(5) Norton, Ev., 266; see Mohamed Feiz v. Oudhoo, 10 W. R., 340 (1863). [When a document is 50 years old it is not necessary to produce the subscribing witnesses to it]; Taylor, Ev., § 1845 A. See, however, as to firmans of the Kings of Delhi, or annuities, witnesses are living, and, it seems, even actually in Court; nor in the case of wills, by showing that the testator died within the thirty years. (1) The presumption applies in the case of any document, deeds, wills, letters, entries, receipts and the like. (2) The presumption enacted by this section is often treated as a part of the subject of ancient possession as to which, see notes to the seventh clause of section 32, ante. But the presumption is applicable whether the document be tendered in support of ancient possession or of any other fact. With regard to the exception to the hearsay rule in favour of ancient documents (3) when tendered in support of ancient possession it has been said: "These are often the only attainable evidence of ancient possession, and therefore, the law yielding to necessity allows them to be used on behalf of persons claiming under them, and against persons in no way privy to them, provided that they are not mere narratives of past events, but purport to have formed a part of the act of ownership, exercise of right, or other transaction to which they relate. This species of proof demands careful scrutiny, for, first, its effect is to benefit those from whose custody they have been produced, and who are connected in interest with the original parties to the documents, and next the documents are not proved, but are only presumed to have constituted part of the res gestae. Forgery and fraud are, however, matters, comparatively speaking, of rare occurrence, and a fabricated deed generally betrays from some anachronism or other inconsistency, internal evidence of its real character. The danger of admitting these documents is, consequently, less than might be supposed. It is more expedient to run some risk of occasional deception than to permit injustice to be done by strict exclusion of what, in many cases, would turn out to be highly material evidence." (4) But this rule of presumption which, it has been said, should even in England be carefully exercised, must be applied with exceeding caution in this country where forgery and fraud cannot be said to be of rare occurrence, and where therefore, this reason for the rule has not the same weight in this country as it is supposed to have in England. Here, therefore, less credit should be given to ancient documents which are unsupported by any evidence that might free them from the suspicion of being fabricated, since even in England this evidence when unsupported is of very little weight. (5) Should the genuineness of the document be for any reason doubtful, it is perfectly open to the Court or Jury to reject it, however ancient it may be. Even if proper custody be also shown, the Court has still power to reject the document if it is of opinion that it is a fabrication. (6) The section only says that the Court may raise the presumptions mentioned in it, not that it must do so, and experience shows that "may presume" in such instances ought generally to be construed in the more rigorous of the senses allowed by the fourth section of this Act. Where a document more than 30 years old purporting to come from proper custody, is required by the Court before which it is produced to be proved and is left unproved: and there are circumstances, both external and internal, which throw great doubts upon the genuineness of the document, the Court can, in the exercise of the discretion vested in it under s. 90, decline to admit it in evidence without formal proof, and their Lordships of the Privy Council will be always slow to overrule the discretion exercised by a Judge under s. 90. The rule of law which requires the party tendering in evidence an altered instrument to explain its appearance does not apply to letters and ancient documents coming from the right custody merely because they are in a mutilated or imperfect state.

The presumptions raised by the section are confined to handwriting, execution and attestation; where a document more than thirty years old purports to be signed by an agent on behalf of a principal, no presumption arises as to the agent's authority which must be proved. Where an old deed purported to be an appointment under a special power and to be executed by the attorney of the donee of the power, the Court presumed only the execution of the deed, but not in the absence of the power or evidence thereof, the authority of the solicitor to execute it.

The use by the Legislature of the words "when any document is produced" does not limit the operation of the section to cases in which the document is actually produced in Court, and, consequently, secondary evidence of an ancient document is admissible without proof of execution of the original when the document is shown to have been lost and to have been heard of last in proper custody.

The Madras High Court in a recent case observed with reference to a document of which secondary evidence had been permitted to be given, but in respect of which there was no evidence of execution:—"It is not necessary to consider whether we should be prepared to follow the decision in Khetter Chunder Mookerjee v. Khetter Paul Sreeerutno, if it had been shown as it was in that case, that the original document could not be produced by reason of its having been lost. In the present case there is nothing to show that the original document which admittedly is in existence and in the custody of the Zamorin could not have been produced if proper steps to procure its production had been taken" and it therefore refused to raise the presumption mentioned in this section, though the original document of which a copy was admitted purported to be more than thirty years old.

It is to be noted with respect to this case that though the grounds of admissibility are not stated, secondary evidence was permitted to be given, and that though the original document in the Calcutta case was in fact lost, there is nothing in that decision which limits the applicability of this section to one only of the cases in which secondary evidence is allowed, viz., loss of the original.

The period of thirty years is to be reckoned not from the date on which the document is filed in Court, but from the date on which it having been tendered.
in evidence, its genuineness or otherwise becomes the subject of proof. (1) It is not until the case comes on for hearing and the party producing the document is called upon to prove it, that the Court, after being satisfied that it comes from proper custody, can be asked to make the presumptions allowed by this section. (2)

Ancient documents are admissible under this section without proof of any acts, transactions or state of affairs necessarily, properly, or naturally referrible to them. Inconsiderable (if any,) weight, however, will be attached to documents, which, though ancient, are not corroborated by evidence of ancient or modern enjoyment or by other equivalent or explanatory proof. (3)

The value of ancient documents as evidence when admitted must depend in each case upon the corroboration derivable from external circumstances. In order to form an estimate of their value the following considerations have usually been regarded as important: have they been produced on those previous occasions on which they would have been naturally produced, if in existence at the time; (4) have any acts been done under them; has there been ancient or modern corresponding enjoyment. (5)

It is not sufficient that a document on the face of it purports to be more than thirty years old. In order to prove its authenticity a party must adduce evidence of the custody of the document, and ought in order to give weight to it adduce such evidence of possession or other evidence of a like corroborative nature as he is able. (6) The degree of credit to be given to an ancient document depends chiefly on the proof of transactions or state of affairs necessarily, or at least properly, or naturally referrible to it. (7) In the aforementioned case, the Court observed that documents relating to land produced by a person out of possession, without proof of any act done in connection with them, with the object of reducing the possession actually enjoyed by another to a limited or temporary interest, may be admissible as being produced from proper custody, but would generally have almost no weight in this country as a ground of inference. (8)

This condition of admissibility must generally be proved by some other evidence. Where a party offers documents of such an age as to be incapable of being proved by direct evidence he is bound to prove their custody. (9) Though it is for the discretion of the Court to decide what is proper custody, this discretion is limited by the Explanation given of the section which itself follows the rule of English law laid down in the case of the Bishop of Meath v. Marquis of Winchester. (10) The observations of Tindal, C. J., in that case have been adopted as applicable to cases coming within this section. (11) In that case Tindal, C. J., in speaking of documents found in a place in which, and under the care of persons with whom such papers might naturally and reasonably be expected to

---

(1) Minu Sirkar v. Rhedoy Nath, 5 C. L. R., 135 (1879).
(2) Field, Ev., 415.
(3) Taylor, Ev., §§ 665, 666; Field, Ev., 413; Markby, Ev., 68, 69; Boikunta Nath v. Lakhun Majhi, 9 C. L. R., 455, 429 (1881); Anand Chunder v. Mookta Kasser, 21 W. R., 130 (1874); Grant v. Byjnath Tezsarce, 21 W. R., 279 (1874); Sreekanta Bhattacharjee v. Raj Narain, 10 W. R., 1 (1869).
(4) Boikunta Nath v. Lakhun Majhi, supra.
(6) Hori Chintamani v. Moro Lakshman, 11 B. 89 (1869).
(7) Timanganda v. Banganganda, 11 B., 94, 98, 102 (1877); Bishekhr Bhattacharjee v. Lamb, 21 W. R., 22 (1873); Timanganda v. Banganganda, 11 B., 94, 98, 102 (1877); Hori Chintamani v. Moro Lakshman, 11 B., 89 (1869).
(8) Timanganda v. Banganganda, 11 B., 94, 98, 102 (1877); Hori Chintamani v. Moro Lakshman, 11 B., 89 (1869).
(9) Supra.
(10) 3 Bing. N. C., 183, 200; 10 Bing. 462. be found, says: "and this is precisely the custody which gives authenticity to documents found within it, for it is not necessary that they should be found in the best and most proper place of deposit." (1) If documents continue in such custody, there never would be any question as to their authenticity, but it is when documents are found in other than their proper place of deposit, that the investigation commences whether it was reasonable and natural, under the circumstances in the particular case, to expect that they should have been in the place where they are actually found; for it is obvious that, while there can be only one place of deposit strictly and absolutely proper there may be various and many that are reasonable and probable though differing in degree, some being more so, some less, and in those cases the proposition to be determined is, whether the actual custody is so reasonably and probably to be accounted for, that it impresses the mind with the conviction that the instrument found in such custody must be genuine. That such is the character and description of the custody, which is held sufficiently genuine to render a document admissible, appears from all cases." Many decisions have been given both in England (2) and in India (3) as to the conditions which constitute proper custody, but each case must depend upon its own particular circumstances, it being impossible to lay down any rule which shall apply to all. (4) Thus in a suit to eject a tenant who had been in possession of a small homestead for forty years, the tenant produced a pottah purporting to be sixty years old granted to her father who had held possession under it for twenty years until his death. It appeared that her father had left an infant grandson who was his sole heir but who had never either before or after attaining his majority made any claim to the property. The Court held that her custody of the pottah was a natural and proper one within the meaning of this section. (5) When property had been in the possession of the plaintiff's father and documents relating to the property were found among the papers of a deceased gomastah who had been in the father's employ and had managed the property for the plaintiff during his minority, this was held to be a proper custody. (6) The mere fact that an ancient document is produced from the records of a Court does not raise any presumption that it was filed for a proper purpose, and that, consequently, the Court's custody was a proper custody. The document must be shown to have been so filed in order to the adjudication of some question of which that Court had cognizance and which had actually come under its cognizance. (7) In the aforementioned case, the Privy Council observed as follows: "With reference to the argument as to the evidence in support of the bond, and particularly with respect to the custody of the bond, it is in their Lordship's opinion sufficient to state that the bond was produced in the usual manner by the persons who claimed title under the provisions of it, and who therefore were entitled to the possession of it; so that the bond must be held to have come from the proper custody." (8)

---

(1) Followed in Sharfudin v. Govind, 27 B., 422, 423 (1902); s.c., sub voce. Tajjudin v. Govind, 5 Bom, L. R., 144.

(2) See Taylor, En., §§ 660–664; Phipson, En., 3rd Ed., 467–469.

(3) v. post.

(4) Norton, En., 289.

(7) Guddathur Paul v. Bhurub Chunder, 5 C., 918 (1880).

(8) Dewji Goya v. Godabhai Godabhai, 2 B. L. R., P. C., 85, 86 (1889); s. c., 11 W. R., P. C., 35; see also as to proper custody, Thakoor Pershad v. Bashmutty Koorer, 24 W. R., 428 (1875); Ekowrie Singh v. Koylach Chunder, 21 W. R., 45 (1874); Munuswam Faredoonmee v. Ram Onagra, 21 W. R., 19 (1873); Chunder Kanti v. Brojo Nath, 13 W. R., 109 (1870); Gour Paroy v. Wooma Sondaree, 12 W. R., 472 (1869); Gourudas Day v. Sambhu Nath, 3 B. L. R., 258 (1869); Sreekanth Bhattacharjee v. Raj Narain, 10 W. R., 1 (1869); Mahomed Asaddee v. Shaffi Mulla, 8 B. L. R. 26, 29 (1871); Vital Mahadeb v. Mahummud Huseen, 6 Bom., H. C. R., 90 (1869).
No custody is improper if it is proved to have had a legitimate origin, or if the circumstances of the particular case, are such as to render such an origin probable. This provision is applicable to those cases in which the custody is not, perhaps, that where it might be most reasonably expected, but is yet sufficiently reasonable to constitute such custody not improper. Thus in the two first Illustrations to the section the documents are produced from their natural place of custody; in the third Illustration the documents ordinarily would be with the owner B; but under the circumstances A’s custody is proper.(1)

In the undermentioned case(2) Batty, J., was of opinion that the section read with the explanation seemed to insist only on a satisfactory account of the origin of the custody and not in the history of its continuance: and that possibly the origin of the custody was alone regarded as material because it is intelligible that ancient documents may be overlooked and left undisturbed notwithstanding a transfer of old, or creation of new interests.

(1) Norton, Ev, 267.
(2) Shah Juddin v. Govind, 27 B., 452, 462 (1902);
L. R., 144.
CHAPTER VI.

OF THE EXCLUSION OF ORAL BY DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

In so far as the present Chapter deals not only with cases in which oral evidence is excluded by documentary evidence, but also with those in which oral evidence is admissible, notwithstanding the existence of a document, its subject-matter may properly, and in conformity with the English text-books, be described as the "admissibility of extrinsic evidence to affect documents;" a branch of the law of evidence which is perhaps of all the most difficult of application.

It is necessary, in the first place, to bear in mind in this connection that (as has been already provided by the Act) the contents of all documents, whatever be their nature, whether dispositive or non-dispositive (v. post), must be proved by the production of the document itself, except in those cases in which secondary evidence is admissible (sections 64, 62). If, however, the question is not primarily as to the contents of a document, but as to the existence of matters of fact of which documents form the record and proof, other considerations come into play which are the peculiar subject-matter of this portion of the Act. The question then arises whether the fact of such record excludes other evidence of the matters which are so recorded, and whether these matters can, and if so, in what manner, be affected by such other evidence. To fully comprehend this distinction it is necessary to distinguish between dispositive (or, in the language of Bentham, "pre-determined") documents, or documents which are uttered dispositively, i.e., for the purpose of disposing of rights; and non-dispositive (or, in the language of Bentham, "casual") documents, or those which are uttered non-dispositively, i.e., not for the purpose of disposing of rights. A casual or non-dispositive document (e.g., a letter or memorandum thrown off hurriedly in the ease and carelessness of familiar intercourse, without intending to institute a contract, and which is offered, not to prove a contract, but to establish a non-contractual incident) is peculiarly dependent upon extraneous circumstances; is often inexplicable unless such circumstances are put in evidence; and employs language, which, so far from being made up of phrases selected for their conventional business and legal limitations, is marked by the writer’s idiosyncrasies, and sometimes comprises words peculiar to himself. But whether such documents are informally or formally constituted, they agree in this, that so far as concerns the parties to the case in which they are offered, they were not prepared for the purpose of disposing of the rights of the party from whom they emanate. Dispositive documents, such as contracts, grants of property and the like, on the other hand, are deliberately prepared, and are usually couched in words which are selected for the purpose because they have a settled legal or business meaning. Such documents are meant to bind the party uttering them in both his statements of fact and his engagements of further action; and they are usually accepted by the other contracting party (or, in case of wills, by parties interested), not in any occult sense, requiring explanation or correction, but according to the legal and business meaning of the terms.(1)

(1) Wharton, Ev., § 920; this distinction is recognized by Sir J. Stephen in substance, though not in terms in s. 91 of this Act, and in Art. 90, of his Digest of Evidence. The classification is not, however, entirely exclusive with reference to the subject-matter of s. 91, for matters which the law requires to be reduced to writing may (e.g., mortgages), or may not (e.g.,...
The Chapter commences by enacting that no evidence in proof of the terms of dispositive documents and of matters required by law to be reduced to the form of a document (whether these matters be dispositions or not) shall be given except the document itself, or secondary evidence thereof when admissible. The very object for which writing is used is to perpetuate the memory of what is written down, and so to furnish permanent proof of it. In order to give effect to this, the document itself must be produced. Assuming that the document has been produced as required, the next section, with certain provisos, excludes oral evidence for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from its terms. To give full effect to the object with which writing is used, not only is it necessary that the document itself should be put before the Judge for his inspection, but also in cases where the document purports to be a final settlement of a previous negotiation, as in the case of a written contract, it is essential that the document shall be treated as final and not be varied by word of mouth. If the first of these rules were not observed, the benefit of writing would be lost. There is no use in writing a thing down unless the writing is read. If the second rule were not observed people would never know when a question was settled, as they would be able to play fast-and-loose with their writings.(1) But though extrinsic evidence is thus inadmissible (a) to supersede (section 91), or (b) to control, that is to contradict, vary, add to or subtract from the terms of the document (section 92), it may yet (c) be admissible in aid of and to explain, the document (section 92, sixth proviso sections 93—100).

It is proposed to shortly observe upon these three rules which form the subject-matter of this Chapter of the Act. The general distinction between the sections just quoted is that sections 91, 92, define the cases in which documents are exclusive evidence of transactions which they embody, while sections (93—100) deal with the interpretation of documents by oral evidence. The two subjects are so closely connected together that they are not usually treated as distinct; but they are so in fact. Thus A and B make a contract of marine insurance on goods and reduce it to writing. They verbally agree that the goods are not to be shipped in a particular ship, though the contract makes no such reservation. They leave unnoticed a condition usually understood in the business of insurance, and they make use of a technical expression, the meaning of which is not commonly known. The law does not permit oral evidence to be given of the exception as to the particular ship (section 92). It does permit oral evidence to be given to annex the condition (section 92, fifth proviso); and thus far it decides that for one purpose the document shall, and that for another it shall not, be regarded as exclusive evidence of the terms of the actual agreement between the parties. It also allows the technical term to be explained (section 98), and in so doing it interprets the meaning of the document itself. The two operations are obviously different, and their proper performance depends upon different principles. The first depends upon the principle that the object of reducing transactions to a written form is to take security against bad faith or bad memory, for which reason a writing is presumed, as a general rule, to embody the final and considered determination of the parties to it. The second depends on a consideration of the imperfections of language and of the inadequate manner in which people adjust their words to the facts to which they apply. The rules contained in this Chapter of the Act are not perhaps difficult to state, to understand, or to remember; but they are by no means easy to apply, inasmuch as from the nature of the case an enormous number of transactions fall close on one side or the other of most of them. Hence, the exposition of these rules and the abridgment of all the illustrations of them which have occurred in practice occupy a very large space in the different text.

Depositions of witnesses, constitute dispositions of rights.

(1) Steph. Intro. 171, 172.
writers; (1) and hence also the difficulty not infrequently experienced of reconciling apparently conflicting cases, but the facts of which and upon which the decision rested are seldom, if ever, fully reported.

When a transaction has been reduced into writing, either by requirement of law, or agreement of the parties, the writing becomes the exclusive memorial thereof, and no extrinsic evidence is admissible to independently prove the transaction (section 91). Oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence. Some of the grounds of the rule have already been considered. Others are that in the case of dispositive documents the written instrument is, in some measure, the ultimate fact to be proved, and it has been tacitly treated by the parties themselves as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement. The instrument is not collateral, but is of the very essence of the transaction; and consequently in all proceedings, civil or criminal, in which the issue depends in any degree upon the terms of the instrument, the party whose witnesses show that the disposition was reduced to writing must either produce the instrument or give secondary evidence thereof. (2) So also in the case of instruments which the law requires to be in writing, the law having required that the evidence of the transaction should be in writing, no other proof can be substituted for that so long as the writing exists and is in the power of the party. Accordingly parol evidence is inadmissible to prove judicial documents, or private formal documents such as wills and other dispositions of property which the law requires should be reduced to the form of a document. To admit inferior evidence when the law requires superior would be to repeal the law. (3)

Extrinsic evidence is not only inadmissible to supersede the document, but also to control, that is to contradict, vary, add to or subtract from the terms of the document, though the contents of such document may be proved either by primary or secondary evidence according to the rules stated in the preceding sections of the Act. This common law rule may be traced back to a remote antiquity. It is founded on the inconvenience that might result, if matters in writing, made by advice and on consideration, and intended finally to embody the entire agreement between the parties were liable to be controlled by what Lord Coke calls "the uncertain testimony of slippery memory." When parties have deliberately put their mutual engagements into writing in language which imports a legal obligation, it is only reasonable to presume that they have introduced into the written instrument every material term and circumstance. Consequently extrinsic, or as it is often loosely called "parol," evidence, is equally inadmissible in this connection whether it consists of casual conversations, declarations of intention, oral testimony, documents (provided they are of inferior solemnity to the writing in question) or facts and events not in the nature of declarations, and whether such conversations were previous or subsequent to, or contemporaneous with, the date of the principal document. Such evidence while deserving far less credit than the writing itself, would inevitably tend in many instances to substitute a new and different contract for that really agreed upon, and would thus, without any corresponding benefit, work infinite mischief and wrong. (4) The rule equally applies in the case of dispositions reduced to writing by the agreement of parties and of those which have been so reduced in obedience to the requirements of the law in that respect. The rule, however, only applies as between the parties to any such instruments or their representatives in interest. Persons who are not parties to a document or their representatives in interest may give evidence of any facts tending to show a contemporaneous agreement

(1) Steph. Digest, pp. 184, 185.
(2) Taylor, Ev., § 401.
(3) ib., § 390.
(4) Taylor, Ev., §§ 1132, 1149, Plowman, Ev., 3rd Ed. 1152. varying the terms of the document (section 99). The rule is subject further to certain provisos which will be found dealt with in the notes to section 92, post.

It has been already observed that extrinsic evidence is inadmissible either to supersede or to control the document, that is, the document itself only must be produced in proof of the transaction which it embodies, and when so produced its terms may not be contradicted, added to, or varied by, other evidence. But on its production it becomes necessary to construe the document. Putting a construction upon a document means ascertaining the meaning of the signs or words made upon it and their relation to facts. (1) Construction may be effected from an inspection and consideration of the terms of the document itself, or from such an inspection and consideration coupled with a consideration of certain classes of extrinsic evidence admissible in aid, explanation, and interpretation of documents. (2)

The construction of a document before the Court is a question of law to be determined by Grammar and Logic, the primary organs of interpretation aided where necessary by the subsidiary one of usage (section 98), where admissible, to throw light upon the meaning of the words used. (3) To construe a document oral evidence of its author as to his intention is not admissible, though accompanying circumstances (section 92, prov. 6) may be shown and considered. (4)
The effect of a document depends on the intention of the parties as gathered from the terms of the instrument and from the surrounding circumstances. (5)
In construing mercantile instruments it is particularly the duty of a Court of Justice to regard the intention rather than the form, and to give effect to the whole instrument. The intention must be collected from the instrument, but resort may be had to mercantile usage (section 98) in certain cases as a key to its exposition. (6)

In the citations now made two important classes of extrinsic evidence are alluded to, viz., proof of surrounding circumstances and of usage. Firstly, the document must be applied to the facts. In order that the Court may be placed as nearly as possible in the position of the author of the instrument, evidence is admissible of all surrounding circumstances (7), which will enable it to identify the persons or thing to which the writing refers, or to ascertain the nature and qualities of the subject-matter of the instrument (section 92, prov. 6). Secondly, evidence may be given, when necessary, of the meaning of the words and signs made upon a document; for without such a knowledge it would be impossible to understand and construe a document (8) (section 98). But evidence may not be given to show that common words, the meaning of which is plain and which do not appear from the context to have been used in a peculiar sense were in fact so used. (9) Under this heading will come the testimony both of

(1) Steph. Dig., Art. 91.
(2) See Baboo Rambudun v. Rane Kunnar, W. R., 1864, Act X, 22, 24 (though undoubtedly a document may be explained by oral evidence, the latter cannot be admitted to vary the terms of a written instrument, which terms are in themselves clear and undoubted).
(3) Mahalachi Ammal v. Palani Chatti, 6
Mad. H. C. R., 245, 246, 247 (1871).
(4) Bati Maharani v. Collector of Etawah, 17
A., 198, 209, P. C. (1894); Balkishen Das v.
Lege, 4 C. W. N., 153 (1899); a. c., 22 A., 149.
(5) Succoram Morarji v. Kalidas Kalianji,
18 B., 631 (1894); Balkishen Das v. Lege, supra.
(6) Braddon v. Abbott, Taylor's Reports, 342, 566 (1848): Supreme Court, Plea Side, pd Sir
L. Peel, C. J.
(7) See cases cited in the notes to a. 92, prov.
(8) Succoram Morarji v. Kalidas Kalianji, 18
B., 631 (1894); Janka v. Bhauran, 19 A., 132
(1860); Rani Menw v. Hulas Kenwar, 13 B., L R.
312 (1874); and see notes to a. 92. Provis. 6, post; Balkishen Das v. Lege, 22 A., 148, 150
(1899); Jafar Husen v. Bansi Singh, 21 A., 4
(1896); Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 561, 562.
(8) See a. 98, post.
(9) Steph. Dig., Art. 91, cl. (2). So evidence may not be given to show that the word "boat" in a policy of insurance means "boat not on the outside of the ship on the quarter." Blackett v.
EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING DOCUMENTS.

experts and non-experts as to the meaning, but not as to the construction, of the language and evidence of usage to explain the terms of the document.(1) Usage is admissible not only to explain but to annex unexpressed incidents to a document, provided they are not expressly excluded by, nor inconsistent with, the terms thereof (section 92, prov. 5).(2)

The abovementioned class of extrinsic evidence will have to be resorted to in the case of documents apart from the question of ambiguity properly so-called. Another set of rules come into play where there is an ambiguity in the document. But as these latter rules depend upon the existence of some ambiguity it is clear that when the words of a document are free from ambiguity and external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of the words, extrinsic evidence for the purpose of explaining the document according to the supposed intention of the parties is inadmissible(3) (section 94, post). There is in fact in such cases nothing to explain. The document must be construed according to the plain common meaning of its terms, and words may not be imported into it from any conjectural view of its intention which would have the effect of materially changing those terms. The language used must be given effect to.(4) There may, however, be an ambiguity which again may be either patent or latent. In the case of a patent ambiguity no extrinsic evidence in explanation of the instrument will be admissible (section 93, post).(5) If, on the other hand, there be a latent ambiguity, extrinsic evidence will be admissible (sections 95—97, post).(6) When extrinsic evidence is thus admissible in explanation of latent ambiguities all forms of evidence, including declarations of intention by the author of the instrument,(7) will be receivable.

So the conduct and acts of, and course of dealing between, the parties will be admissible in aid of the interpretation of documents the meaning of which is doubtful.(8) In the case of Purmanandas Jeevandas(9) the admissibility of this form of evidence was observed upon as follows:—"The authorities in favour of interpreting the lease by the acts of the parties are summed up in Broom's Legal Maxims (3rd edition, 608), under the title "Contemporanea expositio est optimæ et fortissima in lege." The rule is that ambiguous words may be properly construed by the aid of the acts of the parties. See Doe d. Pearson v. Res.(10) per Tindal, C. J., and Chapman v. Bluck,(11) per Park, J. The widest

---

(1) Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 541, s. 98, post.
(2) See notes to s. 92, prov. (6), post.
(3) See s. 94, post; Shore v. Wilson, 5 Scott, N. R., 598, 1037.
(4) Musammat Bhagbutti v. Chowdhry Rhalal, 2 I. A., 256 (1875); Shore v. Wilson, supra.
(5) See s. 93, post.
(6) See ss. 96—97, post.
(7) See 68, post.
(8) In re Purmanandas Jeevandas, 7 B., 109, 118 (1892); Mohan Lall v. Urnopporna Doses, 9 W. R., 566, 569 (1868) [evidence as to the mode in which the parties had dealt with the property in dispute]; Baboo Ramchudda v. Ranee Kunwar, W. R., 1864, Act X, 22, 24 [evidence of subsequent dealings between the parties]; Baboo Dhuppat v. Sheikh Jorahar, 8 W. R., 152, 153 (1867); see s. 8, ante, p. 45 and cases cited in note 10 on that page, and in Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 541, 542; but see also Ford v. Yates, 2 M. & Gr., 549; Lockett v. Nicoll, Exch., 30; Jafar Hussain v. Rajnait Singh, 21 A., 4 (1890) [in construing a mortgage-deed the terms of which are of a doubtful character, the intention of the parties as deducible from their conduct at the time of execution and other contemporaneous documents executed between them is to be looked at]. In a recent case before the Privy Council in which the document was unambiguous the committee held that the legal effect of an unambiguous document such as that in suit could not be controlled or altered by evidence of the subsequent conduct of the parties. Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain, 30 C., 738 (1903).
(9) 7 B., 109, 118 (1892).
(10) 8 Bing., 178, 181. [* Upon the general and leading principle in such cases, we are to look to the words of the instrument and to the acts of the parties to ascertain what their intention was; if the words of the instrument be ambiguous, we may call in aid the acts done under it as a clue to the intention of the parties.]
(11) 4 Bing. N. C., 187, 190. [* The intention of the parties must be collected from the language...
effect given to the acts of parties as assisting the interpretation of written instruments is in the case of ancient grants and charters, specially in determining what passed thereunder, a matter naturally hard to discover from the instrument itself after the lapse of many years. The case of Waterpark v. Fennel,(1) seems to be the one which goes furthest in this direction in which case the word "'village" was held to include "a mountain." On the other hand, the rule is plain that the acts of parties cannot be allowed to affect the construction of written instrument if that construction be in itself unambiguous; the cases of Moore v. Foley(2) and Igulden v. May(3) already cited on the first point reserved are also authorities on this point.(4)

The Indian Succession Act in Part XI contains similar provisions to some of those in this Chapter which it is declared (section 100) is not to be taken to affect any of the provisions of the former Act relating to the construction of will.(5)

91. When the terms of a contract, or of a grant(6) or of any other disposition of property, have been reduced to the form of a document, and in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence (7) shall be given in proof of the terms of such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or of such matter, except the document itself, or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible under the provisions hereinbefore contained.

Exception 1.—When a public officer is required by law to be appointed in writing, and when it is shown that any particular person has acted as such officer, the writing by which he is appointed need not be proved.

Exception 2.—Wills admitted to probate in British India may be proved by the probate.

Explanation 1.—This section applies equally to cases in which the contracts, grants or dispositions of property of the instrument and may be elucidated by the conduct they have pursued: Morgan v. Bisell, 1 T. R., 735; Baxter v. Browne, 2 W. Bl., 673.]

(1) 7 H. L. Ca., 684.
(2) 6 Ves., 232.
(3) 9 Ves., 325, and 7 East., 237.
(4) In re Purnamadas Jeeeradas, 7 B., 109, 118 (1882). So in Bulathar Day v. Ram Narain, 7 C. W. N., 578 (1903), the Privy Council held that it would not be right to hold that the legal construction or legal effect of an unambiguous document, like the dharma in that case, could be controlled or altered by evidence of the subsequent conduct of the parties and that the case of Baboo Deorja v. Munsam Kutrum, 1 I. A., 55 (1873), was no authority for such a proposition.

(5) See ns. 93—104, post.
(6) In Somasundara Mudali v. Denvai Mudaliar, 27 M., 30 (1903), the question was referred to whether the word "'grant" in this section meant a grant of property only or whether it referred to other grants also in which latter case it was doubted whether the authority to adopt set up in that case could be proved.

(7) Evidence may, however, be taken where a Criminal Court finds that a confession or other statement of an accused person has not been recorded in manner prescribed—see Act V of 1888, s. 533, and post.

(8) These words in brackets in s. 91. Exception (2), were substituted for the original word by Act XVIII of 1872, s. 7. referred to are contained in one document, and to cases in which they are contained in more documents than one.\(^{(1)}\)

Explanation 2.—When there are more originals than one, one original only need be proved.\(^{(2)}\)

Explanation 3.—The statement, in any document whatever, of a fact other than the facts referred to in this section, shall not preclude the admission of oral evidence as to the same fact.\(^{(3)}\)

Illustrations.

(a) If a contract be contained in several letters, all the letters in which it is contained must be proved.

(b) If a contract is contained in a bill-of-exchange, the bill-of-exchange must be proved.\(^{(4)}\)

(c) If a bill-of-exchange is drawn in a set of three, one only need be proved.

(d) A contract, in writing with B, for the delivery of indigo upon certain terms, The contract mentions the fact that B had paid A the price of other indigo contracted for verbally on another occasion.

Oral evidence is offered that no payment was made for the other indigo. The evidence is admissible.

(e) A gives B a receipt for money paid by B.

Oral evidence is offered of the payment.

The evidence is admissible.

Principle.—It is a cardinal rule of evidence, not one of technicality but of substances, which it is dangerous to depart from, that where written documents exist they shall be produced as being the best evidence of their own contents.\(^{(5)}\) In the cases mentioned in this section the writing itself (or secondary evidence of its contents) is not only the best but is the only admissible evidence of the matter which it contains. “It is likewise a general and most inflexible rule that wherever written instruments are appointed either by the requirements of the law, or by the compact of parties, to be the repositories and memorials of truth, any other evidence is excluded from being used either as a substitute for such instruments, or to contradict or alter them. This is a matter both of principle and policy; of principle, because such instruments are in their nature and origin entitled to a much higher degree of credit than parol evidence: of policy, because it would be attended with great mischief, if those instruments upon which men’s rights depended were liable to be impeached by loose collateral evidence. Where the terms of an agreement are reduced to writing, the document itself, being constituted by the parties as the expositor of their intentions, is the only instrument of evidence in respect of that agreement which the law will recognize, long as it exists for the purpose of evidence.”\(^{(6)}\) The very object for which writing is used is to perpetuate the memory of what is written down and so to furnish permanent proof of it. Unless the rule required the production of the document the benefit arising from a written record of past transactions would be lost.\(^{(7)}\) See Introduction, ante, and Notes, post.

---

\(^{(1)}\) See Illus. (a) & (b).

\(^{(2)}\) See Illus. (c).

\(^{(3)}\) See Illus. (d) & (e).

\(^{(4)}\) The Illustration does not prevent a plaintiff from resorting to his original consideration in cases of unstamped documents in a suit on the consideration where there is an independent admission of the loan. Krishnaji v. Rajmal, 24 B. 360, 364 (1899).

\(^{(5)}\) Disomoy Debi v. Roy Lachmiput, 7 I. A., 8, 16 (1879).

\(^{(7)}\) Steph. Introd., 171, 172, Steph. Dig., pp. 184, 185; Best, Ev., § 223.
The cases under the rule requiring the contents of a document to be proved by the document itself, if its production be possible, may be arranged in three classes:(1) the first class containing all writings, other than those contained in the second and third classes, material to the issue, the existence or contents of which are disputed.(2) This class is provided for by section 64, ante, which enacts that documents must be proved by primary evidence, except in the cases thereinafter mentioned.(3) The second and third classes are provided for by the present section. The second class contains those instruments which the parties themselves have put in writing; and the third, those instruments which the law requires to be in writing. As to the cases in which secondary evidence may be given, see sections 65, 66, ante.

When it is stated that oral testimony cannot be substituted for any writing included in either of the three classes abovementioned, a tacit exception must, in England, perhaps be made in favour of the parol admissions of a party and of his acts amounting to admissions, both of which species of evidence are always received as primary proof against himself, and those claiming under him although they relate to the contents of a deed or other instrument which are directly in issue in the causes.(4) On this point the Indian Evidence Act introduces a stricter rule, oral admissions of the contents of documents not being admissible as primary but only as secondary evidence.(5) Written admissions of the existence, condition or contents of a document are admissible under cl. (b), section 65, ante, without notice, proof of loss or the like; but they are only secondary and not primary evidence.(6) A witness may, however, give oral evidence of statement made by other persons about the contents of documents if such statements are in themselves relevant facts.(7) As to the taking of objection to the giving of evidence excluded by this section, see section 144, post.

In the first place, oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence of any contract, grant or other disposition of property, which the parties have put in writing. Here the written instrument may be regarded, in some measure as the ultimate fact to be proved, especially in the case of negotiable securities and in all cases of written contracts, the writing is tacitly considered by the parties themselves as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement.(8) In every country certain negotiations almost invariably take place before a contract is reduced to writing; and it is usual that the terms of the contract should, with more or less accuracy, be agreed on verbally before the written instrument embodying them is prepared. But when a contract has once been put in writing and signed by the parties the written instrument contains, and is, the only evidence of the contract, and the parties cannot give it the go-by, and fall back upon the original verbal agreement.(9) The

(1) Taylor Ev., § 398.
(2) Taylor Ev., § 399.
(3) v. ante, notes to s. 64; and Taylor, Ev., § 400.
(4) Taylor, Ev., §§ 410, 411.
(5) S. 32, ante.
(6) S. 65, cl. (b).
(7) S. 144, post.
(9) Jivandad Kishoreji v. Promaji Narsingdi, 7 Bom. H. C. R., O. C. J., 45, 95 (1879); Paksaddi v. Fincaynacnavar, 10 M., 94, 97 (1866).
written contract is not collateral, but is of the very essence of the transaction, (1) and consequently in all proceedings, civil or criminal, in which the issue depends in any degree upon the terms of a contract, the party, whose witnesses show that it was reduced to writing must either produce the instrument, or give some good reason for not doing so. Thus, for example, if, in an action to recover land against a tenant holding over, or in an action for the use and occupation of real estate, it should appear either on the direct or cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, that a written contract of tenancy has been signed, the plaintiff must either produce it, or account for its absence. (2) So, if a landlord were to bring an action against a tenant for rent and non-repair and it should appear that the parties had agreed by parol that the tenant should hold the premises on the terms contained in a former lease between the landlord and the stranger, a non-suit would be directed unless this lease could be produced. (3)

The same strictness in requiring the production of the written instrument has prevailed where the question at issue was simply what amount of rent was reserved by the landlord, (4) or who was the actual party to whom a demise had been made, (5) or under whom the tenant came into possession; (6) and in an action for the price of labour performed, where it appeared that the work was commenced under an agreement in writing but the plaintiff's claim was for extra work, it has been several times held that, in the absence of positive proof that the work in question was entirely separate from that included in that agreement, and was in fact done under a distinct order, the plaintiff was bound to produce the original document, since it might furnish evidence, not only that the items sought to be recovered were not included therein, but also of the rate of remuneration upon which the parties had agreed. (7) On like principles where an auctioneer delivered to a bidder, to whom lands were let by auction, a written paper signed by himself containing the terms of the lease the landlord was held bound, in an action for use and occupation, to produce this paper duly

---

(1) See R. v. Castle Morton, 3 B. & A., 569, per Abbeet, C. J. The principles on which a document is deemed part of the essence of any transaction, and consequently, the best or primary proof of it, are thus explained by Donat:—"The force of written proof consists in this: men agree to preserve by writing the remembrance of past events, of which they wish to create a memorial, either with a view of laying down a rule for their own guidance, or in order to have it in the instrument, a lasting proof of the truth of what is written. Thus contracts are written, in order to preserve the memorial of what the contracting parties have prescribed for each other to do, and to take for themselves a fixed and immutable law as to what has been agreed on. So testaments are written, in order to preserve the remembrance of what the party, who has a right to dispose of his property, has ordained concerning it, and thereby to lay down a rule the guidance of his heir and legatees. On the same principle are reduced into writing all sentences, judgments, edicts, ordinances and other matters, which either confer title, or have the force of law. The writing preserves uncharged for the matters entrusted to it, and expresses the intention of the parties by their own testimony. The truth of written acts is established by the acts themselves, that is, by the inspection of the originals."—See Donat's Civ. Law, L. 3 Tit. 6, § 2.

(3) Ib.; Turner v. Power, 7 B. & C., 625; M. & M., 131, S. C.

(4) Ib., § 402; R. v. Merthyr Tydfil, 1 B. & Ad., 29; Augustus v. Chaliris, 1 Ex. R., 280, where Alderson, B., observes: 'You may prove by parol the relation of landlord and tenant, but without the lease you cannot tell whether any rent was due.'

(6) Ib.; Doe v. Harvey, 8 Bing., 239; i M. & Sc., 374, S. C.

stamped as a memorandum of an agreement. (1) A deed of partition was executed among three brothers C, N & B, on the 19th March 1867, but was not registered. It recited that, some years previously to its date, a division of the family property, with the exception of three houses, had been effected, and it purported to divide these houses among the brothers. In a suit brought by C's widow for the recovery of the house which fell to C's share, it was held that, although the deed did not exclude secondary evidence of the partition of the family property previously divided, yet it affected to dispose of the three houses by way of partition made on the day of its execution and, therefore, secondary evidence of its contents was inadmissible by the terms of the present section. (2)

The fact, that in cases of this kind, the writing is in the possession of the adverse party, does not change its character; it is still the primary evidence of the contract; and its absence must be accounted for by notice to the other party to produce it, or in some other legal mode before secondary evidence of its contents can be received. (3)

It has been held, however, both in England (4) and in this country, (5) that if a plaintiff can establish a prima facie case without betraying the existence of written contract relating to the subject-matter of the action, he cannot be precluded from recovering by the defendant subsequently giving evidence that the agreement was reduced into writing; but the defendant, if he means to rely on a written contract, must produce it as part of his evidence, and, in the event of its turning out to be un stamped or insufficiently stamped, he must pay the duty and penalty. (6) When the plaintiff's case has been closed, the defendant is not to get rid of it by suggesting the existence of a writing which he is unable legally to produce, and on the subject of which he might have cross-examined the plaintiff's witnesses. In the case last cited, the facts were as follows:—The plaintiffs alleged that in 1866 the defendant's father had let land to their predecessor in title in perpetuity on fazendari tenure for building purposes, subject to a certain rent. They complained that the defendant sought to eject them, and they prayed for a declaration that they were entitled to the land in perpetuity subject only to payment of the yearly rent. In the event of its being held that they were not perpetual tenants, they prayed that the defendant might be ordered to pay them Rs. 7,000, the value of the buildings on the land. The plaintiffs made out a prima facie case without showing, or its being shown, that there was any agreement or lease. Before the case had concluded, however, a document was produced which was said to be a counterpart of the agreement of letting made in 1866. It was not registered, and was, therefore, inadmissible in evidence. It was not tendered, but it was shown to the defendant in cross-examination, and he denied that it was a genuine document. In this case it was held that, as the document was not referred to in the plaint, written statement or issues, and was not before the Court, the evidence should be looked at to ascertain the terms of the tenancy by which the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title held the property. (7)

---

(1) Ibid. Rambottom v. Morley, 2 M. & S., 445. See Rambottom v. Tynbridge, ib., 434. See also Hawkins v. Warr, 3 B. & C., 697, where Abbott, C. J., draws the distinction between paper signed by the parties or their agent, and those which are unsigned.

(2) Kochubaidin Gububchand v. Krishnabai- kom Babaji, 2 B., 635 (1877); see further as to unregistered documents, and as to un stamped documents, Appendix.

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 404.

(5) Yashuwobabai v. Ramchandra Tukaram, 18 B., 66, 74 (1893).

(6) And this even though a notice to produce the document has been served on the plaintiff. Taylor, Ev., § 404, and cases there cited.

(7) Yashuwobabai v. Ramchandra Tukaram, 18 B., 66, 74 (1893).
Moreover, where the written communication or agreement between the parties is collateral to the question in issue, it need not be produced. Thus, if during an employment under a written contract, a verbal order is given for separate work, the workman can perhaps recover from his employer the price of this work, without producing the original agreement provided he can show distinctly that the items for which he seeks remuneration, were not included therein; as, for instance, if it clearly appears, that whilst certain work was in progress in the inside of a house under a written agreement, a verbal order was given to execute some alterations or improvements on the outside.(1) So also the fact of the existence of a particular relationship may be shown by parol evidence, though the terms which govern such relationship appear to be in writing. The section only excludes other evidence of the terms of the document. Thus, if the fact of the occupation of land is alone in issue, without respect to the terms of the tenancy, this fact may be proved by any competent parol evidence, such as payment of rent, or the testimony of a witness who has seen the tenant occupy, notwithstanding it appears that the occupancy was under an agreement in writing:(2) and where a tenant holds lands under written rules, but the length of his term is agreed on orally, the landlord need not produce these rules in an action of trespass under a plea denying his possession, because such plea only renders it necessary for the plaintiff to prove the extent of the tenant's term, which, having been agreed to by parol, does not depend upon the written rule.(3) The fact of partnership may be proved by parol evidence of the acts of the parties without producing the deed.(4) and the fact that a party has agreed to sell goods on commission may be established by oral testimony, though the terms respecting the payment of the commission have been reduced into writing.(5)

Parol evidence will be admissible when the writing only amounted either to mere unaccepted proposals or to minutes capable of conveying no definite information to the Court, and could not by any sensible rule of interpretation, be construed as memoranda, which the parties themselves intended to operate as fit evidence of their several agreements.(6) Section 91 refers to cases where the contract has, by the intention of the parties, been reduced to writing.(7)

So where at the time of letting some premises to the defendant, the plaintiff had read the terms, from pencil minutes, and the defendant had acquiesced in these terms, but had not signed the minutes(8) and where, upon a like occasion a memorandum of agreement was drawn up by the landlord’s bailiff, the terms of which were read over, and assented to, by the tenant, who agreed to bring, a surety and sign the agreement on a future day, but omitted to do so ;(9) and where in order to avoid mistakes the terms upon which a house was let, were,

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 405; "Reg v. Moorhouse, 6 Bing., N. C., 662; s. c. 8 Scott, 106.

(4) Alderson v. Clay, 1 Stark, R., 406; per Lord Ellenborough.

(6) Taylor, Ev., § 406.

(7) Balbhadar Prasad v. Maharajah of Batta, 9 A., 351, 356 (1867); Jumna Das v. Srinath Roy, 17 C., 177. See cases cited in note to s. 92, post.

(8) Taylor, Ev., § 408; Trewhitt v. Lambert, 10 A. & E., 407; s. c. 3 P. & D., 678; Sel. Dunst v. Brown, 3 B. & C., 665; s. c., 5 D. & R., 582; and Bassell v. Bliccure, 3 M. & G., 119, where the Court held that written proposals made pending a negotiation for a tenancy might be admitted without a stamp as proving one step in the evidence of the contract.

(9) R.; Doe v. Cartwright, 3 B. & C., 326, see Hawkins v. Warr, 3 B. & C., 690; s. c. 5 D. & R., 512.
at the time of letting, reduced to writing by the lessor's agent, and signed by the wife of the lessee, in order to bind him; but the lessee himself was not present, and did not appear to have constituted the wife as his agent, or to have recognised her act further than by entering upon and occupying the premises; (1) and where lands were let by auction, and a written paper was delivered to the bidder by the auctioneer concerning the terms of the letting, but this paper was never signed either by the auctioneer or by the parties; (2) and where, on the occasion of hiring a servant the master and servant went to the chief constable's clerk, who, in their presence and by their direction, took down in writing the terms of the hiring but neither party signed the paper, nor did it appear to have been read to them; (3) and where the document in question was not a promissory note or bond or acknowledgment of debt but appeared to be nothing more than a mere memorandum or note drawn up between the parties as to a transaction which had just been settled between them; (4) in all these instances the Court held that parol evidence was admissible upon the grounds abovementioned.

On the same principle it has frequently been held that, where the action is not directly upon the agreement or non-performance of its terms, but is in tort for its conversion or detention or negligent loss, the plaintiff may give parol evidence descriptive of its identity, without giving notice to the defendant to produce the document itself; (5) and even though the defendant be willing to produce it without notice, the plaintiff is not bound to put it in, but may leave his adversary to do so, if he think fit, as part of his case. (6) For, as has been observed for the purpose of identification, no distinction can be drawn between written instruments and other articles, between trover for a promissory note and trover for a wagon and horses. (7)

The same rule prevails in criminal cases; and, therefore, if a person be indicted for stealing a bill or other written instrument, its identity may be proved by parol evidence, though no notice to produce it has been served on the prisoner or his agent. (8) If, however, the indictment be for forgery, and the forged instrument be in the hands of the prisoner, the prosecutor must serve him or his solicitor with a notice to produce it, before he can offer secondary evidence of its contents. (9)

The next class of cases in which oral evidence cannot be substituted for the writing are those in which there exists any instrument which the law requires to be in writing. The law having required that the evidence of the transaction should be in writing, no other proof can be substituted for that, so long as the writing, which is the best evidence, exists. (10) The words in this section in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document indicate this class, some of the chief instances of which in India are:

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 406; Ramabottom v. Turn-bridge, & M. & Sel., 434. See Ramabottom v. Morley, 2 M. & Sel., 445, cited Taylor, Ev., 402.
(3) R. v. Wrable, 2 A. & E., 514. See for other instances, Ingram v. Lea, 2 Camp., 521; Dalton v. Stark, 4 Esp., 163; Wilson v. Bowie, 1 C. & P., 8.
(4) Uditi Upadhis v. Bhawandin, 1 All. L. J.
483 (1904).
143; Read v. Gamble, 10 A. & Ev., 597; Ross v.
Bruce, 1 Day, 100; The People v. Holloway, 15
Johns., 90; M'Lean v. Hertzog, 6 Serg. & R., 164. Those cases overrule Coon v. Abraham,
1 Esp., 50.
(6) Whitehead v. Scott, 1 M. & Rot., 2 per Lord Tenterden.
(7) Jolly v. Taylor, 1 Camp., 143, per Sir J.
Mansfield.
(8) R. v. Aickeles, 1 Lea., 294, 297 n. s., 390
n. s.
(9) R. v. Haworth, 4 C. & P., 254; per Parks.
J., R. v. Fitzsimons, I. R., 4 C. L., 1. See Taylor, Ev., § 406.
(10) Taylor, Ev., § 399.
(11) See Field, Ev., 417, 418.
judicial proceedings the judgments and decrees in civil cases; (1) judgments and final orders of Criminal Court; (2) the depositions of witnesses in civil cases; (3) and in criminal trials, depositions; (4) confessions (5) and examination of accused persons. (6) The case of an informal deposition has not been specially provided for. (7) The Code of Criminal Procedure, however, has expressly provided for the taking of oral evidence of statements made by accused persons when the writing is informal. It provides that, if any Court before which a confession or other statement of an accused person recorded, or purporting to be recorded under section 164 or section 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code is tendered in evidence or has been received in evidence, finds that any of the provisions of either of such sections have not been complied with by the Magistrate recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded; and notwithstanding anything contained in section 91 of the Evidence Act, such statement shall be admitted, if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. (8) These provisions apply to Courts of Appeal, Reference and Revision. Section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code modifies, therefore, as regards confessions, section 91 of this Act. It does not, however, apply when no attempt at all has been made to conform to the provisions of sections 164 and 364 of the Code, (9) and though it was doubted whether, under the Code of 1882, it contemplated or provided for cases in which there had been not merely an omission to comply with the law, but an infraction of it, yet under the present section, as amended by the Code of 1898, it seems that omission to comply with any of the provisions of section 164 or section 364 would be remediable. (10) If a document framed under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code is inadmissible owing to a non-compliance with the provisions of the law, the Court must proceed under section 533, if the defects are curable by the provisions of that section. If they are not so cured, the document recording the confession is inadmissible and no other proof of the confession can be given. (11) When a confession is inadmissible under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, oral evidence to prove that such a confession was made or what the terms of that confession were, is also inadmissible by virtue of the terms of this section. (12) No similar provision is contained in the Codes of Criminal or Civil Procedure for the rectification of informally recorded depositions of witnesses. It is clear that when depositions are required by law to be recorded in writing no evidence may be given of the statements of the witnesses other than their recorded depositions or secondary evidence of the contents of depositions where secondary evidence is admissible. It is further submitted that, if depositions are informally recorded they are not admissible in evidence is excluded by the terms of this section. Thus a failure to comply with the provisions of sections 182, 183 of Act X of 1877 (Civil Procedure) in a judicial proceeding has been held to be an informality which rendered the deposition of an accused inadmissible in evidence on a charge of giving false evidence based on such deposition; and under the present section no other

(1) Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 200—206, 571—579.
(3) Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 200—206.
(5) ib. s. 164.
(6) ib. s. 364.
(7) Field, Ev., 418; see Taylor, Ev., § 400.
(10) Jai Narayan v. R., 17 C., 862, 871 (1890) doubted in Lalchand v. R., 18 C., 549 (1901); dissented from in R. v. Virem Babai, 21 B., 495 (1896); R. v. Rago, 23 B., 221, 225 (1898), in which it was said there was no ground for a nice distinction between omissions to comply with the law and infractions of it.
(12) R. v. Roi Ratan, 10 Bom. H. C. R., 166
evidence of such deposition was admissible. (1) But where the law either does not require the statements of witnesses to be reduced to writing, (2) or merely requires the substance of the evidence of witnesses, (3) or of witnesses and parties called as witnesses to be recorded; (4) in the first of these cases oral evidence of such statements would be clearly admissible as also upon principle in the second case, of such statements as had not been recorded, such evidence not being in either case excluded by the terms of the present section. (5) Section 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not make it obligatory upon a police-officer to reduce to writing any statements made to him during an investigation. Neither that section nor section 91 of this Act renders oral evidence of such statements inadmissible. (6) Previous conviction should, having regard to the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act and section 511 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Code, be proved by copies of judgments or extracts from judgments or by any other documentary evidence of the fact of such previous convictions. (7)

Acknowledgments extending the period of limitation must be made in writing signed by the party against whom the property or right is claimed or by some person through whom he derives title or liability. When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed; but oral evidence of its contents will not be received. (8) Although the Limitation Act so provides, still this last provision was not meant to exclude secondary evidence of the contents of the acknowledgment under section 65 of this Act, when a proper case for the reception of such evidence is made out. (9)

Agreements made without consideration; (10) contracts for reference to arbitration; (11) mortgages when the principal money secured is Rs. 100 or upwards; (12) leases of immoveable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rent must be in writing. (13) The Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II, C. 3) was introduced into India under the Charter of 1726, but was formerly only in force in the Presidency Towns, though it applied perhaps also to British-born subjects in the mofussil; (14) and it seems that within those towns it applied to European British subjects only. (15) But sections 1—14, 17 of that statute necessitating writing in certain cases has now been repealed by the Indian Contract Act. Gifts of immoveable property; (16) wills; (17) and trusts, of immoveable and (except in cases where (1775); R. v. Shireg, 1 B., 219 (1875); R. v. Viram, 9 M., 224, 232 (1886). (1)

R. v. Magadhe Goma, 6 C., 762 (1881); and see R. v. Mungul Das, 21 W. R., Cr., 28 (1875); but the failure of the Civil Court, in a case of perjury to make a memorandum of the evidence of the accused when examined before it does not vitiate the depositions, if the evidence itself was duly recorded in the language in which it was delivered in such Court. In the matter of Bodhare Lall, 9 W. R., Cr., 68 (1868).

(2) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 263.

(3) ib., ss. 264, 355.

(4) Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 178, 189.

(5) See ante, first para. of notes to s. 33 and see cases cited in Taylor, Ev., § 416.

(7) Tassin v. E., 5 C. W. N., 670 (1901); s. c. 28 C., 660.

(8) Act XV of 1877, s. 19 (Limitation).

(10) Act IX of 1872 (Contract), s. 25.

(11) Ib., s. 28, Exception (2).

(12) Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property) s. 59.

(13) ib., s. 107.

(14) Muttiya Pillai v. Western, 1 Mad. H. C., 27 (1882).

(16) Act IV of 1882, s. 122.

(17) Act X of 1865 (Indian Succession), s. 40, extended to Hindus, &c., by Act XXI of 1870. An exception exists in the case of privileged wills; see s. 53, 56. As to charitable bequests, v. ib., s. 105.
the ownership of the property is transferred to the trustee) of moveable property must also be in writing. (1)

First Exception is in accordance with the English rule on this point. Due appointment may fairly be presumed from acting in an official capacity, it being very unlikely that any one would intrude himself into a public situation, which he was not authorized to fill; or that if he wished, he would be allowed to do so. See p. 419 ante.

Wills admitted to probate in British India may be proved by the probate. Upon proof of the will a copy thereof under the seal of the Court is issued and the original will is retained. This copy which is called the probate is secondary evidence, but is made admissible by the terms of this section. The words in italics were substituted for "under the Indian succession Act" by the amending Act XVIII of 1872. It was held prior to this Act and subsequent to the passing of Act XXI of 1870 (Hindu Wills), that the effect of the Hindu Wills Act, which makes (among others) sections 180 and 242 of the succession Act (X of 1865) applicable to Hindus is to make the probate of the will of a Hindu evidence of the contents of the will against all persons interested thereunder. (2) The decision last cited turned upon the interpretation of the Acts abovementioned, and was contrary to the rule previously followed, according to which probate of the will of a Hindu was evidence only so far as a decree of the Court granting it would be, namely, between the parties and those privy to the suit in which the decree is made. (3) In the case of probate granted otherwise than under the above Acts, this rule would have continued to prevail, but for the alteration made by the amending Act which is indicated by the brackets. (4) Wills not admitted to probate in British India, such as English and Irish wills admitted to probate in England or Ireland, may be proved by the probate under the provisions of section 82, ante, or by any other means available in England and Ireland, and in this country by the terms of that section. Probate or letters may amongst other modes be proved in England by production of the document itself when the seal will be judicially noticed, or by a certified or examined copy of the Act, Book or Register. (5) The original will can under no circumstances be admitted in England to prove title to personal estate; (6) though after when required merely to prove a declaration by the testator or to construe the will. Probate is not only conclusive proof against all persons of the contents of the will, but also of its validity and of the legal character conferred upon the executor. (7)

See Illustrations (a) and (b). A contract or grant or other disposition of property may as well be executed by several as by one document, as in the familiar instance of a contract the terms of which are to be gathered from a

---

(1) Act II of 1882 (Trusts), s. 5.
(3) Sharob Bibe v. Baldeo Das, 1 B. L. R., 10, 24 (1877); and see Srimati Josibali v. SBhikshatnath Chatterjee, 2 B. L. R., 0. C. J., 1 (1866).
(4) Field, Ev., 421.
(5) See Taylor, Ev.; §§ 1588, 1590; Roxcane, N. P. Ev., 17, 118; Phibson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 499, 500–502, 14 & 16 Vic., C. 99, s. 14; by 20 & 21 Vic., C. 77, s. 22, all probates, letters of administration, orders, and other instruments and exemplifications and copies thereof respectively, purporting to be sealed with any seal of the Court of Probate, shall, in all parts of the United Kingdom, be received in evidence without further proof thereof.
(7) S. 41, ante, Whicker v. Hume, 7 H. L. C., 120, 124; Concha v. Concha, L. R., 11 App. Cas. 541; De Mora v. Concha, L. R., 29 Ch. D., 208; see Taylor, Ev., §§ 1759–1761; Phibson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 300–302; Roxcane, N. P., Ev., 201, 202; Coote’s Probate, 10th Ed., 352–359; Williams on Executors, 359, 555–577; 1902–1903. As to Probate of Wills lost or destroyed, see Act X of 1865, ss. 208, 209; the remarks on these sections in Field, Ev., 421; and Isbey Chambers v. Doyanam Debba, 8 C., 864 (1882); s. a., 11 C. L. R., 135. series of letters passing between the parties. (1) This section necessitates the production and proof of all the originals, except when secondary evidence is admissible, in which case secondary evidence of all the originals must be given.

A broker is often spoken of as a middleman or negotiator between two parties. He frequently acts as the agent of each. The engagement of a broker is like that of a proxy, a factor or agent, but with this difference that the broker being employed by persons who have opposite interests to manage, he is as it were agent for both the one and the other to negotiate the commerce or affair in which he concerns himself. Thus his agreement is twofold, and consists in being faithful to all the parties in the execution of what every one of them entrusts him with. But primarily he is deemed merely the agent of the party by whom he is originally employed. Thus to make the other side liable to pay him brokerage, it must be shown that he has been employed by such party to act for him, or that in the contract such party has agreed to pay the brokerage. (2) A broker, when he closes a negotiation as the common agent of both parties, usually enters it in his business-book and gives to each party a copy of the entry or a note or memorandum of the transaction. The note which he gives to the seller is called the sold note, and that which he gives to the buyer is called the bought note. (3)

It has generally been held that bought and sold notes, though not necessarily constituting the contract, do, as a general rule, constitute it. (4) But as pointed out by Erle, J., in Siewewright v. Archibald : (5) "The form of the instrument is strong to show that they were not intended to constitute a contract in writing, but to give information (6) from the agent to the principal of that which has been done on his behalf. The buyer is informed of his purchase, the seller of his sale and experience shows that they are varied as mercantile convenience may dictate. Both may be sent, or one or neither. They may both be signed by the broker or one by him or the other by the party. The names of both contractors may be mentioned, or one may be named and the other described. They may be sent at the time of the contract or after, or one at an interval after the other. No person acquainted with legal consequences would intend to make a written contract depend on separate instruments, sent at separate times or in various forms, neither party having seen both instruments. Such a process is contrary to the nature of contracting, of which the essence is interchange of consent at a certain time."

According to the law of England by which, under the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, a memorandum is required in certain cases of sale of goods, bought and sold notes have been held to constitute a sufficient memorandum under the statute, but the English decisions point out the distinction between making a contract and a memorandum showing that a contract has been made. (7) While there, as in this country, evidence is not ordinarily admissible to vary a contract reduced to writing, in the case of a memorandum, on the other hand, evidence is admissible to show that the document does not duly record the contract, or that no contract was in fact concluded. (8) Though (as pointed out in the Article to which reference has been made), it would always be open to a party to revoke an existing memorandum, if he sought to set up a new contract, he could successfully do so only on the basis of a new memorandum, for under the statute such new contract could not be proved by parol. evidence. Therefore a plaintiff who repudiated the bought and sold notes ran the chance of losing all rights under the contract, unless he had other documentary evidence of the description which would satisfy the Statute. Therefore in cases where material discrepancies have been discovered in the bought and sold notes the plaintiff's action has been dismissed for want of statutory evidence, the memorandum being, owing to the discrepancies, reduced to a nullity. In this country, however, the Statute of Frauds does not apply, and a contract for sale of goods can be proved by parol.(1) There may be a complete binding contract if the parties intend it, although bought and sold notes are to be exchanged or a mere formal contract is to be drawn up.(2)

When, however, bought and sold notes have been exchanged, it has been a question, upon which differing opinions have been expressed, whether they constitute the contract in writing and to what extent, if at all oral, evidence is admissible of the terms of the contract. In the case last mentioned the notes differed in their terms, and parol evidence of the contract actually entered into was allowed to be given. It has also been held that bought and sold notes unobjected to may be evidence of the contract, but they do not necessarily constitute the whole contract.(3) Subsequent decisions,(4) however, treated the bought and sold notes which were tendered in evidence in those cases as constituting the contract between the parties and so precluding oral evidence.
Recently the rule, after consideration of the Privy Council decision of Covie v.
Remfry,(5) has been stated by the Calcutta High Court to be that when parties who are merchants enter into a contract which is evidenced by bought and sold notes, the presumption is that they intend to be bound by the contract as expressed in the bought and sold notes, and by that only. This, however, is a presumption which may be rebutted by clear evidence.(6) The Privy Council, however, in disposing of the appeal in the last mentioned case, held that bought and sold notes do not constitute a contract of sale, but are mere evidence which may be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was a contract and what the terms of the contract were. The right of the parties does not depend either for constitution, or for evidence, on the bought and sold notes. The High Court upon the original trial had found that through fraud the notes did not express fully and correctly the arrangement actually made. In this finding of fact the Privy Council agreed. On the assumption, therefore, that the notes constituted the contract it would have been open to them to have held that oral evidence was admissible under s. 92, by reason of the fraud which had been proved. The Judicial Committee, however, in conformity with the opinion expressed that the notes do not constitute but are evidence merely of the contract, held that the case was not touched by section 92 of this Act.(7) Oral evidence being admissible as to the terms of the contract and the notes being regarded merely as a piece of evidence like any other, the only question is as to their value. This must depend upon the circumstances of each case. In some instances the notes

(2) Clarion v. Sheu, 9 B. L. R., 245, 252 (1872).
(5) 3 Moo. I. A., 448 (1848).
(6) Durges Prosad v. Bhajan Lal, 8 C. W. N., 492, 493, per Sale, J.
(7) Durges Prosad v. Bhajan Lal, 8 C. W. N., 480 (1904). The earlier Privy Council decision Covie v. Remfry, 3 Moo. I. A., 448 (1848), the correctness of which was questioned in Heyworth
v. Knight, 33 L. C. P., 298 (1884); ignored in Clarion v. Sheu, 9 B. L. R., 245 (1872); Ah Thain v. Mokhoria Chetty, 4 C. W. N., 353 (in which the facts were somewhat similar to those in Covie
v. Remfry), and in the latest Privy Council decision, though expressly referred to by the High Court, may be said to be no longer law. See Article referred to in 8 C. W. N., 480, 481, 482.
may be of little value. In other cases, particularly where they have been accepted and signed by the parties, they may be of great weight.

If the notes agree, are delivered and accepted without objection, such acceptance without objection is evidence of mutual assent to the terms of the notes, but the acceptance is to be inferred from the acceptance of the notes without objection, not from the signature to the writing, which would be proof if they constituted the contract in writing.(1)

In the undermentioned case(2) in which it was held that the contract was not concluded until bought and sold notes had been signed and that these notes were the only evidence of the contract, the buyer added some terms in Chinese as to quality which the seller did not either understand or notice, and the Privy Council held that the terms in Chinese were not to be disregarded. If the seller did not notice the addition made by the buyer, it only showed that the buyer and seller were not ad idem as to the quality, and the contract failed. If the buyer did notice or understand the addition and offered a different quality, the contract was voidable.

A contract intended to have been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, was entered by a mistake on the part of the broker, in the sold note, as having been made between a third person and the defendant. In a suit brought by the plaintiff, on the contract, oral evidence was given to show that the contract was really made between the plaintiff and the defendant. The Judge of the Small Cause Court found that the mistake did not mislead the defendant, and gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff contingent on the opinion of the High Court as to whether the mistake in the sold note was a bar to the plaintiff's suit for damages on the contract. It was held that there was a contract between the parties, for breach of which the plaintiff could sue for damages.(3)

Telegram.

In the case of telegrams, ordinarily the original message is the primary evidence; and only on proof excusing its production can its contents be shown aliunde: but on proof of its destruction or non-producibility (as where it is out of the jurisdiction) it can be proved by copy or parol. This is upon the grounds that the message as written, is the original, while that received is merely a copy and therefore without any of the essential elements of primary evidence. But it is evident that the rule cannot have a general application, as there are instances in which the message received must be deemed the original, and the rule relative thereto may be stated as follows: the original message, whatever it may be, must be produced, and in all cases where the company can be considered the agent of the sender, the message as received, in all questions between the sender and the person receiving it, is treated as the original. A telegram when duly proved, can, with an acceptance by letter, or even an oral acceptance constitute a contract, and so may a telegraphic answer, duly proved, to a written proposal. In such cases the contract rests on the telegram as received by the sendee and his answer as delivered to the company. It is scarcely necessary to add that when the original message is produced against a party it must be duly proved. The message must be shown to have been sent by the party from whom it purports to come, either by proof that it was in his handwriting, or that it was sent by his direction or authority.(4)

See Illustration (c), and the first and second Explanations to section 62, ante. Instances of the case dealt with by this Explanation are bill-of-exchange of which three are usually executed, called the first, second, and third of

---

(1) Steere v. Archibald, per Erle, J.
(2) Ah Thain v. Mookiah Cheetty, 4 C. W. N. 463 (1890).
(4) Wharton, Ev., § 76; Wood's Practice, Ev., pp. 2, 3; Gray on Communication by Telegraph, see 8th, Index.
exchange, and bills-of-lading which are usually in duplicate, and often in triplicate. When a document is executed in several parts, each part is primary evidence of the document.

When the writing does not fall within either of the three classes already described, no reason exists why it should exclude oral evidence. (1) "When the contents of any document are in question, either as a fact in issue or a subalternate principal fact, the document is the proper evidence of its own contents, and all derivative proof is rejected, until its absence is accounted for. But when a written instrument or document of any description is not the fact in issue, and is merely used as evidence to prove some fact, independent proof aliunde is receivable. Thus, although a receipt has been given for the payment of money, proof of the fact of payment may be made by any person who witnessed it. (2) So, although when the contents of a marriage-register are in issue verbal evidence of these contents is not receivable, yet the fact of the marriage (3) may be proved by the independent evidence of a person, who was present at it." (4) For though when a contract has been reduced into writing by the parties the writing is the best evidence of it, and must be produced; yet it is not in every case necessary, when the matter to be proved has been committed to writing, that the writing should be produced. If, for instance, the narrative of an extrinsic fact, such as a payment has been committed to writing, as in a receipt, it may yet be proved by parol evidence. So a verbal demand of goods is admissible in trover, though a demand in writing was made at the same time. And, as already observed, the fact of birth, baptism, marriage, death or burial may be proved by parol testimony, though a narrative or memorandum of these events may have been entered in registers which the law requires to be kept; for the existence or contents of these registers form no part of the fact to be proved, and the entry is no more than a collateral subsequent memorial of that fact, which may furnish a satisfactory and convenient mode of proof, but cannot exclude other evidence, though its non-production may afford grounds for scrutinising such evidence with more than ordinary care. (5) So also the fact of partnership may be proved by parol evidence of the acts of the parties without producing the deed. (6) So in accordance with these principles and their application in English cases, the third Explanation to this section enacts that "The statement, in any document whatever, of a fact other than the facts referred to in this section, shall not preclude the admission of oral evidence as to the same fact." In connection with this Explanation should be read Illustrations (2) and (e). In the first of these cases the incidental mention of what was done on another occasion had no reference to the terms of the contract embodied in writing. In the second case, the writing was merely a memorandum of the fact of payment, and oral evidence of the payment is therefore admissible. (7) The facts referred to in this section are the terms (a) of a contract, (b) of a grant, (c) of a disposition of property. If therefore

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 415.
(2) Ibid. (e); Somnath v. Cohen, 4 Rep. 213; Jacob v. Lindsay, 1 East, 480; Taylor, Ev., § 416; Senarei Das v. Bhikhor Das, 3 A., 177, 731 (1881). "It is a fact stated in a document, but it is not evidence of the terms of written contract;" Kedar Nath v. Bhurunisse Das, 24 W. R., 425 (1875); Jivandas Kashooji v. Pramji Nanabhui, 7 Bom. H. C. R., 63, 65 (1870); Dalip Singh v. Durga Prasad, 1 A., 442 (1877); Woman Ramchandra v. Dhirbhadra Khishooji, 4 Ev., 125, 137 (1870); Soorjoo Coomar v. Bhupoo Chunder, 24 W. R., 328 (1878); Vasubhoy v. Vencanamboobhoy, 3 M., 63, 86 (1881). The receipt itself is nothing more than a collateral or subsequent memorial of that fact affording a convenient and satisfactory mode of proof.
(3) So also in the case of birth, death, burial; Taylor, Ev., § 416, and cases there cited; and see Jivandas Kashooji v. Pramji Nanabhui, 7 Bom. H. C. R., 63 (1870), cited in 3, post.
(6) Alderson v. Clay, 1 Stark, R. 405.
(7) Field, Ev., 423.
a document relates exclusively to something other than any of these facts, as for instance, if it be a simple receipt or if, though it be a written contract, grant, or disposition, it relates to some other independent fact, as for instance, the payment of the consideration-money, the fact of payment may be proved orally as well by the writing. It is a fact independent of the contract. (1) Written receipts for payments are important, but by no means necessary as proof; nor are they of the nature of primary evidence, the loss of which must be shown in order to let in secondary. (2) Thus a receipt for sums paid in part-liquidation of a bond hypothecating immovable property must have been registered under the provisions of the 17th section of Act VIII of 1871 to render it admissible as evidence under section 49 of the said Act. It was, however, held in the case undermentioned that under Illustration (e) of this section, such payments might nevertheless be proved by parol evidence, which was not excluded owing to the inadmissibility of the documentary evidence. (3) When the contents of a pottah (lease) are in any way in question, it is necessary to prove them by the production of the document; where this is not the case, but the fact of occupation and possession of land be in issue without respect to the terms of the tenancy, this fact may be proved by parol evidence, and notwithstanding such occupation has been under a pottah, such pottah need not be produced. (4) The document called a Sodi Razinama (whereby a party relinquishes his right of occupancy of land in his possession to his landlord, and requests the latter to register the land in the name of another party to whom it has been sold), is not a document of the kind mentioned in section 91 of the Evidence Act, and therefore does not exclude the Courts from basing their findings upon other evidence, should any such exist. (5)

92. When the terms of any such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document have been proved according to the last section, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms: (6)

(1) Norton, Ev., 260.
(2) Ramnagar Koer v. Bharat Pershad, 4 C. W. N., 18 (1899).
(3) Dalip Singh v. Durpa Prasad, 1 A., 442 (1877); and see Waman Ramchandra v. Dhondiba Krishnaji, 4 B., 128, 137 (1879); Soorjoo Coomar v. Bhugwan Chunder, 24 W. R., 328 (1876); Venkaatgar v. Venkatarambapu, 3 M., 53, 58 (1881); Appramma Nayamulu v. Ramanna, 23 M., 92 (1899); as to the proof of receipts, see Surja Kant v. Ramnagar Skaha, 24, 291 (1890); as to tenant’s receipts as evidence of value, see Orick Chunder v. Sashi Shibnareshwar, 4 C. W. N., 631 (1900).
(5) Venkatare v. Sengoda, 2, M., 117 (1879).
(6) See Illustrations (a), (b), (c). As to strangers to the instrument, see n. 99, post. In England the rule also only applies to cases in which some civil right or liability is dependent upon the terms of a document in question. Steph. Dig., Art. 92. The Act makes no allusion to this. As to Contradiction, see Lavo v. Neal, 2 Starkie, 105; Abbott v. Hendricks, 1 & G., 784; Hrippin v. Senior, 8 M & W., 854.
As to variation, see Moses v. Moses, Cowper, 47; Rawson v. Walker, 1 Starkie, 361; Heere v. Graham, 3 Camp., 57; Morley v. Harford, 10 B. & C., 729.
As to Addition, see Miller v. Travers, 8 Bing., 254; Presto v. Mereau, 2 Wm. Bl., 1249; Meybank v. Brooks, 1 Brown Ch. Ca., 84; Meriv v. Anuelle, 3 Wm., 275; Ketrides Agramellak v. Shri Narayan, 9 C. W., 178, 187 (1904); Krishnamurmu v. Manaj, 28 M., 496 (1906).
As to subtraction, see Kaines v. Kniphof Skinner, 54; Weston v. Bemis, 1 Taunt., 118; Norton, Ev., 273, 274; Godfree, Ev., 363, 364; no absolute classification of the cases under these headings is, however, possible as the evidence tendered frequently has the effect of offending in several or all of these points.
Proviso 1.—Any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document, or which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto; such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party, want or failure of consideration, or mistake in fact or law.(1)

Proviso 2.—The existence of any separate oral agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms, may be proved. In considering whether or not this proviso applies, the Court shall have regard to the degree of formality of the document.(2)

Proviso 3.—The existence of any separate oral agreement, constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved.(3)

Proviso 4.—The existence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved, except in cases in which such contract, grant or disposition of property is by law required to be in writing, or has been registered according to the law in force for the time being as to the registration of documents.

Proviso 5.—Any usage or custom by which incidents not expressly mentioned in any contract are usually annexed to contracts of that description, may be proved:

Provided that the annexing of such incident would not be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the express terms of the contract.

Proviso 6.—Any fact may be proved which shows in what manner the language of a document is related to existing facts.

Illustrations.

(a) A policy of insurance is effected on goods "in ships from Calcutta to London." The goods are shipped in a particular ship which is lost. The fact that the particular ship was orally excepted from the policy cannot be proved.(4)

(b) A agrees absolutely in writing to pay B Rs. 1,000 on the first March, 1873. The fact that, at the same time, an oral agreement was made that the money should not be paid till the thirty-first March cannot be proved.(5)

(c) An estate called "the Rampur tea estate" is sold by a deed which contains a map of the property sold. The fact that land not included in the map had always been regarded as part of the estate and was meant to pass by the deed cannot be proved.(5)

(1) See Illustration (d), (e). Illustration (i) has been cited under this proviso (Field, Ev., 434); but it is not clear to what, if any, portion of the section it refers. The receipt is not a dispositive document at all [see s. 91, III. (e)] and it is only to such that the section applies.

(2) See Illustrations (f), (g), (h).

(3) See Illustrations (j), which should run "A & B make contract in writing and orally agree that it shall take effect, etc.," v. note to Illus. (f), post.

(4) Illustrate the section. See Ramjiban Sarowry v. Oghur Nath 2 C. W. N., 188 (1897).

(5) Illustrates the section. See Ramjiban Sarowry v. Oghur Nath, 2 C. W. N. 188 (1897).
(d) A enters into a written contract with B to work certain mines, the property of B, upon certain terms. A was induced to do so by a misrepresentation of B's as to their value. This fact may be proved. (1)

(e) A institutes a suit against B for the specific performance of a contract, and also prays that the contract may be reformed as to one of its provisions, as that provision was inserted in it by mistake. A may prove that such a mistake was made, as would by law entitle him to have the contract reformed. (2)

(f) A orders goods of B by a letter in which nothing is said as to the time of payment, and accepts the goods on delivery. B sues A for the price. A may show that the goods were supplied on credit for a term still unexpired. (3)

(g) A sells B a horse and verbally warrants him sound. A gives B a paper in these words: 'Bought of A a horse for Rs. 500.' B may prove the verbal warranty. (4)

(h) A hires lodgings of B, and gives B a card on which is written—"Room No. 25 a month." A may prove a verbal agreement, that these terms were to include partial board. A hires lodgings of B for a year, and a regularly stamped agreement drawn up by an attorney, is made between them. It is silent on the subject of board. A may not prove that board was included in the term verbally. (5)

(4) A applies to B for a debt due to A by sending a receipt for the money. B keeps the receipt and does not send the money. In a suit for the amount A may prove this. (6)

(j) A and B make a contract in writing to take effect upon the happening of a certain contingency. The writing is left with B, who sues A upon it. A may show the circumstances under which it was delivered. (7)

Principle.—When parties have deliberately put their mutual engagements into writing it is only reasonable to presume that they have introduced into the written instrument every material term and circumstance. Consequently other and extrinsic evidence will be rejected, because such evidence, while deserving far less credit than the writing itself, would invariably tend in many instances to substitute a new and different contract for the one really agreed upon. (8) See Note upon the principle of last section, as also the introduction, ante, and Notes, post. Unless the rule enacted by this section were observed, people would never know when a question was settled as they would be able to play fast and loose with their writings. Therefore if a document purports to be a final settlement of a previous negotiation, as in the case of a written contract, it must be treated as final and not varied by word of mouth. (9) And where the law expressly requires that a matter should be reduced to the form of a document the admission of extrinsic evidence would plainly render such requirement nugatory.

s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 91 (Evidence inadmissible to supersede document.)

s. 3 ("Fact.")

s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 13 (Facts relevant to prove custom.)

s. 3 ("Evidence.")

s. 99 (Who may give evidence in variance of a document.)

s. 100 (Saving of provisions of Succession Act.)

Steph. Dig., Art. 90; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1132—1158; Starkie, Ev., 665—678; Wharton, Ev., §§ 290—1071; Best, Ev., §§ 226—229; Wood’s Practice Ev., §§ 14—22; Greenleaf, Ev., Ch. XV; Roccio, N. P. Ev., 16—27.

(1) Illustrates, Proviso (1).

(2) Illustrates Proviso (2).

(3) See p. 467, note (1), ante.

(4) Illustrates Proviso (3); see p. 467 note (3)

(5) Taylor, Ev., §§ 1132, 1158; Greenleaf, Ev., § 276; Best, Ev., § 229; Banaga v. Sundardass Jagiwaladas, 1 B., 333, 338 (1876). [The apparent object of the section is the discouragement of perjury]; Starkie, Ev., 665.

(6) Steph. Introd., 172.
COMMENTS.

The law with regard to the admissibility of oral evidence to vary the terms of a written document is not governed by the English law of evidence but by this Act, and therefore oral evidence to be admissible must come under one or other of the provisions of this section.(1)

Extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to control the document, that is, to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract from its terms. Illustrations (a), (b) and (c) exemplify this proposition. It has been observed that this section which formulates the rule "is not quite free from ambiguity. The words "no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument, &c.," correspond with and have clear reference to the words 'contract, grant or other disposition of property' in the beginning of the section; but their application to 'any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document' is not so evident."(2) It does not seem, however, that there is really any such ambiguity as is suggested in the above quoted passage. The words "contract, grant or other disposition of property" in this section refer to the similar words in section 91, viz., "when the terms of a contract or of a grant or of any other disposition of property have been reduced to the form of a document"; that is, cases where such reduction is the act of the parties. The words "or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document" in this section refer to the similar words in section 91. But a matter so required to be reduced may be either a contract, grant or other disposition of property, or it may be a fact such as the evidence of a witness, the deposition recording which is neither a contract, grant or other disposition of property. The present section, in this respect unlike the last, deals only with those matters which the law requires to be reduced to the form of a document, and which are contracts, grants or other dispositions of property. This is indicated by the words "as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest," which are only applicable in the case of documents which are of a dispositive character. The subject-matter of this section, therefore, are contracts, grants and other dispositions of property, whether embodied in documents by consent of parties or by requirements of law, and therefore the words "no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument" have reference both to the words "contract, grant or other disposition of property" in the beginning of the section and to the words "any matter required by law, &c.," which follows them. The section deals with a different set of facts from those contained in section 91, and proceeds upon a different principle from that section. The reasons which preclude extrinsic evidence in substitution of the document are not the same as those which prohibit evidence varying the document when produced. Thus if the matter required by law to be reduced to writing be a disposition, oral evidence is admissible for the purpose of contradicting the writing. The presumption raised by section 80, ante, is not an irrebuttable one. Those reasons which preclude a person from giving evidence to vary a contract into which he has himself entered do not operate to prohibit evidence in variance of a document made by others as a record of his evidence.

Not only is the section limited in its operation to dispositive documents, but also to the parties thereto or their representatives in interest. Oral evidence to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract, from the terms of the writings is excluded only as between the parties to the instrument or their representatives in interest. Other persons may give evidence of any facts tending to show a contemporaneous agreement varying the terms of the document (section 99, (1) Harok Chand v. Bisunu Chandra, S. C. W. N. 101 (1908). (2) Field, Ev., 420. (3) Field, Ev., 426.
VARIANCE OF DOCUMENTS. [8. 92.]

A doubt has been expressed (1) whether the word "varying" must not be understood as restricted to "varying," in contradistinction to "contradicting," adding to or subtracting from, the terms of the document. There is, however, no reason to suppose that any such distinction which is certainly, unknown to English law, was intended. The word "varying," was without doubt employed as embracing (as in fact it does) both contradictions, additions and subtractions. (2)

Any person other than a party to a document or his representative may, notwithstanding the existence of any document, prove any fact which he is otherwise entitled to prove; and any party to any document or any representative in interest of any such party may prove any such fact for any purpose other than that of varying or altering any right or liability depending upon the terms of the document. (3) The section prohibits variance of the terms of the document. The rule is, therefore, not infringed by the introduction of parol evidence contradicting or explaining the instrument in some of its recitals of facts. So it may be shown that lands described in a deed as being in one parish were in fact situated in another. So also evidence is admissible to contradict the recital of the date of a deed. (4)

It is to be observed that the rule does not restrict the Court to the perusal of a single instrument or paper; for while the controversy is between the original parties of their representatives, all contemporaneous writings, relating to the same subject-matter, are admissible in evidence. (5) Nor does this section affect the proof of an independent agreement collateral to some other agreement reduced into writing. So in the aforementioned case (6) an agreement to pay Rs. 500 a month to a lessor in consideration of receiving from him a permanent lease of portions of his zemindari, which agreement was come to before, but reduced to writing after, the execution of the lease, was held to be not affected by this section, nor to require registration, where it was not inconsistent with the lease; its provisions formed no part of the holding under the lease, the payment bargainged for was no charge on the property, and it was not rent or recoverable as rent, but a mere personal obligation collateral to the lease.

To the general rule are annexed certain provisos. This rule is, however, not infringed by the admission of evidence in the cases dealt with by the provisos. These cases do not form exceptions to the general rule enacted by the

---

(1) Field, Ev., 426.
(2) Cunningham, Ev., 290. The view here taken has been recently approved in Pathammal v. Kalai Rawather, 27 M., 329, 331 (1908), in which it was held that oral evidence was admissible, the question not arising as between the parties to an instrument or their privies, so as to bring within the purview of s. 92.
(3) Steph. Dig., Art. 92; as to the restriction of the rule in England to civil cases, v. o., E. v. Adameon, 2 Moody, 296; and ante, p. 406, note (6).
(4) Greenleaf, Ev., § 255, and cases there cited; Sub Lai Chand v. Indrajit, 4 C. W. N. 485 (1900); s. o., 23 A., 370; Achutaramaraju v. Subbaraju, 25 M., 7, 11, 14 (1901); E. v. Scamondens, 3 T. R., 474; Doe v. Ford, 3 A. & E., 649; Gale v. Williamsen, 8 M. & W., 405; E. v. Wickham, 2 A. & E., 517; Hall v. Osmonoo 4 East., 477; and see Greenleaf, Ev., § 306. In the application of the rule it is necessary to bear in mind rather the principle in which it originated than its formal character; and this principle is simply to make the instruments the record of the transaction conclusive of its obligations. Accordingly the rule does not exclude contradictory evidence of mere formal matters such as dates, recitals and so forth not being of the essence of the transaction; since while presumable not to have been stated with formal precision, their correction would not trench on the obligatory portion of the instrument. Gooder, Ev. Evidence of matters not forming a term of obligations are not excluded, id.
(6) Subramaniah Chettiar v. Arumanchelam Chettiar, 25 M., 608 (1902); s. o., 4 B., L. R., 389.
section, but are merely instances to which attention is drawn as not coming within the purview of the rule at all.

This section was framed in accordance with the current of English decisions upon the question of how far parol evidence can be admitted to affect a written contract, and care must be taken in placing a construction upon it, not to create a precedent that would open a door to indiscriminate parol proof of transactions where documents have recorded what has passed between the parties. Where, however, an agreement is admitted by both plaintiff and defendant, and it is therefore not necessary to prove it, the section has no application.

Therefore evidence may be given—firstly, to show that there was really never any disposition at all; and secondly, to show that the document produced is not the whole disposition. The rule operates only when there has been in fact a disposition, the whole of which was meant by the intention of the parties to be embodied in the form of a document.

Firstly—Though evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, yet evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible. Notwithstanding a paper writing which purports to be a contract may be produced, it is still competent to the Court to find upon sufficient evidence that this writing is not really the contract. And the risk of groundless defence does not affect the rule itself, though it suggests caution in acting on it. In the case last cited, which was one for money lent with interest, there was an agreement touching the transaction of loan, although the rate of interest was still unsettled and under discussion. Before any final agreement and while the transaction was still incomplete, a promissory note was given not as a writing which expressed or was meant to express the final contract, but rather as a voucher, or a temporary and provisional security for the money pending the discussion respecting the rate of interest. It was held that if the note was then given and received, it should not be regarded as the contract between the parties, or as a written contract excluding other evidence of the true contract.

The Court cited the observations of Erle, J., in Pym v. Campbell, who said: "The point made is that this is a written agreement, absolute on the face of it and that evidence was admitted to show it was conditional; and if that had been so, it would have been wrong. But I am of opinion that the evidence shewed that in fact there was never any agreement at all. The production of a paper purporting to be an agreement by a party, with his signature attached, affords a strong presumption that it is his written agreement; and, if in fact he did sign the paper animo contra hendi, the terms contained in it are conclusive, and can not be varied by parol evidence: but in the present case the defence begins one step earlier: the parties met and expressly stated to each other that, though for convenience they would then sign the memorandum of the terms, yet they were not to sign it as an agreement until A was consulted: I grant the risk that such a defence may be set up without ground; and I agree that a jury should, therefore, always look on such a defence with suspicion; but, if it be proved that in fact the paper was signed with the express intention that it should not be an agreement, the other party cannot fix it as an agreement upon those so signing. The distinction in point of law is that evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in

---

(1) Cohen v. Bank of Bengal, 2 A., 602 (1860), per Straight, J.

(2) Sadpur Chunder v. Dhunpat Singh, 24 C., 328 (1888). See also Burfurji v. Muncherji, 6 B., 143; cited in notes to s. 08, ania.

writing is not admissible, but evidence to show that there is not an agreement as toll is admissible." And Lord Campbell said; "I agree. No addition to or variation from, the terms of a written contract can be made by parol; but in this case the defence was that there never was any agreement entered into.
Evidence to that effect was admissible; and the evidence given to this case was overwhelming. It was proved in the most satisfactory manner that before the paper was signed it was explained to the plaintiff that the defendants did not intend the paper to be an agreement till A had been consulted, and found to approve of the invention; and that the paper was signed before he was seen only because it was not convenient for the defendants to remain. The plaintiff assented to this, and received the writing on those terms. That being proved, there was no agreement." In the undermentioned case, the Privy Council held that the document which the plaintiff relied on as the contract between the parties contemplated only the making of a contract in the future when all the terms were left to be arranged. (1)

Secondly.—The rule laid down in section 92 applies only when, upon the face of it, the written instrument appears to contain the whole contract. It is not necessary that the whole agreement should be in writing, and if, upon the face of that part of it which is in writing, it appears that there are other conditions, oral or otherwise, which go to make up the entire contract, there is no reason why these conditions, if made orally, should not be orally proved. (2)
So where the plaintiffs sued for specific performance of an agreement in writing, which set forth, inter alia, that the defendants had agreed to sell it under "certain conditions as agreed upon;" and the defendants alleged that the written agreement did not contain the whole of the agreement between the parties and offered parol evidence in support of their contention; it was held that such evidence was admissible to show what was meant by the clause "certain conditions as agreed upon." (3)

Section 92 applies only to cases where the whole of the terms of the contract have been intended to be reduced into writing. This is shown by the words "adding to" which appear in this section. Were it not for these words it might have been said that this section only excluded evidence, contradicting, varying, adding or subtracting from such of the terms of a contract as had been reduced into writing. (4)

A written agreement cannot be added to, because when a writing takes place, all other matters which were open before, are considered as settled by the written agreement being entered into and executed. It is otherwise when parties agree that a written document shall be executed, not embodying all the terms by which they are to be bound, and when by express arrangement the written document does not embody all the terms, but only a part, parol evidence is admissible to show what was the entire agreement between the parties. (5)

In Harris v. Rickett, (6) Pollock, C. B., says: "We are of opinion that the rule should be discharged, on the ground that the writing does not contain and was not intended to contain the entire obligation of the bankrupt. They have not found, nor does it appear to us, that the writing was intended to contain the whole agreement, and we are, therefore, of opinion that the rule relied upon by the plaintiffs only applies where the parties to an agreement reduce it to writing and agree or intend to agree that that writing shall be their agreement." And

(1) Maung Shaw v. Maung Tun, 9 C. W. N., 147 (1904), a. e., 32 C., 98.
(2) Curtis v. Brown, 6 C., 328, 337 (1800);
Greenleaf, Ev., § 294a.
(3) Bhosle v. Khattri v. Kaliprasad Agar-walla, 8 B. L. R., 36, 92 (1871).
(4) 28 L. J., Exch., 187, followed in Gudibindu
Ruthuk v. Kunamath Ammasu, 7 Mad. H. C. R., 180, 196, 199 (1872).
Bramwell, B., says: "The principle of the rule is that it must be assumed that the parties agreed that the written agreement should be the evidence of the contract. The difficulty is that in this case there was evidence that the parties do not agree that the written agreement should be the evidence of the contract."

The rule that verbal evidence is not admissible to vary or alter the terms of a written contract is not applicable when the parties did not intend that the writing should contain the whole agreement between them; and this may appear either by direct evidence or by the informality of the document. The rule is grounded upon this,—that the parties to the instrument must be presumed to have committed to writing all which they deemed necessary to give full expression to their meaning. Where that appears not to have been their intention the rule is not applicable. (1) So where a defendant gave a verbal warranty of a horse which the plaintiff thereupon bought and paid for and the defendant then gave him the following memorandum:—"Bought of G. P., a horse for the sum of £7-2-6—G. P.;" it was held that parol evidence might be given of the warranty, the Court considering that the paper was meant merely as a memorandum of the transaction or an informal receipt for the money and not as containing the terms of the contract itself. (2) Therefore, as in such cases oral evidence of the contract will not be excluded by section 91, ante, (3) neither will the terms of the present section constitute a bar to its admission. Oral evidence may be given to show that a document does not and was not intended to contain the whole of the contract between the parties. But if that evidence when given shows that the document or documents do contain the whole contract, evidence to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract from its terms will be excluded, and the intention of the parties will be gathered from a construction of the document or documents only. (4) In the abovementioned cases oral evidence may be given. But there is also a third case which is distinguishable from the last, viz., that dealt with by the second Proviso where there is a principal contract in writing and a separate collateral oral agreement as to a matter on which the document is silent and which is not inconsistent with its terms, in which case evidence of such agreement may be given under the terms of the Proviso mentioned.

Oral evidence is also admissible to show the moment of time at which a document becomes a contract and to show, not that which was agreed to, but what was the condition of the paper when the parties agreed that it should be an agreement between them. (6)

The section says "no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted." There has been very considerable discussion on the question whether its terms, therefore, do or do not exclude evidence of conduct where such conduct is relevant. It does not, it has been held, necessarily follow from this section that subsequent conduct and surrounding circumstances may not be given in evidence for the purpose of showing in certain circumstances the real nature of the transaction, as for instance that what on the face of it is a

Evidence of conduct.

(1) "Babacu Lall v. Kaminee Soondaree, 14 W. R., 219 (1870).
(3) See ante, n. 91, second para. of notes to section.
(4) Cohen v. Sutherland, 17 C., 919, 922 (1890); Harris v. Richett, 4 H. & N., 1, followed in Kesh- manth Chesterje v. Chundy Churn, 5 W. R., 68, 73 (1886), and Guddalw Butha v. Kumamtar Arumuga, 7 Mad., H. C. R., 189, 198, 199 (1872) supra. [Where it is shown that a written agreement, does not contain and was not intended to contain, the whole agreement between the parties, the rule that parol evidence is not admissible to add to a written agreement has no application.]
(5) See Cutts v. Brown, 6 C., at p. 338, where evidence was admitted though the case was held by Garth, C. J., not to come within the terms of Proviso (2).
(6) Stewart v. Riddoway, 9 L. R., 9 C. P., 311.
conveyance is in reality a mortgage.(1) There have been a large number of decisions in India in which the admissibility of such evidence has come in question with reference to the question whether evidence can be given to show that what purports to be an out-and-out conveyance was in reality a mortgage only. But it is not only in cases of mortgage that the Courts have this case distinction between parol evidence of a transaction and evidence of what before indicating such a transaction and while compelled by law to defendants did has not felt itself precluded from admitting, and acting upon, and found though, (2) as already observed, the illustration of this distinction is not be found in cases relating to mortgage.(3)

The matter was at an early date, the subject of co— using Full Bench in the case of Kasheenath Chatterjee v. Chundye, the Privy that case Peacock, C. J. (in whose opinion the majority of the contract concurred) said:—"I am of opinion that verbal evidence is not the future to vary or alter the terms of a written contract in cases in which no fraud or mistake, and in which the parties intend to express, upon the what their words import. If a man writes that he sells also contract. It is the writing which he executes to express and convey the mearif, upon the intends to sell absolutely he cannot by mere verbal evidence show other con—time of the agreement both parties intended that their contract s, there is no such as their written words express, but that which they express, words to be an absolute sale should be a mortgage. It is said, (2) is no Statute of Frauds, and therefore parties may enter into verbal, to sell it for the sale of lands in the mofussil without writing. .......as alleged admitting that the law allows sales of land or other contracts relating to be made verbally, it does not follow that if the parties choose to reduce their contract into writing, they can bring forward mere verbal evidence to contradict the writing, and to show that they intended something different from that which the writing expresses and was intended to express. .......

If mere verbal evidence is admissible in this case to contradict a written contract, it would apply to every other case, and a man who writes 'one thousand' intending to write 'one thousand' might prove that by a verbal agreement the words 'one thousand' were not intended to mean 'one thousand' but only 'one hundred.' Nothing could be more dangerous than the admission of such evidence. Farther, if it be held that such evidence is admissible the whole effect of the new Registration Act would be frustrated. ............The plaintiff in the present case alleged that he took possession in 1266, and that in 1270, the defendant forcibly dispossessed him. The defendant says that the plaintiff never took possession and that he was never forcibly ousted. If possession did not accompany or follow the absolute bill-of-sale, it would be a strong fact to show that the transaction was a mortgage and not a sale; and it, therefore, becomes material to try whether the plaintiff was ever in possession and forcibly dispossessed as alleged by him, and whether, having reference to the amount of the alleged purchase—money, and to the value of the interest alleged to be sold and the acts and conduct of the parties, they intended to act upon the deed as an absolute sale or to treat the transaction as a mortgage only: for I am of opinion that parol evidence is admissible to explain the acts of the parties, as for example to show why the plaintiff did not take possession in pursuance of the bill-of-sale, if it be found that the defendant retained possession and that the plaintif

(1) Kasheenath v. Harirah Monokhjee, 9 C., 398, 399.
(2) See The Law of Mortgage in India by Rash Behary Ghose, 3rd Ed., p. 221, Shyama Charan v. Heru Mollah, 26 C., 160 (1866), which was the case of a lease.
(3) See the case of a lease.
never had possession as alleged by him, and never forcibly dispossessed.' (1) And Campbell, J., said that "When these acts of the parties are at variance with the written instrument, and especially when possession of the property has been transferred nor full value paid, then parol evidence to explain may be admitted. I would hold that, although parol evidence may contract admitted purely and simply to contradict the terms of a formal and published document duly acted on, it may, as between the original parties of a written one admitted in support of substantial acts and facts which negative writing, cut from the effect of the instrument." (2) The case was accordingly entrusted to the first Court to try the issue whether, having regard to "the and of the parties," and having reference to the amount of the committed to security and the real value of the interest alleged to be sold, to their mean-minded the deed to operate as an absolute sale and treated the rule is not, as an absolute sale or as a mortgage only, which the gave the subsequent cases follow the principles which had been laid sum of 87/2-6-- in one case it appears to have been considered that this discretion warranty, given by section 92 of this Act. (4) It has, however, been subsequently rand of as law on this point under the Act and in England is the same, the containing 8 in this section being that of the common law modified by equitable evidence of 1; (5) and that the present section made no change in the law as laid the terms of in evidence n 3. (6) the principles of which case evidence was approved and followed, and applied in numerous subsequent cases. (7) when give... Bench of the Calcutta High Court has also recently held that oral evidence of the acts and conduct of parties, such as oral evidence that possession remained with the vendor notwithstanding the execution of a deed of out-and-out sale is admissible to prove that the deed was intended to operate only as a mortgage. (8) (1) Kashee Nath v. Chundy Churn, 5 W. R., 68, 72 (1866).

(2) lb.
(3) See Madhub Chunder v. Gungodhar Samanta, 11 W. R., 460 (1869); s. c., 3 B. L. R., 86 ("I confess that I have some difficulty in comprehending the distinction between the admissibility of evidence of a verbal contract to vary a written instrument, and the admissibility of evidence showing the acts of the parties, which, after all, are only indications of such unexpressed unwritten agreement between the parties.") Per Jackson, J., commented upon in Baken Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, 4 B., 564, 600 (1880); Ram Doolal v. Radha Nath, 23 W. R., 167 (1875); Daisoomdooz Paik v. Kaim Taridar, 5 C., 300 (1879); s. c., 4 C. L. R., 419; Ram Dayal v. Heera Lall, 3 C. L. R., 386 (1873); (following Babnagar v. Sundaradas Jagajivandas, 1 B., 333 (1876) disapproved from in Hem Chunder v. Kally Churn, 9 C., 528 (1883).
(4) Daisoomdooz Paik v. Kaim Taridar, 5 C., 300, 302 (1879). See as to this case Khetidas Apparowalla v. Shub Narayan, 9 C. W. N., 178, at p. 183 (1904). The question has been recently raised again in Dattoo v. Ramchandra Totaram, 7 B. L. R., 669 (1906).
(6) See Hem Chunder v. Kally Churn, 9 C., 528 (1883), s. 92 of the Evidence Act lays down in terms the same rule as Sir Barnes Peacock then stated to be law), following the case in last note. and disapproving from Daisoomdooz Paik v. Kaim Taridar, supra; and followed in Kashee Nath v. Hurrikur Mookerjea, 9 C., 898 (1883).
(7) Phuloo Monie v. Grecch Chunder, 8 W. R., 516 (1867); Sheikh Parabdi v. Sheikh Mohamad, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 37 (1868); Nundo Lall v. Pronumno Moyea, 10 W. R., 333 (1873); Hasa Khand v. Jesha Premaji, 4 B., 609 n. (1878) s. c., 7 B., 73; Baken Lakshman v. Gobinda Kanji, 4 B., 594 (1880); Hem Chunder v. Kally Churn, 9 C., 528 (1883); s. c., 12 C. L. R., 287; Kashee Nath v. Hurrikur Mookerjea, 9 C., 898 (1883); Behary Lall v. Tej Narain, 10 C., 764 (1884); Fenkrainae v. Rediah, 13 M., 494 (1890); Rakken v. Alagappudayan, 16 M., 80 (1892); Koder Moiden v. Nupes, 21 C. (P. C.), 882 (1894); s. c., 21 I. A., 96. [See also Holmes v. Mathana, 9 Moo. P. C., 413 (1855); Multry Lall v. Anundo Chunder, 5 Moo. 1. A., 72 (1849). See Barton v. Bank of New South Wales, L. R., 15 App. Cas., 379; Balkishen Das v. Legge, 19 A., 434 (1897).
(8) Pranath Shaha v. Madhoo Sudan 25 C., 603 (1898); s. c., 2 C. W. N., 662; followed in Khankur...
The principle of this decision was applied to a lease in a subsequent case in which it was held that evidence of conduct, as for instance return of the lease, was admissible to prove that such return was due to an intention to make the lease inoperative. (1)

It is however a question whether these decisions are not affected by the recent decision of the Privy Council in Balkishen v. Legge. (2)

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the Privy Council decision in Balkishen v. Legge, (3) holding oral evidence of intention to be inadmissible, does not in any way affect the rule laid down in the last mentioned Full Bench case, but rather supports it, there being a distinction between mere oral evidence of intention and evidence as to the acts and conduct of the parties. (4)

A different view has recently been expressed by the Bombay High Court where it was said in answer to a contention that the circumstances required the Court to draw an inference that the document was not what it appeared to be. "We can only understand that as meaning that the document was accompanied by a contemporaneous oral agreement or statement of intention, which must be inferred from these several circumstances." This, it was held, was opposed to the Privy Council decision in cases in which a party was not entitled to rely on any of the provisos to the section.

The High Court of Madras have also taken a different view of the decision, holding that evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties is excluded thereby, on the ground that evidence of conduct could be relevant only by reason of the fact that the conduct leads to the inference that there was a contemporaneous oral agreement or statement between the parties that a deed was to operate in a different manner than it purports to operate; and that no exception is made in any of the provisos to this section or elsewhere in the Act in favour of evidence which consists of the acts and conduct of parties from which an inference might be drawn that there was an oral agreement to vary the terms of the contract or grant. (6)

The principle upon which evidence of conduct has been admitted is explained by Melvill, J., in his judgment in the case of Bakru Lakshman v. Gobinda Kanji (7) in which he held that:— "A party, whether plaintiff or defendant, who sets up a contemporaneous oral agreement as showing that an apparent sale was really a mortgage, should not be permitted to start (8) his case by

---

Abdur v. Ali Hafiz (28 C., 256 (1900)); Mahomed Ali v. Nazr Ali (28 C., 299 (1901)).

(2) 22 A., 149 (1899), s. c., 27 I. A., 58.

(3) 27 I. A., 58 (1899); s. c., 22 A., 149.

(4) Khanlar Abdur v. Ali Hafiz (28 C., 256 (1900)) (evidence admissible of repayment of money, return of deed, and acts of possession by vendor); s. c., 5 C. W. N., 351; Mahomed Ali v. Nazr Ali (28 C., 299 (1901)); evidence admissible of promise by vendee to restore the property on repayment in two or three years); *s. c., 5 C. W. N., 338; Second Appeal, Calcutta High Court, 666 of 1899.

(5) Dasso v. Rom Chandu Totaram, 7 Bom. L. R., 669 (1905).

(7) 4 B., 594 (1880), referring to this case Garth, C. J., said: "In the latter case there will be found an excellent judgment of Mr. Justice Melvill, in which he very clearly explains this principle of equity; and the mode and the circumstances under which it may be applied." Hem Chander v. Kally Churn, 9 C. at p. 333 (1888); see Behary Lall v. Tej Narain, 10 C., 764 (1884) at pp. 757, 768: "If we may say so, we entirely concur in these decisions (Bakru Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, supra; Hem Chander Soor v. Kally Churn) (Churn sups.), indeed the luminous and able judgment of Melvill, J., in the Bombay case cannot but commend itself to the mind of every lawyer," per Tottenham and Norris, JJ.; Bakru Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, has been followed in Hem Chander v. Kally Churn, supra; Behary Lall v. Tej Narain, supra; Kashi Nath v. Hurichur Mookerje, 9 C., 966 (1883); Venkatesh Ram v. Ruddick, 13 M., 494 (1880); Rakhee v. Alapapandygan, 10 M., 95 (1882).

(8) This rule prohibiting parol evidence in the first instance was applied in Behary Lall v. Tej Narain, 10 C., 764, 768 (1884); but dismissed offering direct parol evidence of such oral agreement, but if it appear clearly and unmistakably from the conduct of the parties, that the transaction has been treated by them as a mortgage, the Court will give effect to it as a mortgage, and not as a sale, and therefore, if it be necessary to ascertain what were the terms of the mortgage, the Court will for that purpose allow parol evidence to be given of the original oral agreement." (1)

"Although parol evidence will not be admitted to prove directly that simultaneously with the execution of a bill-of-sale there was an oral agreement by way of defeasance, yet the Court will look to the subsequent conduct of the parties, and, if it clearly appears from such conduct that the apparent vendee treated the transaction as one of mortgage, the Court will give effect to it as a mortgage and nothing more. It is a mistake to reject evidence of the conduct of parties to a written contract on the ground that it is only an indication of an unexpressed unwritten contract between them. Conduct is, no doubt, evidence of the agreement out of which it arose; but it may be very much more. In many cases it may amount to an estoppel. In such a case it is clear that evidence of conduct would be strictly admissible under section 115 of this Act. And even when conduct falls short of a legal estoppel, there is nothing in the Evidence Act which prevents it from being proved, or, when proved, from being taken into consideration. Courts of Equity in England will always allow a party (whether plaintiff or defendant) to show that an assignment of an estate, which is, on the face of it, an absolute conveyance, was intended to be nothing more than a security for debt, and they will not only look to the conduct of the parties, but will admit mere parol evidence to show or explain the real intention and purpose of the parties at the time. The exercise of this remedial jurisdiction is justified on two grounds, viz., part-performance and fraud." (2)

"The Courts in India are not precluded by the Indian Evidence Act from exercising a similar jurisdiction. The rule of estoppel, as laid down in section 115, covers the whole ground covered by the theory of part-performance. That section does not say that, in order to constitute an estoppel, the acts which a person has been induced to do, must have been acts prejudicial to his own interest. Its terms are sufficiently wide to meet the case of a grantor who has simply been allowed to remain in possession on the understanding and belief that the transaction was one of mortgage, and thus every instance of what the English Courts call "part-performance" would be brought within the Indian rule of estoppel. But the ground upon which this jurisdiction of the Courts in India may most safely be rested is the obligation which lies upon them to prevent fraud. (2) The Courts will not allow a rule or even a statute, which was passed to suppress fraud, to be the most effectual encouragement to it, and, accordingly, in England the Courts, for the purpose of preventing fraud, have in some cases set aside the common law rules of evidence and the Statute of FRAUDS. The Courts in India have the same justification in dealing similarly with the obstacle interposed by the Indian Evidence Act. In thus modifying the rules laid down by sections 91 and 92 of that Act, the Courts will not be acting in opposition to the intention of the Legislature, which, by enacting the provisions of section 26, clause (c) of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), has shown an intention to relax the rules of the Indian Evidence Act, so from in Rakken v. Alagappudayan, 16 M., 80, 83 (1892); v. post.

(1) As was observed by Wigram, V. C., in Daly v. Hamilton (5 Hare, 381), and also by Jusdel, M. R., in Ungle v. Ungle (L. R., 5 Ch. D., 1887), the conduct of the parties shows that some contract reconcilable with such conduct must have taken place between the litigant parties; and the Court is consequently compelled to admit evidence of the terms of the contract in order that justice may be done between the parties
v. post.

(2) See Bholamash Khatri v. Kaliprasad Agarwallah, 8 B. L. R., 89 (1871); Hem Chunder v.
Kally Churn, 9 C., 525, 533 (1883); Koshi Nath
v. Hurrikur Mondyree, 9 C., 988 (1883); Rakken
v. Alagappudayan, 16 M., 80, 81, 83 (1892). See
Field, Ev., 429.
as to bring them into conformity with the practice of the English Courts of Chancery.

Melvill, J., further intimated that in his opinion First Proviso to this section was large enough to let in evidence of such subsequent conduct as in the view of the Court of Equity would amount to fraud, and would entitle a grantor to a decree restraining the grantee from proceeding upon his document. If the admission of this evidence can be justified on the grounds that it is within the purview of the first Proviso of the section, there can clearly be no ground for the contention that it in any sense contravenes its terms. As already observed, this was the opinion of Melvill, J., in the case cited who said : (1) "Or they may think, and this is a view which is certainly capable of being supported by argument, that the case may be made to fall within the first Proviso to section 92, which admits parol evidence of fraud to invalidate a document. It is true that it was held in Banapa v. Sundardas (2) that the fraud mentioned in the section must be fraud contemporaneous with, and not subsequent to, the making of the document and the Court refused to entertain the argument, which is suggested by Mr. Dart in his work on Vendors and Purchasers (p. 354, 4th Ed.), that the refusal to fulfil a promise may be taken to show that the promise was originally fraudulent. But, admitting that such an argument can hardly be maintained, I must still say that the words of the first proviso to section 92 are very wide, and declare that any act of fraud may be proved which would entitle any person to any decree relating to a document, and it is not quite clear to me that these words are not large enough to let in evidence of such subsequent conduct as, in the view of a Court of Equity, would amount to fraud, and would entitle a grantor to a decree restraining the grantee from proceeding upon this document.

Similarly in the more recent case of Rakken v. Alagappudayan (3) Mutusami Ayyar, J., said : "I desire, however, to rest my decision on the ground stated by Lord Justice Turner in Lincoln v. Wright. (4) His lordship said in that case without reference to the question of part-performance on which I do not think it necessary to give any opinion, I think the parol evidence is admissible and is decisive upon the case. The principle of this Court is that the Statute of Frauds was not made to cover fraud. If the real agreement in this case was that as between the plaintiff and W, the transaction should be a mortgage, it is in the eye of this court a fraud to insist on the conveyance as being absolute, and parol evidence must be admissible to prove the fraud. Assuming the agreement proved, the principle of the old cases as to mortgages seems to me to be directly applicable. Here is an absolute conveyance when it was agreed that there should be a mortgage, and the conveyance is insisted on in fraud of the agreement. The question then, as I view it, is whether there was such an agreement as this bill alleges, and, upon the evidence, I am perfectly satisfied that there was. Besides, the agreement for the mortgage was only part of the entire transaction and the appellant cannot, as I conceive, adopt one part of the transaction and repudiate the other. Thus the ratio decidenti was that the conveyance formed only part of the real agreement, and that the oral agreement which gave a claim to equitable relief formed another part of the same transaction. Again, the ground for departing from the ordinary rule of evidence, was subsequent unconscionable conduct in taking advantage of that rule, and thereby endeavouring to mislead the Court into the belief that what was only an apparent sale but a real mortgage was a real sale and not a mortgage. The fraud referred to by the Lord Justice was not fraud practised at the time when the document was executed, but the advancement of a claim in fraud of the true intention or the real

(1) At p. 608.
(2) 1 B. 333 (1876) See also Cutte v. Brown, 6 C. 328, 333 (1880), The Law of Mortgages in India by Rash Behary Ghose, 3rd Ed., p. 221.
(3) 16 Mad. 80, 82, 83 (1892).
(4) 4 DeG. & J., 16; also referred to in Balkrishen Das v. Lappe, 19 A., 434 (1897).
agreement of the parties. It seems to me that section 92 of the Evidence Act, as observed in Venkatraman v. Reddiah (1) does not render evidence of the oral agreement inadmissible for, if the real agreement were proved, it would invalidate the document as a deed of absolute sale within the meaning of the first Proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act, and constitute a ground for a Court of Equity and good conscience giving effect to it only as a mortgage.” It has, however, been also held that the fraud referred to in this Proviso must be contemporaneous and not subsequent fraud, in which case if the proposition be correct this Proviso so far as it makes provision for relief against fraud, would scarcely be applicable (2) (v. post). The same learned Judge, however, upon the question whether or not a party should or should not be allowed to start his case with proof of a contemporaneous oral agreement expressed his dissent from the rule laid down in that respect in Bakru Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, saying: (3) “Nor do I see my way to adopting the rule that a party should not first start his case with proof of a contemporaneous oral agreement, and then confirm it by evidence of subsequent acts and conduct of the parties, but that he should prove the latter first and then proceed to prove the former. The subsequent acts and conduct are only indications of the contemporaneous oral agreement, and it is such agreement that is the real ground of equitable relief. Such rule involves in it the anomaly that, while indirect evidence of the true agreement is admissible, notwithstanding section 92, direct evidence of the same is not admissible. I do not, however, desire to be understood as saying that it would be safe to rely on the uncorroborated oral evidence of the contemporaneous oral agreement at variance with the terms of a document, but I think the absence of corroborative evidence in the shape of subsequent possession and conduct and other circumstances is an objection that ought to go to the credit due to the parol evidence and not to its admissibility. In the case before us, there was such corroborative evidence, though the weight due to it was a matter for the Judge to determine.

But in the absence of fraud or of conduct indicating fraud, parol evidence will be excluded. Thus where a document contains covenants for the performance of several things, and then one large sum is stated to be payable in the event of a breach, such sum must be considered a penalty; but when it is agreed that if a party do or refrain from doing any particular thing, a certain sum shall be paid by him, then the sum stated may be treated as liquidated damages. A bond for Rs. 20,000, which provided for payment of interest at the rate of Rs. 1-4 per cent. per month, contained the following clause: “We hereby promise and give in writing that we shall pay year by year a sum of Rs. 3,000 on account of the interest . . . . . . . And in case of our failing to pay year by year the said sum of Rs. 3,000, the same shall be considered as principal and thereon interest shall run also at the rate of Rs. 1-4 per cent. per month. In a suit on such bond the defendant sought to adduce evidence to show that after the execution of the bond the plaintiff stated that the clause was intended to operate as a penal clause, and that the conditions therein would not be enforced: but it was held that the clause was not penal, but in the nature of an agreement to pay liquidated damages, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount due on the bond with interest as agreed upon, and approving and distinguishing the cases of Bakru Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, (4) and Hem Chunder Soor v. Kaly Churn Das, (5) that the evidence tendered was not admissible. (6) (1) 13 M., 495.

(3) 16 M., at p. 83.
(4) 4 B., 594.
(5) 9 C., 528.
As this rule turns on the fraud which involved in the conduct of the person who is really a mortgagee, and who sets himself up as an absolute purchaser, the rule of admitting evidence for the purpose of defeating this fraud would not apply to an innocent purchaser, without notice of the existence of the mortgage who merely bought from a person who was in possession of title-deeds and was the ostensible owner of the property. (1)

In the decision of the Privy Council, already referred to (2) the Judicial Committee with reference to the admission by the High Court and Subordinate Judge of the evidence of a party to the suit and one of his witnesses for the purpose of proving the real intention of the parties observed as follows:—

"Their Lordships do not think that oral evidence of intention was admissible for the purpose of construing the deeds or ascertaining the intention of the parties. By section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act no evidence of any oral agreement or statement can be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest for the purpose of contradicting, varying or adding to or subtracting from its terms, subject to the exceptions contained in the several provisos. It was conceded that this case could not be brought within any of them. The cases in the English Court of Chancery, (3) which were referred to by the learned Judges in the High Court, have not, in the opinion of their Lordships, any application to the law of India as laid down in the Acts of the Indian Legislature; the case must therefore be decided on a consideration of the contents of the documents themselves with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as may be required to show in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts." (4) This decision was recently followed in a case where the defendants sought by oral evidence to prove the intention of the plaintiff that what was apparently a sale should operate as a gift, it being admitted that nothing could be elicited from the acts and conduct of the parties after the execution of the deed as their acts and conduct would be as consistent with their position as vendors as with that of donees. (5)

As already stated (6) it has been held by the Calcutta High Court and though not by the more recent decisions of the Bombay and Madras High Courts that this decision does not in any case exclude evidence of conduct. It does not, it is said, lay down any rule of exclusion of evidence over and above that contained in this section which excludes any oral agreement or statement, but not evidence of the acts and conduct of parties not being in the nature of an oral agreement or statement. The evidence which the Privy Council held inadmissible consisted of the statements of one of the parties to the transaction and of a pleader which went to show that at the time when the negotiations were going on, which led to the execution of the deeds under consideration, one of the parties said that he would not execute the deeds unless it was a mortgage and the other answered, and that answer was supported by the pleader that the two deeds which they were going to have would together amount to a mortgage only. That was adduced as evidence of the intention of the parties, and that evidence was considered inadmissible.

That evidence consisted only of oral statements of the parties, and therefore came directly within the scope of this section. There was no other evidence to the High Court. See also to this class of cases: Locke v. Bowstead, L. R., 1887, 1 Ch., 196.

of the acts and conduct of the parties adduced in that case which was considered by the Privy Council. (1) Such evidence of intention was obviously inadmissible. So evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement at the time of sale of immovable property that the property was to be reconveyed on repayment of the consideration-money has been held inadmissible. (2) There are, however, decisions both earlier and later than that of the Privy Council in which the Courts have in order to judge of the nature of a transaction had recourse to the acts and conduct of the parties and to the circumstances, as for example, where it was sought to show that an apparent sale was really a mortgage to the circumstance that the property which was worth Rs. 250 was apparently sold for Rs. 35. (3) Whilst, however, these cases decide that evidence of conduct is admissible, they leave untouched the question whether, when evidence of conduct has been admitted to show that a transaction is not what on its face it appears to be, oral evidence may then be given to show what were the terms of the real transaction. It has been held that such evidence may be given. (4) There are, however, two decisions of the Calcutta High Court which adopt or approximate to the views of the Madras and Bombay High Courts, as expressed in the most recent decisions. (5)

As already stated the position adopted by these High Courts following the decision of the Privy Council is this:—

The English Chancery cases are inapplicable. The question must be determined by the provisions of this section, which precludes evidence of any oral agreement or statement. Admittedly direct evidence of any statement of intention is excluded. But evidence of conduct is only relevant as leading to the inference of a contemporaneous oral agreement. (6) Subsequent acts and conduct are only indications of the contemporaneous oral agreement which agreement is the ground for relief. The admission of evidence of conduct involves the anomaly that while indirect evidence of the true agreement is admissible notwithstanding this section direct evidence of the same is not admissible. (7) If evidence of conduct does not establish an agreement other than that appearing on the face of the document, it is irrelevant. If it does, then it is excluded by this section which prohibits evidence whether direct or indirect subject to the terms of its Provisos.

The true rule would therefore appear to be that any evidence whether of conduct or otherwise tendered for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, etc., a document is excluded by the terms of this section unless it can be shown to be admissible under the Provisos (8) as on the ground of fraud. (9) If a case comes within the Provisos then any evidence of conduct or otherwise

---

(3) Second Appeal, Cat. H. Ct. 696 of 1899 (11th June 1901), cor. Amoor Ali and Pratt, JJ.
(4) v. anie, p. 477, Baksh Lakhman v. Govinda Kanji, 4 B., 594 (1880). In Bakken v. Alagappudayan, 16 M., 80, 82, 83 (1892); the Court disagreed with the limitation imposed in the former case preventing a party from starting his case by direct oral evidence of the alleged oral agreement.
(7) Bakken v. Alagappudayan, 16 M., 80 at p. 83 (1922).
(8) Dattoo v. Ramchandra, 7 Bom. L. R., 689, 670 (1905). This of course does not preclude a person from relying on the provisions of the section; but there is no case made here which would enable us to say that any of these provisions are applicable to the circumstances of the case. And in Bakken v. Legge, 22 A., 149 (1899) the Privy Council said it was conceded that the case could not be brought within any of the provisions.
(9) Rahman v. Elahi Bakhsh, 28 C., 70 (1900).
may be given. In short the same principles apply to the admission of evidence of conduct as indirect evidence of the existence of a contemporaneous oral agreement as to the admission of direct evidence. Neither are admissible unless the case can be shown to come within the Proviso to the section.

Persons who are not parties to a document or their representatives in interest may give evidence of any facts tending to show a contemporaneous agreement varying the terms of the document. Further the words in this section "between the parties to any such instrument," refer to the persons who on the one side and the other came together to make the contract or disposition of property, and would not apply to questions raised between parties on the one side only of a deed regarding their relations to each other under the contract. The words do not preclude one of two persons in whose favour a deed of sale purported to be executed, from proving by oral evidence in a suit by the one against the other, that the defendant was not a real but a nominal party only to the purchase, and that the plaintiff was solely entitled to the property to which it related. Thus M conveyed certain houses and premises to plaintiff and defendant jointly by a sale-deed. Plaintiff sued defendant for ejectment from the premises, alleging that he alone was the real purchaser, and that defendant was only nominally associated with him in the deed. Held that section 92 of the Evidence Act did not preclude plaintiff from showing by oral evidence that he alone was the real purchaser, notwithstanding that the defendant was described in the sale-deed as one of the two purchasers.

(2) The Court in this case said: "In the case before us, the 'parties' in this sense would be the vendor on the one part and the two vendees on the other part. 'As between' the vendor and themselves, neither of the vendees would be heard to plead, or would be allowed to offer oral evidence to show that both were not parties to the buying of his house. Neither vendees could resist the vendor's claim for the price, or for any other relief properly arising to him out of the contract, on a plea intended to show that one of the two was a nominal party only to the contract. Similarly one of the several obligors of a bond or bill-of-exchange would not be allowed in answer to the obligee's action on the joint instrument to maintain a plea that he was a surety only; except of course in a case where a money-lender made advances on the security of a joint and separate note, being well aware at the time that one of its makers was a surety only. In such a case, notwithstanding the form of the note, the surety has been allowed to plead, as an equitable defence, and prove, that he was known by the lender to be surety when the note was made, and that without his consent, the principal had time given to him by the lender.

(3) Such a case as this would fall probably under the first Proviso to section 92. But, on the other hand, we think that this section would not apply to questions, like that of the present case, raised by the parties on one side, inter se and not affecting the other party to the contract, touching their relations to each other in the transaction. The evidence in this respect would be offered not to vary, contradict, add to, or subtract from, the terms of the vendees' joint liability under the contract of purchase and sale from their vendor, but only to show as between themselves, the two vendees, to wit, which was the real purchaser, or rather whether M was not the trustee only of his brother G P. Analogously, in the case of the promisors of a joint note, it is competent to one of them, who has had to pay the entire debt, to show in variation of the terms of the note, as against a co-promisor, that the payer was a surety only, and proving this to get a decree for indemnification against his co-promisor.

(1) S. 99, post; see note to that section. See Pathmamal v. Syed Kala, 27 M., 329, 331 (1903), dissenting in this respect from Rahman v. Elahi Baksh, 28 C., 70 (1900).
(2) Muichand v. Madho Ram, 10 A., 421 (1888.)
(3) See the cases cited in note(3), p. 32;
(4) Muichand v. Madho Ram, supra, at pp.
See Illustrations (a), (b), (c). The following cases may also be taken together with those cited, ante, and post, in the Note to the second Proviso as illustrations of the meaning of these words. In a suit for ejectment in which the defendant pleaded that there was an oral agreement between him and his lessors that he should be entitled to a renewal of the lease for three years, it was held that evidence of this oral agreement was inadmissible as it was inconsistent with the terms of the second clause of his lease, which provided for the defendant giving up possession of the premises on receiving a month's notice to quit and which was as follows: "If you mean me to vacate at the completion of the term, you must give one month's notice. In accordance therewith I will vacate and give up possession to you." (1)

In the case next cited R. N., prior to his death, was a partner with defendants in the firm of N. C. and Co. He died on the 8th November 1884. On the 9th November 1885, his executors passed a release to the defendants, which recited that R.'s share in the firm and future business had ceased on his death; that the surviving partners had requested the executors to settle the account of their testator with the firm, and that after examining the books and taking accounts, etc., a balance of Rs. 8,996-11-0 was found due, on payment whereof the executors released the defendants from all claims in respect of the share and interest of R., &c. On the 7th April 1887, the executors assigned over to the plaintiff a one-anna share in the said firm, and the plaintiff, as assignee, brought this suit for a declaration of his right to the share and for an account. He alleged that there had been no accurate examination of the books at the time of the release; that the amount really due to the testator's estate by the firm had not been ascertained; and that it had been agreed on by the partners at the time of the release, that, in addition to the sum therein mentioned, the executors as representing the testator's estate should receive a one-anna share in the partnership. The defendants denied the right of the plaintiff, and contended that the interest of R and his estate in the partnership ceased at his death. They relied on the release, and denied any agreement to give the executors a share; and contended that, under section 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) no evidence could be given of the alleged agreement. For the plaintiff, it was contended, that the agreement as to the one-anna share was quite independent of the release. It was held, that evidence of the agreement that the executors should continue to have a one-anna share in the partnership was inadmissible as being inconsistent with the written release. By the release the executors of R released the partners from all claims whatever in respect of R's share, and the consideration for that release was stated in the document to be a lump sum, on payment of which under the writing, all claims arising out of the old partnership ceased and determined. The oral agreement added another term to the consideration for the release in respect of the past accounts, viz., the continuance of a one-anna share in the partnership. Such an agreement was not a purely collateral or additional agreement. It was an addition to the terms of a contract that had been reduced to writing, and was inconsistent with those terms. (2)

And where in a suit on a promissory note payable on demand the defendant admitted execution and consideration, but pleaded that it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant at the execution of the note that the plaintiff should not bring any suit to enforce payment of the instrument, until a certain event, and that as such event had not happened the suit was premature, it was held that such a defence as that raised could not be admitted under

---

(1) Bromham Pir v. Cursetji Sorabjee, 11 B., 644 (1887). See also terms in contravention and defaulseance of those of the instrument: Morari v. Motu Bbbee, 2 C., 598 (1876); Cohen v. Bank of Bengal, 2 A., 598, 602 (1880); Jadu Bai v. Bhobokaran Nundy, 17 C., 173, 186 (1889).

(2) Coojajj Kustomji v. Barjorji Kustomji, 21 B., 335 (1888).
this section, and the suit was accordingly decreed against the defendant. (1) Had this evidence been admitted it would have had the effect of contradicting the terms of the document. As the third proviso under which the evidence was tendered, is a proviso only, and not an exception to the section, it leaves the general rule enacted thereby in its integrity. The condition precedent to which proviso refers is a condition the subject-matter of which is dehors the contents of the instrument, and, therefore, if effect be given to this condition it cannot effect the terms of the document itself.

But in defence to a suit upon a hypothecation bond payable by instalments it was pleaded that, at the time of the execution of the bond, it was orally agreed that the obligee should, in lieu of instalments, have possession of part of the hypothecated property, until the amount due on the bond should have been liquidated from the rents; that, in accordance with this agreement the plaintiff obtained possession of the land; and that he had thus realized the whole of the amount due. It was held that the oral agreement was not one which detracted from, added to, or varied the original contract, but only provided for the means by which the instalments were to be paid, and that it was therefore admissible in evidence. (2) Where there was a registered partition-deed allotting the several joint properties among the different sharers and the partition-deed whilst it made special provisions for giving access to other portions was silent as to the right of access of a particular house fallen to the share of a particular sharer, the latter, it was held, could not set up an oral agreement to give him the right as the same was not admissible under this section. (3) In the undermentioned case (4) it was held that an alleged agreement to pay interest was either a part of the agreement embodied in the khata or it was a separate agreement. If the former, then under this section evidence of it was inadmissible. If it was a separate agreement, then it would not vitiate the agreement embodied in the khata which apart from this supposed oral agreement would not be open to objection under section 257A of the Civil Procedure Code.

In the absence of a contract to that effect an agent cannot personally enforce or be bound by contracts. (5) The agent is liable if, by the terms of the contract, he makes himself the contracting party. Evidence is not admissible to show that a person who appears on the face of a written contract to be personally a contracting party is not really a contracting party, and therefore not liable as such upon the contract. (6) When it appears upon a written contract that the agent is liable, he is not, unless he can show that there was a mistake and that the writing did not properly express the intention of the parties, (7) entitled to discharge himself by reason of his agency for the effect of the written instrument cannot be varied by oral evidence. (8) The Contract Act, moreover, provides that such a contract (that is a contract by the agent personally) shall be presumed to exist in three specified cases, unless the contrary appears, one of which cases is where the agent does not disclose the name of his principal. This probably means in the case of a written contract where the name of the principal is not disclosed on the face of the contract. The Con-

---

(1) Ramjiubun Seroujee v. Oghur Nath, 1 C. W. N., civil, 2 C. W. N., 188 (1897).
(2) Ram Baksh v. Durjan, 9 A., 392 (1887).
(5) Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230; in which the converse rule to that which obtains in England is laid down, see 6 C., 77; as to Negotiable Instruments, see s. 28, Act XXVI of 1881; as to evidence of usage, v. post. In Calcutta, where a vendor of goods deals with a banian, of an European firm, qua banian, he can only look to the latter for the price. Sheri Fazillah v. Ramkumar Mittra, 2 B. L. R., O. C. J., 7, 8, 9 (1886).
(6) Bepinbehari v. Ramchandra, 5 B. L. R., 234, 242, 243 (1870).
tract Act should be read subject to the provisions of this section, and if on the face of a written contract an agent appears to be personally liable, he cannot probably escape liability by the evidence of any disclosure of his principal's name apart from the document.(1) On the other hand it has been held that there is nothing to prevent the production of evidence to show that the person who is not liable upon the face of the contract is in fact chargeable under it.(2)

In the undermentioned case,(3) Jackson, J., speaking of benami transactions, observed: "In this very large class of cases it seems to me that the rule in regard to the admission of parol evidence to vary written contracts will not apply, and I conceive that the decisions, refusing to allow an agent, who enters into a written contract, in which he appears as principal, to offer parol evidence for the purpose of exonerating himself are wholly wide of the case before us."(4) In the case of principal and surety the rule is that the liability of two persons primarily liable is not affected by a private arrangement between them as to suretyship.(5) Oral evidence is not admissible to show that one of the executants of a note of hand signed it only as surety and that his liability was only to the extent standing as a surety for one month.(6)

In the undermentioned case the plaintiff sued to recover money which he had been compelled to pay in virtue of a mortgage executed by his two half-sisters and himself. His claim was based on the plea that, though appearing in the bond as a co-obligor, he was in reality merely a surety. Held that evidence was admissible to show that the plaintiff executed the mortgage-bond as a surety only.(7)

Where the contention was as to whether evidence could be given to show that a will was really intended for the benefit of a person other than the one mentioned therein, the Court stating that there was no authority in India upon the subject, held that in the absence of any such authority, it doubted whether it was open to adudge such evidence unless the Courts here acted upon the principle which, in cases of this class, is acted upon in the English Courts, namely, that a party setting up a secret trust must adduce evidence to prove that it was communicated by the testator to the universal legatee, and that the legatee agreed to accept the property bequeathed in the terms of trust.(8)

The rule of evidence embodied in the first paragraph of this section presupposes the validity of the transactions evidenced by the documents to which that rule is to be applied. If therefore that validity is impeached it is no defence to point to the apparent rectitude of the document and to claim protection from enquiry under a rule which exists against the contradiction and variance of the terms only of those instruments the validity of which is not in question. In such case the Court is not bound by the mere "paper expressions" of the parties and is not precluded from enquiry into the real nature of the transaction between them. Hence the declaration in this Proviso.(9) In order that an agreement may constitute a perfect contract it must have been made by the free

---

Notes:

2. Taylor, Ev., § 1153, 1154: Bepin Behari v. Ram Chandra 5 B. L. R., 443 (1870). [It is quite another matter whether evidence may be admitted to charge another person as the principal.]
4. And see Donville v. Kedar Nath Chucker-batty, 7 B. L. R., 720, 727 (1871): the benamidar is not an agent for either party but a stranger to the whole business, whose name only is used.
9. Benk Madhob v. Badasoock Kotsy, 9 C. W. N., 205, 308 (1905); n. c., 1 C. L. J., 156, 32 C. 437, per Woodruff, J. consent of parties (i.e., without coercion, undue influence, fraud, misrepresentation or mistake), competent to contract, for a lawful consideration and with a lawful object, and it must not be one which is expressly declared by the Contract Act to be void. (1) And in order to dispose of property by will a person must be of sound mind and not a minor. And a will or any part of a will, the making of which has been caused by fraud or coercion or by such imp ortunity as takes away the free agency of the testator is void. (2) Such being the conditions imposed by law as necessary to the existence of a perfect contract, grant, or other disposition of property, the want of such conditions as invalidate the document or entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto may clearly be proved without infringing the general rule enacted by the section. The rule enacted by this section is simply a canon of evidence. The instrument must be a valid one and the rule addresses itself accordingly only to the contradiction and so forth, of an instrument, the validity itself of which is not in question. Oral evidence is admissible under this proviso to prove any fact which would invalidate a document. Thus agreements by way of wager are void. (3) So, though the burden of proof that an agreement is a wager, that is, that it is not in substance what it appears to be in form, lies on the party so alleging, he may yet, for the purpose of discharging this burden, give oral evidence to that effect as by showing that an agreement in writing to sell is really only an agreement by way of wager, and thus contradicting the nature of a contract in writing. (4) So also any fact may be proved which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto. Thus A institutes a suit against B for the specific performance of a contract, and also prays that the contract may be reformed as to one of its provisions as that provision was inserted in it by mistake. A may prove that such a mistake was made as would by law entitle him to have the contract reformed. (5) Where neither party is in error as to the matters in respect of which they are contracting, but there is a mutual error in the reduction of the contract into writing, then the Court interferes for the purpose of reforming the contract and not of rescinding it. (6) This Proviso is not exhaustive that is merely confined to cases of fraud, intimidation, etc. As appears from the use of the word “such as” these are set out by way of illustration only. Any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document. (7)

A party will be allowed to give parol evidence when the execution of such document was obtained from him by fraud. (8) Thus in a suit by a purda lady to set aside a bill-of-sale execution of which by her had been obtained by collusion and fraud, the Court admitted parol evidence to show that the bill-of-sale was intended by her to operate only as a mortgage. (9) So a plaintiff sued to recover rent under a kabuliata. The defendant admitted execution of the kabuliata, but asserted that he executed it in order to enable the plaintiff to sell the land at (1) Act IX of 1872 (Contract), s. 10, as to competency to transfer property, see Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property), s. 7; the Chapters and sections of which Act relating to contracts are to be taken as part of the Indian Contract Act. (2) Act X of 1856 (Indian Succession), ss. 48, 48, extended to the wills of Hindus, &c., by Act XXI of 1870, s. 2. (3) Act IX of 1872 (Contract), s. 30. (4) Bhoor Desa v. Venkataeswara Rao, 17 M., 490 (1894); Anupchand Hemchand v. Champai Uparchand, 12 B., 585 (1888): both cases dissenting from Juggernath Sen v. Ram Dyal, 9 C., 791 (1883), which last decision is incorrect and has since been overruled [Beni Madhab v. Sadasook Kotary, 9 C. W. N., 305, F. B. (1905)] J., 155: 32 C., 437, and in which as was pointed out in the subsequent cases above cited the effect of Provisos (1) to s. 92 does not appear to have been considered. See also as to contracts forbidden by statute or common law. Kausarnath Chatterjee v. Chundy Charn, 5 W. R., 83, 71 (1866). (5) S. 92, Illustr. (c): Field, Ev., 422: Mahendra Nath v. Jogendra Nath, 2 C. W. N., 290 (1897), cited post. (6) Fry on Specific Performance, § 787. (7) Beni Madhab v. Sadasook Kotary, 9 C. W. N., 305 (1905), s.c., 32 C., 437, per Woodruff, J. (8) As to fraud, see Act IX of 1872, ss. 17, 14; 19; Kassim Mundle v. Sreemunty Noor, 1 W. R., 76 (1864). (9) Manohar Das v. Bhagabat Das, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 28 (1887).

a high price, the plaintiff agreeing to make over to him Rs. 282 out of the purchase-money and to obtain for him from the purchaser a mournasi pottah of the land, it never having been intended that any rent should be payable under the kabuliat. It was held that under this proviso evidence of the oral agreement was admissible for the purpose of proving the fraudulent character of the transaction between the parties.\(^1\)

There is a conflict of opinion on the point whether the fraud referred to in this Proviso is,\(^2\) or is not,\(^3\) contemporaneous fraud. In the first of the cases cited, it was held that the fraud referred to in this proviso must be contemporaneous and not subsequent fraud, the Court remarking that if it were otherwise, section 92 would be rendered nugatory.\(^4\) And in the case of Cutts v. Brown,\(^5\) Garth, C. J., observed with regard to the Proviso as follows:—"That proviso seems to me to apply to cases where evidence is admitted to show that a contract is void, or voidable, or subject to reformation, upon the ground of fraud, duress, illegality, &c., in its inception; and not to cases where the agreement being in itself perfectly valid and free from any taint of that kind, one of the parties attempts to make a fraudulent use of it as against the other. It will be found that the rule laid down in section 92 of the Evidence Act is taken almost verbatim from Taylor on Evidence (1st Edition), section 813; and the exceptions which follow in the several provisos are discussed in sections 816 to 841 of the same work. That being so, I think it is quite legitimate to refer to those sections, as one means of ascertaining the true meaning of the provisos. The substance of the proviso, and the examples showing the meaning of that proviso, are contained and explained in sections 816 to 819, and it will be found that they all relate to the reception of evidence for the purpose of invalidating contracts by reason either of fraud, illegality, &c., in their inception, or of some subsequent failure of consideration. For this reason, as well as from the language of the proviso itself, I think that it is not intended to apply to a case where the contract itself being valid, one of the parties wishes to make an improper use of it.\(^6\)"

On the other hand, it has been observed that the jurisdiction of the Courts to admit parol evidence of conduct of the parties to show that an apparent sale was really a mortgage rested on the basis of fraud, and that the words of the first proviso to section 92 were very wide and declared that any act of fraud might be proved which would entitle any person to any decree relating to a document, and that it was not clear that these words were not large enough to let in evidence of such subsequent conduct as in the view of a Court of Equity would amount to fraud and would entitle a grantor to a decree restraining the grantee from proceeding upon his document.

A person cannot both approbate and reprobate the same transaction. A party cannot show the true nature of a transaction by proof of fraud for his own relief and insist on its apparent character to prejudice his adversary. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shah Makanlal v. Srikrishna Singh,\(^7\) observed upon this principle as follows: "The rules of evidence, and the law of estoppel, forbid any addition to, or variation from, deeds or written contracts.

---

\(^1\) Kashi Nath v. Brindabgun Chuckerbati, 10 C., 649 (1884).

\(^3\) Baksh Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, 4 B., 594, 608 (1880); and see to same effect, Baksh v. Alagappudayan, 16 M., 80, 93 (1892); Cutts v. Brown, 6 C., 328, 335 (1880), per Pontifex, J.

\(^4\) Banapa v. Sundaradas Jogjivandas, supra, \(^5\) Cutts v. Brown, supra at p. 335, per Pontifex, J.

\(^6\) and see remarks in The Law of Mortgage in India by Rash Behary Ghose, 3rd Ed., p. 221.

\(^7\) Baksh Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, 4 B., 594, 608 (1880); and see to same effect, Baksh v. Alagappudayan, 16 M., 80, 93 (1892); Cutts v. Brown, 6 C., 328, 335 (1880), per Pontifex, J.

\(^8\) 2 B. L. R., P. C., 44, 48, 49 (1869); the rule was followed and applied in Lala Himmat v. Llewellyn, 11 C., 486, 490 (1886); v. post.
The law, however, furnishes exceptions to its own salutary protection; one of which is, when one party for the advancement of justice is permitted to remove the blind which hides the real transaction, as for instance, in cases of fraud, illegality, and redemption, in such cases the maxim applies, that a man cannot both affirm and disaffirm the same transaction, show its true nature for his own relief, and insist on its apparent character to prejudice his adversary. This principle, so just and reasonable in itself, and often expressed in the terms, that you cannot both approve and reprobate the same transaction, has been applied by their Lordships in this Committee to the consideration of Indian appeals, as one applicable also in the Courts of that country, which are to administer justice according to equity and good conscience. The maxim is founded not so much on any positive law, as on the broad and universally applicable principles of justice. The case of Forbes v. Ameroonessa Begum, furnishes one instance of this doctrine having been so applied, where it is said in the judgment of their Lordships: "The respondent cannot both repudiate the obligations of the lease, and claim the benefit of it."

When consent to an agreement is caused by coercion (and similarly by undue influence), the agreement is a contract voidable at the option of the party whose consent was so caused. "Coercion" and "Undue influence" are defined by sections 15 and 16 of the Indian Contract Act. A will or any part of a will, the making of which has been caused by fraud or coercion or by such importance as takes away the free agency of the testator is void. Parol evidence may be given to prove such coercion or undue influence, as for instance, that the writing sued upon was obtained by improper means such as duress.

The consideration or object of an agreement is unlawful if it is forbidden by law; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provision of any law; or is fraudulent; or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another; or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void. So also a bequest upon a condition the fulfilment of which would be contrary to law or to morality is void. Under this Proviso parol evidence may be given of illegality, namely, the unlawful character of the object or consideration of the agreement or condition in question, as for example to show that a contract not disclosing these was really made for objects forbidden either by statute or by common law.

Due execution of a document being necessary to make operative the disposition therein contained, want of such execution may be proved for the purpose of invalidating the document. In some cases as in the matter of wills, the law has enacted that their execution shall be governed by certain rules. It may be shown that those rules have not been followed and that thus the disposition has thereby become defective. So also it may be shown that the party was incapable of contracting by reason of some legal impediment such as minority, idiocy, insanity or intoxication. An agreement is not a contract, if made by a party who is not competent to contract.

Contractual competency is defined by the 11th and 12th sections of the Indian Contract Act.

---

1. 10 Moo. L. A., 356.
3. Act X of 1865 (Indian Succession), s. 43.
4. Taylor, Ev., s. 1137.
5. Act IX of 1872 (Contract), s. 23; as to consideration and object unlawful in part, see ss. 24, 57, 58, 59. Cf. definition of "illegal" in Penal Code, s. 43.
6. Act X of 1865, s. 114.
7. See Collins v. Blantyre, 2 Willa, 347; s. c., 1 Smith, L. C. Benson v. Nettsfield, 3 Mac. & C., 94; Taylor, Ev., § 1137; 1 Smith, L. C. (Note to Collins v. Blantyre), and cases there cited. Hill v. Clarke, 1 All. L. J., 632 (1904), s. c., 27 L., 286 [the Court will take notice of illegality even though not pleaded.]
8. Act X of 1865 (Indian Succession), Part VIII, extended to Hindus by Act XXI of 1870, a. 2, Part IX.
10. See ib., § 1137.
An agreement made without consideration is void, unless it is made on account of natural love and affection in writing and registered, or is a promise to compensate for something done, or is a promise to pay a debt barred by the Law of Limitation. (1) It was held long prior to this Act that the statement in a document that the consideration-money was paid is not of itself conclusive evidence of such payment and may be rebutted by evidence of non-payment. (2) So also this section prevents the admission of oral evidence for the purpose of contradicting or varying the terms of a contract, but does not prevent a party to a contract from showing that there was no consideration, or that the consideration was different from that described in the contract. Where, however, a deed of sale described the consideration to be Rs. 100 in ready cash received, but the evidence showed that the consideration was an old bond for Rs. 63-12-0 and Rs. 36-4-0 in cash, it was held that there was no real variance between the statement in the deed and the evidence as to consideration, having regard to the fact that it is customary in India, when a bond is given wholly or partially in consideration of an existing debt to describe the consideration as being ‘ready money received.’ (3) So also a deed of putova contained a recital of the payment of the sum of Rs. 2,000 as bonus to the plaintiff by the defendant, the mode of payment being stated to be in cash in one lump sum. The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 1,850, alleging that only Rs. 150 had been paid and not Rs. 2,000 as recited in the putova. The defendant admitted that Rs. 50 was due and as to the remaining Rs. 1,000 alleged that, at the time of the transaction, it was agreed that the sum of Rs. 1,000 was to be retained by him on account of a debt due by one of the plaintiff’s relations to him. The plaintiff objected that the evidence of the agreement set up by the defendant was inadmissible. But it was held, that, insasmuch as it were open to the plaintiff under the first proviso of section 92 of the Evidence Act to prove by oral evidence that the whole of the consideration-money had not been paid, it was equally competent to the defendant, in answer to such case, to adduce evidence to prove the true nature of the contract, and that the consideration was different from that stated in the contract. It was held, also, that the plea of the defendant substantially was that, although the consideration was fixed at Rs. 2,000, there was a separate oral agreement to the effect that out of that sum the plaintiff was to refund Rs. 1,000 on account of the debt due from his relative and that on this ground the oral evidence tendered was admissible under the second proviso of section 92 of the Act (v. post), the stipulation as to the refund of Rs. 1,000 not being inconsistent with the recital as to the consideration in the contract. (4) Under this proviso it may be shown that an acceptor of a bill never had any consideration for it and that he accepted it for the accommodation of the drawer or some other party. (5) Section 92 will not debar a party to a contract in writing from showing, notwithstanding the recitals in the deed, that the consideration specified in the deed was not in fact paid as therein recited, but was agreed to be paid in a different manner. (6) The Privy Council have in a recent decision held that it is a settled law that notwithstanding an admission in a sale-deed, that the consideration has been

1. Act IX of 1872 (Contract), s. 25.
2. Chowdhry Deb v. Chowdhry Doulal, 3 Man. I. A., 347 (1844); and see Shaikh Walee v. Shaikh Kumar, 7 W. R., 428 (1867); Dookha Thakoor v. Ram Lall, 7 W. R., 408 (1867); the cases of Massammatt Ramtee v. Shik Dayal, 7 W. R., 354 (1867); and Massammatt Ram v. Biken Dayal, 8 W. R., 339 (1867) are no longer law. See s. 115, post.
3. Hukum Chand v. Hirala, 3 B., 160 (1876); see also Vasudev Bhatlu v. Narasamma, 5 M., 6, 8 (1882); [the provisions of s. 92 do not prohibit the disproof of a recital in a contract as to the consideration that has passed by showing what the actual consideration was something different to that alleged] Kudora v. Subhendu, 11 M., 213, 215 (1887). (4) Lala Himmat v. Loeckelen, 11 C., 480.
received, it is open to the vendor to prove that no consideration has been actually paid. The Evidence Act does not say that no statement of fact in a written instrument may be contradicted, but the terms of the contract may not be varied, etc. So where the contract was to sell for Rs. 30,000 which was stated in the deed to have been received, it was held competent for the vendor without infringing any provision of the Act, to prove a collateral agreement that the purchase-money should remain in the hands of the vendee for the purposes and subject to the conditions alleged by him. (1) Where one of the parties to a deed is under any of the provisions of this section permitted to go into oral evidence, it is open to the other party also to rebut that evidence by oral evidence. So where a deed recited the payment of a certain consideration, and the plaintiff denied the passing of any consideration and adduced evidence in support of his contention, it was held open to the defendants to go into oral evidence to show that there was some consideration for the deed, though not the same as recited in the deed. (2)

Mistake may exist either in the intention or purpose of the parties or be a mistake in rendering their intention into words. As regards the first an agreement is void when both parties are under a mistake as to a matter of fact (3) and for this purpose a mistake as to a law not in force in British India has the same effect as a mistake of fact. (4) In such cases there is no contract at all. Further where a contracting party, who cannot read has a written contract falsely read over to him and the contract written differs from that pretended to be read, the signature on the document is of no force because he never intended to sign and therefore in contemplation of law did not sign the document on which the signature is, though if a person executes a document knowing its contents but misappreciates its legal effect, he cannot deny its execution. (5)

But a contract is not voidable merely because of the mistake of one party as to a matter of fact (6) nor because it was caused by a mistake as to any law in force in British India. (7) Oral evidence is admissible of such mistake which, if established, shows that there was no agreement at all.

But the mistake may be one in rendering the intention into words, an agreement being not void if the mistake be one for which a remedy may be obtained by the reformation of a document. In such cases there is an agreement, but the words in which it is expressed do not rightly represent the meaning of the parties. When through fraud or mutual mistake a contract or other instrument does not truly express the intention of the parties, either may institute a suit to have the instrument rectified (8) and oral evidence is again admissible to correct the mistake. What in such case is rectified is not the agreement but the mistaken expression of it. (9)

If some plain and palpable error has crept into the written instrument, equity formerly, and the Courts of common law now, sanction the admission of evidence to expose the error. (10) In such cases, especially where recouse is had to equity for relief, the extrinsic evidence is not offered to contradict a valid existing agreement; but to show that from accident or negligence the instrument in question has never been constituted the actual depository of the

(1) Sah Lal Chandy v. Indrooji, 4 C. W. N., 485 (1900); a.e., 22 A., 370; in which it was held that evidence was admissible to show that consideration had not been received notwithstanding the recital of that fact in the deed; followed in Fais-um-nissa v. Hanif-um-nissa, 2 All. L. J., 360, 364 (1905).
(2) Kailash Chandra v. Hurish Chunder, 5 C. W. N., 188 (1900).
(3) Act IX of 1872 (Contract), s. 20.
(4) Ib., s. 21. See Taylor, Ev., §§ 1129, 1140.
(6) Act IX of 1872, s. 22.
(7) Ib., s. 21, & Taylor, Ev., supra.
(8) Act I of 1877 (Specific Reliefs), s. 31.
(9) Dooda v. Bhana, 28 B., 430, 435 (1904) where the subject of mistake is discussed.
intention and meaning of the parties. Cases of this nature are nearly of kin to those of fraud; it is in point of conscience and equity an actual fraud to claim an undue benefit and advantage from a mere mistake contrary to the real intention of the contracting parties. Such evidence, however, ought not, for obvious reasons, to be allowed to prevail, unless it amount to the strongest possible proof. The most satisfactory evidence for this purpose consists of the written materials and instructions which were intended by the parties to be the basis and ground plan for the construction of the intended instrument. Thus where parties covenanted to convey an estate in trust, to raise £30,000 to pay off debts and encumbrances, with remainder over, parol evidence was admitted to show that it was the concurrent intention of all the parties to raise that sum in addition to the sum of £24,000, with which the estate was encumbered. So also in cases of marriage-settlements where mistakes have been committed, and in consequence, the deeds have varied from the instructions of the parties, they have been rectified by the Court. The same has also been done in instances of mercantile and other contracts. The first Proviso does not limit the admissibility of oral evidence to a suit to obtain a decree on the ground of mistake. Where the plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession of some land on the allegation that it was covered by the conveyance executed in their favour by the defendant, and the defence was to the effect that what was intended to be sold and purchased was the revenue-paying estate of the defendant, but that the land in suit which was the homestead of the defendant, though found included in the estate, was not expressly expected, because both the parties were under the mistaken impression that it was not so included, but was lakhiraj, and it was contended that it was not open to the defendant to raise such a defence in this suit; it was held that it was open to the Court to allow oral evidence to prove the mutual mistake, and that where there is a mutual mistake of fact in a case, as here, a Court administering equity will interfere to have the deed rectified so that the real intention of both parties may be carried into effect and will not drive the defendant to a separate suit to rectify the instrument.

The rule excluding parol evidence to vary or contradict a written document is not infringed by proof of any collateral parol agreement which does not interfere with the terms of the written contract, though it may relate to the same subject-matter; it does not prevent parties to a written contract from proving that, either contemporaneously or as a preliminary measure, they entered into a distinct oral agreement on some collateral matter. See Illustrations 1, 9, 4. In considering, however, whether or not such proof may be given, the Court shall have regard to the degree of formality of the document. The evidence moreover, will in no case be admissible, if the oral agreement is inconsistent with the terms of the written instrument. If, however, the

---

1. Starkie, Ev., 675-677, and cases there cited. See as to the rectification of instruments on the grounds of mistake: Act I of 1877, Ch. III; Nelson’s Specific Relief Act, pp. 51-52, 223, 228, Story, Eq. Jur., Ch. V.; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1139, 1140; Pollock’s Law of Fraud in British India, 123; Kessim Mundle v. Now Beebee, 1 W. R., 76 (1864); Babu Dumput v. Sheikh Jovashur, 8 W. R., 152 (1867); Dagdu v. Bhana, 28 B. 420 (1804).

2. Shelbourne v. Inchiquin, 1 Bro. C. C., 358.

3. Starkie, Ev., 676, and cases there cited.

4. Proviso (2)

5. See Illustrations 1, 9, 4.

6. In considering, however, whether or not such proof may be given, the Court shall have regard to the degree of formality of the document. The evidence moreover, will in no case be admissible, if the oral agreement is inconsistent with the terms of the written instrument. If, however, the document is silent on the matter and the agreement is consistent(1) with its terms, it may be proved.

So when a promissory note is silent as to interest, a verbal agreement made subsequent to the execution of the note to pay interest may be proved under this clause.(2) And in a suit upon a hathchitta the Court, having regard to the informal nature of the document sued upon, allowed evidence to be given of a verbal agreement to repay the amount acknowledged with interest, no mention having been made as to interest in the hathchitta itself.(3) See for a further application of this Proviso, (Himmat Sahai Singh v. Llewellen, ante, pp. 489, 490).

When an instrument is not formal, it may, as already observed, often be shown that some additional and supplementary agreement was made contemporaneously with the principal one. When an instrument is a formal one, it is often extremely difficult to say what is really "collateral" to it. Obviously, unless some restriction be imposed, the general rule may be rendered nugatory. It has been suggested in America that a matter ought not to be considered "collateral" except where it is evident from the writing itself that such writing contains part only and not the whole of the agreement. It has been further submitted that evidence of a collateral supplementary contract to a formal contract ought not to be admitted, save when it is alleged to have been made at such a time that it could not possibly have been incorporated in the written contract.(4) And so the section makes the degree of formality the condition upon which, if the other terms of the section are fulfilled, the admissibility of the evidence depends.

The case provided for by this Proviso and that in which evidence is admitted because the document does not and was not intended to contain the whole agreement between the parties(5) agree in this, that in neither case does the document in fact contain the whole agreement between the parties; but differ in that in the latter case the document was not intended to contain the whole agreement, the document being subject to, or merely a memorandum of, a transaction which was in fact entered into orally, and therefore oral and inconsistent evidence may be given; while in the former case the document was intended to and does contain the principal contract, which has, however, been orally supplemented by other terms upon matters on which it is silent. In so far as in the latter case, the document does, with the exception of such terms, constitute the contract, these terms must be consistent with those embodied in the instrument itself.

This Proviso with which should be read Illustration (j) is intended to introduce the well-established rule in England;(6) that when at the time of a written contract being entered into, it is orally(7) agreed between the parties that the written agreement shall not be of any force or validity, until some condition precedent has been performed, parol evidence of such oral agreement is admissible to show that the condition has not been performed, and consequently, that the written contract has not become binding. Until the condition is performed, there is in fact no written agreement at all.(8) For instance, it may be shown by parol evidence that an instrument apparently executed as a deed, had really been delivered simply as an escrow;(9) that

---

(1) See Lala Himmat v. Llewellen, 11 C., 498 (1885), cited supra; Mayen v. Adams, 19 M. 238, 234, 255, 261 (1892), and cases cited in the next two notes.
(2) Soudsmonoo Debya v. Spalding, 12 C.L.R., 163 (1882).
(3) Umesh Chunder v. Mohini Mohun, 9 C. L. R., 301 (1881).
(4) Taylor, Ev., § 1135, n. (5).
(5) See ante, para. 2 to notes of section.
(6) See Taylor, Ev., § 1135.
(7) See Illustration (j) which should read: "A & B make a contract in writing and orally agree that it shall take effect, &c."
(9) Murray v. Lord Stair, 2 B. & C., 82. is a writing deposited with a third person(1) to be by him delivered to the person, whom it purports to benefit, upon the performance of some condition, upon which only the writing is to have effect. Also it may be shown that a document was really meant to be conditional on the happening of an event which had never occurred.(2) The admission of such evidence shows that the contract was never to come into operation as a contract at all unless the condition precedent were complied with: it neither varies nor contradicts the writing, but suspends the commencement of the obligation.(3)

An oral stipulation that an instrument is not to become binding, unless and until some stipulation be first fulfilled, may always be shown. Thus evidence has been admitted to show that an agreement in writing was not intended to operate as an agreement between the parties, until a third party had approved of it,(4) and that a written instrument by way of lease containing no date was to operate only when the date was filled in, and which was not to be filled in, until certain repairs had been done.(5) So where the plaintiff declared upon an agreement by the defendant to transfer to him a farm which he, the defendant, held under X, and the defendant pleaded that the agreement declared on was made subject to the condition that it should be null and void, if X should not within a reasonable time after the making of the agreement consent and agree to the transfer of the farm to the plaintiff; it was held that it was competent to the defendant to prove by extraneous evidence this contemporaneous oral agreement, as it operated only as a suspension of the written agreement and not in defiance of it.(6) And where a plaintiff attempted to enforce as a contract of loan binding upon the defendant immediately upon its execution an instrument which he verbally agreed at the time should not so operate and for which the defendant received no consideration, the latter was allowed to give evidence of the verbal agreement.(7) So also evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement to suspend the operation of a written contract of sale, until an agreement for a re-sale was executed, is admissible.(8) The same doctrine applies to wills, though it must be used with very great caution. So a duly executed paper, testamentary on the face of it, is not entitled to probate, if it is clearly proved by parol evidence that it was executed by the decease without any intention that it should affect the disposition of his property after death.(9)

(1) In Shak Motum v. Balasso Koer, Hay's Rep., 578 (1863), it was held that, where a deed of sale of a portion of an estate was delivered to the party in whose favour it had been executed, evidence could not be admitted to show that it was intended to operate as an escrow only, as might have been the case had it been delivered to a third party. Technically, it is true, that the document was not in such case an escrow. But in principle it was the same thing. For it was alleged that, until the condition was performed, no interest was to pass to the transfereree (Bell v. Ingestre, 12 Q. B., 317, 319, 320). The report of this decision, which may perhaps have been justified on other grounds, is not full or clear and does not appear to be in accordance with the terms of this proviso or of the cases upon which the latter is founded. See Field, Ev., 435.

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 1135, and cases there and hereinafter cited.

(7) Annagurubala Chetti v. Krihnaeswami Nayakas, 1 Mad. H. C. R., 457 (1863), cited and approved in Jugtanund Misser v. Nerghan Singh 6 C., 433, 434 (1880). See also Tiruwangada Ayangar v. Rangaswami Nayak, 7 M., 19 (1883); Dada Honaji v. Babaji Jaguket, 2 Bom. H. C. R., 38 (1865); in which evidence was also admitted under this proviso, and Cohen v. Bank of Bengal, 2 A., 598 (1880), in which the admissibility of the evidence in question was held to be doubtful.

The first Proviso does not permit the terms of a written contract to be varied by a contemporaneous oral agreement, but having regard to Illustrations (b) and (i) its proper meaning is that a contemporaneous oral agreement to the effect that a written contract was to be of no force or effect at all and that it was to impose no obligation at all until the happening of a certain event may be proved. So the terms of a promissory note purporting to be an absolute engagement to pay on demand cannot be varied by a contemporaneous oral agreement constituting an undertaking on the part of the plaintiff not to enforce the note by a suit till the happening of a certain event, or implying that the legal obligation of payment was to be postponed to, or made conditional upon, the happening of a certain event.(1)

A distinction must be drawn between the cases where the matter sought to be introduced by extraneous evidence is a condition precedent or a defeasance. It may be shown that the instrument was not meant to operate, until the happening of a given condition; but it cannot be shown by parol that the agreement is to be defeated on the happening of a given event.(2)

Upon the question whether the words "condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract" mean a "condition precedent to the contract being of any force or validity," or a "condition precedent to some particular obligation contained in the contract being of force or validity," it has been held that the rule contained in this proviso does not apply to a case where the written agreement had not only become binding, but had actually been performed as to a large portion of its obligations, and that the words "any obligation" in this proviso mean any obligation whatever under the contract, and not some particular obligation which the contract may contain.(3) The condition precedent to which this proviso refers is a condition the subject-matter of which is dehors the contents of the instrument, and, therefore, if effect be given to this condition, it cannot affect the terms of the document itself.(4) In a case where the defence was that one of the executants of the note signed it only as surety and that his liability was only to the extent of standing as a surety for one month, it was held that this proviso was inapplicable, as the liability attached from the date of the note of hand and ceased upon the expiry of one month, and the defence was not that no liability attached to the note of hand until some event happened or something was done.(5)

The rule merely binds to a given relation of the transaction itself. Accordingly subsequent waiver or discharge may be shown. This proviso incorporates the rule laid down by Lord Denman in Gos v. Lord Nugent,(6) who said: "After an agreement has been reduced into writing, it is competent to the parties at any time before breach of it by a new contract not in writing either altogether to waive, dissolve, or annul the former agreement, or in any manner to add to, or subtract from, or vary or qualify the terms of it, and thus to make a new contract which is to be proved partly by the written agreement, and partly by the subsequent verbal terms engrafted upon what will be thus left of the written agreement; but modifies that rule, in that it declares that the new contract cannot be a verbal one in cases in which the old contract (a) is by law required to be in writing, or (b) has been registered.(7) For the rule is, nihil tam con-

---

(1) Ramjiban Senroy v. Oghur Nath, 2 C.W.N., 188 (1897).
(4) v. ante, pp. 483, 484.
(5) Hare v. Chadha, 3 C. W. 401 (1903).
(7) See Upendral Motiram v. Davubhai Dhondia, 2 B., 547 (1878), where it was held that a VENIENS EST NATURALI EXQUITATI QUAM UNUM QUODQUE DISSOLVI EX LIGAMINE, QUO LIGATUM EST ("Nothing is so agreeable to natural equity as that a thing be unbound in the manner in which it was bound.") It has been argued that the word 'or' should be read as 'and' and that oral evidence is admissible when the document, though registered in fact, is not compulsorily registerable. But the contention was overruled. See as to the registration of documents, Appendix C. Where it is alleged that a new contract which the law requires to be in writing has been substituted for a prior contract such substituted contract must be complete in itself and embody distinctly the terms of the new contract. If it is not complete, then extraneous evidence is inadmissible to prove the substituted contract with the result that the first contract is not varied and remains in force. The exception at the end of this Proviso applies to executory as well as to executed agreements. It has been held by the Madras High Court that the word 'oral' is used in this proviso in the sense of being not committed to writing, and that the words 'oral agreement' include all unwritten agreements whether arrived at by word of mouth or otherwise. So where the lessor of certain land held by the lessee under a registered deed of lease agreed to a reduction in the rent, and the agreement was not reduced to writing but rent was thereafter paid and accepted at the reduced rate; on a suit being brought to recover arrears of rent at the rate reserved in the registered deed, it was held that under this proviso an agreement to accept a reduced rent cannot be implied or inferred from the acts and conduct of the parties; and an unwritten agreement, if so implied, amounts to an oral agreement within the meaning of the Proviso. The Calcutta High Court in the case cited have taken a different view holding that whilst the section excludes in particular cases any oral agreement or statement, evidence of conduct, as for instance, return of a lease, is admissible to prove that such return was due to an intention to make the lease inoperative. In, however, a subsequent case in the same Court a different view of the admissibility of evidence of conduct was taken. It was held that acts and conduct of parties could only be proof either of a contemporaneous oral agreement varying the terms of the registered contract, or (b) of a subsequent oral agreement having the same effect. In the former case the evidence was excluded by the section itself and in the latter by this Proviso. If a discharge valid under s. 63 of the Contract Act has been given, it is immaterial that the discharge has been given in pursuance of an alleged oral agreement, which, though not admissible in evidence, was not illegal. Evidence will be admissible when the object of the oral agreement is not to rescind or modify the original transaction, but is an entirely new transaction. Oral evidence is of course admissible to prove the discharge and satisfaction of a mortgage-bond and is not excluded by this proviso. Only those agreements come within the section which affect the terms of the previous transaction, not indirectly, as a consequence of an independent and subsequent contract between some only of the parties, but directly by virtue of the Conveyance having been registered, no oral agreement to rescind could be proved under this proviso, and Deanka Nath v. Bhogoban Panda, 7 C. L. R., 577 (1890); Banku Behari v. Shama Churn, 2 C. W. N., 348 (1900).

(1) Noocor Chunder v. Ashutosh Mukerjee, 9 C. W. N., 348 (1900).
(2) Jwesandra Mohan v. Gopal Das, 8 C. W. N., 923 (1904). [The consent in writing by the landlord to the division of a tenure or holding has the effect of substituting a new contract for the old.]
(4) Mayand Chetti v. Oliver, 22 M., 261 (1889); followed in Karampalli v. Thekkku, 26 M., 186 (1902).
(6) Radha Roman v. Bhoomani Prasad, 5 C. W. N., 348 (1901); see Notes ante, on "Evidence of conduct."
(7) Karampalli v. Thekkku, 26 M., 186 (1902).
(8) Krikhobati v. Takurum, 11 B., 47 (1892); Herembhoo Dhorndharv v. Keshinath Bhashkar, 14 B., 472 (1890); Asiri Singh v. Ayudha Sahu, 6 Gyal, 249 (1897).
(9) Ramal Chandra v. Gobinda Karmokar, 4 C. W. N., 304 (1900).
consensus of those who alone are competent to rescind or modify the original contract, viz., all the parties concerned or all their representatives. (1)

In 1875 certain lands were mortgaged for Rs. 675. The mortgage-bond provided that the mortgagee was to enjoy the rents and profits in lieu of interest on Rs. 475 and that the remaining Rs. 200 were to carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum. In 1880 a receipt was passed by the mortgagee to the mortgagee reciting that on taking accounts Rs. 525 were due on account of the mortgage, that Rs. 100 were paid on the day of the receipt, that a further sum of Rs. 100 were to be paid in a month and a half, and that the rents and profits of the property were in future to be taken for the interest on the balance of Rs. 325 only. In 1896 the mortgagee sued for redemption and relied on the receipt in support of his case. Held that the receipt did not require registration. It purported to be a mere settlement of accounts and was not intended to modify or supersede the original mortgage-contract. This clause had therefore no application to the case. (2)

In the aforementioned case (3) the plaintiff mortgaged certain property to the first defendant on the 28th December 1895. By the mortgage-deed the mortgage-debt was made repayable on 28th December 1896. On the 12th May 1897 the first defendant sold it by auction under the power of sale contained in the mortgage-deed and the second defendant was the purchaser. The plaintiff now sued to set aside the sale and to be allowed to redeem, alleging that on the day before the sale the first defendant had orally promised and agreed to postpone the sale for four days, and that the second defendant had notice of this fact before he purchased the property. Held that evidence of such oral agreement was admissible. It was not an agreement to modify any of the terms of the mortgage, it was merely an agreement to forbear, for a period of four days from the exercise of the power of sale given by the mortgage. It therefore did not fall within this proviso. As to the proof required when a substituted verbal agreement is set up, the following observations of Lord Cranworth may be referred to:—"When parties who have bound themselves by a written agreement depart from what has been so agreed upon in writing, and adopt some other line of conduct it is incumbent on the party insisting on, and endeavouring to enforce, a substituted verbal agreement, to show not merely what he understood to be the new terms on which the parties were proceeding, but also that the other party had the same understanding—that both parties were proceeding on a new agreement, the terms of which they both understood." (4)

Proviso (5).

In the case of contracts the evidence is not confined to the explanation under section 98, post, of the written terms: Provided they are not repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the express terms of the contract, it is allowed to supply terms of known usage in control of the contract, and which is known by the expression of "annexing incidents." This is upon the principle that the contract was itself framed with reference to the usage; and so as to incorporate the usage in, and as part of, itself. Indeed, it is in part also upon this principle, that even as respects the actual terms of the contract, it is by the usage they are expounded. (5)

(1) Gorvitt Subbarow v. Farigoona Narasimhaiah, 27 M., 368. c. c., 14 Mad. L. J., 218 (1903) [Oral evidence held not to be excluded.]
(2) Lakshman v. Damodar, 24 B., 606 (1900).
(5) Gooden, Ev., 378; Greenleaf, Ev., §§ 292, 294; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 22–27. As to proof of usage, see Phipson, 3rd Ed., 84. Such proof may be given (1) by direct evidence of witnesses in which case particular instances of its occurrence or non-occurrence will be admissible in corroboration or rebuttal, or (2) by a series of particular instances in which it has been acted upon, or (3) by proof of similar customs in the same or analogous trades in other localities, etc., ad." In mercantile contracts the intention must be collected from the instrument, but resort may be Accordingly, where a ship was to depart with convoy, but without any definition of the spot at which the convoy was to start evidence was allowed to fix this as from the place of rendezvous. (1) So a sale of tobacco was allowed to be explained as a sale by sample, though the bought and sold notes were silent on the point. (2) And in England, prior to the statutory enactment with regard thereto, a bill-of-exchange was by custom allowed three days' grace for payment beyond the day specified on the face of the bill itself.

These incidents are sometimes the creatures of mere usage. But usage may come at length, by judicial recognition, to be received as part of the law merchant, and this would be obligatory without special evidence. Consequently, the law merchant annexing to a Marine Insurance the condition of seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage, it would ipso facto become annexed to any ordinary contract of such insurance. (3) As to the "usage" which may be proved as adding an incident to a written contract, and the evidence by which it must be supported, see pp. 86-87 ante.

In the case of that which is strictly usage or custom the Courts are at liberty to import into the contract incidents not excluded by the terms of such contract, even though a party to the contract was not actually cognizant of the usage. But this is not so in the case of a mere particular practice. Thus in order that the practice on a particular estate may be imported as a term of the contract into a contract in respect of land in that estate, it must be shown that the practice was known to the person whom it is sought to bind by it and that he assented to its being a term of the contract; and when the person sought to be bound by the practice is an assignee for value of rights under that contract, it must also be shown that he and all prior assignees, if any, for value knew that the practice was a term of the original contract. (4)

In the undermentioned case, (5) where there had been a contract for purchase by brokers, not disclosing their principal, and evidence was admitted to show a usage of trade holding the brokers liable, Lord Campbell, C. J., laid down the law in extenso on this subject as follows:

"Now, neither collateral evidence, nor the evidence of a usage of a trade is receivable to prove anything which contradicts the tenor of a written contract; but subject to this condition both may be received for certain purposes. To use the language of Mr. Phillips, in Vol. II, p. 415, 10th edition: —

'Evidence of usage has been admitted as to contracts relating to transactions of commerce and trade, farming, or other business, for the purpose of defining what would otherwise be indefinite; or to interpret a peculiar term, or to explain what was obscure, or to ascertain what was equivocal, or to annex particular incidents, which, although not mentioned in the contracts, were connected with them or with relations growing out of them; and the evidence in such cases is admitted with the view of giving effect, as far as can be done, to the present intentions of the parties.' Now, here the plaintiff did not seek by the evidence of usage to contradict what the tenor of the note primarily imports, namely, that this was a contract with the defendants made as brokers. The evidence is based on this: the usage can have no operation, except on the assumption of their having acted as brokers, and of their having been a contract made with had to mercantile usage in certain cases as a key to its exposition." Bredon v. Abbott, Tayl., Rep. 365. Supreme Court, Plea Side (1848).

"A condition not expressly made between the parties to a contract may nevertheless be attached to such contract by custom;" Koong Behare v. Shima Bains, Agra Rep., F. B., 119 (1867).

(1) Lathlak's case, 2 Salk., 443.

(2) Syres v. Jones, 2 Exch. R., 111.

(3) Goodve, Ev., 378.

(4) Manu Vikrama v. Rama Pater, 20 M., 278 (1897).

W, LE
their principal. But the plaintiff by the evidence seeks to show that, according to the usages of the trade, and as those concerned in the trade understand the words used, they imported something more, namely, that if the buying broker did not disclose the name of his principal, it might become a contract with the broker as principal, if the seller pleased. "Whether this evidence be treated as explaining the language used or adding a tacitly implied incident to the contract beyond those which are expressed, is not material. In either point of view it will be admissible, unless it labours under the objection of introducing something repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the tenor of the written instrument: and upon consideration of the sense in which that objection must be understood with reference to this question, we think it does not. In a certain sense every material incident which is added to a written contract varies it; makes it different from what it appeared to be, and so far is inconsistent with it. If by the side of the written contract without, you write the same contract with, the added incident, the two would seem to import different obligations and be different contracts. Take a familiar instance by way of illustration. On the face of a bill-of-exchange, at three months after date, the acceptor will be taken to bind himself to the payment precisely at the end of the three months; but by the custom he is only bound to do so at the end of the days of grace: which vary according to the country in which the same is made payable, from three up to fifteen. The truth is, that the principle on which the evidence is admissible is, that the parties have not set down on paper the whole of their contract in all its terms but those only which were necessary to be determined in the particular case by specific agreement, and which of course might vary infinitely, leaving to implication and tacit understanding all those general and unvarying incidents which a uniform usage would annex and according to which they must in reason be understood to contract, unless they expressly exclude them. To fall within the exception, therefore, of repugnancy, the incident must be such as, if expressed on the written contract, would make it insensible or inconsistent. Thus, to warrant bacon to be prime singed, adding, "that is to say, slightly tainted," as in Yates v. Pym,(1) or to insure all the boats of a ship, and add "that is to say, all not slung on the quarter," as in Blackett v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company,(2) and other cases of the same sort scattered through the books, would be instances of contracts in which both the two parts could not have full effect given to them, if written down. Therefore, when one part only is expressed it would be unreasonable to suppose that the parties intended to exclude the other also. Without repeating ourselves, it will be found that the same reasoning applies, where the evidence is used to explain a latent ambiguity of language.

"Merchants and traders, with a multiplicity of transactions pressing on them, and moving in a narrow circle, and meeting each other daily, desire to write little and leave unwritten what they take for granted in every contract. In spite of the lamentations of Judges, they still continue to do so; and, in a vast majority of cases of which Courts of law hear nothing, they do so without loss or inconvenience; and upon the whole they find his mode of dealing advantageous even at the risk of occasional litigation. It is the business of Courts reasonably so to shape their rules of evidence, as to make them suitable to the habits of mankind, and such as are not likely to exclude the actual facts of the dealings between parties when they are to determine on the controversies which grow out of them. It cannot be doubted, in the present case, that in fact this contract was made with the usage understood to be a term in it; to exclude the usage is to exclude a material term of the contract, and must lead to an unjust decision." The case was affirmed on appeal. As has been well observed in reference to these cases of mercantile contracts:—"The witnesses for this purpose may be considered to be the sworn interpreters of the mercantile language in which the contract is written." Indeed the observation applies to all usage evidence. (1)

(1) 6 Term., 446. (2) 2 C. & J., 244.

When there is a usage or custom of trade the intention of the parties to exclude a contract from its operation, must be shown by the contract itself and cannot be proved by other evidence. Thus, where there was a sale of rum, no mention being made of warehouse rent, evidence was admitted that, by custom of trade, an allowance for warehouse rent was incorporated in such contracts; but evidence that the parties had orally agreed to make an allowance different from the customary one, was rejected. (2) Usage and custom cannot be resorted to to control or vary positive stipulations in a written contract, and a fortiori not in order to contradict them. An express contract of the parties is always admissible to supersede, or vary, or control a usage or custom; for the latter may always be waived at the will of the parties. But a written and express contract cannot be controlled, or varied, or contradicted by usage or custom; for that would be not only to admit parol evidence to control, vary or contradict written contracts, but it would be to allow mere presumptions and implications, properly arising in the absence of any positive expressions of intention, to control, vary, or contradict the most formal and deliberate declarations of the parties. (3) Therefore where an usage conflicts with the expressed intention of the document, the latter must be followed. So where in an agreement between an African merchant and an African captain, the latter was to have a commission of "£6 per cent. on the net proceeds of the homeward cargo, after deducting the usual charges," parol evidence was not admitted to show that, according to the course of trade between African captain and merchants, the captain was entitled to a commission on the whole amounts for which the cargo had been sold, and not merely the net profits. (4) If the usage is inconsistent with the express terms of the contract, evidence thereof is inadmissible, and the inconsistency may be evinced (a) by the express terms of the instrument, or (b) by implication therefrom. (5) When the Court of first instance had permitted plaintiffs to put in evidence to show the terms on which the parties must be presumed to have contracted, as to which the document was silent, according to the provisions of this proviso, it was held on appeal that what the plaintiff sought to make use of, was not any custom of the port or usage of trade, but the terms on which the plaintiff and defendant had dealt with each other, on prior occasions: and that evidence of previous dealings was admissible, only for the purpose of explaining the terms used in a contract and not to impose on a party an obligation, as to which the contract was silent. (6)

This Proviso relates to the admissibility of evidence necessary to point the Proviso (6) operation of the document. It relates to the admissibility of evidence necessary to make the words which are used fit the external things to which the words are appropriate. (7) Thus if an undescribed dispute is referred to arbitration, evidence is admissible to show what the actual dispute was at the time of the submission. (1) Up to a certain stage and apart from any question of ambiguity, extrinsic evidence is necessary to point the operation of the simplest instrument. Thus, were it the case of a deed conveying all the lands at A in the grantor's occupation; until it was defined by proof what lands were in his occupation, the operation of the deed could not be known. So, were it a case of a will, and a bequest to the children of a party, or even the testator's own children: to give effect to the bequest it would be necessary to define who the children were. (2) "Some evidence," says Wood, V. C., in the case undermentioned, "is necessary in any case of a will, that is to say, evidence to show the subject and objects of the gift." (3) And again, "in interpreting any instrument which purports to deal with property, some extrinsic information is necessary in order to make the words, which are but signs, fit the external things to which these signs are appropriate. In reality, external information is requisite in construing every instrument; but when any subject is thus discovered, which not only is within the words of the instrument, according to their natural construction but exhausts the whole of those words, then the investigation must stop; you are bound to take the interpretation which entirely exhausts the whole of the series of expression used by the author of the instrument, and are not permitted to go any further. Thus to that extent the Court is always at liberty to go in interpreting a will; in other words, the Court is to place itself in the position of the testator with the knowledge of all the facts with which he was acquainted, but it is not in the course of interpretation to introduce any evidence whatever of what were the intentions of the testator as contrasted with, or extending or contracting the language which he has used." (4) So also Sir James Wigram says: "The most accurate description possible must require some development of extrinsic circumstances to enable a Court to decide upon its sufficiency, and the least accurate description which is sufficient to satisfy the mind of a Judge or Jury as to a testator's meaning, must be within the same principle. The principle cannot be affected by the consideration that a more ample development of circumstances, is necessary in one case than in another." (5)

---

(2) Pawkes v. Lamb, 31 L. J., Q. B., 98.

(3) Story, cited Thiel, Ev., 437; Indur Chunder v. Luckumi Bibi, 7 B. L. R., 692 (1871); [custom cannot affect the express terms of a written contract]; Macfarlane v. Carr, 8 B. L. R., 450 (1872); [custom at variance with contract]; Smith v. Ludha Ghella, 17 B., 129 (1892); [usage repugnant to, and inconsistent with, contract].

These observations are cited only as illustrative of the principle. Practically, it is upon some imperfection of the instrument, as applied to the facts, that the difficulty as to determining its meaning usually arises; and nothing is more settled than that evidence is receivable of all the circumstances surrounding the instrument, for the purpose of throwing their light on its interpretation. Indeed, it is by these, as by a lamp, the Court reads the document. (6)

The question has more often arisen upon wills than upon other documents, and it is from cases on these, accordingly that the law has mainly to be taken. The principles, however, which they enunciate are alike applicable to other instruments generally. (7)

---

(2) Goodove, Ev., 385; Goodove's Evidence Act, p. 57; Greenleaf, Ev., § 296; —Baboo Dhamput v. Sheik Jowehur, 8 W. R., 152 (1867). (Evidence of every material fact which will enable the Court to ascertain the nature and extent of the subject-matter of the instrument, or in other words, to identify the things to which that instrument refers, is admissible. The acts of the parties may also be explained by parol evidence.)

(3) In the matter of Feltham, 1 Kay & J., 529.

(5) Wigram on Extrinsic Evidence, p. 35.

(6) Goodove, Ev., 386.

(7) The principle is one of general application. See Macdonald v. Longbottom, 7 W. R. (Eng.), 507; Munford v. Gething, 8 W. R., (Eng.), 187, where it was applied to cases of mercantile contract. In the former case, which was a contract for the purchase of wool, the quantity, the subject of purchase, was not otherwise defined than by the expression "your wool," and evidence was admitted to show its meaning. Lord Campbell, C. J., said: "I am clearly of opinion that when a specific thing is the subject of a contract, and it is doubtful upon the contract, what that specific thing is, that any fact may be given in evidence, in order to identify it, which is within the knowledge of both parties—meaning by that expression, the knowledge upon the strength of
In Dood. Hiscocks v. Hiscocks,(1) a very leading authority on the subject, Lord Abinger, Chief Baron, thus propounds the admissibility of this species of evidence, and the purport of its admission:—

"It must be admitted that it is not possible altogether to reconcile the different cases that have been decided on this subject; which makes it the more expedient to investigate the principles upon which any evidence to explain the will of a testator ought to be received. The object, in all cases, is to discover the intention of the testator. The first and most obvious mode of doing this, is to read his will as he has written it and collect his intention from his words. But as his words refer to facts and circumstances, respecting his property and his family, and others whom he names or describes in his will, it is evident that the meaning and application of his words cannot be ascertained, without evidence of all those facts and circumstances. To understand the meaning of any writer, we must first be apprised of the persons and circumstances that are the subjects of his allusions or statements, and if these are not fully disclosed in his work, we must look for illustrations to the history of the times in which he wrote, and to the works of contemporaneous authors. All the facts and circumstances, therefore, respecting persons or property to which the will relates, are undoubtedly legitimate, and often necessary, to enable us to understand the meaning and application of his words." Again:—"The testator may have habitually called certain persons or things by peculiar names, by which they were not commonly known. If these names should occur in his will, they could only be explained and construed by the aid of evidence, to show the sense in which he used them, in like manner as if his will were written in cypher, or in a foreign language. The habits of the testator in these particulars must be receivable as evidence to explain the meaning of his will."

In this case, the testator, after the gift of a life-estate to his own son, John Hiscocks, devised the property in question to "John, the eldest son of the said John Hiscocks." The son had been twice married; and his actual eldest son was Simon, the child of his first marriage; but John was the eldest son by the second marriage, and the question was, which of the two sons was intended to take.

Cases indeed abound illustrative of the same principle; and from their general result the doctrine is thus stated by V. C. Wigram(2):—"In considering questions of this nature it must always be remembered that the words of a testator, like those of every other person, tacitly refer to the circumstances by which, at the time of expressing himself, he is surrounded. If, therefore, when the circumstances under which the testator made his will are known, the words of the will do sufficiently express the intention ascribed to him, the strict limits of exposition cannot be transgressed, because the Court, in aid of the construction of the will, refers to those extrinsic collateral circumstances, to which it is certain the language of the will refers. It may be true that, without such evidence, the precise meaning of the words could not be determined, but it is still the will which expresses and ascertains the intention ascribed to the testator. A page of history (to use a familiar illustration) may not be intelligible until some collateral extrinsic circumstances are known to the reader. No one, however, would imagine that he was acquiring a knowledge of the writer’s meaning from any other source than the page he was reading, because in order to make that page intelligible, he required to be informed to what country the writer belonged, or to be furnished with a map of the country about which he was reading. The extrinsic evidence in the cases now adverted to, does not per se approach the question of intention. It is wholly collateral to it. It explains the words only, by removing the cause of their apparent ambiguity, where, in truth, there is no real ambiguity. It places the Court which expounds the will in the situation of the testator who made it and the words of the will are then left to their natural operation.

The principles here propounded have been recognized by the Privy Council as applicable to India. In the undermentioned case. (1) Turner, L. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, thus expresses himself:

"This, therefore, is the question which we are called upon to decide. It is a question between the estate of S C and the parties claiming under the gift over; and as it seems to us, it must depend wholly on the construction. What we must look to, is the intention of the testator. The Hindu law, no less than the English law, points to the intention as the element by which we are to be guided in determining the effect of a testamentary disposition; nor, so far as we are aware, is there any difference between the one law and the other, as to the materials from which the intention is to be collected. Primarily, the words of the will are to be considered. They convey the expression of the testator's wishes; but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, and where this is the case, those circumstances, no doubt, must be regarded. Amongst the circumstances thus to be regarded, is the law of the country under which the will is made, and its dispositions are to be carried out. If that law has attached to particular words a particular meaning, or to a particular disposition a particular effect, it must be assumed that the testator, in the dispositions which he has made, had regard to that meaning or to that effect, unless the language of the will or the surrounding circumstances displace that assumption. These are, as we think, the principles by which we ought to be guided in determining the case before us; and we must first, therefore, consider what was the intention of this testator to be collected from the words of his will." And again:—"If, therefore, we are to impute to this testator any intention different from that which is to be collected from the words of his will, it must be upon the ground that there are extrinsic circumstances which disprove the expressed intention, and prove the different intention. The expressed intention ought, as we conceive, to prevail, unless the different intention be clearly demonstrated. We may doubt whether the testator really intended what his words import, but a Court of Construction must find its conclusions upon just reasoning and not upon mere speculative doubts."

When a letter had been addressed by the defendant to a Mrs. W., containing an acknowledgment of a debt, it was held that evidence was admissible to show that Mrs. S., the defendant, was known as Mrs. W., and also for the purpose of identifying the debt to which the acknowledgment referred. (2) Where a deed stated that the property was sold "subject to the payment of all taxes, rates, charges, assessments leviable or chargeable," leaving the question open to what the taxes, etc., were which were "leviable and chargeable," it was held that extrinsic evidence of that was admissible, for it neither contradicted nor varied the terms of the deed, but explained the sense in which the parties understood the words of the deed, which, taken by themselves, were capable of explanation. (1) In cases where the question is whether a lease to a person named in it is perpetual, i.e., whether it is to him and his heirs, evidence as to the surrounding circumstances is admissible because it explains what, standing alone, is capable of explanation, whether a grant to a person is a grant to him alone, or to him and his heirs. The mere facts that words of inheritance do not occur in a lease does not make it the less a permanent lease, if from the language of the document, taken as a whole, the object of the lease, and other surrounding circumstances, such as the conduct of the parties, it appears that their intention was that it should operate as a lease in perpetuity. (2)

---

(2) Umaeh Chandra v. Sageman, 5 B. L. R., 633 (1869); see Valampudeckeri Pudanathth v. Chowkabares, 5 Mad. H. C. R., 320 (1870).

The short exposition of the whole matter is, that the knowledge of the external circumstances of which their proof puts the Court in possession, places the Judge in the position of the donor, settlor, or other party to the instrument; and it is upon the survey which that position affords him, he exercises the office of an expositor. (3) In a recent English decision to prove that the word "securities" had been used by a testator in the sense of "investments" and stock and shares in railway and other companies. Vaughan Williams, L. J., allowed independent evidence to be given and observed as follows:—"I think that evidence is admissible to show that expressions used in the will had acquired an appropriate meaning, either generally, or by local usage, or amongst particular classes, and that, where any doubt arises upon the true sense and meaning of the words themselves or any difficulty as to their application under surrounding circumstances the sense and meaning of the language may be investigated and ascertained by evidence dehors the instrument itself; for both reason and common sense agree that by no other means can the language of the instrument be made to speak the real mind of the party." (4)

93. When the language used in a document is, on its face, ambiguous or defective, (5) evidence may not be given of facts which would show its meaning or supply its defects.

Illustrations.

(a) A agrees, in writing, to sell a horse to B for Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1,500.

Evidence cannot be given to show which price was to be given.

(b) A deed contains blanks.

Evidence cannot be given of facts which would show how they were meant to be filled.

Principle.—The main principle on which the rule is founded is that the intention of parties should be construed, not by vague evidence of their intentions, independently of the expressions which they have thought fit to use, but expressions themselves. If extrinsic evidence were admissible in the case

---

(2) Babu v. Sitaram, 3 Bom. L. R., 768 (1901).
(3) Goodve, Ev., 309.
(4) Bayner v. Bayner, 1 Ch., 176; (1904), and see s. 96, post.
(5) With reference to the term "defective" in this section, Norton, Ev., 278, refers to the case of Benosheee Lal v. Dullooe Sircar, Marsh, 620 (1863), in which it was held that parol evidence is properly admissible to supply words in an old deed lost in consequence of the parts on which they were written having been eaten by insects. But in this case the parol evidence was not admitted to explain the document, but merely to show what the document expressed; the same rule which allows secondary evidence of a document entirely destroyed, admits evidence to supply parts wanting by reason of partial destruction.
(6) In Markby, Ev., 74, it is said: "This section can only apply where a writing is required of patent ambiguities, it would be tantamount to permitting wills to be made verbally and would also be a violation of the principles, that, where a contract, or other substantial matter of issue, has been reduced to writing, that writing is the only admissible proof of such contract or transactions. (1) In the cases governed by this section the instrument fails for want of adequate expression. It is the province of the Court to interpret and not to make instruments for parties. It will construe the expressions the parties have themselves furnished, but will not supply others. And though evidence may be given to explain, it is inadmissible for the purpose of adding to the document. And see Notes, post.

s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 3 ("Evidence.")

s. 3 ("Fact.")

s. 95—97 ("Latent ambiguities.")

COMMENDED.

This section embodies the rule with regard to "patent ambiguities," as sections 95—97 relate to "latent ambiguities." Ambiguities in documents are said to be either patent or latent, the former arising where the instrument on its face is unintelligible, as where in a will the name of a legatee is left wholly blank, the latter arising where the words of the instrument are clear, but their application to the circumstances is doubtful, as where a legacy is given to "my niece Jane," the testator having two nieces of that name. The admission of extrinsic evidence to explain ambiguities, is confined to such as are latent. A patent ambiguity, or one in which the imperfection of the writing is so obvious that the idea that it was intended cannot be absolutely excluded, cannot be explained by parol. A patent ambiguity may exist either in the want of adequate artificiality in the composition or in the omission of something requisite to give operation to the document. The section thus applies to cases (a) in which either no meaning at all has been expressed, the sentence having been left unfinished [see Illustration (b)], or (b) where, though the language is intelligible, it is such as to give rise to an obvious uncertainty of meaning [see Illustration (a)]. (2) A patent ambiguity arises from the writer's own incapacity either of perception or explanation, and exhibits itself on the face of the writing. His meaning in a particular relation he fails to exhibit, and the writing shows the failure. A patent ambiguity is subjective, that is to say, an ambiguity in the mind of the writer himself: while a latent ambiguity is objective, that is to say, an ambiguity in the thing he describes. A writer's mind may be ambiguous for several reasons. He may have no idea on the topic on which he writes; if so, it is inadmissible to prove that he had an idea which would be to contradict the writing itself, and which would make him say what he did not intend to say. Or a writing may be ambiguous because the writer intends it to be so as where a testator left his estate to his 'heir-at-law.' In such case extrinsic evidence of his intention is inadmissible, as it would frustrate his real intention which was to have the question of heirship by law. If no writing is required by law, and if the writing is so incomplete that its meaning cannot be ascertained (which is, I suppose, the case contemplated), it may be disregarded or used as an admission, and oral evidence given."

(1) Starke, Ev., p. 653, Powell, Ev., p. 473;

(2) Goodes, Ev., 391, 392; though this section does not affect the provisions of the Succession Act (s. 100, post), the rule thereunder (see s. 68) is the same as that enacted by this section. As to agreements void for uncertainty, see Contract Act, s. 29.

Goodes, Ev., 391, 392; Cunningham, Ev., 262.
determined not by himself but by the Court.(1) Or a document may be ambiguous for want of adequate artificiality in the composition. So where certain persons describing themselves as residents of Jarno Bas Mohan had given a bond for the payment of money in which as collateral security they had pledged their property with all the rights and interests, it was held that the hypothecation in the bond was of too general a nature to admit of a decree being given against any particular property of the defendants, and the language of the deed being ambiguous, no evidence could be given to make it certain.(2) On the other hand, a latent or objective ambiguity is an ambiguity, not in the writer’s mind, which it is not the business of the Court to clear, but in the thing described, which it is the business of the Court to discover and distinguish so as to carry out the writer’s intent. Hence parol evidence is admissible to solve such an ambiguity. A latent ambiguity, as it is solely raised by extrinsic evidence, is allowed to be removed by the same means.(3)

A good test of the difference between the two forms of ambiguities is to put the instrument into the hands of an ordinarily intelligent educated person. If on perusal he sees no ambiguity, but there is nevertheless an uncertainty as to its application, the ambiguity is latent; if he detects an ambiguity from merely reading the instrument, it is patent. ‘Thus in Illustration (b) to this section, the blanks would be patent ambiguities, and they could not be filled in by parol testimony as to the intention of the parties or the like. In the Illustration to section 95, no one could detect any ambiguity from merely reading the instrument. The ambiguity does not consist in the language, but is introduced by extrinsic circumstances, and the maxim is quod ex facto ortur ambiguum verificaturs factum tollitur.(4) The distinction has prevailed since the time of Lord Bacon who says: ‘‘There are two sorts of ambiguities of words, the one is ambiguitas patens, and the other latens. Patens is that which appears to be ambiguous upon the deed or instrument; latens is that which seemeth certain and without ambiguity, for anything that appeareth upon the deed or instrument; but there is some collateral matter out of the deed that brendeth the ambiguity. Ambiguitas patens never holpen by averment, and the reason is, because the law will not couple and mingle matter of speciality, which is of the higher account, with matter of averment, which is of inferior account of law; for that were to make all deeds hollow and subject to averments; and so, in effect, that to pass without deed, which the law appointeth shall not pass but by deed. Therefore, if a man give land to J D and J S et hereditibus, and do not limit to whether of their heirs, it shall not be supplied by averment to whether of them: the intention was (that) the inheritance should be limited.’’ ‘‘But if it be ambiguitas latens, then otherwise it is; as if I grant my manor of S to J F and his heirs, here appeareth no ambiguity at all. But if the truth be, that I have the manors both of South S and North S, this ambiguity is matter in fact and, therefore, it shall be holpen by averment, whether of them it was, that the party intended should pass.’’

The above distinction which, as already observed, was originally taken by Lord Bacon, was so taken with reference to pleading upon instruments under seal, and cannot, it has been said,(5) be relied on as a test of the admissibility

---

(1) See authorities cited in note, post.
(2) Deyji v. Plumber, 1 A., 275 (1876).
(3) Wharton, Ev., §§ 988, 987. See also Taylor, Ev., §§ 1212, 1219; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 540; Ronnie, N. P. Ev., 29–33; in which a large number of patent and latent ambiguities will be found collected; Wigram on Extricis Evidence; Steph. Dig., Art. 91; Powell, Ev., 473, 474; Wood’s Practice Evidence; 37–43; Gresley, Ev., 278, et seq.; Goodacre, Ev., 391, et seq. The rule was the same prior to this Act: Ram Lokhun v. Unnapoona Dossor, 7 W. R., 144 (1867) [where there is a latent ambiguity in the wording, parol evidence is admissible to explain it]. Umesh Chander v. Sageman, 5 B. L. R., 633, 634 (1890).
(4) Norton, Ev., 279.
of evidence in the present connection, for there have been cases of patent ambiguity in the sense abovementioned, in which evidence has been admitted in explanation thereof. "It is true that a complete blank cannot be filled up by parol testimony, however strong. Thus a legacy to Mr. — cannot have any effect given to it: (1) nor a legacy to Lady.— (2) But if there are any words to which a reasonable meaning may be attached, parol evidence may be restored to, to show what that meaning is. Thus a legacy to a person described by an initial as to Mrs. C.,' admits explanation as by shewing that the testator was accustomed to speak of a particular person by the initial of her name. (3) And when a blank was left for the Christian name, parol evidence has been admitted, (4) to shew who was intended." (5) And so also when the deceased, by his will, appointed certain executors, and amongst others "Perceival—of Brighton, the father;" the Court admitted evidence of the circumstances under which the deceased made his will, and of the persons about him, in order to satisfy itself who was meant by the imperfect description of the executor contained therein. (6) The cases in which evidence will be admitted is clearly denoted in the case of In the Goods of De Rosaz (cited supra), and in the statement of this rule by Sir J. Stephen in his Digest. (7) viz., " if the words of a document are so defective or ambiguous as to be unmeaning, no evidence can be given to show what the author of the document intended to say. In the last solution Lord Bacon’s famous and much vexed maxim has been said to amount to no more than this, that an incurable ambiguity (which is very rare) is fatal. (8)

The principles upon which evidence is in this connection both admitted and rejected is explained in Starkie on Evidence (p. 563), as follows:— "By patent ambiguity must be understood an ambiguity inherent in the words, and incapable of being dispelled, either by any legal rules of construction applied to the instrument itself, or by evidence showing that terms in themselves unmeaning or unintelligible, are capable of receiving a known conventional meaning. The great principle on which the rule is founded is that the intention of parties should be construed, not by vague evidence of their intentions independently of the expressions which they have thought fit to use, but by the expressions themselves. Now, those expressions which are incapable of any legal construction and interpretation by the rules of art, are either so because they are in themselves unintelligible or because being intelligible they exhibit a plain and obvious uncertainty. In the first instance, the case admits of two varieties; the terms, though at first sight unintelligible, may yet be capable of having a meaning annexed to them by extrinsic evidence, just as if they were written in a foreign language, as when mercantile terms are used which amongst mercantile men bear a distinct and definite meaning, although others do not comprehend them;"

(1) Baylis v. Attorney-General, 2 Atk., 239. See Re Marduff, 2 Ch., 451, C. A. (1897.)
(2) Hunt v. Hart, 3 Bro. C. C., 311. The province of the Court is to interpret, not to make. It is to construe the expressions the parties have themselves furnished, not to supply others. Were the Court by the process of construction to insert in the blank the person, property or thing omitted as if it were to say who was the lady—this would be to supply, not to interpret; and though the law admits evidence to explain, it excludes that which would only be to add to a document: Goodlove, Ev., 302. As the language expresses no definite meaning if evidence were allowed to be given as to what the intention of the person using it was, the effect would be, not to interpret words, but to conjecture as to intention, and that this section forbids. Cunningham, Ev., 270.
(5) Per Sir J. Hannen: In the Goods of De Rosaz, L. R., 2 P. D., 66, 69.
(6) In the goods of De Rosaz, supra. So also evidence was admitted when the legatee was merely referred to by a term of endearment (Sullivan v. Sullivan, L. R., 4 Ev., 471), cited in Philson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 340. And where a document which began " I, A & B," was signed " C B," the ambiguity apparent on the face of the writing was allowed to be explained by parol: Summers v. Moorhouse, 13 Q. B. D., 288.
(7) Art. 91, cited with approval in Wharton's Ev., § 866.
(8) Browne, op. cit., 123, and see Thayer's cases on Evidence, 1021.
the terms used, may, on the other hand, be capable of no distinct and definite interpretation. Now it is evident that to give effect to an instrument, the terms of which, though apparently ambiguous, are capable of having a distinct and definite meaning annexed to them, is no violation of the general principle; for in such a case effect is given, not to any loose conjecture as to the intent and meaning of the party, but to the expressed meaning, and that, on the other hand, where either the terms used are incapable of any certain and definite meaning, or, being in themselves intelligible, exhibit a plain and obvious uncertainty, and are equally capable of different applications, to give an effect to them by extrinsic evidence as to the intention of the party, would be to make the supposed intention operate independently of any definite expression of such intention. By patent ambiguity, therefore, must be understood an inherent ambiguity, which cannot be removed either by the ordinary rules of legal construction or by the application of extrinsic and explanatory evidence, showing that expressions, primi facie unintelligible, are yet capable of conveying a certain and definite meaning."

And Sir W. Grant in Colpoys v. Colpoys,(1) says:—"In the case of a patent ambiguity,—that is, one appearing on the face of the instrument,—is a general rule, a reference to matter dehors the instrument is forbidden. It must, if possible, be removed by construction, and not by averment. But in many cases this is impracticable: where terms used are wholly indefinite and equivocal, and carry on the face of them no certain or explicit meaning, and the instrument furnishes no materials by which the ambiguity thus arising can be removed, if in such cases the Court were to reject the only mode by which the meaning could be ascertained, viz., the resort to extrinsic circumstances, the instrument must become inoperative and void. As a minor evil, therefore, common sense and the law of England (which are seldom at variance) warrant the departure from the general rule, and call in the light of extrinsic evidence. The books are full of instances sanctioned by the highest authorities both in law and equity. When the person or the thing is designated, on the face of the instrument by terms imperfect and equivocal, admitting either of no meaning at all by themselves, or of a variety of different meanings, referring tacitly or expressly for the ascertainment and completion of the meaning to extrinsic circumstances, it has never been considered an objection to the reception of the evidence of those circumstances that the ambiguity was patent, manifested on the face of the instrument. When a legacy is given to a man by his surname and the Christian name is not mentioned, is not that a patent ambiguity? Yet it is decided that evidence is admissible. So, where there is a gift of the testator's stock that is ambiguous it has different meanings when used by a farmer and a merchant. So, with a bequest of jewels, if by a nobleman, it would pass all; but if by a jeweller, it would not pass those that he had in his shop. Thus, the same expressions may vary in meaning according to the circumstances of the testator."

A document is not patently ambiguous because it is unintelligible to an uninstructed person, as to one uninstructed in technical terms of art or science, local peculiarity, obsolete meaning and the like. In such cases parol evidence is always admissible to ascertain the meaning of the terms used (see section 98, post). A document is ambiguous only, if found to be of uncertain meaning when persons of competent skill and information are unable to interpret it.(2) So also a distinction must be drawn between inaccuracy of expression and ambiguity. Language may be inaccurate without being ambiguous, and it may be ambiguous although perfectly accurate. If, for instance, a testator having only one house, a leasehold, devises it as his freehold house; the language is inaccurate but not ambiguous. If, however, a testator were to devise an estate "to

(1) Jacob, 463.
(2) Norton, Ev., 280; Wigram on Extrinsic Evidence, 105.
J B, of Dale, the son of T, " and there were two persons to whom the entire description accurately applied, this description though accurate, would be ambiguous. It is obvious therefore that the whole of that class of cases in which an inaccurate description is found to be sufficient merely by the rejection of words of surplusage are cases in which no ambiguity really exists. The meaning is certain notwithstanding the inaccuracy of the testator’s language.(1)

Nothing in this Chapter is to affect the provisions of the Indian Succession Act as to the construction of Wills.(2) The rule, however, under that Act is the same as that enacted by this section, for where there is an ambiguity or deficiency on the face of the will no extrinsic evidence as to the intentions of the testator will be admitted.(3) Where, however, any word material to the full expression of the meaning has been omitted, it may be supplied by the context. So if a testator gives a legacy of ‘‘five hundred’’ to his daughter A, and a legacy of ‘‘five hundred rupees’’ to his daughter B; A will take a legacy of five hundred rupees.(4)

94. When language used in a document is plain in itself, and when it applies accurately to existing facts, evidence may not be given to show that it was not meant to apply to such facts.

Illustration.

A sells to B, by deed, ‘my estate at Rampur containing 100 bighas.’ A has an estate at Rampur containing 100 bighas. Evidence may not be given of the fact that the estate meant to be sold was one situated at a different place and of a different size.

Principle.—See Note, post.

s. 3 (“Document.”) s. 3 (“Fact.”) s. 3 (“Evidence.”)

Norton, Ev., 281; Field, Ev., 438; Cunningham, Ev., 256.

COMMENTARY.

Not only must a document be produced to prove its own contents or the disposition or other fact, which is its subject-matter, but when so produced the document must be allowed to speak for itself. This section expresses the rule of English law that where the words of a document are free from ambiguity and external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of the words the document is to be construed according to the plain common meaning of the words, and that in such case, extrinsic evidence for the purpose of explaining the document according to the supposed intention of the parties is inadmissible.(5) Where the terms of a document are plain and unambiguous, the intention of the parties to it should be collected from the

(2) 100, post.
(3) Act X of 1865 (Indian Succession), s. 68.
(4) Ib., s. 64.
(5) Shore v. Wilson, 5 Scott, N. R., 958, 1037; Cunningham, Ev., 265; Ram Lochan v. Unnapoorana Dossae, 7 W. R., 144 (1867); [Extraneous evidence is not admissible to alter a written contract, or where the wording of the document is perfectly clear, to show that its meaning is different from what its words import; the same rule is laid down by Wood, V. C., as to wills—“When any subject is discovered which not only is within the words of the instrument, according to their natural construction, but exhausts the whole of these words, then the investigation must stop. You are bound to take the interpretation which entirely exhaust the whole of the series of expressions used by the testator and are not permitted to go any further.” Webb v. Byng, 1 K. & J., 580. The rule which is enacted by this section has been more recently affirmed by the House of Lords in North Eastern Railway v. Hastings (1900), L. R., A. C. 260.
language of the document itself without the aid of surrounding circumstances. (1) The true construction of an agreement depends upon the ordinary meaning of the words used, and, if those words are plain and unambiguous, it is clear that they cannot be explained away by extrinsic evidence and still less by mere reasoning from probabilities. (2) Extrinsic evidence is admissible only to explain a document, but not to contradict it. In the case, the subject of the section, no explanation is necessary. There is here evidently no patent ambiguity; for by the terms of the section the language used in the document is "plain in itself;" and there is as evidently no latent ambiguity, for the language used in the document "applies accurately to existing facts." It follows, therefore, that there is no ground for the admission of explanatory extrinsic evidence. On the other hand, the admission of evidence to show that the language was not meant to apply to existing facts would be in effect to contradict the express provisions of the document. (3) The same rule applies with regard to construction simply. A deed must be construed according to the plain ordinary meaning of its terms; and words may not be imported into it, from any conjectural view of its intention which would have the effect of materially changing the nature of the estate thereby created. (4) This section is a qualification of the rule contained in section 92, sixth Proviso (5).

95. When language is used in a document is plain in itself, but is unmeaning in reference to existing facts, evidence may be given to show that it was used in a peculiar sense.

Illustration.

A sells to B, by deed, 'my house in Calcutta.'

A had no house in Calcutta, but it appears that he had a house at Howrah, of which B had been in possession since the execution of the deed.

These facts may be proved to show that the deed related to the house at Howrah.

96. When the facts are such that the language used might have been meant to apply to any one, and could not have been meant to apply to more than one, of several persons or things, evidence may be given of facts which show which of those persons or things it was intended to apply to.

Illustrations.

(a) A agrees to sell to B, for Rs. 1,000, 'my white horse.' A has two white horses.
Evidence may be given of facts which show which of them was meant.

(b) A agrees to company B to Haidarabad.
Evidence may be given of facts showing whether Haidarabad in the Dekkhan or Haidarabad in Sindh was meant.

97. When the language used applies partly to one set of existing facts, and partly to another set of existing facts, but the whole of it does not apply correctly to either, evidence may be given to show to which of the two it was meant to apply.

Illustration.

A agrees to sell to B, ‘my land at X in the occupation of Y.’ A has land at X, but not in the occupation of Y, and he has land in the occupation of Y, but it is not at X.

Evidence may be given of facts showing which he meant to sell.

Principle.—See Notes, post.

s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 3 ("Fact.")

s. 3 ("Evidence.")

COMMENTS.

Latent ambiguity in the more ordinary application arises from the existence of facts external to the instrument; and the creation by these facts of a question not solved by the document itself. A latent ambiguity arises when the words of the instrument are clear, but their application to the circumstances is doubtful; here the ambiguity, being raised solely by extrinsic evidence, is allowed to be removed by the same means. (1) In strictness of definition such cases as those in which peculiar usage may afford a construction to a term different from its natural one (see section 96, post), would be instances of latent ambiguity, since the double use of the term would leave it open to the doubt in which of its two senses it were to be taken. It is not, however, to this class of cases that reference is now made; but to those in which the ambiguity is rather that of description, either equivocal itself from the existence of two subject-matters or two persons both falling within its terms (section 96), or imperfect when brought to bear on any given person or thing (sections 94, 97).

Section 94, ante, provides that when the language of a document is plain and applies accurately to existing facts, evidence may not be given to show that it was not meant to apply to such facts. The present section (96) so far modifies the rule as to provide that when language correctly describes two sets of circumstances and cannot have been intended to apply to both, evidence may be given to show to which set it was intended to apply. (2) Where a description applies equally to several different subjects, an "equivocation" (which is a form of latent ambiguity) arises, and extrinsic evidence, including declarations of the author of the instrument, is admissible to identify the subject intended; (3) provided that such subject cannot be identified from the instrument itself. (4) This proposition has been held to apply to the case of two persons bearing the same name as that mentioned in the document, although one has also additional names not mentioned therein. (5) In the Illustrations appended to the section the language is certain. The doubt as to which of two similar persons or things the language applies has been introduced by, and may therefore be removed by, extrinsic evidence. The section says evidence may be given of "facts," a term which will include statements. (1) And as already observed, even according to English law, declarations of intention on the part of the author of the instrument are admissible. To use the words of Lord Abinger,(2) this evidence of intention can properly be admitted "where the meaning of the testator's words is neither ambiguous nor obscure, and where the devise is on the face of it perfect and intelligible, but, from some of the circumstances admitted in proof, an ambiguity arises, as to which of the two or more things, or which of the two or more persons (each answering the words in the will) the testator intended to express. Thus, if a testator devise his manor of S to A B, and has two manors of North S and South S, it being clear he means to devise one only, whereas both are equally denoted by the words he has used, in that case there is, what Lord Bacon calls, 'an equivocation,' i.e., the words equally apply to either manor, and evidence of previous intention may be received to solve this latent ambiguity, for the intention shows what he meant to do; and when you know that, you immediately perceive that he has done it by the general words he has used, which, in their ordinary sense, may properly bear that construction.

(1) Umesh Chandra v. Sageman, 5 B. L. R., 633, 634 (1889); s. c., 12 W. R., O. J., 2.
(2) Goodeve, Ev., 396.
(3) Cunningham, Ev., 276.

The Indian Succession Act embodies the same rule as that contained in section 96 of this Act; enacting that when the words of a will are unambiguous, but it is found by extrinsic evidence that they admit of applications, one only of which can have been intended by the testator, extrinsic evidence may be taken to show which of these applications was intended. (3) Thus a man having two cousins of the name of Mary, bequeath a sum of money to "his cousin Mary." It appears that there are two persons each answering the description in the will. That description, therefore, admits of two applications, only one of which can have been intended by the testator. Evidence is admissible to show which of the two applications was intended. (4)

As section 96 deals with equivocal descriptions, so sections 95, 97, may be said to deal with imperfect descriptions. Both of the latter sections refer to latent ambiguities. Section 97 is only an extension and application of the rule laid down in section 95. (5) The latter section formulates the general rule with regard to imperfect descriptions embodied in the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet (a false description does not vitiate the document), while the former deals with a particular form of imperfect description, namely, when such description applies to a double and not to a single set of facts. There may be enough of description in the instrument to have indicated some specific thing as the object of its operation, or some given individual as the objects of its provisions; but it might turn out, on seeking to apply the instrument to its supposed subject-matter or object, that, from an imperfection of description there was neither subject nor object in exact correspondence with it; so that it would be uncertain on what, or in whose favour, the instrument was designed to operate. Thus where in the case of a devise of Trogue's farm "in the occupation of," the testator had a farm called Trogues, but a portion of it only was in M's occupation, the farm was allowed to pass. (6) In such a case the extrinsic circumstances create the uncertainty, and the question which extrinsic circumstances create, extrinsic evidence is admitted to clear up. The distinction is clear between clearing up an ambiguity and creating a subject. (7) The cases under this heading are (a) where a description is partly correct and partly incorrect (section 95); and (b) where part of a description applies to one subject-matter and part to another (section 97). If the document applies in part but not with accuracy

---

(1) S. 2, ante.

(2) In Doe v. Hiscocke, 5 M. & W., at pp. 398, 399.

(3) Act X of 1865, s. 67, extended to Hindu Wills, by Act XXI of 1870, s. 2.

(4) Ib., Illustr.

(5) Cunningham, Ev.

(7) Goodeve, Ev., 395, 396.
to the circumstances of the case, the Court may draw inferences from those circumstances as to the meaning of the document, whether there is more than one, or only one thing or persons to whom, or to which, the inaccurate description may apply. (1) According to English law (2) declarations of intention on the part of the author of the instrument cannot be given in evidence in the cases above mentioned. But the propriety of a rule which excludes such evidence in the cases dealt with by sections 95 and 97, but admits it in the case dealt with by section 96 has been doubted; it being said that the evidence should be admitted or excluded in all cases alike. (3) No such distinction between declarations of intention and other evidence is observed by this Act (4) and therefore in all cases where extrinsic evidence is admissible, whether under sections 95 and 97 or section 96, declarations of intention will be admissible. (5) When declarations of intention are receivable in evidence, their admissibility does not depend upon the time when they were made. Certainly contemporaneous declarations will, ceteris paribus, be entitled to greater weight than those made before or after the execution; but in point of law no distinction can be drawn between them, unless the subsequent declarations instead of relating to what the declarant had done, or had intended to do, by an instrument, were simply to refer to what he intended to do, or wished to be done, at the time of speaking. (6)

When a description is partly correct and partly incorrect (section 95), and the former part is sufficient to identify the subject-matter intended, while the latter does not apply to any subject, the erroneous part will be rejected on the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet cum de corpore constat (7) (a false description will not hurt when it can co-exist with the subject itself) (v. supra), unless it is introduced by way of exception or limitation. (8) The principle is that so much of the description as has no application being laid aside as mere surplusage, what remains is sufficient to identify the thing really meant. The words "in Calcutta" in the illustration have no application. The words "my house" have application when it is shown that A had a house at Howrah. (9) The description may not accurately specify even one person or thing; that is the description of the subject intended may be true in part but not true in every particular. But the instrument will not in consequence of the inaccuracy be regarded as inoperative. If after rejecting so much of the description as is false, the remainder will enable the Court to ascertain with legal certainty the subject-matter to which the instrument really applies, it will be allowed to take effect upon the principle of the maxim above cited. But the rule which rejects erroneous descriptions which are not substantially important, can, however, only be applied where enough remains to show the intent plainly. (10)

Thus by a devise of "all that my farm called Trogue's farm, now in the occupation of C," the whole farm passed, though it was not all in C's occupation. (11) So also it was held that a devise of all the testator's freehold houses in Aldersgate Street, when in fact he had only leasehold houses there, was, in substance and effect, a devise of his houses in that street the word "freehold" being

---

(1) Steph. Dig., Art. 91, cl. (7).
(2) Ib., Taylor, Ev., §§ 1202, 1206, 1218.
(4) It is to be noted, however, that while s. 96 says "evidence may be given of facts" which would include statements under s. 3), ss. 96, 97 say "evidence may be given to show." It is conceived, however, that this verbal variation does not indicate any real difference.
(5) Field, Ev., 441; Cunningham, Ev., 275—277.
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 1200, and cases there cited.
(7) Taylor, Ev., §§ 1218—1223. (For an application of this maxim, see Coster v. Treesett, Ld., 1898, 2 Ch., 511).
(8) Ib., § 1214.
(9) Field, Ev., 459.
(10) Taylor, Ev., §§ 1218—1230.
LATENT AMBIGUITY.

513

rejected as surplusage. (1) And when a sale-certificate described as a jotedari interest what was really a shikmi taluk this misdescription was held not to prejudice the purchaser's title. (2) A mortgage-deed of certain bhagdari lands stated that "all the properties appertaining to the entire bhag," were thereby mortgaged to the plaintiff. The bhag comprised (inter alia) four gabhans (building-sites). But the clause which set forth the particulars of the property mortgaged thereby, specified only two gabhans, one only of which belonged to the bhag and the other did not. The deed then proceeded: "According to these particulars, lands, houses and gabhans, barn yards, wells, tanks, padars and pasture land also, together with whatsoever may appertain to the bhag—all the properties appertaining to the whole bhag have been mortgaged and delivered into your possession . . . . . There is no other property appertaining to the said bhag of which mention is not made here." It was held that the particulars were "the leading description," and the supplementary description of them as constituting the entire bhag should be regarded as "falsa demonstration." (3) A further illustration is afforded by a class of cases, of not infrequent occurrence in India, where there is a description of land in a conveyance, lease, or other document, such a description setting forth the boundaries and then specifying the quantity, as so many acres, bighas or the like. Here the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet applies; it is considered to be a mere false description, if there is an error in the quantity; and the land within the boundaries passes by the conveyance or lease, whether it be less or more than the quantity specified. (4) Where a testator made a bequest to "A B my avurasa son" knowing that A B was not his avurasa son, it was held, that the misdescription was immaterial and that A B took the bequest. (5)

Though false statements introduced into an instrument by way of affirmation only, may, as has been seen, be rejected, provided the remaining description be sufficient to identify the person or thing intended; yet they cannot be disregarded if they have been used by way of exception or limitation; because in this latter case, it is obvious that they were intended to have a material operation. Moreover, if there be one subject-matter as to which all the demonstrations in a written instrument are true, and another as to which part are true and part false, the instrument will be intended to contain words to pass only that subject-matter as to which all the circumstances are true. (6)

When part of a description applies to a subject-matter and part to another (section 97), extrinsic evidence is admissible to ascertain to which the language applies, and so to resolve the latent ambiguity. Thus a legatee may be so described in a will that while part of the description answers to one claimant, the remainder may apply to another. So where a testator devised an estate to his nephew for life with remainder over to "Elizabeth Abbott, a natural daughter of E A of G, single woman who had formerly been in his service," and it appeared that at the date of the will, E A, the mother, was the wife of J C, and had had only two children, namely, a natural son named John, born before his mother's marriage, shortly after she had left the testator's service and of whom the testator's nephew was the putative father, the other named

(1) Day v. Triq, I P. Wms., 286; and see other cases cited in Taylor, Ev., § 1221.
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 1224; and cases there cited.
Margaret, who was born four years subsequently to her leaving the service, and was a legitimate daughter by C, and it further appeared that the testator had wished his nephew to marry his servant, that he was aware she had had a natural child, and that he had treated her kindly since its birth and up to date of the will; but no proof was given that he knew whether the natural child was a boy or a girl. It was held that the testator meant to provide for his nephew's natural child by his servant, Elizabeth Abbott, and that the mistake of the name and sex was not sufficient to defeat the devise. (1)

Formerly the law attached somewhat greater weight to the name than to the description of the legatee, a doctrine which is embodied in the maxim veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. But it is doubtful whether this rule that the name in such cases is to prevail over the description, would be strictly followed now; the modern inclination of the Courts being to free themselves when necessary from artificial rules and to decide the point purely by preponderance of probability. (2)

The following has been stated to be a summary of the English law upon these points: (3) — "From what precedes, the following rules may be collected:—

First, where a written instrument the description of the person or thing intended is applicable with legal certainty to each of several subjects, extrinsic evidence, including proof of declarations of intention, is admissible, to establish which of such subjects was intended by the author. (4)

Secondly, if the description of the person or thing be partly applicable and partly inapplicable to each of several subjects, though extrinsic evidence of the surrounding circumstances may be received for the purpose of ascertaining to which of such subjects the language applies, yet evidence of the author's declarations of intention will be inadmissible. (5)

Thirdly, if the description be partly correct and partly incorrect, and the correct part be sufficient of itself to enable the Court to identify the subject intended, while the incorrect part is inapplicable to any subject, parol evidence will be admissible to the same extent as in the last case, and the instrument will be rendered operative by rejecting the erroneous statement. (6)

Fourthly, if the description be wholly inapplicable to the subject intended, or said to be intended by it, evidence cannot be received to prove whom or what the author really intended to describe. (7)

Fifthly, if the language of a written instrument, when interpreted according to its primary meaning, be insensible with reference to extrinsic circumstance, collateral facts may be resorted to, in order to show that in some secondary sense of the words, and in one in which the author meant to use them, the instrument may have a full effect. (8)

First rule here given corresponds with section 96; second rule with section 97; third and fifth rules correspond with section 95; and fourth rule corresponds with section 94; while no distinction is made in any case between declarations of intention and other evidence. (9)

The Indian Succession Act provides a similar rule enacting that, if the thing which the testator intended to bequeath can be sufficiently identified from the description of it given in the will, but some parts of the description do not apply, such parts of the description shall be rejected as erroneous and the

---

(1) Ryall v. Hammam, 10 Beav., 536; Taylor, Ev., § 1216.
(2) Wigr., Wills, 160.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1215; and cases there cited;
(4) Dow v. Hiscock's, supra.
(6) Wigr., Wills, 67—70.
(7) Hammond, 54 Ch. D., 255; and see Act X of
(8) Id., 153.
1882 (Indian Succession), s. 63.
(9) Dow v. Hiscock's, supra; Wigr., Wills, 11 cited; Taylor, Ev., § 1131.
(10) Field, Ev., 440, 441.
bequest shall take effect. So also where the words used in the will to designate or describe a legatee or a class of legatees, sufficiently show what is meant an error in the name or description will not prevent the legacy from taking effect. A mistake in the name of a legatee may be corrected by a description of him, and a mistake in the description of a legatee may be corrected by the name."

98. Evidence may be given to show the meaning of illegible or not commonly intelligible characters, of foreign, obsolete, technical, local and provincial expressions, of abbreviations and of words used in a peculiar sense.

Illustration.

A, a sculptor, agrees to sell to B "all my models." A has both models and modelling tools. Evidence may be given to show which he meant to sell.

Principle.—This description of evidence is admissible in order to enable the Court to understand the meaning of the words contained in the instrument itself by themselves and without reference to the extrinsic facts on which the instrument is intended to operate. See Note, post.

s. 3 ("Evidence.")

s. 49 (Opinion as to meaning of words or terms.)

Steph. Dig., Art. 91, cl. 2; Taylor, Ev., § 1162; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 538-554; Roger's Expert Testimony, § 118.

COMMENTARY.

The principle upon which words are to be construed in instruments is very plain—where there is a popular and common word in an instrument, that word must be construed primâ facie in its popular and common sense. If it is a word of a technical or legal character, it must be construed according to its technical or legal meaning. If it is a word which is of a technical and scientific character, then it must be construed according to that which is its primary meaning, namely its technical and scientific meaning. But before evidence can be given of the secondary meaning of a word, the Court must be satisfied from the instrument itself, or from the circumstances of the case that the word ought to be construed not in its popular or primary signification, but according to its secondary intention.

Evidence may not be given to show that common words, the meaning of which is plain and which do not appear from the context to have been used in a peculiar sense, were in fact so used. The general rule is that the meaning of an English word, not a technical term, cannot be made known by an examination of witnesses. It has, therefore, been held error in an action for libel to allow a physician to testify as to the meaning of the word "malpractice." It may happen, however, that from some peculiarity of the character in which it is written, the instrument is itself illegible to the Court called upon to expound it, without the aid of persons skilled in decipherment; its language.

(1) Act X of 1865, s. 66, and see s. 66, ib., both applying to wills of Hindus; Act XXI of 1870, s. 2.

(2) Ib., s. 63, applicable to Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 2.

(3) Goodeve, Ev., 374, citing Shore v. Wilson, post.

(4) Holt & Co. v. Coller, 16 Ch. D., 718, 720, per Fry, J.; see Rayner v. Rayner (1904), Ch. 178, cited in notes to s. 92, Prov. 6, ante.

(5) Steph. Dig., Art. 91, cl. 2; Roger's op. cit., § 118.
may be foreign to the Court; or it may contain terms as being either of an obsolete character, or those of abbreviation, art, local or mercantile usage—which may not be understood by the Judges; or which having assigned to them by peculiar usage an interpretation different from their ordinary and popular one, may be themselves equivocal. Accordingly, until before the Court in a form deciphered, translated, or, as to the meaning of particular characters or expressions explained, it would have no means of adjudication. Until brought before it by interpretation in a living shape, it would be a dead letter only, the Court would be called on to expound; and it is obvious, accordingly, that to this extent at all events parol evidence must, from the very necessity of the case, be admitted. It is not because the language is ambiguous, however, but because it is unknown, that for this purpose evidence is received,—received not as proof of any particular intention in its use, but simply to affix an interpretation to characters or expressions used. (1) The question whether language is ambiguous depends upon the question whether it is ambiguous when addressed to a person competent to interpret language. Words cannot be ambiguous because they are unintelligible to a man who cannot read, and within the same reason words cannot be ambiguous merely because the Court which is called upon to explain them may be ignorant of a particular fact, art, or science which was familiar to the person who used the words, and a knowledge of which is therefore necessary to a right understanding of the words he has used. (2)

The principle is thus stated by Tindal, C. J., in the case of Shore v. Wilson: (3)

"Where any doubt arises upon the true sense and meaning of the words themselves, or any difficulty as to their application under the surrounding circumstances, the sense and meaning of the language may be investigated and ascertained by evidence dehors the instrument itself; for reason and common sense agree, that by no other means can the language of the instrument be made to speak the real mind of the party. Such investigation does of necessity take place in the interpretation of instruments written in a foreign language,—in the case of ancient instruments, where, by the lapse of time and change of manners, the words have acquired in the present age a different meaning from that which they bore when originally employed,—in cases where terms of art or science occur,—in mercantile contracts which, in many instances, use a peculiar language, employed by those only who are conversant in trade or commerce; and in other instances in which the words, besides their general common meaning, have acquired, by custom or otherwise, a well-known peculiar idiomatic meaning in the particular country in which the party using them was dwelling, or in the particular society of which he formed a member, and in which he passed his life. In all these cases evidence is admitted to expound the real meaning of the language used in the instrument, in order to enable the Court or Judge to construe the instrument, and to carry such real meaning into effect.

In the same case the law is thus stated by Lord Wensleydale in a judgment, which marks the distinction which exists between the interpretation of instruments and their application to facts. "I apprehend that there are two descriptions of evidence (the only two which bear upon the subject of the present enquiry), and which are clearly admissible in every case for the purpose of enabling a Court to construe any written instrument, and to apply it practically. In the first place, there is no doubt that not only where the language of the instrument is such as the Court does not understand, it is competent to receive evidence of the proper meaning of that language, as when it is written in a foreign tongue; but it is also competent where technical words or peculiar terms, or indeed any expressions are used, which, at the time the instrument was written, had acquired an appropriate meaning either generally or by local usage, or amongst particular classes. This description of evidence is admissible, in order to enable the Court to understand the meaning of the words contained in the instrument itself, by themselves, and without reference to the extrinsic facts on which the instruments are intended to operate. For the purpose of applying the instrument to the facts, and determining what passes by it, and who take an interest under it, a second description of evidence is admissible, (1) viz., every materia fact, that will enable the Court to identify the person or thing mentioned in the instrument, and to place the Court, whose province it is to declare the meaning of the words of the instrument, as near as may be in the situation of the parties to it."

---

To the above citations may be added the short and terse statement by Gibbes, C. J., in a case on a charter party involving the meaning of the term 'privilege' (a sum in lieu of privilege having been reserved to the captain) where he says: "Evidence may be received to show the sense in which the mercantile part of the nation use the term 'privilege'—just as you would look into a dictionary to ascertain the meaning of a word; and it must be taken to have been used by the parties in its mercantile and established sense." (2)

This might arise either from the use of cypher, or shorthand or other peculiarity of character as the medium of expression; or it might be merely bad writing. (3) Referring to a case of cypher, Alderson, B., observed: "Words on paper are but the means by which a person expresses his meaning, and shorthand is, in this respect, like longhand, and equally admits of interpretation." (4) Experts have been allowed to be called to decipher abbreviated and elliptical entries in the book of a deceased notary. (5)

The translation in the High Courts, of documents in the languages of this country, affords familiar illustration on the point of language foreign to the Court. (6) Making a translation is not a mere question of trying to find out in a dictionary the words which are given as the equivalent of the words of the document; a true translation is the putting into English that which is the exact effect of the language used under the circumstances. Not only is a competent translator required but if the words in the foreign country had in business a particular meaning different from their ordinary meaning, an expert will be admitted to say what that meaning is. (7) But it is not competent for a witness called to translate writing in a foreign language to give any opinion as to its construction, that being a question for the Court. (8) The opinion of experts is not binding on the jury for it is with the jury and not with these witnesses that the determination of the case rests. The weight due to the testimony of these witnesses is a matter to be determined by the jury, and that weight will be proportioned to the soundness of the reasons adduced in its support. (9) A question has been raised as to whether official or Court translations are conclusive, or whether it is open to the parties to question their correctness and give evidence of the true translation. (10)

---

(1) See n. 92, ci. (6), ante.
(2) Birch v. Dreyper, Starke, 210; Smith v. Ludka Gheza, 17 B., 144 (1892). See further as to Willis, ss. 70, 76, 77, Act X of 1865.
(3) Good Eve, E., 376.
(6) Good Eve, E., 376.
(8) See in Sturrock v. Bentham, 17 C. B., N. S., 64, a Belgian consul was called to translate the following:—"Les informations sur Gustave Sichel sont telles que nous ne pouvons lui livrer les 2,500 caisses que contre ressement, Si vous voulez, nous vous enverrons les connaissance, et vous les lirez par direction." He was asked to what the article "les" referred, and said it was applicable to the "connaissances." This was held to be error. See also Di Sora v. Phillips, 10 H. L. C., 624.
Such evidence has, however, on other occasions been admitted. So in the cases undermentioned(1) the accuracy of one of the Court translations was impugned and in another (2) a translation of the defamatory matter prepared by the Court interpreter was put in by the prosecution. The Court interpreter was examined at the instance of the Court, and was cross-examined by the accused. He was also corroborated by another witness. A translation of the poem was also put in by the defence, who, as well as the prosecution, examined experts as to the meaning of the words used. Again, in the civil suit of Mahotala Bibee v. Haleemoozooman(3) the official translation of the words "mukaddarar mahalum" in a Persian document being impugned, both the Court interpreter and non-official expert witnesses were permitted to testify as to the correct translation of these terms. It is submitted that the true rule to be applied is that in the absence of any specific issue being raised as to the accuracy of a Court translation, such translation is binding, not because it is the act of a Court official, but because evidence is not generally admissible on points, not specifically put in issue by the parties. But it is open to the latter to raise such an issue. If it were otherwise the recovery of an estate worth a crore of rupees or the innocence of a party charged with a crime might be made to depend upon the decision of an official who, though in most instances both competent and honest, might in a particular case be wanting in either of these respects.

As regards obsolete expressions, the case of Shore v. Wilson(4) may be taken as an example. Here it being necessary in modern times to put a construction upon an ancient charitable foundation, and as to who were designed to take under the terms "Godly preachers of Christ's Holy Gospel;" evidence was allowed to be given from history, contemporaneous with the deed, of the existence of a particular sect assuming to themselves that denomination and of the founder's connection with them.

Local and provincial usage is admissible to explain local and provincial expressions. So in the case(5) of a lease of a rabbit warren where the lessee covenanted to leave on the warren at the expiration of the term 10,000 rabbits, the lessor paying for them £60 per thousand; evidence was received to show that, according to the local usage of that part of the country, 1,000 as applied to rabbits meant 1,200. So also evidence has been allowed to show that "18 pockets of Kent hops at 100s. "meant at 100s. per curt.(6) Evidence has been admitted to show that the word "year" in a theatrical contract meant those parts of the year during which the theatre was open.(7) In mercantile contracts in which, as has been already seen,(8) usage is admissible to annexe unexpressed incidents thereto, evidence of usage has frequently been also admitted to explain the meaning of words, as for instance, whether "months" mean calendar or lunar months"(9) to explain the word "days" in a bill-of-lading ;(10) and that "October" in a certain contract of Marine is reported in 26 C., 891. No cases were laid before the Court, which was informed that the practice was against the admission of this testimony. But as will appear from the text this is incorrect. See further as to this case, post.

(1) R. v. Tidak, 22 B., 112, at pp. 142, 143 (1897); Harris v. Brown, 29 C., 621: at p.
634 (1901).

(2) R. v. Kali Frazanne, 1 C. W. N., 465, 479
(1897).

(3) 10 C. L. R., 293, 300, 301, 322, in appeal (1881) [on behalf of the defendant Mahotala were examined Mr. Owen, the Chief Translator on the Original Side of the High Court, as also Major Jarrett, Mouliev Kaberooodin Ahmed and Abdul Kazi, and on the other side, Boodin Ahmed and Mahomed Yussuff.

(4) 9 C. & F., 355.

(5) Smith v. Wilson, 3 B. & Ad., 728.

(6) Spicer v. Cooper, 1 Q. B., 492.

(7) Grant v. Maddox, 15 M. & W., 737.

(8) S. 92, Prov. 5, ante.

(9) Jolly v. Young, 1 Esp., 186. Simpson
v. Marshallon, 11 Q. B., 32.

(10) Cockram v. Retberg, 3 Esp., 121; see Nielson v. Watt, 16 Q. B. D., 67; Norden Steamship Co. v. Dempsey, 1 C. P. D., 654.
VARIANCE OF DOCUMENTS.

Insurance meant from the 25th to the 31st of that month; (1) to show the meaning of the word "bale"; (2) and of the terms "within soundings"; (3) "F. O. B." "Free Bombay Harbour;" "Free Bombay Harbour and interest;" (4) "regular turns of loading;" "arrived in dock;" "in turn to deliver," and other similar expressions. (5) Evidence has been admitted to prove that the word "securities" was used by a testator in the sense of investments and stocks and shares in Railway and other Companies. (6)

Thus a wager to run one greyhound against another concluded with the initials "P. P." Evidence was received to show that it meant "Play or pay" that it is to say, win the match or forfeit the stakes. (7) Alderson, B., observed in the case now cited: "Standing by themselves these letters are insensible; but the evidence confers a real meaning upon them, by showing what the parties intended by them, and that they were inserted with the view of expressing a given thing." So Parke, B.: "There can be no doubt the evidence was receivable. It is like the case of a word written in a foreign language." The Illustration to the section which is taken from the case of Goblet v. Beechey,(8) affords another example of an abbreviation of a term of art. The will of the celebrated sculptor, Noilekens, contained a bequest of his "mod—tools for carving." The word "mod" was there contended on the one hand to mean modelling tools, and on the other models, which latter were of great value; and evidence of sculptors and others in interpretation of the word "mod" was admitted. So also where by a will a legacy was given to a Mrs. G., evidence was admitted to show that the testator was in the habit of calling a Mrs. Gregg, "Mrs. G.," and the latter was allowed accordingly to take under the initial. (9) As to abbreviated and elliptical entries in books v. ante, p. 518.

99. Persons who are not parties to a document, or their representatives in interest, may give evidence of any facts tending to show a contemporaneous agreement varying the terms of the document.

Illustration.

A and B make a contract in writing that B shall sell A certain cotton, to be paid for on delivery. At the same time they make an oral agreement that three months' credit shall be given to A. This could not be shown as between A and B, but it might be shown by C, if it affected his interests.

(1) Chaurand v. Angerstein, Peake R., 43.
(2) Corrison v. Perris, 2 C. B., N. S., 681. "If the term 'bale' as applied to gambier has acquired in the particular trade of a significance differing from its ordinary signification, evidence must be received on the subject, otherwise effect is not given to the contract." Per Cockburn, C. J.: So a bale of cotton may mean a bag in the Alexandrian trade and a compressed bale in the Levant trade, according to the usage of either trade. Taylor v. Bridgge, 2 C. & P., 525.
(5) See Taylor, Ev., § 1162, note (2), and Chipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 564 et seq., where a large number of cases will be found collected. So also the words "to ship" and "shipment" may acquire a particular meaning: Smith v. Ludha Ghella, 17 B., 140, 144, 145 (1882); in Jada Rai v. Bhosikotara Nundy, 17 C., 193, 194 (1882), evidence of a special meaning of the word "goods" was rejected.
(6) Raynor v. Raynor (1904), 1 Ch., 176.
(7) Deinbre v. Hutchinson, 10 M. & W., 86.
(8) 3 Sim., 24.
(9) Abbasi v. Massie, 3 Voz., 148: see also as to evidence of the habits of a testator; Kell v. Charmer, 23 Beav., 196; Blandell v. Gladstone, 11 Sim., 467; Lee v. Pain, 4 Haro, 251; Beamont v. Fell, 2 P. Wms., 141. Where the writer has been in the habit of nicknaming or misnaming persons or things and those names appear in a document, evidence of such habitual use of language may be given to explain the document in the same way as if it was written in cypher or a foreign language. Chipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 541.
Principle.—The rule excluding parol evidence to vary or contradict written instruments is applicable only in suits between the parties to the instruments and their representatives. These latter are to blame if the writing contains what was not intended, or omits what it should have contained. But third persons are not to be prejudiced by things recited in writing contrary to the truth through the ignorance, carelessness, or fraud of the parties, or thereby precluded from proving the truth, however contradictory, it may be to the written statement. (1) See Note. post.

a. 3 ("Document.")
a. 3 ("Fact.")
a. 3 ("Evidence.")

Steph. Dig., Art. 92; Taylor, Ev., § 1149; Greenleaf, Ev., § 279; Wharton, Ev., § 922.

COMMENTARY.

In a dispositive document, so far as concerns the parties to it, the settled terms cannot, as has already been seen, be varied by parol because those terms were mutually accepted for the purpose of disposing of rights in certain relations. A document may, however, be dispositive as to the parties and non-dispositive as to all others. The party who utters a deed, prepares it deliberately in respect to all persons, who through it may enter into business relations with him; but other persons are not contemplated by him, nor is the writing meant to bind him as to such persons who would in no way be bound to him. In respect to strangers, documents have usually no binding force, and hence a stranger against whom a document is brought to bear on trial may shew, by parol, mistakes in such writing. The rule forbidding the variation of writings by parol, applies only to parties and privies, and nothing in the rule protects them from attack by strangers. (2) This section enables strangers to an instrument to prove the oral nature of the transaction by oral evidence. When therefore A purported to make a gift of land to his daughter B, it was open to a creditor of X the husband of B to prove by oral evidence that it was in reality a sale to X and was therefore liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained against him. (3) It has been held in America, that even a party executing such a writing may prove by parol its mistake, when the issue is with a third person. (4) Thus where the question was, whether A, a pauper was settled in the parish of Cheadle, and a deed of conveyance to which A was a party was produced, purporting to convey land to A for a valuable consideration; the parish appealing against the order, was allowed to call A as a witness, to prove that no consideration passed. (5)

Doubts have been expressed (6) whether under this section, the right conferred on persons, other than the parties to a document or their representatives, of giving evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement "varying" the document, must not be understood as restricted to "varying," in contradistinction to "contradicting, adding to, or subtracting from," its terms. There is no reason, however, to suppose that any such distinction which is certainly unknown to English law was intended. The word "varying" was no doubt employed as embracing (as in fact it does) both contradictions, additions, and subtractions. (7)

100. Nothing in this Chapter contained shall be taken to affect any of the provisions of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) as to the construction of wills.

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 1149.
(2) Wharton, Ev., § 923.
(4) Wharton, Ev., § 923.
(5) R. v. Chendr, 8 B. & Ad., 833; Steph. Dig.
(6) Art. 92, cl. (a); 3., p. 190.
(7) Field, Ev., 441.
The provisions referred to in this section are contained in Part XI of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) sections 61—77, 82, 83, 85, 88—103, of which Part have been extended by Act XXI of 1870 (Hindu Wills Act) to the Wills of Hindus, Jains, Sikhs, and Buddhists in the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and the towns of Madras and Bombay. It is therefore only to Wills other than those the subject of these Acts, and to instruments other than Wills, that the provisions of the present Chapter absolutely and unreservedly apply. The section does not, however, declare that the present Chapter shall not apply at all in other cases, but only that nothing therein shall be taken to affect any of the provisions in the Acts above-mentioned.

(1) As to the meaning of the word "affect," see Administrator-General, Bengal v. Prem Lal, 21 C., 774 (1894).
PART III.

PRODUCTION & EFFECT OF EVIDENCE.

In Part I, the Act dealt with the material of belief or the facts which may be proved; and in Part II with the mode in which that material must be brought before the Court, viz., by oral or documentary evidence, according to the circumstances of the case.

From the question of the proof of facts, the Act passes to the question of the manner in which the proof is to be produced, and this is treated under the following heads: (i) burden of proof; (ii) estoppel; (iii) witnesses and their re-examination; (iv) improper admission and rejection of evidence.

In the first place, the Act deals with the question as to which of the parties before the Court is bound to supply the evidence which is to form the material of belief on the question at issue, or in other words on which of the parties the burden of proof lies. With regard to the burden of proof the Act lays down the broad rules well established in English law that the general burden of proof is on the party who, if no evidence at all were given, would fail, and that the burden of proving any particular fact is on the party who affirms it. After laying down the general principles which regulate the burden of proof (sections 101—106), the Act proceeds to enumerate the cases in which the burden of proof is determined in particular cases, not by the relation of the parties to the cause but by presumptions (sections 107—111). It notices two cases of conclusive presumptions (sections 112, 113), and finally declares in section 114, that the Court may, in all cases whatever draw from the facts before it whatever inferences it thinks just. In respect of presumptions, the framers of the Act have not followed the precedent of the New York Code in laying down a long list of presumptions, being of opinion that it is better in this matter not to fetter the discretion of the Judges. A few of such presumptions have been admitted to a place in the Code, as in the absence of an express rule, the Judges might feel embarrassed. These are—the presumptions relating to the continuance of life, partnership, agency, and tenancy; of ownership, good faith, legitimacy and cession of territory. But the terms of section 114 are such as to reduce to the position of mere maxims which are to be applied to facts by the Courts in their discretion, a large number of presumptions to which English law gives, to a greater or less extent, an artificial value. Nine of the most important of them are given by way of illustration. (1)

Of the two topics, of the production and effect of evidence, each legitimately embraces matters other than those dealt with in this portion of the Act. Thus the rules for enforcing the attendance of witnesses and production of documents fall under the head of the first topic, and are dealt with by the Civil Procedure Code. And the subject of the effect of evidence would strictly include considerations as to the weight to be given to evidence were it possible as it is not that the weight of evidence could be regulated by precise rules as the admissibility of evidence may be. (2)

---

(2) v. etc., Introduction, Kishori Lai Sirer's Evidence Act, 3, 24, 218.
This portion of the Act merely deals with the effect of evidence arising from the existence of presumptions as shifting the burden of proof, or as conclusive of facts, and from estoppels as precluding the admission of evidence upon the particular matter in respect of which the estoppels operate. Lastly, the Act deals with the effect of the improper admission or exclusion of evidence. The subject of the effect of evidence as produced by estoppels is dealt with by Chapter VIII. The subject of estoppels differs from that of presumptions in the circumstance that an estoppel is a personal disqualification laid upon a person peculiarly circumstances from proving peculiar facts; whereas a presumption is a rule that particular inferences shall be drawn from particular facts, whoever proves them. Much of the English learning connected with estoppels is extremely intricate and technical, but this arises principally from two causes, the peculiarities of English special pleading, and the fact that the effect of prior judgments is usually treated by the English text-writers as a branch of the law of evidence and not as a branch of the law of Civil Procedure. (1)

Chapters IX and X of the Act consist of a reduction to express propositions of rules as to the examination of witnesses, which are well established and understood. In these rules as to the examination of witnesses, the Act has not materially varied the law or the practice of the Courts existing at the date of its introduction and has merely put into propositions the rules of English law upon this subject. (2) One provision, however, in Chapter X requires special notice, namely, the power given to the Judge by section 165 to put questions or to order the production of documents. The framers of the Act considered it necessary, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this country, to put into the hand of Judges an amount of discretion as to the admission of evidence which, if it exists by law, is at all events rarely or never exercised in England. Judges in this country are expressly empowered to ask any questions upon any facts relevant or irrelevant at any period of the trial, subject to the provisos in the section abovementioned. (3)

Lastly, the Act in Chapter XI deals with the subject of the effect of the improper admission and rejection of evidence, declaring that no new trial or reversal of any decision shall be held or made, if it shall appear that independently of the evidence objected to and admitted there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision. This Chapter is in accordance with the spirit of the present rules of the Supreme Court in England, which, with the view of avoiding new trials on purely technical grounds, refuse a new trial except when a substantial wrong or miscarriage has been occasioned by the improper admission or rejection of evidence. (4)

The rules relating to the examination of witnesses are contained in Chapter X of this Act (sections 135—166), and will be found considered in detail in the notes to the sections of that Chapter. The order in which witnesses are produced and examined is regulated by the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes, or, in the absence of any specific provision, by the discretion of the Court. (5) Witnesses are examined upon oath or affirmation upon the maxim in judicio non credidi nisi juratis and the provisions of the Indian Oaths Act, (6) which was an Act to consolidate the law relating to judicial oaths and for other purposes, are given in the Appendix to which the reader is referred.

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE BURDEN OF PROOF.

Certain facts require no proof. (1) All other relevant facts, however, must be proved by evidence, that is, by the statements of witnesses, admissions or confessions of parties and the production of documents. The present Chapter deals with the rules regulating the question upon which of the parties to the cause rests the obligation of adducing that evidence or as it is technically called the "burden of proof." The term "burden of proof" fails to convey a precise idea, because the term is often interchangeably employed in two entirely distinct senses. That in many cases this is done unconsciously in no way lessens the confusion, which arises, from transferring reasoning entirely applicable to the phrase in one sense to its use in another. As commonly used "burden of proof" means (a) the burden of establishing a case, whether by a preponderance of evidence or beyond a reasonable doubt; and (b), the duty or necessity of introducing evidence either to establish such a case, or to meet an adverse amount to evidence sufficient to constitute a prima facie case. Burden of proof in the sense of "the burden of introducing evidence" is analogous to the phrase in its (a) sense, but analogous only. It rests not as before on the one party designated by the pleadings, but on the party, whether plaintiff or defendant, against whom the tribunal at the time when the question is to be determined would give its judgment, no further evidence being introduced. Before evidence is gone into, it rests on the party, who has the affirmative of the issue; after evidence is gone into, as the tribunal will only give its judgment in favour of a prima facie case, the burden of introducing evidence is always on the party, who has to meet such a prima facie case. (2) The answer to the question on whom the burden of proof rests includes the answer to another, which causes frequently great controversy in the preliminary stages of a case, viz., which party has the privilege or incurs the duty of beginning. Practically no point in the law of evidence involves more subtle principles of law; and none involves more important advantages and disadvantages according to the circumstances, to the contending parties. It is, however, needless to insist on the importance which necessarily attaches to the order in which parties are allowed to state their cases to the Court. (3)

The general rule as to the onus of proof and the consequent obligation of beginning is, that the proof of any particular fact lies on the party who alleges it, not on him who denies it; ei incumbit probatio qui diceat, non qui negat. Actori incumbit probatio. The issue must be proved by the party who states an affirmative; not by a party who states a negative. (4) The plaintiff is bound in the first instance to show at least a prima facie case, and, if he leaves it imperfect, the Court will not assist him. Hence the maxim: Potior est conditio defendendi. (5) When, however, the defendant, or either litigant party, instead of denying what is alleged against him, relies on some new matter which, if true, is an answer to it, the burden of proof changes sides; and he in his turn is bound to show a prima facie case at least and, if he leaves it imperfect, the Court will not assist him.

---

(1) See Introduction to Ch. III., ante.
(2) Best, Ev., Amer. Notes, pp. 268, 269.
(3) Ev., § 267; Taylor, Ev., § 364; for a criticism of the rule see Wharton, Ev., §§ 353, 357.
(4) Powell, Ev., 322; Taylor, Ev., § 378.
(5) Be-4, Ev., § 267.
(6) ib.
The principle, that the party who asserts the affirmative in any controversy ought to prove his assertion, and that he who only denies an allegation may rest on his denial, until, at least, the probable truth of the matter asserted has been established, is one which has received the widest recognition. The reason is obvious; to all propositions, which are neither the subject of intuitive or sensitive knowledge, nor probabilized by experience, the mind suspends its assent until proof of them is adduced, or as it has been said: (1) "Words are but the expression of facts; and therefore, when nothing is said to be done, nothing can be said to be proved;" which is probably what is meant by the expression "per rerum naturam, factum negantis probatio nulla est." (2) But in order to determine the burden of proof it is necessary to look for the affirmative in substance of the issue and not the affirmative in form. Thus a legal affirmative is by no means necessarily a grammatical affirmative, nor is a legal negative always a grammatical negative. Allegations essential to the support of a party's case, although negative in form, may be affirmative in reality; and the nature of language is such that the same proposition may in general be expressed at pleasure in an affirmative or negative shape. The rule may therefore more correctly be laid down that the issue must be proved by the party who states the affirmative in substance and not merely the affirmative in form. (3) This general rule may be affected both by presumptions (v. post), or by legislative enactment casting upon a particular party the burden of proving some particular fact. (4) There are two tests for ascertaining on which side the burden of proof lies; first, it lies upon the party, who would be unsuccessful, if no evidence were given on either side; (5) secondly, it lies upon the party who would fail, if the particular allegation in question were struck out of the pleading. (6)

The party on whom the onus probandi lies as developed by the record must begin. When the party on whom lies the obligation of beginning is prepared with adequate evidence, to begin is generally an advantage, since it enables him to impress his case first on the mind of the Court, and, if evidence be given on the other side, to have also the last word. From this point of view it is called the right to begin. In other cases, however, as where the party is unprepared with evidence, the obligation to begin may prove a burden to him, upon whom it rests. (7) "Whenever either party claims the right to begin, he thereby undertakes to offer evidence on that issue in respect of which he has claimed it; (8) he cannot claim the right to begin in the sense of merely addressing the jury on the issue. Where there are several issues, some of which are upon the plaintiff, and some upon the defendant, the plaintiff may begin by proving those only which are upon him, leaving it to the defendant to give evidence in support of those issues upon which he intends to rely; and the plaintiff may

---

(2) Best on Presumptions, 39, 40: and so in Co. Litt., it is laid down broadly: "It is a maxim in law that witnesses cannot testify a negative, but an affirmative." From those and similar expressions it has been rashly inferred that "a negative is incapable of proof," — a position wholly indefensible, if understood in an unqualified sense. See Best, Ev., § 270; Wharton, Ev., § 356.
(3) Powell, Ev., 323; Best, on Presumptions 29, 40; Best, Ev., §§ 271, 272.
(4) See s. 103 ("unless it is provided by any law that the proof of that fact shall be on any particular person") and ss. 104, 112 post.
(6) S. 102 post: Amos v. Hughes, 1 M. & Rob., 464; and see other cases cited in Best, Ev., § 288; Kripomogi Dabia v. Durga Gorind, 15 C., 89, 91 (1887) ["The test which may well be applied in a case like this, who would win if no evidence were given on either side, and it seems to us that, upon the facts admitted, the plaintiffs must win if the defendant does not prove the case set up by him," per Mitter & Ghose, J.J.]
(7) Miller v. Barber, 1 M. & W., 427.
then give evidence in reply to rebut the facts which the defendant has adduced in support of his defence.(1) If, however, the plaintiff in such a case gives in the first instance any evidence on the issues, which lies on the defendant, he is bound to complete his whole case, and will not be entitled to call a portion of his evidence in reply.’’(2)

The burden of establishing a case remains throughout the entire case, where the pleadings originally place it. It never shifts. The party, whether plaintiff or defendant, who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue has this burden of proof. It is on him at the beginning of the case; it continues on him throughout the case; and when the evidence, by whomsoever introduced, is all in, if he has not, by the preponderance of evidence required by law, established his position or claim, the decision of the tribunal must be adverse to such pleader. On the other hand, the burden of proof, in the sense of burden of evidence, may shift constantly as evidence is introduced by one side or the other,—as one scale or the other preponderates over its fellow. To carry out the same metaphor; so often and so long as the scale containing an adverse amount of evidence preponderates to a certain extent by reason of evidence adduced in that behalf, the duty or necessity rests on a party to introduce opposing evidence which shall restore the equipoise, or, if possible, strike a new balance.

This necessity or duty may, and usually does, alternate constantly between the parties. This is ‘‘the burden of evidence’’—burden of proof in the second of the senses abovementioned. But when the entire evidence is in, it is legally necessary to conviction, or other affirmative action by the tribunal, that the final balance should be one way, that a certain one of the scales should eventually preponderate and preponderate to a definite extent. This necessity has not any time shifted, but has remained constantly throughout the trial, on one of the parties alone; to wit, on him who had the affirmative of the issue. This is the ‘‘burden of establishing’’—burden of proof in the first of the senses abovementioned.(3)

As already observed, the burden of proof may be affected by presumptions.(4) The burden of proof is shifted by those presumptions of law which are rebuttable; by presumptions of fact of the stronger kind; and by every species of evidence strong enough to establish a prima facie case against a party. When a presumption is in favour of the party who asserts the negative, it only affords an additional reason for casting the burden of proof on his adversary; it is when a presumption is in favour of the party, who asserts the affirmative, that its effect becomes visible, as the opposite side is then bound to prove his negative.(5) So sections 107—111, post, enumerate instances in which the burden of proof is determined in particular cases not by the relation of the parties to the cause (as is the case in sections 101—106), but by presumptions.(6) It is in fact in this connection, perhaps, more strongly than in any other, that the force of a so-called ‘‘presumption of law’’ becomes evident. Such a presumption shifts the burden of proof in the sense of the ‘‘burden of evidence’’—the burden of going forward with new evidentiary matter. The establishment by one party, in discharge of the onus of a legal presumption, casts on the other burden of disproving it; in other words, it shifts the burden of evidence. When conflicting evidence on the point covered by the presumption of law is actually gone into, the presumption of law is functus officio as a

---

(1) Shaw v. Beck, 8 Ex., 392.
(3) Best, Ev., Amer. Notes, 269, 270.
(4) As to presumptions, v. ante, notes to s. 4.
(5) Best Ev., § 273. The party who asserts the negative must begin whenever there is a disputable presumption of law in favour of an affirmative allegation; Taylor, Ev., § 367.
presumption of law. The presumption of fact upon which such legal presumption was founded is to be weighed by the tribunal with the other evidence in the case. (1)

In conclusion, the general principle with regard to the burden of proof may be stated to be that a party, who desires to move the Court, must prove all facts necessary for that purpose (sections 101-105). This general rule is, however, subject to two exceptions: (a) He will not be required to prove such facts as are especially within the knowledge of the other party (section 106); nor (b) so much of his allegations in respect of which there is any presumption of law (sections 107-113), or, in some cases, of fact (section 114) in his favour. (2)

101. Whoever desires any Court to give judgment as to any legal right or liability dependant on the existence of facts which he asserts must prove that those facts exist.

When a person is bound to prove the existence of any fact, it is said that the burden of proof lies on that person.

Illustrations.

(a) A desires a Court to give judgment that B shall be punished for a crime which A says B has committed.

A must prove that B has committed the crime.

(b) A desires a Court to give judgment that he is entitled to certain land in the possession of B, by reason of facts which he asserts, and which B denies, to be true.

A must prove the existence of those facts.

102. The burden of proof in a suit or proceeding lies on that person who would fail if no evidence at all were given on either side.

Illustrations.

(a) A sues B for land of which B is in possession, and which, as A asserts, was left to A by the will of C, B's father.

If no evidence were given on either side, B would be entitled to retain his possession. Therefore the burden of proof is on A.

(b) A sues B for money due on a bond.

The execution of the bond is admitted, but B says that it was obtained by fraud, which A denies.

If no evidence were given on either side, A would succeed, as the bond is not disputed and the fraud is not proved.

Therefore the burden of proof is on B.

103. The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on that person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence, unless it is provided by any law that the proof of that fact shall lie on any particular person.

Illustration.

(a) A prosecute B for theft, and wishes the Court to believe that B admitted the theft to C. A must prove the admission.

(1) Best, Ev., Amer. Notes, pp. 269, 270. (2) See Taylor, Ev., §§ 367, 376A.
BURDEN OF PROOF

B wishes the Court to believe that, at the time in question, he was elsewhere. He must prove it. (1)

104. The burden of proving any fact necessary to be proved in order to enable any person to give evidence of any other fact is on the person who wishes to give such evidence.

Illustrations.

(a) A wishes to prove a dying declaration by B. A must prove B's death.
(b) A wishes to prove, by secondary evidence, the contents of a lost document.
A must prove, that the document has been lost.

Principle.—See Introduction to Chapter VII, ante. The following notes give reported cases applying the rules laid down in these sections and referred to in the preceding introduction.

s. 3 ("Court.")
s. 3 ("Fact.")
s. 3 ("Proved.")
s. 101 (Definition of "burden of proof.")
s. 3 ("Evidence.")
s. 101—106 (Burden of proof determinable by relation of parties.)
s. 107—111 (Burden of proof determinable by presumptions.)
s. 112—113 (Conclusive presumptions.)
s. 114 (Presumptions of fact.)

Steph. Dig., Art. 93—97 A.; Steph. * Introd., 174; Taylor, Ev., §§ 304—306; Best, Ev., § 265—277; Amer. Notes to same, pp. 258—270; Powell, Ev., 322—333; Starkie, Ev., 254 et seq.; Best on Presumptions; Wharton, Ev., §§ 353—372; Greenleaf, Ev., 74—81; Bosco, N.-P., Ev., and Cr. Ev. (references to be sought for under the title dealing with the particular matter in question). Lawson on Presumptive Evidence, passim; Barr Jones, Ev., §§ 174—196; Wigmore, Ev., §§ 24 83, et seq., and the authorities (text-books and case-law), cited in the following sections.

COMMENTARY.

See, as to the general principles regulating the burden of proof, the Introduction to the present Chapter. The reported cases in which those principles have been applied are cited hereafter, their subject-matter being arranged in alphabetical order. It is incumbent on each party to discharge the burden of proofs which rests upon him. (2) Where the burden of proof lies on a party and is not discharged, the suit must be dismissed. (3) When the issue raised by the Court is in substance whether the plaintiff's or defendant's story is true, it is possible that neither of the stories may be true, and the question then arises which of the two alternatives of the issue is the really material one. Usually the really material one is the first part of the issue, viz., is the plaintiff's story true? If the defendant's defence is a plea in confession and avoidance, viz., a plea which admits that the plaintiff's story is true but avoids it, then if the defendant fails to prove his case, the plaintiff may recover. But if the defence is substantially an argumentative traverse of the truth of the plaintiff's story not admitting that one word of it is true and setting up certain things perfectly inconsistent with it, the second alternative of the issue ought to be rejected and the truth of the plaintiff's story becomes the real question. If the plaintiff then does not prove the affirmative of his issue, the consequence is that he must fail, and the defendant may say, "it is wholly immaterial whether I prove my case or not; you have not proved yours." (4) The burden of proof in the sense of the burden introducing evidence

(1) For a criminal case in which this section was held to have been misapplied, see Sodhu Sheik v. R., 4 C. W. N., 576 (1900).
(2) Kasi Nath Sahay v. Raghunath Pershad, 12 C. L. R., 186, 193 (1892).
(4) Raja Chandramath v. Ramji Ramachandra.
may and constantly does shift during the trial. (1) There are many cases in which the party on whom the burden of proof in the first instance lies, may shift the burden to the other side by proving facts giving rise to a presumption in his favour (2) or by showing an admission. (3) The amount of evidence required to shift upon a party the burden of displacing a fact may depend on the circumstances of each case. (4) When the case of a plaintiff is scantly in point of evidence, it is a sufficient answer that from the situation of the plaintiff the evidence of that which is in contest between the parties is not so fully within his reach as it is within the reach of the other party, and that there is on the part of the plaintiff evidence enough prima facie, as it is said in England, to go to a jury. It is then for the other side to consider how he shall meet that evidence. He may leave the plaintiff to prevail by the force of his own case, contending that he is not called upon to answer it, unless it is such as, if unanswered, disposes of the case. But if, instead of relying upon the weakness of the plaintiff’s case, he meets it and undertakes to rebut it by counter evidence, the Court will look to the sort of evidence produced, and if it is not such as might have been expected, the Court will draw conclusions adverse to him from this fact. So in appeal it being incumbent on the appellant to show that the judgment of the Court below is wrong, the Court must consider what was the nature of the whole of the evidence before that Court. (5) The Court will generally, as respects the quantum of evidence required, consider the opportunities which in particular cases each party may naturally be supposed to have of giving evidence. (6)

The general rule of evidence is that if, in order to make out a title, it is necessary to prove a negative, the party who avers a title must prove it. (7) "A proviso is properly the statement of something extrinsic of the subject-matter of a covenant which shall go in discharge of that covenant by way of defeasance: an exception is a taking out of the covenant some part of the subject-matter of it. If these be right definitions, the plaintiff need never state a proviso, but must always state an exception; and whether particular words form a proviso or an exception, will not in any way depend on the precise form in which they are introduced, or the part of a deed in which they are found." (8) This has been laid down as a rule of pleading, but it holds good as a rule of procedure also upon the question of burden of proof. So, if a clause in an instrument, such as a policy of assurance be an exception, the plaintiff must not only state it, but show that it is not applicable; if it be a proviso, the defendant must state it, and shew that it applies. (9) Owing to particular circumstances, in some cases where the burden of proof is on the plaintiff very slight evidence may be sufficient to discharge the onus and shift it to the other side. In such cases slight evidence means evidence which does not go the whole length of proving a particular fact, but which

---

(1) v. ante, pp. 525-526; Dasola v. Ganesh Shastri, 4 B., 295 (1880); Nathini v. Kaliprasad Das, 23 W. R., 431 (1876); Shielde v. Wilkinson, 9 A., 398 (1887); Govinda v. Joshua Premaji, 7 B., 73 (1878); Mano Mohun v. Mathura Mohun, 7 C., 225 (1881); Rammohun Koer v. Bharati Prasad, 4 C. W. N., 18 (1899); Saleman Kader v. Munkli Ajeur, 2 C. W. N., 186 (1897); Hem Chandra v. Kali Proanna, 30 C., 1033, 1042 (1903).

(2) Mano Mohun v. Mathura Mohun 7 C., 225 (1881).

(6) Sooraj Kishen v. Narendar Singh, L. R., 3 I. A., 85, 86 (1875); see Ram Prasad v. Raghumandan Prasad, 7 A., 738 (1886).

(9) Aga Suduch v. Hoosey Jackaragh, 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 308, 310 (1887) suggests it. But slight evidence must not be confounded with suspicious evidence or evidence which is open to question. (1)

When a claim is founded upon a distinct statement of account signed by the defendant, in which he acknowledges a particular sum to be due to the plaintiff, it is for the defendant to produce evidence to rebut the prima facie case made against him. (2) When one party alleges a transaction to be a mortgage and the other alleges it to be a sale, and the books of the defendant contain entries which support the case of the plaintiff, the burden of proof is shifted from the plaintiff to the defendant, and it is for the latter to produce evidence to neutralize or explain away the effect of these entries. (3) Where there is an obligation to render an account, it includes a duty to shew prima facie that the account rendered is correct and complete, and that duty extends to both sides of the account. (4) When the accounts of a mortgagee who has been in possession are being taken, his income-tax papers are inadmissible as evidence in his favour, though they may be used against him. It is the mortgagee's duty to keep regular accounts, and the onus lies in the first instance upon him. If he has not kept proper accounts, the presumption will be against him; but this does not mean that all statements of the mortgagor against him must therefore be taken as true. (5) As to the burden of proof on taking of partnership accounts, see below. (6) In an agency account the plaintiff has only to show that the defendant is an accounting party and then it is for the latter to prove the amount of his receipts. (7)

The burden of proof as to the relationship in the case of principal and agent is dealt with by section 109, post, to the notes of which section reference should be made. See as to agency account last paragraph.

When a claim has been made by a third party to property attached, it is for the claimant to begin, and he must prove that the property belonged to him or was in his possession. (8) But if he starts his case sufficiently as by showing that a deed of sale had been executed in his favour by the judgment-debtors, that possession had been given to him and that the consideration of the sale had passed, this is sufficient to shift the onus on to the defendant. (9) When a judgment-creditor has obtained a writ of attachment against the property of his judgment-debtor, but such debtor has no property against which the writ can be enforced, the judgment-creditor is entitled to an order for execution of his decree by attachment of the person of the debtor, and the burden of proof is on the latter to shew that he has no means of satisfying the debt, and that he has not been guilty of any misconduct, not on the creditor to shew that by sending the debtor to prison some satisfaction of the debt will be obtained. (10) See the undermentioned case (11) as to the burden of proof in the case of allegation of the non-observance of the formalities necessary to attachment. Where the decree-holder attached certain property in the hands of the judgment-debtor's sons, it was held to be for the latter to prove that the property sought to be sold in execution was the joint ancestral property of themselves and their father and could not be attached in execution after the father's death. (12)

---

(8) Nga Tha v. Burn, 2 B. L. R., F. B., 91 (1888); s. c., 11 W. R., F. B., 8; Govind Admanor v. Santos, 12 B., 270 (1887).
(10) Seton v. Bijoan, 8 B. L. R., 255 (1872); s. c., 17 W. R. 165.
Where an auction-purchaser brought a suit to obtain possession of certain julkurs, which he alleged formed part of his zemindary of S, the defendant being in possession thereof, and his possession having been confirmed in an Act IV case, it was held that the burden of proof rested on the plaintiff to show that the julkurs in dispute formed part of the assets of the zemindary at the time of the perpetual settlement. (1)

A person seeking to exercise the statutory right of avoiding an encumbrance given him by the 12th section Beng. Act VII of 1868, or by section 66 of Beng. Act VI of 1888, must give some prima facie evidence to show that the encumbrance, which he seeks to avoid, comes within the purview of the section. (2) In a suit to set aside a settlement where the defendant pleaded that the tenure was dur mokwari, it was held that the onus was on the defendant to prove the validity and propriety of the settlement. (3) Where a Collector in exercise of his lawful functions, assumed the jurisdiction to sell a patni taluk, the onus was on the plaintiff alleging it to show that he had no jurisdiction. (4) The onus of proving that thakbust proceedings are wrong lies on the person alleging it. (5)

It is very much the habit in India to make purchases in the names of others, and these transactions are known as benami transactions. An important criterion in these cases is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid. In a great number of cases they are made in the names of persons ignorant at the time of their being so made. (6) Though the source of purchase-money is an important fact in most of the cases raising the question of benami, or not benami, it is not the only test of ownership. (7) and accordingly the Privy Council in the case last mentioned held the source of money was consistent with the claimants having, as the defence alleged, intended to make a gift of the property to the holder of it; and the right inference from the facts was that it was not held benami for the claimant but belonged to the defendant. (8) But however inveterate the holding of land benami may be in India, that does not justify the Courts in making every presumption against apparent ownership. (9) In cases of alleged benami sales effect should be given to the evidence of possession and enjoyment since the purchase, as showing who is the substantial owner. The burden of proof lies on the person who maintains that the apparent state of things is not the real state of things, and the apparent purchaser must be regarded as the real purchaser, until the contrary be proved. (10) So the burden of proof is upon him who alleges that the certified purchaser and registered owner is a benamidar. (11) When a person sues for possession of land, and the defendant alleges that the plaintiff purchased the land benami for him, the onus is on the plaintiff to establish a prima facie case, and the allegation of the defendant

---

(1) Forbes v. Meer Mahomed, 20 W. R., 44 (1873), referred to in Niyamand Roy v. Banshi Chandra, 3 C. W. N., 341 (1899), in which case it was said that no hard and fast rule could be laid down as to where the burden of proof began or ended.

(2) Koylashashinkey Dassee v. Gocoolmoni Dassee, 8 C., 230 (1881); Gobind Nath v. Reilly, 13 C., 1 (1886), decided under ss. 66 of Ben. Act VIII of 1869; but see also Rash Behari v. Hara Moni, 15 C., 557 (1888).

(3) Nadiar Chand v. Chunder Sikhar, 16 C., 765 (1888).

(4) Kalee Koomar v. Maharajah of Burdwan, 5 W. R., 30 (1886).

(5) Leelamund Singh v. Luchmunar Singh, 10 C. L. R., 172 (1880).

(6) Gopeshwato Gosain v. Gungapersuad Gosain, 6 Moo. I. A., 63, 72, 74 (1854). For a case in which the Privy Council held that the benami transactions "had been elaborated with a perfection, that is uncommon even in India," see Ruto Singh v. Brijnar Singh, 13 C. L. R., 280 (1883).

(7) Ram Narain v. Mahomed Hadi, 26 C., 227 (1898).

(8) Ib.

(11) Baijnath Sahay v. Rughonath Pershad, 12 C. L. R., 186 (1882); and see Satya Moni v. Bhagobutt Keyn, 1 C. L. R., 466 (1878).
does not shift the burden of proof. (1) The presumption of the Hindu law, in a joint undivided family, is, that the whole property of the family is joint estate, and the onus lies upon a party claiming any part of such property as his separate estate to establish that fact. Where a purchase of real estate is made by a Hindu in the name of one of his sons, the presumption of the Hindu law is in favour of its being a benami purchase, and the burden of proof lies on the party in whose name it was purchased, to prove that he was solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in such purchased estate. The same rule applies to Mahomedans. (2) The law as to benami conveyances taken by a father in the name of a son, whether in Hindu or Mahomedan families, should be considered in all Courts in India as conclusively settled by the rule laid down by the Privy Council decision cited in note (6), p. 531. (3) But proof that the father's object was to effect the ordinary rule of succession as from him to the property in question will take the case without this rule. (4) This rule is equally applicable to an account opened in a man's books in the name of his son as to a purchase by him in his son's name. The frequency of benami transactions in this country forbids any presumption being raised in either case contrary to that which arises in favour of the person who provides the funds. (5) When a purchase is made by a Hindu or Mahomedan in the name of his son, and when the rights of creditors are in issue, very strict proof of the nature of the transaction should be required from the object or to such rights, and the burden of proof lies with more than ordinary weight on the person alleging that the purchase was intended for the benefit of the son. (6) In a suit to declare certain sales benami in a case where the property of a husband was sold to realize a fine of court and passed from hand to hand until it was sold to the wife, who moreover was in possession of the property when the sale of the husband's rights and interests took place, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to a clear finding as to whether the wife held the property in her own right or in trust for her husband; and that the onus of showing the source whence the money came was on the wife. An uninquiring purchaser from a Hindu wife whose husband is living at the time is in no sense a bona fide purchaser without notice. (7) But it has been stated that the general principle laid down in this case has been overruled by the Privy Council. (8) Quere, whether in the absence of any evidence to show the source from which the purchase-money was derived, there is a presumption that property purchased in the name of a Hindu wife is the property of her husband and has been purchased with his money. Semble—There is no presumption one way or the other, but the burden of proof in each particular case must depend upon the pleadings and the position of the parties as plaintiffs or defendants. (9) In Hindu law there is no presumption that

---

(1) Huri Ram v. Raj Coomar, 8 C., 759 (1882), see Mookto Kashi v. Anando Chandro, 2 C. L. R., 48 (1878).
(3) Ruknawal v. Hurdvari Mull, 5 B. L. R., 312 (1866); as to the onus probandi, to prove the source of the purchase-money, see Srimati Chunder v. Gopaul Chunder, 11 Moo. I. A., 28 (1880); s. c., 7 W. R., P. C., 10, explained in Roop Ram v. Saveram, 23 W. R., 141 (1875); Fatus Buksh v. Fuckeroddeen Mahomed, 14 Moo. I. A., 234 (1871).
(4) Ruknawal v. Torini Kanth, 8 C., 545, 546, 553, 554 (1882).
(5) Id., reversed on the facts, 13 C., 182, distinguished in Nobin Chunder v. Dhubalsh Dasi, 10 C., 686 (1884); where it was pointed out that the question considered was whether as between a husband or a purchaser at a sale in execution against the husband, there is any presumption that property standing in the name of the wife is held by her benami for her husband: which question is entirely different from that whether a wife, a member of a joint family, is, as transactions which stand in the name of the wife are the husband’s transactions. (1) When a plaintiff claims land as purchaser in good faith from a benamiidar who has been registered as owner and who by the act of the true owners had been allowed to become the apparent owner, the burden of proof lies upon the plaintiff. (2)

In a suit on a bond it is for the plaintiff to prove the amount of the debt, and this will be done sufficiently in the first instance by proof of the execution of the bond. It is for the defendant to prove in answer, if he can, that such amount is less than the sum sued for. (3) Where the plaintiff in a suit on a bond accounted for not producing it by alleging that the defendant had stolen it, and the defendant admitted execution but alleged that he had satisfied it, it was held that the defendant was bound to begin and to prove payment either by evidence to the fact or by the production of the bond, or both. (4) In the undermentioned case (5) the plaintiff sued on a deed which purported to be one of absolute sale. It was admitted that an ekrar had been executed in favour of the mortgagor restoring to him the equity of redemption. But the plaintiff produced this ekrar and said it had been made over to him by the mortgagor, who had relinquished the equity of redemption. The defendant alleged that the ekrar had been lost and had somehow found its way to the plaintiff. It was held that the presumption of law was in favour of the plaintiff, and that it lay on the defendant to prove its loss. Where the plaintiff sued on a bond, and the defendant attempted to reduce the claim on the ground that the money had not been received in full and endeavoured to substantiate this defence by calling for the books of the plaintiff, it was held that the burden of proof was entirely on the defendant. (6)

When the plaintiff sued on two bonds, and the defendant in his written statement as well as in his deposition admitted execution of the bonds, but pleaded non-receipt of consideration, it was held that the question of execution could not be gone into, and that the only question which could be tried was non-receipt of consideration. (7) Where the plaintiff was, as regards the promisor, the only person primfacie entitled to payment, it was held to be on the promisor to show that a payment to a third party was binding on the plaintiff. (8) See further “Consideration,” and “Recitals,” post.

In a question of disputed boundaries the onus probandi lies upon the plaintiff to prove by independent evidence his right to recover. (9) In a question of boundary the Judicial Committee, the Court of last resort, is extremely reluctant to reverse the judgment of an Indian Court, and will not do so, unless they are, upon the facts and evidence, satisfied that the decision of the Courts below was clearly wrong. There is a strong presumption against a plaintiff who seeks to set aside an award made by Government officers, on a revenue-survey, after full

---

(2) Ruito Singh v. Bajrang Singh, 13 C. L. R., 280 (1883).
(3) Sowram Aiyar v. Samu Aiyar, 1 Mad. H. C., 447 (1883).
(4) Chuni Kuar v. Udsai Ram, 6 A., 73 (1883).
(6) Rajaswari Kuar v. Dal Krishan, 9 A., 713 (1887); s. c., L. R., 14 I. A., 142.
(9) Raja Leelavund v. Maharaja Mobeshur, 10 Moo. I. A., 91 (1884); s. c., 3 W. R., P. C., 19; Leelavund Singh v. Luckmuner Singh, 10 C. L. R., 169 (1880); Rajah Leelanund v. Raja Mohendernarain, 13 Moo. I. A., 57 (1889).
local inquiry, for the purpose of obtaining a rectification of the boundaries between two estates, and the onus of proof that the award was wrong lies on the party impeaching it. (1) But when a disputed line of division runs between waste lands which have not been the subject of definite possession, the ordinary rule regarding the onus upon a plaintiff seeking demarcation does not apply. The duty is on the defendant as much as on the plaintiff to aid the Courts in ascertaining the true boundary. (2) In a question of the boundary between a lakbhiraj tenure and a zamindar's mad land, there is no presumption in favour of one or the other, but the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his case. (3) Lands admittedly situated within the boundaries of zamindary are primâ facie to be considered as part of the zamindary; and it is for those who allege that they have been separated from the general lands of the zamindary and that they have been settled as a shikni taluk to establish this allegation. (4) When land is within the ambit of the plaintiff's zamindary and the defendants set up an adverse title by reason of an undertenure, the burden of proof is on the defendant. But where the plaintiff admits that there is a howla within his zamindary and that the defendant has lands in that howla, but alleges that he has exceeded the boundaries of that howla and has encroached upon his lands, the onus is on the plaintiff to shew that the defendant has encroached. (5) When a dispute arises regarding the direction of a boundary which one of the parties to a suit has demolished and the other party proves its general direction, the onus of proof, that the direction is wrongly stated, if it be so, lies on the former who removed the boundary. (6)

Where the defendant objects that the plaintiff omitted in a former suit to include the portion which he now claims and in respect of which he then had a cause of action, the objection being one of fact, the burden of proof lies on the objector. (7) In a dispute as to the valuation of a suit, where the defendant asserts that it is overvalued, the onus of proving the truth of the assertion is on him. (8) When a party complains in appeal that certain evidence has been rejected by a lower Court, he must be able to shew that the evidence was tendered and rejected. (9) As to the onus in criminal and civil appeals respectively, v. ante, p. 20. If a person other than the defendant alleges that he has been dispossessed, in the execution of a decree, from land or other immovable property which was bondâ fides in his possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the defendant, and that it was not included in the decree, or if included in the decree, that he was no party to the suit in which such decree was passed; it was held under section 230, Act VIII of 1859, that it lay on him to prove his possession: that he might, if he wished, give evidence of title beyond possession, but it was not absolutely necessary for him to do so in the first instance. (10) Section 332 of Act XIV of 1882 enacts that the Court shall confine itself to the grounds of dispute specified in the section. The burden of proving that a summons was not served under the 19th section of Act VIII of

---

2. Lukhi Narain v. Maharaja Jodha, 21 I. A., 39 (1899); s. c., 21 C., 504.
8. Uma Bankar v. Matsher Ali, 5 B. L. R., App. 6 (1870).
1859, now section 108, Act XIV of 1882, lies upon the person claiming the benefit of the section.(1) A defendant who pleads the minority of the plaintiff as a bar to the suit is bound to substantiate his plea.(2) When a defendant impeaches the correctness of an Ameen’s report, that onus is on him and not on the plaintiff, who should not in the first instance be called upon to support its correctness.(3) In a suit for confirmation of a sale held in execution of a decree the onus lies on the defendant to prove that there was a material irregularity in publishing and conducting it.(4) In suits for mesne profits when the defendants have been in possession of the property as wrong-doers, the onus is on them to show what were the sums realized as rent during the time of their possession.(5) Where a person purchased at an execution-sale a tora garas huk or the right to a certain annual payment made by Government and sued the Collector to have his name inscribed on the books as the payee, it was held that the onus lay on the Government to show that the right was inalienable.(6) In a claim by judgment-debtors to properties seized in execution of a decree against them as representatives of the original debtor the burden of proof was held to lie on the decree-holder who asserted that the property seized in execution of his decree was the property of the deceased debtor and as such in the possession of the judgment-debtors.(7) See “Attachment,” “Auction-purchaser,” “Avoidance,” ante; “Notices,” post.

It is the established practice of the Courts in India, in cases of contract, to require satisfactory proof that consideration has been actually received; according to the terms of the contract, and a contract under seal does not, of itself, in India, import that there was a sufficient consideration for the agreement. A plaintiff, however, suing to set aside a security admittedly executed by himself must make out a good primâ facie case before the defendants can be called on to prove consideration.(8) As to recitals of receipt of consideration in documents, see post, “Recitals.” In a suit on an instrument the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon showing that it was executed by the defendant. The onus lies upon the defendant of showing the want of consideration.(9) In a suit to set aside a deed perfected by possession on the ground of failure of consideration, it lies upon the plaintiff to make out the case alleged by him, and to establish at least a good primâ facie title to the relief prayed for, so as to cast on the defendants the burden of proving the consideration. A party who comes into Court to enforce a bond is in a very different position from him who is suing to set aside a contract under which there has been possession and enjoyment, and of which so far as it has yet been capable of being performed there has been performance.(10) A recital of the receipt of consideration in a deed may be sufficient proof of the receipt of such consideration for such deed: and an admission by recital in a document of further charge of the receipt of consideration upon a previous mortgage may be sufficient evidence of the receipt of consideration upon that mortgage.(11) Where the defendant had admitted the

---

(5) Brajendra Coomar v. Madhub Chunder, 8 C., 343 (1882).
(6) Bamboo Lall v. Collector of Burat, 8 Moo. I. A., 1 (1859); 4 W. R., P. C., 55.
(7) Abdul Rahman v. Mahomed Azim, 4 C. W. N., xxviii (1899).
(10) Kaleopenhed Tennace v. Praksh Sen, 12 Moo. I. A., 282 (1869); see 2 B. L. R., P. C., 122.
(11) Priyamath Chatterjee v. Bisvanath Dass, 1 C. W. N., ccxii (1897); as to however admission dispensing with proof of attestation, see Abdul Karim v. Salimun, 27 C., 190 (1899). receipt of consideration before the registering officer, the onus was held to be upon him to disprove such receipt.(1) And where a mortgagor whose bond contained an admission of receipt of consideration denied receipt of consideration before the Registrar it was held that the onus of proving non-receipt of consideration lay upon the mortgagor.(2) In the aforementioned case the plaintiff rested his case entirely upon the bond and the defendant’s acknowledgment thereon that Rs. 8,000 was received in cash. At the trial the defendants proved that acknowledgment to be fictitious and that only part of the money had been advanced; held that the onus was upon the plaintiff to prove in some other way the advance which he alleged.(3) When the execution of a mortgage or other conveyance is proved it is not necessary to prove as against a third person that the consideration passed.(4) See further ante, "Bonds," and post, "Recitals."

Where a party alleges a contract and breach thereof, with resulting damages, it will, of course, be upon him, in the first instance, to prove the contract, the facts of his violation, and injury suffered thereby. But if a defendant answers to a contract made by him, that he acted exclusively as agent for another the burden is on him to prove such agency; and so, if he set up infancy, accord and satisfaction, confession and avoidance, illegality, fraud, payment, or (to a note) failure of consideration.(5) In the case of a contract to sow indigo, not sowing would be prima facie evidence of dishonesty, and in order to claim the benefit of the fourth cause of the fifth section of Regulation XI, 1823, the onus is on the person claiming the benefit to shew that the negligence to sow had been accidental.(6) The question of the burden of proof in cases of accidental injury to goods bailed depends upon the particular circumstances of each case: and, if the bailee gives an explanation of the nature of the accident, which is not uncontradicted nor prima facie improbable, the onus is shifted.(7) Where a raziynamah is alleged to have been obtained by fraud or duress, the onus lies on the person alleging it to prove the fraud: it is not sufficient to say that it is a case of doubt; that there are suspicious circumstances, &c., &c.(8) In a suit by zur-i-peshgi mortgagees for possession and to set aside a mukururee lease, which it was alleged by the defendant was granted to him by the mortgagor before the mortgage, it was held that, as the mukururidars were in possession under a Magistrate’s order, the onus was on the plaintiffs, in the first instance, to give some evidence to impeach the validity of the lease: but this having been done and a strong case made out, the onus was shifted, and it was incumbent on the mukururidars to shew that the mukururee was executed before the zur-i-peshgi mortgage and was granted bona fide for a real consideration and was intended to be operative.(9) Where a claimant against the estate of a deceased Hindu relied upon document which purported to be executed by his widow, it was held that the onus of proving the execution was upon the claimant.(10) Prima facie when the execution of a mortgage or other conveyance is proved, further evidence is not required to

(2) Mahabir Prasad v. Bihari Dyal, 1 All. L.J. (Diary), 186 (1904); s. c., 27 A., 71.
(3) Lala Lakshmi v. Rayed Naihar, 4 C. W. N., 82 (1899).
(4) Chiman v. Ramachandra, 15 M., 54 (1891) at p. 55; and see Lal Achal v. Raja Kasim, 9 C. W. N., 477; s. c., 32 I. A., 113, 121 (1906); Rup Chand v. Sarbocur Chandra, 10 C. W. N., 747 (1906) at p. 751.
(5) Wharton, Fr., § 357; as to payment, see Chuni Kumar v. Udai Ram, 6 A., 73 (1885); and post, "Payment," and as to illegality, see notes to s. 111, post. See "Pravd," post, and "Consideration," ante.
(9) Shamnaran v. Administrator-General of Bengal, 23 W. R., 111 (1870).
(10) Ram Ratan v. Nanda, 19 C., 249 (1881).
show that the purchaser has taken the interest which the document purports to convey. (1) The onus is on the grantor of a maintenance grant (which is prima facie resumable on the death of the grantee) to show that he has a right to take minerals from the grantee's property during the subsistence of the grant. (2)

When the law makes the validity of a document dependent on certain formalities, then they must be duly proved by the plaintiff. If an act, for instance, makes a document inoperative unless duly registered or stamped, then the document cannot be put in evidence without proof of such registry, or stamp. But a prima facie compliance with the law in this respect is sufficient for the plaintiff's case. If the document is, on its face, duly executed, then it will be presumed that the execution was regular, and the burden of contesting the execution falls on the party assailing the document. (3) If one of the contracting parties alleges that an agreement is opposed to public policy it is for him to set out and prove those special circumstances which will invalidate the contract. (4) In order to make a broker liable on the ground of want of authority the onus is on the plaintiff to prove such want of authority. (5) See "Account", "Agency", "Bonds", "Consideration", ante; "Fraud", "Good and Bad Faith", "Insurance", "Landlord and Tenant", "Partnership", "Payment", "Recitals", post.

The onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies upon the prosecution. For every man is to be regarded as legally innocent until the contrary be proved, and criminality is never to be presumed. (6)

So the burden of proving guilty intention lies upon the prosecution where the intent is expressly stated as part of the definition of the crime. (7) But, if there are several different intentions specified in a section of the Penal Code, it is not necessary to prove specifically which of the several guilty intentions the accused had; it will be enough if it is shown that the intention must have been one or other of those specified in the section in question, though it may not be certain which it was. (8) And though the prosecution must prove the existence of some one or more of the intentions in the Code, the proof need not be direct, that is, by the confession of the accused, showing that his intention was one of those mentioned in the Code, or by the evidence of witnesses proving that he admitted to them that such was his intention. It will be enough if it is proved like any other fact (and the existence of intention is a fact) by the evidence of conduct and surrounding circumstances. (9) So also guilty knowledge must, when necessary, be proved by the prosecution. Where facts are as consistent with a prisoner's innocence as with his guilt, innocence must be presumed; and criminal intent or knowledge is not necessarily imputable to every man who acts contrary to the provisions of the law. (1)

These general rules laying the burden of proof upon the prosecution are qualified by those contained in sections 105, 106, post.

An accused person is not bound to account for his movements at or about the time an offence was committed, unless there has been given legal evidence sufficient prima facie to convict him of the offence. (2) In a reference by a Presidency Magistrate to the High Court under section 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as to whether on the facts stated any offence has been committed by an accused person, it lies on the prosecution to make out that an offence has been committed and under the circumstances the prosecution must begin. (3) When a former valid subsisting marriage has been proved, the onus is entirely upon the defence to shew that the earlier subsisting marriage has been validly dissolved. (4) When an accused person alleges that an offence with which he is charged has been compounded so as to take away the jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts to try it, the onus is on him to shew that there was a composition valid in law. (5) Where the prosecution proved that a place was a foreshore that was held sufficient to throw the onus on the accused to show that the foreshore was a private market within the meaning of the Bombay Municipal Act. (6) When an order is passed by a Magistrate under the Criminal Procedure Code, requiring any person to "show cause" why he should not be ordered to furnish security for the peace, the onus lies upon the prosecution to establish circumstances justifying the action of the Magistrate in calling for security. (7)

In a trial of an accused under sections 304 and 325, Indian Penal Code, certain witnesses, who deposed to seeing the homicide take place and who gave evidence before the Magistrate, were not called and examined in the Court of Session. Held, that every witness who was present at the commission of such an offence ought to be called; (8) and that even if they give different accounts, it is fit that the jury should hear their evidence so as to enable them to draw their own conclusions as to the real truth of the matter. (9) Held, also, that the duty of producing the evidence prima facie devolves on the public prosecutor, (10) and though the burden of the prosecution is not to be thrown upon the Judge, (11) there is an obligation upon him not merely to receive and adjudicate upon the evidence submitted to him by the parties but also to enquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter before him. (12)

It is incumbent upon a party to a suit, who relies upon a custom as overriding the general law of the land, or that of the community to which he belongs, to specify that custom distinctly and to establish it without any reasonable doubt. (13) So as the impartiality of a Raj does not render it inalienable as a

---

(2) R. v. Bijnor Bawas, 10 C., 970 (1884).

(4) In re Millard, 10 M., 218, 221 (1887).

(8) See cases cited, ante, in Intro. to Part III.

(11) R. v. Pate, 2 Cox. C. C., 211.

matter of law its inalienability depending upon family custom, the latter must be proved by him who alleges it. (1) And where a party alleges a Raj to be indivisible and that he is, as heir, entitled to succeed to the whole, the onus of proof is upon him. (2) The burden of proving that the custom in a particular family of primogeniture regulates the succession to their property is upon him who claims to inherit in that right. (3) The burden of proving that the vallandin joshi of a village is not entitled to officiate and take fees in the family of any particular caste, lies upon the person asserting exemption. (4) When a person relies upon a local usage regulating the right to land, the subject of alluvion or diluvion, the burden of proving such local usage lies upon him. (5) As to the law governing Hindu converts to Mahomedanism, the following principles may now be regarded as settled: (a) Mahomedan law generally governs converts to that faith from Hinduism; but (b) a well-established custom of such converts following the Hindu law of inheritance would override the general presumption. (c) This custom should be confined strictly to cases of succession and inheritance. (d) If any particular custom of succession be alleged which is at variance with the general law applicable to these communities, the burden of proof lies on the party alleging such special custom.

If evidence is given as to the general prevalence of Hindu rules of succession in a Mahomedan community in preference to the rules of Mahomedan law, the burden of proof is discharged, and it then rests with the party, disputing the particular Hindu usage in question, to show that it is excluded from the sphere of the proved general usage of the community. Among Native Christians certain classes strictly retain the old Hindu usages, others retain these usages in a modified form, and others again wholly abandon them. Before the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) the Christian convert could elect to attach himself to any one of these particular classes, and he would be governed by the usage of the class to which he so attached himself. (6) The same principles are applied to the case of Hindu converts to Mahomedanism such as Khojas and Cutchi Memons. (7)

In a suit for damages for defamation of character the *onus is on the plaintiff to prove that he was not guilty of the offence charged before the defendant can be called upon to show that he made the imputation in good faith and for the public good. (8)

Where a right of the nature of an easement is claimed, the *onus of proving the existence of such right will lie on the person claiming the right. (9) Possession of an easement by order of a Magistrate passed under section 532 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872) will not relieve the claimant from the *onus of proving his claim. (10)"

In the undermentioned case (11) the Privy Council observed: "'The habit of Fraud may be superinduced by the manifold cases of fraud with which they have to

---

(1) Casumbyo Akhmedbhoy v. Akhmedbhoy Hubbhoj, 2 B., 250 (1887); s. c., in appeal, 13 B., 534 (1888). See pp. 84-86 ante, and cases there cited.
(2) Bajaj Udaya v. Jashpat Aditya, 8 L. A., 248 (1881); s. c., 8 C., 199.
(6) See Manick v. Madharam, 13 Moo. I. A., 1 (1889); see s. 2, Beng. Reg. X. 1 of 1825.
(10) Hari Mohun v. Kissen Sundari, 11 C., 02 (1884); Ooraes v. Kissen Shundare, 15 W. R., 83 (1871).
deal; but judges in India are perhaps somewhat too apt to see fraud everywhere." However this may be, fraud like everything else is not to be presumed or inferred rightly. The burden of proving that any transaction has been effected by fraud and misrepresentation, (1) duress, intimidation, undue influence and the like (2) lies upon the persons seeking to impeach its validity on these grounds. Fraud must be charged in the plaint, and vague allegations of fraud are not sufficient. When fraud is charged, it is a rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. General allegations, however strong, may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice. (3) When fraud is charged, the evidence must be confined to the allegations. (4) It is a well-known rule, that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind cannot, on failure of proof, be established for it. (5) A plaintiff who charges another with fraud, must himself prove the fraud, and he is not released from this allegation because the defendant has himself told an untrue story. (6) When the plaintiff alleges that fraud only came to his knowledge at a certain time, it is for the defendant to prove that he was cognizant of it before that time. (7) But though fraud must be alleged specifically and proved as alleged, the proof offered need not be in all cases of a direct kind. "It is a truth confirmed by all experience, that in a great majority of cases fraud is not capable of being established by positive and express proofs. It is by its very nature secret in its movements, and if those whose duty it is to investigate questions of fraud were to insist upon direct proof in every case, the ends of justice would be constantly, if not usually, defeated. We do not mean to say that fraud can be established by any less proof or by any different kind of proof from that which is required to establish any other disputed question of fact, or that circumstances of mere suspicion which lead to no certain result should be taken as sufficient proof of fraud, or that fraud should be presumed against any body in any case, but what we mean to say is that, in the generality of cases, circumstantial evidence is our only resource in dealing with questions of fraud, and if

(3) Guna Narain v. Tiluckram Charabdy, 15 C., 533 (1885); v. c., 16 I. A., 119; Prospero Kumar v. Kali Das, 19 C., 683 (1892); Krishnaji v. Wamanji, 18 Bom., 144, 146 (1873); [instances must be given, it being unreasonable to require the opposite party to meet a general charge]. Joomma Pershad v. Joyrun Lall, 2 C. L. R. 26 (1878); Land Mortgage Bank v. Roy Luchmipat, 8 C. L. R., 447 (1881); Wallingford v. Murmi Society, 5 App. Cas., 697, 701. As to oral evidence of witnesses depositing in general terms being insufficient, see Shebrooosami Deben v. Syed Mohamed, W. R., 1864, 137.

(4) Krishnaji v. Wamanji, 18 R., 144, 147 (1893).

(5) Abdul Hoosain v. Turner, 11 B., 630 (1887); 14 I. A., 111.

(6) Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Suliaman, 21 C., 618 (1894).

(7) Nanda Singh v. Jodha Singh, 6 A., 408 (1884); as to proof of knowledge of fraud, see Rakimbhoy Hubhimbhoy v. Turner, 20 I. A., 1 (1892).
this evidence is sufficient to overcome the natural presumption of honesty and fair dealing and to satisfy a reasonable mind of the existence of fraud by raising a counter-presumption, there is no reason whatever why he should not act upon it."

(1) An exception to the general rule with regard to the burden of proof exists where one party stands in a position of active confidence towards another, as to which, see the notes to section 111, post. Where a man has committed a fraud and has got property thereby, it is for him to show affirmatively that the plaintiff had knowledge of the fraud at a time which is too remote to allow him to bring the suit. (2)

Good faith in a contracting party is a rebuttable presumption akin to the presumption of innocence, and therefore a person who charges bad faith has the burden of proving it. (See notes to section 111, post.) Section 111, post, however, enacts an exception to this general rule, reversing the burden of proof, where one of the parties stands in a relation of active confidence towards the other (ib.). As to criminal proceedings v. ante, "Criminal Law."

Where the plaintiff sues to recover the amount of excess payment, on account of Government revenue on behalf of co-sharers to save the estate from sale, the onus is on them to prove their shares and the amount of revenue payable on them. (3) But where a defendant pleads previous payment of his quota of the revenue to the plaintiff, he is bound to prove it. (4) Where an agent of a talukdar had received sums fraudulently from a creditor, the onus as to whether particular sums had been received by the manager and used for payment of Government revenue was upon the creditor; the presumption being that the rents should have covered the revenue due, and, thus having to be met, it was for the creditor to bring proof to overcome it. (5)

The following paragraphs which are not, and are not intended to be, exhaustive of the subject should be read in conjunction with the matter treated under the same heading in the commentary to section 114. In consequence of the assumption that while a Hindu family remains joint, all property, including acquisitions made in the name of a single member, is joint family property, the burden of proof, generally speaking, lies on that member who claims any portion of the property as self-acquired. "There is a good deal of conflict, probably more apparent than real, between the decisions of the High Court of Bengal as to the question upon whom the onus of proof lies, where property is claimed by one person as being joint property and withheld by another as being self-acquired, or vice versa." (6) The normal state of every Hindu family is joint. Presumably every such family is joint in food, worship, and estate. In the absence of proof of division such is the legal presumption, but the members of the family may sever in all or any of these three things (7) and there is no presumption that a family, because it is joint, possesses joint property or any property. But where it is proved or admitted that a joint family possesses some joint property (8) and the property in dispute has been acquired or held in a manner consistent with that character, "the presumption

---

(3) Aghore Ram v. Ramolee Sahoo, 24 W. R., 300 (1874).
(6) Mayne's Hindu Law, 6th Edition, 280. See ib., §§ 290, 291, from which this paragraph is in part taken. See also Field, Evidence, 409.
(8) Bhagubhai v. TakuramLe., 7 Bon. L. R., 169 (1908). [The absence of any nucleus of joint property is important in the determination of the question whether the property gained by each co-partner was his self-acquisition; for the mere fact that a family is joint does not raise the presumption of joint property in the absence of family property.]
of law is that all the property they were possessed of was joint property until it is shown by evidence that one member of the family is possessed of separate property." This presumption would not be rebutted merely by shewing "that it was purchased in the name of one member of the family and that there are receipts in his name respecting it." For all that is perfectly consistent with the notion of its having been joint property and even if it had been joint property, it still would have been treated in exactly the same manner.

The difficulty arises from attempting to lay down an abstract proposition of law, which will govern every case however different in its facts. But it is impossible to say generally of any piece of property in the possession of any member of the family that it is presumably joint estate. All that is laid down by the Bengal cases is that it is impossible to say what the presumption is, until it is known what proposition the plaintiff and defendant respectively put forward. The Judges say "tell us what your case is: when we find how much of it is admitted by the other side, we will then be able to say whether you are relieved of the necessity of proving any part of your case and how much of it."(2)

A plaintiff coming into Court to claim a share in property as being joint family property must lay some foundation before he can succeed in his suit. He starts with a presumption in his favour; but this presumption must be taken along with other facts and those facts may so far remove the presumption arising from the ordinary condition of a Hindu family, as to throw back the burden of proof on the other side.(3) But the rule that the possession of one of the joint owners is the possession of all will apply to this extent, that, if one of them is found to be in possession of any property, the family being presumed to be joint in estate, the presumption will be, not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of the joint family.(4) Again, if the plaintiff's case is that the property was ancestral, and the defendant admits that it was purchased with his father's money, but alleges that the purchase was made in his own name and for his own exclusive benefit the burden of proof would lie on him.(5) Similarly, if the case is that the property is purchased out of the proceeds of the family estate, and it is admitted that there was family property of which the defendant was manager, the onus would be on the defendant to show that there was a separate acquisition.(6) The same presumption will apply where the property is acquired by a member of a joint family and there is an admitted nucleus of family property.(7) Whereas in the case

---

(3) Bholanath v. Ajoodha, 12 B. L. R., 336 (1873); s. c., 20 Suth., 63; Bird Singh v. Gunch Chunder, 12 B. L. R., (P. C.), 317 (1873); s. c., 19 Suth., 356.

(4) Tarack Chunder v. Jogeshwar Chunder, 11 B. L. R., 103; s. c., 19 Suth., 178 (1873); overruling Shiu Godam v. Baran Singh, 1 B. L. R. (A. C.), 194 (1866); s. c., 10 W. R., 198; differed from in Bhutanath v. Ajoodha, 12 B. L. R., 336; s. c., 20 Suth., 63; and in Dornath v. Harrymanya, 12 B. L. R., 349; affirmed in Gobind Chunder v. Norgesram, 14 B. L. R., 327; s. c., 22 Suth., 246; Sbaheee Mohun v. Anakil, 25 Suth., 222 (1870); Fedinani v. Narmynya, 2 M., 10 (1877).

(5) Gopeshwar Gomia v. Gampersamad Gomia, 6 Moor. L. A., 53 (1854); Bissione Lal v. Lockmeur Singh, 6 L. A., 233 (1879); s. c., 5 C. L. R., 477 (1879). See also Beer Narain v. Ten Courta. 1 W. R., 316 (1864). (Suit by member of joint family for share of joint property: plaint stating property to be joint; admission by defendant that at on time it was joint; held that onus was on the defendant to prove separation.)

(6) Laxsmee Ram v. Mullar Raw, 2 Ka., 60. 5 W. R., (P. C.), 67 (1868); Fedeu v. Daymon, 1st Dec. of 1860, 8; Jamokee Sanft v. Kori Komal, Marsh., 1 (1889).

of a family governed by the Dayabhaga there is no jointness in property between the father and the sons if property in dispute is acquired in the name of one of several brothers during the life-time of their father and is in possession of that brother the burden of proof in such a case rests upon the party who asserts that the property in reality belonged to the father.(1) The wives and mothers of the members of a joint undivided Hindu family, so long as they continue to live in the family and are supported out of its income, are just as much members of that family as their husbands and sons. So far as the ordinary and usual course of things is concerned, the practice of making benami purchases in the names of female members of joint undivided Hindu families is just as much rife in this country as that of making such purchases in the names of male members, and the presumption against separate acquisition is no less strong in the former case than in the latter.(2) But, if it is neither proved nor admitted that the family are living together or have their entire property in common, a plaintiff seeking to recover property as ancestral estate must prove the title set up by him.(3) And, if it is denied that there ever had been any family property or admitted that the defendant was not the person in possession of it, the plaintiff would fail, if he offered no evidence whatever.

In the undermentioned case it was laid down that a person suing for a share in joint family property must show, not only that the property is joint family property but also that he has had possession of his share or received payments on account of it within twelve years.(4) And where the plaintiff admitted that certain properties were not acquired by the use of patrimonial funds, and the defendants had not acknowledged that such properties were acquired by any joint exertion of the plaintiff, it was held that the mere circumstance of the parties having been united in food at the time of the acquisition, raises no presumption so as to relieve the plaintiff from the onus of proving his averment that he had a joint share and interest in the acquisition.(5) Also where the whole property is self-acquired, the onus probandi will lie on the person seeking a share and alleging that the estate is joint.(6) But where a member of Hindu family sued for a division of the family estate and admitted in his plaint that he took possession of part of the family property and had for sixteen years lived separate, it was held that the onus lay on him to prove that the circumstances under which he became possessed of his portion of the property were consist-tent with his statement that the family remained undivided.(7) A property acquired without the aid of joint funds or joint exertions may become joint property by being thrown into the common stock; but those who allege this must prove it.(8)

(1) Mooji Lal v. Gokuldas, 8 B. R., 154 (1883); Lakshman v. Jamnabai, 6 B., 225 (1882).
(2) See Prasad v. Mahananda Roy, 31 C., 448 (1904). The headnote of this case is incorrect in stating that the presumption was held to be generally inapplicable to joint families governed by the Dayabhaga. In this case there was not joint ownership between father and sons as there might have been between the sons themselves on the death of their father.
(3) Chunder Nath v. Krisna Komul, 15 W. R., 347 (1871); followed by Kobin Chandra v. Bhokbata Das, 10 C., 896 (1884); v. ante "Bazami," p. 531.
(5) Kishoree Lal v. Chunam Lal, S. D. R., (1852), 111; see Shinn Golam v. Baran Sing, 1 B.
L. R. (A. C.), 164 (1868); overruled by Tarak Chunder v. Jogeshur Chunder, 11 H. L. R., 193
(1873).
(7) Somangowe v. Bharmangowe, 1 Bom. H. C. R., 43 (1883); see also cases, post, sub voce, "Self-acquisition." And for a recent case in which a large number of authorities were reviewed, the evidence being held to establish separation; see Ram Perasad v. Lakhpati Koer, 30 C., 231 (1902).
Hindu Law:

Partition.

A Hindu family admitted or shown to be joint is presumed to continue in a state of union; and therefore where a plaintiff alleges that the property has been divided and has by partition or otherwise become separate, the presumption being the other way, the onus is on him to prove it. (1) But where there has actually been a partition, the burden of proving a re-union is on the person alleging it, (2) and to establish it, it would be necessary, to show not only that the parties already divided, lived or traded together but that they did it with the intention of altering their status thereby.

Similarly, after a general separation in food and partition of estate, if any one of several brothers comes into Court alleging that a particular portion of property originally joint continues to remain so, the onus of proof will lie on him. (3) Where the plaintiffs by their own evidence destroyed the presumption that the family was, at the commencement of the suit, a joint family, it was held to lie upon the plaintiffs to prove a separation at such a period as would entitle them to the relief which they sought. (4) Where the plaintiff admitted that there had been a previous partition under which lands sued for had fallen to the defendant, but alleged that the partition was only a temporary one and that it had come to an end, it was held that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove his plea. (5) A fortiori, where there have been admitted self-acquisitions and an actual partition, if one of the members sued subsequently for a share of the property left in the hands of one of the members as his self-acquired property, alleging that it was really joint property; or if a member of the family admitted a partition among some of the members, but asserted that the others had remained undivided, the onus would lie upon him to make out such a case. (6)

The general presumption being that, where there is admitted to be some property, such property is joint family property, the onus lies on the member of the family claiming property as self-acquired to prove it. (7) If one of the

---

(1) Cheetha v. Miheen Lall, 11 Moo. I. A., 380 (1867); Ram Chander v. Chunday Coomar, 13 Moo. I. A., 198 (1869); Prankishen Paul v. Mushooru Mohun Paul, 10 Moo. I. A., 403, 441 (1895); Kauma Nathchiar v. Baja of Shingumpa, 9 Moo. I. A., 539, 543 (1883); Laxman Row v. Mullar Row, 5 W. R., 67; s. c., 2 Knapp's Rep., 60 (1829) P. C. [The onus of proof is on the party seeking to except any property from the general rule of partition according to Hindu law; Bisunbhor Sircar v. Soordhuni Dassee, 3 W. R., 21 (1865); Bhogobhoo Miraion v. Domon Misser, 24 W. R., 365; Amar Nath v. Gouri Nath, 6 B. L. R., 232 (1870); Bisunbhor Sircar v. Soordhuni Dassee, 3 W. R., 21 (1865); Mun Nohinee v. Kodamoni Pabbar, 3 W. R., 31 (1865); Gooroo Pershad v. Kaale Pershad, 5 W. R., 121 (1866); Tresslurchn Roy v. Rajkshen Roy, 5 W. R., 214 (1866); 3 B. L. R., (P. C.), 41; Prit Koer v. Mahadeo Pershad, 21 I. A., 134 (1894); s. c., 22 C., 85; Ram Ghulam v. Ram Behari, 18 A., 90, 91 (1895).

(2) Prankishen v. Mushooromohun, 10 Moo. I. A., 103 (1865); s. c., 4 Suth., (P. C.), 11; Gopul v. Kunaram, 7 South., 35 (1867); Ram Hari v. Triksam, 7 B. L. R., 336 (1871), s. c., 15 Suth., 412; Venktesh Gopaia v. Lakshmi Venkata, 3 B. L. R. (P. C.), 41 (1889); Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain 7 C. W. N., 578 (1903).

(4) Ram Ghulam v. Ram Behari, 18 A., 90 (1895).

(5) Obhoy Churn v. Huri Nath, 8 C., 72 (1881); s. c., 10 C. L. R., 81; see Hiruy Nath v. Mohundhunia Bideos, 20 C., 285.

(6) Badul Singh v. Chutterdshore Singh, 9 Suth., 558 (1868); Banoo v. Kashee Ram, 3 C., 315 (1877); Radha Churn v. Kripa Sinh, 5 C., 474 (1879); Obhoy Churn v. Gobind Chander, 9 C., 237 (1882); Basu Krishna v. Chinammon, 12 C., 282 (1885); Upenara Narain v. Gopee Nath, 9 C., 817 (1883). In the last two cases it was held that the mere fact that one member of the family had separated from the joint stock raised no presumption that the other members had separated inter se dissenting from Radha Churn v. Kripa Sinh, 5 C., 474 (1879); Maynoo's Hindu Law, 6th ed., § 291. See converse conrs. Krishna Sahdi v. Ramshunder Iyer, 8 Mad. H. C., 25 (1875).

(7) Yanumula Venkatsimah v. Bouchis Fekkonda, 13 Moo. I. A., 333 (1870); Ramshunder Tenwos v. Sheckoum Das, 10 Moo. I. A., 409 (1866); Lalla Behara v. Lalla Mudder, 6 W. R., 89 (1860); Sheo Ruttun v. Gour Behara, 7 W. R., 440 (1867); Radha Ramon v. Pheel Kunwar, 10 W. R., 28 (1868); Nilmonoy Bhogyo v. Gopra Narain, 1 W. R., 334 (1866); Umaka Churn v. Bhogobhoo Churn, 3 W. R., 173 (1865). (Suit for share in joint family property: denial that members of the family is found in possession of any property, the presumption would be, not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of the joint family. (1) On the other hand, if the property is admitted to be originally self-acquired, but stated to have been thrown into the common stock, this would be a very good case, if made out; but the onus of proving it would be heavily on the person asserting it. (2) In a recent case (3) for partition of property alleged to be the property of a joint Hindu family of which the plaintiff was a member, it was held that, as the defendants set up their separate acquisition in a suit for the partition of a joint family which admittedly was possessed as such of some property, the presumption was that the whole of the property of each individual belonged to the common stock and the burden of proving separate self-acquisition lay on the person asserting it. v. ante, "Joint property."

Where after the death of a Hindu widow the plaintiff claimed, as the reversionary heir of her husband, certain properties, some of which were inherited from her husband and some acquired by her after her husband's death; held that there was no presumption that property acquired by a Hindu widow after her husband's death forms part of his estate, and that the plaintiff must start his case with proofs sufficient to shift the onus, proof at least of facts from which an inference can be drawn. (4) The proposition that when a widow is in possession of property of the acquisition of which no account is given, and it is shown that her husband died possessed of considerable property, then there is a presumption of law that the property found in the widow's possession was originally that of her husband, is, according to a recent decision of the Privy Council, inconsistent with the general rule that he who claims property through some person must show the property to have been vested in that person, a rule which is as equally applicable to movable as to immovable property. (5) A person claiming under a deed of gift from a Hindu widow, which recites that the property to be conveyed was stridhan, must prove this in order to succeed in his claim. (6) Similarly a Hindu widow seeking to exempt property from liability for her husband's debts, as being acquired by her stridhan, must prove it. (7)
If a Hindu widow mortgages or alienates property, which in the ordinary course would descend to reversionary heirs on her death, or escheat to the Crown, the onus is upon those who derive their title from her to show that such alienation or mortgage was made with the consent of the immediate heirs,(1) or for purpose for which a Hindu widow is by Hindu law competent to charge the estate,(2) and as between the widow and the person dealing with her, the transaction must be absolutely free from fraud and must be shown to have been entered into after the fullest explanation to her of its nature and consequences.(3) Acts of alienation by a Hindu widow for pious and religious purposes calculated to promote the spiritual welfare of her deceased husband are no doubt valid,(4) but acts of alienation for her own spiritual welfare, or that of persons other than the deceased owner, will be void.(5) A daughter who takes her father's property on the death of the widow in default of a son takes the inheritance with a qualified power as regards alienation, in respect of which she is in no better situation than the widow. On the death of the daughter, the heir of her father succeeds as his heir, not as her heir.(6) The lender to, or purchaser from, a Hindu widow is, however, not bound to see to the application of the money. It is sufficient if he satisfies himself as to the necessity for the loan: but he does not necessarily lose his rights, if upon bond fide inquiry he has been deceived as to the existence of the necessity which he had reasonable grounds supposing to exist.(7) But a recital in a bond given for money borrowed by a Hindu widow is not sufficient evidence of the fact in a suit against the heirs or in a suit to charge the estate; (8) "neither is recital in a deed of sale sufficient evidence of the existence of the necessity."(9) In a case where a Hindu widow sued to recover a share of property alleged to have been inherited from her husband and mortgaged by her husband's brother and sold under a decree obtained on the mortgage, it was held that the onus was on the brother (defendant) to show that the plaintiff had derived any benefit from the money. It was

---

(2) Mayno's Hindu Law, § 694; Calcutta Vencasa v. Collector of Masulipatnam, 11 Moo. I. A., 619 (1867); 10 W. R. (P. C.), 47; and Collector of Masulipatnam v. Calcutta Vencasa, 8 Moo. I. A., 506 (1861); 2 W. R. (P. C.), 61; Raj Lutee v. Gokool Chunder, 13 Moo. I. A., 209 (1869); s. c. 3 B. L. R. (P. C.), 57; 12 Suth. (P. C.), 47; Kali Coomas v. Ram Das, W. R., 153 (1864); Bisenahsh Roy v. Lall Bahadoor, 1 W. R., 247 (1864); Ram Dhone v. Ishanee Dobbe, W. R., 123 (1885); Dhondo Ramchandra v. Balkritsna Gobind, 8 B. R. 190 (1883); Lakhman Bhawakhor v. Radhakari, B. R., 609 (1887); Rangibhai Kalyandos v. Vinayak Vishnu, B. R., 666 (1897); Mohamed Shumool v. Shewakram, 22 W. R., 409; Rao Kurun v. Fyla Ali, 10 B. L. R., 112 (1871); s. c., 14 Moo. I. A., 176. (There is no doubt that those who take security from a person having only a limited power to grant it, are bound to show, prima facie at any rate, that the money was raised for a legitimate purpose.) Mohima Chunder v. Ram Kishore, 15 B. I. R., 142 (1876).

The estate of a Hindu family, in which, after the death of the father and his widow a daughter held an interest for life, comprised a family trade carried on by a manager on her account. Held that the restriction upon her power to alienate remained the same, notwithstanding the trade, without being relaxed on that account. It is for the plaintiff to state and prove all that will give validity to the charge. Sham Sundar v. Achhen Kuar, 21 A., 71 (1898).

(3) Mahmood Ashraf v. Brijeswarree Dasree, 19 W. R., 426 (1873). (The alienation by a Hindu widow of a portion of her estate in order to enable her to make a pilgrimage to Gya to perform her husband's wish was held good and proper.)

(4) Puran Dai v. Jai Narain, 4 A., 482 (1883).

(6) Ram Gopal v. Buldeo Bose, W. R., 385 (1884); Ram Persad v. Najumpeker Koor, W. R., 501 (1848); Aman Nath v. Agham Kuar, 14 A., 420 (1892). (It must be at least shown that the grantee was led, on reasonable grounds, to believe that there was a legal necessity for the alienation.)

(7) Kamneswar Prasad v. Ram Bahadur, 3 Ca. 843 (1890); 8 C. L. R., 361; L. R., 8 L. A., 8.

sufficient for the plaintiff to prove her title. Where a voluntary transfer by a Hindu widow is alleged, the burden of proving that it was a free gift, made with knowledge by her of her rights, is on the donee. In the case of alienation by one of two widows the burden of proof was held to be on the plaintiff to prove that the other widow did not consent to the sale.

Where a guardian of a Hindu minor (who is often the widow mother) alienates or charges the estate or any portion of it, the onus is on the mortgagee or person relying on the charge to show that there was a necessity therefor, or at least that he had good ground for supposing that the transaction was for the benefit of the estate of the minor.

The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge the estate, is a limited and qualified power; it can only be exercised in a case of need or for the benefit of the estate. But where the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bond fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded. The lender is bound to enquire into the necessities for the loan and to satisfy himself as well as he can with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estates. If he does so inquire and act honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and under such circumstances he is not bound to see to the application of the money.

If such danger has arisen from any misconduct to which the lender has been a party he cannot take advantage of his own wrong to support a charge in his own favour against the heir grounded on a necessity which his wrong has helped to cause. Where it is not shown that the lender has acted mali fide, he will not be affected, although it be shown that with better management the estate might have been kept free from debt. Money to be secured on an estate being obtainable on easier terms than a loan which rests on mere personal security, the mere creation of a charge securing a proper debt is not to be viewed as mismanagement. The purposes for which a loan is wanted are often future as respects the actual application, and a lender can rarely have, unless he enters on the management, the means of controlling and rightly directing the actual application: and a bond fide creditor, who has acted... honestly and with due caution, ought not to suffer, should it turn out that he has himself been deceived." A lender of money may reasonably be expected to prove the circumstances connected with his own particular loan, but cannot reasonably be expected to know or to come prepared with proof of the antecedent economy and good conduct of the owner of an ancestral estate.

If, therefore, the lender proves the circumstances of his own particular loan so as to show that he acted honestly that he made due and proper enquiry and that he had reasonable grounds for believing that the transaction was for the benefit of the minor and his estate, he will have sufficiently discharged the burden cast upon him. Beyond this it is not possible to lay down any general and inflexible rule as to the person on whom should be placed the burden of proving that any particular alienation was bona fide. The presumption, proper to be made, will vary with circumstances, and it must be regulated by and is dependent upon them. In Malabar law there is no presumption that every debt contracted by a karnavan of a tarwad is for the uses of the tarwad and chargeable on the tarwad estate. It is for the creditor to show that the karnavan had authority from the tarwad to contract the debt。(1)

In the aforementioned case(2) estate of a Hindu family, in which, after the death of the father and his widow, a daughter held an interest for life comprised a family trade, carried on by a manager on her account. It was held that the case of a widow or daughter under such circumstances differs from that of the manager or head of an undivided family who manages an ancestral trade. It is for the plaintiff to state and prove all that will give validity to the charge. The principles laid down in Hunoonam Pershad Panday’s case apply to the alienation of property by the de facto manager of a Hindu endowment。(3) In a suit for possession of land in virtue of a pottah issued by the eldest members of a joint Hindu family where the other members dispute the claim on the ground that the lessor, as one of a joint family, could not give title to the whole of the land, the onus of proving the eldest brother’s right to give such title is on the plaintiff。(4)

Property devoted to religious purposes is, as a rule inalienable, but it is competent for the sebaist of property dedicated to the worship of an idol in his capacity as sebaist and manager of the estate to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol defending hostile litigious attacks and other like objects. The power to incur such debts must be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them。(5) The authority of the sebaist of an idol’s estate would appear to be in this respect analogous to that of the manager of an infant heir, defined in the case of Hunoonam Peshad v. Munraj Koomeeree。(6)

(1) Kutti Mannadiyar v. Payunu Mathan, 3 M., 288 (1881). As to the evidence required where there has been a loan for family purposes, see Krishna v. Vasun, 21 B., 806 (1890).

(2) Sham Sundar v. Archha Kunwar, 21 A., 71 (1898).

(6) 6 Maa. I., 135 at p. 423 (1856); Koomeere Doopanath v. Ram Chunder, 4 I. A., 63, 61 (1876); s. c. 2, C., 341.
Judgments obtained against a former sebait in respect of debts so incurred are binding on succeeding Sebait.(1)

Where it is contended that property has been inalienably conferred upon an idol to sustain its worship, the onus probandi lies upon the person who sets up this case.(2) Where the possession of the legal heir after the death of the widow is prevented and the usual course of inheritance changed on the ground of an adoption having been made, the onus is upon the party setting up that title against the entrance of the legal heir to prove the adoption, both as regards the power of the adopter to adopt and as regards the fact of the adoption, if it be questioned: and not upon the heir suing to prove its invalidity, even though he alleged fraud and adduced no evidence in support of it.(3) Adoption must be strictly proved, and the party who claims as an adopted son must establish by evidence (a) the authority given by the husband to adopt a son to him; (b) his actual adoption as the son of the husband.(4) The fact of adoption being admitted and its validity impugned on the ground of incapacity on the part of the adopted son, it is for the party so impugning the validity of the adoption to establish the alleged incapacity.(5) In a suit brought to set aside an adoption on the allegation that adoption is forbidden by the custom of the caste to which the parties belong, the onus of proving such custom is on the plaintiff.(6) See further section 114, post, sub. voc. "Adoption." If a plaintiff sues as reversionary heir during the lifetime of the widow for a declaration that an adoption is invalid, the onus is on him to prove the invalidity.(7) Where a plaintiff sues to set aside certain title-deeds, some evidence ought to be given by the plaintiff to impeach the deeds: it is not sufficient for him to prove heirship, nor by so doing can he throw the burden of showing a better title on the defendant.(8) If a plaintiff institutes a suit as collateral heir, the onus is on him to prove his title through the common ancestor in all its stages.(9) Where the rule of succession as sebait laid down was by the endorser of a religious institution was not clear and there was no established usages, the onus was held to lie on the person claiming the property as sebait, to make out his claim.(10) In a suit by a Hindu widow for a moiety of the ancestral property, where the defendant alleged that her deceased husband was a leper and could not succeed to the property, the onus lay on the defendant to prove the alleged disqualification.(11) Similarly where the defendant set up a waseetunmaah or will.(12) The Government claiming lands as an escheat, which are admittedly

(1) Prasunno Kumari v. Golab Chund, 14 R. L. 450 (1875); L. R., 2 I. A., 145.
(2) Koosur Doorgaith v. Ram Chunder, 4 I. A., 52, 61 (1876); s. c., 2 C., 341.
(3) Tenuree Tineere v. Hossein Khan, L. R., 1 I. A., 192 (1874); s. c., 13 B. I. R. 427, 21 W. R., 340.
(4) Kedarnath Dass v. Proop Chunder, 8 C. I. R., 238 (1880); s. c., 6 C., 626; Kali Kishore v. Bhoman Chunder, 18 C., 201 (1890); s. c., 17 I. A., 159.
(5) Janoki Debi v. Gopal Acharjri, 9 C., 796 (1882); s. c., 13 C. L. R., 30; Mutu Ramalinga v. Sadupai, 1 I. A., 200 (1874); (a Zemindar claiming a customary right to grant confirmation of the election of a mourning must prove the custom.)
(6) Kodarnath Dass v. Rammalee Dass, 1 Sc. R., 170 (1906); Ganda Puri v. Chakot Puri, 13 I. A., 100 (1888); s. c., 9 A., 1. (The only law to be observed is to be found in custom and practice, which must be proved.) in the possession of the party claiming as heir, must show by proof that the last proprietors died without heir. They are in the same position as a plaintiff in an ordinary suit for ejectment and must prove their title.(1) The natural heir of a Hindu, who has been taken as illostam into another family, are prind facie entitled to succeed to the property acquired by the deceased by virtue of his illostam marriage, and the onus of proving any special circumstances to rebut this claim lies on the persons, who raise this plea.(2) There is no inconsistency between a custom of impartibility and the right of females to inherit. The fact of there being a custom of impartibility in respect of family property does not take it outside the common law and cannot cast the burden of proving the existence of any particular right, as of females to take by inheritance, upon those who maintain it; for where a custom is proved to exist it only so far supersedes the general law, which, however, still regulates all outside the custom.(3)

(2) Ramakrishna v. Subhakka, 12 M., 412 (1889).
(3) Ram Sunder v. Maharani Janki, 7 C. W. N., 67 (1902).
(4) Stra. H. I., 166.
(5) Gridhara Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 11 A., 321 (1874); followed, Innes and Matthew Ayer, JJ., dissenting in Ponnappa Pillai v. Pappyaswagam, 4 M., 1 (1881); and in Simanakhera Mudali v. Pursi Aneri, 4 M., 96 (1881); see also Nanomi Babu v. Madham Mohun, 13 C., 21 (1886); 13 I. A. 1; Damodh Lal v. Jugdeep Narain, 4 I. A., 247 (1877); Bhagwan Prasad v. Girja Koer, 16 C., 717 (1888); Ponnappa Pillai v. Pappyaswagam, 9 M., 343 (1888); 15 I. A., 99; Sita Ram v. Zalim Singh, 8 A., 231 (1886); Lal Singh v. Doo Narain, 8 A., 270 (1887); Jamma v. Naun Sakh, 9 A., 493 (1887); Badri Prasad v. Madon Lal, 15 A., 75 (1893); Jagabhai Lalvchh v. Vif Bhakudana, 11 B., 37 (1886); Chinaranar Mekendal v. Kashinath, 14 B., 320 (1889). (Mere proof of father being man of immoral and extravagant habits not enough): Khaliul Rahaman v. Gobind Prasad, 20 C., 328 (1892); Bada v. Timma, 7 M., 357 (1883); Collector of Monghyr v. Hardai Narain, 5 C., 425, 433 (1870); see also contra Khodabhar Prasad v. Pokharam Koer, 3 B. L. R. (B. N.), 31 (1880); and Damodh Lal v. Jugdeep Narain, 4 I. A., 247 (1877); see also Sauraj Bansi v. Shos Prakash, 6 I. A., 88 (1878); s. a. 5 C., 148; see also Simganga v. Lathamana, 9 M., 106 (1885), Jana Ti v. Kashinath, 26 B., 326 (1901).

(6) As to immoral debts, see Badeve Lal v. Kanso Lall, 25 W. R., 292 (1875); Lucknow Dui v. Ashman Singh, 25 W. R., 421 (1876); s. a., 2 B. C., 193; Nasir Husain v. Nancho Singh, 25 W. R., 317 (1876); Sita Ram v. Zalim Singh, 9 A., 231 (1886); Makabir Prakash v. Banabik Singh, 6 A., 234 (1884); (a debt which was a mere money-debt against the father personally and not a debt which it was the duty of the son to pay), Parmanec Dass v. Shkhatan Bakson, 24 C., 672 (1897); McDowell v. Rajasu Chettie, 27 M., 71 (1903).

(7) Stra. H. L., 166; see also Mayne's Hindu Law, § 279; Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law, 304, 307 and 309.
consideration of the invalid nature of the debts incurred.\(1\) In the above case where the share of the father in the family dwelling-house had been attached by execution under a decree obtained on a bond executed by the father, it was held that the onus probandi lay on the son who, on coming of age, brought the suit to recover, not his share, but the whole property. Similarly in another case,\(2\) where the plaintiff attained his majority seven or eight years before he took any steps to set this purchase aside. As regards the onus of proof that assets have come to the hands of the heir, it has been laid down by the Madras High Court that in a suit against an heir for debts of his ancestor in the absence of special circumstances, the \textit{onus} is on the plaintiff in the first instance to give such evidence as would \textit{prima facie} afford reasonable grounds for an inference that assets had or ought to have come to the hands of the defendant; when they have done this the onus is then on the defendant to show that the amount of such assets is not sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff’s claim or that he was not entitled to be satisfied out of them, or that there were no assets, or that they had been disposed of in satisfaction of other claims.\(3\) The general result of these cases would seem, therefore, to be that under the Mitakshara law a son is always liable for his father’s debts, and cannot set aside an alienation for these debts, unless they have been contracted for an immoral and improper purpose. It is not, however, sufficient to show merely that the father was a person of extravagan or immoral habits. The \textit{onus} is on the son to establish some connection between the debt and the father’s immoralities.\(4\) Where a son seeks to get rid of the effect as against his interests in the joint family property of a decree on a mortgage executed by his father obtained in a suit to which he was not made a party, the burden of proof lies on him to establish that the mortgagee when he brought his suit had notice of his interests in the mortgaged property.\(5\) Whether the alienation has taken place at a sale in execution of a decree obtained against the father, or whether the debt was one antecedent to the sale,\(6\) or merely one antecedent to the suit, is immaterial. But in those cases, where a person buys ancestral estate, or takes a mortgage of it from the father whom he knows to have only a limited interest in it for a sum of ready-money paid down at the time of the transaction, in a suit by the son to avoid it he must establish that he made all reasonable and fair enquiry before effecting the sale or mortgage, and that he was satisfied by such inquiry and believed, in paying his money that it was required for the legal necessities of the joint family in respect of which the father, as head and managing member, could deal with and bind the joint ancestral estate.\(7\) A Hindu father in order to \begin{enumerate}

\item[(1)] Giridharme Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 1 I. A., 321 (1874).
\item[(2)] Adarnomi Desi v. Chowdhury, 3 C. C., 1 (1877); see also Swraj Bunai v. Shew Prashad, 6 I. A., 88 (1878); Lekhraj Rai v. Mahab Chaud, 14 Moo., L. A., 363 (1871); 10 B. L. R., 42. (Where fraud and collusion were alleged by plaintiff); Hanuman Singh v. Nanek Chaud, 6 A., 193 (1884).
\item[(3)] Kotala Upshi v. Shangara Varma, 3 Mad. J. C., 161 (1866); see also Joogul Khishv v. Kaleeje Kurv, 25 W. R., 224 (1872); Mayne’s Hindu Law, § 277.
\item[(4)] Hanuman Singh v. Nanaek Chaud, 6 A., 193 (1884); Sisa Ram v. Zalim Singh, 8 A., 231 (1888); Sadaasvib v. Dinkar, 8 B., 530 (1882); Ramphul Singh v. Dey Narain, 8 C., 517 (1881); Ram Nath v. Lachman Rai, 21 A., 193, 194 (1890).
\item[(5)] Ram Nath v. Lachman Rai, 21 A., 193 (1899).
\item[(6)] Lachman Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhury, 5 C., 855 (1880); Laljee Sahoy v. Pakker Chand, 6 C., 135 (1880); see also Upooroo Tewery v. Lalla Ramdhjee, 6 C., 749 (1881); Aromakha Chetti v. Muniasmi Mudali, 7 M., 39 (1883); Hanuman Kames v. Dowul Mundar, 10 C., 528 (1884).
\item[(7)] Lal Singh v. Deo Narain, 8 A., 279 (1896); see also Juma v. Nain Suku, 9 A., 493 (1887). See also on the whole subject, the following cases Hanuman Dutt v. Khishen Khishor, (1870), 8 B. L. R., 353; Mahosher Perum v. Ramugd Sinch, 12 B. L. R., 90 (1873); Pures Narayan v Hanuman Sahoy, 5 C., 845 (1880); Lachman Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhury, 5 C., 855 (1889) followed by Gangs Prasad v. Ayushka Pagehand, 8 C., 131 (1881); 9 C. L. R., 417; Goobirshaw Lall v. Singeser Dow, 7 C., 52 (1881); Sura Prasad v. Golob Chand, 27 C., 762 (1900); Ramphul Singh v. Dey Narain, 8 C., 517 (1881). (Suit by son to recover property sold by father during \end{enumerate}
satisfy such of his debts as would be binding on his heirs, can sell the entirety of the family property so as to pass even his son's interest therein, but it lies on him, who seeks to bind an infant, to prove justifying circumstances. (1)

In a suit against an insolvent and the Official Assignee for the sale of mortgaged property, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that title-deeds in his possession after the insolvency were deposited with him as security before the adjudication. (2)

The following provision contained in a prospectus to which a Policy was made subject 'Age admitted in the Company's policy in all cases where proof is given satisfactory to the directors. Proof of age can be furnished, at any time; if not furnished, it will be necessary on settlement of claim'—impose on the assured or his representatives the obligation of giving proof of age before the Company can be called upon to pay. If the evidence had been given in the lifetime of the assured, and an admission of age was attached to the policy, no further proof would be needed, and the onus of disputing the age would be thrown on the Company; (3) but in the absence of such evidence and of such admission it lies upon those claiming upon the policy by reasonable proof to satisfy the Court as to the age of the assured. (4) When a person sues on a policy of insurance which contains certain exceptions in the event of which the assured are not liable, it lies upon the plaintiff to prove that the loss does not fall within any of those exceptions. (5) his minority; burden of proof on plaintiff to show that debt was incurred for illegal or immoral purpose). Ambica Prasad v. Ram Nivas, 8 C., 388 (1881); 10 C. L. R., 605; see also Sheo Prasad v. Jung Bahadur, 9 C., 389 (1882); Ram Dutt v. Mahender Prasad, 9 C., 462 (1883); s. c., 12 C. I. R., 494; and similar case Baoy Koer v. Hurry Das, 9 C., 495 (1882); s. c., 12 C. L. R., 282; Jotuddari Lal v. Raghubir Prasad, 12 C. L. R., 285 (1883); Sisunath Koer v. Land Mortgage Bank, 9 C., 888; s. c., 12 C. L. R., 674 (1883); Jumnesty Prasad v. Dep Narain, 10 C., 1 (1883); Doorga Prasad v. Krishna Prasad, 11 C. L. R. (P. C.), 210 (1882) (liability of infant); Ganesh v. Anuta Bapulu, 4 M., 73 (1881). (Where the sale is disputed by a coparcener (not a son), ruling in Girdharam Lal's case is not applicable, and purchaser must show that the debts existed at time of sale and that debts were such as were incumbent on the minor to discharge.) Sundarania Ayengar v. Jogendar Pillai, 4 M., 111 (1881); Gurnami Chetti v. Badanikar Chetti, 5 M., 37 (1881); Veliyammal v. Kaka Chetti, 5 M., 61 (1881). (Where purchaser at sale under decree against father has got possession of the whole property, son cannot recover his share without proving that debt for which decree was made, was illegal or immoral). Subramaniyasam v. Subramaniyasamy, 5 M., 125 (1879). (Elder of two brothers during minority of younger renewed mortgage executed by father for purposes neither illegal nor immoral. Suit by mortgagee against elder brother: decree in execution. Minor son not bound and entitled to recover his share of property without paying his share of the mortgage-debt). Gurnami Sastri v. Ganapathy Puli, 5 M., 377 (1879). (Suit against father for specific performance of contract to sell ancestral property: proof of necessity must be required). Muttayya Chetti v. Sivaji Vira, 9 I. A., 125; s. c., 6 M., 1 (1882). (Interest which son takes by heritage from father is liable as assets by descent for payment of father's debts). Yemudra Bisaramami v. Nikwana Sanyasi, 6 M., 400 (1883). (No proof that mortgage-debt contracted by father was for necessary purposes.) Phul Chand v. Man Singh, 4 A., 309 (1883). (Where adult son was aware of mortgage by father for necessary purpose and did not protest, held son could not succeed unless he could show debt was for illegal or immoral purpose). Ujagar Singh v. Pilm Singh, 8 I. A., 190 (1881); Hurde Narain v. Rooher Prasad, 11 I. A., 26 (1883); Ramachandra v. Namaswamy, 7 M., 275 (1881). As to 'family necessity'; see Balaji Mahendri v. Krishnaji Devji, 2 B., 666 (1878). See also Luchman Das v. Khumul Lal, 19 A., 26 (1896); [liability of grandsons to pay interest on their grand-father's debts]; Puranam Dass v. Bhasker Mahran, 24 C., 672 (1897) [no antecedent debt]. McDowell v. Rajave Chetti, 27 M., 71 (1908).

(4) Bhashyam Ayyegar, J., was of opinion that such admission would preclude the company from producing evidence to disprove the age as admitted.
It is for the person who claims an exclusive privilege under the Inventions Act (V of 1888) and is in possession of the facts which, in his opinion, entitle him to that exclusive privilege, to show that those facts exist.(1)

"Proprietors of land in the Bengal Presidency are concerned with two classes of lakhiraj or revenue-free grants of land, viz. (a) Grants made previous to the 1st December 1790, and not exceeding one hundred bighas, the revenue of which (when adjudged invalid) was, by the sixth section of Ben. Reg. XIX of 1793, made over to the persons responsible for the discharge of the revenue of the estate within the limits of which the lands are situated. The gift of this revenue was an act of liberality on the part of Government, inasmuch as these grants had been expressly excluded from the decennial and permanent settlements. The former lakhiraj holder was not dispossessed, but was allowed to hold the land as a dependent taluk, subject to the payment of revenue. (b) Grants made after the 1st December 1790 and whether exceeding or under one hundred bighas. These grants (unless made by the Governor-General in Council) were declared to be in all cases null and void, and as they had been included within the limits of permanently-settled estates, the proprietors of such estates were, by the tenth section of the Ben. Reg. XIX of 1793 authorized and required to dispossess the alleged grantees, annex the lands to their estates and collect the rents thereof. With respect to the first class, proprietors were expressly required by law (section 11, Reg. XIX of 1793) to institute suits in the Civil Courts for the recovery of the revenue made over to them by Government. With respect to the second class, proprietors were formerly allowed to dispossess the alleged revenue-free-holders, but the difficulty of doing so induced resort to the Courts in those cases also; and finally, this resort was made compulsory section 28 of Act X of 1859.

There is, however, an important difference as regards the burden of proof in each class of cases. In the first class of cases, where the allegation is that the lakhiraj tenure was created before the 1st December 1790, the onus probandi, in a suit for resumption of title, lies on the alleged lakhirajdar or person setting up the revenue-free title."(3)

If a person claiming under a lakhiraj grant made since 1st December 1790, this will be a conclusive bar to a suit for resumption, although the suit may be brought within twelve years; but the zeemidars’ right to resume is still subject to the twelve years’ rule of limitation.(5)

In the second class of cases, where the allegation is that the lakhiraj tenure was created after the 1st December 1790, the onus probandi lie on the zeemidar or proprietor to show that the land claimed as lakhiraj is part of his madl or rent-paying estate, and was assessed with the public revenue at the time of the decennial settlement.(6) Where the plaintiff was the representative of an auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue and the suit was commenced within twelve years from the date of the purchase the onus of proof was on the plaintiff to show that the lands were not lakhiraj.(7)

---

(2) Field’s Evidence Act., 481; and see Field’s Regulations, 35, 246-261.
(4) Act XIV of 1859, s. 1, cl. 14; Brilessdhur Sanyeri v. Ramenath Bokshi, 6 W. R., 58 (1866); Sheikh Babu v. Lala Bhoswar, 1 W. R., 110 (1864).
(5) See Field’s Evidence Act., 481; see also Forbes v. Meer Mahomed, 20 W. R., 44 (1873); and Act XIV of 1859, s. 1, cl. 14; Act XV of 1877, Art. 130.
(7) Eggoomania v. Preena Mooka, 25 W. R., 206 (1876); 1 C., 378.
is generally done by showing that rent has been paid for the land in question at some time since December 1790. (1) The mere fact that lands fall within the geographical limits of an estate does not of itself show that such land is mad land. (2) But lands situated within the limits of a zamindari are primâ facie considered to be a part of such zamindari, and those who allege that they are entitled to have any such lands settled as a separate shiksm taluk must make out this title. (3) In a question of boundary between a lakhraj tenure and a zamindar's mad land, there is no presumption one way or the other, but the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his case. (4) If an alleged lakhrajdar institutes a suit for a declaration of title the burden of proof is on him to prove his title, and no proof of possession (unless it be carried beyond 1790) will shift the burden to the zamindar. (5) Where the zamindar had already ousted the alleged lakhrajdar without resorting to the Courts and the latter instituted a suit to recover possession, it was held that as the zamindar had no right to oust the lakhrajdar, unless the lakhraj was created subsequently to 1st December 1790, the burden of proof was on the zamindar to prove that the lakhraj was created subsequently to that date. To decide otherwise would be to allow the zamindar by his own wrongful act to shift the burden of proof. (6) Under section 87 of the Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873, N.-W. P.), any person claiming land free of revenue, which is not recorded as revenue free, is bound to prove his title to hold such land free of revenue. (7)

When a public body seeks under the Land Acquisition Act to acquire any portion of a block of buildings which is structurally connected with the main work, the onus is on that body to show that the portion is not ‘reasonably required for the full and unimpaired use of the house.’ (8)

When the question is whether persons are landlords and tenants, and it has been shown that they have been acting as such, the burden of proving that they do not stand or have ceased to stand in that relationship, is on the person, who affirms it. (Section 109, post.) As to the tenant’s estoppel, see section 116, post; and as to estoppels affecting the landlord, see section 115, post. Where defendants admit the ownership of the land to be with the plaintiff but claim to hold possession of it as tenants the onus lies upon them. (9) The burden of proving that a tenure has been held at a fixed and invariable rent for a period of twelve years antecedent to the permanent settlement in suit by a zamindar for enhancement of rent lies on the defendant, the tenure-holder. (10) But where the taluk is found to be a dependent taluk within the meaning of section 51, Reg. VII of 1793, the burden rests upon the plaintiff.

---

(2) Bishnath Chon.hey v. Radha Churn, 20 W. R., 465 (1873).
(3) Wise v. Bhoobun Hoyee, 10 Moo. I. A., 166 (1863); s. c., 3 W. R., P. C., 5.; Nisarmin v. Kaliperash Doss, 23 W. R., 431 (1875); see also Pursad Narain v. Bisecore Dyal, 7 W. R., 148 (1867). (Suit by a zamindar for declaration that land sold in execution as lakhraj was his mad land.)
(7) See Field’s Evidence Act, p. 482, and see, for further information on Lakhraj Tenures, Field’s Bengal Regulations, pp. 38, 345—361. See also N.-W. P. Act III of 1901.
(9) Nursing Narain v. Bhoom Thakur, 9 C. W. N., 144 (1904) at p. 146; Dist. Narum Taroon v. Behari Lal, 9 C. W. N., 133 (1905) [suit for declaration of Khud-Kash right.]
(10) Gopal Lal Thakur v. Tilak Chandram, 10 Moo. L. A., 183 (1865); s. c., 3 W. R., P. C., 1.
zemindar to show that the rent is variable. (1) In another case it was laid down that there is no presumption that any tenure held is not a transferable tenue and the person alleging it must prove it: (2) but in a subsequent case (3) where the plaintiff sued to recover possession, as part of his putni estate a ryoti holding sold in execution of decree and purchased by the defendant, the onus was thrown on the defendant to prove that the ryoti tenure was of a permanent and transferable nature. When a ryot holds lands of considerable extent under a zemindar and alleges that one or two plots are held under a different title the burden of proving this allegation is thrown on him; (4) and similarly if a ryot, who has paid rent for several years, pleads that he has got possession of a portion only of the lands demised, the onus lies on him to prove this allegation. (5) In a suit by a kabulayatdar khot to recover rent, the onus is on the holder of the khoti land to show that he is exempted from paying rent according to the custom of the country. (6) The mere fact that a tenant some time ago gave a kabulyst for a limited period at a particular rate of rent is not sufficient in itself to throw upon the defendant the entire burden of proving what the present rent is, without any evidence on the part of the landlord that the rent specified in the kabulyst had ever been realized from him. (7) The property in trees growing in a tenant's holding is, by general law, vested in the zemindar, and a tenant is not entitled in the absence of special custom, the burden of proving which is on him, to cut down and sell such trees. (8) The decision of a survey-officer as to tenure is under the Khoti Settlement Act (I of 1800, Bom. C.), binding until reversed or modified by decree of Court, and the burden of proof in such case lies upon the party, seeking to vary the decision. (9) The possession by the defendant of a tenure of limited extent within the plaintiff's putni raises no presumption of title upon his seizure of a piece of land and claiming it as part of his tenure. The onus lies upon the defendant to prove that the land was included in his mokurar holding and not upon the plaintiff to show that it was not. (10) In a suit for ejection where the defendant sets up a permanent tenancy the onus is upon the plaintiff to show this. (11) A landlord who makes an increase of rent for increase of area must show the necessary circumstances justifying a decree. (12)

In a suit for enhancement of rent, the burden of proof is on the landlord who seeks to disturb the previously existing arrangement. (13) But where the tenant pleads that a portion of the land held by him and sought to be enhanced is held rent free, the onus is on him to prove this allegation. (14) Where the defendant claimed to hold as a dependant taluk, the onus was held to be on the zemindar to show that the land was included in the zemindari at the time of

---

2. Deoga Chand v. Anund Chunder, 14 C., 382 (1887).
14. Nansuandopadhya v. Kali Prosann, 6 C., 542 (1880); s. c., 8 C. L. R., 8.
the permanent settlement. (1) In a suit to recover arrears of rent at enhanced rates, the onus of proving both the quantity and the rates is upon the plaintiff and not upon the defendant. (2) The onus of proving what is the proper rate is also upon the plaintiff. (3) But, where the plaintiff, who claimed a bhaoli rent at the rate of nine annas of the crop, proved that in the mauzah in question the ryots paid rent at that rate, it was held that the onus was on the defendants, who alleged that the rate was eight annas, to prove their allegation. (4) When in answer to a suit for enhanced rent of a taluk, the existence of which as an ancient taluk is undoubted, it is pleaded that the rent has not been changed since the permanent settlement and is not liable to enhancement, the onus is on the defendant to prove that he has held at an uniform rent for twenty years and when he has discharged this burden of proof, it lies upon the landlord to prove that the rent has varied since the permanent settlement. (5)

If in a suit for arrears of rent, the defendant claims an abstention on the ground that a portion of the land has been diluviated, the onus of proving such diluvion is on him. (6) So also where the defendant, in a like suit, alleges that there has been a remission of rent, the onus is on him to prove it. (7) Where a shareholder sues for a fractional portion of the rent, and it is alleged that the entire rent is payable together, the onus is on him to show that he is entitled to payment of the fractional portion separately. (8)

In a suit for ejectment the burden is on the tenant to prove that the tenure is permanent. (9) A ryot (10) or a tenure-holder (11) claiming protection from ejectment under the proviso to section 37, Act XI of 1859, or cultivating tenants seeking to protect themselves from ejectment on the ground that their tenure is of a "permanent character" (12) are bound to prove the grounds on which they claim protection. Where a third party intervenes in a suit for rent, himself claiming the rent, the onus is on him to prove actual receipt and enjoyment. (13) A person alleging that land is held by him as sir or proprietor's private land must prove it. (14) In a suit for arrears of rent and ejectment for non-payment where defendant challenged the rate claimed as well as plaintiff's right to sue alone, it was held that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove his claim to the rate of rent sued for and to show he was sole proprietor. (15) Person alleging in a suit for ejectment the permanency of the tenure must prove it. (16) If a tenant is sued for rent he can set up eviction by title paramount to that of the lessee as an answer and, if evicted from part of the land, an apportionment of the rent may take place: but the onus lies on the lessor, who claims an appointment to show what is the fair rate for the lands out of which the tenant was not evicted. (17)

Unless a landlord has a prima facie right to evict he must

---

(1) Asmanullah v. Basnarat Ali, 10 C., 920 (1884).
(3) Sumeea Khaatoon v. Tagore, 1 W. R., 58, (1834).
(4) Lochan Chewdury v. Anup Singh, 8 C. L. R., 428 (1881). See also s. 109, post.
(9) Nirjanan Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mohamed, 8 C. W. N., 895 (1904).
(12) Thiagaranja v. Ginaya Sambandha, 1 Mad., 77 (1887).
(14) Hari Das v. Thansham Narain, 6 A., 296 (1884).
start his case and show how such right accrued. There is no presumption that every tenant in a zamindari is a tenant-at-will nor that a tenancy is not a saleable interest. So where a ryot mortgaged the land in his holding and the mortgagee purchased the land in execution of a decree obtained upon his mortgage and the zamindar sued to eject the decree-holder and judgment-debtor: it was held, neither party adducing evidence, that as the burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff and had not been discharged, the suit must be dismissed. (1)

When a tenant has been in long and peaceable occupation of land as part of an admitted tenure, it lies upon the landlord in a suit for ejectment to prove in the first instance that the land is his khas property and not the tenants. (2)

Where the lands granted were the lands of the zamindar and the grant was on the condition that services should be rendered and that a certain sum should be payable to the zamindar in recognition of his ownership, primâ facie the ownership should remain with the zamindar; and the burden of proving the plea that the plaintiff was not entitled to eject would lie on the person resisting ejectment. (3)

A zamindar has, as such, a primâ facie title to the gross collections of all the mouzahs or villages within his zamindari and the burden of proof is on the person, who seeks to defeat that right by proving that he is entitled to an intermediate tenure. (4)

The same principle will apply where the zamindar, or assignee or lessee of his rights demands possession of the land from a person, who is unable to prove a tenancy or other right of continuing to occupy. (5) As to strict proof required on the part of the plaintiff seeking to disturb a possession of very long duration, see the case cited infra. (6) Where in a suit by a shareholder to recover a fractional portion of the rent, the defendant contends that he is only bound to pay to the person entitled to the whole rent, the onus is on the plaintiff to show that he is entitled to sue for a fractional portion. (7)

Plea of part-possession—In a suit to recover arrears of rent under a kabuliat, the defendant, who had paid rent for upwards of four or five years, pleaded that he had obtained possession of portion only of the lands demised, and it was held that the onus was on the defendant. (8) See section 114, “Presumptions relating to holding of land,” post.

There is a presumption in favour of legitimacy and marriage, and therefore on any person who is interested in making out the illegitimacy of another is thrown the whole burden of proving it. [Sections 112, 114, post, to the notes of which sections reference should be made.] (9)

The burden of proof upon the question whether a man is alive or dead is regulated by sections 107, 108, post, to the notes of which sections reference should be made.

It is a settled rule of law that it is for the plaintiff to show primâ facie that his suit is not barred by limitation. (10) But when the plaintiff’s suit or

---

(1) Appa Ram v. Subbanna, 13 M., 60 (1889).

(3) Sri Rajah v. Rajah Venkataramanamah, 26 M., 403 (1900).

(4) Sahib Perblad v. Doorgapsherad Tassarre, 12 Moo. I. A., 331 (1869); s. c., 2 B. L. R. (P. C.), 134.

(6) Forbes v. Meer Mahomed, 12 B. L. R., 216 (1873).

(7) Mt. Lahun v. Hemraj Singh, 20 W. R., 76 (1873), see as fractional co-sharers: Puschanun Banierie v. Raj Kumar, 19 C., 610 (1892); Ram Chunder v. Giridhir Dutt, 19 C., 766 (1891); Jogendro Narain v. Bunki Singh, 22 C., 658 (1896); Chandra Pratibha v. Purno Mokun, 20 C., 107 (1891); Copal Chunder v. Umeek Narain, 17 C., 695 (1890).

(8) Bani Madhub v. Sridhur Deb, 10 C. L. R., 555 (1881).

(9) See also Rajendra Nath v. Jogendra Nath, 14 Moo. I. A., 67 (1871).

proceeding is primâ facie within time, if the defendant alleges that the case is governed by a special clause allowing a shorter period of limitation, it is for him to satisfy the Court that the case comes under that special clause.(1) And if the defendant wishes the Court to believe in the existence of a particular fact operating as a bar to the suit it is for him generally to prove those facts under the provisions of section 103, ante. In a suit to recover immovable property it is for the plaintiff to prove that he has been in possession at some time within the period of limitation and not for the defendant to prove adverse possession for twelve years.(2) Such possession may be proved by oral evidence alone.(3) But the acts implying possession in one case may be wholly inadequate to prove it in another. The character and value of the property, the suitable and natural mode of using it, the course of conduct which the proprietor might reasonably be expected to follow with a due regard to his own interests—all these things greatly varying, as they must, under various conditions, are to be taken into account in determining the sufficiency of a possession.(4) Where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would and probably did continue until twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue and that the plaintiff's possession continued also, until the contrary is shown.(5) Where the plaintiff claimed certain land belonging to a mouza, part of a taluk, stating that it was originally a large bheel but had in recent years become dry and cultivable during a part of the year and proved his title, but the defendant relying on adverse possession for more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, denied the plaintiff's title, to the soil of the bheel; it was held that, as the plaintiff has proved his title, the onus lay on the defendant to prove that the plaintiff had lost his title by reason of the adverse possession.(6) Where a suit was brought by the plaintiff, the mortgagee, to recover the principal and interest due upon two mortgage-bonds and to enforce that claim by a sale of the mortgaged property, he never having been in possession at any time, and the defendant contended that the mortgagee could not enforce his right against him, because he had been in possession adversely to the plaintiff and those under whom he claimed for a period of twelve years before suit, it was held that the suit was not brought to recover possession as upon a dispossession, and the onus lay on the defendant to prove an adverse possession.(7) But neither of these cases are intended to

---

(1) Mitra, op. cit., see Mohansing Chawan v. Henry Conder, 7 B., 478 (1883); Danmull v.
(2) Perkhad Sein v. Rajender Kishore, 12 Moz. I. A., 337 (1869); Dinobundho Subhay v. Par-kong, 9 W. R., 158 (1868); Nitrasu Singh v. Nund Lal, 8 Moz. I. A., 199 (1860); Koomar Ranjit
v. Schane, 4 C. L. R., 390 (1879); Bhootnath Chatterjies v. Kedar Nath, 9 C., 125 (1882); Nasir
Sidike v. Woomech Chunder, 2 W. R., 75 (1865); Boolee Singh v. Nirobuna Narain, 7 W. R., 212
(1887); Bromanmud Gosein v. Government, 5 W. R., 136 (1864); Jogudamba Choudhri v. Ram Chunder, 6 W. R., 327; Gosein Das v. Seroo Koomares. (Suit for share in joint family property), 19 W. R., 192 (1873); Collector of Bungpore v. Topore, 5 W. R., 115 (1866); Beer Chunder
v. Deputi Collector of Bhulooch, 13 W. R., P. C., 23 (1870); Moro Demi v. Ramchandra Demi, 6 B., 306 (1882); Ramchandra Narayan v. Narayan Mohader, 11 B., 216 (1886); Tulsi Peresh v. Baja Misser, 14 C., 610 (1887); Mohima Chunder v. Mohesh Chunder, 16 C., 473, (1888); Ram Louka v. Joy Durgya, 11 W. R., 283 (1869); Parmanand Misser v. Sahib Ali, 11
A., 438 (1883); Gooroodoo Roy v. Hormoth Roy, 2 W. R., 245 (1855); Jafar Husain v. Masahg Ali, 14 A., 193 (1891); Mauda Mohan v. Bhaggonmanto Poddar, 8 C., 923 (1882); Mira Mahommed v. Surahutosree Khanam, 2 W. R., 80 (1884).
(3) v. ante, v. 59, and post, s. 110.
(4) Lord Advocate v. Lord Lowt, L. R., 5
App. Cas., 288 (1880).
(5) Mahomed Ali v. Khaja Abdul, 9 C., 744
(1883); Mohinoy Mohon v. Krishno Kishore,
9 C., 902 (1883); Mans Mohon v. Mohuna Mohon, 7, C., 225 (1881) (Diluvion), from this case distinguish Gokool Kristo v. David, 23 W. R., 443
(1875). See also Mahomed Ibrahim v. Merrison,
5 C., 36 (1878); Kally Churn v. Secretary of State,
6 C., 725, 735 (1881).
(6) Radha Gobind v. Inglis, 7 C. L. R., 364
(1880) (Diluvion).
(7) Rao Karan v. Raker Ali, 9 I. A., 89 (1882);
5 A., 1.
interfere with the general rule that, when a plaintiff claims land from which he has been dispossessed, the burden is on him to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years or that the cause of action arose within twelve years. (1)

In the case of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis, (2) the defendant had set up a title by twelve years' adverse possession, and neither suit was brought to recover possession as upon a dispossession.

When a suit for possession is instituted between the vendor and his vendor, the onus is on the vendor to show that he has held adversely to the vendee for twelve years. (3) Where in a suit to recover possession of certain property from the plaintiff's vendor, who did not substantially resist the claim, a third party came in and claimed the property and was made a defendant, it was held that the burden of proof against the plaintiff lay on such intervener. (4)

If, in execution of a decree obtained by A against B, formal (though it may not be actual) possession has been given to A, B cannot afterwards, in support of a plea of limitation rely, as against A, upon the possession which he had before the transfer of possession by execution. (5) But such possession is of no avail as against a third party. (6) The principle, however, as laid down in Juggobundhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder Byssack, (7) was extended by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court to the case of a purchaser at auction in execution of decree, who had obtained only symbolical possession, and it was held that such possession gave him a good cause of action against a person who had taken an iyara from the son of the judgment-debtor in the original case. (8) Where, in a suit for possession of land, the defendants admitted the title of the landlord, but claimed to hold under a valid miras-tenure the onus was held to be on the defendants to prove, either that they had a valid miras-tenure or that, by reason of their having held adversely to the plaintiffs as mirasdars for more than twelve years, the plaintiffs were debarred from questioning their right. (9)

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution, it lies on the plaintiff to prove the existence of malice and of want of reasonable and probable cause, before the defendant can be called upon to show that he acted bona fide and upon reasonable grounds, believing that the charge which he instituted was a valid one. (10)

---

(1) More Denai v. Ramchandra Denai, 6 B., 506, 511 (1882); Kally Churn v. Secretary of State, 6 C., 725, 733 (1881); Gobind Chunder v. Nisemose Minter, 10 C., 374 (1884).

(2) 7 C. L. R., 364 (1880). For definition of terms "discontinue" "discontinuance," in Art. 143 of Act XV of 1877, see Gobind Lal v. Debendranath Mullick, 7 C. L. R., 181 (1880).

(3) Sayad Megantoila v. Nana Valad Faridsha, 13 B., 424 (1888); Ram Prasad v. Lakhi Narain, 12 C., 197 (1885).

(4) Jugobundhu Misser v. Harid Roysole, 10 W., 52 (1885).

(5) Jugobundhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder, 5 C., 564 (1880), followed in Jugobundhu Miter v. Purnanand Gooseni, 16 C., 530 (1889); Loknath Koer v. Purnan Roy, 7 C., 418 (1881). See also Harjunn v. Shiwam, 19 B., 620 (1894); Umchun Churn v. Madhob Ghose, 4 C., 870 (1879); Gunga Gobind v. Bhoyal Chunder, 19 W., 101 (1873); Mrowst Miskiv v. Abdus Salam, 3 C. L. R., 630 (1880); Shama Churn v. Madhab Chandra, 11 C., 93 (1884); Venkataramanana v. Vinamama, 10 M., 17 (1886).

(7) 5 C., 584 (1880).

(9) Osra Kant v. Mohesh Chunder, 4 C. L. R., 40 (1879).

(10) Mohunt Gour v. Hayagrib Das, 6 B. L. R., 371 (1870); s. c., 14 W. R., 425; Nowcourte Chunder v. Birmonsoye, 3 W. R., 169 (1865); Monooe Umnah v. Municipal Commissioners, Madras, 8 Mad. H. C., 151 (1874); Dongruaserse Byde v. Girishree Mul, 10 W. R., 439 (1898); Sheikh Baishun v. Nobun Chandra, 8 B. L. R., 777 note (1889); s. c., 12 W. R., 402; Kass Koirasoolich v. More Precakur, 13 W. R., 276 (1870); Aghorenath Roy v. Rakhika Perabhak, 14 W. R., 339 (1870); Kichoroo Lal v. Esmath Hossain, 1 All. H. C., A. C., 11 (1869); Baboo Ram Budden v. Sirkar Dyal, 17 W. R., 101 (1872); Baboo Ganeesh v. Mugeecram Chowtry, 17 prosecution has been extended to the case of alleged false information given to the police. (1)

It is for the party who comes into Court and pleads minority to make out his case before the adverse party can be required to rebut it. (2)

When a plaintiff sues to redeem and the defendant denies the mortgage the plaintiff must in the first instance prove his title. (3) In a suit to enforce a mortgage bond which was registered in the Sealdah Registry, on the ground that one of the properties mortgaged was in the Sealdah District the defendant set up the defence that inasmuch as there was no such property in existence in the Sealdah District, the registration of the mortgage was bad and the deed as a mortgage had no efficacy in law: Held that the issue was on the defendant to show with every clearness that no property in the Sealdah District had been comprised in the mortgage. (4) In a suit for redemption a plaintiff has to prove the existence of a subsisting mortgage which he is entitled to redeem. (5)

Where under an Act certain things are required to be done, before any liability attaches to any person in respect of any obligation, it is for the person who alleges that liability has been incurred to prove that the things prescribed in the Act have been actually done. In a suit for arrears of road cess, it is for the plaintiff to prove the publication of the notices and extracts from the valuation roll of the estate prescribed by section 52 of Act IX (B.C.) of 1880, and no presumption can be made as to their due service, and section 114 clause (c) of this Act could not apply. (6) In a suit to set aside a sale of a patni taluk on the ground that the notices required by the 2nd sub-section of that section had not been duly complied with, it lies upon the defendant to show that the sale was preceded by the notices required by that sub-section, the service of which notices is an essential preliminary to the validity of the sale. (7)

The purchaser of an estate at a sale for arrears of Government Revenue is, however, in a different position. In the latter case the notices are served

(1) Raghavendra v. Kashinath Bhag, 19 R., 717 (1894); per Jardine, J. According to the judgment of Randale, J., this case was governed by principles regulating suits for defamation.

(2) Vimparkshappa v. Shivrappa, 26 E., 109, 116 (1901).

(3) Bala v. Shivar, 27 R., 271 (1902); and other cases there cited.

(6) Askanlah vs. Trilochana Bagchi, 13 C., 197 (1886); Rash Behari v. Pirtambori Choudhurami, 15 C., 237 (1888).

(7) Hurro Doyal v. Mahomed Gani, 19 C., 692 (1888); followed; Prem Chand v. Ramraj, 1 C. L. J., 102 n. (1906). See also Dorna Chenna v. Syed Nazmooddin, 21 W. R., 397 (1874); Achanallu Khan v. Hurri Chenna, 17 C., 478 (1890); and as to notices under Rent Recovery Act VII of 1865 (Madras), see Dornamay v. Mahommed, 27 M., 94 (1903) [landlord proceeding by way of distress must show that the requirements of the Act have been complied with.] in the ordinary way through the officers of the Revenue Court, and the presumption under section 114, clause (c) would arise in respect to the service of such notices until the contrary was proved. The onus of proving irregularity in the preparation, service or posting of the notice rests on the person who asks to have the sale set aside.(1)

The law gives the holder of a registered mortgage priority over an unregistered mortgage though the latter may be of earlier date. In order, however, to check fraud under cover of this provision of the law, such priority cannot be claimed if the subsequent mortgagee, at the time of obtaining his mortgage, had notice of the earlier mortgage. The onus is upon the party alleging such knowledge or notice to aver the same in his pleadings and to prove it.(2)

Possession of property is presumptive proof of ownership. Therefore when the question is whether any person is owner of anything of which he is shown to be in possession, the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner. (Sections 110, 114, post, to the notes of which sections reference should be made.)

The burden of proof as to relationship in the cases of partners’ landlord and tenant, principal and agent, is dealt with by section 109, post, to the notes, of which section reference should be made. In a partnership-suit where one party does, but the other party does not, allege a specific agreement that the shares in the said partnership were unequal, the existing presumption as to the equality of partners’ shares casts the burden of proof on those alleging the agreement who must therefore begin.(3) For observations on the procedure to be adopted in a suit for an account of a dissolved partnership and the burden of proof on the taking of the account, see the undermentioned case.(4)

If in a suit for rent the defendant does not deny tenancy, but pleads payment, the onus probandi is on him.(5) When a defendant in a suit for arrears of rent alleges remission the onus lies on him in regard to the remission.(6)

When a defendant admits the cause of action and pleads payment he must prove that the claim which is admitted has been discharged by payment.(7) When a debtor pleads tender of payment as a ground for not being saddled with interest, the onus is on him to prove that he made such tender.(8)

See Notes to section 110, post.

In a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption, in which the plaintiff impugns the price stated in the conveyance, very slight evidence is sufficient to establish a prima facie case in favour of the pre-emptor, and when such case is established the onus is on the vendor and vendee to prove by cogent evidence that the amount of the price actually paid was larger than that stated by the pre-emptor.(9)

Presumptions of fact of various kinds other than those mentioned in the notes to these sections may affect the question of the burden of proof. So there being a presumption that judicial and official acts have been regularly

---

(3) Jadobram Dey v. Bullaram Dey, 24 C., 281 (1899); a.o., 3 C. W. N., 414.
(4) Thirukumaranan Chetti v. Subbaraja Chetti, 20 M., 315 (1895), and see also as to rendering accounts: Mayen v. Alton, 16 M., 245 (1892).
(5) Purang Lall v. Ram Jeean, 1 W. R., 264 (1864); Koomoo Baharee v. Roy Madhooornauth, 1 W. R., 155 (1864).
(6) Bunsamy Lall v. Purlong, 9 W. R., 239 (1868).
(7) Bibe Meheroomissa v. Abdool Gane, 17 W. R., 509 (1872). performed, the burden of proving the irregularity of such acts will ordinarily be upon the person who asserts it. (See section 114, post, to the notes, of which section reference should be made.)

Recitals.

A recital in a deed or other instrument is in some cases conclusive, and in all cases evidence as against the parties who make it, and it is of more or less weight or more or less conclusive against them according to circumstances. It is a statement deliberately made by those parties, which, like any other statement, is always evidence against the persons who make it. But it is no more evidence as against third persons that any other statement would be.(1) When a plaintiff sues on a receipt admitting a payment and the defendant admits execution of the receipt it is on the defendant to prove that the statement of payment on the receipt is incorrect.(2) Where an instrument recites that the defendant has received consideration such a recital is evidence against, but not conclusive upon the defendant: the onus, however, is on the defendant to show that the recitals are not correct.(3) The last-mentioned rulings do not, however, govern cases to which the Dekhkan Agriculturists Relief Act (XVII of 1879) applies.(4) The defendants in a suit on a bond admitted the execution of the bond, but denied that they had received as the bond recited they had at the time of its execution, the consideration for it; the Court of first instance instead of calling on the defendants to establish the fact that they had not received the consideration for the bond, as it ought to have done under the circumstances, irregularly allowed the plaintiff to produce witnesses to prove that the consideration for the bond had been paid at the time of its execution. The evidence of these witnesses proved that the consideration of the bond had not been paid at the time of execution, and that, if it had been paid at all, it had been paid at some subsequent time. The plaintiff did not give any further evidence to establish such payment and the Court of first instance, without calling on the defendants to establish their defence, dismissed the suit. The Lower Appellate Court held that the defendants should have been required to begin under the circumstances, and reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and gave the plaintiff a decree. It was held in appeal that, although the plaintiff ought not to have begun, yet as he had done so, and his witnesses had proved that the consideration for the bond had not been paid as admitted in the bond, a new case was opened up, in which the onus was shifted back to the plaintiff to establish that he had, not at the time alleged in the bond, but at some subsequent time, paid to the defendants the consideration for the bond.(5)

Rent-free land.

Where the land is held by a person who is not a tenant of other land belonging to the plaintiff or when such land is occupied as a separate parcel or holding, or in any other manner so as to be distinct from any other land held by the same person as a tenant under the plaintiff, the burden of proof is on the landlord to show that they are not lakhiraj, but māl lands. Where, however, the

---

(1) Brajeshwar Peshkar v. Budhanuddi, 6 C., 288 (1880); s. c., 7 C. L. R., 6; Manohar Singh v. Sumanta Kumar, 17 A., 428 (1893).
(2) Dawaata v. Ganesh Shastri, 4 B., 298 (1880).
(4) Maloji Santaji v. Vishu Har, 9 B., 322 (1885). land is occupied by a tenant of the zemindar, who holds other lands within the zemindari which are rent-paying and are not distinguishable in the manner indicated above, the burden of proof is on the tenant.(1) But in another case this ruling was not followed to its full extent, and it was held that the burden of proof would lie on the ryot only if the land in dispute is in the ambit of the other ryoti lands held by him, but not if it is merely in the ambit of the zemindari, where he has a rent-paying holding. Where the onus lies on the zemindar to prove that the land in dispute is part of the māl land of his estate, he can do so either by proof of receipt of rent or that its proceeds was taken into account at the permanent settlement or by any other sufficient means.(2) He must, however, make out a primā facie case sufficient to entitle him to a degree, if the defendant failed to produce rebutting evidence.(3) But in a suit for rent where the ryot gives primā facie evi dence that part of the land is lakhiraj, the onus is on the landlord to prove that such land has paid rent in previous years.(4) Where the onus of proof of the right to hold lands rent-free lies on the claimant, it is not necessary to produce a lakhiraj sanad; the fact may be legally established by long and uninterrupted possession without payment of rent, raising the presumption that the land had been held rent-free from the decennial settlement, or of twelve years’ adverse possession.(5) The lakhiraj tenure must be shown to have a real existence before it can be held that any question of lakhiraj arises.(6) In a suit for enhancement, however, where the defendant admits that the main portion of the lands are māl, but does not separate the rent-free lands, the plainti is not bound to prove that the lands are māl until the defendants point out their precise situation.(7) Long possession of lands as chowkee deree chackeran affords ground for the presumption that the lands were set apart as such as the decennial settlement, and the onus of proof that the lands were the private land of the zemindar not set apart at the decennial settlement as chowkee deree chak eran is on the zemindar.(8)

When a plaintiff institutes a suit for a declaration of title, the onus is on him to prove the title which he seeks to have confirmed. It is not sufficient for him to show that he is in possession, and that the defendant has proved no

---

(1) Akbar Ali v. Bhyea Lal, 6 C., 666 (1880); s. c. 7 C. L. R., 497.
(2) Bacha Ram v. Peary Mohun 9 C., 813 (1883); s. c. 12 C. L. R., 475. See Dhun
Monee v. Sutoorqah, 6 W. R. (Act X), 100
(1866); Gundadhur Singh v. Bimla Dassee, 5
W. R. (Act X), 37 (1866); Sridhar Nundi v.
Braja Nath, 2 B. L. R. (A. C.), 211 (1868); Raj
Kishore v. Hoursee Mookerjee, 10 W. R., 117
(1868); Man Mohun v. Sriam Roy, 14 W. R., 285 (1870).
(3) Narendra Narain v. Biresh Chandra, 12
C., 182 (1885); Ram Coomar v. Debee Prasad, 6 W. R. (Act X), 87 (1866).
(4) See Motiee Lall v. Judooputtee, 2 W. R.
(Act X), 44 (1865); Bisoesour Chackerbutty v.
Woorna Churnas, 7 W. R., 44 (1877); Skeel Narain
v. Chidam Deb, 3 W. R. (Act X), 45 (1865); Jug Dharma Deb v. Guddar Banejee, 6 W. R.
(Act X), 21 (1866); Nekol Chunder v. Hucee Per shad, 8 W. R., 183. See also Goooroo Prasad v.
This was a suit for a kalubadi and a Full Bench held that, the tenant having admitted that plainti was his landlord for a portion of the land, this was sufficient primā facie evidence of his being plaintiff’s ryot to throw on him the burden of proving his special plea of lakhiraj as to the remain der. Bacharam Mundal v. Peary Mohun, 9 C., 813 (1883). See contra, Newaj Bundopadhyya v.
Kali Prossono, 6 C., 543 (1880); Akbar Ali v.
Bhnea Lal, 6 C., 667 (1880).
(5) Dhunput Singh v. Roumoysee Chosdhrain,
10 W. R., 461 (1868). See also Heera Lall v.
Aug.—Dec. (1863), 875.
(6) Syed Ahmed v. Eacen Hossein, 1 W. R., 330
(1865). See also Gumanee Kasee v. Hurykoo
Mookerjea (F. R.), W. R. Sp. No. 115 (1862); [Suit for enhancement of rent; defence, that part in lakhiraj]; Beebee Ashouroonissaw v. Umung Mo hun, 5 W. R. (Act X), 48 (1866); Rajmunes Mookerjee v. Jobsidee Mookerjee, W. R., 1864, (Act X), 119.
(7) Sutto Chunna v. Tarinee Chunna, 3 W. R., 178
(1865).
(8) Moochakshee Debta v. Collector of Mou shadaud, 4 W. R., 30 (1865); Forbes v. Meru Mahomed, 13 Moo. 1 A., 438 (1870).
But, if the plaintiff fail to prove title against a defendant who has himself no title and is a mere wrong-doer, the former may be declared to be entitled to be retained in possession as against the latter. (2) If the defendant is in possession and the plaintiff produces title-deeds in his own favour, the onus is on the defendant to disprove the title of the plaintiff. (3) Where a plaintiff purchaser ostensively on his own account and for the sum of Rs. 16 property of a judgment-debtor put up for sale by a decree-holder in execution of his decree, and the decree-holder, believing it to be purchased benami on behalf of the judgment-debtor by the plaintiff, took out execution again and advertised it for sale, it was held in a suit by the plaintiff to have the execution-proceedings set aside that the onus lay on the plaintiff to show that the property had been bought on his own account with his own money. (4) In a suit by a temple committee appointed under Act XX of 1863, against a hereditary trustee of a Hindu temple for possession and other reliefs, it was held that the onus lay on the plaintiffs to prove that the temple was of the class mentioned in the Act. (5) Where the defendants were in possession of disputed land under an award of the Magistrate under Act X of 1872, section 530, it was held in a suit for possession and establishment of title that the onus probandi lay on the plaintiff. (6)

A party setting up a tort has the burden on him to prove such tort. If the cause of action be negligence, deceit or fraud or the like, the plaintiff must prove the negligence, deceit or fraud. If to a tort justification is set up by the defendant, the burden is on him to prove such justification. The general rule therefore is that the burden lies on the party seeking either to make good his claim for damages arising from the tort of another or to establish a release from such claim, supposing it to be made out against himself, by imputing tort to the plaintiff. (7) In a suit for a tort the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that the malfeasance, misfeasance, nonfeasance or other event from which limitation commences to run, took place within the prescribed period upon the general principles which regulate the burden of proof on the point of limitation. (8) In cases of collision at sea the masters and owners of the colliding vessel even though compelled by law to take a pilot on board, are primi facie liable for damage caused by their ship; and the burden of proof is on them to show that the negligence which caused such damage was that of the pilot and solely his. (9) See "Defamation," "Fraud," "Good and bad faith," "Malicious Prosecution," ante, and post, s. 114, "Presumption of Innocence."

The onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a will: and he must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument so propounded is the last will of a free and capable testator. The onus is in general discharged by proof of capacity and the fact of execution. (10)

The quantum of

---

(2) Gangaram v. Secretary of State, 20 B., 798 (1885); Ismail Ali v. Mahomed Gouse, 20 I. A., 99 (1893); s. c., 20 C., 554.

(3) Bisarnamayee Rayar v. Srinishak Koyal, 6 B. L. R., 111 (1876).

(7) Wharton, Ev., §§ 358—384; and cases there cited.

(10) Barry v. Budin, 2 Moo. P. C., 482; Claess v. Claess, L. R., 1 F. & D., 657; cited in Wossen Chunder v. Rashohiini Dashee, 21 C., 279, 290, 291 (1893); Lachbi Bibi v. Gopi Narain, 23 A., 472, 475 (1901); and see In re Dinkaran Dibi, 8 C., 890, 882 (1882).
evidence sufficient to establish a testamentary paper must always depend upon the circumstances of each case. Three things must be proved: capacity, testamentary intention, and execution. The circumstances of the case may be such as to necessarily awake the vigilance of the Court, and to require that the proof shall be full and satisfactory. When such circumstances occur, the evidence to prove the affirmation must be stronger than in ordinary cases. (1) The fact that the testator did know and approve of the contents of an alleged will is part of the burden of proof assumed by everyone who propounds a will. This burden is satisfied prima facie in the case of the will of a competent testator, but if those who oppose it succeed by cross-examination or otherwise in meeting this prima facie case the party propounding must satisfy the tribunal affirmatively that the testator did really know and approve of the contents of the will, that is to say, the burden of proving knowledge and approval is always on the person propounding the will, though formal proof may suffice when no dispute is raised. (2) If a party writes or prepares a will under which he takes a benefit, or if any other circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the Court, and whatever their nature may be, it is for those who propound the will to remove such suspicion, and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved the contents of the will, and it is only where this is done that the onus is thrown on those who oppose the will to prove fraud or undue influence or whatever they rely on to displace the case for proving the will. (3)

The dictum of Lindley, F. J., in Tyrell v. Pointon (4) "that whenever circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the Court and whatever their nature may be, it is for those who propound the will to remove such suspicion and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the document," does not apply to a case where the question is simply which set of witnesses should be believed. (5) "Due execution" of a will implies not only that the testator was in such a state of mind as to be able to authorize and to know he was authorizing, the execution of a document as his wills, but also that he knew and approved of the contents of the instrument; and in cases of disputed execution the Judge should consider and express an opinion upon both these questions. In ordinary cases execution of a will by a competent testator raises the presumption (sufficient, if nothing appears to the contrary, to establish) that he knew and approved of the contents of the will. Also under ordinary circumstances the competency of a testator will be presumed, if nothing appears to rebut the ordinary presumption: ordinarily therefore, proof of execution of the will is enough. But where the mental capacity of the testator is challenged by evidence, which shows that it is to say the least, very doubtful whether his state of mind was such that he could have "duly executed" the will as he is alleged to have done, the Court ought to find whether upon the evidence the testator was of sound disposing mind and did know and approve of the contents of the will. Where this had not been done, the Appellate Court, after considering the whole evidence, held, contrary to the decision of the Lower Court, that the will was

(1) Jones v. Godrick, 5 Moo. P. C., 16, 19-21 (1844). So fraud cannot be presumed, but the circumstances may render fraud so probable that the Court will require stronger proof than in cases, where all natural presumptions are in favour of the disposition and the free will of the testator; ib. 21. As to proof in the case of inofficious wills, see Baroda Boondourse v. Muddam Mohun, 24 W. R., 162 (1876). As to wills by Pardanashtins see n. 111, pro. Khas Miah v. Administrator-General of Bengal, 5 C. W. N., 506 (1901).

(2) Balkrishna v. Oopikabai, 7 Bom. L. R., 107 (1908). The onus may be increased by circumstances such as an unbounded confidence in the drawer of the will, extreme debility of the testator, clandestinity and other circumstances which may increase the presumption so as to be conclusive against the instrument, id.

(4) L. B. (1894), P. D., 161.

(5) Bhama Churn v. Khetromoni Dasi, 4 C. W. N., 801 (1899); a. c., 27 C., 521. not approved, and refused probate.(1) It is incumbent on persons proposing a will for the purpose of obtaining probate or letters of administration to produce all the evidence which the circumstances of the case indicate as proper and necessary to prove the execution of the will. It lies upon such a person to prove it by evidence as good as that which would be produced to prove any other instrument transferring the title to real property.(2) Prima facie proof, however, of execution is sufficient to warrant the grant of probate, when the application for such probate is unopposed.(3) When the will is contested, the proceedings should take, as nearly as may be, the form of a regular suit brought by the party propounding the will.(4) The fact that a contested will bears an endorsement stating that it was acknowledged by the testator before the Registrar, does not warrant a Judge in granting probate without any other evidence in support of the will, even though the caveat does not produce any evidence to impeach the will.(5) If a will, shown to have been in the custody of the testator is not forthcoming at the time of his death, it is presumed to have been destroyed by him, unless there is sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption. But such presumption of revocation does not arise unless there is evidence to satisfy the Court that the will was not in existence at the time of the testator's death.(6) A will, duly executed, is not to be treated as revoked, either wholly or in part by a will which is not forthcoming unless it is proved by clear and satisfactory evidence, that the will contained either words of revocations or dispositions so inconsistent with those of the earlier will, that the two cannot stand together. It is not enough to show that the will, which is not forthcoming, differed from the earlier one, if it cannot be shown in what the difference consisted. The burden of proof lies upon him who challenges the existing will.(7) The burden of proof lies upon the person who sets up a will not upon the person who is prepared to impeach it. The defendants (widow and sister-in-law of a deceased taluqdar) set up a will under which they alleged they took all the property of the testator absolutely, whereupon the plaintiffs, the next reversioners, sued for a declaration that the will was not genuine and that the alleged testator died intestate.
Held that the onus was on the defendants, who set it up, to prove that the will was genuine, and not on the plaintiffs, who impeached it to show that it was a forgery. The fact that the plaintiffs omitted to give any evidence that the will was forged, though they asserted that "they would prove it to be spurious if necessary" raised no presumption of the genuineness of the will.
Nor did the omission of the plaintiffs to cross-examine some witnesses called by the Court previously to hearing, to explain the alleged loss and consequent non-production of the will, give rise to any presumption in favour of its validity. They were not bound to cross-examine the witnesses which they could not have done without permission of the Court, but were perfectly justified in waiting until evidence in support of the will was produced at the trial.(8)

Where a testatrix executed a will written on two sheets of paper and tied by a string at the top of the left hand corner four or five years before her death, and only one sheet of the will was found after her death, which disposed by means of legacies of the bulk, though not the whole, of her property, and an application made for the grant of probate of that portion of the will, was opposed by the testatrix’s heir. Held (per Maclean, C. J.), that the presumption that the testator destroyed the second sheet of the will animo revocandi was a rebuttable one and that it had been rebutted in the case; that probate could be granted of a portion of a will, and that where the contents of a lost will are not completely proved, probate can be granted to the extent to which they are proved. Held (per Banerjee, J.) that judging from the nature of the document as it stood when complete, as deposed to by the witnesses examined in the case, and judging from the nature and appearance of the part that had been preserved, the fact of a part being wanting raised no presumption of the destruction or mutilation of the will with intent to revoke it.(1)

Where a will was challenged on the ground that it was made by the deceased after the taking of poison and was therefore bad for being the act of suicide, it was held that the onus of proving whether the will was written after the swallowing of poison rested on the party impugning the will.(2) Upon a petition under section 234 of the Succession Act for revocation of probate on the ground that citation has not been published, and that the petitioner being a minor under the care of the person who obtained probate, had no opportunity of understanding his mala fides and improper acts, and that the will was a forgery, it was held that the petitioner should be allowed an opportunity of proving that she had no knowledge of the previous proceedings; and if she succeeded, there should be a new trial as to the factum of the will, which the person propounding will have to prove in the ordinary way.(3) The mere fact of an attesting witness to a will repudiating his signature does not invalidate a will, if it can be proved by the evidence of other witnesses of a reliable character that he has given false evidence.(4) When a will has been proved summarily, proof in solemn form per testes will not as a rule be required on the application of a person who had had notice, or had been aware of the previous proceedings before the grant of probate issued, and had then abstained from coming forward.(5) Mere omission to serve a special citation would not by itself be sufficient ground for revoking the grant if it is shown that the person on whom the citation ought to have been served had knowledge of the application for probate. The onus of proving that he had such knowledge rests on the party who alleges it.(6) Where a deed of gift or will confers an estate upon a named person because he fills, or by reason of his filling, a certain character, he is entitled to recover the estate without affirmatively proving that he fills such character. The onus of proving that he does not fill the character which is the reason of the gift lies upon those who dispute his claim.(7)

105. When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the General Exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law

---

(3) Dinamani Deb v. Dolob Chahar, 8 C., 890 (1882).
(5) Brijmohun Chowdhrey v. Radhion Chowdhrey, 11 C., 492 (1886). As to the onus of proof, see Kail Das v. Isham Chandra, 31 C., 914 (1904). The Privy Council did not, however, decide the point as it decided the case on the evidence.
(7) Rango Balaji v. Mudiappa, 23 B., 296. 304 (1898), per Farran, C. J. defining the offence, is upon him, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances.

Illustrations.

(a) A, accused of murder, alleges that, by reason of unsoundness of mind, he did not know the nature of the act.

The burden of proof is on A.

(b) A, accused of murder, alleges that, by grave and sudden provocation, he was deprived of the power of self-control.

The burden of proof is on A.

(c) Section 325 of the Indian Penal Code provides that whoever, except in the case provided for by section 335, voluntarily causes grievous hurt, shall be subject to certain punishments.

A is charged with voluntarily causing grievous hurt under section 325.

The burden of proving the circumstances bringing the case under section 335 lies on A.

Principle.—See Notes, post.

s. 101 (Burden of proof.) s. 3 ("Court.") s. 4 ("Shall presume.")

Field, Ev., 496–496; Act XXV of 1861, ss. 235–237; Act XVIII of 1862, ss. 26–27; Act X of 1872, s. 439; Act X of 1882 and Act V of 1889, s. 221.

COMMENTARY.

This section is an important qualification of the general rule that in criminal trials the onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused, lies upon the prosecution. (1) It is, as will be seen, stated in two forms—that of a rule as to the burden of proof, and that of a presumption. The result is the same in both cases. (2) This section is an application, and perhaps, in some cases, an extension of the principle contained in section 103, ante. This section effected an alteration in the law which required the prosecution, previous to its enactment, to prove the absence of circumstances constituting special exceptions. (3) Now both in the Presidency Towns and in the Mofussil the burden of proof is upon the accused of showing existence, if any, of circumstances which bring the offence charged within any of the special as well as of any of the general exceptions or provisos contained in any part of the Penal Code or in any law defining the offence. (4) With reference to the words "shall presume," see fourth section. So it is for those who raise the plea of private defence to prove it. The act charged moreover cannot be denied and the plea of private defence raised as an alternative. If raised, a full account of the occurrence must be given in evidence. (5) So also the burden of proving the loss of self-control; (6) exemption from criminal responsibility by

(1) v. ante, ss. 101–104, sub-sec. Criminal law.

(2) Markby, Ev., 81.

(3) Field, Ev., 495, 496; see Act XXV of 1861, ss. 235, 236, 237. The Evidence Act expressly repealed (see Schedule) s. 237, and the whole of the Act was subsequently repealed by Act X of 1872: (See s. 439 of Act X of 1872 and s. 221, the corresponding section of the present Code Act V of 1860.)

(4) Before passing of Act X of 1882 it was doubted whether Act XVIII of 1862, ss. 26 and 27, were overridden by the present section [In re Shibo Prosad 4 C., 124, 197 (1871)]. The latter Act applied only to the High Court in Original Criminal Jurisdiction, Seals v. Bamera in Bose, 4 W. R., Cr., 22 (1865). The doubt, however, now solved as Act X of 1882 repealed so much of Act XVIII of 1862 as had not been previously repealed.

(12) In re Shibo Prosad, 4 C., 124 (1878); s.c. 3 C. L. R., 122.

reason of unsoundness of mind; (1) good faith, (2) the acceptance of risk by the person injured; (3) and the like lies upon the accused. But it is not necessary for the accused to plead the existence of circumstances bringing his case within an exception and the burden of proof which is upon him can be discharged by the evidence of witnesses for the prosecution as well as by evidence for the defence. An accused is clearly entitled to claim an acquittal if, on the evidence for the prosecution, it is shown he has committed no offence. (4)

106. When any fact is specially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him.

Illustrations.

(a) When a person does an act with some intention other than that which the character and circumstances of the act suggest, the burden of proving that intention is upon him. (5)
(6) A is charged with travelling on a Railway without a ticket.
The burden of proving that he had a ticket is on him.

Principle.—The capacity of parties to give evidence may affect the burden of proof. A person will not be forced to show a thing which lies not within his knowledge. (6)

s. 3 (“Facts.”) s. 101 (Burden of proof.)

Taylor, Ev., §§ 376 & 377; Wharton, Ev., § 367; Powell, Ev., 330; Best, Ev., §§ 274—276.

COMMENTARY.

As already observed, (7) the first exception to the general rule that the burden of proof rests with the party who asserts the substantial affirmative is, that it does not apply where there is a prima facie presumption one way or other. This exception is the subject-matter of sections 107—114, post.

The second exception to the above-named general rule is stated by the present section, viz., that where the subject-matter of the allegation lies peculiarily within the knowledge of one of the parties, that party must prove it, whether it be of an affirmative or a negative character, and even though there be a presumption of law in its favour. (8)

(2) R. v. Balkrishna Vithal, 17 B., 573, 577, 579
(1892); R. v. Dhan Singh, 6 A., 220, 222 (1884);
Ramarao v. Lokanda, 9 M., 387 (1885); Subbaro Kobiraj v. R., 14 C., 566 (1887). In re Shiba Prasad & C., 124 (1878); R. v. Girishankar
Kashiram, 15 B., 288 (1890); R. v. Slater, 15 B., 351 (1890).
(3) Subbaro Kobiraj v. R., 14 C., 566, 568, 569
(1887).
(4) In re Kali Chandra, 11 C. L. R., 232 (1882).
Where, however, the plea is taken for the first time on appeal; cf. R. v. Tirumal, 21 A., 122 (1898).
(5) See Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Karuna
Beisiali, 22 C., 164, 174 (1894).
(6) Best, Ev., § 274.
(7) v. aste, Introd. to Ch. VII.
(8) Taylor, Ev., § 376A; Dickinson v. Evans, 6
T. R., 80; 3 R. R., 119; R. v. Turner, 2 C. & K., 732; but see the observations of Alderson, B., in Ellis v. Jansen, 13 M. & W., 655; 14 L. J., Ex., 201, 9 Jur., 353 262, 266; suggesting that the rule only refers to the weight of the evidence, but that there should be some evidence to start the presumption and cast the onus on the other side.
These observations are referred to in Poolin Behare v. Watson & Co., 9 W. R., 192 (1888).
Though there might, prior to this Act, have been said to have been some doubt upon the subject; see Pool in Behare v. Watson & Co., super; Giridhar Hari v. Kali Kanti, 13 B. L. R., 161, 163 (1890); the rule, however, in India is now that stated in the text and in Taylor, Ev., § 376 A; Wharton, Ev., § 367; Powell, Ev., p. 330. As to the extent of this section, see observations in Muhammad In ayat v. Muhammad Karomatullah, 12 A., 312 (1889).
The applicability of the rule and the extent to which it should be carried is a question of considerable difficulty: see Best, Ev., §§ 274—276.
So in England, under the old law, in an action for penalties against a person for practising as an apothecary without a certificate as the defendant was peculiarly cognizant of the fact whether or not he had obtained a certificate, and if he had done so, could have no difficulty about producing it, the law compelled him to do so (although, had it not been for the principle in question, the plaintiff would have been bound to prove the negative for two reasons: first, as essential to his case, and secondly, to rebut the presumption of innocence), and in accordance with the principle under consideration it is for him to do so, and not for the plaintiff to prove its non-existent. (2) In a suit against a zamindar to reverse the sale of a patni tenure held under Regulation VIII of 1819 on the ground of non-service of notice, the onus of proving service lies on the defendant according to the terms of this section. (3) Where a horse was delivered to a defendant in a sound state, but when returned was found to be founedered, it was held that it was for the defendant to show how the horse which was perfectly sound when taken out was founedered when returned. (4) Sales of consignments entrusted to commission-agents and particulars of those sales are matters which lie specially within their knowledge, and every contract of agency imposes on the agent the duty of rendering a true and complete account regarding the subject-matter of the agency. (5) Where in a suit between a zamindar and his tenant the latter held lands of considerable extent under the former, but objected that one or two plots occupied by him had been held under a different title, it was held that under such circumstances it was for the defendant to prove a matter which was peculiarly within his knowledge. (6) Where the plaintiff, who was formerly putnidar of the village sued for the possession of certain land which he claimed as lakhiraj, and from which he stated that he had been ousted by the defendant who had become putnidar by purchase at a sale held under Bengal Regulation VIII of 1819; it was held that though, according to the general rule, it would have lain upon the defendant to show that the land was rent-paying after 1790, yet as the plaintiff by reason of his having been formerly putnidar of the village had special means of knowledge and was in a position to prove the area of the rent-paying lands, the burden of proof lay upon him in the first place to show that the disputed land was not within this area. (7) When the sons of a living father bring a suit against a creditor to get rid of a charge on the ancestral estate created by him, on the ground of his alleged misconduct in extravagant waste of the estate, the antecedents of their father's career being more likely to be in the knowledge of the sons, members of the same family, than of a stranger, the onus of disproving the charge may properly be placed upon them. (8) In a suit under section 93(4) of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), by a recorded co-sharer against a lambardar for his recorded share of the profits of a mohal, in which the plaintiff seeks to make the defendant liable under section 209, not only for the profits which the latter has actually collected, but for those which through gross negligence or misconduct he has omitted to collect, the burden of proving such negligence or misconduct rests in the first instance on the plaintiff. No general rule can be laid down as to the quantum of evidence which the plaintiff in such a case must give in order to shift the burden of proof on to the defendant. The mere production by the plaintiff of the jamabandi or rent-roll is not sufficient to cast upon the defendant the necessity of proving that there was no negligence or misconduct in him. Section 106 of the Evidence Act does not apply to such a case. (1)

---

This second exception also prevails in all civil or criminal proceedings instituted against parties for doing acts which they are not permitted to do unless duly qualified. It holds good, and compels the defendant to produce the necessary license or authority (as the case may be) in proceedings for selling liquors, improperly exercising a trade or profession, and the like; in action for penalties against the proprietor of a theatre, for performing dramatic pieces without the written consent of the author, in proceedings for misprison of treason, where if the treason be proved, and the knowledge of it be traced to the prisoner, he is in strictness bound to negative the averment of concealment by offering proof of a discovery on his part. (2) So if, notwithstanding the act of purchase of two minor girls successively, the intention of the accused was something other than that which would evidently be suggested by the character and circumstances of the act, it is for the accused to show that. And it being further argued that though the facts might go to show that the intention was that the girls should be employed for the purpose of prostitution, still they did not sufficiently show that the employment intended was to be before the completion of the sixteenth year by the girls, it was held that under this section it lay upon the accused to prove that she intended to put off the employment until the completion of the sixteenth year. (3) Where several persons were found at 11 o'clock at night on a road just outside the city of Agra, all carrying arms (guns and swords) concealed under their clothes and none of them could give any explanation of his presence at the spot under the particular circumstances, and at that period the District of Agra was notorious as the scene of frequent and recent dacoities, it was held that the circumstances justified the inference of an intent to commit dacoity and the burden of proving the contrary rested on the accused under this section. (4)

When an instrument on its production appears to have been altered, it is a general rule that the party offering it in evidence must explain this appearance, if he be called upon to do so by the issue raised, and if the instrument be not admitted by his opponent under notice, because as every alteration on the face of a written instrument renders it suspicious it is only reasonable that the party claiming under it should remove the suspicion. (5) It is not, however, on every

---

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 377, and cases there cited.
(3) Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Karuna Boseobi, 22 C., 164, 175 (1894); see R. v. Paper Mani, 23 M., 159 (1899). See as to the application of this section in criminal cases: Bulalal Ram v. Chananam Ram, 22 C., 400, arguendo.
(5) Taylor, Ev., § 1819; Petamber Manikjee v. Vedeshwan Manikjee, 1 M., I. A., 420, 429 (1837); W. R., P. C., 53; Muddan Mohun v. Sofana Bessu, Sutherland's Mofussil Small Cause Court Reference 69 (1894); Musamat Khoo v. Mohendar Singh, 9 M., I. A., 1, 17 (1881); W. R., P. C., 38. There may, however, be corroborative proof strong enough to rebut the presumption which arises against an apparent and presumable falsifier of evidence: Sw., 17. As to material alterations in instruments being fatal to their validity, see Taylor, Ev., §§ 1819-1840. The rule of English law that a material alteration of a document by a party to it after its execution without the consent of the other party renders it void, is in force in India. Assam v. Umendra, 25 R., 616 (1901): [distinguished in Gulamali v. Miyabhai, 3 Bom. R., 574 (1901), in which it was held that where a written acknowledgment has its date unauthorized by altered oral evidence to prove that date is inadmissible under para. 2 of s. 19 of the Limitation Act.] See also Gogum Chander v. Dharonidhar Mundul, 7 C., 616 (1881); s. c., 9 C. L. R., 257; Ganga Ram v. Chandan Singh, 4 A., 62 (1881); Sitaran Krishn. v. Daji Deewaji, 7 R., 418 (1883) (dissented from in Mohesh Chander v. Kamini Kumari, 12 C., 313 (1885)); Ondry Chand v. Bhikar Jogan Nath, 6 B., 371 (1881); Chitarkarli v. Kesabnayji, 9 M., 399 (1885), F. B.; Govindaasami v. Kuppu v. Paramma v. Ramachandra, 7 M., 302 (1883). The rule does not apply to documents which are not the foundation of a plaintiff's claim, but are merely evidence of a.
occasion of a party tendering an instrument in evidence that he is bound to explain any material alteration that appears upon its face; but only on those occasions when he is seeking to enforce it, or claiming an interest under such instrument. (1) The instrument may be void for the purpose of taking an interest under it, but nevertheless admissible to prove a collateral fact. (2) It follows that a deed is not rendered inadmissible by alteration, if it be produced merely as proof of some right or title created by or resulting from its having been executed. (3) Nor does the rule of law which requires the party tendering in evidence an altered instrument to explain its appearance, apply to ancient documents coming from the right custody merely because they are in a mutilated or imperfect state. It is sufficient that the instrument is produced in the same state in which it was actually found. The weight, however, due to such a document may be affected. (4)

Where a written acknowledgment bears a date which has been altered oral evidence to prove the date is inadmissible under the nineteenth section, second paragraph, of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. (5)

107. When the question is whether a man is alive or dead, and it is shown that he was alive within thirty years, the burden of proving that he is dead is on the person who affirms it.

108. [Provided that when] (6) the question is whether a man is alive or dead, and it is proved that he has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive, the burden of proving that he is alive is shifted to (7) the person who affirms it.

Principle.—The presumption in favour of continuance. See Notes, post.

s. 101 (Burden of Proof.)

Taylor, Ev., §§ 196, 198—201; Best, Ev., §§ 408, 409; Wharton, Ev., §§ 1275—1277; Lawson on Presumptive Evidence, p. 192, et seq.

COMMENTARY.

"Various primâ facie legal presumptions are founded on the continuance or immutability for a longer or shorter period, of human affairs, which experience tells us usually occurs. So when the existence of a person or personal relation, defendant’s pre-existing liability. A written acknowledgment of his liability by a debtor which is intended merely to save the bar of limitation and not to give a light of action is not within the rule. Aimalam v. Umdram, 25 B., 616 (1901); referred to and distinguished in Sayed Gulamali v. Miyarbai, 26 B., 128 (1901). An immaterial alteration does not avoid the instrument; Tikamdas Jambinadas v. Gangabow Mathuras, 11 Bom. H. C. R. 203 (1873); Ede v. Kanto Nath, 3 C., 220 (1877); unless made fraudulently; Balee Komar v. Gunga Narain, 10 W. R., 250 (1888). And a material alteration made after execution does not vitiate a deed, if it be made with the consent of all the parties: Isar Mohamed v. Hai Fatma, 10 B., 487 (1886).

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 1834 and cases there cited.

(2) Hutchins v. Scott, 2 M. & W., 816.

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1826; as to alterations by a stranger and without the privy of either party; see ib., §§ 1837—1839.

(4) Ib., § 1838.

(6) The words in brackets in s. 108 were substituted for the original word ("when") by Act XVIII of 1872, s. 9.

(7) The words in brackets were substituted for "on" by s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1872. or a state of things is once proved, the law presumes that the person, relation, or state of things continues to exist till the contrary is shown, or till a different presumption is raised from the nature of the subject." (1) So, apart from the present sections and that which follows them, the Act declares generally that the Court may presume that a thing or state of things which has been shown to be in existence within a period shorter than that within which such things or state of things usually ceases to exist, is still in existence. (2)

These sections and the following sections deal with certain instances of the presumption which exists in favour of continuance of immutability. It is on the principle of this presumption that a person shown to have been once living is, in the absence of proof that he has not been heard of within the last seven years, presumed to be still alive. (3) These sections establish a uniform rule upon their subject-matter, both for Hindus and Mahomedans as well as all others. According to Hindu law twelve years must have elapsed before an absent person, of whom nothing has been heard during this period, can be presumed to be dead. (4) In the case of Mahomedan law the old Hanafi doctrine required that ninety years should have elapsed from the date of the birth of missing person before his death could be presumed. The Mâlikî principle is now, however, in force among the Hanafis, namely, that if a person be unheard of for four years he is to be presumed to be dead. Among the Shiâhs the period is ten years, and among the Shafees seven. (5) Now, however, the rule contained in these sections, being a rule of evidence only, governs both Hindus (6) and Mahomedans. (7) Although, however, a person who has not been heard of for seven years is presumed to be dead, there is no presumption as to the time of his death; and if any one who seeks to establish the precise period at which such person died, he must do so by actual evidence. (8) There is no presumption of law relative to the continuance of life in the abstract. The death of any party once shown to have been alive is a matter of fact to be determined by the Court. But as the presumption is in favour of the continuance of life, the onus of proving the death lies on the party who asserts it. The fact of death may, however, be proved by presumptive as well as by direct evidence. So the presumption of the continuance of life ceases at the expiration of seven years from the period when the person in question was last heard of. But a Court may find the fact of death from the lapse of a shorter period than seven years, if other circumstances concur. (9)

(2) S. 114, Ill. (d), post.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 199; see s. 114, Ill. (d), post.
(4) Jumajay Masumdar v. Keeshub Lal, 2 B. L. R., A. C., 134 (1868); 6 B. L. R., App., 16.
(6) Dharup Nath v. Gobind Saran, 8 A. 614 (1886); Dhondo Bhikaji v. Ganesh Bhikaji, 11 B., 433 (1886); Balagya v. Kishnappa, 11 M., 448 (1888); see also Hari Chintaman v. Moro Lakhman, 11 B., 89 (1888).
(8) Dharup Nath v. Gobind Saran, 8 A., 614 (1884); Bango Balaji v. Madippepa, 23 B., 296 (1888); Taylor, Ev., §§ 200. In re Petion, 53 L. T. R., 707, 710. All the cases will be found cited in In re Phene’s Trustees, L. R., 5 Ch. App., 139. The rule is the same whether only seven years or more than seven years have elapsed. There is no presumption either as to the time of death within the period of seven years, or that the person died at the conclusion of that period, ib., see Nepan v. Doe, 2 Sm. L. C.: In re Gren’s Settlements, L. R., 1 Eq., 288. The only presumption enacted by the section is that the party is dead at the time of suit, but there is no presumption in any case as to the time of his death.
(9) Best, Ev., §§ 408, 409 a; see the presumption of survivorship v. ib., §§ 410; and p. 59, note (6), ante. See Wharton, Ev., §§ 1276-1277. In Lawson on Presumptive Evidence, p. 192, the rule with regard to the presumption of life is thus summarised:—"Love of life is presumed (therefore suicide will not be presumed), and a person proved to have been alive at a former time, is presumed to be alive at the present time, until his death is proved or a presumption of death arises."
109. When the question is whether persons are partners, landlord and tenant, or principal and agent, and it has been shown that they have been acting as such, the burden of proving that they do not stand, or have ceased to stand, to each other in those relationships respectively, is on the person who affirms it.

Principle—The presumption relating to continuance: see Notes, post. When a juridical relation is once established, it is enough generally for a party relying on such relation to show its establishment and the burden is then on the opposite party to show that the relation has ceased to exist.(1)

s. 101 (Burden of Proof.)

Taylor, Ev., § 196; Best, Ev., § 406; Wharton, Ev., §§ 1284—1296; Lawson on Presumptive Evidence, 172, 175, et seq.

COMMENTARY.

This section, which confirms the previous law upon the subject, (2) merely applies to three common and important relationships,—partnership, landlord and tenant, and principal and agent—the general presumption, already adverted to in the notes to the preceding sections, based on the continuance of human affairs in the state in which they are once shown to be. When, therefore, the existence of a relationship or state of things is once proved, the law presumes that it continues till the contrary is shown or some other presumption arises. A partnership, agency, tenancy, or other similar relation, once shown to exist is presumed to continue, till it is proved to have been dissolved. (6) So when a partnership was admitted to exist in 1816, it was presumed to continue in 1838. (7) From the same presumption of a continuance of things once shown to exist, it follows that, after the expiration of the term limited by the articles it is prima facie presumed that such of the provisions of the articles are not inconsistent with a partnership at will continue to apply. (8) This presumption has been made the subject of positive enactment by section 256 of the Contract Act. (9) As to agency, see sections 182—238 of the same Act and in particular section 206, which deals with notice of revocation or renunciation, and section 208, which deals with the taking effect as to the agent and third persons of the termination of an agent’s authority. From the same presumption when a tenant holds over after the expiration of the term, he impliedly holds subject to all the covenants in the lease which are applicable to his new situation. (10) Where two persons set up rival claims to the tenancy of the same piece of land under the same landlord, and one of them admitted the previous tenancy of the other, who, he pleaded, had relinquished the land, which was upon that lease, to himself, it was held that it lay upon him to prove the

---

(1) Wharton, Ev., § 1284; Lawson on Presumptive Evidence, 172.
(2) Rump v. Abell, 4 Ch., 317 (1878).
(4) See Blount v. Grove, 10 M. & W., 1 (continuance of authority of agent).
(5) See Pickel v. Peacham, 1 Ch., 190.
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 196.
(7) Clark v. Alexander, 8 Scott, N. R., 161; and see Anderson v. Clay, 1 Stark., 406; and Cooper v. Indrick, 22 Barb., 516 (Amer.), cited in Lawson’s Presumptive Evidence, p. 175. In the last case a partner brought an action on a note. It was contended that the plaintiffs were not partners. It was proved that three years previous they were partners. It was held that the presumption was then continued to be so.
(8) Taylor, Ev., § 196, and cases there cited.
(9) See also §§ 339—358; a. 264 deals with notice of dissolution.
(10) Taylor, Ev., § 196; see Act IV of 1822 (Transfer of Property), s. 116.
relinquishment which he thus alleged. (1) When the relationship of landlord and tenant has once been proved to exist, the mere non-payment of rent, though for many years, is not sufficient to show that the relationship has ceased; and a tenant who is sued for rent and contends that such relationship has ceased, is bound to prove that fact by some affirmative proof, and more especially is he so bound when he does not expressly deny that he still continues to hold the land in question in the suit. (2) The principle upon which this section is based is one of general application, and the presumption upon which it proceeds has been applied to other cases than those particularly mentioned in the section. (3)

110. When the question is whether any person is owner of anything of which he is shown to be in possession, the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner.

Principle.—Possession affords prima facie presumption of ownership, for men generally own what they possess. (4) See Notes, post.

s. 101 (Burden of Proof.)

Taylor, Ev., §§ 123—127; Markby, Ev., 84, 85; Wharton, Ev., §§ 1331—1329; Lawson on Presumptive Evidence, 440; Best on Presumptive Evidence, 87—109; Pollock and Wright, Possession in the Common Law.

COMMENTARY.

A person in possession of land without title has an interest in the property which is heritable and good against all the world except the true owner, an interest which, unless and until the true owner interferes, is capable of being disposed of by deed or will or by executory-sale, just in the same way as it could be dealt with if the title were unimpeachable. (5) But if a person claiming to be the true owner does interfere the possession of his opponent casts upon the former the burden of proof. Possession of movable or immovable property is presumptive proof of ownership, because men generally own the property which they possess. When, therefore, a person is in possession of anything, the presumption of ownership being in his favour, the burden of showing that that person is not the owner of that of which he has possession is on the person who affirms it. So a plaintiff seeking to eject a defendant from property of which the latter has possession, and to obtain possession thereof for himself, must recover by the strength of his own legal title and cannot in the first instance call upon the defendant to show the title under which he holds. He must succeed by the strength of his own title and not by reason of the weakness of his opponents. It is immaterial therefore to consider in such a case whether the property in question belongs to the defendant or not, because whether it does so belong or not, unless it be proved that the property belongs to the plaintiff, the latter is not entitled to turn the defendant out of possession. This presumption in favour of the person in possession is of the greatest practical importance in this country, especially in relation to disputes as to the ownership of land, the commonest of all

---

(2) Rango Lall v. Abdoal Gafoor, 4 C, 314 (1878); see also Parbati Dassi v. Ram Chand, 3 C. L. R., 576 (1879).

(3) See Obhoy Churn v. Hari Nath, 8 C, 72, 79 (1881). So, according to Hindu law, a joint family is presumed to remain so, until evidence of division has been given. See s. 114, post.

(4) Webb v. Fox, 4 R. R., 472, per Lord Kenyon. The presumption arising from possession has also been elsewhere recognised by the Indian Legislature, both in criminal and civil proceedings. See Cr. Pr. Code, s. 145, Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief), s. 9.

(5) Gobind Prasad v. Mohan Lai, 24 A., 107 (1901).
disputes. It is an imperative presumption, that is to say, the Court is bound to regard the ownership of the possessor as proved, unless and until it is disproved. But the plaintiff, by the very form of his suit, in a suit to recover possession, assumes that the defendant is in possession and provides therefore his antagonist with a strong weapon of defence. This it is which lends importance to these disputes regarding possession, very often leading to bloodshed, which the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Chapter XII) and the Penal Code (sections 154, 158) and the 9th section of Act I of 1877 were specially intended to suppress. Not a few of these disputes are preliminary skirmishes, the object of which is to secure the advantageous position of defendant in the civil suit which must ultimately determine the question of ownership. (1) Where a person is shown to be in possession of property he is under this section to be presumed to be the owner of it. (2) According to this section possession is prima facie evidence of a complete title; any one who would oust the possessor must establish a right to do so. The law leans in favour of possession and an apparent right exercised for many years. It requires the claimant to make out a clear case and to succeed by the strength of the title he sets up. (3)

Possession is evidence of title, and gives a good title as against a wrong-doer; but a person who has not had possession cannot, without proof of title, turn another out of possession, even though that other may have no title; for possession is a good title against every one, who cannot prove a better. (4)

A Magistrate, trying a case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in determining the question of possession, took into consideration the question of title. Held, that he had a right to discuss the question of title, if in his opinion it was material upon the question of possession; and that the mere fact that he had considered and discussed the question of title, could not invalidate his decision on the point of possession, provided that there was evidence before him as to who was in possession. Semble.—In the absence of any other evidence of possession, a Magistrate would be justified in finding

---

(1) Markby, Ev. Act 84, 85; Senajsi Vijaya v. Chinnas Nayanar, 10 M. I. A., 181 (1864); Jowala Buksh v. Dhar Singh, 10 M. I. A., 511, 528, 529 (1886); Ram Rattan v. Parvakokisam Beggum, 4 M. I. A., 233 (1847); Rajah Burdwan v. Chunder Coomar, 12 M. I. A., 145 (1888); 2 B. L. R., P. C., 1. [In a case of disputed boundaries, when one of the claimants is in possession by virtue of a Magistrate’s order (see ss. 145—148, Cr. Pr. Code), it lies on the party seeking to oust him to show a better title to the land claimed than that of the party in possession: see also Hari Ram v. Bikhare Roy, 25 W. R., 20 (1878); Kaloo Narain v. Amund Moyar, 21 W. R., 79 (1874); Mudun Mohun v. Bhogomanto Poddar, 8 C., 923 (1882); when a person, who, by an order of the Collector passed under the provisions of the Land Registration Act (VII of 1876, B.C.), has been declared to be out of possession of land, brings a suit for its recovery it lies upon him in the first instance to make out a prima facie case. But see also Omurannisa Bibee v. Diluwar Ally, 10 C., 350 (1884); and as to whether, registration is any evidence of title, see p. 249 note (4) ante; Balan Kaur v. Jivan Singh, 1 A., 194 (1876); Rambhanda Asaji v. Balaji, 9 B., 137 (1884); Walkher v. Atmaram, 14 W. R., 478 (1870); Hari Ram v. Raj Coomar, 8 C., 759 (1885); Sonafta Baha v. Ramsoy Baha, Marshall’s Rep., 549 (1869); Rajah Muskesh v. Keshowand Mew, 6 M., 1 A., 324, 339 (1862); 5 W. R., P. C., 7 [see under Beng. Reg. XX of 1798]; Tiery v. Krishnah Bose, 1 I. A., 76, 83 (1873); [expediency of insisting on strict proof on part of plaintiff in ejectment]; Rance Shornoumyese v. Wason & Co., 20 W. R., 211 (1873); [it is immaterial to consider whether or not the land is the property of the defendant]; Shom Narain v. Court of Warks, 20 W. R., 197 (1873); Shah Gokum v. Mahomed Akbar, 8 Mad. H. C. R., 63 (1875); Ackraford v. Rughnumah Sohoty, 2 W. R., 267 (1880); Chunder Monoo v. Raj Khobor, 5 W. R., 348 (1886); Mason’s Haroonwodery v. Anmo Begun, 1 Jnr. N. S., 188 (1866); and cases cited post paravum.

(2) Hari Chintaman v. Moro Laskman, 11 B., 99 (1886).

(3) Ramchandra Asaji v. Balaji Brahuns, 9 B., 137, 140 (1884). The policy of the Law is favourable to presumptions arising from lapse of time; Wharton, Ev., § 1338.

possession to be with a person to whom symbolical possession has been shown to have given in execution of a decree, although possibly slight evidence would be sufficient to rebut such evidence of possession. (1)

When a plaintiff sues for declaration of title to property, of which the defendant is in possession, but of which the plaintiff produces the title-deeds in his favour and the defendant admits them, the onus is on the latter to disprove the plaintiff’s title. (2)

When a plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain lands, alleging that they had been granted by his ancestor to one Pr, to be held in jagheer tenure by Pr, and his lineal descendants, that Pr’s lineal descendants had failed, and therefore plaintiff was entitled to resume possession, it was held that it lay upon the plaintiff to prove the grant to Pr in the first instance: and that, until he had done this, he had no standing in Court at all. (3)

The ordinary presumption is that possession goes with the title: that presumption cannot, of course, be of any avail in the presence of clear evidence to the contrary; but where there is strong evidence of possession on the part of one side, opposed by evidence apparently strong also on the part of the other, in such cases in estimating the weight due to the evidence on both sides, the presumption may, when the circumstances of the particular case require it, be regarded. (4) A presumption, however, cannot contradict facts or overcome facts proved. (5) A rebuttable presumption of law being contested by proof of facts showing otherwise, which are denied, the presumption loses its value, unless the evidence is equal on both sides, in which case it should turn the scale. (6) It is, therefore, only when there is no evidence of possession either way or when the evidence of possession is strong on both sides and apparently equally balanced that the presumption that possession goes with title should prevail. The principle does not apply where the evidence of possession is equally unworthy of reliance on both sides. (7)

In the case of the owner of land seeking to recover possession on the allegation that the party in possession has no right to continue in it, and showing a prima facie title to possession, he can claim a decree, unless the party in possession has a tenure entitling him to retain possession. (8) Thus in a suit to recover possession, the plaintiff, who was admittedly the zamindar, alleged, but failed to prove, that the land was her zewar. The defendants who claimed to have acquired rights of occupancy failed to prove that they had acquired such rights or that they were tenants of the plaintiff. It was under such circumstances held that the plaintiff being admittedly the zamindar was entitled to a decree, the defendants having failed to establish their defence. (9) Upon a similar principle a zamindar has as such a prima facie title to the gross:

(1) Raja Babu v. Muddun Mohun, 14 C., 169 (1866).
(2) Swarnamayi Raw v. Srinibash Koyal, 6 B. L. R., 149 (1870).
(5) Lawson, op. cit., 578.
(6) Thakur Singh v. Bhogeraj Singh, 27 C., 25 (1890); the last sentence which is taken from the headnote is not expressly stated in, but appears to be implied by the judgment. Apparently the evidence given negatived the presumption, otherwise the case put is similar to that where there is no evidence.
(7) Ram Money v. Alemwoodeen, 20 W. R., 374 (1873); see also Raj Kishen v. Pearce Mohun, 20 W. R., 421 (1873).
Ownership.

collections of all the mazahs or villages within hiszemindary, and the burden of proof is upon a person who seeks to defeat that right by proving that he is entitled to an intermediate tenure. (3)

Orders for possession under Act XXV of 1861, section 318, Act X of 1872, section 530, and X of 1882, section 145, relating to "disputes as to immovable property" are merely police-orders made to prevent breaches of the peace and decide no question of title. Such orders are admissible in evidence on general principles as well as under the Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 13, to show the fact that such orders were made. This necessarily makes them evidence of the following facts appearing on the orders themselves, viz., who the parties to the dispute were; what the land in dispute was; and who was declared entitled to retain possession. For this purpose and to this extent such orders are admissible in evidence for and against any one, when the fact of possession at the date of the order has to be ascertained. If the lands referred to in such an order are described by metes and bounds, or by reference to objects or marks physically existing, these must necessarily be ascertained by extrinsic evidence, i.e., the testimony of persons who know the locality. If the order refers to a map, that map is admissible in evidence to render the order intelligible and the actual situation of the objects drawn or otherwise indicated on the map must, as in all cases of the sort, be ascertained by extrinsic evidence. Reports accompanying the orders or maps and not referred to in the orders may be admissible as hearsay evidence of reputed possession; but they are not otherwise admissible, unless are made so by the thirteenth section of the Evidence Act. Though an order for possession under the Criminal Procedure Code confers no title, yet the person in possession can only be evicted by a person, who can prove a better right to the possession himself. Where, therefore, the plaintiff sued for possession of disputed land, of which the defendant had been, by an order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) made in 1888, declared to be in possession. Held, that the onus was on the plaintiff to prove her title to the land. Where, however, she had done so, and had obtained a decree in her favour, the onus is on the defendant (who is the appellant) to show that the decision of the High Court was wrong, and where it was wrong. To induce the Judicial Committee to reverse the judgment appealed from, the appellant must do something more than show that the plaintiff's title is not free from doubt, and must at least give some acceptable explanation of the circumstances which have led the Court below to its conclusion. The principle laid down in Raj Kumar Roy v. Gobind Chunder Roy (2) followed.

In a case of disputed boundaries, to prove a map, a witness was called, who had assisted as an Amin in preparing it with another Amin, who was dead, the witness had little or no knowledge of surveyor, but the Amin with whom it was prepared was skilled surveyor, and the Collector (who was also dead) had tested the accuracy of the measurements. Held, that the map was sufficiently proved to be admissible in evidence. (3)

Possession is a question which from its nature would seem to be very easily determinable; but in practice it is found to be one of the most difficult issues to decide in this country. (4) The fact of possession as every other fact (excluding the contents of documents) may be proved by oral evidence. (5) A statement by a witness that a party is in possession, is, in point of law, admissible evidence of the fact that such party was in possession. (6) General and vague statements are,

---

(1) Rajah Sahib v. Doorpashad Tweare, 12 M. I. A., 331 (1869); s. c., 2 B. L. R., (P.C.), 134.
(2) 19 C., 680, L. R., 19 I. A., 140.
(3) Denominis Chowdhuris v. Brojo Mohini, 29 C., 197 (1902).
(5) See p. 554 ante, and cases cited in note (6), ib.
however, of but little value. The court in the undermentioned case,(1) observed upon this point as follows:—‘Then coming to the oral evidence the testimony of all the witnesses is general in the extreme. They speak of the ´disputed land.´ They say that they saw plaintiff ´in possession.´ They say they saw them ´collecting rents.´ All these statements are general. And to persons who have had any experience in the Mofussil, and who know how easy it is to bring any number of witnesses into Court who will readily give general testimony of this nature, the absolute worthlessness of such evidence requires no demonstration.’ When the question relates to the occupation of comparatively waste or waste land, the smallest indication of occupation must be taken hold of and used as evidence in the determination of any matter of dispute with regard to it between the contending parties.(2) In a suit for possession of jungle lands, where there is no proof of acts of ownership having been exercised on either side, possessior must be presumed to have continued with the person to whom they rightfully belong.(3) Lands which have never been occupied for cultivation and which are of such a nature and description as that no one can be said to be in possessions, may be presumed rightfully to belong to the parties with whom the title rests.(4) ‘If there are two persons in a field each asserting that the field is his, and each doing some act in the assertion of the right of possession, and if the question is, which of these two is in actual possession, I answer the person who has the title is in actual possession, and the other person is a trespasser.’(5) Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. The nature of the possessions to be looked for and the evidence of its continuance must depend upon the character and condition of the land in dispute. Where land is permanently or temporarily incapable of actual enjoyment in any of the customary modes all that can be required is that the plaintiff should show such act of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land, and in such cases when he has done this, his possession is presumed to continue so long as the state of the land remains unchanged, unless he is shown to have been dispossessed.(6)

Where the District Judge held that the land in dispute was not enclosed and that the ´plaintiff had not been in actual occupation of any definite portion’ of the land; it was held to be not necessary that a person should use any definite portion of an unenclosed land in assertion of his ownership. Evidence may be given of acts done in other parts provided that there is a common character of locality as would raise an inference that the place in dispute belonged to the plaintiff if the other part did.(7) Where it was pleaded that the plaintiffs had not actually occupied the land in suit, it was held that the Courts should be very careful before holding that title has been lost merely by non-possession.(8) Evidence of possession of certain specific property has been treated as evidence of possession as regards an appandage to such property though no definite acts of possession were proved as regards the appandage.(9) The possession of a trustee is the possession of, and cannot be adverse to, those on whose behalf he is such a trustee.(10) In dealing with the question of possession as between brothers and

(1) Joytara Dasoo v. Mahomed Mobaruck, 8 C.,
975, 983, 984 (1882), per Field, J.: see also Alliyat
Chisamum v. Jugutt Chunder, 5 W. R., 242, 243 (1866).

(2) Muzammut Natuckee v. Chowdhry Chisamum, 20 W. R., 247, 248 (1876), per Phear, J.; Mohima Chunder v. Hurro Lal, 3 C., 768 (1878),
v. c., 2 C. L. R., 364.

(3) Leelasund v. Muzammut Basheeroonias,
16 W. R., 102 (1871).

(4) Mookoo Ram v. Bisambour Roy, 24 W. R., 410 8710.

(5) Per Lord Selbourne in Lowe v. Telford (1876), 1 A. C., 423, cited in Vithaldas v. Secretary of State for India, 26 B., 416 (1901).

(6) Mahomed Ali v. Abdul Gummy, 9 C., 744, (1883); s. c., 12 C. L. R., 257, referred to in Thak-

(7) Vithaldas v. Secretary of State, 26 B., 10, 416, 417 (1901).

(8) Prosunno Chunder v. Land Mortgage Bank,
5 W. R., 453 (1876).

(9) Iqbal Huan v. Nund Kishore, 24 A., 294
(1902).

(10) Chunder Kunt v. Bungshee Deb, 6 W. R., 61
(1886): Bigelow on Estoppel, 545. See cases cited in Mitra on Limitation, 4th ed., p. 198, and is in notes to s. 10 of the Limitation Act.
sisters in native families regard must be had to the conditions of life under which such families live, and to the fact that in such families the management of the property of the family is, by reason of the seclusion of the female members, ordinarily left in the hands of the male members. In the case of such families slight evidence of enjoyment of income arising from the property is sufficient \textit{prima facie} proof of possession.\footnote{Inayat Husen v. Ali Husen, 20 A., 182 (1897).} Where the plaintiffs alleged forcible dispossession from which, if made out, it would have been probably inferred that their possession up to the date of that forcible act had been consistent with the title which they alleged, but failed to prove the dispossession alleged, the Privy Council held that they had to deal with a possession on the part of the defendants which was not shown to have commenced in wrong, and that the plaintiffs could only disturb that by proving distinctly a superior title.\footnote{Arunagam Chetty v. Periyannan Sertul, 25 W. R., 81 (1876).} With regard to possession obtained by force, see next paragraph.

The ordinary rule is that force does not interrupt possession. He whose possession has been interrupted by an act of violence without any form of law or justice is nevertheless considered as a possessor, because he has the right to enter into possession again.\footnote{Domat’s \textit{Civil Law}, 1889, cited in \textit{Khaja Enaeeoolah v. Kishen Soondur}, 8 W. R., 386, 389 (1867).} A man cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, as where possession has been obtained by illegal means such as force or fraud, in order to shift the burden of proof to his opponent. It was therefore formerly held that where the plaintiff proved that he was in possession and was ousted by the defendant, otherwise than by due course of law, the burden of proving a title in the first instance was shifted upon the defendant, and in the event only of the latter establishing his title would the plaintiff be required to prove his.\footnote{See Jadubath v. Ram Soondur, 7 W. R., 174 (1867); Radha Bullub v. Kishen Gobind, 9 W. R., 71 (1868); Gow Paroy v. Wooma Soonduree, 12 W. R., 472 (1869). [It is, however, for the plaintiff to prove the alleged ouster]; Mahesh Chandra v. Srimati Barada, 2 B. L. R., 274 (1869); Mahomed Bux v. Abdool Kureem, 20 W. R., 458 (1873); Dailari Makanti v. Jago Bundoel, 23 W. R., 293 (1875).}

The Specific Relief Act, however, gives a special remedy to the party illegally dispossessed of property in the nature of a possessor suit to be brought within six months from the date of dispossession, in which suit the question of title is immaterial and will not be enquired into.\footnote{Field, Ev., 507.} The result of a possessory suit under this Act is to restore to possession the party ousted by force and to leave the question of title wholly untouched and open to litigation in a regular suit.\footnote{Moulie Maenooddeen v. Greek Chander, 7 W. R., 230 (1867).} And when a regular suit has been brought to establish title and to recover the land from the party so restored to possession, the whole burden of proof is upon the plaintiff in such regular suit; and until he can show title to the property the Court will not look into the defendant’s title or disturb his possession.\footnote{Bullubee Kant v. Doorjodham Shikder, 7 W. R., 89 (1867); Ram Chandra v. Brajanath Surma, 3 B. L. R., App., 109 (1869).} Evidence of the plaintiffs’ possession prior to the summary order under which he was dispossessed may be good evidence of his title and must be considered.\footnote{Golam Nubes v. Bissanath Kur, 12 W. R., 9 (1869); Prem Chand v. Haroo Dass, 22 W. R., 259 (1874); Tara Banu v. Abdul G нужны, 12 C. L. R., 486 (1882).} If the defendant pleads limitation, the plaintiff in the regular suit cannot by way of answer set up the possession which, having obtained otherwise than in due course of law, he held before the possessory suit.\footnote{Field, Ev., 507.}

The question of the effect of this provision in the Specific Relief Act upon the general power of the Courts to give relief against unlawful interference has been the subject of conflicting decisions. It has been questioned whether, when a person ousted otherwise than by due course of law fails to avail himself within six months of the summary remedy provided by the Specific Relief Act, but afterwards brings a regular suit to recover possession, the burden of proof ought to be laid upon him or upon the defendant; whether in fact the plaintiff’s previous possession in such cases is not \textit{prima facie} evidence of title, and whether the Specific Relief Act while providing a special and summary remedy in a particular case has in others interfered with the general rule above adverted to, that a man cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own wrongful act to shift the burden of proof upon his opponent. Most of the earlier decisions of the Calcutta High Court were based upon the view that possession is \textit{prima facie} evidence of title and favoured the plaintiff’s right to succeed in such a suit on proof merely of previous peaceable possession and illegal dispossessors, unless the defendant could show a better title.\(^\text{1}\) But the later decisions of that Court are to a contrary effect, and it has been held that mere previous possession for any period short of the statutory period of twelve years will not entitle a plaintiff to a decree for the recovery of possession, even though the defendant cannot establish title, except in a suit under the ninth section of the Specific Relief Act, which must be brought within six months from the date of dispossessio.\(^\text{2}\) Where, however, the plaintiff had received possession of property by purchase and \textit{had such possession} when the suit was brought and the defendant who disturbed such possession, had no title whatever, but alleged a defect in the plaintiff’s title, it was held that lawful possession of land is sufficient evidence of right as owner as against a person who has no title whatever, and who is a mere trespasser, that it was not necessary that the plaintiff should negative defendant’s case as to the former’s defect in title, and that he was by virtue of such possession entitled \(^\text{1}\) Cases cited in note \((p)\), p. 580, ante, and see \textit{Kunjar Ksadocaouh v. Kishen Soondar}, 8 W. R., 366 (1887). \textit{(The Civil Courts are competent, s. 15, Act XIV of 1859, notwithstanding, to give a decree for movable property on the bare ground of illegal dispossessio in a suit brought after six months from the date of such dispossessio, in which suit the defendant has failed to prove his own title to the land)}; \textit{Dhubue Schoo v. Sakti Tumeeoodeen}, 10 W. R., 102 (1888); \textit{Aryee Beebee v. Kankye Molah}, 12 W. R., 146 (1869); \textit{Shama Soondar v. Collector of Maldah}, 12 W. R., 164 (1869); \textit{Trilochan Ghose v. Koylash Nath}, 12 W. R., 175 (1869); \textit{Nagore Money v. Smith}, 23 W. R., 291 (1875); \textit{Kasab Munji v. Khous Nuseio}, 5 C. L. R., 278 (1879) \textit{(per Prinsep, J.), dissent.} \textit{Proof of prior possession and of illegal dispossessio are in themselves no evidence of title except in a possessory suit under Act I of 1877, S. 110 of the Evidence Act applies only to actual and present possession and does not declare generally that possession shall always be \textit{prima facie} evidence of title}; \textit{Mohabber Perhad v. Mohabber Singh}, 7 C. L., 591 (1881); \textit{a. c.}, 9 C. L. R., 164; \textit{Brojo Sundar v. Koyias Chunder}, 11 C. L. R., 133 (1882). Contra, \textit{Anmer Bibee v. Tukromieso Beguna}, 7 W. R., 332 (1887); and, on review, 8 W. R., 370 (1867). \textit{(See also Luckee Koer v. Ram Dutt, 11 W. R., 447 (1886); Nund Kiskors v. Skeo Dym, 11 W. R., 168 (1886); Ram Mohun v. Jangypoo Dees, 14 W. R., 41 (1870).}

For a discussion of these and other cases, see 6 C. W. N., ix, \textit{Possessor title and its summary and substantive remedies} and 3 C. W. N., col. xii, xiii, xiv. It has been, however, also held that though in a suit for possession on proof of title it will not be sufficient for the plaintiff merely to prove possession at the date of the disturbance, the previous possession of the plaintiff may be proved to have been so long and continuous that a good title may be reasonably presumed from it. \textit{Kasab Munji v. Khous Nuseio}, 5 C. L. R., 282 (1879); and see \textit{Lachko v. Har Sahoi}, 12 A., 46 (1887), cited post. \textit{Possession is evidence of title, more or less strong according to its duration; and a court may well be justified in allowing a plaintiff to recover on such evidence only. But if he be allowed so to recover, it is on the ground that he has produced sufficient proof of title, and not on the ground that he has a right to recover without proof of title because possession is good against all the world, except the real owner,” \textit{per Malville, J.}, in \textit{Dadabhok Nareida v. Sub-Collector of Brouch}, 7 Bom. H. C. R., 82, 87 (1870).
to a declaratory decree and to an injunction restraining the wrong-doer.(1) The result of the later decisions of the Calcutta High Court is therefore that in possessory suits under the Specific Relief Act nothing further is required than proof of possession at the date of illegal dispossession. In other cases the plaintiff must show title or such adverse possession as under the Limitation Act confers title. In this view the possession referred to by this section is actual de facto possession or rather physical occupation at date of suit and not juridical possession, the requisites of which are freedom from force, clandestinity and permission. Force therefore does interrupt possession if the party aggrieved does not avail himself of the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, and a tortfeasor may, in such case by his own wrongful act and though destitute of title shift the burden of proof upon his opponent. For if more than six months have passed since the date of illegal dispossession the burden of proof of ownership will be upon the plaintiff as being the party out of actual present possession. Where, however, the plaintiff is in, and therefore does not seek to recover, possession, but desires to obtain merely a declaratory decree then that possession is valid and sufficient against another who is a mere trespasser.

The course of opinion in the Bombay High Court has been the opposite to that in Calcutta. The Bombay High Court at first held views similar to those now held by the Calcutta High Court.(2) Subsequently, however, the views of that Court changed, and it was held that a plaintiff, although suing more than six months after the date of dispossession and without resorting to a possessory suit, is entitled to rely on the possession previous to his dispossession as against a person who has no title.(3) That Court has dissented from the view that because in this country a party is given a special remedy which the law of England does not provide, if he does not avail himself of the same he has no claim to the advantages which it would have secured him, and has held that the mere omission of the party dispossessed to avail himself of the specific remedy by possessory suit does not deprive him of his right to rely upon his previous possession in an action of ejectment against a trespasser.(4) In this view of the case the possession which attracts the presumption of ownership is juridical possession obtained nec vi, nec clam, nec precario ab adversario, and mere possession is valid against all the world except the person legally entitled. In, however, a recent case where the party suing was in possession it was held by Ranade, J., that (5) though a party may rely upon his previous possession it must be of such a character as leads to a presumption of title. Mere previous possession less than the Limitation Law requires is insufficient except in a possessory suit, and mere wrongful possession is insufficient to shift the burden of proof. The position here adopted is not clear. As already observed, the case was not one of dispossession. The plaintiff was in possession and sought confirmation thereof, Jenkins, C. J., (with whose judgment Ranade, J., appeared to desire to concur) held that the section obviously does not require possession according to title, otherwise it is meaningless.(6) It was therefore sufficient for the plaintiff to show possession to recover against the defendant unless the latter could show title. The question was whether he had shown it. If, however, the plaintiff had been forcibly dispossessed more than six months before suit, the question would then have arisen whether proof of previous possession was sufficient. The Calcutta High Court answered the question in the negative because it holds that there has been a-

(1) Ismail Ariff v. Mohamed Ghous, 20 C. 834 (1898); distinguished in Nima Chand v. Ramchandra Bagani, 26 C. 570 (1899).
(3) Krishnarao Tasha v. Vasudeo Asaji, 8 B. 371 (1884); Pemraj Bhavapur v. Narayana Shikaram, 6 B. 21 215 (1882).
(4) Krishnarao Tasha v. Vasudeo Asaji, 8 B. 375, 376.
(5) Hemalalrao v. Secretary of State, 25 B., 267, 303 (1890).
interruption of possession, and the substantive right of possession has been lost by failure to seek the special remedy which the Specific Relief Act gives in protection of mere possession. According, however, to the generally prevailing view of the Bombay High Court, possession is a good title against all persons but the rightful owner, and failure to avail oneself of the provisions of the Specific Relief Act does not deprive a party of his right to rely upon his mere previous possession, which force does not interrupt. In this view in no case should it be necessary to show title in the absence of any title shown by the defendant. And so it has been held recently by the Madras High Court(1) that possession in law is a substantive right or interest which exists and has legal incidents and advantages apart from the true owner’s title; that the Specific Relief Act cannot possibly be held to take away any remedy available with reference to this well-recognised doctrine on possession; that it is an undoubted rule of law that a person who has been ousted by another who has no better right is, with reference to the person so ousting, entitled to recover by virtue of the possession he had held before the ouster even though that possession was without any title. Where, however, a plaintiff in possession without any title seeks to recover possession of which he has been forcibly deprived by a defendant having a good title, he can only do so under the provisions of the ninth section of the Specific Relief Act and not otherwise.

The question has been raised in the Allahabad High Court, but not decided: it being held that usually it is for the plaintiff who seeks ejectment to prove his title, but that, when possession for 30 or 40 years is proved to have been peaceably enjoyed, the person who has recently dispossessed such plaintiff has to meet the presumption of law, that the plaintiff’s long possession indicates his ownership of the property.(2)

In a suit for possession of immovable property it is for the plaintiff to show by some prima facie evidence that he has a subsisting title not extinguished by the operation of limitation before the defendant can be called upon to substantiate a plea of adverse possession.(3) Where the plaintiff has established his title to land, the burden of proving that the plaintiff has lost that title by reason of the adverse possession of the defendant is upon the latter.(4) If the property sued for was originally joint the burden of proving exclusive adverse possession by one of the original joint holders is on him.(5) To prove title to land by twelve years’ adverse possession it is not sufficient to show that some acts of possession have been done. Where adverse possession is relied on it must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor.(6) It must be a complete possession exclusive of the possession of any other person, and is displaced by evidence of partial possession by the party against whom the title by adverse possession is claimed.(7) When limitation is set up in answer to a suit for possession, it does not lie upon the defendant to disprove plaintiff’s possession; but it is the duty of the plaintiff to show that he has been in possession within twelve years before the commencement of the suit.(8) The circumstance that the

---

3. Inayat Husen v. Ali Husen, 20 A., 182 (1897); the possession of an usufructuary mortgagee is the possession of all persons having the right of redemption, ib.
4. Radha Gobind v. Inglis, 7 C. L. R., 384 (1890).
GOOD FAITH.

111. Where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties, one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence, the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence.

Illustrations.

(a) The good faith of a sale by a client to an attorney is in question in a suit brought by the client.

The burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the attorney.

(b) The good faith of a sale by a son just come of age to a father is in question in a suit brought by the son.

The burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the father.

Principle.—The reason why the burden of proving good faith is, by way of an exception to the general rule, cast upon the defendant is that if it were not so the transaction could rarely be satisfactorily enquired into. The plaintiff having been entirely in the hands of the defendant would be destitute of the means of proving affirmatively the mala fides of the transaction; whilst the defendant in such a transaction may fairly be subjected to the duty not only of dealing honestly but of preserving clear evidence that he has done so.

s. 101 (Burden of proof).

COMMENTARY.

Good faith in a contracting party has been frequently declared to be a rebuttable presumption of law being regarded in the same way as the presumption

(2) Talabhshai v. Banchod, 26 B., 442 (1902).
(3) Wali Ahmad v. Tota Meah, 31 C., 397 (1903).
(5) Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta, 29 C., 518 (1902) at p. 535, s. c., 29 I. A., 104.
(6) Markby, Ev., 86. In such cases it is seldom, if ever, possible to prove specific acts of bad faith. Yet the risk of abuse is obviously great. The law therefore reverses its usual rule of evidence in dealings between man and man. Commonly nothing is presumed contrary to good faith. But this is the rule between equals. When one party habitually looks up to the other and is guided of innocence, as an assumption of the law made for the determination of the burden of proof and not for the adjudication of the merits. A person who is sued is charged with bad faith, and the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove the charge; or the defendant sets up bad faith in the plaintiff, and the burden is on the defendant to make this defence good. So it is an elementary principle that a party setting up a tort has the burden on him to prove such tort. But when the actor in either of the relations above quoted establishes a praejudice case, and this is met by evidence sustaining good faith on the other side, then the case must be decided upon the merits. Therefore, so far as good faith and legality are assumed as belonging to ordinary business-transaction, it may be generally held that the burden of proof is on the party assailing good faith or legality.

So while in all cases where it has been proved that a mere stranger, connected with the other party by no peculiar or fiduciary relation, from which undue influence can be inferred, has either by fraud, surprise, or undue influence obtained from him a benefit, a Court of Equity will at once set it aside. In such cases, however, the proof of fraud, surprise, or undue influence is completely upon the other party or person deriving title from him for praejudice, the transaction is valid. The present section, however, enacts an important exception to general rule, reversing the burden of proof, where one of the parties stands in a relation of active confidence towards the other. The rule laid down by it is in accordance with a principle of equity long acknowledged and administered, both in England and in this country, namely, that he who bargains in a matter of advantage with a person, who places a confidence in him, is bound to show that a proper and reasonable use has been made of that confidence. The transaction is not necessarily void ipso facto, nor is it necessary for those who impeach it to establish that there has been fraud or imposition; but the burden of establishing its perfect fairness, adequacy and equity is cast upon the person in whom the confidence has been reposed, and the party seeking restitution is not called upon to prove that the transaction was unrighteous and his consent not free. The rule further applies equally to all persons standing in confidential relations with each other. So if a deed conferring a benefit on a father is executed by a child who is not emancipated from the father's control, and the deed is subsequently impeached by the child, the onus is on the father to show that the child had independent advice, and that he executed the deed with full knowledge of its contents and with a free intention of giving the father the benefit conferred by it. If this onus be not discharged, the deed will be set aside. This onus extends to a volunteer claiming through the father, and to any person taking with notice of the circumstances, which raise the equity, by him, he can no longer be supposed capable, without special precaution, of exercising an independent judgment which is requisite for his consent to be free. Pollock's Law of Fraud in British India, 63, 64. See Contract Act, s. 18.

(1) Wharton, Ev., § 1248; as to proof of good and bad faith, see Philson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 118. So upon the principle that the law will not impute bad faith, ambiguous instruments are to be construed in a sense consistent with good faith. Best, Ev., § 347; Muir v. Glasgow Bank, 4 L. R., H. L., 337; Wharton, Ev., § 1240.

(2) Ib., §§ 357, 358; v. ante, ss. 101, 104.

(3) Ib., § 1248.

(4) Ib., § 386; Lewis v. Levy, E. B., & E., 507.

(5) Field, Ev., 510, 511, citing Huguenin v. Basel, 2 Leading cases in Equity and see Boo. Jinaiboo v. Sha Nagar, 11 B., 78 (1886). It is only in cases where one person stands in a fiduciary relation to another that the law requires the former to exercise extreme good faith in all his dealings with the latter and scrutinizes those dealings with more than ordinary care and caution. In the absence of any special confidence reposed by one person in another it lies on him who alleges fraud to prove it.

(6) See Mooneser Basdeo v. Shamaonian Begum, 11 Moo. I. A., 551 (1867) and cases cited post per seim.

but not further. (1) The illustrations to the section afford two instances of the relations to which the rule of proof applies, viz., those of legal adviser and client, (2) and of parent and child, (3) but there are many others, such as those of medical practitioner and patient, spiritual director and penitent, (4) trustee and cestui que trust, (5) husband and wife, (6) guardian and ward, agent and principal, (7) and the like. (8) In fact, the relief granted stands upon a general principle applying to all the variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. (9)

The words "active confidence" in the section indicate that the relationship between the parties must be such that one is bound to protect the interests of the other. (10) The section has been spoken of as an exception to the general rule relating to the burden of proof because the allegation of bad faith is one which the plaintiff, according to section 101, ante, is bound to prove and to require the defendant to prove good faith is in contradiction to the terms of that section. The reason why the exception is made and this duty is imposed on the defendant has been adverted to above in the note giving the principle, upon which the section is founded; (11) in contradistinction to the case of a transaction with a mere stranger, where a relation of active confidence between the parties is proved, then the burden of proof is on the party receiving the benefit or on those claiming through him. (12) The Courts so far presume against the validity of the instrument as to require proof (varying in amount according to circumstances) of the absence of anything approaching to imposition, over-reaching, undue influence or unconscionable advantage, and the person benefited will have

---

(1) Bainbridge v. Brown, L. R., 18 Ch. D., 188.

(2) See a'vo Pashong v. Munic Halawani, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 95 (1888); Ram Pashad v. Ra-nee Phulpatte, 7 W. R., 99 (1887); Kamini Sun- dari v. Kali Prosunno, 12 C., 225 (1886).

(3) Bainbridge v. Brown, supra.

(4) Manee Singh v. Umesh Pande, 12 A., 523 (1889).

(5) Gray v. Warna, L. R., 16 Eq. 577.

(7) Taccoo Kewry v. Naqib Syed, 1 Ind. App., 192 (1874); s. c., 13 B. L. R., 427; 21 W. R., 540; Kanai Lal v. Kamini Debi, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 31 (1867); Wajid Khan v. Kuw Ali, 18 C. 545 (1891); s. c., 18 Ind. App., 144; as to agents not standing in fiduciary relation, see Boo Jinaloo v. Sha Nagar, 11 B., 78 (1886); as to confidential manager, see Mahadee v. Neelamani, 20 M., 273 (1896).

(8) Taylor, Ev., §§ 151, 152; Story, Ev. Jur., §§ 309—327A, and cases cited. The courts also regard with suspicion all dealings with heirs as regards their expectations, and relieve against unconscionable bargains with poor and ignorant persons. See Chunnl Kuar v. Rap Singh, 11 A., 57 (1888); Taylor, Ev., § 153. But these cases do not, as a rule, come within the scope of the section.

(9) Sital Prasad v. Parbhu Lal, 10 A., 355 (1888); see remarks upon the facts of this case in Pollock's Law of Fraud, 68, 69.

(10) Markby, Ev., 86. "So far as they go (i.e., the word of the section) they give effect to the general law of all Courts in which the principles of English Equity prevail. But I venture to think that they do not go quite far enough to be an adequate expression of the Law, unless the words 'active confidence' are to receive a larger meaning than they would naturally convey to any reader, whether a layman or a lawyer, not familiar with this class of cases." Pollock's Law of Fraud in British India, p. 65. In Thakur Das v. Jhooj Singh, 26 A., 130 (1903); the Privy Council held that the plaintiff was not in a position of 'active confidence' towards the defendants within the meaning of this section.

(11) v. ante, p. 584, note (6).

(12) It has further been said (L. C. in Equity 635) that, where a person gains a great advantage over another by a voluntary instrument, burden of proof is thrown upon the person receiving the benefit, and he is under the necessity of showing that the transaction is fair and honest; for, although the Courts never prevent one person from being the voluntary object of the bounty of another, yet it must be shown that the bounty was purely voluntary and not produced by any undue influence or misrepresentation. The Evidence Act does not provide specially for this last case, though it may possibly fall within the purview of s. 114, post. Field, Ev., 511. But see also Pollock's Law of Fraud, 67.
thrown upon him the burthen of establishing beyond all reasonable doubt the perfect fairness and honesty of the entire transaction. (1)

In judging of the validity of transactions between persons standing in a confidential relation to each other, it is very material to see whether the person conferring a benefit on the other had competent and independent advice; (2) and the age or capacity of the person conferring the benefit and the nature of the benefit are also of very great importance in such cases. (3)

In this country where the position of purdanashin or secluded women is to a large extent one of isolation and subserviency, it has been held that they are entitled to receive that protection which the Court of Chancery always extend to the weak, ignorant and infirm, and to those who for any other reason are specially likely to be imposed upon by the exertion of undue influence over them. This influence is presumed to have been exerted, unless the contrary be shown. It is, therefore, in all dealings with those persons who are so situated, always incumbent on the person who is interested in upholding the transaction to show that its terms are fair and equitable.(4) Protection is given in these instances apart from the provisions of this section, which strictly apply only to the case of those purdanashin women who have dealings with others in confidential relations with them. It has in numerous cases been laid down that strict proof of good faith is required where purdanashin women are concerned, and that it is incumbent on the Court when dealing with the disposition of her property by a purdanashin woman, whether Mahomedan (5) or Hindu to be satisfied that the transaction was explained to her and that she knew what she was doing. (6) But the burden of proof will be discharged by

(1) Taylor, Ev., §§ 181. In fact in such cases undue influence is presumed to have been exerted, until the contrary is proved. Pushong v. Manjo Balsami, 1 B. L. R., A. C. 96 (1868).

(2) The advice need not necessarily and in all cases be legal," though in a large number of cases the only competent advice must be that of the character; Allard v. Skinner, 36 Ch. D., 145, 153, 158, 159.

(3) Field, Ev., 511; see for a consideration of some circumstances constituting undue influence, Chedambara Chetty v. Renja Krishna, 13 B. L. R., 509, 528 (1874), and other cases cited in Pollock's Law of Fraud, p. 77—79.

(5) See remarks in Moonshee Busloor v. Shumonshin Begum, 11 Moo. I. A., 551 (1867). ["In India the Mussulman woman is, like the Hindu, is shut up in the zenana, and has no communication except from behind the purdah or screen, with any male, save a few privileged relatives or dependants. The culture of the one is not, generally speaking, higher than that of the other and they may be taken to be equally liable to pressure and influence; † † † † † †]. Khas Mehal v. Administrator-General of Bengal, 5 C. W. N., 506 (1901).

evidence given of circumstances inconsistent with or contrary to those upon which the presumption is raised. (1) The presumptions as to the knowledge of the executant of the contents of the document she is executing do not equally apply in the case of a purdanashin as in the case of other persons. (2) In a recent case in the Privy Council (3) a person was described as a quasi-purdanashin. Their Lordships taking the term to mean a woman who, not being of the purdanashin class, is yet so close to them in kinship and habits and so secluded from ordinary social intercourse that a like amount of incapacity must be ascribed to her, and the same amount of protection which the law gives to purdanashins must be extended to her; held the contention to be a novel one and that outside the class of regular purdanashins it must depend in each case on the character and position of the individual woman whether those who deal with her are, or are not, bound to take special precautions that her action shall be intelligent and voluntary, and to prove that it was so in case of dispute.

It has been held in England that the rules of Courts of Equity in relation to gifts inter vivos are not applicable to the making of wills; and that though natural influence exerted by one who possesses it to obtain a benefit for himself is undue inter vivos, so that gifts and contracts inter vivos between certain parties will be set aside, unless the party benefited can show affirmatively that the other party could have formed a free and unfettered judgment in the matter; yet such natural influence may be lawfully exercised to obtain a will or legacy. (4) It is as yet an open question whether or not the same rule will be found applicable in this country though here, as in England, a will is void only when caused by fraud or coercion, or by such importunity as takes away the free agency of the testator. (5) For though as observed in the case cited below while it may be reasonable to presume that a person has availed himself of the natural influence his position gave him, it is a very different thing to presume, without any evidence, that a person has abused his position by the exercise of dominion or the assertion of adverse control; (6) yet on the other hand, it has been said that there is no sound reason why the presumption of undue influence should not be applicable to wills in the same manner as to deeds. (7)

112. The fact that any person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man, or within two hundred and eight days after its dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried, shall be conclusive proof that he is the legitimate son of that man, unless it can be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when he could have been begotten.

Principle.—See Notes, post.

s. 3 ("Fact")

Steph. Dig., Art. 98; Best, Presumptive Evidence, 70, 71; Wharton, Ev., §§ 1298, 1299, 698; Lawson’s Presumptive Evidence, 104—110; Taylor, Ev., §§ 16, 106, 950, 951; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed. 166, 167, 168; Best, Ev., § 156; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 65, 1038; Phillips and Arnold, 471—473; Wills, Ev., 152, 208, 204, 37, 38; Powell, Ev., 81, 82, 165, 156; Stewart Rapelje’s Treatise on the Law of Witnesses, § 158.

COMMENTARY.

The section assumes the existence of a valid marriage. The legal presumption of paternity raised by it is applicable only to the offspring of a married couple. A person claiming as an illegitimate child must establish his alleged paternity like any other disputed question of relationship. So where a person alleged that he was the illegitimate son of one C. C., the onus of establishing that fact was held to be clearly upon him, and he could not, by simply proving that his mother was C. C.’s concubine, shift the onus on to the other side to disprove his paternity. (1) Where the father and mother were or are married, it is a presumption of law, which is binding until rebutted, (2) that a person born in a civilized nation is legitimate. In the Roman law according to the well-known maxim pater est quem nuptias demonstrant (he is the father whom the marriage indicates), (3) the presumption of legitimacy is this, that a child born of a married woman is deemed to be legitimate, and it throws on any person who is interested in making out the illegitimacy the whole burden of proving it. The law presumes both that a marriage-ceremony is valid (4) and that every person is legitimate. Marriage or filiation (parentage) may be presumed, the law in general presuming against vice and immorality. (5)

As has been said, “this legal presumption that he is the father whom the nuptials show to be so is the foundation of every man’s birth and status. It is a plain and sensible maxim which is the corner-stone, the very foundation, on which rests the whole fabric of society; and if you allow it once to be shaken, there is no saying what consequences may follow.” (6) So strict upon this head was the ancient common law that if the husband was within the four seas, at any time during the pregnancy of the wife the presumption was conclusive that her children were legitimate. (7) But this rule at length was in the language of Grose, J., “on account of its absolute nonsense,” exploded, (8) and the rule of

(2) Wharton, Ev., § 1298; Best, Pres. Ev., 70, 71; 5 Co., 988; Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. & F., 163; Banbury Perage case, 1 Sim. & St., 163; Head v. Head, 1 Sim. & St., 150; Cope v. Cope, 1 M. & Rob., 269, 276.
(3) See the maxim applied in the case of Muhammandans in Jevami Singjee v. Jet Singjee, 3 Moo I. A., 245 (1844); Nicholas v. Apsher, 24 C., 222 (1896).
(5) Lawson’s Presumptive Ev., 104—106.
(6) Routledge v. Carruthers, Nicholas Adult Ba., 161: “The basis of the rule seems to be a notice that it is undesirable to inquire into the paternity of a child, whose parents have access to each other;” Markby, Ev., 87.
(7) R. v. Mawby, 1 Salk., 122; R. v. Alerton, 1 Ld. Raym., 122; see Lawson’s Presumptive Ev., 106.
(8) R. v. Luffe, 8 East., 208. modern English law has been summed up concisely by Leach, V. C., to be as follows(1):

"The ancient policy of the law of England remains unaltered. A child born of a married woman is to be presumed to be the child of the husband, unless there is evidence which excludes all doubt that the husband could not be the father. But in modern times the rule of evidence has varied. Formerly it was considered that all doubt could not be excluded, unless the husband were \textit{extra quatuor maria}. But as it is obvious that all doubt may be excluded from other circumstances, although the husband be within the four seas, the modern practice permits the introduction of every species of legal evidence tending to the same conclusion. But still the evidence must be of a character to exclude all doubt; and when the Judges in the \textit{Banbury case} spoke of satisfactory evidence upon this subject, they must be understood to have meant such evidence as would be satisfactory having regard to the special nature of the subject."

The rule here referred to, and declared by the House of Lords in the \textit{Ban-bury Peerage case},(2) was—"In every case where a child is born in lawful wedlock, the husband not being separated from his wife by a sentence of divorce, sexual intercourse is presumed to have taken place between the husband and wife, until that presumption is encountered by such evidence as proves, to the satisfaction of those who are to decide the question, that such sexual intercourse did not take place at any time, when, by such intercourse, the husband could, according to the laws of nature, be the father of such child." This is the law both in this country(3) and in England and America at the present time.

The section says that birth during marriage is \textit{conclusive} proof(4) of legitimacy, unless it can be shown that there was non-access. This section differs from those which direct that the Court "shall presume" in the circumstance that in the latter case the presumption may be rebutted by any fact or facts; but the presumption enacted by the present section can be rebutted only by proof of the particular fact indicated as that by which it may be rebutted. In order to displace the conclusive presumption, it must be shown that no 'access' or opportunity of sexual intercourse occurred down to a point of time so near to the birth (as for instance six months) as to render paternity impossible.

In this rule "access" and "non-access" mean the existence or non-existence of opportunities for sexual intercourse.(5) If sexual intercourse is proved between the husband and wife at the time of the child being conceived, the law will not permit an enquiry whether the husband or some other man was more likely to be the father of the child.(6) Non-access may be proved by means of such legal evidence as is admissible in every other case in which it is necessary to prove a physical fact.(7)

As a child born of a married woman is in the first instance presumed to be legitimate, such presumption is not to be rebutted by circumstances which only create doubt and suspicion; but it may be wholly removed by proper and sufficient evidence showing that the husband was (a) incompetent;(8) (b) entirely absent so as to have no intercourse or communication of any kind with the mother;
(c) entirely absent at the period during which the child must, in the course of

(1) \textit{Head v. Head}, 1 Sim. & St., 150 (1823).
(2) 1 Sim. & St., 153.
(3) As to Muhammadan Law, v. post, and s. 114, post.
(4) See s. 4, ante.
(5) \textit{Banbury Peerage case}, 1 Sim. & St., 159; 5 Cl. & F. 250; Cope v. Cope, 1 M. & Rob., 275; calls it "generating access."
(6) \textit{Morris v. Davis}, 5 Cl. & F., 243; Cope v. Cope, 1 M. & Rob., 275.
(7) \textit{Rosario v. Ingleo}, 18 Bom., 468, 472 (1863).
(8) In Field, Ev., 514, it is suggested that the section scarcely makes provision for this case, but "access" does not in this connection simply mean being in the same place or house (\textit{Banbury Peerage Case}, 1 Sim. & St., 159), but access view-nature, have been begotten; or (d) only present under such circumstance as afford clear and satisfactory proof that there was no sexual intercourse.

Such evidence as this puts an end to the question and establishes the illegitimacy of the child of a married woman. (1) All these similar facts are receivable in evidence in proof of non-access. So also Lord Ellenborough in R. v. Luffe (2) laid it down that the illegitimacy of the child might be shown when the legitimacy was impossible and the impossibility arose from (a) the husband being under the age of puberty; (b) the husband labouring under a disability occasioned by natural infirmity; (c) the length of time elapsed since the death of the husband; (d) the absence of the husband; or (e) where the impossibility was based on the laws of nature.

In this last connection it will be unnecessary to prove facts which may certainly be known from the invariable course of nature; such as that a man is not the father of a child, where non-access is already proved until within six months of the woman’s delivery. (3)

So far as concerns descent from particular parents a child born during wedlock is presumed according to English law, to be the legitimate issue of such parents, no matter how soon the birth be after the marriage. (4) When a man marries a woman whom he knows to be with child he may be considered as acknowledging by a most solemn act that the child is his. (5) The present section, following the English law, adopts the period of birth, as distinguished from conception, as the turning point of legitimacy. It is a peculiarity of that law that it does not concern itself with the conception, but considers a child legitimate who is born of parents married before the time of his birth, though they were unmarried when he was begotten. (6) But though a child is presumed to be legitimate no matter how soon born after the marriage, this presumption may be overcome by proof that the alleged father was incapable on grounds either of impotence, or absence, of being father of the child. (7)

Where evidence of access is given, it requires the strongest evidence of non-intercourse or other proof beyond reasonable doubt, to justify a judgment of illegitimacy. (8) Adultery on the wife’s part, however clearly proved, will not have

---

(1) Haragaw v. Haragawa, 9 Beav., 552, 555 per Lord Langdale.

(2) 8 East., 207.

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 16, and cases there cited; and cf. Whistler’s case cited in Lawson, Pres. Ev., 110, where it was attempted to charge a black man as the father of a white child born of a Mulatto woman. So also expert evidence has been admitted to show that by the “laws of nature,” a white man and woman could not be the parents of a Mulatto child. Wharton, Ev., § 1298.

(5) R. v. Luffe, 8 East., 210, per Lawrence, J., and see id. 207, “with respect to the case where the parents have married so recently before the birth of the child that it could not have been begotten in wedlock, it stands upon its own peculiar ground. The marriage of the parties is the criterion adopted by the law in the cases of anti-nuptial generation for ascertaining the actual parentage of the child. For this purpose it will not examine when the gestation began, looking only to the recognition of it by the husband in the subsequent act of marriage,” per Lord Ellenborough.

(13) Muhammad Allahdad v. Muhammad Ismael, 10 A., 289, 336 (1888), per Mahmood, J. Under Muhammadan law questions of legitimacy are referred to the date of the conception of the child and not to the period of the birth, ib., v. post. Under Hindu law it is not necessary in order to render a child legitimate that the procreation as well as the birth should take place after marriage. Ondagappa Chetty v. Collector of Trichinopoly, 14 B. L. R., 115 (1873); see § 114, post. As to the position of bastards in Hindu Law, see Pandaga Telaver v. Puli Telaver, 1 Mad. H. C. R., 478, (1863).

(15) Wharton, Ev., § 1298; Taylor, Ev., § 106; this effect, if the husband had access to the wife at the beginning of the period of the gestation, unless there is positive proof of non-intercourse.(1) From evidence of "access"—as this word is used in this connection—the presumption of sexual intercourse is very strong.(2) But evidence of access is not conclusive. It being only proved that the opportunity for sexual intercourse had existed—as that the parties lived in the same house—and the fact itself not being proved, evidence is admissible to disprove the presumption that it did take place. The parties may be followed within these four walls, and the fact of sexual intercourse not only disproved by direct testimony but by circumstantial evidence raising a strong presumption against the fact. In other words the proof of sexual intercourse being conclusive the presumption cannot be attacked, but the evidence by which such fact is to be established may be contradicted.(3) To rebut the presumption under this section it is for those who dispute the paternity of the child to prove non-access. Where a wife came to her husband's house a few days before he died and remained there up to the time of his death, and it was shown that a child alleged to be that of her husband, was the child of the wife and that it was born within the time necessary to give rise to the presumption under this section, the Privy Council in the absence of any evidence to show that the husband could not have had connection with his wife during the time she was residing with him, held that the presumption as to the paternity of the child given by this section must prevail. The fact that the husband was during the period within which the child must have been begotten, suffering from a serious illness which terminated fatally shortly afterwards was held, under the circumstances, not sufficient to rebut the presumption.(4) This presumption still exists where the parties are living apart from each other by mutual consent; though the presumption is rebuttable by proof of non-access. But it is otherwise where they are separated by a decree of Court, for in such cases the presumption is that they obey the decree.(5) Moreover by the terms of the section there must be a "continuance of a valid marriage." But a child born within 280 days from the dissolution of a valid marriage will be presumed legitimate. So in the case of widowhood though cohabitation is possible, the law will presume in favour of chastity and of the legitimacy of a child born within 280 days after the death of the husband.(6) Where a child born some 365 days after the last period at which he could have been begotten by the husband of his mother was set up as legitimate, it was held that although such a period of gestation was perhaps not absolutely beyond the bounds of possibility, yet there being evidence that the mother had been married to her husband for ten years without having had any children by him, and also evidence which pointed strongly to the conclusion of immorality on the part of the mother, the only reasonable finding was against the legitimacy of the child.(7)

---

(1) Head v. Head, supra; Cope, v. Cope supra; Morris v. Davies, supra; Wright v. Holdgate, 3 C. & Kq., 158; Legge v. Edmund, 25 L. J. Ch., 125; Banbury Peage case, supra; R. v. Lupte, supra; as to the competency of the parents to prove non-access, v. post.

(2) Bury v. Philpot, 2 Myl. & K., 349; Head v. Head, supra; Lawson’s Prea. Ev., 113, 114; Wharton, Ev., § 1296; The Baronry of Sale, 1 H. L. Cas., 507; Gurney v. Gurney, 32 L. J. Ch., 456.

(3) Ib., 115, 116; R. v. Inhabitants of Mansfield, supra; Cope v. Cope, supra; on this point the conduct of the parties is relevant, as to the wife concealed the birth of the child from the husband: Morris v. Davies, 5 Ct. & P., 165; Cope v. Cope, supra; Banbury Peage case, supra; Panday v. Telawer v. Puli Telawer, 1 Med. H. C. R., 478, 486 (1863).

(4) Narendra Nath v. Ram Gobind, 29 C., 11 (1901); s. c., 4 Bom. L. R., 243.

(5) Taylor, Ev., § 106, and cases there cited.

(6) See Trilok Nath v. Lachmian Kumar, 7 C. W. N., 617 (1903), when the child was born 223 days after the husband’s death, S. C., 35 A., 403.

It may be a question of difficulty to determine how far the provisions of this section are to be taken as trenching upon the Muhammedan law of marriage, parentage, legitimacy and inheritance, which departments of law under other statutory provisions are to be adopted as the rule of decision by the Courts in British India. (1)

According to English (2) and American (3) law the parents are incompetent to prove non-access when the legitimacy of a child is in question, which latter fact must be established by circumstantial evidence only. The rule in England has been stated (4) to be that—(a) Neither the mother nor the husband is a competent witness as to the fact of their having or not having had sexual intercourse with each other, (5) nor are any declarations by them upon that subject deemed to be relevant facts when the legitimacy of the woman’s child is in question, whether the mother or her husband can be called as a witness or not; (6) provided that in applications for affiliation-orders when proof has been given (by independent evidence) of the non-access of the husband at any time when his wife’s child could have been begotten, the wife may give evidence as to the person by whom it was begotten. (6)

It has further recently been held by the House of Lords that a husband may be asked whether he had intercourse before marriage with the woman who afterwards became his wife. (7)

The grounds of the rule have been stated to be decency, morality and policy. The proviso relating to affiliation-orders is founded on necessity, since the fact to which the woman is permitted to testify is probably within her own knowledge and that of the adulterer alone. (8) It has been held in America that the rule thus established is not affected by the statutes removing disability from interest. (9) The rule excludes not only all direct questions respecting access but all questions which have a tendency to prove or disprove that fact, unless they are put with a view to some different point in the cause. (10) No such rule is, however, to be found in, or implied from, this Act: and it has accordingly been held that in this country a wife can be examined as to non-access of her husband

Evidence of Parents.

(1) Muhammad Allahdad v. Muhammad Ismail, 10 A., 399, 399 (1888); per Mahmood, J., in Field, Ev., 514, it is stated that “It may be supposed that the provisions of this section will supersede certain rather absurd rules of Muhammedan law, by which a child born six months after marriage or within two years after divorce or the death of the husband, is presumed to be his legitimate offspring. See the Hodaya, Ch. XII, and Macneaghten’s Hindu Law, Ch. VIII, § 31. “It is to be noted that according to the modern view, the period is ten months after divorce or the death of the husband. Further the determination of this point is not touched by considerations as to the rational character of the rules to be adopted, but is simply dependent on an accurate distinction between the substantive rules of Muhammedan law and the rules of evidence. (10 A., 325, supra.) If the point for decision be one of evidence only the case will be governed by this Act (ib.; Maskar Ali v. Bokh Singh, 7 A., 297; see ss. 107, 108, ante.)

(3) Stewart Rapallo’s Treatise on the Law of Witnesses, § 158; Lawson’s Presumptive Evidence, 118; Wharton, Ev., § 608.

(5) Unless the proceedings in the course of which the question arises are proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery; 32 and 33 Vic., c. 65, s. 3.

(6) Steph. Dig.; Art. 98, citing R. v. Luff, supra; Cope v. Cope, supra, 272, 274; Legge v. Bemmond, 25 L. J., Eq., 125, 125; R. v. Mansfield, L. Q. B., 444; Morris v. Davis, 3 C. & P., 215; Havers v. Draper, L. R., 27 Ch. D., 173; Aylesford Peerage case, 11 Q. B. D., I. Letters written by the mother may, as part of the res gestae, be admissible evidence to show illegitimacy though the mother could not be called as a witness to prove the statements contained in such letters. Aylesford Peerage case, supra; Burnaby v. Bottom, 42 Ch. D., 292, 290, 291; Wharton, Ev., 152.

(7) Pedlett Peerage case, L. R., A. C., 396 (1909).

(8) Taylor, Ev., §§ 900, 951: see the grounds given in the judgment cited in Wharton, Ev., § 608, note (2).

(9) Lawson, Pres. Ev., 118; Wharton, Ev., § 606.

(10) Taylor, Ev., § 900 and case there cited.
during her married life without independent evidence being first offered to prove the illegitimacy of her children. (1)

113. A notification in the Gazette of India that any portion of British territory has been ceded to any Native State, Prince or Ruler, (2) shall be conclusive proof that a valid cession of such territory took place at the date mentioned in such notification.

Principle.—See Note, post.

s. 37 (Relevancy of Notifications in Official Gazettes.) s. 57 cl. (10) (Judicial notice of British territories.)

Markby, Ev. Act, 87; Field, Ev., 514, 515; Cunningham, Ev., 298, 299; Whitley Stokes, Anglo-Indian Codes, 335.

COMMENTARY.

This section was an attempt for political reasons to exclude inquiry by Courts of Justice into the validity of the acts of the Government. But it has been decided by the Privy Council (3) that the Indian Legislature had no power to do this; and the section is therefore a dead-letter. (4) The British Crown has the power without the intervention of the Imperial Parliament to make a cession of territory within British India to a foreign prince or feudatory. (5) But the Governor-General in Council being precluded by the Act, 24 and 25 Vic., Cap. 67, section 22, from legislating directly as to the sovereignty or dominion of the Crown over any part of its territories in India, or as to the allegiance of British subjects,—could not, by any legislative Act purporting to make a notification in a Government Gazette conclusive evidence of a cession of territory, exclude inquiry as to the nature and lawfulness of that cession. (6) The Court must take judicial notice of the territories under the dominion of the British Crown. (7) See also in connection with this section, (8) the seventh clause of the third section, Bengal Regulation XIV of 1825, which enacts that, for the purposes of that Regulation (viz., the inquiry into the validity of lakhsiraj grants), the following shall be held to be the periods at which the several provinces subordinate to the Bengal Presidency were acquired by the British Government, namely, for Bengal, Behar and Orissa (excepting Cuttack), the 12th August 1765; for Benares, the 1st July 1775; for the provinces ceded by the Nawab Vizier, the 1st January 1801; for the provinces ceded by Danlat Rao Scindia and the Peshwah, the 1st January 1803; for the provinces of Cuttack, Puttaspore and its dependencies, the 14th October 1803; for the pergunnah of Khandah and the other territory ceded by Nana Govind Rao, the 1st November 1817.

(1) Rosario v. Inglis, 18 B., 468 (1803). In England independent evidence of non-access would be required in the first instance; v. ante, p. 503.

(2) See, for example, Gazette of India, 1873, Part I, p. 2.

(3) Damodar Gordhan v. Deoram Kanji, 1 B., 367 (1876); s.c., L. R., 3 I. A., 102; same case in Bombay High Court reported in 10 Bom. H. C. R., 37 (1878), in which cases the effect of this section and the power of the Indian Legislature to enact were discussed. As to the power of legislation of the Governor-General in Council, see Alter Caufman v. Government of Bombay, 18 B., 636 (1894), and cases there cited.

(6) Damodar Gordhan v. Deoram Kanji, 1 B., 367, (1876), supra.

(7) 57, cl. 10.

(8) Field, Ev., 515.
114. The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, (1) in their relation to the facts of the particular case.

Illustrations.

The Court may presume—

(a) that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession;

(b) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars;

(c) that a bill-of-exchange, accepted or endorsed, was accepted or endorsed for good consideration;

(d) that a thing or state of things which has been shown to be in existence within a period shorter than that within which such things or states of things usually cease to exist, is still in existence;

(e) that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed;

(f) that the common course of business has been followed in particular cases; (2)

(g) that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it;

(h) that, if a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled to answer by law, the answer, if given, would be unfavourable to him;

(i) that, when a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor, the obligation has been discharged.

But the Court shall also have regard to such facts as the following, in considering whether such maxims do or do not apply to the particular case before it:

as to illustration (a)—a shopkeeper has in his till a marked rupee soon after it was stolen, and cannot account for its possession specifically, but is continually receiving rupees in the course of his business:

as to illustration (b)—A, a person of the highest character, is tried for causing a man's death by an act of negligence in arranging certain machinery. B, a person of equally good character, who also took part in the arrangement, describes precisely what was done, and admits and explains the common carelessness of A and himself.

as to illustration (b)—a crime is committed by several persons. A, B and C, three of the criminals, are captured on the spot and kept apart from each other. Each gives an account of the crime implicating D, and the accounts corroborate each other in such a manner as to render previous concert highly improbable:

as to illustration (c)—A, the drawer of a bill of exchange, was a man of business. (3) B, the acceptor, was a young and ignorant person, completely under A's influence:

as to illustration (d)—it is proved that a river ran in a certain course five years ago, but it is known that there have been floods since that time which might change its course:

as to illustration (e)—a judicial act, the regularity of which is in question, was performed under exceptional circumstances:

as to illustration (f)—the question is, whether a letter was received. It is shown to have been posted, but the usual course of post was interrupted by disturbances:

as to illustration (g)—a man refuses to produce a document which would bear on a contract of small importance on which he is sued, but which might also injure the feelings and reputation of his family:

---

(1) As to the meaning of "common course of public and private business," see Ningwe v. Bharmappa, 23 B., 66 (1898).

(2) See Ningwe v. Bharmappa, 23 B., 66 (1898).

(3) "Man of business in its well-known popular sense must mean a man habitually engaged in mercantile transactions or trade," ib., at p. 66.
as to illustration (l)—a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled by law to answer, but the answer to it might cause loss to him in matters unconnected with the matter in relation to which it is asked:

as to illustration (m)—a bond is in possession of the obligor, but the circumstances of the case are such that he may have stolen it.

Principle.—See Notes, post; Introduction, ante.

s. 3 ("Court.")
s. 3 ("Fact.")
s. 4 ("May presume.")
s. 76—88, 107—113 (Other presumptions.)

Steph. Dig., Arts. 85—88, 96—101; Taylor, Ev., §§ 70—216; Greenleaf, Ev., §§ 14—48 and Index; Wharton, Ev., §§ 1226—1365; Burr Jones, Ev., §§ 8—103; Wood's Practice, Ev., §§ 53—82; Wharton, Cr. Ev., §§ 707—851; Lawson on Presumptive Evidence, passim; Best on Presumptive Evidence, passim; Wills, Circumstantial Evidence, passim; Phillips and Arnold, Ev., 467—493; Best, Ev., 275—401.

COMMENTARY.

The subject of presumptions, considered generally, will be found to have been shortly discussed, ante, at pp. 21—24. Certain particular presumptions were, by the Evidence Act Bill, and have been by the Act itself made the subject of special enactment. Objection having, however, been taken to the Evidence Act Bill on the score of its insufficient treatment of the subject of presumptions, the present general clause was inserted with a view of providing for all instances not covered by the provisions of the preceding sections. The present section coupled with the general repealing clause at the beginning of the Act makes it clear "that Courts of Justice are to use their own common sense and experience in judging of the effect of particular facts, and that they are to be subject to no technical rules whatever on the subject."(1) The illustrations given are for the most part cases of what in English law are called presumptions of law; artificial rules as to the effect of evidence by which the Court is bound to guide its decision, subject, however, to certain limitations which it is difficult either to understand or to apply, but which will be swept away by the section in question."(2) A presumption of law is an inference which derives from the law some arbitrary or artificial effect and is obligatory upon Judges and juries. The inference in such case is independent of any belief based upon what is more or less probable because the law declares the uniform effect of a certain state and condition of circumstances. The history of jurisprudence illustrates the fact that among Judges as among legislators, there is a constant struggle however ineffectual it may be to approach uniformity in the law. Although every Judge understands that each case should be determined according to its own facts, he often finds different cases so nearly analogous in the facts presented that similar instructions to the jury or directions to himself are appropriate in each. Judges thus find themselves not only applying to different cases the same substantive rules of law, but they derive aid from precedents even in reaching conclusions as to the facts of a given cause. This is well illustrated by the growth of presumptions of law. Out of the attempts of many Judges to deduce rules for determining the probative effect of certain facts or groups of facts often recurring have developed in England many rules called presumptions but which widely differ in importance and intensity. English and American Courts are, however, now inclined to abandon Note 1: When events occur in the far past it often becomes absolutely necessary for the purposes of justice and equity that presumptions should be made. Ram Chander v. Jughes Chander, 19 W. R., 363, 354 (1873).

the arbitrary rules of evidence which formerly forbade inquiry into the real facts, and but few of the numerous presumptions formerly called conclusive can now be so classified. (1) This Act is a strongly marked instance of this tendency. "The terms of this section are such as to reduce to their proper position of mere maxims which are to be applied to facts by the Courts in their discretion a large number of presumptions to which English law gives, to a greater or less extent, an artificial value. Nine of the most important of them are given by way of illustration." (2) But though artificial and technical rules find no place in this Act, the Courts being free to use their own common sense and experience in judging of the effect of particular facts, it will be of assistance in forming inferences from those facts to take notice of those principles in the nature of presumptions which have usually guided the English Courts in dealing with certain questions common both to England and to this or indeed any other country, as also to record those decisions of the Indian Courts which touch questions peculiar to this country. These presumptions will be found dealt with in alphabetical order following the notes which are given to the Illustrations of this section. Some of those which have been laid down by Indian Courts as applicable to certain circumstances peculiar to this country indicate the fact that the process abovementioned which evolved the ancient law of presumptions is still, and will always, perhaps to some extent, remain in operation.

The Illustrations to this section are examples taken from the important presumptions relating to innocence, (3) regularity (4) and continuity which are commented upon in the following notes. (5)

If possession is proved (6) the Court may presume that the man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief, or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession. (7) Possession is presumptive evidence of property, (8) but when it is proved or may be reasonably presumed that the property in question is stolen property, the burden of proof is shifted, and the possessor is bound to show that he came by it honestly; and if he fail to do so, the presumption is that he is the thief or the receiver according to the circumstances. (9) The mere fact of recent possession of stolen property is, in general, evidence of theft, not of receipt of stolen goods with guilty knowledge. The effect to be given to such possession is, however, a question not of law but of fact. (10) The property must be shown to have been stolen by the true owner swearing to its identity and loss, or the circumstances

---

(1) Burr Jones, Ev., I., §§ 8, 10.
(2) Steph. Introd., p. 133; see Field, Ev., § 110 — 153.
(3) See Illustrations (a), (b), (g), (h).
(4) See Illustrations (c), (e), (f), (i).
(5) See Illustration (d).
(6) R. v. Hari Maniram, 6 Bom. L. R., 887. § 3 (1904).
(7) B. N. 114, Ill. (a): see Taylor, Ev., §§ 127 A—127 C; In re Shik v. R., 14 C., 160 (1886); R. v. Shurufooddeen, 13 W. R., Cr., 36 (1870); Iken Chandra v. R., 21 C., 325, 336 (1883); R. v. Poromachur Aher, 23 W. R., Cr., 16 (1875); R. v. Motu Jaha, 5 W. R., Cr., 86 (1895); In re Ram-joy Kurukor, 20 W. R., Cr., 10 (1876). In R. v. Ali Husein, 23 A., 306 (1901), the Court appears to have been of opinion that the evidence was not sufficient to connect the prisoners with the possession of the stolen articles.
(8) v. ante, s. 110, and notes thereto.
(9) Roscoe, Cr., Ev., 18, 864, for a case in which the circumstances led to the second of these presumptions, see R. v. Langmead, L. & C., 427. (When the prisoner was found in the recent possession of some stolen sheep of which he could give no satisfactory account, it might reasonably be inferred from the circumstances that he did not steal them himself, it was held that there was evidence for the jury that he received them knowing them to have been stolen.) In Jahan Muchi v. R., 16 C., 311 (1888); it was held that in a case of receiving there must be some proof that some person other than the accused had possession of the property before the accused got possession of it. See R. v. Poromachur Aher, 23 W. R., Cr., 16 (1876); R. v. T. Burke, 6 A., 224 (1884). It has been thought that there should be some evidence of some other person having committed the theft; see R. v. Deskey, 6 C. & P., 399; R. v. Woolford, 1 M. & Rob., 384.
(10) Mayne's Criminal Law of India, §§ 533, 499; Taylor, Ev., § 127 B.
must be such as to lead in themselves to the conclusion that the property was not honestly come by. So persons employed in carrying sugar and other articles from ships and wharves have been convicted of theft upon evidence, that they were detected with property of the same kind upon them, recently upon coming from such places, although the identity of the property, as belonging to such and such persons could not otherwise be proved. (1) If the property be proved to have been stolen, (2) or may fairly be presumed to have been so, then the question arises, whether or not the prisoner is to be called upon to account for the possession of it. If he fails to do so, a presumption will arise, if taking into consideration the nature of the goods in question, they can be said to have been recently stolen. It has been said that to raise the presumption legitimately the possession should be exclusive as well as recent. (3) If actual possession is proved it is not incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the accused knew that the articles were in his actual possession before he can be put upon his defence to account for such possession. (4) The test of a correct presumption of guilt in a prisoner not being able to account for property in his premises is dependent on the fact whether the surrounding circumstances of the case really and properly raise such a presumption. (5) In what instances goods are to be considered recently stolen cannot be defined in any precise manner, but the undermentioned cases will show what has been held upon this subject. (6) The presumption is not confined to charges of theft, but extends to all charges, however penal. Thus in an indictment for arson proof that property which was in a house at the time it was burnt, was soon after found in the possession of the prisoner, raises a probable presumption that he was present and concerned in burning the house; and, under similar circumstances, a like inference arises in the cases of murder accompanied by robbery of house-breaking and of the possession of a quantity of counterfeit money. (7) So in cases in which murder and robbery have been shown to form parts of one transaction, the recent and unexplained possession of the stolen property, while it would be presumptive evidence against a prisoner on a charge of robbery, would similarly be evidence against him on a charge of murder. (8) The Court must in all cases consider whether under the circumstances the maxim does or does not apply to the particular case before it. (9)

The Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. (10) The grounds upon which this presumption is based, and the rules which relate to the admission of accomplice evidence will be found discussed in the notes to section 133, post.

---

(3) R. v. Malhari, 6 B., 733 (1882), citing Best, Ev. The finding of stolen property in the house of the accused, provided there were other inmates capable of committing the larceny is of itself insufficient to prove his possession; though if coupled with proof of other suspicious circumstances it may fully warrant the conviction of the accused. Taylor, Ev., § 127A, and cases there cited, and observations in R. v. Hari, 6 Bom. L. R., 887, 892 (1904).
(4) R. v. Hari, 6 Bom. L. R., 887 per Aston, J., contra per Batty, J.
(5) In re Meer Yar, 13 W. R., Cr., 70, 71 (1870).
(6) Roscoe, Cr. Ev., 19: Isma Sheikh v. R., 11 C., 160 (1885); citing and following R. v. Adams, 3 C. & P., 800; R. v. Cooper, 3 C. & R., 318; R. v. Partridge, 7 C. & P., 551. See Roscoe, Cr. Ev., loc. cit., where these another cases are cited. R. v. Poromesahur Awer, 23 W. R., Cr., 16 (1875); R. v. Burke, 6 A., 224, 227 (1884). The question what amounts to recent possession sufficient to justify the presumption in any particular case varies according as the stolen articles is or is not calculated to pass readily from hand to hand. Taylor, Ev., § 127A.
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 127C, and cases there cited.
(9) See a. 114, observations in text of this section relating to this Illustration on p. 586.
(10) B. 114, Bl. (b); but see also observations in the text of this section relating to this Illustration on p. 586.
The Court may presume that a bill of exchange, accepted or endorsed, was illustration (d).

accepted or endorsed for good consideration. As a general rule, the consideration for a contract should be the subject of averment and proof. Bills of exchange and promissory notes form an exception to this general rule. They are prima facie presumed to be founded on a valuable consideration partly to secure their negotiability, and partly because the existence of a valid consideration may reasonably be inferred from the solemnity of the instruments themselves and the deliberate mode in which they are executed. (1) This and other presumptions relating to negotiable instruments have been made the subject of special enactments in sections 118—122 of Act XXVI of 1881 (the Negotiable Instruments Act). (2) Professional money-lenders sued a young man recently come of age to recover certain loans of money alleged to have been advanced by them to him on promissory notes. The defendant, who, under the will of his father was entitled to a large property but had not yet come into possession of it, was of an extravagant and reckless character. He pleaded, as to part of the consideration for the notes, that he did not receive it, and as to a further part, that the consideration was immoral. In dealing with the case the Court laid down the following propositions, not as rules of law, but as guides in considering the evidence in such a case:—

1. That upon the above facts the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value received was so much weakened that the defendant's allegation that he had not received full consideration was sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money-lenders (the plaintiffs) the obligation of satisfying the Court that they had paid the consideration in full. That is the practical effect of Illustration (c) to section 114, of this Act.

2. Where the plaintiff, in answer to such a defence, affirmed that he had paid the consideration in full, and was corroborated by his books and witnesses, the onus of proof again shifted over upon the defendant.

3. The burden of proof thus thrown upon the defendant could only be met by a perfectly truthful and harmonious statement which the Court felt able to rely upon with confidence. In the absence of this, the ordinary presumption 'aid down in section 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) must prevail, viz., until the contrary is proved, the presumption should be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration. (3) The mere fact that the drawer and acceptor of a bill are partners, does not give rise to the presumption that they are partners in respect of the drawing of the bill. That the 18th bill was drawn by one of them on behalf of both. (4)

The Court may presume that a thing or state of things which has been shown to be in existence within a period shorter than that within which such thing or state of things usually cease to exist, is still in existence. The ordinary legal presumption is that things remain in their original state. (5) When

---

(2) See the Act, edited by M. D. Chalmers (1882), pp. 110—114.

(4) Jamba Ramasaamy v. Sundararaju Chetti, 20 M., 239 (1902), which case also deals with the question of onus in the case of damage suffered by drawer by omission to give notice of dishonour.

(5) Misuremat Jarimal-Batool v. Hoetinac Begum, 11 Moo. I. A., 194, 209 (1867); Okhoy Chawra v. Huri Nath, 8 C., 72, 79 (1881). See Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 86 [States of persons' mind or things, at a given time, may in some cases be proved by showing their previous existence in the same state, there being a probability (weakened with remoteness of time) that certain conditions and relationships continue, e.g., human life, marriage, sanity, opinions, title, partnership, official character, domicile.] Taylor, Ev., §§ 107—206; Best, P. Ev., 184—202; Burr Jones, § 53 et seq; Best Ev., §§ 406—410; Wharton, Ev., §§ 1284—1289. This rule must, of course, be clearly distinguished from that which declares that specific acts done in other cases do not raise the inference.
the existence of a personal relation or a state of things continuous in its nature is once established by proof, the law presumes that such status continues to exist as before until the contrary is proved or until a different presumption is raised from the nature of the subject in question. But the presumption is not retrospective. It cannot be permitted to operate retrospectively so as to infer the prior existence of marriage or other like relationship from proof of its present existence. It may well be that in the example given the parties contracted the relationship within a few days before the trial.(1) And though a present continuance may be a future continuance is never presumed. The law presumes that a fact continuous in its nature still continues to exist until a change is shown, and so a state of things proved to exist three years ago is presumed in law to be still existing unless the contrary be shown, but the law indulges no presumption that it will continue three years longer. It is not unreasonable to presume the continuance of an existing fact at the time of the trial, for the other party can overthrow it by proof if it be not so; but when a future continuance is presumed, the party has no ability to unfold the future and give an answer by his proof.(2) In case of conflicting presumptions, the presumption of the continuance of things is weaker than the presumption of innocence. Thus a bankrupt in 1837 makes a scheduled return of his property. It is afterwards discovered that in 1835 he owned certain property which was not included in the schedule. There is no presumption that he owned this property in 1837 for the presumption is that he did not commit a fraud.(3)

Sections 107—109, ante, deal with particular applications of the principle, of which the present illustration is the general expression. Other common instances are here shortly adverted to. Possession of property once proved to exist is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown. Thus if it be proved that at a given time B was possessed of certain land, the presumption is that such possession continues, and the burden is on him who alleges a dispossession.(4) There is a presumption of the continuance of possession with the person in whom there is title. So in a suit for the possession of jungle lands where there is no proof of facts of ownership having been exercised on either side, possession must be presumed to have continued with the person to whom rightfully belong.(5) Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. When land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes, at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would and probably did continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the previous possession continued also until the contrary is proved. Such a presumption is in no sense a conclusive one. Its bearing upon each that a similar act was done in another case: Holbingham v. Head, 4 C. B. N. S., 368, v post.

(1) Lawson, Pres. Ev., 190, 191, citing Murdoch v. State, 66 Ala., 557 (Amer.); Baroli v. Lytle, 4 La. Ann., 557 (Amer.). It cannot be presumed from the fact that a person was qualified to act as a Justice at a particular date, that he was qualified so to act at a period anterior to that date. Taylor v. Cowwell, 45 Ind., 433 (Amer.). [A made a contract in 1860. In 1864 he was insane. There is no presumption that he was insane in 1860.]

(3) Lawson, Pres. Ev., 191, citing Powell v. Knox, 16 Ala., 634 (Amer.). But see Best, Ev. Pres. Ev., 196, citing B. v. Bodd, 8 Exp., 230; Turton v. Turton, 3 Hagg N. C., 350: in which it is said that there are several instances to be found in the books where this presumption has been held stronger than that of innocence or those derived from the course of nature.

(4) Best, Pres. Ev., 186; Lawson, Pres. Ev., 163 & 164, and cases there cited; Best, Ev., 405.

(5) Loctawand v. Munemut Backeromina, 16 W. R., 102 (1871); Mitterjost Singh v. Radha Peronah, 23 W. R., 368 (1875); Ram Sundar v. Koa Bhatia, 5 C. L. R., 481 (1879); Watson & Co. v. The Government, 3 W. R., 73 (1865); Mohino Mohun v. Krishno Kishor, 9 C., 928 (1883); a. c., 12 C. L. R., 357; Pobhikar Tilari v. Bofa Baidya, 1 C. W. N., oxix (1897), and see cases cited in notes to a. 100, ante.
particular case must depend upon the circumstances of that case. (1) Constructive possession will not, however, be presumed in favour of a wrong-doer. (2) Similarly non-possession or loss, (3) debt, (4) and other conditions of property or things, (5) once proved to exist are presumed to continue until the contrary is shown. (6) So when a private arrangement by way of partition was admitted to have existed and to have been acted upon for forty years, it was held that fact raised a presumption that it was of a permanent character; throwing upon the plaintiffs who sought to disturb the existing state of things the onus of showing that had been legally determined. (7) So also domicile, residence or non-residence, (8) solvency or insolvency, (9) infancy, the holding of an office-authority to do an act (10) and other relations or conditions of persons or things (11) once shown to exist are presumed to continue until the contrary is proved. (12) Sanity or insanity once proved to exist is presumed to continue. But alter as to temporary insanity produced by drunkenness, violent disease or otherwise. (13) The character and habits of a person is presumed to continue as proved to be at a time past. So in an American case (14) it was attempted to impeach the character of P., a witness. A and B who knew P four years before when he resided at another place testify that his character was then bad. It was held that the presumption was that P's character remained the same. And though specific acts done in other cases do not raise the inference that a similar act was done in another case and evidence of them is inadmissible; (15) yet the habit of an individual being proved he is presumed to act in a particular case in accordance with that habit. (16) Thus a subscribing witness to a will or other document if unable to recollect whether he saw the testator or obligor sign the instrument or heard it acknowledged may testify to his own habit never to sign

---

(1) Mahomed Ali v. Khaja Abdul, 9 C., 744 (1883); F., s. c., 12 C. L. R., 257; cf. Rajoomar Roy v. Gobind Chunder, 19 Ind. App., 140 (1891); as to the possession of land formed by the gradual drying up of lakes or water channels, see Radha Gobind v. Inglis, 7 C. L. R., 364 (1880); Sasum Ali v. Musammut Karimoonnissa, 9 W. R., 94 (1886); Mokshy Mohun v. Krishna Kishore, C., 802 (1883); s. c., 12 C. L. R., 337. As to possession in the case of lake land and land diluvialist and then reformed by the gradual action of a river, see Gokool Kristo v. David, 23 W. R., 443 (1875); Kailly Churn v. Secretary of State, 6 C., 735 (1881); s. c., 8 C. L. R., 90; Mans Mohun v. Mathura Mohun, 7 C., 225; s. c., 8 C. L. R., 126.

(2) Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta, 29 C., 518 (1902) at pp. 534, 535.

(3) Thus where the question was as to the admissibility of secondary evidence of a document, and it was proved that two years ago diligent search was made, but it could not be found; the presumption was held to be that it was still lost, and secondary evidence was admissible: Fox v. Darrach, 20 Al., 289 (Amer.).

(4) Jackson v. Iris, 2 Camp., 48. (To prove a debt against a bankrupt an entry in his books some months before the bankruptcy showing that he was indebted to the claimant in a certain sum is proved. The presumption is that the debt still continues); Best, Pres., Ev., 187-189; Best, Ev., § 406; Taylor, Ev., § 197.

(5) Stanes v. Key, 11 A. & E., 819. [The question is whether a certain custom existed in the year 1840. The jury finds that the custom existed in 1869 without more. The presumption is that the custom exists in 1840]; and see Obby Churn v. Huri Nath, 8 C., 72 (1881), cited post. (6) Lawson, Pres., Ev., 163-172.

(7) Obby Churn v. Huri Nath, 8 C., 72, (1881).

(8) See Wharton, Ev., § 1285: as to residence, Bell v. Kennedy, L. R., 3 H. L., 307; Whicker v. Hurne, 7 H. L., 124; Wharton, Conflict of Laws, § 56; domicile: The Lauderdale Peerage, 10 App. Cal., 692. But of course in this and every other instance the inference varies with the facts of the case. So no presumption but that of mobility of residence attaches to the tramp: Wharton, Ev., loc. cit.

(9) Wharton, Ev., § 1289.

(10) See Somm v. Ibery, 10 M. & W., 1; Oyum v. Sums, 13 Q. B., 480 (agents' authority, continuance of).

(11) e.g. It is proved that F was an unmarried woman at a certain date. The presumption is that she continues so until proved to have married: Page v. Findley, 5 Tex., 591 (Amer.).

(14) Sleeper v. Van Middelworth, 4 Denio, 431 (Amer.).

(15) v. ante, pp. 37-39; 599 note (5).

as a witness without seeing the party sign whose signature he attests or hearing that signature acknowledged.\(^{(1)}\)

The main use of this presumption is to designate the party on whom lies the burden of proof. If a state of facts is established by one party, those facts in themselves not being so limited as to time as to have expired at the period of litigation, it is not necessary for that party to prove the continuance of the relation. The burden is on the opposite party to prove that that state has ceased to exist. But there is no presumption of law against the latter which when the evidence is all in, can outweigh any preponderance in such evidence in his favour.\(^{(2)}\)

Illustration (a).

This section authorises the presumption that a particular judicial or official act which has been performed has been performed regularly but it does not authorise the presumption without any evidence that the act has been performed.\(^{(3)}\) The Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed. This Illustration is a particular application to acts of a judicial or official character of the general and important presumption usually embodied in the maxim, omnia praeventur rite esse acta.\(^{(4)}\) If it be the duty of a Court to do a particular thing, it must be assumed that the Judges of that Court did their duty.\(^{(5)}\) And the same rule is made by the Illustration applicable to the official acts of all other persons who are not judicial officers.\(^{(6)}\) The meaning of this rule is that if an official act is proved to have been done it will be presumed to have been regularly done. It does not raise any presumption that an act was done of which there is no evidence and the proof of which is essential to the plaintiff’s case.\(^{(7)}\) The assumption on which all rules of law are founded is that the constituted tribunals are fairly competent to carry them out.\(^{(8)}\) In a Court of superior jurisdiction the want of jurisdiction is not to be presumed. The rule as to jurisdiction is that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior Court, but that which specially to be so; and, on the contrary, nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an inferior Court, but that which is so expressly alleged.\(^{(9)}\) When under an Act certain things are required to be done before any liability attaches to any person in respect of any right or obligation, it is for the person who alleges that that liability has been incurred to prove that the things prescribed in the Act have been actually done. No presumption should be made under this Illustration in favour of the condition precedent having been observed.\(^{(10)}\) But where a defendant in answer to a claim for arrears of tax-

---

\(^{(1)}\) Wharton, Ev., § 2187 and cases there cited. See also s. 16 ante, and cases there collected.

\(^{(2)}\) Ib., Ev., § 1284.

\(^{(4)}\) Taylor, Ev., §§ 143–150; Brooke’s Legal Maxims, 6th Ed., 806–908; v. post.

\(^{(5)}\) Bourne v. Gullif, 11 C. & F., 80; see Basnet Das v. Muhammad Masih, 9 A., 609, 702 (1887); Majeezooddeen Kaste v. Maker All, 1 W. R., 212 (1864); [oral evidence of contents of decrees]; Ahsanullah Khan v. Trelochan Bagchi, 13 C., 197, 199 (1886); Gasper v. Myton, Taylor, R., 291, 310 (1848); Arman Khan v. Bama Bhondhvler, 25 W. R., 82 (1876); Ham Latta v. Sreedham Borooa, 3 C., 771 (1877); Saroda Prasad v. Luchmejuti Sing, 10 B. L. R., 214, 230 (1872).

\(^{(6)}\) See cases cited in Taylor, Ev., §§ 143–150.

\(^{(7)}\) Narendra Lal v. Jogi Hari, 32 C., 1107 (1905); Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Mir Sarwar, 6 C. W. N., 845 (1902).

by Bombay District Municipality alleged that the taxes were illegal (a) because no notice had been given him under section 57 (Bombay Act II of 1884); (b) because no notice had been issued by the Municipality to the Commissioners under the 11th section of Bombay Act VI of 1873, it was held that he must prove the defence and in the absence of such proof the Court would presume that the Municipality had used the regular procedure, and that the common course of business had been followed in the particular cases. (1) Before the deposition of a medical witness taken by a Committing Magistrate can, under section 509 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, be given in evidence at the trial before the Court of Session, it must either appear from the Magistrate’s record, or be proved by the evidence of witnesses, to have been taken and attested by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused. The Court ought not, if it do not so appear, or if it be not so proved, presume either under section 80 or section 114, Illustration (e) of this Act, that the deposition was so taken and attested. (2) Irregularity is not to be presumed, but a party alleging such irregularity is at liberty to prove it. The date borne by a decision is not conclusive evidence of the date on which it was pronounced according to law. (3)

The Court may presume that the common course of business has been followed in particular cases. When there is a question whether a particular act was done, the existence of any course of business according to which it naturally would have been done, is a relevant fact. (4) When the common course of business has been proved, the Court may under this Illustration presume that it has been followed in the particular case. There are various prima facie presumptions which are founded upon the experience of human conduct in the ordinary course of business. (5) Several presumptions are made from the regular course of business in public offices, of which the Post office affords a large number of examples. (6) Similar presumptions are drawn from the usual course of men’s private offices and business, where the primary evidence of the fact is wanting. (7) But though this section and Illustration leave it to the Court’s discretion to presume that the course of business has been followed, it is not bound to presume it. (8) It will consider all the circumstances of the case especially if they be in any manner unusual. So, if the question is whether a letter was received, and it is shown to have been posted, the Court will, in dealing with the presumption, consider such a fact as that the usual course of the post was interrupted by disturbances. (9) The effect to be given to the word “refused” on a registered cover as proof of tender of the packet to the addressee is one of fact. Each case must be decided under this section according to its circumstances. (10)

The Court may presume that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withheld it. This Illustration deals with the presumptions which arise from withholding evidence and from the spoliation or fabrication or suppression of evidence. The subject of spoliation is dealt with further on and, as will be there seen, the fact, if established, raises most powerful presumptions. But the mere withholding

---

(1) Municipality of Sholapur v. The Sholapur Spinning Co., 20 B., 732 (1895); followed in R. v. Ram Chandra, 19 A., 493 (1897); but see Ahmedullah Khan v. Triockwan Boghi, 13 C., 197, 199 (1886), cited ante.
(2) Kashchali Hari v. R., 18 C., 129 (1890); R. v. Bading, 9 A., 720 (1887); R. v. Popoo Singh, 10 A., 174, 177, 178 (1887); v. ante, pp. 422.
(3) Gopal v. Krishna, 3 Bom., L. R., 420 (1901); Mahipat v. Latchman, 24 B., 406; s.c., 2 Bom. L. R., 229.
(4) S. 16 ante; v. pp. 103-106, ante.
(5) See Taylor, Ev., § 176-178, and cases there cited.
(7) Taylor, Ev., §§ 181, 182, and cases there cited; and see ante, pp. 105-106.
(9) See s. 114.
or failing to produce evidence, which under the circumstances would be expected to be produced and which is available gives rise to a presumption against the party, though it is less violent than that which attends spoliation. Such a presumption would, for instance, arise if the owner of a vessel were to omit without reasonable explanation to call the seaman who had charge of the light at the time of a collision. The conduct of the person withholding the evidence may be attributed to a supposed consciousness that the evidence, if produced, would operate against him. So where three important documents of the defendants were said to have been burnt, but this fact was not proved, it was held that the non-production of the documents subjected the defendants to have raised against them the presumption recognised by this Illustration. (1) "The non-production of deeds or papers after notice, has, in general, only the effect of admitting the other party to prove their contents by parol, and as against the party refusing to produce them, to raise a prima facie presumption that they have been properly stamped. (2) Nevertheless such conduct is, in the absence of excuse, calculated to produce a very prejudicial effect in the minds of the jury against the person having recourse to it; and if the production of his papers would establish the guilt or innocence of a person charged with fraud or misconduct, the jury will be amply justified in presuming him guilty from the unexplained fact of their non-production. Indeed, jurors will always do well to regard with suspicion the conduct of a party, who, having it in his power to produce cogent evidence in support of his case, offers testimony of a weaker and less satisfactory character." (3)

Presumptions are necessarily made against persons who will not subject themselves to examination when a prima facie case is made against them, and when by their own evidence they might have answered it. (4) Everything is to be presumed against a party keeping his adversary out of possession of evidence and taking means to retain that evidence in his own custody. (5) Where a plaintiff cited witnesses, and when they appeared, declined to have them examined, it was held that the inference to be drawn from this conduct was that those witnesses on examination and cross-examination would have deposed to a state of facts exactly that set up in the defendant’s answer. (6) Where a party does not produce a document in his possession, the Court may presume that its production would damage his case. (7)

---

(1) Ram Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad, 7 A., 738 (1888); and see Wusler v. Sharpe, 15 A., 370, 289, 290 (1892); Hem Chandra v. Kali Prinna, 30 C., 1033 (1903); 8 C. W. N., 1 [non-production of collection papers by tenants,] See Burr Jones, Ev., § 17, and cases there cited. The evidence of course must be available: there is no presumption if it is not within the control of the party failing to produce it; nor from the failure to call as a witness one whom the other party and the same opportunity of calling, nor one whose testimony would be simply cumulative: see, § 18.

(2) S. 89, ante; Crip v. Anderson, 1 Stark., 38; and attested s. 89, ante. Further a party refusing to produce a document cannot generally afterwards use the document as evidence: s. 164, post.

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 117.

(4) Nawab Syed v. Amanee Begum, 19 W. R., 149, 151 (1873). In this case the Privy Council observed:—"It is not unimportant to observe that the Nawab, who is a gentleman of rank, went into the witness-box on this occasion and of course offered himself for cross-examination. Their Lordships have often said that it would be very desirable if native gentlemen would do that more frequently, because presumptions are necessarily made against them, if when parties in a Court of Justice and facts are in dispute the knowledge of which must rest with them, they will not present themselves to the Court to state their own evidence and knowledge of those facts." See also Circular of Bombay High Court cited in Sabaji v. Shidappa, 26 B., 392 (1901), which case also refers to the question as to how far adverse inference can supply the place of positive proof.

(5) Sooriah Row v. Coghehery Rocobiah, 2 Moz. I. A., 113, 125 (1838), in which case observances were also made on the appellant not calling witnesses within his reach who were acquainted with the subject-matter of the suit.

(7) Raghunatha v. Hoti Lak, 1 All. L. J., 111.
It has been held that in a criminal trial there is no misdirection in a Judge pointing out to the jury the contrast between the evidence for the prosecution, and the course followed by the prisoner (namely, a simple denial of the charge coupled with a refusal to examine the witnesses in attendance) so long as the Judge leaves it to the jury to decide between the opposing statements, and to credit whichever they think most worthy of belief. (1) It has also been held that while it is the duty of the prosecutor to produce all evidence directly bearing upon the charge, and that, if without sufficient reason such evidence is not produced, the Court may draw an adverse inference to the prosecution, yet that there is no corresponding duty on an accused person who is at liberty to offer evidence or not, as he thinks proper, and no corresponding inference unfavourable to him can be drawn because he takes one course rather than another. (2)

It must be borne in mind that the rule mentioned in this Illustration (like most of the other rules of evidence contained in this Act) applies equally to criminal and to civil cases, nor does the case-law in reality tend to any other conclusion. The effect of this section and of the preceding cases (cited in the last note) which must be considered with reference to their own particular circumstances, may be summarized and explained as follows:—It lies upon the prosecution affirmatively and with reasonable certainty to establish their case. One of the duties of the prosecution in this regard is the production of all available evidence bearing upon the charge. If the prosecution fail to completely establish a case against the accused, the latter may, without further action on his part, rely upon such failure to procure his acquittal. (3) If the prosecution does not discharge its duty of producing all its available evidence it is no answer to say that the accused who has no such duty cast upon him might have produced that evidence. (4) No inference unfavourable to the accused can be drawn in such a case against him. When, however, the prosecution has called all its available evidence, and has made out a complete case against the accused, and that case discloses that there is evidence which could be produced by the accused for the purpose of negating the charge against him, then under the provisions of this section, if such evidence be not produced, the Court may presume that it would, if produced, be unfavourable to the accused who withholds it. It is in fact only under these circumstances, that the presumption properly commences to operate. The law upon this point has been well expressed by Shaw, C. J., in the Commonwealth v. Webster, (5) in which case he said:—“Where probable proof is brought of a state of facts tending to criminate the accused the absence of evidence tending to a contrary conclusion is to be considered though not alone entitled to much weight; because the burden of proof lies on the accuser to make out the whole case by substantive evidence. But when pretty stringent proof of circumstances is produced, tending to support the charge, and it is apparent that the accused is so situated that he could offer evidence of all the facts and circumstances as they existed and show, if such was the truth that the suspicious circumstances can be accounted for consistently with his innocence, and he fails to offer such proof, the natural conclusion is that the proof, if produced, instead of rebutting would tend to sustain the charge. But this is to be cautiously applied, and only in cases where it is manifest that proofs are in the power of the accused, not accessible to the prosecution.’’

If, moreover, an accused or other person, not merely abstains from giving evidence but commits spoliation, that is, suppresses or destroys evidence which he ought to produce, or to which the other party is entitled, the strongest presumption will be drawn against him. So strong is the presumption in such a case that the ordinary presumption of innocence may be overthrown and a presumption of guilt raised, the general rule being “Omnia praesumunt contra spoliatorem,” whose conduct is attributed to a supposed consciousness that the truth would operate against him.(2) Where a person is proved to have suppressed any species of evidence, or to have defaced or destroyed any written instrument, a presumption will arise that, if the truth had appeared, it would have been against his interest, and that his conduct is attributable to his knowledge of this circumstance.(3) So applying the maxim “Omnia prae summunt contra spoli atorem,” the High Court held that, where a vessel was seized on suspicion of having a greater quantity of salt on board than was allowed by its permit, and immediately afterwards a number of men boarded the boat, and, with the assistance of the agent of the owner, threw a considerable quantity of salt overboard, a presumption arose that there was an excess of salt on board at the time of the seizure beyond the amount allowed by the permit.(4) And in a suit brought against a Collector to compel him to refrain from preventing the plaintiff executing his decree against certain land the only issue being, whether the land was the private property of the judgment-debtors, or Government service-land, the plaintiff alleged that the land had been granted in free inam by a sanad, which he petitioned the Mamladar of the pargana to search for and send to the Collector; and, on a reference by the High Court, the District Judge found that “the Collector did destroy the document that purported to be a copy of a sanad such as the plaintiff petitioned the Mamladar to search for” —It was held that it was not competent under such circumstances for the defendant to say that the document was not such a one as could legally be admitted in evidence; and that the case came within the rule omnia prae summunt contra spoli atorem.(5) In a suit to recover the value of plundered property, where a question arose as to the amount of the property misappropriated, it was ruled that, unless the defendant produced the property and showed it not to be of the value stated by plaintiff, the strongest presumption should be made against him and the highest value assumed.(6) The maxim, however, only applies where a man by his own tortuous act withholds the evidence by which the nature of his case

(1) See to the same effect, Will’s Circumstantial Ev., a. 5, p. 65: [Unexplained appearances of suspicion] where it is said “the force of suspicious circumstances is augmented, whenever the party attempts no explanation of facts which he may reasonably be presumed to be able and interested to explain:” and see Best, Ev., § 346.

(2) Will’s Circumstantial Ev., a. 7, p. 82; Lawson, Pres. Ev., 140; Taylor, Ev., § 116; the rule is evidently based on the principle that no one shall be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, see note at p. 123, 3 Bom. H. C. R., A. C. J. (1866). “IF,” says Lord Holt, “a man destroys a thing that is designed to be evidence against himself, a small matter will supply it.” Anon., J. R. Reyn., 731.

(6) Boudour Monos v. Bhooobun Mahen, 11 W. R., 536 (1889); see Armory v. Delamere, 1 Smith, L. C., 388.
would be manifested. But in an action for goods sold against a defendant who has been guilty of no fraud or improper conduct, in the absence of evidence of the quality of the goods which were delivered, the presumption is that such goods were of the cheapest description.

Where a party objected to the admissibility of a document which was afterwards withdrawn, and the Judge, in summing up to the jury, said that the document was in Court, and might have been produced but for the party’s objection, and that the jury were at liberty to draw an inference from such objection and non-production, it was held that there was no misdirection.

The presumption arising from the non-production of evidence within the power of the party does not relieve the opposite party altogether from the burden of proving his case; and though the fact of spoliation standing alone may defeat, it cannot of itself sustain, a claim. Lastly, the presumption is to be made after regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct, and public and private business in their relation to the facts of the particular case.

The Court may presume that if a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled to answer by law, the answer if given, would be unfavourable to him. So while the Criminal Procedure Code gives power to the Court to examine the accused, and the latter does not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer or by giving false answers, yet the jury (if any) may draw such inference from such refusal or answers as it thinks just. So also in the case of the subject-matter of section 148, post, the Court may, if it sees fit, draw from the witness’s refusal to answer, the inference that the answer if given would be unfavourable.

The Court may presume that when a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor, the obligation has been discharged. As men are usually vigilant in guarding their property, prompt in asserting their rights, and diligent in claiming and collecting their dues, there is a prima facie presumption that when a bill of exchange, or an order for the payment of money, or the delivery of goods is found in the hands of the drawee, or a promissory note is found

---

Illustration (1).

(2) Chances v. Pessey, 1 Camp., s.
(3) Sutton v. Devonsport, 27 L. J. C. P., 54. The case is like the ordinary one where there is a witness in Court who could give an account of something which would affect the case of one party and who is not called and in such case the jury may assume that his evidence would not have been favourable to that party, J., per Crowder, J. (see Taylor, Ev., § 117). Sed qu, as to the correctness of this decision; for a person should not suffer by taking objection on which he has a right to succeed. Though it is to be observed that in this case there appears to have been no adjudication upon the question of the admissibility of the document, which on objection was withdrawn, still this makes no difference. For there is as much, or as little, reason for drawing an inference against the party objecting to the admissibility of the document as against the party withdrawing the document on such objection.

(4) Lawson, Ev., 137.
(5) R., 158; Cooper v. Cooper, 2 P. Wms., 748; Selburn v. Milburn, Amb., 248.

Illustration (2).

(6) Vinayak v. Collector of Bombay, 26 B., 339 (1901); where it was held that the facts of the case called for no such presumption.
(7) Secs. 121—129, post. A witness is not excused from answering on the ground that the answer will criminate sec. 132, post; as to criminating documents, see sec. 130, post. Persons are not compelled to answer interrogations regarding certain matters under the provisions of sec. 19 of Reg. VII of 1822. See Field, Ev., 607. But see Lawson, Proc. Ev., 120, 137, where the rule is stated to be that "the omission of a party to an action to testify to facts or to produce evidence in explanation of or to contradict adverse testimony, raises a presumption against his claims, unless the evidence is not peculiarly within his power, or is privileged." Westworth v. Lloyd, 10 H. L. Cas., 589.
(8) Cr Pr Code, s. 342; v. also ib., ss. 161, 175; cf. also ss. 9—12 of the Oaths Act (X of 1873) in the Appendix.
(9) See for an application of this rule: Abdul Karim v. Manji Hansraj, 1 B., 236 (1870); Sheerman v. Fleming, 5 B. L. R., 619 (1870), and cases cited, post.
in the possession of the maker, (1) that such note has been duly paid, or that the goods ordered have been delivered. Similarly a receipt for the last year's or quarter's rent is evidence of all the rent previously accrued having been paid. (2) The plaintiff in a suit on a bond for money, with a view to anticipate the possible production of the bond by the defendant and the presumption of payment that might otherwise be drawn from its being in the possession of the obligor accounted for not producing it by alleging that the defendant had stolen it. The defendant admitted the execution of the bond, but alleged that he had paid it. Held that the defendant was bound to begin and prove payment either by the production of the bond or other evidence or by both. (3) A plaintiff sued for confirmation of possession and registration of certain property which had been mortgaged to him by defendants. The transaction on the face of the deed was an absolute sale; but an ekrar was executed at the same time as the mortgage, which reserved the equity of redemption to the mortgagor. This ekrar was made over to the defendant, the mortgagor. Plaintiff's allegation was that the ekrarnamah was returned to him by the mortgagor who thus surrendered the equity of redemption. Defendant alleged that the ekrar had been lost, and had somehow found its way to the plaintiff. Held that the presumption of law was in favour of the plaintiff who had possession of the ekrar and that the onus of proving its loss lay upon the defendant. (4) On the other hand, there is a presumption that a grant remains in force from the fact that the original documents evidencing the grant remain in the hands of the grantees. (5) Though the presumption is a strong one it may of course be that the circumstances of the case rebut it. (6)

It is a very general presumption that things once proved to have existed in a particular state are to be understood as continuing in that state until the contrary is established by evidence either direct or circumstantial. (7) Thus where possession, the authority of an agent, the holding of an office, adultery, insanity, a debt or obligation, or the like have been shown, their continuance will be presumed. (8) The subject has been already dealt with in the notes to Illustration (d) to which the reader is referred. Common applications of this presumption are the rules touching the continuance of life enacted in sections 107 and 108, ante, and of certain judicial relations such as partnership, tenancy and agency enacted in section 109, ante. Connected with the subject of continuance of life is the question of the presumption of survivorship in common disaster. Allusion is here made to those cases where several persons generally of the same family have perished by a common calamity, such as shipwreck, earthquake, conflagration, railway accident, or battle, and where the priority in point of time of the death of one over the rest exercises an influence on the rights of third parties. The civil law recognised certain arbitrary rules or presumptions for determining the relative times of death of two or more persons who perished in the same catastrophe. These rules were based on the age, sex, or state of health of the parties. So a child under the age of puberty was presumed to have died before its parent, but if above that age the rule was reversed. These fixed presumptions, however, never prevailed in the common law, and the Courts rejecting this conjectural mode of ascertaining the truth have laid down the rule that the case must be determined upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances whenever the evidence is sufficient to support a finding of survivorship, but in the absence

---

(1) See Bhog Hongbong v. Ramana Chetty, 29 C., 334 (1902).
(2) Taylor, Ev., § 78 and cases there cited.
(3) Chuni Kuar v. Udai Ram, 6 A., 73 (1883).
(4) Ram Coomar v. Ram Sahay, 11 W. R., 151 (1898).
(6) Bhog Hongbong v. Ramana Chetty, 29 C., 334 (1902); a. c., L. R., 29 I. A., 43, 4 Bom. L. R., 378.
(7) Best, Ev., § 405; Taylor, Ev., §§ 196-203.
(8) Ib., see Dip Singh v. Girind Singh, 1 All., L. J. (1903); where a mortgage having been admitted by the defendants the case was held to lie on them to show that it had ceased to exist.
of any such evidence the question of such survivorship is regarded as unascertained, and in such cases, the question is determined as if the death of all occurred at the same moment. In other words, the fact of survivorship like every other fact must be proved by the party ascertaining it. (1)

Although this rule as to the presumption of continuance of the existing state of things has been long sanctioned, it is stated in very general terms and must have a reasonable interpretation. It is always disputable, and while sometimes entitled to considerable weight it is frequently liable to be rebutted by very slight circumstances. The rule has been held to apply to some cases where obviously after a limited time the presumption could have little weight. Perhaps the chief value of the presumption is to determine, in the cases to which it applies, on whom shall rest the burden of proof: (2) and this view of the function of the presumption has been taken by the framers of this Act in sections 107—109, ante.

If Hindu families migrate from one part of the country to another the presumption is that they carry with them the laws and customs as to succession prevailing in the province from which they came. (3)

The acquirer of property presumably intends to retain dominion over it, and in the case of a Hindu widow the presumption is none the less so when the fund with which the property is acquired is one which, though derived from her husband’s property, was at her absolute disposal. Inasmuch as the widow’s absolute power of disposition over the income derived from the widow’s estate, is now fully recognised, she will be presumed, in the absence of an indication of her intention to the contrary, to retain the same control over the investment of such income.” (4)

In addition to the following notes reference should be made to those at pp. 541—551, ante. It is a doctrine of Hindu law in the case of adoption that “permission is to be presumed in the absence of prohibition.” This maxim, however, relates to the person who gives and not to the person who receives a child in adoption. (5) Adoption being a proper act it will be presumed that when the majority give their consent such assent was given on bonâ fide grounds. (6) After a long lapse of time and when there is satisfactory evidence of the recognition of an adoption for a series of years, the presumption is that everything necessary to render the adoption valid has been performed. So in a case to set aside an adoption on the ground that the ceremonies had not been performed, where there was satisfactory evidence showing that the adoption had been continuously recognised for a series of years, and that the party adopted had been in possession, either in person or through his guardian of the property in dispute, held that the Court might well dispense with formal proof of the performance of the ceremonies, unless it were distinctly proved, on the part of the plaintiff, that the ceremonies had not been performed. (7) A Hindu testator by his will gave authority to his widow, with the consent of his mother, to adopt a son, in pursuance of which a son was adopted, and the other provisions of the will acquiesced in by the family for twenty-seven years, when a suit was brought by one of the testator’s heirs claiming the estate then in possession of the adopted.

(1) v. ante, pp. 58, 59; Best, Ev., 410; Taylor, Ev., §§ 202, 203; Underwood v. Wing, 19 Beav., 459; 4 DeG. M. & C., 633; Wing v. Angraves, 8 H. L. Cas., 183. The strength and health, etc., of a party may be properly considered as a circumstance (see pp. 58, 59, ante), but standing alone it is sufficient to shift the burden of proof. Wharton Ev., §§ 1280—1282.

(2) Burr Jones, Ev., § 62; see Wharton, Ev., §§ 1284—1296 (on presumptions of constancy and uniformity) and ib., §§ 1274—1283.

(7) Sahoo Beza v. Nabagun Maitis, 2 B. L. R., App., 51 (1869); and see Nithyanand Ghose v. Krishna Dyal, 7 B. L. R., 1, 5 (1871).
son, on the ground that the adoption was invalid. Held that, although the defendant was bound to prove his title as adopted son, as a fact, yet from the long period during which he had been received as adopted son, every allowance for the absence of evidence to prove such fact was to be favourably entertained, and that the case was analogous to that in which the legitimacy of a person in possession had been acquiesced in for considerable time, and afterwards impeached by a party, who had a right to question the legitimacy, where the defendant, in order to defend his status, is allowed to invoke against the claimant every presumption which arises from long recognition of his legitimacy by members of his family; and that the case of a Hindu, long recognised as an adopted son, raised even a stronger presumption in favour of the validity of his adoption, arising from the possibility of the loss of his rights in his own family by being adopted in another family. (1) Where an adoption has been acquiesced in for many years, the consent of some person competent to give away the adopted son should be presumed. (2) In a suit for a declaration that an adoption long acted upon is fraudulent the onus is on the plaintiff to establish the fraud which he alleges. (3) It is incumbent upon one seeking to dispute an adoption on the ground that the person making it was a "disqualified proprietor," to show that all the procedure necessary to make such person a disqualified proprietor was carried out according to law. (4) As to estoppel by adoption, see notes to section 115, post; and generally see sections 101—104, ante. As to Marriage v. post, "Marriage:" notes to section 112, ante: and Index, sub voc., "Marriage."

The principle of joint tenancy appears to be unknown to Hindu law except in the case of coparcenary between the members of an undivided family. Among Hindus when property is given to two persons jointly, there is no presumption that the donor intended to annex the condition of ownership. (5)

Hindu Law: Gift.

As to the presumption of English law that a gift made under certain circumstances is a donatio mortis causa being inapplicable to Hindus, see the case undermentioned. (6)

Hindu Law: Endowment.

In the case of endowments made by Hindus for the worship of idols, it is presumed that the intention of the donor is to preserve the sheba in the family rather than to confer a benefit on an individual, but in the absence of words in the deed of gifts denoting an intention that the gift should belong to the family, that presumption will not arise. (7) Where certain Hindu texts were referred to show that a Bairagi is condemned to a life of perpetual poverty, and is incapable of acquiring property for his own use and benefit; it was held that such precepts could not be looked on as anything more than counsels of perfection, and could not be held to carry much weight in the absence of clear and satisfactory proof that, as a matter of fact, the mohunt in question had no private funds at his disposal. (8)

Hindu Law: Family custom.

Hindu law is in the nature of personal usage or custom, and where an ancient family custom is shown to have existed among Hindus, the presumption is in favour of the continuance of that custom, even though the family have migrated. (9) In the case of a family the members of which have migrated from a part of the country governed by the Mitakshara law, the presumption is that they are governed by the Mistakshara law until proof is given of their having adopted the law of their new domicile. (1) This presumption may be rebutted by showing that, except as regards marriage, all ceremonies in the family are performed according to the law of the Bengal school and by Bengal priests. (2)

(4) Ichri Prasad v. Laiji Jas, 22 A., 294 (1900).

When a Hindu family is joint in food and worship, and is shewn to be possessed of some joint property, (3) the presumption is that all the property they are possessed of is joint property, and that all acquisitions have been made from joint funds, and the onus of proving that any portion of that property is separate or self-acquired is on the person who alleges it. (4)

This presumption of joint property arising out of a nucleus of joint property cannot be sufficiently rebutted by evidence that the name of one member of the family only appeared as that of sole owner in revenue-records or in other documents relating to the property. (5) Nor is evidence only of separation in mess sufficient to rebut the presumption, (6) although separation in both dwelling and food if not conclusive evidence of separation in estate, will give rise in Hindu law to a presumption of separation in estate. (7) Where the members of a Mahomedan family live in commensality they do not form a joint family in the sense that Hindus do, and there is therefore no presumption at all in Mahomedan law that the acquisitions of the several members are made for the use of the family jointly. (8) In the case of further acquisitions, it would not be sufficient to show that the consideration-money passed out of the hands of the member claiming the purchased property as self-acquired without its being shown that the funds were exclusively his own. (9) The fact that certain parcels are held in severalty does not do away with the presumption that the rest of the estate is joint; (10) but evidence by a purchaser at an execution-sale under a decree passed against one member of a joint family to the effect that there had been separate trading beyond separate funds and property belonging to the several members of the family, was held to disclose a state of things sufficient to weaken, if not altogether to rebut, the ordinary presumption of Hindu law as to property in the name of one member of a joint family and throw on those alleging it the onus of establishing the joint nature of the property claimed. (1) In the undermentioned case the family of the deceased consisting of his father and two sons (of whom one was the deceased father of the plaintiff) was not shown to have had any ancestral property, but it had acquired property by trade in which the father and the two sons were jointly engaged. There being no indication of an intention to the contrary, it was held that it must be presumed that the property thus acquired was held by the members of the family as joint property with the incident of the right of survivorship. (2) Lastly, the presumption of union has been held to be stronger as between brothers than as between cousins, and the presumption is weaker the farther from the common ancestor the descent has proceeded. (3) There is no presumption when one coparcener separates from the others that the latter remain united. (4) As to the presumption that a father dealing with self-acquired property intended that it should be taken as ancestral estate, see below. (5) See Notes to ss. 101—104 sub. voc., "Hindu Law."

---

Hindu Law: Manager.

There is no presumption that a loan contracted by the manager of a joint Hindu family has been contracted for a family purpose. (6)

Hindu Law: Suit by Reversioner.

It is incumbent on a plaintiff suing as the reversionary heir of a Hindu proprietor who has died leaving a widow, to show that the property claimed in the suit and found in her possession, has vested in the husband. There is no presumption of law arising where the late husband possessed considerable property, that property found to be in the possession of the widow after his death, must have been included in that which belonged to him unless she shows that she obtained the property from another source. (7)

There is a general presumption against misconduct of all kinds, no presumption being perhaps more highly favoured in the law than that of innocence. Although some of the reasons which led to the adoption of this presumption have disappeared with the severity of the old criminal law, yet the sacredness of reputation and liberty still gives sanction to the rule that the law presumes in favour of innocence. Every man is to be regarded as legally innocent until the contrary be proved, and criminality is never to be presumed. (8) In the inferior Courts of this country the right principle is occasionally reversed, and a person is presumed to be guilty the moment he is accused, and every attempt on his part to prove his innocence is regarded as vexatious. (9) When the facts found proved in a case are perfectly consistent either with the innocence or guilt of the accused, the presumption of innocence should prevail. (10) The favour with which this presumption is regarded is shown by (amongst other facts) that other presumptions often have to yield to that of innocence, (11) and by the fact that, although ordinarily the burden of proof is on the party

---

(1) Both Singh v. Gunesh Chunder, 12 H. L. B. (P. C.), 317, 326, 327 (1873).
(2) Gopalasami Chetti v. Arunachalam 27 M., 32 (1903).
(4) Balabuz v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725 (1903).
(8) v. ante, pp. 17-20 and cases there cited; Burr Jones, Ev., § 111; Taylor, Ev., §§ 112-118; Best, Ev., §§ 334, 346; 1 Greenleaf, § 35; Lawson, Pros. Ev., 433 et seq.; Wharton, Ev., § 1244; Starkie, Ev., 765.
(9) Shekaram Singh v. Rawina, 28 C., 384 (1901).
(10) R. v. Ramachandra Bhondoo, 6 Bom. L. R., 551 (1904).
(11) Taylor, Ev., ¶ 114; Burr Jones, Ev., ¶ 1100, 102; Best, Ev., §§ 329, 334, 346. The presumption of innocence is stronger than the presumption of payment, continuance of life, or of things generally, and of marriage: but it is less strong than the presumption of knowledge of the law or of sanity: Lawson, Pros. Ev., 583.
asserting the affirmative of the issue, yet if proof of a negative is necessary to establish guilt, such proof must be given.\(1\)

This presumption has its most frequent applications in the criminal law; but though it has sometimes been said to have no place in civil issues except so far as it regulates the burden of proof,\(2\) yet the weight of authority in England when misconduct or crime is alleged, whether in a criminal or in a civil proceeding, whether in a direct proceeding to punish the offender or in some collateral matter, the accused is presumed to be innocent until strictly proved to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.\(3\) The presumption of innocence in civil cases has been stated to be that "a person who is shown to have done any act is presumed to have done it innocently and honestly and not fraudulently, illegally, or wickedly."\(4\) The presumption of innocence may be overthrown and a presumption of guilt be raised by the misconduct of the party in suppressing or destroying evidence.\(5\)

The presumption is of constant application in civil actions when fraud is in issue. There is a presumption against fraud in the sense that fraud will not be assumed without evidence, good faith in all transactions being presumed. In the ordinary transactions of life fairness and honesty are presumed, and conveyances, sales and contracts generally are presumed to have been made in good faith until the contrary appears. Odiosae honesta non sunt in lege presumenda.\(6\) So also the law presumed against vice and immorality, and on this ground presumes strongly in favour of marriage, so that cohabitation and reputation are generally held to be presumptive evidence of marriage.\(7\) One of the strongest illustrations of this principle (although resting also in some degree on grounds of public policy) is the presumption in favour of the legitimacy of children.\(8\)

It is a branch of this rule that ambiguous instruments or act shall, if possible, be construed so as to have a lawful meaning. Thus where a deed or other instrument is susceptible of two constructions, one of which the law would carry into effect, while the other would be in contravention of some legal principle or statutory provision, the parties will always be presumed to have intended the former.\(9\) There is a legal presumption in favour of a deed that it is honest and is what it purports to be.\(10\) Wrongful or tortious conduct will not be presumed.\(11\) All persons are presumed to have duly discharged any obligation

\(\text{(1) Williams v. East India Co., 3 East., 192; Taylor, Ev., § 113.}
\(\text{(2) Wharton, Ev., § 1245. It has been said that this presumption has no evidentiary force, being founded on no presumption of fact; being in most instances a paraphrase for the rules regulating the burden of proof; and that what is meant is this: if a man be accused of crime he must be proved guilty beyond reasonable doubt. Best, Ev., Amer.}
\(\text{Notes, pp. 309, 310, 386. The weight of American authority appears to support the proposition that in civil actions, although the charge of a crime is to be established, a preponderance of testimony is sufficient: Burr Jones, Ev., §§ 15, 193.}
\(\text{(3) Steph. Dig., Art. 94; Taylor, Ev., § 112; Best, Ev., § 346; Magee v. Atlow, 16 M., 245. ["He is clearly well founded in saying that so far as appallants impute to respondents' misconduct or dereliction of duty, it is for the former to establish their case. The presumption is against such misconduct or violation of duty until it is proved by the party who makes the imputation." ] Per Muttussami Ayyar, J.} \(\text{(4) Lawson, Pres. Ev., Rule 19, p. 93.} \(\text{(5) v. ante, p. 600.}
\(\text{(6) Best, Ev., § 349; see ante, notes to ss. 101, 104, p. 541 and note to s. 111, ante, Kerr, Frauds, 2nd Ed., 448; Lawson, Pres. Ev., 93; Sothappa v. Devachan, 26 B., 132 (1901). ["There is no more reason to presume fraud than to presume negligence." ]} \(\text{(7) Best, Ev., § 349; Lawson, Pres. Ev., 104; exceptional cases are criminal and divorce proceedings; v. ante, s. 50, p. 320 and see "Marriage," p. 617 post; for the presumption as to dissolution, see Burr. Jones, Ev., § 13.}
\(\text{(8) Best, Ev., 349; see s. 112, ante, and cases there cited; Lawson, Pres. Ev., 106, 108.}
\(\text{(9) Best, Ev., § 347.}
\(\text{(10) Srimati Lakshimani v. Mohendaranath Dutta, 4 B. L. R., P. C., 16, 27 (1869).}
\(\text{(11) Best, Ev., § 350.}
imposed on them by law. Thus the judgments of court of competent jurisdiction are presumed to be well founded, and their records to be correctly made; judges and jurors are presumed to do nothing causelessly or maliciously; public officers are presumed to do their duty, and the like. (1) Further, all testimony given in a Court of Justice is presumed to be true until the contrary appears, perjury not being presumed. (2) When a person is required to do an act, the omission to do which would be criminal, his performance of that act will be intended until the contrary is shown. (3)

On the same principle rests the rule that negligence is not to be presumed; it is rather to be presumed that ordinary care has been used. And the person charging negligence must show that the other party by his act or omission has violated some duty incumbent upon him and thereby caused the injury complained of. (4) The rule does not apply in the case of common carriers, who, on grounds of public policy, are presumed to have been negligent, if goods entrusted to their care have been lost or damaged. (5) Railway Companies are not common carriers of passengers. Where such a company is sued for not carrying safely, negligence alleged against them must be proved affirmatively when denied. (6)

Where a thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his agent, and where an accident in the ordinary course of events does not happen when the business is properly conducted, the accident itself, if it happens, raises a presumption of negligence in the absence of any explanation. In such cases the facts are said to speak for themselves. Res ipso loquitur. (7) When goods which have been entrusted to bailees for hire are lost, it lies on the bailees to show that they have taken as much care of the goods as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, have taken of his own goods of a similar kind and that the loss occurred notwithstanding such care. If they fail to satisfy the Court on that point, they are liable for the loss. (8) Where goods are delivered to a Railway Company for carriage not at owner’s risk, and such goods are lost or destroyed while in the custody of the Company, it is not for the owner suing for compensation for such loss or destruction to prove negligence on the part of the Company, but when the owner has proved delivery to the Company, it is for the latter to prove that they have exercised the care required by the Contract Act of bailees for hire. (9)

A primâ facie case does not take away from a defendant the presumption of innocence, though it may, in the opinion of the jury, be such as to rebut and control it; but that presumption remains, in aid of any other proofs offered by the defendant, to rebut the prosecutor’s primâ facie case. (10) It is clear that a presumption may be rebutted by a contrary and stronger presumption. (11)

(1) Bent, Ev., § 300, until the contrary appears every person will be presumed to have conformed to the laws: R. v. Hawkins, 10 East., 211.
(2) Ib., § 382.
(3) Starkie, Ev., 769.
(4) Lawson, Pres. Ev., 102, 103; Burr Jones, Ev., § 14.
(5) Rose v. Hill, 2 C. B., 890; Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym., 818; Chownwll Doogur v. River Steam N. Co., 24 C., 788 (1897); 26 C., 398 (1898); s. c. 3 C. W. N., 145.
(6) East Indian Railway Co. v. Kalidas Mukerji, 28 C., 401 (1901) reversing decision of Lower Court reported in 26 C., 465 (1898); 3 C. W. N., 781; 2 C. W. N., 609. A passenger may lawfully attempt to get rid of inconvenience or danger caused by negligence, provided that in so doing he runs no obvious disproportionate risk and is not himself guilty of negligence. Bromley v. G. I. P. Railway Co., 24 B., 1 (1899).
Where there are conflicting presumptions the rule has been stated to be (1) that the presumption of innocence will prevail against that of the continuance of life, (2) the presumption of the continuance of things generally; (3) and the presumption of marriage.(4) But it is otherwise as to the presumption of knowledge of the law(5) and the presumption of sanctity.(6)

Possession, knowledge or motive may overthrow the presumption of innocence and raise in its place a presumption of guilt,(7) as also may conduct of spoliation.(8) As to criminal intention, v. post, "Intention." A person on trial for one crime cannot be presumed guilty because he has, at another time, committed a similar or different crime, and the latter fact is not admissible in evidence against him.(9)

But to prove knowledge or intent or motive, a collateral crime may be shown(10) and a separate crime from that charged may be shown where it is necessary to prove that the crime charged was not accidental.(11) And so in the case of embezzlement effected by means of false entries; a single false entry might be accidentally made, but the probability of accident would diminish at least as fast as the instances increased.(12)

A separate crime from that charged may also be proved where it forms part of the res gestae.(13) It frequently happens that, as the evidence of circumstances

(1) Lawson, Psy. Ev., 447.
(2) E. v. Inhabitants of Gloucestershire, 2 Barn. & Ald., 380; [it was there held that the law presumes the continuance of life, but it also presumes against the commission of crimes; that the cases cited were distinguishable as they decided only that seven years after a person has been last heard of, his death was to be presumed, but that they did not show that where conflicting presumptions exist, death may not be presumed at an earlier period.] See, however, R. v. Inhabitants of Harborne, 2 Ad. & Elia., 640; Lapeley v. Grieron, 1 H. L. Cas., 500; Starkie, Ev., 755.
(3) Klein v. Landma, 29 Mo., 259 (Amer.) [A and B, as husband and wife, sued C for slander: they proved their marriage, but C proved depositions of the wife that she had been married in Germany to another man. It was presumed that the previous marriage had been dissolved by death or divorce.] It was here said: "The presumption of law is that the conduct of parties is in conformity to law until the contrary is shown. That a fact continuous in its nature will be presumed to continue after its existence is once shown is a presumption which ought not to be allowed to overthrow another presumption, of equal, if not greater, force, in favour of innocence." (4) Clayton v. Warde, 4 N. Y., 230 (Amer.); Case v. Case, 17 Cal., 598: (Amer.) A presumption of marriage arises from cohabitation. M and Y were proved to have lived together and cohabited. Y afterwards married S. The presumption that Y did not commit bigamy prevails over the presumption that M and Y were married.
(5) Ignorance of the law according to the well-known maxim excuses no one and cannot be pleaded as an excuse for the commission of a crime. See cases cited in Lawson, Psy. Ev., 458–457.

(6) Thus if A is charged with a crime, the presumption is that A was sane when he committed it, and if he wishes to be excused on the ground of non-responsibility, he must prove insanity. Lawson, Psy. Ev., 457–459. See n. 105, ante.
(7) Lawson, Psy. Ev., 478; as to possession of stolen goods, see n. 114, III. (a); and as to motive, Starkie, Ev., 50, 51, and notes to ss. 8, 14, ante.
(8) v. ante, p. 607
(9) v. ante, p. 37, and notes to ss. 14 and 15, ante: R. v. Cole, 1 Phil. Ev., 508; Lawson, Psy. Ev., 481–486, Steph. Dig., 162–164, where this rule is stated to be one of the most characteristic and distinctive features of the English criminal law. Up to, however, the beginning of the 18th century there are to be found numerous instances of the admission of evidence of this kind, see 6 How. St. Tr., 935.
(12) State v. Lapage, 57 N. H., 245 (Amer.)
(13) S. 65, ante, and cases there cited; Lawson, Psy. Ev., 490–492; and see R. v. Taylor, 6 Cox, C. C., 138. [A is indicted for arson in setting fire to a rick, the property of E. Evidence of A's presence and conduct at fires of other ricks on the same night the property of C and B is admissible.]
must be resorted to for the purpose of proving the commission of the particular offence charged, the proof of those circumstances involves the proof of other acts either criminal or apparently innocent. In such cases it is proper that the chain of evidence should be unbroken. If one or more links of that chain consist of circumstances which tend to prove that the prisoner has been guilty of other crimes than that charged, this is no reason why the Court should exclude those circumstances. They are so intimately connected and blended with the main facts adduced in evidence that they cannot be departed from with propriety, and there is no reason why the criminality of such intimate and connected circumstances should exclude them more than other facts apparently innocent. (1)

As there is a general presumption in favour of innocence, so where certain facts are proved there may arise presumptions in disfavour of innocence. (2)

The rule as laid down in section 112, which is a rule of substantive law rather than of evidence, has no application to Mahomedans so far as it conflicts with the Mahomedan rule that a child born within less than six months after the marriage of its parents is not legitimate. (3) But Mahomedan law raises a strong presumption in favour of legitimacy. In a case where a child was born to a father, of a woman who had resided during a period of seven years in his female apartments anterior to the birth of the child taking place, and while so residing was recognised to a certain extent as his wife, and the child was born under his roof and continued to be maintained in his house without any steps being taken on the father’s part to repudiate his title to legitimacy as his offspring: it was held that that was presumptive evidence of marriage and legitimacy according to Mahomedan law. (4) Cohabitation and birth with treatment tantamount to acknowledgment is sufficient to prove legitimacy, although mere cohabitation alone will not suffice to raise such a legal presumption of marriage as to legitimize the offspring. An ante-nuptial child is legitimate: a child born out of wedlock is illegitimate, if acknowledged, he acquires the status of legitimacy. When therefore a child really illegitimate by birth becomes legitimated, it is by force of an acknowledgment express or implied directly proved or presumed. These presumptions are inferences of fact. The child of a concubine may become legitimated by treatment as legitimate. Such treatment will furnish evidence of acknowledgment. The presumption in favour of marriage must rest on sufficient grounds and cannot be permitted to override overbalancing proofs, whether direct or presumptive. (5) Where a son, although not recognised by his father on any particular occasion, was always treated on the same footing as the other legitimate sons, the Privy Council held that this raised some presumption that his mother was the father’s wife. (6) In another case the same principles were applied, although under the circumstances of the particular case the presumption of legitimacy was not justified. In arriving at this conclusion, however, the Privy Council stated that they wished to be distinctly understood that they did not deny or question the position that, according to Mahomedan law, the legitimacy of a child may be presumed from circumstances without any direct proof either of marriage or of any formal act of legitimation. (7) The

---

(1) [References to case law are provided, but the specific cases are not reproduced here.]
acknowledgment of the child as the offspring of the acknowledge, where the circumstances render it within the bounds of possibility(1) is, however, not merely príma facie evidence which may be rebutted, but establishes the fact acknowledged.(2) The acknowledgment of paternity legitimating the child ought to be clear and distinct ;(3) but need not be of such a character as to be evidence of marriage.(4)

The mere cohabitation of a man and woman or their behaviour in other respects as husband and wife always affords an inference of greater or less strength that a marriage has been solemnized between them. Their conduct being susceptible of two opposite explanations, the Court giving effect to the presumption of innocence (v. ante ) is bound to assume it to be moral rather than immoral.(5) The law presumes the validity of a marriage-ceremony.(6) Where a man and a woman intend to become husband and wife and a ceremony of marriage is performed between them by a clergyman competent to perform a valid marriage, the presumption in favour of everything necessary to give validity to such marriage is one of very exceptional strength and unless rebutted by evidence, strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive, must prevail.(7) According to the rule of the Catholic Church a dispensation from the proper ecclesiastical authority is necessary to give validity to a marriage between a man and the sister of his deceased wife. In the case undermentioned,(8) the parties were Catholics and intended to become husband and wife, and a ceremony of marriage was performed between them by a clergyman competent to perform a valid marriage: Hdd that the Court was bound to presume that a dispensation necessary to remove the obstacle to the marriage on the ground of affinity had been obtained. When once a marriage, in fact, has been proved, there arises a presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that there has also been a marriage in law. There can, however, be no such presumption as to a form of marriage gone through when a former valid subsisting marriage has been proved. In such case the onus is entirely upon those setting up the second marriage to show that the earlier marriage has been validly dissolved.(9) In the undermentioned case(10) the dispute was between certain claimants under a will, and the question was

---

(2) See also on acknowledgment of child by father under Mahommedan law: Oomda Bibee v. Shah Jonab, 5 W. R., 132 (1866); In re Bibee Nujeebunnisa, 4 B. L. R. (A. C.), 55 (1869); Fazalul Bibee v. Omdah Bibee, 10 W. R., 469 (1868) Musammat Jaiub v. Musammat Bibee, 12 W. R., 407 (1870); Nujooddeen Ahmed v. Beebee Zakooren, 10 W. R., 45 (1868); Bibee Wazedun v. Wasee Hoseein, 15 W. R., 405 (1871); Nabo Cunt v. Mahalab Bibee, 20 W. R., 164 (1873); Khazooroomeen v. Rowshan Jahan, 2 C., 184 (1877); s. c., 26 W. R., 36; L. R., 3 I. A., 291; Amatif Ali v. Lalit Begum, 9 I. A., 8; s. c., 8 C., 423; Makhala Bibee v. Hallee Mochooman, 10 C. L. R., 293 (1881); Sadakat Hoseein v. Mohomed Yawub, 10 C., 663 (1883); s. c., L. R., 11 I. A., 31; as to the offspring of an adulterous intercourse, formation or incest, see Muhammad Allahabad v. Ismail Khan, 8 A., 234 (1868); s. c., 10 A., 269; Dhan Bibee v. Laluk Bibee, 27 C., 801 (1901); Bailie's Mahommedan Law, 2nd Ed. p. 406.

(4) Wazedun v. Wasee Hoseein, 15 W. R., 404 (1871); see further Roshun Jahan v. Enam Hoseein, 5 W. R., 5 (1886). As to acknowledgment of a brother, see Mirza Himmat v. Sahabzadee, 13 B. L. R., 182 (1873); s. c., 1 I. A., 23: 21 W. R., 113; Field's Evidence Act, pp. 161, 531. See for case of a son born to a Mahomedan by a Burmese woman, 21 C., 666 (1883).

(5) Lawson, Prov. Ev., 93, 95, 106 et seq. The law in general presumes against vice and immorality, Carpiile v. Wood, 613 Mo., 56 (Amer.).

(7) Lopes v. Lopes, 12 C., 706 (1868); discussed in In re Millard, 10 M., 218, 221 (1897).

(8) Lopes v. Lopes, supra.

(9) In re Millard, 10 M., 218, 221 (1897); explaining Lopes v. Lopes, 12 C., 706, supra.

(10) Shepard, In re George v. Thyger (1914), 1 Ch., 456.
whether certain of them were legitimate children of one G A. There was no direct evidence of the marriage of the parents which was alleged to have taken place recently in France. But there was evidence that G A and the mother of the claimants whose legitimacy was in question had lived together in England as man and wife. There was also some evidence of recognition of the children by the family. Upon this evidence the Court dispensed with strict proof of marriage de facto, and held in favour of the legitimacy of the claimants in question. Referring to the Privy Council cases of Sastry Velaidar Aroneguy v. Sembcutty Vayalte (1) the Court pointed out that it was not essential to prove either the fact of marriage or the recognition of children by the family, and that the presumption of marriage must prevail when the evidence shows that the parties were living together as man and wife for a sufficiently long period of time. An attempt was made to establish that the French law did not permit such marriage as was alleged in this case, but the Court assumed this and found in favour of legitimacy. (2) In cases of inheritance when once you get to this that there was a marriage in fact there is a presumption in favour of there being a marriage in law. But however much such a presumption may be taken as rightly arising in cases involving questions of inheritance, so as to avoid illegitimacy where the validity and legality of the marriage is one of the most essential points in issue as in a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights (the validity of the marriage itself being disputed), it is not enough to find that the marriage took place, leaving it to be presumed that the necessary rites and ceremonies were performed; but the Court must find specifically what those rites and ceremonies are and whether they were performed. (3) The presumption which ought to be made in favour of marriage where there has been a lengthened cohabitation, is rebutted by showing that the conduct of the parties is inconsistent with the relation of husband and wife. (4) Under the Mahomedan law the mere continuance of cohabitation under circumstances in which no obstacle to marriage exists is not alone sufficient to raise a presumption of marriage, but to raise such a presumption it is necessary that there should not only be a continued cohabitation, but a continued cohabitation under circumstances from which it could naturally be inferred that the cohabitation was a cohabitation as man and wife and there must be a treatment tantamount to an acknowledgment of the fact of the marriage and the legitimacy of the children. (5)

In the case of Hindus, marriage between parties in different sub-divisions of the Sudra caste is prohibited unless sanctioned by any special custom, and no presumption in favour of the validity of such a marriage can be made, although long cohabitation has existed between the parties, in the absence of proof of such special custom. (6) In criminal cases where marriage is an ingredient in an offence, as in bigamy, adultery, and the enticing of married women, the fact of the marriage must be strictly proved. (7) The onus of proving that certain

---

(1) 6 App. Cas., 364, 371.
(2) See Campbell v. Campbell (The Breadalbane case), L. R., 1 H. L., 82, 182
(3) Surjyamoni Das v. Kali Kanta, 28 C., 37, 50, (1900); s. c., 5 C. W. N., 196; referring to Ideran Valangopuly v. Ramaeeamy Pandit 13 Moo. I. A., 141 (1869); Brindaban Chandra v. Chandra Kurnohar, 12 C., 140 (1888); Administrator-General of Madras v. Amadachari, 9 M., 466 C. (1886).
(4) Aboodi Rasach v. Aga Mahomed, 21 Ind. App., 56 (1896); in which case will be found a discussion as to whether Buddhists come under the same category as Jews and Christians with whom Mahommmdans may intermarry. In Lehmi Koer v. Boghu Nath, 27 C., 971 (1900), the ordinary criteria afforded by conduct contributed but little aid to remove doubt; but it was held that the oral testimony should prevail against the improbability presented by the case that a marriage should have taken place.
(6) Narain Dhar v. Rabind Chandra, 15 C., 176 (1876), followed in Kirpal Narain v. Subhramani, 19 C., 91 (1911); in which case all the decisions bearing upon the matter are cited.
(7) See p. 329 ante, and case cited, id., in note (2).
members of certain Brahmin families cannot enter into a legal marriage-contract is on the person who advances such a proposition, opposed as it is to the law and custom prevailing among members of the caste all over India. (1)

The constancy of natural laws is to be assumed until the contrary be proved. The ordinary physical sequences of nature are to be contemplated as probable and to be presumed to be existing among the contingencies to be expected by reasonable men; such as the falling of water from a higher to a lower level, the spreading of fire in inflammable material, and that the shock on meeting an obstacle is in proportion to momentum. (2) It may also be assumed that animals as a general rule act in conformity with their nature; as that untended cattle will probably stray, that horses will take fright at extraordinary noises and sight, and the like. (3) Similar presumptions may be made as to the conduct of men in masses, such as that persons in fright will act instinctively and convulsively. (4) The physical presumptions relating to life and death are the subject of sections 107 and 108, ante, and have been also adverted to under the heading of the presumption of continuity. Mention has also been made thereunder of the presumptions which formerly prevailed with reference to survivorship. When simply the fact is known of the death of a person capable of having had issue, death without issue cannot be presumed. But such presumption may be drawn from any circumstances indicating non-marriage or childlessness. (5) In cases where it is proved either directly or inferentially, that there are several persons in the same circle of society, bearing the same name, mere identity of name, by itself, is not sufficient to establish identity of person. (6) The inference, however, rises in strength with circumstances indicating the improbability of there being two persons of the same name at the same place and at the same time. Names, therefore, with other circumstances are facts from which identity may be presumed. (7) But ordinarily similarity of names will sustain a verdict when no dispute of identity was raised on trial. (8) So a prima facie case of identification of the person executing a document is necessary, but such identification need not be by the attesting witness, but may be avide. The proof of identity, however, need only be inferential; and the fact that the names are the same may, unless there be grounds of suspicion, ordinarily supply the inference. (9) And it is now held that unless the defendant's signature is by a mark, (10) or unless there be evidence of a name being common in a country, or unless there be some other circumstance calculated to throw confusion on identity, mere identity of name is sufficient for a prima facie case. (11) See further "Continuance," ante.

As to the distinction between physical and psychological facts, see Best, Ev., § 12. Among psychological presumptions may be enumerated the following:—In the absence of any evidence on the subject every person is presumed to be of sound mind. Sanity is presumed. This is but an application of the rule

---

(2) Wharton, Ev., §§ 1293, 1294.
(3) Ib., § 1295; v. ante, p. 38 and note (7), ib.
(4) Ib., 1296.
(5) Ib., § 1279; Richards v. Richards, 15 East 293 (see, however, Doe v. Dasehin, 3 C. & P., 402); Doe v. Griffis, 15 East, 293; Green v. Greenwood, 24 W. R., (Eng.), 296; In re Phoenix's Trust, L. R., 5 Ch. 150; Mason v. Mason, 1 Mer., 310; Barnett v. Tugwell, 31 Beav., 232; In re Selwyn, 3 H. G. N. S., 748; Doucet v. Winsfield, 14 Sim., 277; In re Nicholas, L. R., 2 P. & D., 361.
(9) Wharton, Ev., § 739 A; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1857, 1858; there must be some kind of identification of the signer; Jones v. Jones, 9 M. & W., 75; see cases, supra, and Smith v. Henderson, 9 M. & W., 801; Russell v. Smyth, 9 M. & W., 818.
that the ordinary mental condition is presumed to exist. Hence it follows that if a state of insanity is shown the presumption of sanity is not only removed, but there arises, in the case at any rate of insanity of a permanent type, a presumption that insanity continues.(1)

A sane man, it has been said, is conclusively presumed to contemplate the natural and probable consequences of his own acts.(2) It must, however, be remembered that probable consequences may result from acts as to which the law, by pronouncing them to be negligent expressly negatives intent; and it would be repugnant to justice that one should be conclusively presumed to intend the consequences of his accidental or unavoidable acts. But when the proper limitations are observed the rule is less open to the criticism which it has received.(3) Though it must be presumed that when a man voluntarily does an act, knowing at the time that in the natural course of events a certain result will follow, he intends to bring about that result; there is no presumption that a person intends what is merely a possible result of his action or a result which, though reasonably certain, is not known by him to be so.(4) Where a woman of twenty years of age was found to have administered datura to three members of her family, it was held that she must be presumed to have known that the administration of datura was likely to cause death, though she might not have administered it with that intention.(5)

The presumption that a party intends the natural consequences of his acts extends to civil as well as criminal responsibilities.(6) So one who knowingly utters a forged bill is presumed to intend to defraud,(7) and one who wilfully sets fire to the property of another is presumed to intend to injure the owner.(8) A debtor, knowing himself to be insolvent, executes a bill of sale and an assignment of his book accounts to one of his creditors; the presumption is this was done with the intention of giving a preference to such creditor.(9) A married man is presumed to have entered a house of prostitution in the evening and to have remained all night. The presumption is that he committed adultery while there,(10) A baker is charged with delivering adulterated bread for the use of a public asylum. It is proved that A delivered the bread. The presumption is that he intended it to be eaten.(11) He who publishes a libel is presumed to do so intentionally, though the presumption may be rebutted by proof of coercion or fraud on the part of the plaintiff.(12) And where an act is criminal per se the general rule is to presume a criminal intent from the commission of the act. So if A is proved to have been stabbed by a deadly weapon by B from which wound he instantly died: B is presumed to have intended to kill A.(13)

(1) Taylor, Ev., §§ 197, 370; Wharton, Ev., §§ 1292—1294; Burr Jones, Ev., § 55, and cases there cited.

(2) Greenleaf, Ev., § 18, criticised in ii, Wharton, Ev., § 1258. See Lawson, Pres. Ev., Rule 96—'A person is presumed to intend the natural and legal consequences of his acts.' Taylor, Ev., §§ 80—83.

(3) Burr Jones, Ev., § 23; Wharton, Ev., § 1258.

(4) R. v. Lakerman, 26 B., 558 (1902).

(6) See Taylor, Ev., § 83, and cases there cited criticised in Wharton, Ev., § 1292.

(9) Ecker v. McAllister, 45 Ind., 290 (Amer.); see English cases cited in Taylor, Ev., § 83.

(10) Burns v. Burns, 41 Cal., 103 (Amer.): Astley v. Astley, 1 Hagg., Ev., 720.

(13) Lawson, Pres. Ev., 468, Rule 97; to which that learned author appends the sub-rule—"But when a specific intent is required to make an act an offence the doing of the act does not raise a presumption that it was done with the specific intent." See Taylor, Ev., § 80; Best, Ev., § 433: Starkie, Ev., 757.
It is safer, however, and more accurate to remand all presumptions of malice and intent (as had indeed been done by this Act) to their proper place among presumptions of fact; the office of the Court in all such cases being one of induction and not deduction. The reasoning should be not: "All acts of a certain class have a specific intent, and this act being of that class, consequently has such intent," but the circumstances of the case make it probable that the act was done intentionally or maliciously. The process is one of inference from fact, not of pre-determination by law. And the same rule as to intention should be applied to civil as to criminal issues. (1)

According to the familiar maxim ignorantia juris haud excusat, every person is presumed to know the law when ignorance of it would relieve from the consequences of a crime or from liability upon a contract. (2) The maxim is based upon the fact that there could be no successful administration of justice if the rule were not to prevail. If prisoners accused of crime could successfully plead that they were ignorant of the illegality of their acts, no other shield for crime would need to be interposed, for no other defence could be so easily raised or so difficult to overcome. (3) The same consideration which forbid a party to urge his ignorance of the law as a defence to a criminal charge also forbid that he should plead his ignorance of the law as an excuse for the failure to comply with contractual obligations or as a defence in actions of tort. So where the drawer of a bill of exchange knowing that time had been given by the holer to the acceptor, but not knowing that this discharged him and thinking himself still liable, promised to pay it if the acceptor did not, he was held bound by this promise, though made under a mistake of law. (4) But the maxim is limited to the determination of the civil or criminal liability of the person whose knowledge is in question and cannot be legitimately made use of in a case where the parties are entirely different and distinct from him. (5) Persons engaged in a particular trade are presumed to be acquainted with the general customs obtaining and followed there. (6) So if it be the general custom in a certain trade to charge interest on accounts after a fixed time, parties dealing therein are presumed to be cognisant of this custom and are bound thereby. (7) Every man is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumed to know the contents of any deed which he executes and to be bound by it. (8) So in the case of a will, or proof of the signature of the deceased, he will be presumed to have known and approved of the contents and effect of the instrument he has signed. (9) But mere attestation of a document does not imply knowledge of its contents. (10) The burden of proof is on the party to show a material fact of which he is best cognisant. (11) A person is presumed to know what he does in the sense that a person can make a mistake as to the legal effect of a document be set up as a defence: Powell v. Smith, L.R., 14 Eq., 85. Parties are presumed to know the legal effect of their contracts. Burr Jones, Ev., 22 and cases there cited.

(1) Wharton, Ev., §§ 1258, 1261, 1262; Wharton, Cr. Ev., § 738.
(2) Wharton, Ev., § 1240 [the rule is rather an axiom of law than a presumption]. Lawson, Pres. Ev., 5; Taylor, Ev., § 80. But there is no presumption of knowledge of foreign laws; Lawson, Ev., 14; Wharton, Ev., § 1240; see Pollock on Contract, 474; Best, Ev., § 336. As to exceptional cases, see R. v. Fisher, 14 M., 342, 352 (1891).
(3) Burr Jones, Ev., § 20: Wharton, Ev., § 1240; Pascal argued that society would be destroyed, it such an excuse were held good (4th Prov. Letter).
(4) Stevens v. Lynch, 12 East., 38. See Goodman v. Sayre, 2 J. & W., 283; Brisbane v. Davies, 5 Tannt., 143; East India Co. v. Triton, 3 B. & C., 290; Stockley v. Stockley, 1 V. & B., 23; nor
(5) East Indian Railway Co. v. Kali Doss, 26 C., 465, 468, 490 (1898); 2 C. W. N., 609.
(6) Sutton v. Tatham, 10 A. & E., 7; Bayliff v. Buttrworth, and numerous cases cited in Wharton, Ev., § 1243.
(8) Taylor, Ev., § 150 (see Lawson, Pres. Ev., 18, and v. ante, p. 97, and s. 111, ante).
(9) Ib., § 160.
(10) v. ante, p. 97, note (3).
who is capax negotii, will not be permitted to set up ignorance of facts as ground of exculpation or defence; the law treating him in the absence of fraud or coercion as if we were cognisant of what he did.\(^1\) It is on this principle that (as observed) a person dealing in a particular market, is taken to be acquainted with its customs, and a person executing a document is assumed to know its contents.

According to the English equity doctrine\(^2\) "Debitor non presumitur donare." If a testator who is already in debt to another, leaves to that creditor by his will a legacy sufficient to cover the amount of the debt or to exceed it, without in any way mentioning the debt or providing for its payment, such bequest is held to be in satisfaction of the debt, and the creditor cannot have both the debt and the legacy. This presumption has sometimes been applied by the Courts in India. In a case where a Mahommedan husband who had executed in favour of his wife a deed of dower for five lakhs of rupees, and had begun in his lifetime, but had not completed a transfer of a sum of four and a half lakhs of sica rupees, which was alleged to be an equivalent, and was referred to in a supplement to his will, it was held that this sum was to be taken in satisfaction of the dower, and was not a gift to the wife of that sum.\(^3\) The Indian Succession Act,\(^4\) however, does not follow the English equity doctrine.

Generally speaking it is often said that a man is presumed to know the truth in regard to facts within his own special means of knowledge. More definitely the rule has been thus stated; what a person is bound to know has regard to his particular means of knowledge and to the nature of the representation, and is then subject to the test of the knowledge which a man paying that attention which every man owes to his neighbour in making a representation would have acquired in the particular case by the use of such means.\(^5\)

The ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest. In the familiar instance of a tenant for life paying of a charge upon the inheritance, he is assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have intended to keep the charge alive.\(^6\)

The presumptions which arise when evidence is withheld, where there is spoliation, and where there is a refusal to answer questions, have been dealt with in the notes to Illustrations (g) and (h), ante. Many presumptions arise from conduct and are of frequent application in both civil and criminal cases, such as the presumption which arises when a party accused of crime flies from trial.\(^7\) The presumption of innocence being of a very important and extensive character has been dealt with under a separate heading (v. ante, pp. 612-616). Love of life may be assumed when necessary to determine the burden of proof. So, if the evidence is in equilibrium on an issue of suicide, it will be inferred that suicide is not established.\(^8\) Good faith in a contracting party will be presumed except in those cases which come within the purview of section 111, ante. A conspicuous instance of this presumption exists in the rule that when an instrument is susceptible of two conflicting probable constructions, the Court will adopt that construction which is most consistent with good faith and will hold

---

\(^1\) Wharton, Ev., § 1243.

\(^2\) See Leading Cases in Equity; Ex Parte Pye.

\(^4\) See Succession Act (X of 1865); § 164, 165, 166.

\(^5\) Bigelow on Estoppel, p. 611, citing Jarrett v. Kennedy, 6 C. B., 319, 322; Doyle v. Hart, 4 L. R. Ir., Ex. D., 661, 670; and dealing with the subject of representations made by a person under circumstances in which, from his peculiar relation to the facts, he was bound to know the true state of things.

\(^6\) Gobaldas Gopaldas v. Paramudram Premaldas, 10 C. 1055, 1046 (1884).

\(^7\) Wharton, Ev., § 1260; v. ante, "Innocence."

\(^8\) Ib., § 1247.
that such construction was intended by the parties. (1) A contract will be presumed to have been made in view of a law under which it is valid. (2) It has been sometimes said that when a document is shown to be genuine, the law presumes that it is true. But truth and genuineness are not convertible or equivalent, genuineness or spuriousness affords inferences of truth or falsehood. (3)

The presumption as to regularity is embodied in the familiar maxim—Regularity. Omnia prae sumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta. (4) This maxim "is an expression, in a short form, of a reasonable probability and of the propriety in point of law of acting on such probability. The maxim expresses an inference which may reasonably be drawn when an intention to do some formal act is established; when the evidence is consistent with that intention having been carried into effect in a proper way; but when the actual observance of all due formalities can only be inferred as a matter of probability. The maxim is not wanted where such observance is proved, nor has it any place where such observance is disproved. The maxim only comes into operation where there is no proof one way or the other; but where it is more probable that what was intended to be done was done as it ought to have been done to render it valid, rather than that it was done in some other manner which would defeat the intention proved to exist and would render what is proved to have been done of no effect." (5) The maxim has been applied by this section in Illustration (e) to one class of acts, namely, judicial (6) and official (7) acts which may be presumed to have been regularly performed. (8)

Valuable property-rights often depend upon the presumption that judicial proceedings have been regularly and properly conducted, more especially when the lapse of time has rendered it practically impossible to furnish extraneous evidence that the requirements of the law have been in all respects complied with. So unless the want of jurisdiction is distinctly shown it will be presumed to have existed both as to parties and subject-matter. (9) So in the undermentioned case it was held that having regard to the due performance of official acts it ought to be presumed in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the istabar in question which was directed by the Commissioner to the collector was

---

(1) See Taylor, Ev., §§ 143—150A, ante, notes to III. (e) and Best, Ev., §§ 353—365, where the acts or things presumed are divided into three classes: (1) when prior acts are inferred from the existence of posterior acts; as when a prescriptive right or grant is inferred from modern enjoyment; (2) when posterior acts are inferred from prior acts; as when the sealing and delivery of a deed are inferred on proof of signing only; (3) when intermediate proceedings are presumed; as when a jury are directed to presume mesne assignments. The subject will also be found discussed by the same author in his Treatise on Presumptions of law and fact, 74—86. The maxim may also be considered with reference to (1) official appointments [see post.]; (2) official acts [see III. (e)]; (3) judicial acts [v. ib.]; (4) extra-judicial acts [see III. (1) and post.; Best, Ev., § 365.]

(3) Wharton, Ev., § 1250.

(4) Ib., § 1251.

(5) Harris v. Knight, L. R., 15 P. D., 170, 180, per Lindley, L. J.

(6) See Best, Ev., §§ 380, 381; Taylor, Ev., § 143 et seq.

(7) See Best, Ev., § 359; Taylor, Ev., § 143 et seq.

(8) v. ante, notes to III. (e), and cases there cited; Steph. Dig., Art. 101; Broom’s Legal Maxims; Co. Litt., 6th, 332; Burr Jones, Ev., §§ 25—41.

(9) v. ante, notes to III. (e), where the distinction given in Peacock v. Bell, 1 Saund., 73, between presumptions as to jurisdiction in the case of superior and inferior Courts is cited. The rule, however, that no presumptions are indulged in favour of the proceedings of inferior Courts applies only to the question of jurisdiction. Such Courts like others are presumed to have acted correctly as to matters within their jurisdiction. McGrew v. McGrew, 1 Stew. & P., (Als) 30 (Amer.); Lawson, Pres. Ev., 34—44; Best, Ev., §§ 861; Lawson, Pres. Ev., 27—34.
PRESUMPTIONS. [s. 114.]

duly published. (1) It will also be presumed that the procedure was regular. So if the papers are lost or destroyed, it will be presumed that proper service was made. But no presumption will be allowed to contradict the express statement of the record; thus if the return or proof of service shows service at a particular place or upon a person not defendant, and there is no averment of other service, there is no room for presumption that service was also made at another and different place or that it was made upon the defendant also. (2) And if the record shows certain steps to have been taken which in law are insufficient to sustain the judgment, no other steps will be presumed. Thus if it appears that service was made in a particular manner no other mode of service can be presumed since this would be a contradiction of the record. (3) The presumption not only applies to the fact of jurisdiction, but to the regularity of proceedings subsequent to the gaining of jurisdiction. When the jurisdiction of a competent Court has attached, every act is presumed to have been rightly done until the contrary appears. This applies not only to the final decree but to every judgment or order rendered in the various stages of the proceeding. So it will be presumed that the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment; that improper evidence was not admitted, unless the record shows otherwise; that if admitted, it was disregarded; that every fact susceptible of proof was proved; that the charge of the Court was correct, unless the record shows the contrary; that the jury were duly sworn, and in charge of a sworn officer, duly admonished by the Judge and that they were of such intelligence as to understand the charge; that the prisoner was present in Court during all proceedings; that the judgment was regular and the verdict in proper form; that the summons was duly served; that the necessary parties were before the Court; that all persons interested had due notice, and that several acts in a judicial proceeding, if performed on the same day, were performed in the order necessary to give them legal effect. When an order has been made it will be presumed that the Court had the proper evidence for making the same. (4) So if an attachment is alleged to be without authority on the ground that no copy of the decree was transmitted, the maxim omnia rite will prevail unless it be affirmatively shown that the copy was not transmitted. (5) The reasons on account of which the Courts indulge such presumptions are thus stated in an American case: (6) "we are not to expect too much from the records of judicial proceedings. They are memorials of the judgments and decrees of the Judges and contain a general, but not particular, detail of all that occurs before them. Much must be left to intention and presumption, for it is often less difficult to do things correctly than to describe them correctly." When the extant parts of an incomplete writing exhibit traces of careless preparation it is straining the maxim too far to presume that the parts which have disappeared must necessarily have been free from error. (7)

The presumption of the regularity of official acts not only embraces judicial acts but those of other officers. (8) Though the presumption in this case has less weight and hence is more easily rebutted, the principle is the same, namely, that when an official act is shown to have been substantially regular, it is presumed that the formal requisites were also performed. Thus it will be presumed that a man acting in a public capacity has been rightly appointed; that entries found

(1) Prosano Kumar v. Secretary of State, 3 C. W. N., 695 (1899).
(3) Burr Jones, Ev., § 27.
(4) ib., § 29; Lawson, Pres. Ev., 34—44, and numerous American authorities in these textbooks cited; the presumption of regularity extends to the proceedings of arbitrators: id., 34, Best, Ev., § 380; Russell, Arbitr., 3rd Ed., 268: Hul., Taylor, Ev., §§ 86.
(8) Ill. (A), s. 114.
in public books have been made by the proper officer; that every man in his official character does his duty, until the contrary is proved. (1) The Court may also, in the absence of anything to excite suspicion, fairly assume that a Notary satisfied himself of the identity of an executant before he certified and attested a power-of-attorney. (2) On the same principle this presumption of regularity is extended to the acts of the officers of municipal corporations. (3) Gradually the presumption that officials obey the mandates of the law and perform their duties has been extended to include to some extent the acts of private persons as well in the transaction of affairs of business. Men are presumed to have acted legally and properly than otherwise: and it is reasonable to assume that the usual and customary modes of business have been adopted in given cases, until some departure from the regular mode has been shown. But it is evident from the very statement of the considerations which have influenced the Courts to adopt presumptions of this class that such presumptions are far from conclusive, that they must be received with caution; yet they have been applied to an infinite variety of cases sometimes being entitled to considerable weight, in others to very little; generally their chief importance is to determine the burden or order of proof. (4) Presumptions of this character are frequently raised in respect of negotiable paper. (5) Payment of a note will be presumed from its possession by the maker; (6) and consideration will be presumed. (7) Documents regular on their face are presumed to have been properly executed and to have undergone all formalities essential to their validity. (8)

A document is presumed to have been made on the day on which it bears date, and if more documents than one bear date on the same day, they are presumed payment of wages monthly sufficient to raise the presumption that a hiring is a monthly hiring, Hughes v. Secretary of State, 7 R. L. R., 689.

(5) See III. (c), s. 114: Act XXVI of 1881 (Negotiable Instruments), ss. 118—122 and ante, notes to III. (c) ante. This Illustration is an application of the maxim under consideration; Taylor, Ev., § 148. So also III. (l) is a presumption of regularity; see Taylor, Ev., § 178.

(6) See III. (l), s. 114, ante.

(7) See III. (c), s. 114, ante, and notes to that Illustration.

(8) v. ante, p. 537, Lawson, Pres. Ev., 88; Ball v. Taylor, 1 C. & P., 417; Re British, etc. Assurance Co., 1 DeG. J. & S., 488; Crisp v. Anderson, 1 Stark, 36; Clemenina v. Curriel, 18 C. B., 36; Pooley v. Goodwin, 4 A. & E., 94; Hart v. Hart, 1 Hare, 1; Brudleigh v. DeBem, L. R., 3 C. P., 296; Marine Insurance Co. v. Havinside, L. R., 3 H. L., Cas., 624; Griffin v. Mason, 3 Camp., 7; Re Sandakan, L. R., 6 C. P., 411; Ball v. Bainsbridge, 12 Q. B., 600; Burling v. Patterson, 9 C. & P., 570. In Appathura v. Gopala Panikur, 26 M., 674 (1901); the Court appears to have been of opinion that the law as to the presumption which may be made in the case of documentary evidence is laid down in the sections which deal with documentary evidence, and it held that this section had no application to a case of the sort then before it in which it was argued that this section enabled the Court to presume the genuineness of the original of a document of which secondary evidence had been given.

W. LE
to have been executed in the order necessary to effect the object for which they were executed. (1) Every document called for and not produced after notice to produce is presumed to have been attested, stamped, and executed in the manner prescribed by law. (2) The rule is the same where secondary evidence is given of a lost instrument. (3) Where a deed is duly signed, attested and witnessed, there arises a presumption of sealing and delivery. (4) If a will purports to have been duly signed, attested and witnessed on proof of execution the Court will presume, in the case of the death of the witnesses or in case they do not remember the facts connected with its execution that the law was complied with. (5) Other presumptions arise as to the mailing and receipt of letters. (6) "The presumption is based on the proposition that the post office is a public agency charged with the duty of transmitting letters; and on the assumption that what ordinarily results from the transmission of a letter through the post office probably resulted in the given case. It is probability resting on the custom of business and the presumption that the officers of the postal system discharged their duty. But no such presumption arises unless it appears that the person addressed resided in the city or town to which the letter was addressed." (7) Where a letter is received purporting to be an answer to one which has been duly mailed to a person at his place of residence, this fact creates a presumption that the answer is genuine. (8) On proper preliminary proof similar presumptions may arise as to the sending and delivery of a telegram. (9) In the case of communication by telephone the American Courts, widening the scope of the rules of evidence with the expansion of business by the aid of new inventions, have in several instances received as evidence the statements made at the telephone or to telephone-operators and intended to be communicated to another party. In such case the operator may be regarded as the agent of both parties to make and receive such communication. There are, however, cases holding the stricter rule that where evidence of the substance of such conversation is sought to be introduced, it must first be shown that the party speaking was recognised either by his voice or in some other manner. (10) As to the presumption of regularity in the case of documents 30 years old, see section 90, ante, which is one of the applications of the maxim to extra-judicial acts. (11) Illustration (e)

(1) Steph. Dig., Art. 85; Atkyns v. Horde, 1 Burr., 166; Taylor, Ev., § 169; Best, Ev., § 405; Lawson, Ev., 89. As to letters, see Anderson v. Weston, 6 Bing. N. C., 298; when there is danger of collusion as in divorce, see Houlston v. Smyth, 2 C. & P., 24; or insolvency proceedings, see Hoare v. Coryton, 4 Taun., 560; Wright v. Laisne, 2 M. & W., 739; Sinclair v. Baggally, 4 M. & W., 312; Taylor v. Kinloch, 1 Stark., 175.

(2) S. 89, ante; Steph. Dig., Art. 86.

(5) Burpugue v. Showler, 1 Rob. E., 5 [referred to in Jogendra Nath v. Niki Charu, 7 C. W. N., 384, 386 (1905), in which the Court presumed that the attesting witnesses to a document signed after the execution of the document.] Brencley v. Still. 2 Roberts, 163; Thomson v. Hall, 5b., 426; Reeves v. Lindsay, 1 R., 3 Eq., 500. But see Croft v. Croft, 4 S. & T., 10. See generally as to presumptions in case of wills, Taylor, Ev., §§ 100-168.

(6) v. ante, pp. 104-108, and cases there cited: Best, Ev., § 403.

(7) Henderson v. Carbondale Coal Co., 140 U. S., 25, 27 (Amer.), per Brewer, J.

(9) v. ante, pp. 81-84, 436, 439 and cases there cited; see also Gray on communication by telegraph.

(11) As to alterations in documents ancient, or otherwise, see a. 106, ante: other instances of the application of the maxim to extra-judicial acts are the presumptions as to the sealing, signing and delivery of documents; in favour of formality in the case of fair wills; due stamping; priority of execution of deeds and the like. Best, Ev., §§ 342-355.
to section 114 is an example of the presumption of regularity applied by public business by public officers. Illustration (f) declares that the Court may presume from the general regularity and uniformity of men’s dealings that the common course of business has been followed in particular cases. (1) "Where it was once said by an English Judge, "the maxim of omnia rite acta presumuntur applies, then indeed if the event ought probably to have taken place on Tuesday, evidence that it did take place on Tuesday or Wednesday, is strong evidence that it took place on Tuesday."(2) The presumption is that any act done was done of right and not of wrong. (3) The performance, however, of a mere moral duty is not presumed. (4)

An important application of the maxim is to be found in the support given to possession and user, especially where there has been long and peaceable enjoyment. (5) So the presumption of right in party who is in possession of property gives rise to the rule that possession is primâ facie evidence of title. (6) And so, where the facts show the long continued exercise of a right, the Court is bound to presume a legal origin, if such be possible in favour of the right and will not only presume that the right had a legal origin but also many collateral facts, so as to render the title of the possessor complete. (7)

Where under Hindu law, a father purchases property in the name of his son a presumption arises, contrary to the presumption under English law, that it is a benami purchase merely and that the property belongs to the father. The habit of holding land benami is inveterate in India, and, in such cases the person in whose name the property is purchased alleges that he is solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in such property, the burden of proving this will lie upon him. (8) But this doctrine does not justify the Courts in making every presumption against apparent ownership. (9) A wife, a member of a joint-family is, as regards property held in her name, in the same position as her husband with respect to property acquired in his name and subject to the same presumption in favour of the joint-family. (10) The same presumption as stated above was applied in the case of a person who purchased property in the name of an idol, whom no one worshipped but himself. (11) To prove a purchase to be a benami one, it is usual to show that the funds with which the purchase was made were exclusively the funds of the person alleged to be the real owner of the property. (12) The same principle has been applied to Mahomedans in the

(1) v. ante, notes to Illustration.
(3) Gibson v. Done, 2 H. & N., 615.
(5) Best, Evv., §§ 335, 366 et seq.
(6) See sq. 110, ante, and cases cited there.
(7) Best, Evv., § 366; v. ib., §§ 367-399, which deal with prescriptive and customary rights; the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, C. 71: the presumptions made from user in the case of incorporeal rights; the presumption of the surrender or extinguishment of incorporeal right by non-user; easement; licenses; presumptions of fact in support of beneficial enjoyment; and of the surrender of terms.
(8) Geopchrit Gosain v. Guruprasad Gosain, 6 Moo. I. A., 53 (1854); Bhaqut Chauder v. Hono Gehind, 20 W. R., 290 (1873); Nagincnall v. Ab-
(10) Nobin Chunder v. Dokholala Das, 10 C., 696 (1884); following Chunder Nall v. Kriato Kamal, 15 W. R., 357 (1879), and distinguishing Chowdru v. Turin Kinth, 8 C., 545 (1882); s., 11 C. L. R., 41, where the question considered was whether as between a husband or a purchaser at a sale in execution against the husband and the wife there was any presumption that property standing in the name of the wife was held by her benami for her husband.
(11) Brojooosowdary Debos v. Luckmee Koonucase of a purchase made by a father in the name of a son (1) or in the name of his wife. (2) This presumption that a purchase was an ordinary benami one may, however, be rebutted by evidence showing that the father's object was to affect the ordinary rule of succession as from him to the property purchased; and it was also laid down in this case that when bond fide creditors seek to render liable property of which their debtor is the ostensible owner, it is the duty of the Court of Justice to put those who object on the ground that he only held benami to strict proof of such objection. (3) As regards suits instituted by a benamidar, as long as the benami system is to be recognised in this country, it has been held that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is to be presumed that the benamidar has instituted the suit with the full authority of the beneficial owner, and any decision come to in his presence would be as much binding upon the real owner, as if the suit has been brought by the real owner himself. (4) See further cases cited ante, ss. 101—104, sub voc. "Benami Transactions." As regards encroachments made by a tenant against his landlord, the true presumption is that the lands so encroached upon are added to the tenure and form part thereof for the benefit of the tenant so long as the original holding continues, and afterwards for the benefit of the landlord, unless it clearly appears by some act done at the time that the tenant made the encroachment for his own benefit. The principle on which this doctrine is founded is one of general application: namely, that if an act is capable of being treated as either rightful or wrongful, it shall be treated as rightful. (5) In another case the same principle was applied, and it was further held that when a tenant acquired a title against a third person by adverse possession, he acquired it for his landlord and not for himself. (6)

Witnesses are presumed to have testified truthfully. (7) Presumptions arise from the withholding, (8) or from the spoliation, (9) or evidence. [Illustration (g).] If a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled by law to answer, the Court may presume that the answer if given would be unfavourable to him. (10) [Illustration (h).] The records of Courts are presumed to be correctly made; (11) and when a document is produced as a record of evidence there is a presumption of its genuineness and due taking. (12) The hereditary nature of a tenure or taluk may be presumed from evidence of long and uninterrupted enjoyment, and of the descent of the tenure from father to son, notwithstanding the absence of words of inheritance in the instrument by which the tenure was originally created. (13) In another case it was held that successive

(2) Surnomayes v. Luchmeoput Doorugu, 9 W. R., 338 (1868).
(3) Anigmat Ali v. Hardwaras Mul, 13 Moo I. A., 401; s. c., 5 B. L. R., 678 (1870); see also Naginbhai v. Abdulla, 6 B., 717 (1882); see also ante, pp. 531—533, ss. 101—104, sub voc. "Benami Transactions."
(4) Gopi Nath v. Bhugovan Pakerab, 10 C., 697, (1884).
(6) Nuddarchand Shaha v. Mejjan, 10 C., 890 (1884).
(7) v. ante, pp. 613—614.
(8) v. ante, ill. (g.), pp. 603—607.
(9) v. ante, ill. (g.), pp. 603—607.
(10) v. ante, ill. (h.), p. 607.
(11) Beet, Ev., § 348.
(12) 8. 90, ante, pp. 420—425; as to certified copies, see s. 78, ante.
(13) Gopal Lall v. Tiluk Chunder, 10 Moo I. A., 191 (1865); s. c., 3 W., 3 P. C., 1; Dhunpat Singh v. Govnam Singh, 11 Moo I. A., 433 (1867) (evidence of long uninterrupted enjoyment will supply the want of words of limitation in a postali). See also on absence of words of "inheritance" and use of word "mokurrari," 5 C., 543 (1879); 9 I. A., 33 (1881); 8 C., 664 (1881); 12 I. A., 296 (1885); Sutinaran Ghosal v. Mohahchunder, 12 Moo I. A., 263; s. c., 2 B. L. R. (P. C.), 23; 11 W. R., (P. C.), 10, 266 (1866); Kooddepp Narain v. Government, 14 Moo I. A., 247 (1871); s. c., 11 B. L. R., 71; Murumas Singh v. Talunnand Singh, 3 W. R., 84 (1865); Nobo Dooriga v. Deorah Nath, 24 W. R., 301 (1875); Karunachar Mahati v. Nidhobho Chowdary, 5 B. L. R., 655 (1870); s. c., 14 W. R., 107; Lathab Koonar v. Hari Krishna, 3 B. L. R., 226 (A. C.), (1880); s. c., 12 W. R., 3 (the word "mokurrari istemarri" create an hereditary right in perpetuity). enjoyment for three generations without interference, of land granted by a zemindar, to a member of his family, in lieu of maintenance, justified the presumption that the original grant was intended to be absolute. In England the proof of possession of land or of the receipt of rent from the person in possession is prima facie evidence of a seisin in fee. In India the proof of possession or receipt of rent by a person who pays the land revenue immediately to Government is prima facie evidence of an estate of inheritance in the case of an ordinary zemindari. The evidence is still stronger, if it be proved that the estate has passed, on one or more occasions, from ancestor to heir. As regards lakhiraj lands, as the general presumption is in favour of the liability to assessment of land, the onus probandi lies on a claimant to lakhiraj to establish his title to exemption, not by inference but by positive proof required by the Regulations. Registration by a Collector of land as lakhiraj in 1795 affords presumption of the lakhiraj having commenced before 1790. In a question of boundary between a lakhiraj tenure and a zemindar's maidan land, there is no presumption in favour of one or the other, but the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his case. If a person sets up as against the Government a permanent or perpetual settlement it is incumbent on him to make out that case. Unsettled and unoccupied waste land, not being the property of any private owner, must be held to belong to the State. A purchase at a sale for arrears of Government revenue is remitted to all the rights which the original settlor at the date of the perpetual settlement had, and may in consequence of that sweep away or get rid of all the intermediate tenures and incumbrances created by preceding zemindars since that date. In the assertion of this right the auction-purchaser is, no doubt, in many cases allowed to have the benefit of a certain presumption, and by virtue thereof to throw the burden of proof on his opponent. That presumption is, however, founded not so much upon the principle just mentioned as upon the principle that every bigha of land is bound to pay and contribute to the public revenue, unless it can be brought within certain known and specified exceptions, and that the right of the lakhiraj to enhance rent is also presumable, until the contrary is shown. Accordingly in many cases which may be found in the books, a very heavy burden of proof has been placed upon the defendants, whose tenures have been questioned by auction-purchasers; and they have had to prove in circumstances of great difficulty that their tenure did really exist at the date of the perpetual settlement, or even twelve years before in order to escape the consequences of the claim. It is, however, to be observed that the course of modern legislation and also of modern decision has, if not in the case of lakhiraj lands, at least in the case of under-tenants, to a considerable degree modified the rules laid down in the earlier cases, by giving force to the contrary presumptions arising from proof of long and undisturbed Drajamath Kunda v. Lakhi Narain, 7 B. L. R., 411 (1871); Ismail Khan v. Agnihat Nath, 7 C. W. N., 9 (1903); Winter scale v. Sarat Chandra, 8 C. W. N., 156 (1903); Ismail Khan v. Minu Roy, D. N., 10 C. W. N., 301 (1892). A mannat title was presumed from continuous payment of rent for more than a hundred years. Any presumption arising from long possession is, of course, negative where the origin of the tenancy is known. Ismail Khan v. Broughton, 5 C. W. N., 848 (1901). See Upendra Krishna v. Ismail Khan, 8 C. W. N., 889 (1904); Nirad Mandal v. Ismail Khan, 8 C. W. N., 886 (1904.) See an article on "Presumption as to permanent tenancy in homestead land," 5 C. W. N., ooxxii.

(2) Collector of Trichinopoly v. Tekkaman, 14 B. L. R., 150; I. R., 1 I. A., 283 (1874).
(4) Omesh Chander v. Dakhina Sondary, W. R., 8p, No. 95 (1863).
(6) Pramono Kumar v. Secretary of State, 3 C. W. N., 696 (1890). possession.'

(3) Jagadindra Nath v. Secretary of State, 30 C. 291 (1902), see notes to s. 39.

(5) Ismail Khan v. Joygoon Bisco, 4 C. W. N., 210 (1900); see also Ismail Khan v. Bronghton, 5 C. W. N., 846 (1901).

(7) Mohesh Lal v. Mohunlal Boman, L. R., 10 I. A., 62, 71 (1883); s. c., 9 C., 981.

(8) Gobinda v. Paramad, 10 C., 1035 (1884).

(9) Mohunlal v. Chunder, 16 Cal., 523.

(10) Gobinda v. Toofan, 4 C., 286 (1878).

(11) Haimun Chaul v. Gomnan Gomkharm, P. C. App., 94 (1834); Pedda Venkateswara v. Aruloo Roodrups, P. C. App., 112 (1834); Burdascunt Roy v. Chunder Koomer, 12 Moog. I. A., 145 (1868); Trilochan Chask v. Keshu Nath, 3 B. L. R., 298 (1869); 12 W. R., 175; Selim Sheikh v. Raisdona Nclak, 3 B. L. R. (A. C.), 312 (1869); Kalle Chander v. Adow Sheikh, 9 W. R., 602 (1868); Wali Ahmad v. Ajlekh Kesh, 13 A., 537 (1891), see also Field's Evidence Act, 506.
the subsequent purchaser, who registers, has actual notice of a prior unregistered purchase, possession itself having been under certain circumstances created as sufficient notice. Where a tenant under a lease holds over after the expiration of the lease, it is presumed that there is an implied agreement and that he does so on the same terms and conditions as are mentioned in the lease, until the parties come to a fresh settlement. Where a ryot shows payment of rent for any particular year, the presumption is that the rent for previous years has been paid and satisfied, unless the contrary is shown by the landlord. See further as to presumptions in the case of possession, the Notes to section 110, ante, and see Notes to sections 101—104, "Landlord and Tenant."

Delay in suing to enforce rights raises a presumption unfavourable to the person who makes such delay. If some presumption usually arises against those who slumber on their rights it is the stronger when applied to rights and subject-matter of which is in a constant state of change, and the proof of which is rendered more than usually difficult by lapse of time. Delay on the part of a suitor may under particular circumstances be indicative of a consciousness on his part that what the opposite party claims is a true and proper amount. No presumption can be raised against a party to a suit from his refusal to withdraw his case from the determination of a properly constituted Court in order to submit it to private arbitration. Nothing which passes between the parties to a suit in any attempt at arbitration or compromise should be allowed to effect the slightest prejudice to the merits of their case, as it eventually comes to be tried before the Court. The return to a writ of habeas corpus is not necessarily conclusive and does not preclude enquiry into the truth of the matters alleged therein. A witness sent by the police is presumably under restraint, and a statement made by such witness and so recorded raises suspicion that it was not voluntarily made.

In a partnership suit where one party does, but the other party does not, allege a specific agreement that the shares in the said partnership were unequal, the existing presumption as to the equality of partners' shares casts the burden of proof on those alleging the agreement who must therefore begin.

The presumption, generally speaking in the absence of any evidence to the contrary is that a person whose money goes to satisfy a prior mortgage intends to keep alive for his benefit that prior mortgage.

A child born in India must under ordinary circumstances be presumed to have his father's religion and his corresponding civil and social status. With regard to change of religion it has been held that where in consequence of the con-

---

(1) Fazledeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed, 5 C. 334 (1870); see 7 C, 550 (1881), and cases there reviewed; and Narain Chunder v. Dataram Roy, 8 C, 597 (1882).
(5) Mussamut Bibee v. Shiekh Hamid, 10 B. L. R., 45, 54 (1871).
(7) In the matter of Khatij Bibi, 5 B. L. R., 557 (1870); contra, R. v. Vaugham, 5 B. L. R., 418 (1870); the writ does not now issue; the High Court has, however, conferred upon it certain powers of issuing directions in the nature of a writ of habeas corpus; Cr. Pr. Code, s. 101.
(10) Amur Chundra v. Roy Goloke, 4 C. W. N., 769 (1900).
version of a person from one form of religion to another, the question arises as to the law to be applied to such person, that question is to be determined not by ascertaining the law which was applicable to such person prior to the conversion but by ascertaining the law or custom of the class to which such person attached himself after conversion and by which he preferred that his succession should be governed. (1)

(1) Lastings v. Goussier, 23 R., 539 (1899); in which (p. 541), it was held that the lower Court had not drawn a correct presumption.
CHAPTER VIII

Estoppel.

The subject of estoppels(1) differs from that of presumptions, which are partly dealt with in the preceding chapter, in the circumstance that an estoppel is a personal disqualification laid upon a person peculiarly circumstanced from proving peculiar facts; whereas a presumption is a rule that particular inferences shall be drawn from particular facts, whoever proves them.(2) An estoppel is only a matter of proof. (3) A man is estopped when he has said, done or permitted some thing or act, which the law will not allow him to gainsay. Owing to its use in ancient times in shutting out the truth against reason and sound policy, the doctrine of estoppel was not favoured and was characterised as "odious." In modern times the doctrine has lost all ground of odium and become one of the most important, useful and just factors of the law. At the present day it is employed not to exclude the truth; its whole force being directed to preclude parties, and those in privy with them from unsettling what has been fittingly determined—a just principle which can be and is daily administered to the well-being of society.(4)

It has been pointed out by a text-writer of the highest authority on the law of evidence(5) that the Courts formerly through the phraseology and under the garb of "evidence" accomplished results which they now attain through a cautious reaching out of the principle of estoppel, the modern extensions of this doctrine broadening the law by a direct and open application of maxims of justice. At common law there were three kinds of estoppel, namely (a) by Record, (b) by Deed, and (c) in pais.

Estoppel by Record is dealt with by the 13th and 14th sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, and by sections 40—44 of this Act (v. ante, pp. 266-292). There is a two-fold estoppel arising by record, that is, from the proceedings of the Courts; first, in the record, considered as a memorandum or entry of the judgment; and secondly, in the record considered as a judgment. In the first case mentioned the record has conclusive effect upon all the world. It imports absolute verity, not only against the parties to it and those in privy with them but against strangers also; no one may produce evidence to impeach it. Thus no one whether party, privy or stranger, is permitted to deny the fact that the proceedings narrated in the record took place, or the time when they purport to have taken place, or that the parties there named as litigants participated in the cause, or that judgment was given as therein stated; unless in a direct proceeding instituted for the purpose of correcting or annulling the record.(6)

The estoppel of a record as a judgment is of greater importance. The force and effect of a judgment depend first upon the nature of the proceedings in which it was rendered, i.e., upon the question whether it was an action in rem or in

---

(1) See as to the law of estoppel, Bigelow's Treatise on the Law of Estoppel, 5th Ed. (1890); Everest, and Strod's Law of Estoppel (1884); Calabaz, Principles of Estoppel (1898); and Estoppel by Representation and Res Judicata in British India, by A. Casper, 2nd Ed. (1896), being the Tagore Law Lectures, 1893.

(2) Steph. Introd., 175.

(3) Bashi Chandra v. Enayet Ali, 20 C., 238 (1892).

(4) Bigelow, op. cit., 5, 6.

(6) Bigelow, op. cit., 8, 36.
personam; (1) and secondly, upon the forum in which it was pronounced, i.e., upon the question whether it was a judgment of a domestic or foreign Court. (2) The record of a judgment in rem is generally conclusive upon all persons. In other cases so far as the record purports to declare rights and duties, its material recitals import absolute verity between the parties to it and those who claim under them. The estoppel arising from or fixed by the fact enrolled constitutes the estoppel of a judgment. And to the question whether the judgment necessarily creates an estoppel, the general answer is, yes, if it results in res judicata: no, if it does not. (3)

Estoppel by Deed.

The strict technical doctrine of estoppel by deed cannot be said to exist in India. (4) This species of estoppel originated by virtue of that which constituted a writing, a deed, namely, the seal. It is to the fact that the seal was once the mark of authority and greatness, rather than to the fact that it was a seal, or that (as is commonly said) its use was a solemn act that is to be traced the origin of the effect of the instrument as matter of evidence. Later the idea gained force that the seal itself, besides affording authentication somehow imported verity and gave to the instrument to which it was appended its peculiar efficacy. (5) Written evidence was considered of a higher nature than verbal, and where the document was of a formal character executed under seal, it was regarded as conclusive not merely as to the interests conveyed, but also as regards matters of recital. The principle was that where a man had entered into a solemn engagement by deed under his hand and seal as to certain facts he should not be permitted to deny any matter which he had so asserted. (6)

An estoppel by deed is a preclusion against the competent parties to a valid sealed contract and their privies to deny its force and effect by any evidence of inferior solemnity. (7) The rule declares that no man shall be permitted to dispute his own solemn deed. In India, however, conveyancing is of a simple and informal character, (8) and contracts under seal have no special privilege attached to them, being treated on the same footing as simple contracts. (9) But while the technical doctrine has no application in this country, statement in documents are as admissions always evidence against the parties. And the admissions may be conclusive if they work an estoppel, that is, if the statement has been acted upon by the party to whom it was made. (10)

The Courts in England and America in recent times appear inclined to treat the estoppel by deed as resting on contract, an intelligible basis upon which a large class of estoppel is arising, namely, that the parties have agreed for the purposes of a particular transaction to treat certain facts as true. (11) In this country

(1) Bigelow, op. cit., 8, 36, 38; v. ante, pp. 286-288.
(2) v. ante, pp. 286-288.
(3) v. ib.
(4) See Gohaldas Gopaldeo v. Paramal Premchandra, 10 C, 1035 (1884); Zemindar Serimatsu v. Virappa Chetti, 2 Mad. H. C. R., 174 (1884): ["The strict technical doctrine of the English law as to estoppel in the case of solemn deeds under seal rests upon peculiar grounds that have no application to the present bonds or the other written instruments ordinarily in use among natives."] Ram Gopal v. Bagrivere, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 37 (1867); Param Singh v. Lalji Mal, 1 A., 403 (1877); Donzelle v. Kedarnath Chuckerbatty, 7 B. L. R., 720 (1871); Kedarnath Chuckerbatty v. Donzelle, 20 W. R., 302 (1873).
(8) See observations of Paul, J., in Donzelle v. Kedarnath Chuckerbatty, 7 B. L. R., 728-730 (1871); and see Kedarnath Chuckerbatty v. Donzelle, 20 W. R., 353 (1873); and the deeds and contracts of the people of India are to be liberally construed: Hanscombe Prasad v. Muns. Baboor, 6 Moo. I. A., 411 (1856); Ramball Seth v. Koon Lal, 72 C., 578 (1866).
(10) v. s. 31, ante, pp. 167-169.
(11) Bigelow, op. cit., 331, note 1; see Carpenter v. Buller, 8 M. & W., 206, 212.
the technical doctrine is not recognised at all, and a statement in a deed or other document can only give rise to an estoppel if the case is one which can be brought within the rule as to estoppel by conduct. In some cases such a statement amounts to a mere admission of more or less evidential value according to the circumstances, but not conclusive. In other cases, namely, those in which the other party has been induced to alter his position upon the faith of the statement contained in the document, such a statement will operate as an estoppel.
In this view of the matter an estoppel arising from a deed or other instrument is only a particular application of that estoppel by misrepresentation or which is the subject-matter of section 115 of this Act. An estoppel, however in pais, may arise in connection with a deed as in connection with any other instrument.

In the case of Param Singh v. Lalji Mal (1) the rule on this point was laid down as follows:—

"If a party to a deed is to be precluded from questioning his solemn act, much injustice would be wrought in this country. The strictness of the rule of estoppel has been in England relaxed. If it is to be used to promote justice, the degree of strictness with which it is to be enforced, must be proportioned to the degree of care and intelligence, which the natives of the country in practice bring to bear upon their transactions. What is ordinarily known in these provinces as a deed, is an attested agreement prepared without any competent legal advice, and executed and delivered by parties who are unaware of any distinction between deeds and agreements. Under these circumstances, it apppears to us that justice, equity, and good conscience require no more than that a party to such an instrument should be precluded from contradicting it to the prejudice of another party, when that other, or the person through whom the other person claims, has been induced to alter his position on the faith of the instrument; but where the question arises between parties, or the representatives in interest of parties, who at the time of the execution of the instrument, were aware of its intention and object, and who have not been induced to alter their position by its execution, we consider that justice in this country will be more surely obtained by allowing any party, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, to show the truth. As to the cases in which, in order to prevent fraud it may be shown that an apparent deed of sale is really a mortgage, see ante, s. 92, sub voc. 'Evidence of Conduct' and authorities there cited.(2) As to estoppel by pleading v. ante, pp. 351-353.(3)

"Estoppel in pais under: the ancient doctrine of the common law sprang from Estoppel in pais.

(i) livery of seisin; (ii) entry; (iii) acceptance of rent; (iv) partition; (v) accepttance of an estate. Aside from the case of partition only one of the above-mentioned instances mentioned by Coke,—estoppel by acceptance of rent, prevails at the present day, and even the character of this instance is widely different from what it was in his time. Estoppel by the acceptance of rent as known to Coke occurred where the landlord accepted rent from a tenant who held over after the expiration of a lease by deed. Such an estoppel depended upon the prior existence of a deed; while at the present day it is immaterial how the tenure arose.(4) The estoppel by partition was a case of implied warranty. In the case of a partition of lands by writ of partition between co-tenants the law imported a warranty of the common title, and held it to be incompatible with their duty to each other for either to become demandant in a suit to recover

(1) 1 A., 403, 410 (1877); but see as to this case Chenkivreppa v. Putappa, 11 B., 708 (1887).
(2) See also Rajput v. Senararji, 2 B., 231 (1877); Mahadaji Gopal v. Vithal Ballal, 7 B., 78
(1881).
(3) And see Bhuvendra Docheey v. Rum Saran v. Muss. Prun, 13 M. I. A., 551, 559 (1870);
Krishho Preo v. Puddo Lochan, 6 W. R., 288 (1866); Ramgaran v. Kristo, 1 Mad. H. C., 72
(1862); Dasyal Jairaj v. Khatas Ludha, 12 Bom. H. C., 97.
(4) Bigelow op. cit., 454; see Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property), s. 116.
any portion of the land by a paramount title and thus to place himself in antagonism to his co-tenants. No tenant after partition could set up an adverse title to the portion of another for the purpose of ousting him from the part which had been partitioned off to him. 1

In this country the question whether there is an estoppel by reason of partition will depend, in the case of a partition by decree, upon the question whether there is an estoppel by judgment or res judicata; and in the case of partition by act of parties whether there is under the circumstances such an estoppel by agreement or by such conduct as is provided for by section 115, post. 5

In addition to the above forms of estoppel in pais which are now chiefly of historic interest only, there is the modern doctrine of estoppel in pais. "Indeed the estoppel in pais of the present day has grown up entirely since the time of Coke, and embraces cases never contemplated in that character by him or by the lawyers of even much later times, though the old lines are often visible in the newer pathways."

Estoppel in pais according to the modern sense of that term, has been said to arise firstly (a) from agreement or contract; secondly (b) independently of contract, from act or conduct of misrepresentation which has induced a change of position in accordance with the real or apparent intention of the party against whom the estoppel is alleged. Estoppel by agreement embraces (a) all cases in which there is an actual or virtual undertaking to treat a fact as settled, so that it must stand specifically as agreed; and (b) all cases in which an estoppel grows out of the performance of the contract by operation of law. Estoppel by contract does not include cases of estoppel not arising by or by virtue of the contract itself, though arising in the course of the contract; if the estoppel is not part of the contract itself or of its legal effect it belongs to the next head. While there can be no estoppel by agreement where the justice of the case does not require it; such an estoppel may be found to exist where there is an agreement either express or to be implied from the conduct of the parties to, or the nature of, the transaction itself which justice requires should be enforced. The question of the existence of such an estoppel must be dealt with on broad grounds of legal principle irrespective of whether there may be a decision in point or not. The question in each case is—is there an agreement on which an estoppel should be justly founded. 4

Sections 116 and 117 afford instances of the estoppel by agreement but they are not exhaustive of it. 5

As has been well said, some transactions there are which are so obviously based on a conventional state of facts that for that very reason the parties never in practice come to any express agreement.

---

1. Bigelow op. cit. 410—411. In the case of partition in pais by conveyance between the parties there appears to be no estoppel apart from recitals unless there is an express warranty. And the rule itself has been subjected to some qualification: ib., 410.

2. As to the conclusiveness of partition-proceedings, see Mominudd Oudia v. Bhopal, 3 Agra Rep., 137 (1868); Ghasser Khan v. Kulloo, 1 Agra Rep., 182 (1866); Shereen v. Narayan, 5 B., 27 (1880); Lakshman Daiva v. Ramchandra Dada, 6 B., 48 (1880); Konerav v. Gurav, 5 B., 589 (1880); Nilo Ramchandra v. Govind Ballal, 10 Bo., 24 (1881); Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B., 37 (1879); Ananta Palasharya v. Damodhar Mahund, 13 B., 25, 31 (1888); Krishna Bokari v. Brojeshari Chowdhurji, 1 C., 144; 2 I. A., 283 (1875); Rajah of Pitalpur v. Sitala Gora, 12 I. A., 16 (1884); Venkadasri v. Peela Venkayappa, 10 M., 15 (1886); Sheikh Husein v. Sheikh Mustund, 18 W. R., 290 (1872); Hari Narayan v. Gunapatra Daji, 7 B., 272 (1883); Kurir Chunder v. Amath Nath, 10 C., 97 (1883); and Caspero, op. cit., 386—389; where these cases are cited and considered.

4. Rup Chand v. Sarbeshwar Chandra, 10 C. W. N., 747 (1906); s. c. 3 C. L. J., 629.

5. Id. Mr. Bigelow describes the estoppel of tenant and licensee of land as an instance of estoppel growing out of the performance of the contract by operation of law (Bigelow op. cit., 508, 542.). The estoppel of a bailee and other licensee is analogous to that of landlord and tenant (ib., 464, 548, 552). The estoppel in respect of negotiable instruments is also an instance of estoppel by contract, but in this instance it is said to arise "upon some fact agreed or assumed to be true" (ib., 480).
about them at all, and the estoppel is but the carrying out of what the parties as honest men must have intended if they thought about the matter at all at the time they made their bargain. (1) The parties are deemed to have dealt with one another on the basis of their rights being regulated by a conventional state of facts. The tenant and licensee and bailee obtaining possession are taken to accept it upon the terms that they will not dispute the title of him who gave it to them and without whose possession they would not have got it. The act of acceptance of a bill of exchange amounts to an undertaking to pay to the order of the drawer. Though all are instances of estoppel by agreement, the precise terms of the agreement and therefore of the estoppel may vary according to the nature of the particular transaction in each case. (2) Another instance of such an estoppel (which however has not been provided for in the Act) is the estoppel of a person taking possession under an instrument whether a will or deed inter vivos. Where such taking is in accordance with a right which would not have been granted except upon the understanding that the possessor should not dispute the title of him under whom the possession was derived there is an estoppel. This occurs where several persons take limited interests under the same instrument. In that case a party cannot say that the instrument is valid so as to enable him to take under it, but is invalid as regards the interests of those in remainder who claim under the same instrument. (3) Whether all the cases here referred to under this head ought to be called estoppels is a matter of doubt.

Secondly: The next head which constitutes an important addition in recent times to the law of estoppel, embraces the class of cases known and described as estoppel by conduct of misrepresentation; the estoppel arising without regard to contract, or rather the fact to be taken as true not being necessarily or ordinarily the subject or the effect of contract. This estoppel is dealt with in section 116, post.

 Besides these two classes the name of estoppel has been extended to a variety of cases which are not estoppels at all; in some of these cases there may perhaps be said to be a quasi-estoppel; in others, the word is merely used as equivalent to “bar;” in others, it is an entire misnomer; the free use of the term “estoppel” in such cases giving rise to confusion and misapprehension of the real legal character of the act or declaration which is to be considered. (4)

This Act deals with the subject of estoppel in pais in sections 115-117, but does not in terms preserve the above-mentioned distinction between estoppel by contract and estoppel by conduct. The rules contained in sections 116 and 117 have been described as instances of the estoppel by contract. Other cases which have been included under that designation may be found to fall within the purview of section 115, which, however, primarily appears to refer to what has been described above as estoppel by misrepresentation. Hard and fast distinctions are not easily or profitably drawn in this branch of the law. Estoppels in the sense in which that term is used in English legal phraseology are matters of infinite variety and are by no means confined to the subjects dealt with in this Chapter of the Act. (5)

In the case of the Ganges Manufacturing Co. v. Sourujmull (6) Garth, C. J., said:— “It has been further contended by the appellants, that sections 115 to 117 contained in Chap. VIII of the Evidence Act lay down the only rules of estoppel which are now intended to be in force in British India; that those rules are treated by the Act as rules of evidence; and that, by the second section of the

(1) 10 C. W. N., 747 (1906) citing with approval Gobabe on Estoppel, 12, 21.
(2) 10 C. W. N., 747 (1906) citing with approval Gobabe on Estoppel, 12, 21.
(3) 10 C. W. N., 747 (1906) citing with approval Gobabe on Estoppel, 12, 21.
(4) 9 Q. B., 48.
(5) See Bigelow, op. cit., 453, 458.
(6) Ganges Manufacturing Co. v. Sourujmull, 5 C., 669 (1880); and see Janaki Ammal v. Rama- kothammal, 7 Mad. H. C. R., 263 (1879).
Act, all rules of evidence are repealed except those which the Act contains. But if this argument were well founded the consequences would indeed be serious. The Courts here would then be debarred from entertaining any questions in the nature of estoppel which did not come within the scope of sections 115 to 117, however important those questions might be to the due administration of the law. The fallacy of the argument is in supposing that all rules of estoppel are also rules of evidence. The enactment in section 115 is, no doubt, in one sense, a rule of evidence. It is founded upon the well-known doctrine laid down in Pickard v. Sears (1) and other cases that where a man has made a representation to another of a particular fact or state of circumstances, and has thereby wilfully induced that other to act upon that representation and to alter his own previous position, he is estopped as against that person from proving that the fact or state of circumstances was not true. In such a case the rule of estoppel becomes so far a rule of evidence, that evidence is not admissible to disprove the fact or state of circumstances which was represented to exist. But estoppels in the sense in which the term is used in English legal phraseology, are matters of infinite variety, and are by no means confined to the subjects which are dealt with in Chap. VIII of the Evidence Act. A man may be estopped, not only from giving particular evidence but from doing acts, or relying upon any particular arguments or contention, which the rules of equity and good conscience prevent his using as against his opponent. A large number of cases of this kind will be found collected in the notes to Doe v. Oliver (2) and whatever the true meaning of the second section of the Evidence Act may be as regards estoppels which prevent persons from giving evidence, we are clearly of opinion that it does not debar the plaintiffs in this case from availing themselves of their present contention as against the defendants."

So parties will not be allowed to vary their cases on appeal by receding from admissions made in the Court of first instance (3) and may be estopped from appealing by reason of an undertaking that they would not do so. (4) Where a judgment-debtor asked for time and bound himself not to contest the validity of a sale provided he got time, it was held that as he had obtained time and the advantage of a postponement he was estopped from saying that he was not bound by his agreement. (5) And in another case though it was held that there was strictly no estoppel where in an application to execute a decree which provided for no interest the decree-holders put in a prayer as to the award of interest and the judgment-debtor accepting his liability to pay this decretal debt as well as interest obtained from time to time adjournments from the Court to enable him to pay the amount: it was held that the judgment-debtor could not at a later stage of the proceedings dispute the item of interest and was bound to pay interest from the date on which he admitted his liability to pay interest. (6) Estoppels may also arise out of the compromise of legal claims pendente lite (7).

---

(1) 6 A. & E., 469.
(2) 2 Smith, L. C., 8th Ed., pp. 775 et seq. See Casper v. op. cit., 239–262.
(4) Moonash Ameer v. Mahar).een Inderjeet, 11 Moo. I. A., 203; 9 B. L. R., 480 (1871); Anant Das v. Ashburner & Co., 1 A., 67 (1878); Protop Chander v. Antoom, 8 C., 456; 10 C. L. R., 443 (1882); Bahir Das v. Nobin Chander, 29 C., 306 (1901). See also Pissurle v. Attorney-General, 3 L. R., 35, 561; and Rajmohan Goskin v. Gour Mohun, 4 Moo. I. A., 91; 4 W. R., 47 (1869); where it was said that a decree of an Appellate Court obtained after a compromise and an agreement not to prosecute an appeal was an adjudication obtained with fraud.
(7) Civ. Pr. Code, s. 375; Ratnamay Lalji v.
Where a Court has in fact no jurisdiction to entertain a suit or application the consent of the parties thereto cannot give it jurisdiction. Where a person filed a claim in execution-proceedings in the Small Cause Court and thereafter when such claim was disallowed brought a regular suit in which it was held that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim, it was also held that the plaintiff was not estopped from saying that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter because under wrong advice he originally filed a claim in that Court.(1) In, however, an earlier case where a plaintiff put the Subordinate Judge’s Court in motion to execute a decree and thus submitted himself to the jurisdiction of that Court, it was held that the plaintiff was by his own act estopped from saying that the same Court had not jurisdiction to retract its steps by directing a refund of the sum realized under the order for execution, and to replace the parties in the position which they occupied before the irregular execution was had.(2) The mere fact of a plaintiff in a suit for ejectment in a Civil Court having on a previous occasion applied to the Revenue Court, for the ejectment of the defendant would not estop him from asserting that the defendant was unlawfully in possession, that is, as a trespasser.(3)

Persons will not be permitted to take up inconsistent positions.(4) So in the case first cited, which was a suit upon a mortgage, the defendant contended that the suit was premature and the Court accepted that view. The plaintiff again sued and the defendant pleaded limitation, but it was held that it was not open to him to raise the defence.

Nor will a party be permitted to approbate and reprobate in respect of the same matter.(5) Where a person allowed execution to proceed for nearly a year

---

(1) Deno Nath v. Adhor Chunder, 4 C. W. N., 470 (1900); 3 C. W. N., 591.

(2) Govind Vaman v. Saktharam Ramchandra, 3 B., 42 (1878), dissenting from Ganesh Deji v. Saktharam Ramchandra, P. J., 1877, p. 227. See also Gyan Chunder v. Durga Churn, 7 C., 318 (1881), in which it was objected that partition proceedings could not be taken in execution of a decree and that the Court was in error in appointing the Amin as commissioner to effect partition. s. 396 of the Code referring to ‘Commissioners’ in the plural. Pontifex, J., however, held that the order of the Judge was within the meaning of the section 396 of the Code. It may also well be that apart from questions of jurisdiction a person who has acquiesced in proceedings may be estopped from calling them in question.

(4) Mun. Efatoonissa v. Khondkar Khoda, 21 W. R., 374 (1874); Brij Bhosuly v. Mahadaw Dobey, 17 W. R., 422 (1873); Dubees Myns v. Mungur Mook, 2 C. L. R., 208 (1878); Sonaollah v. Immoodeen, 24 W. R., 273 (1875); Swyamchandra Dases v. Krishna Chunder, 6 C., 55 (1850). Where a defendant allowed without objection a purchaser of a plaintiff’s interest in the suit to substitute his name on the record he was estopped from contending that the suit had abated: Bire Chandra v. Bhansi Dhar, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 214 (1869).

(5) See Krsto Indro v. Huromonee Dasses, without objection having twice obtained a stay of sale on the plea that he would satisfy the decree if time were allowed and having approbated the execution-proceedings by payment of part of the debt induced the creditor to grant time for payment of the balance, he was held estopped from saying that the decree was incapable of execution against him. (1) But in all cases it must be shown that there really exists those conditions which are the essentials of an estoppel. So to petition for the postponement of a sale in execution of a decree is not an intentional causing or permitting the decree-holder to believe that the judgment-debtor admits that the decree can be legally executed. (2) And where a son, against whom a suit ought to have been instituted, conducted on behalf of his mother a suit wrongly brought against her, knowing all the time that he and not the mother should have been sued, but there was nothing to show that it was by reason of representation or any conduct of the son that the plaintiff was led to think that the mother was the right person to be sued, it was held that the decree in that suit was not binding on the son and did not estop him, in a subsequent suit against him, from contesting the validity of that decree. (3)

Parties may by conduct of waiver in the course of a suit preclude themselves from asserting the rights which they have waived. (4) The plaintiff in a suit brought in forma pauperis died, but in ignorance of her death the Court passed a decree in her favour. The defendant appealed making respondent to his appeal a lady whom he alleged to be the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff. On this appeal an order was passed by consent of parties sending back the suit to be retried on the merits as between the defendant and the person nominated by him as plaintiff, and it was so retried and a decree was again passed in favour of the plaintiff. Held that it was not thereafter open to the defendant to object that there had been no enquiry into the right of the representative of the original plaintiff to sue as a pauper. (5) In the undermentioned case, a mortgagor was held to be precluded from raising the objection that the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree in the mortgage-suit was invalid by reason of the decree nisi not having been made absolute, if such objection was not raised at an early stage of the proceedings. (6) There can be no estoppel arising out of legal proceedings when the truth of the matter appears on the face of the proceedings. (7) No estoppel can arise from ignorance of law which both parties must be presumed to know. (8) A person can be precluded by his conduct from objecting to an irregularity in procedure which he himself invites. (9)

Generally as to admissions made in the course of judicial proceedings, see note below. (10)

1. R., 1 I. A., 84, 88 (1873); Rup Chand v. Sarbocur Chandra, 10 C. W. N., 747 (1906), s.c., 3 C. L. J., 629. "It is a sound principle of law that as between the same litigant a defendant cannot defeat the claim of the plaintiff by a plea negativing a contention successfully advanced by him in a former suit, if he thereby approbates and repudiates." Varajial Salou v. Bhaiji Nagar das, 6 Bom. L. R., 1103 (1904). See Coventry v. Tulshi Persad, 31 C., 822 (1904).

(1) Coventry v. Tulshi Persad, 31 C., 822 (1904).

(2) Mina Konsvari v. Juggul Setani, 10 C., 196 (1883); s.c., L. R., 10 I. A., 119; 13 C. L. R., 395; see Mwor. Odey v. Musawamu Ladooc, 13 Moo. I. A., 885 (1876); Newton v. Liddiard, 12 Q. B., 925. See also as to petitions for postponement: Giridhari Singh v. Hardeo Narain, 3 I. A., 230 (1876); distinguished in Thakoor Mahab v. Leelanund Singh, 7 C., 613; 9 C. L. R., 398 (1881).

(3) Mohun Das v. Nikomou, 4 C. W. N., 263 (1890).

(9) Timarnau v. Prabhakaru, 2 Bom. L. R., 90 (1899).

(10) Tootea v. Pourno Chandoar, 8 W. R., 125 (1867); Cieu Baw v. Jwana Baw, 2 Mad. H. C. R., 31 (1864); Veelabh Bhules v. Ruma, 9
The law of estoppel in pass by misrepresentation "received in England its distinctive enunciation and form with the leading case of Pickard v. Sears,(1) a case which bears much the same relation to this part of the law of estoppel, as that of the Duchess of Kingston(2) does to estoppel by record. The doctrine had indeed been foreshadowed and applied in a few of the earlier cases ;(3) but Pickard v. Sears was the case in which the doctrine of the Court of Chancery was finally adopted."(4) "Prior to the passing of this Act in 1872, the doctrine of estoppel by representation was enunciated in various forms by the Indian Courts and generally in a manner hostile to its technicality."(5) Since that date, the following sections have been interpreted by many Indian decisions which will be found collected in the notes thereto. The Privy Council have moreover given a full exposition of the law as enacted by section 115, in the case of Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha,(6) which is to be regarded as the leading authority in this country on the subject of estoppel by misrepresentation.

The boundary line between estoppel and breach of contract is often apt to be obscure, but must not be confounded. For one and the same false statement may well be a deceit and a breach of contract and capable of operating by estoppel. These possible qualities of a false representation are not mutually exclusive.(7) A false representation must operate in one of four ways if it is to produce any legal consequences :-(a) It may be a term in a contract in which case its falsity will, according to circumstances, either render the contract voidable or render the person making the representation liable either to damages or to a decree, that he or his representatives shall give effect to the representation. The common case of a warranty is an instance of a representation forming part of a contract. (b) It may operate as an estoppel preventing the person making the representation from denying its truth, as against persons whose conduct has been influenced by it. (c) It may afford a cause of action in tort for deceit. (d) It may amount to a criminal offence. A false pretence by which money is obtained is an instance of a representation amounting to a crime.(8) In the first and third instances the representation gives rise to a cause of action; in the fourth, it produces grounds for the institution of criminal proceedings. An estoppel, however, is only a rule of evidence which precludes a person from denying the truth of some statement previously made by himself or the conventional statement of facts upon the basis of which an agreement has been made.

(1) G. A. & E., 469 (1837). "But the rule of law is clear that where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, as induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time." per Lord Denman, C. J. It will be observed from the remarks in the text that the cases anterior to 1837 will be of little practical assistance on this branch of the law. The principle was stated more broadly by Lord Denman in Gregg v. Wells, 10 A. & E., 90, 97 (1839); both cases were followed by Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Ex. R., 654 (1848).

(2) v. ante, s. 40.

(4) Bigelow, op. cit., 568.

(5) Casperr, op. cit., 41, 43.

(6) L. R., 19 L. A., 403; 296 (1892).

(8) See Alderson v. Maddison, L. R., 5 Exch. D., 293, 296: a representation which influences the conduct of a person to whom it is made is not legally enforceable against the person who makes it unless it operates either as a contract or as an estoppel.
entered into. An action cannot be founded upon an estoppel which is only important as being one step in the progress towards relief on the hypothesis that the defendant is estopped from denying the truth of something which he has said. One party is assisted to relief owing to his opponent being estopped from denying the truth of something which he has said or done. In such a case the estoppel fills up a gap in the evidence and by preventing either plaintiff or defendant from disputing a particular fact alleged, becomes effective either by furthering the action to a successful issue or by annihilating and destroying it. Estoppel is effective where an action must succeed or fail if the defendant or plaintiff is prevented from disputing a particular fact alleged; for example, if an assign of A sues A's trustee to recover the fund assigned, and the trustee is prevented from denying its existence in his hands. Or, in the converse case, an estoppel may be a defence; as if a joint stock company were to sue a share-holder for calls and they were estopped from denying that the shares were paid up, their action would fail. (1)

Referring again to the classification of estoppels under English and American law, it will be observed that the only classes to which the Act expressly or impliedly refers, are the estoppel by record or judgment (sections 40–44), and the estoppel in pais in its modern forms of estoppel by conduct and agreement or contract (sections 115–117). These latter sections do not enact anything different from the law of England on their subject-matter, (2) and moreover, are not, as already observed, exhaustive of the law of estoppel. (3) It is not here possible to enumerate all the cases in which effect has been given to estoppels in English Courts nor to minutely classify a branch of the law which is not only of recent but of actual present growth. As cases of difficulty from time to time arise for determination, recourse must be had to the large body of decisions which exists on this subject in England and America, as also in this country, some of which will be found collected in the notes to the following sections.

115. When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing.

Illustration.

A intentionally and falsely leads B to believe that certain land belongs to A, and thereby induces B to buy and pay for it.

The land afterwards becomes the property of A, and A seeks to set aside the sale on the ground that, at the time of the sale, he had no title. He must not be allowed to prove his want of title. (4)

Principle.—The principle upon which the rule of estoppel rests is, that it would be most inequitable and unjust that if one person by a representation

---

(1) Low v. Bowser, Lt. R., 3 Ch., 82 (1891); see Casperson, op. cit., 4, 28–30.

(2) See Sures Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 19 I. A., 203; 20 C., 294 (1902); the Indian leading case on the subject of Estoppel.

(4) See Radhey Lal v. Mahesh Prasad, 7 A., 864 (1885); Act IV of 1882, s. 43, and cases cited post in notes to paragraph "Declaration, Act Omission." When a person having a limited interest, namely, a sub-lessee, granted a perpetual lease and afterwards acquired the proprietary right, he was held estopped from disputing the perpetual lease: Kurv Chunder v. Jamski Perand 1 N.W. P. Rep., 165. See Bajaj Amer v. Hama Singh, 20 W. R., 291 (1873).
made, or by conduct amounting to a representation, has induced another to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it.\(^1\)

\(^{\text{ss. 118, 117 (Estoppel of tenant, licensee, acceptor, bailee.)}}\)

COMMENTARY.

A general classification of estoppels and a short account of their position in the law of evidence has been given in the Introduction to this Chapter to which reference should, if necessary, be made. In dealing with this and the following sections, it is to be remembered, \textit{firstly}, that they are not exhaustive of the law of estoppel since all rules of estoppel are not also rules of evidence;\(^2\) \textit{secondly}, that neither this,\(^3\) nor, it may be added, the following sections enact as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel. Cases of estoppel may therefore arise which are not within the purview of these section at all, and those which are within such purview will (in the absence of an authoritative ruling of the Courts of this country) be determinable upon the principles which regulate English Courts, and which are to be found embodied in English decisions.\(^4\)

This section deals with estoppel by "representation," or "misrepresentation," that term including both express and implied statements. It may be described as estoppel by "misrepresentation," for though in strict legal theory the proposition that the representation must be untrue is probably not essential and the person is none the less bound to admit a fact because it is true: still in practice the doctrine only obtains legal significance when there has been a misleading or in other words when the admission exacted from \(A\) by reason of his conduct, is of facts which are not capable of actual proof.\(^5\) It is not necessary that there should be an express statement; whatever word, action, or conduct conveys a clear impression as of a fact is embraced in the term. Indeed the term practically includes silence in certain cases, for silence where one is bound to speak is ordinarily equivalent to an admission of the fact.\(^6\) And so the section speaks not only of declarations but also of acts and omissions. As it is immaterial in what form the representation is made, so it be a representation, so also is it immaterial to know what the motive or the state of knowledge is of the party making the representation. The main determining element in every case is not the motive or the state of knowledge of the party disputed, but the effect of his representation or conduct as having induced another to act on the faith of such representation or conduct.\(^7\) The principle

\(^{\text{(2) Ganges Manufacturing Co. v. Sourwull, 5 C., 653 (1880); v. ante, p. 637.}}\)

\(^{\text{(3) Sarat Chandra v. Gopal Chunder, 19 I. A., 203, 215, (1892); s.c., 20 C., 295 ["The learned Counsel who argued the present case on either side were agreed that the terms of the Indian Evidence Act did not enact as law in India anything different from the law in England on the subject of estoppel, and their Lordships entirely adopt that view."]}}\)

\(^{\text{(4) American decisions, though not of course of authority may, in so far as American law is founded upon English law, also be referred to as aids to determination upon this or other questions of evidence. See Preface.}}\)

\(^{\text{(5) Cababe's Estoppel, 60.}}\)

\(^{\text{(7) Sarat Chandra v. Gopal Chunder, 19 I. A., 203, 215 (1892). As to mistake of law,}}\)

\(^{\text{see Kuvaji v. Babai, 19 B., 374 (1891), and mistake of fact, Naikubhai v. Mulchand, 3 Bom. L. R., 535 (1901).}}\)
upon which the rule rests is that the situation of the one party having been changed by the representation, the person who made the latter shall not be permitted to disaffirm the statement which has induced such change. (1) Three things only are necessary in order to bring a case within the scope of this section:— (a) there must have been a "representation" (2) which amounts to an intentional causing or permitting belief in another; (b) there must have been belief on the part of that other; and (c) there must have been action arising out of that belief. When these facts are shown, an estoppel arises which consists in holding for truth the representation acted upon when the person who made it or his privies seek to deny its truth and to deprive the party who has acted upon it of the benefit obtained. (3) Assuming that all the conditions necessary to effect an estoppel are not fulfilled, a representation may still operate as an admission—that is, a statement which suggests any inference as to any fact in issue or relevant fact and may be evidence, though not conclusive, against the party who has made it. (4) The doctrine of estoppel cannot be applied to an Act of the Legislature, and it is not competent to parties to a contract to estop themselves or anybody else in the face of such an Act. So in the face of a clear legislative enactment like the fourth section of the Indian Companies Act, the law recognises no estoppel as between parties who are in pari delicto as the parties in the case cited below were held to be, and the defendants were not estopped from setting up the plea of illegality. (5) It is an absolutely fundamental limitation on the application of the doctrine of estoppel that it cannot be applied with the object or result of altering the law of the land. The law for instance imposes fetters upon the capacity of certain persons to incur legal obligations and particularly upon their contractual capacity. It invalidates and renders null and void certain transactions, on the ground that they are illegal. It attaches certain incidents to property, as, for instance, by prescribing the mode in which it shall be transferred. This general law is in no way altered by the doctrine of estoppel. It is not allowed to enlarge the status or capacity of parties, nor to be a cloak for illegality: nor to alter the incidents of property. The admission exacted must always be of something which can legally be done by the party from whom it is exacted. (6) Estoppel, like acquiescence, is not a question of fact but of legal inference from the facts found. (7)

A party may himself make the representation or it may be made by him through the agency of some other person by whose acts he is bound. In the first case there is no difficulty except when the representation is made by persons under a disability to contract. (8)

It has been held by the Bombay High Court (9) that an infant is not excepted by the terms of this section and by the Calcutta High Court (Maclean,

---

(2) In Bahadur Singh v. Mohar Singh, 24 A., 94, 107 (1901), the Privy Council held that there was no evidence of any representation on which to found an estoppel.

(3) Bigelow, op. cit., 567.

(6) Cabbage’s Estoppel, 123, 124.

(7) Nursing Das v. Rakhimabhai, 6 Bom. L. R., 440 (1904); s. o., 28 B., 440. The question of estoppel is a mixed question of law and fact. Nagindas Harjivandas v. Kara James, 6 Bom. L. R., 603 (1904).

(8) See Bigelow, op. cit., 589–597, where the question of the estoppel of parties under disability is discussed. A man cannot set up the incapacity of the party with whom he has contracted in bar of an action by that party for breach of the contract. Legal disability as e.g., in the case of an infant is a defence personal to him who is under it and cannot be made use of by another. Bigelow, op. cit., 465.

(9) Ganesab Lala v. Bapu, 21 B., 198 (1893).
C. J., and Prinsep, J.) (1) that the term "person" in this section is amply satisfied by holding it to apply to one who is of full age and competent to contract; and that this section has no application to the case of a minor. The judgment of Ameer Ali, J., in the same case proceeded on the ground not that the section was inapplicable because it did not refer to the case of a minor at all, but that when the law of contract declared that an infant should not be liable upon a contract or in respect of a fraud in connection with a contract, he cannot be made liable upon the same contract by means of an estoppel under this section; in other words, that, as already stated, the general law cannot be altered by estoppel. (2) Upon an appeal in the latter case to the Privy Council their Lordships said: "The Courts below seem to have decided that this section does not apply to infants; but their Lordships do not think it necessary to deal with that question now." (3) It may be that the judgments of the majority of the High Court should be read as applicable simply to cases such as that which was before it, but if not, it is respectfully submitted in this, as it was in the earlier editions of this work, that the broad assertion that the doctrine of estoppel in pais has no application whatever to infants, is incorrect. (4) The position would appear to be this, that the law relating to estoppel must be read together with, and subject to, other laws in force, such as those relating to contract and transfer of property, and that where such laws declare an infant to be free of liability in respect of a particular transaction, he cannot be made liable by virtue of an estoppel, for an estoppel cannot alter the law, but that in other cases an infant may be estopped. An infant is not liable upon a contract nor for a wrong arising out of, or immediately connected with his contract, such as a fraudulent representation at the time of making the contract that he is of full age. (5) A person under disability cannot do by an act in pais what he cannot do by deed. (6) He cannot by his own act enlarge his legal capacity to contract or to convey. He cannot be made liable upon a contract by means of an estoppel under this section, if it be elsewhere declared that he shall not be liable upon a contract. To say that by acts in pais that could be done in effect which could not be done by deed would be practically to dispense with all the limitations the law has imposed on the capacity to contract. (7) So if a person sue an infant upon a contract, such contract having been entered into on the faith of a representation by the infant that he was of full age, the infant will not be estopped from pleading his minority in answer to a claim to fix him with personal liability to a money-decree notwithstanding his fraudulent representation. (8) But though this section may not apply, the Court may, in other cases, acting on well-recognised principles of equity, relieve against an infant's fraud. An infant will not be permitted to take advantage of his own fraud, and he will be estopped in answer to such equity from pleading his

(1) Brohmo Dutt v. Dharmodass Ghosh, 26 C., 388 (1898); [dissenting from Ganesh Lala v. Bapu, 21 B., 198 (1885)].

(2) ib, at p. 304.

(3) Mohun Bibi v. Dharmodass Ghose, 30 C., 539, 545 (1903); 7 C. W. N., 441; 5 Bom. L. R., 421 [referred to with reference to s. 41 of the Specific Relief Act in Dattaram v. Vinayak, 28 B., 181 (1903)].

(4) See Bigelow, op. cit., 599—607, where the question of the estoppel of parties under disability is discussed, 9 C. W. N., 220, 220x, 22xviii.

(5) Pollock on contract, 6th Ed., 52, 72, and cases there cited. It is clear that an action cannot be maintained on a contract made with an infant for falsely representing himself to be of age at the time; the representation in such case not operating as an estoppel; Bigelow, op. cit., 604, 605; Johnson v. Pye, Sid., 258; Bartlett v. Wells, 1 B. & S., 836. The Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v. Fairhurst, 9 Ex., 422 (1854).

See as to infants, statement of account, Hedley v. Holt, 4 C. & P., 104; and disproof of allegation that goods supplied were necessary; Barnes & Co. v. Toye, 13 Q. B. D., 410; Johnstone v. Marks, 19 Q. B. D., 509; Ryder v. Wombwell L. R., 3 Ex., 90 dissented from.

(6) Brohmo Dutt v. Dharmodass Ghosh, 26 C., 388, 394 (1898).

(7) Bigelow, op. cit., 600.

(8) Dhanmani v. Ramchunder G'teen, 1 C. W. N., 270 (1890); and cases there cited; s. c., 24 C., 246. Explained in Sreemundi Mohun Bibi v. Sarate Chunder, 2 C. W. N., 18 (1897).
minority. (1) Though a decree for personal payment on the contract, express or implied in a mortgage, cannot be made against an infant, however fraudulent he might be, the liability of a fraudulent infant to a decree for sale or foreclosure is, it has been held, a different thing. So where an infant by fraudulent misrepresentation as to his age induced the plaintiff to advance him money on the security of a mortgage, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to a mortgage decree for the amount to be realised only from the mortgaged property. (2) But proof of fraud and deceit is essential. Though it is unquestionably within the power of the Court administering equitable principles to deprive a fraudulent minor of the benefits flowing from the plea of infancy; one who invokes the aid of that power must come to the Court with clean hands and must further establish that a fraud was practised on him by the minor and that he was deceived into action by that fraud. (3) This section does not apply to a case where the statement relied upon is made to a person who knows the real facts and is not misled by the untrue statement. There can be no estoppel where the truth of the matter is known to both parties. A false representation made to a person who knows it to be false is not such a fraud as to take away the privilege of infancy. (4)

An infant is liable for a tort committed by him. And when an infant has induced persons to deal with him by falsely representing himself as of full age, he incurs an obligation in equity to restore any advantage he has obtained by such representations to the person from whom he has obtained it. (5) In cases of fraud separate from contract a person under disability may estop himself to deny the truth of his representation. (6) So if an infant having a right to an estate permits or encourages a purchaser to buy it of another without asserting any claim to it, the purchaser will be entitled to hold against the persons who has the right although covert or under age. (7) As regards suits by a minor it was held in the undermentioned case (8) that a minor who, representing himself to be major and competent to manage his own affairs, collects rent and gives receipt therefor, is estopped by his conduct from recovering again the money once paid to him by instituting a suit through his guardian.

The principle of estoppel by conduct applies to corporations (9) as well as to individuals, with this qualification, that if the act undertaken was in and of

---

(1) Cory v. Gartken, 2 Madd., 50. See Sreemadjy Mohun v. Saral Chunder, 2 C. W. N., 18, 26, 27 (1897) and cases there cited.

(2) Sreemady Mohun v. Saral Chunder, 2 C. W. N., 18 (1897); in appeal, 25 C., 371. In Thoraston v. Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society, 1 Ch. (1902), at p. 12, it was pointed out that no question of fraud arose in that case—see appeal to House of Lords (1903), A. C., 6.

(3) Dharmadasi Ghosh v. Brahmo Dutt, 2 C. W. N., 330 (1893); affirmed on appeal, 3 C. W. N., 488 (1899), a. c., 26 C., 381; and by Privy Council, 30 C., 539 (1902.)

(4) Mohori Bibro v. Dharmadas Ghose, 30 C., 539 (1903).

(5) See Pollock on Contract, 6th Ed., 73—78, and cases there cited: in particular, Stikeman v. Dawson, 1 DeG. & Sm., 90; see also Dhammon v. Rameshunder Ghose, supra; Wharton, Ev., § 1161.

(6) Bigelow, op. cit., 606.

(7) See Savage v. Foster, L. C., in Equity; Watts v. Crosswell, 9 Vin., 415; if an infant is old and cunning enough to contrive and carry on a fraud, he ought to make satisfaction for it," per Lord Cowper); and case cited in Cory v. Gartken,

2 Madd., 48, 48—51; Sugden Vendors, 743, 14th Ed., Bigelow, op. cit., 605, 606, 607; the existence of an estoppel by conduct does not always depend upon the existence of a right of action for deceit; for while there may be an estoppel without the right of action in some cases, the estoppel always arises where the action of deceit would be maintainable, ibid., 606.

(8) Ram Ratan v. Shew Nandan, 29 C., 125 (1901).

(9) See on this subject, Bigelow, op. cit., 481—470, and cases there cited (and see Index, a.); Caspera, op. cit., 187—206 and cases there cited, where the subject will be found dealt with (a) as to membership and retirement; (b) as to the register; (c) as to the issuing of certificates of shares; (d) as to debeatures irregularly issued; (e) estoppel by issue of paid-up shares; (f) negligence on the part of members of a company; (g) effect of the company's seal [see Oudrakh v. Vankar, 2 M., 195 (1878)]. Estoppels against corporations being of infrequent occurrence in this country, it has not been here thought necessary to deal with this important subject at length. The Indian cases are scanty. But itself ultra vires (1) of the corporation, no act of the body can have the effect of estopping it from alleging its want of power to do what was undertaken. Just, as according to a previous observation, an infant cannot by his act in pais create in the face of an Act, regulating his position, a contractual liability, so the powers of the ordinary corporation being dependent upon the statute which created the body, those powers cannot be enlarged by the body itself; and the act in question being in itself ultra vires, the corporation cannot make it otherwise, whether directly or indirectly.

In the case of corporations, particularly joint stock companies, the application of the rule sometimes gives rise to difficulty, but such difficulty is met by bearing in mind the distinction between those things which the company can do, if it goes the proper way to work to do them and those things which by virtue of its constitution the company can under no circumstances do at all. (2) There may be an estoppel against the Crown. (3) Apart from agency, the representation of one person may be binding on another, if both are to be regarded in the light of one person. So it has been held in America that the acts and admissions of one of several administrators, which amount to an estoppel against him will work an estoppel against all, it being said that where there are several administrators or executors they must be regarded in the light of an individual person. (4)

Secondly, a party may be estopped by reason of the representation of some person by whose acts he is bound. The rule of estoppel between parties covers, of course, the misrepresentations of agents, even agents of corporations, when made in the scope of their employ. When an agency really exists, the principal is estopped to deny the truth of the agent’s statements, express or tacit, just as much as if he himself had made them, subject to the same limitations that would prevail in that case. But an agent or a servant is not himself estopped when acting by direction of his principal unless his own conduct was such as to estop him. (5)

An estoppel against a principal is dealt with by section 237 of the Contract Act, which enacts that when an agent has, without authority, done acts or incurred obligations to third persons on behalf of his principal, the latter is bound by such acts or obligations, if he has by his words or conduct induced such as the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), reproduces the English Act, 25 and 26 Vic., c. 98: 30 and 31 Vic., c. 131: 40 and 41 Vic., c. 261, reference may and should be made to the English case-law and the text-books on the subject of the law relating to corporations. In two recent cases it was held that the estoppel was not established; Rice—Carnac v. New Mijusheil Co., 26 B., 54 (1901) [Sale of shares—voucher by company of title of vendor—pocas receipt issued by company.]—See Mahant v. Coimbatore Spinning Co., 26 M., 79 (1902) [application for rectification of register.]

(1) Fairtitle v. Gilbert, 2 T. R., 169; Ex parte Watson, L. R., 21 Q. B. D., 301; Barrow’s Case, L. R., 14 Ch. D., 441: [*there can be no estoppel in the face of an Act of Parliament."

Per Bacon, V. C.; Bigelow, op. cit. 407.

(2) Cabane’s Estoppel, 125, 126.

(3) Touloumoumy Dossee v. Maria Margery, II B. L. R., 144 (1873). In re PVRMMANSADAS JENARDAS, 7 B., 109, 117 (1889); see this question of Estoppel against the State discussed; Bigelow, op. cit., 596, note (2), 406 561.

(4) Bigelow, op. cit., 599; but see also p. 122. ante, note (4).

(5) Bigelow, op. cit., 596; as to agents of corporation, see Hooldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank, L R., 5 Asq. Ca., 331. As to the authority of agents, see Contract Act, ss. 186, 187, 188, 189; a wife’s representations will not affect the husband either as admissions or estoppel, unless he has constituted her his agent. The mere relation creates no agency [v. ante, p. 127; Bigelow, op. cit., 596, note (3)]. There must be a real agency. Thus a widow is not estopped by representations made in her absence by an administrator, in selling land of the intestate, that it is free from claims of dower (ib.). As to sub-agents, see Contract Act, ss. 190—195; ratification, ib., ss. 196—200; revocation of authority, ib., ss. 201—210; effect of agency on contracts with third person; scope of authority, ib., ss. 226—236; effect of misrepresentation or fraud of agent, ib., n. 238.
third persons to believe that such acts and obligations were within the scope of the agent's authority. In such cases there is an estoppel. (1) In the undermentioned case the right of a third party against the principal on the contract of his agent, though made in excess of the agent's actual authority, was nevertheless enforced where the evidence showed that the contracting party had been led into an honest belief in the existence of the authority to the extent apparent to him. (2) There may also arise estoppels against agents in favour of their principals or of third parties. (3) Two cases of estoppel in the case of partners
(a branch of the law of principal and agent) have been dealt with in sections 245, 246 of the Contract Act. When a man holds himself out as a partner or allows others to use his name, he is estopped from denying his assumed character upon the faith of which creditors may be presumed to have acted and becomes a partner by estoppel. (5) The misrepresentation of a trustee in respect of the trust-estate to one having notice that it is such will not work as estoppel upon an innocent cestui-que-trust. (6)

If a trustee takes upon himself to answer the inquiries of a stranger about to deal with the cestuis-que-trust, he is not under any legal obligation to do more than to give honest answers to the best of his actual knowledge and belief; he is not bound to make inquiries himself: Provided he answers honestly, he incurs no liability to the enquirer, unless he binds himself by a statement amounting to a warranty or so expresses himself as to be estopped from afterwards denying the truth of what he has said. (7) The estoppel against a trustee in favour of a cestui-que-trust has been likened to that between landlord and tenant.
Trustees cannot set up, as against their cestuis-que-trust, the adverse title of third parties. "It is a common principle of law that a tenant who has paid rent to his landlord cannot say 'you are not the owner of the property'; the fact of having paid rent prevents his doing it. The same thing occurs where persons are made trustees for the owner of property; if they acknowledge the trust for a considerable time, they cannot say that any other persons are their cestuis-que-trust, or 'we will turn you out of the property.' This is an analogous case." (8)
A creditor does not lose his right to sue the executors, and to recover from them, by mere laches. But if the creditor misleads the executor so that they are thereby induced to part with the assets in a manner which would be a devastavit, then the creditor cannot complain of the devastavit. (9) So if a cestui-que-trust concur in a breach of trust, he is estopped from proceeding against the trustee for the consequences of the act, and à fortiori a cestui-que-trust who is also a trustee cannot hold his co-trustee responsible for any act in which they both joined. (10)

---

(1) See Ramden v. Dyson, 1 E. & I. A., 129, 188, and other cases cited in Caspers, op. cit., 150—156; and Bigelow, op. cit., 487, 488, 565, 588, where the distinction between agency proper and estoppel is pointed out. A person assuming to act in a contract as principal will afterwards be estopped from saying that he was in fact acting only as agent ib., 687; Reigard v. McNeil, 38, Ill., 400 (Amer.) As to the effect of misrepresentations made by agents in the course of business, as also in matters without their authority, see Contract Act, s. 238.

(2) Ram Pertak v. Marshall, 26 C., 701 (1888).

(3) See cases cited in Caspers, op. cit., 156—160.

(4) Chund & Chur v. Eduljee Coms, 8 C., 678, 684 (1893).

(5) Mallal v. Smith, v. Court of Wards, L. R., 4
P. C., 419, 425; see Lindley's Partnership, 5th Ed., 40—47; Pollock's Partnership, 26—29; Cas-pers, op. cit., 162—166; Bigelow, op. cit., 564, 565.

(6) Bigelow, op. cit., 568, 590; Keate v. Philibe, 18 Ch. D., 560, 577; as to the estoppel against a trustee, see Neasome v. Flowers, 30 Beav., 491, 470.

(7) Lose v. Bouwer, L. R., 3 Ch. (1890), 82;
Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Yeo, 470.

(8) Neasome v. Flowers, 30 Beav., 491, 470, per Sir John Romilly, M. R., nor can he assert against the trust any title (paramount and adverse to the trust), which he may himself have; Attorney-General v. Musoro, 2 Deo. & Sm., 122, 123. A trustee may not set up any title adverse to that of the cestui-que-trust. Bigelow, Estoppel, 545.
Act II of 1882, s. 14.

(9) In re Birch, L. R., 27 Ch. D., 622, 627.

(10) Lewin, Trusts, 5th Ed., 018; see 6thth v.
Hughes, L. R., 3 Ch. (1892), 106; Act II of 1882,
s. 23, 23, 68.
A trustee, alleging that the trust-property, consisting of land, was his own property, mortgaged it. The mortgagee took the mortgage in good faith, for valuable consideration, and without notice of the trust. The mortgagee obtained a decree against the trustee for the sale of the land, and the land was sold in execution of that decree. The trustee subsequently brought a suit to recover the land from the purchaser on the ground that it was trust-property, and that he had no power to transfer it. To this suit none of the beneficiaries under the trust were parties. (1) Held that the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct from recovering possession of the land. (2) It may well be, that a succeeding trustee should not be allowed to impeach a former trustee's act when it is one of that character, without its following, as a logical consequence, that where the trustee avowedly acts in breach or repudiation of the trust such act should be binding by estoppel upon his successors in the trust. (3) In the aforementioned case the plaintiff was held bound by the conduct of his father even though technically he succeeded as reviverison in his own right. (4) As to the estoppels of tenants, licensees, bailors and acceptors of bills of exchange, see sections 116 and 117, post, and notes thereto.

As already observed the form of the representation is immaterial. The representation may be express or implied: for whatever word, action or conduct conveys a clear impression as of a fact is embraced in that term. There is no necessity for an express verbal statement or indeed any verbal statement whatsoever. An act may involve and amount to a distinct declaration which will found an estoppel. So if a man take an active part in carrying out a mortgage on behalf of another as by signing the deed and receiving the consideration-money, his acts may amount to a declaration of the validity of the mortgage as against any claim of his own, and his acting as the attorney of that other in the matter of the mortgage may amount to a declaration, that that other is the owner in possession of the property covered thereby. (5) So also a mere omission may involve a representation. Thus silence where one is bound to speak is ordinarily equivalent to an admission of the fact. (6) So if a person stands by and allows another to advance or expend money on property on which he has a charge or encumbrance, he may be estopped by his conduct of acquiescence. (7) And conduct by negligence or omission where there is a duty to disclose the truth may often have the same effect. (8) But whatever the form in which the representation be made it must, in order to justify a prudent man in acting upon it, be not doubtful, or matter of questionable inference, certainly being an essential of all estoppels which must be clear and unambiguous. (9) This does

---

(1) The Court observed: "We make no remark with regard to the beneficiaries under the trust, as they, having made no effort to figure in the suit, do not appear to be interesting themselves in the matter."

(3) Shri Ganesh v. Keshavur Govind, 16 B., 822, 836, 837 (1880).

(6) Bigelow, op. cit., 571, 583, 584 et seq.

(7) Ramanan v. Dyson, L. R., 1 E., & L., App. 129, 140; Ex-parte Ford, L. R., 1 Ch. D., 521, 528; Nundo Kumar v. Bonamala Gayan, 29 C., 871 (1902). [Assuming that acquiescence amounts to a representation it must be found that it was intended that party should believe or act upon it or that in point of fact they did act upon it.]

(8) Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Ex., 654; v. post. Besides fraud there may be an estoppel by negligence and by circumstances: Vinayak v. Govind, 2 Bom. L. R., 820, 829, 830 (1890). And see as to negligence: Longman v. Bath Electric Tramways, 1 Ch., (1905), 646, 663.

(9) Rani Mewa v. Rani Hulas, 13 B. L. R., 312 (1874); 1 I. A., 161; (the nature of an estoppel being to exclude an inquiry by evidence into the truth, those who rely upon a statement as an estoppel must clearly establish that it does amount to that which they assert); Rivett Carne v. New Mogulain Co., 28 B., 75 (1901); s. c., 3 Bom. L. R.,
not mean that either the language or the conduct must be such that it cannot possibly be open to different constructions, but only that it must be such as will be reasonably understood in a particular sense by the person to whom it is addressed. (1) On the other hand, a plain representation cannot be cut down from its natural and proper import in the particular situation or transaction. This import may be technical and peculiar, or popular according to the business concerned, modified, of course, by any actual understanding of both parties. A person who has made a representation cannot escape the consequences by showing that in a literal sense it is true, if in its natural sense it is untrue. A half-truth too is generally a whole lie in effect; if the part suppressed would make the part stated false, there is a false representation, that is, the representation is taken to consist of the part stated and a denial of anything to the contrary. (2) This assumes, of course, that the stated part is a clear, positive statement of fact. Thus a representation that shares of stock are “paid up” must reasonably be understood, and so must be held to mean that they are paid up in cash. (3) In like manner, however definite the representation, it cannot be enlarged or acted upon otherwise than according to its terms or natural import and clear meaning; and the whole representation (as is indeed the rule with regard to all admissions) must be taken together. One part, though sufficient alone to create an estoppel, cannot be separated from another part connected with it, which takes away its effect, though only by making the other part uncertain. (5) The section does not apply to a case in which a belief otherwise caused has been only allowed to continue by reason of any omission on the part of the person against whom the estoppel is sought to be raised. (6) The representation must be of a nature to lead naturally, that is, to lead a man of prudence to the action taken, hence it must be of fact and material, having reference to a present or past state of things. Representations of law, opinion, or intention are generally insufficient. (7) The reason of the doctrine of estoppel wholly fails when the representation relates only to a present intention or purpose of a party, because being in its nature uncertain and liable to change it could not properly form a basis or inducement upon which a party could reasonably adopt any fixed and permanent course of action. (8) A promise de futuro cannot be an estoppel. (9)

616 [certainty is essential to all estoppels], Co. Litt., 352, b. [Every estoppel because it concludes the man to acknowledge the truth must be certain to every intent, and not to be taken by argument or inference]; Los v. Bowere, L. R., 1801, 3 Ch., 106, 113; Freeman v. Cooke, supra; Heath v. Crealock, L. R., 10 Ch., 22; Bigelow, op. cit., 578. An estoppel to have any judicial value must be clear and non-ambiguous; it must also be free, voluntary and without any artifice; Moniz v. National Bank, 2 Bom. L. R., 1041 (1900). When an estoppel is pleaded against a party, the facts relied upon as leading to it should be precise and unambiguous: Aba v. Somebai, 3 Bom. L. R., 832 (1901); Gojaspal v. Nilo, 6 Bom. L. R., 864, 867 (1904).

(1) Los v. Bowere, supra at p. 106; “If a party uses language which, in the ordinary course of business and the general sense in which words are understood, conveys a certain meaning, he cannot afterwards say he is not bound, if another so understanding it has acted upon it.” Corssie v. Abington, 4 H. & N., 549, 555, per Pollock, C. B.

(2) Bigelow, op. cit., 570, 580, citing Per: Gurney, 6 H. L., 577, 605; Central Ry. Co. v. Knack, 2 H. L. 69, 113; Corbett v. Brown, 8 B. R., 33; though none of the cases cited are cases of estoppel, that learned author submits that there can be no doubt that they are applicable to the present subject.

(4) v. ams, pp. 115-117 and cases there cited.

(5) Bigelow, op. cit., 582, (as to enlargement of the representation, see Syed Nurooa v. Ras Saher, 19 L. A., 221, 224, 227 (1899).

(7) lb., 572, 574, 583; v. post.

(9) George Whitechurch, Ed. v. Cunningham, 5 C. W. N., 408 (1901), 408. A. C., 1, 17 at p. 130; Jethabhai v. Nathubhai, 28 B., 359 (1904) at p. 407; see also with regard to representation as to the future Rimii-Carmac v. New Mofussil Co., 28 B., at p. 69 (1901).
Assuming that there has been a representation in the sense mentioned, and that that representation is clear and unambiguous, and the other party has been induced to act thereby, it is immaterial what the intention, motive or state of knowledge of the party making the representation was. (1) But though the intention is immaterial so far as the creation of the estoppel is concerned, representations may be, and have been, classified with reference to the intention with which they may be made. A person may be estopped, if he has made either a fraudulent misrepresentation, or made a false statement without fraud but negligently, or has made a false representation without fraud or negligence. (2) In the case of Carr v. London and N.-W. Railway Company, (3) a very leading decision upon this subject, the following four recognised propositions of an estoppel in pais or modes in which it may arise were laid down (4):

(a) "One such proposition is, if a man by his words or conduct wilfully endeavours to cause another to believe in a certain state of things, which the first knows to be false, and if the second believes in such a state of things and acts upon his belief, he who knowingly made the false statement is estopped from averring afterwards that such a state of things did not in fact exist." (5)

This proposition deals with fraudulent representations. (6)

(b) "Another recognised proposition seems to be that, if a man, either in express terms or by conduct, makes a representation to another of the existence of a certain state of facts which he intends to be acted upon in a certain way, and it be acted upon in that way in the belief of the existence of such a state of facts, to the damage of him who so believes and acts, the first is estopped from denying the existence of such a state of facts."

This proposition deals with representations made without fraud. (7)

(c) "And another proposition is, that, if a man, whatever his real meaning may be, so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take his conduct to mean a certain representation of facts and that it was a true representation, and, that the latter was intended to act upon it in a particular way, and he with such belief does act in that way to his damage, the first is estopped from denying that the facts were represented." (8)

(1) v. ante, p. 644.
(2) Secon Leign & Co. v. Lafone, L. R., 19 Q. B. D., 70.
(3) L. R., 10 C. P., 307 (1875).
(4) These propositions were approved in Company v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 11 Q. B. D., 776; and in Secon Leign & Co. v. Lafone, L. R., 19 Q. E. D., 68. "Estoppels may arise in various grounds, all of which the judgment in Carr v. The London & N. W. Ry. Co., endeavours to state, and each of the grounds on which an estoppel may arise, there stated, is intended to be independent and exclusive of the others." per Brett, M. P., in Secon Leign & Co. v. Lafone, L. R., 19 Q. E. D., 68, 70 (1881). Both these cases were cited and approved by the Privy Council in Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 19 I. A., 203, 217 (1892).
(5) See for examples of representations of this character giving rise to estoppels: —McCance v. London and N.-W. Railway Co., 7 H. & M., 477. A person having wilfully made a false statement as to the value of certain horses in order to induce a railway company to carry them at a lower rate of freight: held to be thereby estopped from proving their real and greater value in an action against the Company for their loss; —Cherry v. Colonial Bank of Australasia, L. R., 3 P. C., 24; —Mishe Lall v. Lalla Chooness, 1 I. A., 144 (1873); and v. R., 21 W. R., 21; Baboo Radhakissen v. Munuswmat Shureshinnies, W. R., 11, (1864).
(6) See as to fraudulent misrepresentations: Peck v. Derry, L. R., 37 Ch. D., 541.
(7) See Howard v. Hudson, 2 E. & B., 1, where Crompton, J., says: "The rule, as explained in Freeman v. Cook, takes in all the important commercial cases, in which a representation is made not wilfully but in any bad sense of the word, not malo animo, or with intent to defraud or deceive, but so far wilfully that the party making the representation on which the other acts means it to be acted upon in that way." See Madhub Chunder v. Law, 13 B. L. R., 594 (1874).
(8) The case of Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 19 I. A., 203; 29 C., 296 (1892), is an example of this proposition. In a case in the same volume somewhat resembling the former
The first two propositions deal with both "declaration" and "act"; this deals with "act" only and the inferences which may be drawn from conduct.(1)

(d) "There is yet another proposition as to estoppel. If, in the transaction itself, which is in dispute one has led another into belief of a certain state of facts by conduct of culpable negligence calculated to have that result, and such culpable negligence has been the proximate cause (2) of leading and has led the other to act by mistake upon such belief, to his prejudice, the second (3) cannot be heard afterwards as against the first(4) to show that the state of facts referred to did not exist." (5)

This proposition deals primarily with what the section refers to as "omission." Not only must the neglect be in the transaction itself and be the proximate cause of leading the party into mistake: but it also must be the neglect of some duty(6) that is, owing to the person led into belief and not merely neglect of what would be prudent in respect to the party himself, or even to some duty owing to third persons with whom those seeking to set up the estoppel are not privy.(7)

With reference to these propositions, the Privy Council, in the case of Sarai Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha(8) point out that there may be statements made which have induced another party to do that from which otherwise he would have abstained, and which cannot properly be characterised as "misrepresentations," as for example, what occurred in that case in which the inference to be drawn from the conduct of the party estopped was either that the conveyance in favour of his mother was valid in itself or at all events that he, as the party having an interest to challenge it, had elected to consent to its being treated as valid. It has been recently held that no representations can be relied on as estoppels if they have been induced by the concealment of any material fact on the part of those who seek to use them as such: and if the person to whom they are made knows something which, if revealed, would have been calculated to influence the other to hesitate or seek for further information before speaking positively, and that something has been withheld, the representation ought not to be treated as an estoppel.(9) in its facts there was held to be no estoppel; Syed Nural v. Sheik Sahan, 19 I. A., 221 (1892).

(1) See Cornish v. Abington, 4 H. & N., 549, 555. Where a person has conducted himself so as to mislead another, he cannot gainsay the reasonable inference to be drawn from his conduct. See Khadar v. Subramaniam, 11 M., 12 (1887).

(2) In the subsequent case of Iscan Laing & Co. v. Lafone, L. R., 19 Q. B. D., 68, Brett, M. R., (with him Lopes, L. J., concurring), stated that he would prefer to insert in the proposition the word "real" instead of the word "proximate" (B., 70, 71). Fry, L. J., however, said: "I will not attempt to give any paraphrase of the word "proximate," the doctrine of causation involves much difficulty in philosophy as in law; and I do not feel sure that the term "real" is any more free from difficulty than the term "proximate" (B., 74). See Swan v. North British Australasian Co., 2 H. & C., 75; "Proximate cause" means "direct and immediate cause." Cooney v. Great Eastern Ry. Co., 11 Q. B. D., 776, 780. In the recent case of Longman v. Bath Electric Tramways Co., 1905, 1 Ch., 646 at p. 965, it was held that mere negligence will not raise an estoppel. There must be negligence which is the real and immediate cause of the damage done.

(3) Quere: "first," the person referred to is the party guilty of negligence.

(4) Quere: "second" see last note.

(6) "There can be no negligence unless there be a duty" per Brett, M. R., in Cooney v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 11 Q. B. D., 776, 780.

(7) Swan v. N. B. Australasian Co., 2 H. & C., 175, per Blackburn, J., a party on whom there is no duty to disclose a fact may of course by his misrepresentation estop himself under the preceding propositions; Wunno Lall v. Lalls Choonie, 1 Ind., App., 144, 146 (1873).

(8) 19 I. A., 203, 217 (1892).

(9) Porter v. Moore (1904), 2 Ch., 367 followed;
Not much difficulty is usually experienced in the application of the first and second of the abovementioned propositions; questions, however, of difficulty may, however, and frequently do arise as to whether or not a person has by his conduct brought himself within the scope of the third and fourth propositions. The determination of this question will largely depend upon the facts which will vary with each particular case. Some, however, of the more obvious and frequently recurring estoppels may be here shortly alluded to.

A representation may arise not only (as already observed), by way of concealment of part of the truth in regard to a whole fact; but also from total but misleading silence (that is, silence where there is a duty to speak) (1) with knowledge or passive conduct joined with a duty to speak an estoppel will arise. The case must be such that it would be fair to interpret the silence into a declaration of the party that he has, e.g., no interest in the subject of the transaction. Indeed silence, when resulting in an estoppel, may not improperly be said to have left something like a representation upon the mind. (2) According to a succinct expression which has been often quoted, "where a man has been silent when in conscience he ought to have spoken he shall be debarred from speaking when conscience requires him to be silent." (3) Further an admission by silence, of a representation made by the party claiming the estoppel may sometimes raise an estoppel. (4) And when in answer to an enquiry a person gives an evasive misleading answer it will estop even though it may not have been intended to deceive, if its effect was in fact to deceive the inquirer. (5) Mere standing by in silence will not bar a man from asserting a title of record in the public registry or other like office, so long as no act is done to mislead the other party, for there is no duty to speak in such a case. Thus a patentee is not bound to warn others whom he may see buying an article which is an infringement of his patent. (6) But if there be any misleading either by express declarations, (7) or by conduct, (8) there will arise an estoppel notwithstanding registration of the title. There is no duty generated to speak by the mere fact that a man is aware that some one may act to his prejudice, if the true state of things is not disclosed. So long as he is not brought into contact with the person about to act, and does not know who that person may be, he is under no fact in an action against the person whom he has himself assisted in deceiving." (3) Per Thompson, J., in Nicas v. Delknap, 2 Johns., 573 (Amer.).

(4) Bigelow, op. cit., 588.

(5) McConnell v. Mayer, 2 N.W. P., H. C. R., 318 (1870); where it was said that when inquiry was expressly made of the person he was bound under the circumstances to have given definite and full information.

(7) Munnoo Lal v. Jalla Choones, 1 Ind. App., 153, 166 (1873).

(8) Ib.; Dullab Sircar v. Krishna Kumar Bakshi, 2 B. L. R., 407, 408 (1889); in this last and kindred cases (w. p. 655 note 2); there was a duty to speak; see Civ. Pr. Code., s. 237.
obligation to seek him out, or to stop a transaction which is not due to his own conduct, as the natural and obvious result of it. (1)

The commonest instance of inference from conduct arises in the case of conduct of acquiescence; for acquiescence under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred from it is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel by words or conduct. If a person having a right, and seeing another person about to commit, or in the course of committing, an act infringing upon that right, stands by in such a manner as really to induce the person committing the act, and who might otherwise have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its being committed, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain of the act. (2) In enunciating that principle it must be borne in mind that the Evidence Act indicates the lines upon which an estoppel of any kind should proceed. (3) Estoppel by acquiescence has no application to an ex post facto submission not amounting to ratification and inducing no action or omission. There is a distinction between acquiescence in an act which is still in progress, and mere submission to it when it has been completed. In the first case it may operate as an estoppel if it has induced action infringing a right. In the second case submission cannot change the past. (4)

If the owner of a piece of land stands by while another person professes to sell that land to a third party, and he does not interfere, but allows that other person to hold himself out to be the owner of the land and to make a transfer of it, he is not to be heard afterwards for the purpose of destroying that purchaser’s title by asserting to the contrary, though he may upset that title if he can show either that the purchaser had notice of his title constructive or actual, or that circumstances existed at the time of the purchase which, as a reasonable man, should have put him upon his guard and suggested enquiry, which enquiry, if made, would have resulted in his ascertaining the title of the true owner. (5) The same principle applies when one person permits another to mortgage the property of the former. (6) A mortgagee who causes the mortgaged property to be sold in execution of a decree other than a decree obtained upon his mortgage without notifying to intending purchasers the existence of his mortgage lien, is estopped for ever from setting up that lien against the title of bona fide purchaser. (7) If a person stands by and allows a Court to sell his property he cannot afterwards come forward and ask for possession. (8) If a person is allowed to expend money on that which is not his own; as where a stranger begins to build on land supposing it to be his own, and the real owner perceiving his

(1) Rigelow, op. cit., 599, 599.
(3) Rinckshur v. Moirhead, 14 A., 362, 364 (1892). A case may be founded on the equitable doctrine of acquiesce or the legal doctrine of estoppel by conduct (Proctor v. Bennis, 36 Ch. D., 765, per Fry, L. J.) When founded upon the first doctrine, it has been said that the conduct relied on should be conducted with knowledge of legal rights and amounting to fraud; [Wilmsot v. Barber, L. R., 16 Ch. D., 96, 105; Russell v. Watts, L. R., 25 Ch. D., 559, 558; both cases cited and followed in Baswanipa v. Banu, 9 B. N., 86 (1884)]. When, however, the doctrine of estoppel is alone invoked there may be an estoppel by conduct of acquiescence where there is no fraud and where the person estopped has acted bona fide and unaware of his legal rights; Gopal Chunder v. Sarat Chunder, 10 I. A., 203; 20 C., 296 (1892).
(4) Thakore Fatesingi v. Ramanji Dalal, 27 B., 515, 531, 532 (1903); t. c., 5 Bom. L. R., 274.
(8) Baldeo Pershad v. Phakr ud-din, 1 All. L. J., 402 (1904).
mistake, abstains from setting him right, and leaves him to persevere in his error, in which case the Court will not afterwards allow the real owner to assert his title to the land. (1) An instance of an estoppel by omission occurs when a mortgagee bringing the property to sale in execution of a money-decree without giving the purchaser notice of his encumbrance will be estopped from subsequently enforcing the lien of which he has given no notice. Having by his conduct led the purchaser to believe that the property was offered for sale free of encumbrances and to pay full value for it, he cannot as against the latter be heard to deny that the sale took place free of encumbrances. (2) The estoppel against a mortgagee in favour of subsequent encumbrancers is dealt with by section 78 of the Transfer of Property Act.

A person who purports to deal with property which is not his own in favour of a stranger is estopped, if the property eventually becomes his, from saying that he had no previous title to convey. (3) If a person having right to a property takes no steps towards asserting his right against the person in possession, but leaves that person so in possession with all the indicia of ownership, the former cannot afterwards assert his right against the vendee of the person in possession who takes without notice of his claim. (4) Section 41 of the Transfer

(2) Dullab Aircar v. Krishna Kumar, 3 B. I. P., A. C., 407; 12 W. R., 303 (1869); M'Connell v. Mayer, 2 N. W. P., H. C., 316 (1870); Dooler Chudd v. Oomla Begum, 24 W. R., 263 (1870); Tukaram Atiram v. Ramchandra Bugharam, 1 B., 314 (1876); Tinnappu v. Murgappa, 7 M., 107 (1883); Nursing Nurse v. Raohobor Singh, 10 C., 609 (1884); Agarkhal v. Gumawhand v. Behkna Husmani, 12 B., 678 (1888); Jaganthall v. Ganga Reddi, 15 M., 363 (1892); Kasturi v. Venkateswarlapathi, 15 M., 412 (1892); the last case distinguishes Ramani Das v. Muhammad Mainsiah, 9 A., 690 (1887); in which (at p. 702), and in Ghuran v. Kunji Behari, 9 A., 413 (1887); it was pointed out that it cannot be said that one person solely by bidding at an auction-sale encourages another person (see Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 237, 257, (e)) to buy. As to legal representation being bound by an executors' sale, see Natha Hari v. Jumma, 8 Bom. H. C. R., A. C., 37 (1871). It must always be shown that the circumstances of the case are such as to bring it within the purview of the section: Solam v. Lalla Ram, 7 C. I. R., 481 (1880). An estoppel may also arise where the mortgagee permits the property to be sold by private sale: Munmoo Lalli v. Lalla Chocoa, 11 A., 144 (1873). In the case of Dhondo Balkrishna v. Rojji, 20 B., 290 (1898); in which Pullab v. Krishna, supra, was cited, it was held that there was no estoppel, registration (except in a case of fraudulent concealment) being notice according to the settled course of the previous Bombay decisions. For a case of a somewhat converse character, to that in text, see Bejimoath Sakoy v. Deolhun Kisanwath, 24 W. R., 83 (1876). Where mortgaged property is sold in execution of a decree in a suit brought upon the mortgage, the interest of the mortgagee at whose instance the sale is made is held to pass to the purchaser, and the mortgagee is estopped from disputing that such is the effect of the sale: Khenaj Nature v. Linga, 5 B., 82 (1873); Sethgja Shankhboy v. Saleedur Vos, 5 B., 5 (1873); Shaik Abdullos v. Haji Abdulla, 5 B., 8 (1883); see Naridas Jitram v. Joglekar, 4 B., 67; and cases there cited: Ramannath Desa v. Bolaram Phookun, 7 C., 677; Hari v. Laksman, 5 B., 614 (1881) Where a person claimed, as his own, property attached, in execution of a decree, against another person, and his claim being rejected without enquiry, purchased the property at the sale, it was held that his such purchasing did not estop him from ascertaining as a mortgagee prior to the sale that the property was his independently of the sale: Hansamun Das v. Losadula, 7 N.-W. P. Rep., 145.

(4) Moheek Chunder v. Isur Chunder, 1 Ind. Jur. N. S., 268 (1886); citing Boyson v. Nader, 6 M. & S., 23; Dyer v. Peerson, 3 B. & C., 42; Howard of Property Act applying the general principle of estoppel deals with such transfers of property by ostensible owners. (1)

Connected with this subject are estoppels arising from benami transactions, which have long been recognised and given effect to by Courts in India. Assuming that the transaction is of a benami character, as to which strict proof is required, the general rule, in the absence of any statutory limitation, (2) is to give effect to the real title and to allow the truth to be shown. The law of benami is merely a deduction from the equitable doctrine of resulting trusts, and therefore the real owner may establish the trust against the benamidar or set it up as a defence to a suit by the benamidar, if the latter attempts to enforce his apparent title against the beneficial owner. Similarly creditors of the real owner may have recourse to the benami property, but if creditors of the benamidar seize the property, the real owner is entitled to have the property released. (3) But a third party will not be allowed to suffer by the voluntary acts of owners of property. And it is not to be supposed that, because the existence of benami transactions has been judicially recognized, parties are at liberty to use the system to the injury of others whether by direct fraud, or by putting other parties in a position to defraud, or take undue advantage of innocent persons. (4) The transaction may give rise to an estoppel against the real owner and his representatives, (5) in favour of innocent third parties, whether purchasers, mortgagees or creditors whose acts have been influenced by the conduct of the real owner in permitting the ostensible owner to appear as such. In such a case the real nature of the transaction cannot be shown, and the real owner will be estopped from setting up the secret trust in his own favour against a title acquired without notice from the person who holds benami for him. (6) The ground of the rule is obvious: it would be monstrous if it were allowed that a man should invest another with the apparent ownership of his property; and then after that other has raised

(1) See the Act edited by Shophard and Brown, and cases there cited. In Jayram v. Narayan, 5 Bom. L. R., 682 (1903); a mortgagor was held to be estopped from questioning his own right to mortgage. See also Naryan Kunda v. Kaliguda, 14 B., 407.

(2) See Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 317; s. 36 of Act XI of 1850; s. 184 of Act XIX of 1873. See now N.-W. P. Act III of 1901; [where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree or for arrears of Government revenue, a stranger will not be allowed to claim the property on the ground that the certified purchaser merely purchased benami on his account; and any suit brought on such an allegation will be dismissed with costs].

(3) See Mayne's Hindu Law, §§ 400-407, and cases there cited.

(5) See Lachman Chundra v. Kali Churn, 19 W. R., 292 (1873); distinguished in Sarat Chundra v. Gopal Chunder, 19 I. A., 209-211 (1892). And see Chunder Koomar v. Harbun Sahai, 19 C., 137 (1888); Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 16 C., 148 (1888); but there is no estoppel against the purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained against a person who would by his conduct be precluded from denying the title of third parties who have dealt with his benamidar. See post, and pp. 132-137, ante.

(6) Ramcoomor Koondoo v. McQueen, 11 B. L. R., 46, 51 (1873); Rakulbodass Moduck v. Bindoo Rashinee, supra; Lachman Chundra v. Kali Churn, supra; Buggahun Das v. Upchurch Singh, 10 W. R., 85 (1868); Obhoy Churn v. Punchnamon Bose, Marsh., 564 (1869); Kally Das v. Gobind Chunder, 1 Marsh., 569, 571 (1863); Brinni v. Ganga Narain, 3 W. R., 10 (1868); Nundun Lal v. Taylor, 5 W. R., 36 (1868); Brojnodath Ghose v. Koylasth Chunder, 9 W. R., 583 (1869); Naloo Singh v. Bisso Nath, 24 W. R., 79 (1875); Chander Coomer v. Harbun Sahai, 14 C., 173 (1885); Smith v. Mohum Makkoom, 18 W. R., 838 (1872); Ram MOHINEE v. Prun Koomee, 3 W. R., 87 (1885); Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 19 I. A., 203 (1882); cf. Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 16 C., 148 (1882); where it was held that the mere fact of a benami transfer did not amount to a binding representation: the content must moreover be between the true owner of the property and a person claiming under his benamidar: Bashi Chunder v. Kegan Ahi, 20 C., 226 (1862); in Muhammad Khan v. Muhammad Ibrahim, 1 All. J., 214 (1904), the Court, referring to the principal case, held that the party had no constructive notice of the real title. money upon the property, resume it in virtue of a private understanding.\(^{(1)}\)
Where the owner of certain immovable property after having executed a fictitious sale-deed thereof in favour of some persons, brings about a sale of the same by these ostensible vendees in favour of a third party who purchases the property for consideration upon representations made to him by the real owner, the latter will be precluded from setting up his title against the second purchaser, and the sale to him will have the effect of conveying to him the interests of the actual owner even as against an execution-creditor of the latter.\(^{(2)}\) Third parties, however, dealing with a benamidar will be affected by notice, actual or constructive, of the real title,\(^{(3)}\) for if they are cognisant of the real facts they can in no way have been misled.

So far reference has been made to the rule that the Courts will not enforce the rights of a real owner where they would operate to defraud innocent persons.\(^{(4)}\) A still stronger case is that in which property has been placed in a false name, for the express purpose of shielding it from creditors. As against them, of course, transaction is wholly invalid. But a very common form of proceeding is for the real owner to sue the benamidar, or to resist an action by the benamidar alleging, or the evidence making out, that the sale was a merely colourable one, made for the express purpose of defrauding creditors. In other words, the party admits that he has apparently transferred his property to another to effect a fraud but ask to have his act undone, now that the object of the fraud is carried out. The rule was for some time considered to be, that where this state of things was made out, the Court would invariably refuse relief, and would leave the parties to the consequences of their own misconduct; dismissing the plaint when the suit was brought by the real owner to get back possession of his property,\(^{(5)}\) and refusing to listen to the defence, when he set it up in opposition to the persons whom he had invested with the legal title.\(^{(6)}\) And persons who take under the real owner whether as heirs or as purchasers, were treated in exactly the same manner as he was.\(^{(7)}\) On the other hand, a contrary doctrine was laid down in more recent cases.\(^{(7)}\)

It is in the first case clear that where two persons have combined to commit a fraud upon a third the transaction is wholly void as between those persons

\(^{(1)}\) Rakhaldoss Moduck v. Bindoo Bakhine, Marsh., 293, 294 (1863).

\(^{(2)}\) Talasha Ram v. Mutuddi Lal, 2 All. L. J., 97 (1904).

\(^{(3)}\) Ramaomunar Koondoo v. McQuenn, 11 B. L. R., 46, 54 (1872); and cases cited in penultiamte note; and in Mayne's Hindu Law, § 403.

\(^{(6)}\) Luckhee Narain v. Taramonee Dossia, 3 W. R., 92 (1866); Kaleenath Kur v. Doyalristo Deh, 13 W. R., 87 (1870).

\(^{(7)}\) Mayne's Hindu Law, § 404; citing most of the above cases and as the recent cases referred to in text Sreeumity Debia v. Bindoo.
and the party defrauded. (1) It has, however, been a question of some difficulty as to how far the parties may, as between themselves, show the truth of the transaction. Whatever doubt there may be as to the plaintiff's right to avoid his own deed by setting up his own fraudulent act, it is open to the defendant to defend his possession by showing that the real transaction between himself and the plaintiff was to defraud whether a third party or the defendant's creditors generally. (2) Whether a plaintiff shall be so allowed to plead his fraud will depend upon the question whether the fraud has been carried beyond the stage of mere intention. If the fraudulent purpose has been wholly or partially carried into effect the real owner will not be permitted to succeed in a suit instituted by him for recovery of the property. But, where the fraud has not been carried into execution he may succeed. (3) Where the ostensible transferee never had any exclusive possession of the property in question, which was for a great many years treated as part of the joint family property, and which was enjoyed by the joint family (of which the plaintiff was the sole surviving member) for more than twelve years before suit; it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to have a declaration of his right to the property and to confirmation of his possession. (4) As to the purchase of a decree by a judgment-debtor benami, see cases cited below. (5)

Estoppel by conduct may arise in the case of family arrangements: the decisions as to which extend not merely to cases in which arrangements are made between members of a family for the preservation of its peace but to cases in which arrangements are made between them for the preservation of its property. (6) So where infants had, since attaining their majority by their

(1) See Namasidhe v. Ojovithubaran Khan, 10 Moo. I. A., 540 (1866); (followed in Kallappa v. Shimbaji, 20 B., 492 (1896); see Brama v. Shidaramappa, 21 B., 424, 448 (1897); Byjnath Lall v. Ramadaran Chowdary, 1 I. A., 106 (1873); Gopi Vasudew v. Markande Narayan, 3 B., 30, 33 (1878).

(3) Jada Nath v. Rup Lal, 10 C. W. N., 650 (1906), in which all the authorities are reviewed. Gibberdham Singh v. Bita Roy, 23 C, 982 (1890); Kali Charan v. Ranil Lall, 23 C, 982 (1890); Chinnappa v. Punyappa, 11 B., 705 (1887); Sham Lall v. Amarendra Nath, 23 C, 450 (1895); Banka Behary v. Rai Kumar, 4 C. W. N., 289 (1899); 27 C, 231; Gourida Kuar v. Lala Krishun, 28 C, 370 (1900); Mayne's Hindu Law, § 405, and cases there and in the preceding de is as cited. The rule, however, appears to be stricter in the Madras High Court. Yasawati Krishnakya v. Chandra Pappayya, 20 M., 329 (1897); Rangammal v. Venkatachelly, 20 M., 323 (1898); Varadajulu Naidu v. Srikantham Naidu, 20 M., 333, 338 (1897); it is very doubtful whether in a case in which the maxim in pari delito would otherwise apply any exception arises by reason that the illegal purpose has not been carried out). See, however, as to these cases Jada Nath v. Rup Lal, 10 C. W. N., 650 at p. 661 (1906). In Honnap v. Narayana, 23 D., 404 (1898), Farran, C. J., at p. 408, was of opinion that the law applicable was that laid down in Yasawati v. Chandra Pappayya, supra; but treats Calcutta decisions as being to same effect, and Fulton, J., stated, p. 413, that when the fraud was not completed it might well be contended that as the collusive transaction had not really frustrated justice, the original owner retained a good claim to the property. See also May on Fraudulent and Voluntary Dispositions of Property, 2nd Ed., 470—472; as to fictitious sales made to evade process for recovery of arrears of revenue, see Ram Peram v. Shima Peram, 1 N. W. P., Rep., 71.

(4) Gourita Kuar v. Lala Krishun, 28 C, 370 (1900).

conducted, adopted the acts of their mother and guardian and agreed to treat the will of a testator as valid, it was held that by their acquiescence in the disposition of the property they were estopped from disputing the provisions of the will. (1) Not only may there be an estoppel giving effect to a family arrangement, but a party may by his conduct be estopped from insisting upon a family arrangement. (2)

An estoppel may, in certain cases, arise where an invalid adoption has been acted upon, and the person adopted has, through representations, been led to change his original situation. So where the defendant actively participated in the adoption of the plaintiff by the defendant’s brother, and by many acts signified to the plaintiff and to his adopting father the defendant’s complete acquiescence in the adoption, and thereby encouraged the plaintiff, who was an adult to assent to such adoption, and allowed the adopting father to die in the belief that the adoption was valid, and finally concurred in the performance by the plaintiff, of the funeral ceremonies, it was held that the defendant was estopped from disputing the validity of the adoption. (3) But in order that estoppel by conduct may raise an invalid adoption to the level of a valid adoption, there must have been a course of conduct long continued on the part of the adopting family, and the situation of the adoptee in his original family must then become so altered that it would be impossible to restore him to it. (4) In the undermentioned Madras case, (5) it was held that the rule of estoppel by conduct does not apply when an adoption is made by a person in full belief that the adoption is valid in law, and thereby, and by the subsequent conduct of the adopter, the person adopted is induced to abstain from claiming a share in the inheritance of his natural family so as to prevent a person claiming through the adopter from impugning the validity of the adoption. But the construction which was placed by this decision on the word “intentionally” in section 115 was overruled by the Privy Council in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha, in which case their Lordships said of the Madras case cited that they would have “great difficulty in holding, as the High Court did, that a series of acts by which an adoption is professedly made and subsequently recognised constitute a representation in law only, and not of fact.” (6) As to estoppel arising by reason of the recognition by one member of a joint Hindu family of another as being also a member, (7) or by reason of plaintiff treating defendant as being in certain relationship to a common ancestor, (8) see the undermentioned cases.

In the last mentioned case it was pointed out that, though a course of conduct may not amount to an estoppel in point of law it may nevertheless be strong

---

(3) Sadashiv Morenkar v. Harimorenkar, 11 Bom. H. C. R., 190 (1874); Chintu v. Dhonde, ib., 192 note (1873); Ravji Vinayakras v. Lakshminiar, 11 B., 381 (1871); Chitko v. Janaki, 11 Bom. H. C. R., 190 (1874); Kannamal v. Vira Rama, 15 M., 486 (1892); See however also Tagamal v. Rastahella, 10 Moo. I. A., 439 (1865).

(4) Parbatibayamma v. Ramakrishna, 18 M., 145 (1894); following Gopalayan v. Raghupati Ayyan, 7 Mad. H. C. R., 250 (1873); Kavarrer v. Babai, 19 Bom., 374 (1894). For cases in which it was held there was no estoppel, see Guralingaswami v. Ramalakshamma, 18 M., 53 (1894); Sankappayy v. Rangappayy, 18 M., 397 (1894); Yashwantrao Puttu v. Radhabai, 14 B., 312 (1889); and see Tarini Charan v. Sarada Sundari, 3 B. L. R., 145 (1889); Guralingaswami v. Ramalakshamma, 18 M., 53, 58 (1894).

(5) Eranjoli Vishnu v. Eranjoli Krishnam, 7 M., 3 (1883).

(6) L. R., 19 I. A., 203, 218 (1892); as to estoppel on a point of law see Gopee Lall v. Chandrajoller Babuji, 11 B. L. R., 391, 395 (1872).

(7) Lala Huddan v. Khikinda Kuer, 18 C., 341 (1890).

(8) Agrawal Singh v. Foujdar Singh, 8 C. L. R., 348 (1890). evidence and throw upon the party, whose conduct is in question, a heavy burden of proof.

Where it had been understood by the parties for some time that a certain mortgage had been converted into a sale, and that the property had passed to the defendant by purchase, it was held that mere admissions that it had been converted into a sale did not operate as an estoppel or prevent the mortgagee from redeeming the property. (1) Where two members of a joint Hindu family had held out another as the manager of the estate so as to induce outsiders dealing with him to believe that he had authority to mortgage the whole interest in the property, those members were estopped from contending that the mortgages effected by that other were not binding on their shares, if that other did, as a matter of fact, borrow the money for the benefit of the family. (2) If goods are in a man's possession, order, or disposition under such circumstances as to enable him by means of them to obtain false credit, the owner who has permitted him to obtain that false credit must suffer the penalty of losing his goods for the benefit of those who have given the credit. (3) Where an offer of sale was made to a pre-emptor, and he refused to avail himself of it, and consented to a sale to a stranger, it was held that, after a sale to a stranger, he could not set up his right of pre-emption. (4) See for the effect of an admission as to the rate of interest in an account stated by a banker, case below. (5) The service of notice of foreclosure on the occupant of mortgaged property (a party who claimed as purchaser from the mortgagor, but who had not established his title) does not stop the mortgagee from disputing the occupant's title to redeem the mortgaged premises. (6) If a person takes out probate of a will his heirs are not estopped from disputing the will. (7) Semble that a tenant may be estopped from objecting to the terms of a potta where he has accepted pottas containing similar terms for a series of years previously in respect of the same holding and has by his conduct led the landlord to suppose that the potta would not be objected to. (8)

As already observed, it makes no difference what the form is which the representation takes or whether it be written or verbal; (9) and further that in India there is no technical doctrine of estoppel by deed, estoppels arising from written matter being only one form of the general estoppel by representation for which provision is made by the present section. It will, however, prove useful to note some of the general principles touching estoppels in writing and the cases decided thereon. (10) The intention of the deed as appearing on the

---

(1) Abbul Rahim v. Madhurao Apaji, 14 B., 78 (1889).
(2) Krishnaji v. Myno, 15 B., 32 (1890); as to standing by during alienation by father see Subah Narain v. Skew Gobind, 11 B. L. R., App. 29 (1873), as to acquiescence of Hindu minor after obtaining majority, see Gopalnarain v. Maddomuty, 14 B. L. R., 32 (1874).
(3) Boisau v. Millor, 10 C. L. R., 591 (1882);
(4) Brotx Kishor v. Kirti Chandra, 7 B. L. R., 10 (1871).
(9) v. ante, p. 645. As to certain classes of documents which (amongst other) may raise an estoppel, see Caspera op. cit., 230—233: invoices, Holdig v. Elliot, 5 H. & N., 117; documents representing goods, such as warehouse receipts and delivery orders:—Oancea Manufacturing Co. v. Soury, 5 C., 689 (1880); Knight v. Wiñan, L. R., 5 Q. B., 660; Coryton v. The Great Eastern Ry. Co., I. R., 11 Q. B. D., 776; Soto v. Lajone, L. R., 19 Q. B. D., 68; Formilo v. Bain, L. R., 1 C. P. D., 445; railway receipts:—G. I. P. Railway Co. v. Hammadus Rambik, 14 B., 57 (1890); bills of lading:—Lishman v. Christie, 19 Q. B. D., 335; Gurn v. Norway, 10 C. B., 345; Coo v. Bruce, 15 Q. B. D., 147; difference note:—Sindia et al., Bank v. Medundhun Churnley, Bourke, O. C., 322 (1865). See as to accounts and awards Caspera, op. cit., 233—236.
(10) See Caspera, op. cit., C. H. where the Indian cases will be found collected.
face of it must be regarded. A recital will be binding if it was a bargain on the faith of which the parties acted. (1) The deeds and contracts of the people of India ought (the Privy Council have said) to be liberally construed. The form of expression, the literal sense, is not to be so much regarded as the real meaning of the parties which the transaction discloses. (2) A party will be precluded from contradicting an instrument to the prejudice of another only where that other has been induced to alter his position upon the faith of the statement contained in the instrument. (3) Recitals therefore which have not had this effect cannot operate as estoppels. So a statement of consideration in a deed is not conclusive evidence of the existence of such consideration, but it is only evidence as far as it goes; (4) and so also a receipt may be contradicted or explained (v. post). Estoppels must be made out clearly, and this is an ancient rule as to estoppel by statements in a deed. (6) Those who rely upon a document as an estoppel, the nature of an estoppel being to exclude an inquiry by evidence into the truth, must clearly establish that it does amount to that which they assert. (7) If the document is ambiguous, the construction of it may be aided by looking at the surrounding circumstances. (8) Where a plaintiff sued the defendant to recover a sum of money by attachment and sale of certain property in the legal possession of the defendant; and both the plaintiff and the defendant professed to receive their title by virtue of a document which the Court found was invalid according to Mahommadedan law; it was held that the defendant was not estopped from denying its validity, and the Court was not bound to hold that the document, as between the parties, was valid. The defendant being in possession it was for the plaintiff to establish her right to attach and sell the property by showing superior title in herself, whatever might be the rights of the defendant. (9)

A receipt signed by a party, like any other statement made by him and produced afterwards to affect him, is evidence but evidence only, and is not conclusive but capable of explanation. (10) It may, however, like any other statement, be conclusive evidence in favour of any person who may have been induced thereby to alter his condition. (11) It has been an ancient practice among Hindus of indorsing payments on bonds. (12) It is also very customary to stipulate that no payment will be recognised except "after causing the payment to be entered on the back of the bond, or after taking a receipt for the same." But such a stipulation is no estoppel, and the obligor of the bond

---

(1) South Eastern Railway Co. v. Wharton, 6 H. & N., 520, 526.
(3) Param Sing v. Lalji Mall, 1 A., 403, 410 (1877); cited ante at p. 325. See this case considered and on certain points dissented from in Chandraappa v. Putappa, 11 B., 706 (1887).
(4) See n. 92, Prov. (1), ante, and cases there cited; and Ram Surun v. Prusr Prasad, 13 Moo. I. A., 551, 559 (1870); Zamindar Bharatou v. Pinnappa Chettu, 2 Mad. H. C. R., 174 (1864).
(5) Tweedie v. Foroon Chander, 8 W. R., 125 (1887).
(6) Low v. Bourerie, L. R., 1891, 3 Ch., 113, 108.
(7) Rani Mena v. Rani Halua, 13 B. L. R., 312 (1874). See Siva Ram v. Ali Bakhsh, A., 805 (1881); where the estoppel was held to have been clearly made out.

---

(8) Ib., and see cases cited ante at p. 460 and n. 92, Prov. 6.
(9) Katurbai v. Mir Alam, 7 B., 170 (1863).
(10) Parrar v. Hutchinson, 9 A. & E., 641; a receipt is nothing more than a prima facie acknowledgment that the money has been paid; Skues v. Jackson, 3 B. & C., 421; Gravas v. Key, 3 B. & Ad., 318; see n. 91, ill. (a), ante, and cases at p. 466 ante. On the other hand, while a receipt is only evidence of payment, a release annihilates the debt: Bowes v. Foster, 2 H. & N., 779.
(11) Gravas v. Key, 3 B. & A., 318; see Rice v. Rice, 2 Drewry, 73 (unpaid vendor); Shropshire Union, 6th Co. v. R., L. R., 7 E. & I. App., 498, 510 (the same); Bickerton v. Walker, L. R., 31 ch. D., 151 (mortgagor acknowledging receipt of mortgage-money estopped as against assignee of mortgagee who has given full value).
may prove by other means that the debt or a part of it has been satisfied. (1) The mere absence of an indorsement of payment on the back of a krisibundi cannot prevail against positive proof of payment, and evidence of such payment must be admitted; (2) though, of course, in deciding whether the alleged payments were made, the omission of indorsements is a most important circumstance to be considered. (3)

A recital in a deed or other instrument is in some cases conclusive, and in all cases evidence (4) as against the parties who make it, and it is of more or less weight against them according to circumstances. It is a statement deliberately made by those parties which, like any other statement, is always evidence against the persons who make it. But it is no more evidence against third persons than any other statement would be. (5) A recital by one party of a state of facts on the faith of which the other party was induced to change his situation, as for instance by entering into a contract is an estoppel in favour of the party whose position is thus altered. (6) Though the recitals will be evidence, there is no authority to show that a party to an instrument will be estopped in an action by the other party, not founded on the deed and wholly collateral to it, to dispute the facts admitted in the deed. (7)

The question whether one of the parties to a fraud against third persons can show the truth as against the other has already been discussed in connection with the subject of benami transactions. (8) The rule of title by estoppel has been the subject of enactment in section 43 of Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and the 18th section of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) to which as also to the aforementioned cases reference should be made. (9) The mere fact of a person attesting a deed is no evidence in itself that he consented to it or knew its contents, that is, the mere attestation does not necessarily import concurrence, though it may be shown by other evidence that when he became an attesting witness he fully understood what the transaction was and that he was a concurrent party to it. (10) As to documents executed by pardanashin women, Hindus or Mahomedans, v. ante, section

---

(1)
(2)
(3) (4)
(5)
(6)
(7) (8) (9)
(10)
111.(1) There is not necessarily any inconsistency in a party who has unsuccessfully tried to rescind an agreement afterwards claiming performance of it.(2)

To constitute an estoppel it is necessary that the statement or conduct charged should have been intentional, with the object of inducing the other party to change his situation in consequence. Mere loose talk does not usually estop. A party will not be estopped by information given by him merely informally, as a matter of conversation, with no intention of establishing a contractual relation with the party to whom he speaks: it being the duty of the parties asking him for such information to notify him, if they would bind him, that they intended to act upon his answers. At the same time a party by negligence in asserting a claim may be afterwards estopped from setting up such claim against strangers.(3) The representation must have been made with the intention either actual, or reasonably to be inferred(4) by the person to whom it was made that it should be acted upon. A third person to whom the representation was not made cannot claim the estoppel, unless it was intended or apparently intended that he should act upon it.(5) The term "willfully" as used in the case of Pickard v. Sears(6) is in effect equivalent to "intentionally"(7) or "voluntary."(8) And by the term "willfully" we must understand, "if not that the party represents that to be true which he knows to be untrue, at least that he means his representation to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly; and if, whatever a man's real intention may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true, and believe that it was meant that he should act upon it, and did act upon it as true, the party making the representation would be equally precluded from contesting its truth."(9) Therefore, intention to have the representation acted upon may be presumable as well as actual, so that a man would be bound as well when his conduct or the circumstances of the case justified the inference of intention as when he actually intended the result. Negligence when naturally and directly tending to indicate intention will therefore have the same effect in creating the estoppel as actual intention.(10) But mere want of care towards preventing an unauthorized transfer of one's property or the like act creates no estoppel; otherwise a man might be precluded from alleging that his signature had been forged on the ground that he had negligently employed a dishonest clerk. It is only when the negligence is a breach of duty to the party claiming the estoppel, as e.g., where it has amounted to permitting another to clothe

(1) ante, a. 111 and cases there cited.
(3) Wharton, Ev., §§ 1078, 1135; as to fact stated as hearsay offered to prove an estoppel, see Row v. Ferrara, 2 B. & P., 548; Stephen v. Freeman, 16 N. Y., 381 (Amer.) "In general where there is nothing reasonably indicating that the representation was intended to be acted upon as a statement of the truth, or that it was tantamount to a promise or agreement that the declaration made is true so as to amount to an undertaking to respond in case of its falsity, the party making it is not estopped from proving the truth." Bigelow, op. cit., 629.
(4) v. post.
(6) 6 A. & E., 469; v. ante, p. 641, note (1).
(8) Cornish v. Abington, 4 H. & N., 549; Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, supra, Parks, B., perceiving that the word "willfully" might be read as opposed not merely to "involuntarily" but to "unintentionally" showed that if the representation was made voluntarily, though the effect on the mind of the hearer was produced unintentionally, the same result would follow. Bigelow, op. cit., 634 n.
himself with an apparent authority to act for the party against whom the estoppel is alleged that the rule of intention is satisfied. (1) A person who by his declaration, act, or omission, has caused another to believe a thing to be true and to act upon that belief must be held to have done so "intentionally" within the meaning of the statute, if a reasonable man would take the representation to be true and believe it was meant that he should act upon it. (2) It is not necessary, however, to prove an intention to deceive in order to make a case of estoppel, nor is it necessary to an estoppel that the person whose acts or declarations induced another to act must have been under no mistake or misapprehension himself. Section 115 does not make it a condition of estoppel resulting that such person was either committing or seeking to commit, a fraud or that he was acting with a full knowledge of the circumstances and under no mistake or misapprehension. (3) What the section mainly regards is the position of the person who was induced to act, and not the motive or state of knowledge of the party upon whose representation the action took place. If the person who made the statement did so without full knowledge, or under error, sibi imputet, it may, in the result, be unfortunate for him, but it would be unjust, even though he acted under error to throw the consequences on the person who believed his statement and acted on it as it was intended he should do. (4) It has been held in America that the representation must have been a free voluntary act; and if obtained by the party who has acted upon it, it must have been obtained without artifice. If it has been promised by duress or by fraud, there will be no estoppel upon the party making it, it would seem, though he made it with the full intention that it should be acted upon; indeed, it is said that where the conduct supposed to have created an estoppel, was brought about or directly encouraged by the party alleging the estoppel, no estoppel is created. But that must probably be understood of something in the way of artifice or other questionable endeavour. (5)

The representation and the action taken must be connected together as cause and effect. Not only must it be shown that there was belief in a particular fact, and act taken upon such belief, but also that the action and belief were induced by a representation of the plaintiff intended or calculated to have the result which has happened. (6) But though the representation must have been the inducement to the change of position, it need not have been the sole inducement if it were adequate to the result,—that is, if it might have governed the conduct of a prudent man, and if it did influence the result, that will be enough though other inducements operated with it. And the law will

---

(1) Bigelow, op. cit., 031, 032, citing Saran v. North British Australasian Co., 2 H. & C., 175; as to silence as to the fact of a forged signature, see McKenzie v. British Linen Co., 6 App. Cas., 82.

(2) Saran Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, supra.

The High Court of Madras had previously [Viswan v. Krishnan, 7 M., 3, 8 (1883)] expressed the view that by the substitution in this section of the word "intentionally" for "wilfully" in the rule stated in Richard v. Sear, 6 A. & E., 499, it was possibly the design to exclude cases from the rule in India to which it might be applied under the terms in which it had been stated by the English Courts. But the Privy Council disagreed with this view, and held that on the contrary, the substitution was made for the purpose of declaring the law in India to be precisely that of the law of England.

(4) Ib., citing Caisurmam v. Lorimer, 3 Mac., 829; Richard v. Sear, supra; Freeman v. Cook, supra; Cornish v. Abington, supra; Carr v. London & North Western Railway Co., 1 L.R., 10 C.P., 216; Selton Laying & Co. v. Lofaro, 19 Q. B. D., 63.

(5) Bigelow, op. cit., 583; as to admissions under duress, see Wharton, Ev., § 1090.

(6) Dukhno v. Lalla Ram, 7 C. L. R., 481 (1890); Mohun Das v. Nilkanth Dwarkan, 4 C. W. N., 283 (1899), in Beni Prasad v. Mahbub-ur-Rasool, 21 A., 316, 322 (1899), it was held that that which really induced the party to abandon a portion of his claim was not the acts of the other party relied upon as an estoppel but an extraneous cause independent of such party: v. pud. "Te Mau," p. 666.
not undertake, in favour of a wrong-doer, to separate the various inducements presented and ascertain precisely how much weight was given to the representation in question. (1) But though the representation need not be exclusively acted upon, there can be no estoppel where the party claiming one is obliged, before changing his position, to enquire for the existence of other facts to make the inducement sufficient, and to rely upon them also in acting. (2) In such a case it is clear that the inducement was not adequate to, and therefore not the cause of the result, viz., the action taken. If the party is absent at the time of the transaction his silence or other conduct must at least be of a nature to have an obvious and direct tendency to cause the omission or the step taken. (3) The section uses the word "permitted" as the expression apt to cases of omission and negligence. Conduct of omission or negligence may be the cause of the action taken: such conduct raising inferences which are often as casually effective as any positive declarations may be.

There can be no estoppel if the party to whom the representation is made does not believe it to be true, for in such case the resulting conduct is in no sense the effect of the preceding declaration. This section does not apply to a case where the statement relied upon is made to a person who knows the real fact and is not misled by the untrue statement. A person cannot use as an estoppel a statement by which he has been in no way misled or induced to alter his position to his own detriment. (4) There can be no estoppel arising out of legal proceedings when the truth of the matter appears on the face of the proceedings. (5) The person who claims the benefit of an estoppel must show that he was ignorant of the truth in regard to the representation. (6) When both parties are equally conversant with the true state of the facts it is absurd to refer to the doctrine of estoppel. (7) So where the plaintiff was as much acquainted with the actual facts of the case as the defendant, there being in fact no misrepresentation by the latter upon which the plaintiff had been induced to act or to alter his position there was held to be no estoppel. (8) In such cases the person making the representation to another does not "cause or permit" that other to believe the representation to be true. The representation in order to work an estoppel must be of a nature to lead naturally, that is to lead a man of prudence to the action taken. (9) To justify a prudent man in acting upon it, it must be plain, not doubtful, or matter of questionable inference, for certainty is essential to all estoppels. The Courts will not readily suffer a man to be deprived of his property when he had no intention to part with it. (10) Again, to say that the representation must be such as would naturally lead a prudent man to act upon it is also to say that it must be material. That is equally essential to the estoppel. (11) This, however, does not mean that the

(1) Bigelow, op. cit., 582, 583: s. post.
(2) ib., 630, 640.
(3) ib., 598.
(5) Narayan v. Raoji, 23 B., 363, 397 (1904). So in an action for deceit, if it is proved that the plaintiff did not rely upon the false statement complained of, he cannot maintain the action: Smith v. Chadwick, 20 Ch. D., 27.
(7) Bigelow op. cit., 628-629, and cases there cited; as to the presumption of knowledge, v. ib., pp. 627, 611, and ante: s. 114, § 14 "intention." "Knowledge;" to circumstances which may necessitate enquiry, see Bisshoar v. Moirhead, 14 A., 362 (1893); Ramcooar Koordoo v. Macqueen, 11 B., L. R., 46 (1872).
(9) M. Ooday Koowar v. M. Ladoor, 13 M. O., 1 A., 585, 598 (1870).
(10) Bigelow op. cit., 572.
(11) Ib., 578: see Smith v. Chadwick, 20 Ch. D., 27. [If a statement, by which the plaintiff says he has been deceived, is ambiguous, the plaintiff is bound to state the meaning which he attached to it, and cannot leave the court put a meaning upon it.]
(12) Bigelow, op. cit., 582; Smith v. Chadwick, supra. [If a statement, although untrue, is no trivial that it could not in the opinion of the-representation in question must have been the sole inducement to the change of position; if it were adequate to the result,—that is, if it might have governed the conduct of a prudent man,—and if it did influence the result, that will be enough, though other inducements operated with it. And the law will not undertake, in favour of a wrong-doer, to separate the various inducements presented, and ascertain precisely how much weight was given to the representation in question.(1)

A proposition of law is not "a thing" within the meaning of the section, and this expression refers to a belief in a fact.(2) The representation in order to work an estoppel must be a material statement of fact.(3) The rule excluding statements of opinion and statements of law has been said to be based upon the ground that the truth is uncertain, or that the person to whom the statement is made knows as much about the matter as the other.(4) In the undermentioned case the Court expressed an opinion that a grantor might possibly be estopped from questioning the permanent character of a lease by reason of misrepresentations even on a point of law which was not clear, and free from doubt.(5) The fact must be a fact alleged to be at the time actually in existence or past and executed. The representation must have references to a present or past state of things; for, if a party make a representation concerning something in the future, it must generally be either a mere statement to intention or opinion uncertain to the knowledge of both parties,(6) or it will come to a contract, with the peculiar consequences of a contract, or to a waiver of some term of a contract, or of the performance of some other kind of duty.(7)

It is essential to an estoppel that one party has been induced by the conduct of the other to do or forbear (8) doing something which he would not, or would have done, as the case might be, but for such conduct of the other party. In order to hold a case to be within this section, the Court must come to the following findings:—(a) that the plaintiff believed a certain fact to be true:

(3) Bigelow, op. cit., 572—574, states that to be the general rule, adding that it can seldom happen that a statement of opinion or of a proposition of law will conclude the party making it from denying its correctness except where it is understood to mean nothing but a simple statement of fact; that statements of opinion, however, often approach to representations of fact, the whole suggestion in regard to real opinion treading on delusive ground: and that it seems probable that the rule against representations of law has been pressed too far. See cases cited ib; Jethabhai v. Nathabhai, 28 B., 399 (1904), at p. 407.

(4) ib., 572.

(6) The intent of a party is necessarily uncertain as to its fulfilment. No person has a right to rely on it. A person cannot be bound not to change his intention, nor can he be precluded from showing such a change merely because he has previously represented that his intentions were once different from those which he eventually executed: Langdon v. Doud, 10 Allen., 483; s. c., 6 Allen., 623 (Amer.), per Bigelow, C. J..

(8) The damage need not be shown to be a positive step taken to one's prejudice; it is enough to show that the party claiming the estoppel was induced by the other party to refrain from obtaining a particular benefit which he would otherwise have been reasonably sure of acquiring. Bigelow, op. cit., 645; citing Knights v. Wiffen, 6 B. & Q. B., 380.
(b) that in consequence of, and as the effect of such belief he acted in a particular manner; (c) that belief and the plaintiffs so acting upon that belief were brought about by some representation (either declaration, act or omission), on the part of the defendant, which representation was intentionally made, in order to produce that result. To establish an estoppel it is not sufficient to find that it may well be doubted that the plaintiff could have acted in the way he did, but for the way in which the defendant had acted. It must be proved as a fact that the plaintiff could not have acted in the way he did, and that the defendant by his declaration, act or omission intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief. As the foundation of the doctrine is the changed situation of the parties referable to the representation as its cause, a person cannot use as an estoppel a statement by which he has been in no way misled or induced to alter to his own detriment his previous position. Upon this essential of an estoppel, Mr. Bigelow observes as follows: The rule is fundamental that unless the representation of the party to be estopped has also been really acted upon the other party acting differently, that is to say, from the way he would otherwise have acted, so that to deny the representation would be to prejudice him, no estoppel arises. Neither a statement of any kind nor an admission in pais can amount of itself to conclusive evidence. But if, on the other hand, the representation has been acted upon promptly, under circumstances, such as those already detailed, the party making the statement or guilty of the conduct in question will be precluded from alleging the contrary of that which he has given the other party to understand to be true. And it matters not, if the party acting upon the representation was justified in so doing, how he has changed his position, whether by the purchase of property, the surrender of possession, the erection of improvements or other outlay upon land or goods about which the estoppel be claimed, or the expenditure of money in litigation, or it is held, even by being induced to refrain from steps which would otherwise probably have been taken. But unless the representation is in some way acted upon, unequivocally, as tested by the first step taken, the estoppel cannot arise; nor will any estoppel arise when the party acting upon the representation has done only what he was legally bound to do. And though, as we have seen, it need not be exclusively acted upon, there can be no estoppel where the party claiming one is obliged, before changing his position, to inquire for the existence of other facts to make the inducement sufficient, and

(1) Solano v. Lalla Ram, 7 C. L. R., 481 (1880); in which being intentionally made had the effect of producing that result v. supera, and see Jhingur v. Despa, 7 A., 878 (1885); Mohind Das v. Nl Komol Porshi, 4 C. W. N., 293 (1890).

(2) Narsingdas v. Rahimnabahri, 28 B., 440 (1894).

(3) Prejudice to the party claiming the estoppel should be shown; Schmaltz v. Fraey, 10 Q. B., 136; Bigelow op. cit., 644; it is not enough that the representation has been merely acted upon; if still no substantial prejudice would result by admitting the party who made it to contradict it he will not, according to the American cases, estopped. It does not prejudice one in law to do something was bound to do. It is, 638, n. (1).

(4) Orish Chandra v. Incar Chandra, 3 H. L. R., A. C., 337, 341; s. c., 12 W. R., 228 (1890); Soo Rep., July—Dec. (1864), p. 29; In re, Permanent, 7 B., 102 (1882); Mt. Ooday Koonar v. Mt. Ladoo, 13 Moo. I. A., 585 (1870); Kweeri v. Baber, 19 B., 474, 479 (1894); Durga v. Jhinguri, 7 A., 511, 515 (1886); [the altering of his position by the person pleading the estoppel is an essential part of the rule]; Poddamukhaly v. Timma Reddy, 2 Mad. H. C. R., 271 (1864); In re Permanent, 7 B., 109, 117 (1882); Mt. Ooday Koonar v. Mt. Ladoo, 13 M. I. A., 585, 598 (1870); Muhammad Sani-nd-din v. Manon Lall, 4 A., 386 (1889). The rule that the representation must have been acted upon is further illustrated by Howard v. Hudson, 2 Ft. & B., 1; Simon v. Anglo-American Telegraph Co., 3 Q. B. D., 183; Simson v. Farnham, L. B., 7 Q. B., 175; Schmaltz v. Avery, 16 Q. B., 655; Cropper v. Smith, 28 Ch. D., 700; Carr v. London N.-W. Ry. Co., 10 C., p. 317; Mabadi v. Nerlana, 20 M., 260, 273 (1890); Kristo Mou v. Secretary of State, 3 C. W. N., 90, 106 (1898); Tura Lit v. Sardar Singh, 4 C. W. N., 533, 539 (1899); Fatimah v. Begum v. Soondur Das, 4 C. W. N., 585 (1900).

to rely upon them also in acting. In other words, though the party may, no doubt, act upon any one of several representations or inducements from different sources, it will not answer for him to put together two severally insufficient inducements from different and independent sources.” Where it is plain that the representation has been substantially acted upon, there is, of course, no question (supposing the existence of other elements) that an estoppel arises, but the general rule is that only the person to whom the representation was made, or for whom it was designed, can act upon and avail himself of it.(1)

It is necessary to an estoppel that there should be privity between the parties; that is to say, an estoppel is only available between the parties to the representation and those claiming under them. The section only says—“neither he (that is the person making the representation) nor his representative shall be allowed.” Therefore only parties and their privies are bound by the representation, and only those whom the representation is made to or intended to influence and their privies may take advantage of the estoppel. A stranger can neither take advantage of an estoppel nor be bound by it.(2) It will be observed that whatever be the rule in the case of estoppel by judgment,(3) this estoppel is not mutual. The party to whom the misrepresentation was made has an estoppel; but the other party though bound has nothing upon which to base an estoppel.(4) If the act was inter alios there can be no estoppel.(5) But a representation which will bind the person making it as an estoppel will equally bind those who claim through him.(6) A man is estopped not only by his own representations, but also by those of all persons through whom he claims. Upon the principle qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus if the predecessor in title is not at liberty to contradict what he has formerly said or done his privy is subject to a like disability for the latter stands in no better position than the party through whom he derives title.(7) As to the meaning of the term “representative,” see s. 20 “Persons from whom interest is derived,” s. 22 “Representative in interest,” see ante, and Appendix to second edition on Res Judicata. The purchaser of an estate sold for arrears of revenue is not privy in estate to the defaulting proprietor. In the case of a private sale in satisfaction of a decree the purchaser derives title through the vendor. But a purchaser at an execution-sale is not such the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of this section.(8) A privy exists between an execution-creditor and a purchaser at a Court-sale. So when a plea of estoppel is available to a decree-holder, it is likewise available to the purchaser at the execution-sale as his representative or as one claiming under him.(9) Where in any question with the person estopped or his representatives, another may be held to have obtained a valid conveyance to himself, then as the latter has himself through the estoppel a valid title, he can give good title to a purchaser from him whatever might be the state of knowledge of the person purchasing.(10)

---

(1) Bigelow op. cit., 640, 650, where the question of statements at second hand is discussed.
(2) Bigelow op. cit., 597; Taylor, Ev., § 90.
(3) Spencer v. Williams, L. R., 2 P. & D. 230, 237.
(4) Bigelow op. cit., 597, note (2).
(7) See Taylor, Ev., § 90.
(8) v. ante, notes to s. 20 sub-voc. “Persons from whom interest is derived” and cases there cited; Vasasree Harihadee v. Lalla Abba, 9 R., 236, 288 (1885); but see Banee Persbhad v. Mana Singh, 8 W. R., 67 (1887).
(10) Sarat Chunder v. Godal Chunder, 19 L. A., 203, 290 (1892); strictly speaking it is not the office of an estoppel to pass a title. The title remains, but it cannot be asserted against the
Where a person claims property as the representative of another the doctrine of estoppel cannot apply to representations made by any one except that other person.(1)

Not only, as has been already seen, is the representative of the person estopped bound by the same estoppel as that which affects his predecessor in title, but the estoppel conversely also enures not only for the benefit of the person to whom the representation was actually made, but also for the benefit of his successor in title. Therefore, not only may the heir be bound by an estoppel affecting his ancestor, but he may also claim the benefit of an estoppel which his ancestor might have claimed.

The estoppel by conduct operates by nature, that is, whenever it can so operate, specifically; and gives to the party entitled the rights he would have against the person estopped supposing the representation true. So if the representation is made on the sale of a security which the seller did not own, the buyer’s rights are not limited to the recovery of the consideration paid, but the purchaser will be entitled to recover what he would have received had the representation been true.(2) If a person is entitled to avail himself of an estoppel, he is entitled to use that estoppel as matter of proof, that is, as a means of showing that the facts covered by the representation were those which did in fact actually exist.(3) The representation being a statement made by the other party is evidence by way of admission of the fact to which it relates. It becomes conclusive evidence because the party claiming the estoppel affirms its truth, which the party estopped is not permitted to deny. The section only says that the party sought to be estopped is not to be allowed to deny the truth of the representation. It is, of course, open to him to deny that he made the representation itself. Lastly,(4) this estoppel, arising as it does from misconduct, is not mutual, like other estoppels, and cannot be used against the party in whose favour it has arisen.(5)

116. No tenant of immovable property, or person claiming through such tenant, shall, during the continuance of the tenancy, be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenant had, at the beginning of the tenancy, a title to such immovable property; and no person who came upon any immovable property by the license of the person in possession thereof, shall be permitted to deny that such person had a title to such possession at the time when such license was given.

Principle.—These are instances of estoppel by agreement based on permissive enjoyment. If A being in possession of land deliver the possession to B upon his request and upon his promise to return it, with, or without rent, at a specified time, or at the will of A, B cannot be allowed while still retaining possession to dispute A’s title, because to allow him to do so would be to allow him to work a wrong against A by depriving him of the advantage which his possession afforded him and with which he would not have parted, but for the

---

(2) Bigelow op. cit., 661, 662.
(3) Luckeunm Chauder v. Kali Churn, 19 W. R., 292, 297 (1873), v. also R., remarks as to the necessity of pleading an estoppel. In Shail Hami
(4) Bigelow op. cit., 654.
(5) v. ante, p. 668.
promise (or perhaps to speak more aptly the implied agreement) of $B$ that he would hold it for him and in his place and stead. (1) The estoppel of a tenant is founded upon the contract between him and his landlord. The former took possession under a contract to pay rent as long as he held possession under the landlord, and to give it up at the end of the term to the landlord, and having taken it in that way he is not allowed to say that the man whose title he admits and under whose title he took possession has not a title. (2) There is no distinction between the relation of a tenant and that of a licensee in whose case the law itself implies a tenancy and to whom the same principles apply. (3)

Bigelow on Estoppel, Ch. XVII; Estoppel by Representation and Res Judicata by A. Caspersz, Ch., III, 2nd Ed., 1856; Everest and Strode on Estoppel. 298; Taylor, Ev., §§ 101—103, Cababe, Principles of Estoppel.

COMMENTARY.

As already stated this and the following section give instances of estoppel by agreement as the last deals with estoppel by misrepresentation. They are, however, not exhaustive of this form of estoppel. (4) It has long been a well settled rule that neither a tenant nor any one claiming under him can dispute the landlord’s title. (5) This rule was acknowledged and acted upon in India prior to this Act, (6) and is contained in this section. Enjoyment by permission is the foundation of the rule. Two conditions therefore are essential to the existence of the estoppel: (i) possession, (ii) permission. When these conditions are present, the estoppel arises. (7) It follows, therefore, that when there is no permissive enjoyment; where the occupant is not under an allegation, express or implied, that he will at some time or in some event surrender the possession, as in the case of the grantee in fee, there can be no estoppel. (8) By the terms of the section the rule applies not only to the tenant but to his representatives, and is operative throughout the continuance of the tenancy. The rule applies in favour of a landlord with an equitable title only; (9) an unnamed landlord letting by means of an agent; (10) and one of several co-sharers. If a person take a lease from one of several co-sharers he cannot dispute his lessor’s exclusive title to receive the rent or sue ejectment. (11) The estoppel will also enure for the benefit of a lessor who has no title whatever, and the person let into possession will not be permitted to set up this want of title. (12) The

---

(1) Franklin v. Merida, 35 Cal., 538 (Amor.), per Sanderson, J., cited in Bigelow, op. cit., 527, 528. The broad principle is that a person who has received property from another will not be permitted to dispute the title of that person or his right to do what he has done. Bigelow, op. cit., 526.

(2) In re Stringer’s Estate, L. R., 6 Ch. D., 9, 10; see Duke v. Ashley, 7 H. & N., 602; Bigelow, op. cit., 506.

(3) Doe d. Johnson v. Rajubai, 3 A. & E., 188.

(4) Rup Chand v. Sarbecar Chandra, 10 C. W. N., 747 (1908); s. c., 3 C. & Y. 429.

(5) Bigelow, op. cit., 506; Taylor, Ev., §§ 161—103, Doe d. Knight v. Smythe, 4 M. & S., 747; Alkorne v. Gomme, 2 Bing., 64, see cases cited in William’s Saunders, 1, 575 ii, 826 (Ed. 1871); Bigelow op. cit., Ch. XVII; Caspersz op. cit., Ch. III. As to adverse possession, see Kristmoni v. Secretary of State, 3 C. W. N., 99 (1898).

(6) Jainarayan Bose v. Kadimbini Dasi, 7 H. R., 723 n. (1889); Pusadeeji v. Babaji

(7) Bigelow, op. cit., 509.

(8) Rup Chand v. Sarbecar Chandra, supra.

(9) Board v. Board, L. R., 9 Q. B., 35; see Bigelow op. cit., 362, 363, 538, 539.

(10) Fleming v. Gooding, 10 Bing., 549.

(12) Tidman v. Hemman, L. R., 2 Q. B. (1893) 168, 170, and this is so, though the tenancy be created by a deed which shows that the landlord possessed no legal estate; Bigelow op. cit., 30, 350, 360, 362, 367; Jolly v. Abudkhat, 4 Dec. & J., 224; Morton v. Woods, L. R., 4 Q. B. 293; Duke v. Ashley, 7 H. & N., 600. As to objection to validity of lessor’s title on the ground of want of registration, see Shams Ahmad v.
question of the lessor’s title is foreign to a suit for rent or in ejectment against a lessee. And this is so, though the ostensible lessor is merely a trustee and liable to account to the ceettii que trust.(1) In this country, however, the principle that a tenant cannot dispute his landlord’s title has been made to yield to the influence of the benami system. The tenant when sued for rent due to his lessor has been allowed to prove that the person from whom, nominally, he accepted a lease, was only a benamidar for a third person to whom the rent was really due.(2) And conversely where a landlord had accepted rent continuously from persons in whose name a lease had been taken for the benefit of their husbands, when the benamidars were unable to pay, he was allowed to sue the persons really interested in the lease.(3) A plaintiff having sued to obtain possession of certain land which the defendant held as tenant and in respect of which he had for some years paid rent, the defendant alleged that prior to the time when he became tenant the plaintiff had for good consideration conveyed to him the premises leased together with other property. This conveyance was found to be a mere benami transaction. Held, that the plaintiff was not estopped from asserting the tenancy and under the circumstances was entitled to recover.(4)

Where the plaintiff sued for possession of a house alleging the expiry of the lease on which the defendants held as tenants, and the lower Court dismissed the suit, being of opinion that the plaintiff had no title to the house when he granted the lease, and that it belonged to the defendants when they passed the lease; it was held, reversing the decree of the lower Court, that the defendants (tenants) having executed the lease could not deny the plaintiff’s title as a ground for refusing to give up possession, and the lower Court itself therefore could not go into the question.(5)

A lease, like other contracts, is binding only on parties sui juris; and persons under disability not being bound by the contract are not estopped to deny its validity.(6) The estoppel of the tenant may rest upon the sole ground that he has received possession from the landlord. It is permissible an admission of some title in him; and by reason of the landlord’s change of position the act is deemed a binding admission that he had sufficient title to make a lease. Where, however, the tenant being already in possession, has made an attachment or acknowledgment of the tenancy he may show that he did so through ignorance, mistake or the like.(7) The doctrine that the tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title is not confined to the action of ejectment.(1) The estoppel applies to all matters connected with, or arising out of the contract by which the relation of landlord and tenant, was created. The estoppel cannot, however, extend further and affect matters quite outside that contract.(2)

In regard to the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, without attempting to define it, it is sufficient to say that when the mortgagor retains possession, a relation is created similar to that of landlord and tenant, and the mortgagor is estopped to deny the title of the mortgagee; (3) unless after a distinct disclaimer brought to the knowledge of the latter he has acquired a title by adverse possession,(4) or unless the mortgage is void by statute.(5) The same principle applies in the case of trusts,(6) and to certain relations between vendors and purchasers.(7) The position also of a licensee, who, under a license, is working a patent right for which another has got a patent, is very analogous to the position of tenant and landlord, and the licensee is bound upon the same principle and in the same way. He cannot question the validity of the patent during the continuance of the license, though he may show what the limits of the patent are.(8) A right to use a trade-mark may be created by license or assignment, in which case the licensee will be in the same position as the licensee of a patent. Indeed it may be broadly asserted that the assignee or licensee of any right accepted and acted under may be estopped to deny the authority from which the right proceeds.(9) A landlord is also estopped from asserting that he had no title to let his tenant in. It is an application of the maxim that no man shall derogate from his grant. It must be taken against him that he had power to do what he purported to do. Hence the estoppel upon a vendor which precludes him from setting up his own want of title to defeat his own grant or sale and hence the same estoppel upon the mortgagor of property.(10)

The existence of a tenancy may be established by proof of a written or verbal contract under the terms of which the tenant was let into possession,(11) or it may be inferred from the circumstances of the case, such as the payment of rent,(12)

(1) Delay v. Fox, 2 C. B. N. S., 768.
(3) Bigelow, op. cit., 544.
(5) Bigelow, op. cit., 544.
(6) Bigelow, op. cit., 545.
(7) Ib., 545—552; Casparus op. cit., Ch. VI; Contract Act, ss. 98, 108, 234; Biddomoye Dabee v. Sitarun, 4 C., 497 (1878); Shankar Murlichar v. Mohan Lal, 11 B., 704; Ganges Manufacturing Co. v. Sourujmull, 5 C., 669 (1880); Greenwood v. Holiquette, 12 B. L. R., 42; LeGroy v. Harney, 1 L. R., 8 Bom., 501 (1884); G. I. P., Ry. v. Ramdas Ramkison, 14 B., 57 (1889); Premji Trikanadas v. Madhoji Munji, 4 B., 457; Bir Bhaddar v. Sarju Prasad, 9 C., 681; 20 I. A. 108; Parmanandanadas Jivundas v. Cormack, 6 B., 326 (1881).
(8) Clark v. Adic, 1 L. R., 2 App. Cas., 423. In the matter of D. H. R.'s Moses, 16 C., 244. (1887); see Act V of 1888 (Inventions and Designs): Bigelow, op. cit., 552—553; Cababé, Estoppel, 37. Casparus op. cit., Ch. IV. As to the estoppel against patentees, see Cooper v. Smith, 1 L. R., 20 Ch. D., 700; L. R., 10 App. Cas., 240; Proctor v. Bennis, L. R., 36 Ch. D., 749.
(9) Bigelow op. cit., 552; Casparus op. cit., 120. See Laverque v. Hooper, 8 M., 149 (1884).
(10) Cababé Estoppel, 43, 44.
(11) See the judgment of Field, J., in Lodai Mollah v. Kally Das, 8 C., 238, 241 (1881), where the various ways in which the relation may exist are fully discussed: as also the defences to an action for rent.
(12) Rajkeshore Surma v. Gria Kant, 25 W. R., 66 (1875); Vaseude Daji v. Babaji Rana, 8 Bom. H. C. R., 175 (1871); Ranee Mollah v. Thakoor Das, B. L. R., Sup. Vol., F. B., 588, 590 (1866); Durga v. Jhinguri, 7 A., 511, 315 (1885); Vithaldas v. Secretary of State, 26 B., 410 (1901); Gawenor v. Woodhouse, 1 Bing., 38, 43 [payment of rent in all cases furnishes a strong presumption against the tenant, and it is always a good prima facie case for the landlord]; Rogers v. Picher, 6 Taunt., 622; Cooper v. Blandy, 1 Bing. N. C., 45; Harvey v. Frosin, 2 Maclean & Robinson's Sc. App., 57; Lodai Mollah v. Kally Das, 8 C., 238, 241 (1881).
admission of the relation in a deposition in former suit,(1) submission to a distress,(2) attornment(3) or other like circumstance. No difficulty arises where an actual demise is proved and it is shown that the tenant has taken possession thereunder. The permissive occupation raises an estoppel. But other acts of the tenant, such as payment of rent, stand on a different footing. Though such an act operates as an admission, it is like all other admissions rebuttable and not conclusive.(4) And though the tenant is often required to make out a strong case he may show that the payment of rent or other act on his part was done through ignorance, fraud, misrepresentation, mistake or coercion, and thus rebut the inferences arising from his acts which tend to prove the existence of the relation asserted. He may show on whose behalf the rent was received; and when it has been paid under a mistake or misrepresentation the tenant is not estopped from resisting further payment after discovery of the misrepresentation or mistake.(5)

In order to make the payment of rent operate as an estoppel, it is essential to show that the payments have been made as for rent due in respect of land held as a tenant, and if upon the facts of the case it is plain that the payments have been made not for rent but with notice and knowledge to bind the landlord; Mridunjaya Sirar v. Gopal Chandra, 2 B. L. R., A. C. J., 131 (1868); Gour Lal v. Rameswar Bhuniik, 6 B. L. R., App. 92 (1870), but a landlord will be estopped by acceptance of rent with full knowledge of the facts: Gunga Bihai v. Ram Guh, 2 Agra, 48 (1867). Contract to pay a certain rent may be implied from payment for a number of years: Faiknathogol. v. Rangappa, 7 M., 305 (1883). The service of notice of ejectment under s. 36, Act XII of 1881, is conclusive admission of the existence of a tenancy: Baldeo Sing v. Imad Ali, 15 A., 189 (1893). See now. N. W. P. Act III of 1901.

(2) Lodai Mollah v. Kally Das, 8 C., 238, 241 (1891); Cooper v. Blandy, 1 Bing., N. C., 45.
(3) Lodai Mollah v. Kally Das, supra;
(5) See cases cited at pp. 675-677, post: Harney v. Francis, 2 Maclean and Robinson’s Sc. App. 57; Doe d. Barlow v. Wiggins, 4 Q. B., 367; Cooper v. Blandy, 1 Bing. N. C., 45; Banee Madhuk v. Thakoor Das, B. L. R., F. B., Sup. Vol. 588 (1866); S. C., 6 W. R., F. B., 71 Collector of Allahabad v. Suraj Bakh, 6 N. W. P., 333 (1874). [A person accepting a lease under coercion is not bound by such acceptance, nor do payments of rent by him to the person granting the lease stop him from questioning the title of the payee, unless the payee let him into possession. Even then the effect of the payment as estoppel would be confined to the title of the payee at the time possession was given.] As to the somewhat analogous case of payment of taxes raising no estoppel, see Fizamberdas v. Jambua Municipalities, 17 B., 510 (1892).
(8) Banee Madhuk v. Thakoor Das, supra.
(10) S. 109, ante; Rungo Lall v. Abdool Guggoor, 4 C., 314, 316, 317 (1873); Krishnaji Ram chandra v. Antaji Pandurang, 18 B., 258, 259.
of his tenancy is not in itself, and in the absence of special circumstances treated as a case of adverse possession.(1) The possession of a tenant not being adverse to the title of his landlord, limitation cannot be applied in a suit by the latter against the former.(2) The possession of a tenant is in the eye of the law the possession of his landlord.(3) Where land is leased to a person for life and upon the latter's death, his heirs continue in possession without obtaining a fresh lease or paying any rent to the landlord, the heirs, though not in possession as tenants, are not trespassers. Their possession is permissive and not adverse until they expressly set up a title of ownership in the property.(4) When the relationship of landlord and tenant has once been proved to exist, the mere non-payment of rent, though for many years, is not sufficient to show that the relationship has ceased; and a tenant who is sued for rent and contends that such relationship has ceased, is bound to prove that fact by some affirmative proof and more especially is he so bound when he does not expressly deny that he still continues to hold the land in question in the suit.(5) Mere discontinuance of payment of rent does not constitute a dispossession within the meaning of the ninth section of the Specific Relief Act.(6) The mere resumption of a lakhiraj tenure by Government does not dissolve the contract between the zamindar and tenant. The latter has the option to determine his tenancy, or he may consent that the amount of revenue which the landlord must pay to Government or a portion of it, shall be added to his original jumma.(7) Where a tenant has, by the direction of his landlord, paid rent to a third person, the landlord is estopped from recovering so much of the rent as the tenant has paid or made himself liable to pay in consequence of that representation.(8) A landlord may also be estopped from treating as his tenant, him whom he has required to enter into that relation with another instead of himself.(9) In the undermentioned case it was held that the landlord after having accepted rent from all the heirs he had no right to ignore some of them.(10) According to English law a tenant by accepting a lease for a new term, even less than the existing one, is held impliedly to surrender the previous tenancy, and by the acceptance of the new lease leaves himself from setting up the old one.(11) It has been said(12) that such a rule

(2) Krishnajji Ramchandra v. Anaji Pandurang, 18 B., 256, 258 (1893); Taia v. Sadasiv, 7 B., 40 (1882).

(5) Rongo Lall v. Abdool Gutfoor, 4 C., 317 (1878); 3 C. L. R., 110; Tirthuram Perumal v. Songudicic, 3 M., 116 (1881); Taia v. Nadashe, 7 B., 40 (1882); Trigulurho Tarinone v. Mohino Chandra, 7 W. R., 400 (1867) [the mere omission to pay rent does not constitute adverse possession]; Poreh Narain v. Kasi Chunder, 4 C. 661 (1878).

(6) Tarini Mohun v. Gunja Prasad, 14 C., 649 (1887); Dhunpat Singh v. Mahomed Kaunin, 24 C., 298, 304 (1896).

(8) White v. Greenesh, 11 C. B. N. S., 209; as to conduct not sufficient to bar landlord's rights, see Rambhaji v. Babhakhat, 18 B., 250 (1883).

(9) Dowme v. Cooper, 2 Q. B., 356.

(11) As to surrender, see Bigelow, op. cit., 555; Reed v. Lyonon, 13 M. & W., 285.

(12) Field, Ev., 564. referring to Ram Chunder v. Jughechunder, 12 B. L. R., 22 has no application in this country out of the Presidency-towns, it being notoriously customary for tenants who hold protected tenures to accept fresh leases upon every change of proprietorship, whether by inheritance, private sale, or auction-purchase. The new lease is generally regarded as confirmatory of the tenure, and the fact of the tenure being an old one is occasionally, though not always, mentioned therein. Surrender, however, both express and implied, has been recognised by the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 111, and it is conceived that what may amount to a surrender in any particular case will always in this country be a question of intention, and that if in fact the tenant by his acceptance of a fresh lease intended to, and did, surrender his old lease, the ordinary rule of estoppel will apply; but there will be no estoppel if the fresh lease be, and was intended to be, confirmatory only of the preceding one.

As in other cases the estoppel binds the tenant's privies as well as the tenant, so if the tenant sublet the premises the sub-lessee cannot dispute the title of the original lessor. But although a tenant who has been let into possession of land by a lessor is estopped from disputing his lessor's title, as are also persons claiming through him whether as assignee of the lease or as under-tenant, yet third persons, not claiming possession of the land under the tenant, are not so estopped. A person therefore who lets premises to which he has no title to a tenant, cannot distrain for arrears of rent due from the tenant the goods of a third person which happen to have been brought on to the premises by the tenant's license.

The question whether the relation of landlord and tenant exists may have to be decided under one of two possible cases: (i) where the plaintiff has let the defendant in possession of the land; (ii) when the plaintiff is not himself the person who let the defendant into possession, but claims under a title derived from the person who did. This section applies to the first case and estops the tenant from denying the landlord's title. In the second case of derivative title (that is by assignment including gift, sale, devise, lease or by inheritance, including adoption amongst Hindus), when the plaintiff claims by derivative title the defendant is not estopped from showing that the title is not really in the plaintiff, but in some other person. As the estoppel is available against the representatives of the lessee so it enures for the benefit of those claiming under the original lessor. Thus in the case cited below the defendant hired apartments by the year from one W, who afterwards let the entire house to the plaintiff. In an action by the latter against the defendant for use and occupation, it was held that the defendant having used and occupied the premises under a lease from W was not competent to impeach his title or that of the plaintiff who claimed through him. Further an attornment to one claiming under the original lessor leaves the tenant ordinarily in precisely the same position (so far as the question of the estoppel to deny the title of the lessor is concerned) as he was with the original landlord; he cannot dispute the title in the one case more than the other.

(1873); Roy Odyate v. Ukhwaru Roy, 4 W. R., Act X., 1 (1885); Puddu Muner v. Jholla Polly, 7 W. R., 293 (1887).

(1) See Casperin op cit., 84.
(2) Bigelow op. cit., 512; the doctrine of primity is illustrated by Doe d. Bullen v. Mills, 2 A. & E., 17; Bennie v. Robinson, 1 Bing., 147; London & W. R. Ry. Co. v. West, L. R., 2 C. F., 625 (1887).
(3) Harwick v. Thompson, 7 T. R., 488.
(4) Doe d. Bullen v. Mills, 2 A. & E., 17;
(9) Lodhi Mulak v. Kally Dass, 8 C., 238, 241 (1881).
(10) Bennie v. Robinson, 1 Bing., 147.
(11) Bigelow, op. cit., 533.
attornment or not, the tenant may always show that the claimant has no derivative title from his original lessor or that the derivative title is defective, or that an attornment made by him to the person claiming under the original lessor was made under the influence of fraud, or mistake or the like. Thus though the lessee of A assigns to A from whom he received possession, he will not be so estopped as to assign the premises to B, from disputing B's title by showing either that A's title was not such a one as would enable him to pass a legal estate to B, or that even if it was such, A's title had determined. In such cases the title of the landlord who let the tenant into possession is not impeached, but only the title of him who claims to be the successor of the landlord. Without denying the landlord's title, the derivative title of his alleged successor may be impeached in several ways. It is clear, firstly, that if a man takes land from one person and afterwards pays rent to another believing that other to be the representative of the person from whom he took the land, he is not estopped from proving that the person to whom he paid rent was not the legal representative of the person from whom he took; for example if a man pays rent to another believing him to be the heir-at-law of his deceased landlord, and afterwards discovers that he is not the heir-at-law, or that the landlord left a will, the tenant in a suit for subsequent arrears of rent would not be estopped from showing that he paid the former arrears under a mistake, and that the person to whom paid had no title. It may be shown that the claimant is a stranger to the title of the original lessor. So again the tenant in possession will not be estopped from showing that, however valid the title of his original landlord may have been, there has been in fact no transfer thereof to the claimant. So also it may be shown that the original lessor's title was not such a one as would enable him to pass the legal estate to the plaintiff. If again a tenant being already in possession of the premises executed a lease in favour of a stranger to the title, or a person claiming a derivative title from the last owner, he is not estopped from disputing the title of the person to whom he has so given the agreement. The broad distinction between all the cases above mentioned and that dealt with by the section lies in the fact that the person whose title is disputed is not the person who let the tenant into possession, and is not therefore a person in favour of whose own title the estoppel operates. The words "at the beginning of the tenancy" in this section only apply to cases in which tenants are put into possession of the tenancy by the person to whom they have attorned, and not to cases in which the tenants have previously been in possession. A tenant further is not estopped to allege that he was let into possession under a title since acquired by him, under which subordinately the landlord claims. When moreover the tenant being already in possession

(2) Doe v. Dugginbotham v. Barton, 11 A. & E., 837; the tenant may always show that the assignment was ineffectual to pass the lessor's title; Hibboum v. Poggy, 99 Mass., 1 (Amer.), citing the last and other cases. Bigelow, op. cit., 538 note.

(7) Ib.; Lall Mahomed v. Kallamnu, 11 C., 519 (1884); in this last case, it was alleged, that the title of the person under whom the Josie had originally been held had expired owing to the execution of a deed of mimangapatara.

(8) Lall Mahomed v. Kallamnu, supra.

(9) Ib.; see Seetharama Raju v. Bayamul Pantulu, 17 M., 278 (1894); Bigelow, op. cit., 525, 538; as to what constitutes a letting into possession, see Taylor, Ev., § 103.

(10) Ford v. Agar, 2 R. & C., 279.
has attorned or paid rent, or otherwise acknowledged the tenancy he may show that he did so through ignorance, (1) fraud, (2) misrepresentation, (3) mistake, (4) or coercion: (5) and if induced to attorn and take a lease by these means, he may dispute the title of the person claiming to be his lessor. (6)

Although a tenant may not, during the continuance of the tenancy, deny that his landlord had a title at the beginning of such tenancy, he may show that his landlord’s title has expired or determined; for this section only operates as an estoppel during the continuance of the tenancy. (7) In such a case he does not dispute the title but confesses and avoids in by matter ex post facto. (8) Justice requires that the tenant should be permitted to raise this plea, for a tenant is liable to the person who has the real title and may be forced to make payment to him, and it would be unjust if, being so liable, he could not show the expiry or determination of his landlord’s title as a defence. (9) Although a tenant may show that his landlord’s title has expired, yet if he enters on a new tenancy he shall be bound; but before he can be so bound, it must appear that he was acquainted with all the circumstances of the landlord’s title. The landlord before he enters into a new contract must explain to the tenant that his former title is at an end. (10) It is well settled that a tenant in possession cannot even after the expiration of his lease, deny his landlord’s title without actually and openly surrendering possession to him, or being evicted by title paramount, or attorning thereto, or at least giving notice to his landlord that he shall claim under another and a valid title. (11) The tenant must give up possession to the landlord and then if he has any title aliunde that title may be tried in a suit of ejectment brought by him against his former landlord. (12)

(3) Doe d. Plevis v. Brown, 7 A. & E., 447; Gravenor v. Woodhouse, 1 Bing., 38, 43.

(4) Jee v. Wood, supra.; Rogers v. Pitcher, Taunt., 202; followed in Kets Dass v. Surendra Nath, 7 C. W. N., 596 (1903); followed Doe d. Plevis v. Brown, 7 A. & E., 447; Cornish v. Snarell, 8 B. & C., 471; Gravenor v. Woodhouse, 1 Bing., 38; Vikaldas v. Secretary of State, 26 B., 410 (1901); admission of payment of rent raises a prima facie presumption of title and throws the onus on the other party of showing that it was made by mistake). For a case under s. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, see Durga Das v. Samash Aban, 4 C. W. N., 606 (1896).

(6) Bigelow, op. cit., 523, 527. The tenant or his assignee, it may then be broadly stated, is not estopped to explain the circumstances under which, being already in possession, he has made an attornment to the plaintiff. ib., 523, 525.
lease for a term of years is bound to surrender it to such landlord at the expiration of such lease even apart from any covenant by the tenant to surrender. He cannot set up a jus tertii in a third person having a title paramount unless during the period of the tenancy, there has been an ouster by the person having the title paramount so as to determine the original lessor’s right at the date of the lease. (1) A very important qualification of the rule of the tenant’s estoppel prevails in the case of an actual disclaimer. If the tenant disclaim to hold of his lessor, and notice of the fact is brought home to the lessor, the tenant’s possession then becomes adverse; the lessor may at once eject him from the premises; and if he fails to do so before the period of limitation has expired, the tenant may then set up his own title acquired by adverse possession of the title of any other person under whom he claims to hold. But he cannot set up such title in an action brought by the lessor before the expiration of the period of limitation. (2)

These words only apply to cases in which tenants are put into possession of the tenancy by the person to whom they have attorned, and not to cases in which the tenants have previously been in possession. (3) Where, however, in a suit for rent the tenant denied the execution of the kabulyat propounded by the plaintiffs, pleaded that it was forged and denied payment of rent under it to the plaintiffs and failed to establish his pleas, it was held that the tenant was not entitled to prove that the plaintiffs were not his landlords, although he had not been inducted into the land by the plaintiffs. (4) It was pointed out in this case that in Lal Mahomed v. Kallanus no question was raised or decided as to what, if any, limitations there are of the tenant’s privilege to deny the title of his lessor after attornment when he was not inducted by such lessor: and that it was not intended to lay down that a person in occupation of land may select his rent receiver and execute a solemn agreement promising to pay him rent, and pay him rent for a time with full knowledge that he had no right to the land, and thereafter at any time decline to pay him rent pleading want of title in him and without attempting to show any other circumstances which would invalidate the contract of tenancy. Certain property was mortgaged in 1884. In 1889 the appellant took from the mortgagors and another person a lease of certain lands which included a portion of the mortgaged property. In a suit by the mortgagee on his mortgage to which the appellant was made a party defendant; it was held that though as between the lessors and lessee under that lease, it might well be that the lessee who was represented by the appellant was estopped from saying that, at the date of that lease, the share mentioned in it was not the share of the lessors; yet that the appellant was not, owing to the lease taken by him in 1889, estopped from showing that the mortgagors were not entitled to the whole of the mortgaged property at the time the mortgage was executed in 1884, i.e., five years before the lease was taken by the appellant. (5) See ante, pp. 675-677.

The rule of the tenant’s estoppel prevails against one who is in possession of land under a mere license. (6) The rule as to claiming title applies to the case of a tenant, extends also to that of a person coming in by permission as a mere lodger or as a servant. There is no distinction between the case of a tenant and that of a common licensee. Both have been let into possession by the act of the landlord, and the licensee by asking permission admits that there is a title in the landlord and the law under such circumstances implies a tenancy. (7)

---

(2) Bigelow, op. cit., 534.
The case last cited was an ejectment in which it appeared that the defendant applied to the plaintiff then in possession of the premises for the privilege of getting vegetables from the garden; and that having obtained the keys he fraudulently took possession and set up a claim to the land. The Court refused to hear it. (1)

117. No acceptor of a bill of exchange shall be permitted to deny that the drawer had authority to draw such bill or to endorse it; nor shall any bailee or licensee be permitted to deny that his bailor or licensor had, at the time when the bailment or license commenced, authority to make such bailment or grant such license.

Explanation 1.—The acceptor of a bill of exchange may deny that the bill was really drawn by the person by whom it purports to have been drawn.

Explanation 2.—If a bailee delivers the goods bailed to a person other than the bailor, he may prove that such person had a right to them as against the bailor.

Principle.—These are further instances of the estoppel by agreement. The acceptance of a bill amounts to an undertaking to pay to the order of the drawer, but the transaction would be idle if after having so undertaken, the acceptor were allowed to set up that the drawer had no authority to draw the bill. He is therefore precluded from doing so, for to allow him to do so would be to allow him to contradict that which his act of acceptance really imports. (2) The estoppel of bailee and licensee is analogous to that of landlord and tenant and is based on similar principles. (3)

COMMENTARY.

Estoppels in the case of negotiable instruments are instances of estoppel by agreement or contract. Rules such as those contained in this section may be called 'estoppels,' but they are estoppels springing from the nature of the transaction founded upon mercantile custom, and may now be regarded as statutory estoppels. (4) This section is in accordance with English Law except as to the first Explanation. Under the terms of the latter the acceptor may show that the signature of the drawer is a forgery, while in England he is not allowed to do so; for it is held that he is bound to know his own correspondent's signature. (5) This section is supplemented by sections 41 and 42 of the

(1) See also for another example of the licensee's estoppel: Gour Hari v. Amruncanca Khat-zeen, 11 C. L. R., 9 (1841); see, as to licensees, Act V of 1882 (Esaments), ss. 52–56.

(2) Cababé Estoppel, 44: Rup Chand v. Sar-becwar Chandra, 10 C. W. N., 747 (1886), s. c., 3 C. L. J., 632.

(3) Vup Chand v. Sarbecwar Chandra, supra.

(4) Bigelow op. cit., 480–486; Caspers op-cit., Ch. VIII; Chalmers on Bills of Exchange,

(5) See Taylor, Ev., § 851.

(6) Sanderson v. Coleman, 4 M. & Gr., 209; as to estoppels arising out of adoption of forged signatures: see Brook v. Brook, L. R., 6 Ex., Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), which provide for the liability of the acceptor in the case of a forged indorsement and of a bill drawn in a fictitious name. (1) Other sections define the position of the maker of a note, (2) or cheque, (3) an acceptor before maturity, (4) the drawer until acceptance, (5) the acceptor (6) and indorser. (7)

Sections 118—122 of Act XXVI of 1881 enact special rules of evidence with regard to negotiable instruments. There are certain presumptions as to consideration, date, time of acceptance, time of transfer, order of indorsement, stamp, and as to the holder being a holder in due course. (8) On proof of protest the Court will also presume the fact of dishonour. (9) The same Act then proceeds to enact three cases of estoppel against the maker of a note, the drawer of a bill or cheque, the acceptor of a bill, and the indorser, which are here reproduced.

No maker of a promissory note, and no drawer of a bill of exchange or cheque, and no acceptor of a bill of exchange for the honor of the drawer shall, in a suit thereon by a holder in due course, be permitted to deny the validity of the instrument as originally made or drawn. (10)

No maker of a promissory note and no acceptor of a bill of exchange payable to, or to the order of, a specified person shall, in a suit thereon by a holder in due course, be permitted to deny the payee’s capacity, at the date of the note or bill, to indorse the same. (11)

No indorser of a negotiable instrument shall in a suit thereon by a subsequent holder, be permitted to deny the signature or capacity to contract of any prior party to the instrument. (12)

Section 20 deals with inchoate instruments. (13) As to estoppels arising out of negligence and agency in connection with negotiable instruments, see note below; they are but instances of the general estoppel by omission to which reference has been made in section 115, ante. (14)

The bond fide holder for value of a forged hundi to whom, after it had been dishonoured, it had been transferred by indorsement by the payees, who at the time of indorsement knew that the hundi was forged, sued the payees on the hundi to recover the amount he had paid them for it. Held that the payees were estopped from setting up the forgery of the hundi as a bar to the suit. (15)

The relation between bailor and bailee is analogous to that of landlord and tenant. He will not be permitted to deny his bailor’s title any more than the

(2) Act XXVI of 1881, ss. 32, 37.
(3) Ib., s. 37.
(4) Ib., s. 32.
(5) Ib., s. 32.
(6) Ib., ss. 37, 88.
(7) Ib., s. 88.
(8) Ib., 118.
(9) Act XXVI of 1881, s. 119.
(10) Ib., s. 130.
(11) Ib., s. 151.
(12) Ib., s. 122. Thickness v. Bromilow, 2 Cr. & L., 422; McGregor v. Rhodes, 6 E. & B., 288; the above sections appear generally to represent the English law upon the same subject: see Chalmers’ Neg. Inst. Act, 113, 114.
(13) See Foster v. Mackinnon, L. R., 4 C. P., 704, 712; Russell v. Langstaffe, 2 Doug., 496; Wadkununno v. Durgadas, 6 C., 39; Bigelow, op. cit., 457, 494, 555. It has been said to be doubtful whether the liability in these cases rests on estoppel or on the law-merchant: Ex parte Swan, 7 C. B., N. S., 446: as to instruments lost or stolen, see Act XXVI of 1881, ss. 55; Barnsdale v. Bennett, L. R., 3 Q. R. D., 525.
ESTOPPEL OF ACCEPTOR, BAilee. LICENSEE.

tenant may deny title of his landlord (see section 116, ante). But by the second explanation to this section, the same exception applies to his case as to that of the tenant, namely, that where something equivalent to title paramount has been asserted against the bailee, he is discharged as against those who entrusted the goods to him. * The bailee has no better title than the bailor, and consequently if a person entitled as against the bailor to the property claims it, the bailee has no defence against him. The true ground on which a bailee may set up the jus tertii is that the estoppel ceases when the bailment on which it is founded is determined by what is equivalent to an eviction by title paramount. It is not enough that the bailee has become aware of the title of a third person, nor is it enough that an adverse claim is made upon him so that he may be entitled to relief under an interpleader.(1) A bailee can set up the title of another only if he defends upon the right and title and by the authority of that person.(2)

As between a bailor and bailee, the latter in an action for non-delivery of goods upon the demand of his bailor must take one of the following courses: (a) He may show that he has already delivered the goods upon a delivery order authorized by the bailor: (b) or he may institute a suit of interpleader: (c) or he may defend the action on behalf of the real owner, alleging and proving the title of the real owner, defending expressly upon that title.(3)

The same principle applies in the case of a wharfinger who agrees to hold goods for the plaintiff under a delivery order from a purchaser of the defendant wharfinger; he cannot resist trover for them on the ground, e. g., that they have never been separated from bulk and that, therefore, no property passed to the person delivering.(4)

The rule with regard to principal and agent is that an agent must account to his principal and cannot set up the jus tertii against him except when the principal has been acting under a bond fide misapprehension as to the rights of some third person or has been fraudulently acting in derogation of those rights.(5) As to licensees, see section 116, pp. 678, 679 ante.(6)

(1) As to the procedure in interpleader suits, see on. 470—476, Civ. Pro. Code; Rogers Sons & Co. v. Lambert, L. R. (1891), 1 Q. B., 327.
(2) Biddle v. Bond, 6 B. & S., 231, followed in Rogers Sons & Co. v. Lambert, supra; see Contract Act, s. 166; and generally as to bailments ib., ss. 148—173; Coxe v. Barward, Sm. L. Cas.; Bigelow op. cit., 548—552; Casperus, op. cit., Ch. V., Everest and Strode, op. cit., 268—276.
(3) Rogers Sons & Co. v. Lambert L. R. (1891), 1 Q. B., 325, per Lord Eliaher; as to estoppel by election to support title either of bailor or third party, see Exparte Davies, L. R. 10 Ch. D., 80 (1881).
(5) Everest and Strode, op. cit., 268; Smith's Mercantile Law, 1, 122, 10th Ed., 1890.
(6) And see Everest and Strode, op. cit., 268.
CHAPTER IX.

OF WITNESSES.

The present Chapter deals mainly with the competency(1) and compellability(2) of witnesses. A witness is said to be incompetent to give evidence when the Judge is bound, as matter of law, to reject his testimony.(3) The motives to prevent the truth are so much more numerous in judicial investigations that in the ordinary affairs of life the danger of injustice arising from this cause, has, till modern times, been thought to justify the observance of rules by virtue of which large and numerous classes of persons were rendered incompetent witnesses, and their testimony was uniformly excluded.(4) A recognition of the artificial character of these rules of exclusion, which had no foundation or justification in actual experience, and which led to frequent injustice, and of the necessity of increasing, as much as possible, the media of investigation led gradually to the conversion of questions of competency into questions of credibility. Then tendency of modern legislation has been rather to allow the witness to make his statement, leaving its truth to be estimated by the tribunal, than to reject his testimony altogether.(5) Competency thus becomes the rule: incompetency the exception: and incompetency is reduced within a narrow compass. Proceeding on this principle (more thoroughly than the English law, which still retains traces of the older judicial system), the Evidence Act declares all persons to be competent witnesses except such as are wanting in intellectual capacity. Granted this capacity, all person become admissible as witnesses, it being left to the Court "to attach to their evidence that amount of credence which it appears to deserve, from their demeanour, deportment under cross-examination, motives to speak or hide the truth, means of knowledge, powers of memory, and other tests, by which the value of their statements can be ascertained, if not with absolute certainty, yet with such a reasonable amount of conviction as ought to justify a man of ordinary prudence in acting upon those statements."(6) Thus neither want of religion, nor physical defect, not involving intellectual incapacity ;(7) nor interest, arising from the fact that the witness is a party to the record, or wife or husband of such party,(8) or otherwise; nor the fact that the witness is an accomplice in the commission of a crime,(9) form any ground for the exclusion of testimony.

But the competency of a witness to give evidence is one thing, and the power to compel him to give evidence another.(10) And this compellability may

---

(1) Sa. 118—120, 133, post.
(2) Sa. 121—132.
(3) Best, Ev., § 132.
(5) See Taylor, Ev., § 1343 et seq.; Best, Ev., §§ 62, 132 et seq.; Wigmore, Ev., § 501; see remarks in Blake v. Albion Life Assurance Society, 4 C. P. D., 109; R. v. Gopal Dass, 3 M., 271, 292 (1881) ; As to the credibility of and other general remarks as to witnesses, see Field's Ev., p. 33 et seq., and Norton, Ev., p. 33 et seq.; Best, Ev., pp. 11, 13, 15, 111. As to credibility, see Stewart Rapalje, op. cit., 305—379.
(6) Field, Ev., 566.
(7) See sa. 118, 119, post.
(8) S. 120, post.
(9) S. 133, post.
(10) See De Britton v. De Britton and Holme, 4 A., 49, 50 (1881). As to the meaning of the word " compelled " in the following section, see be either (i) compellability to be sworn or affirmed; thus ordinarily in matrimonial proceedings the parties are competent but not compellable; they may, if they choose, offer themselves as witnesses, (1) and under the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, (2) an officer of the Bank is not, in any proceeding to which the bank is a party, compellable to produce, or to appear as witness to prove, any bankers' books, without the order of a Judge made for special cause; or (ii) compellability when sworn to answer questions; thus a witness, who may be generally compellable to give evidence, may yet be protected or privileged in respect of particular matters concerning which he may be unwilling to speak. (3) Further, there are certain cases in which the law will not permit the witness to speak, even if he be willing. (4) Sections 121—132 declare exceptions to the general rules that a witness is bound to state the whole truth, or to produce any document in his possession or power relevant to the matter in issue. (5) These rules of privilege and prohibition rest on grounds of public policy which are shortly set forth in the notes to the sections which enact them (v. post). But, as a general rule, all witnesses competent to give evidence are compellable to do so. The procedure to be followed in order to compel the giving of evidence is regulated by the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes. (6) Lastly, section 134 declares that no particular number of witnesses are required for the proof of any fact.

The exclusionary rules in the present Chapter are based either directly on general considerations of public policy, such as the rules relating to affairs of State and official communications, (7) information given for the detection of crime, (8) and judicial disclosures; (9) or on grounds of privilege, such as the rules relating to professional (10) and matrimonial (11) communications, and title-deed and other documents. (12) In connection with these rules should be read the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to discovery. (13) In fact, questions of privilege arise as frequently on applications for discovery or inspection before trial as with reference to testimony in the witness-box, but the principles are substantially the same. (14) Whatever difference may exist between the case of evidence asked for or tendered at the trial, and that of an application for discovery or inspection, is altogether in favour of a refusal to order discovery in the earlier stages of the case. (15) A person interrogated under section 128, or ordered to produce under section 130 of the Civil Procedure Code, may plead his privilege in the terms of this Act. When it was contended for the defendant that even if a case submitted by the plaintiff to his counsel could not be used in evidence under section 129 of the Evidence Act, yet the defendant was entitled to have inspection of it under section 130 of the Civil Procedure Code, such contention was disallowed by West, J., who said: 'The argument that albeit the document may not be such that the Court can properly order its production as evidence, yet the opposite party may demand a perusal of it, is, I think, opposed to all principle. If a communication is protected by its confidential character, it is protected in an

---

R. v. Gopel Doss, 3 M., 271, 276 et seq. (1881); post.
(1) See Act IV of 1860, ss. 51, 52 (Indian Divorce), and note to s. 120, post.
(2) Act XVIII of 1891, s. 5; Act I of 1893.
(3) See ss. 122, 124, 125, 129, post.
(4) See ss. 122, 123, 126, 127, post.
(5) R. v. Gopel Doss, supra, 277.
(6) Civ. Pr. Code, s. 174, see ss. 106—178, passim; Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 171, 206, 216, 217, 219, 231, 244, 282, 276, 250, 485, 540; see also Penal Code, ss. 174, 175; and ss. 172—180, id., passim; see Introduction to Chapter X, post.
(7) Ss. 123 and 124, post.
(8) S. 125, post.
(9) S. 121, post.
(10) Ss. 128—129, post.
(11) S. 122, post.
(12) Ss. 130, 131, post.
(13) Civ. Pr. Code, Chap. X.
(15) Hennessy v. Wright, supra, per Willa, J., 521.
especial degree as against an adversary in litigation." (1) A person cannot be indirectly compelled to disclose what he cannot be directly called upon to state. (2) Under the law of privilege it is necessary to set it up, because it is only an excuse which the Judge may or may not recognise as good, and it is his decision that either accords the privilege or withholds it. (3) There is a great difference between privilege and incompetency. An incompetent witness cannot be examined, and if examined inadvertently, his testimony is not legal evidence; but a privileged witness may be examined and his testimony is legal, if the privilege be not insisted on. (4)

118. All persons shall be competent to testify unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to those questions, by tender years, extreme old age, disease, whether of body or mind, or any other cause of the same kind.

Explanation.—A lunatic is not incompetent to testify, unless he is prevented by his lunacy from understanding the questions put to him and giving rational answers to them.

Principle.—See Notes, post.

Court.

Act X of 1873 (Indian Oaths); Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 337, 342, 343; ib., s. 294; Act X of 1865, s. 55 (Indian Succession); Act XXI of 1870, s. 2 (Hindu wills); Taylor, Ev., § 1342 et seq.; Best, Ev., § 132, et seq.; Powell, Ev., 26; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 303; Steph. Dig., Ch. XV; Phillips and Arnold, Ev., 3–142; Wharton, Ev., §§ 301–420; Burr Jones, Ev., § 730, et seq.; Stewart Rapalje's Law of Witnesses, 1–301; Sichel's Practice Relating to Witnesses. p. 16; Wigmore, Ev., § 463 et seq.

COMMENTARY.

The division of function between Judge and Jury allot without question to the Judge the determination of all matters of fact on which the admissibility of evidence depends and therefore of the facts of a witness' capacity to testify. (5) So it was held that whether or not a child was competent to give evidence was a question for the Judge to decide and not for the Jury; the amount of credit to be given to the statements being all that fell within the province of the latter. (6)

Understanding is the sole test of competency. The Court has not to enter into enquiries as to the witness' religious belief, or as to his knowledge of the consequences of falsehood in this world or the next. (7) It has to ascertain, in the best way it can, whether, from the extent of his intellectual capacity and understanding, he is able to give a rational account of what he has seen or heard, or done on a particular occasion. If a person of tender years, or of very advanced age, can satisfy these requirements, his competency

(2) Byrne v. Ashkenazi, 15 B., 10 (1880).
(3) R. v. Copall Bros., supra, 286: but see also ss. 133, 124, post.
(5) Wigmore, Ev., § 487.
(6) R. v. Howe, 8 W. R., Cr., 60 (1867).
(7) As the necessity in English law in the case of a child witness of belief in punishment for lying in a future state, see Steph. Dig., Note XI. and Whitley Stokes, 531.
as a witness is established. (1) The omission to administer either an oath or solemn affirmation to a child, although knowingly made, does not render its evidence inadmissible. (2) But a Court has no option when once it has elected to take the statements of a person as evidence, but to administer to such person either an oath or affirmation as the case may require. The competency of a person to testify as a witness is a condition precedent to the administration to him of an oath or affirmation, and is a question distinct from that of his credibility when he has been sworn or has affirmed. (3) If a witness, after being sworn, is shown to be incapable of understanding, the Judge should strike out all his evidence. (4) The modern practice is to interrogate the witness before swearing him, or to elicit the facts upon the examination-in-chief; when, if his incompetency appears, he will be rejected. (5)

"A witness may be in such extreme pain as to be unable to understand or, if to understand, to answer questions; or he may be unconscious, as if in a fainting fit, catalepsy, or the like.

This applies to idiocy and lunacy. An idiot is one who was born irrational; a lunatic is one who born rational has subsequently become irrational. The idiot can never become rational; but a lunatic may entirely recover, or have lucid intervals. At the time when unscientific ideas prevailed the deaf and dumb were so far treated as idiots that they were presumed to be incapable of testifying until the contrary was shown. This presumption has now disappeared and ordinarily the only question will be as to the possibility of communicating with them by some certain system of signs. (6)

E.g., drunkenness. (7) It must be ejusdem generis. The disability is only co-extensive with the cause, and, therefore when the cause is removed, the disability also ceases. Thus, a lunatic during a lucid interval may be examined. The return of sobriety renders a drunkard competent.

This applies to the case of a monomaniac, or person affected with partial insanity, who may be a very good witness as to all other points than that on which he is insane." (8) The leading case is R. v. Hulley. (9) There the witness believed that he had 20,000 spirits personally appertaining to him. On all other points he was perfectly sane. His testimony as to all other matters was received.

An accused person cannot, in a criminal case, be examined as a witness. The effect of sections 342, 343 (no oath to be administered to the accused) of the Criminal Procedure Code is to render it illegal for a Magistrate to convert an accused person into a witness, except when a pardon has been lawfully granted under section 337. (10) With regard to several persons jointly

---

(4) R. v. Whitehead, L. R., 1 C. C. R., 33.

(5) Wharton, Ev., § 492; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 412; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1392, 1393; Wigmore, Ev., § 486. The preliminary examination is known as the voire dire.

(6) Wigmore, Ev., §§ 498, 811 (see s. 119, post).

(7) Id., § 499. See Walker's Trial, 23 How., St. Tr., 1153.

(9) 2 Don. & P. C. C., 254.

(10) R. v. Hulley, 1 B., 618 (1877); and see cases cited post. In a large number of modern English statutes clauses have been incorporated enabling the party charged with a crime to give evidence on his own behalf; see Best, Ev., § 622. And under the Criminal acused, the rule at one time in England and followed in India was that, when there is no community of interest, any one of a number of prisoners jointly indicted may be called as a witness either for or against his co-ndefendants.(1) But the rule is now otherwise, and neither in England nor in India, can a person jointly indicted and jointly tried with the accused (but not separately tried) (2) be called as a witness either for or against the accused. (3) By the word "acused" in the last sentence of section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code is meant a person over whom the Magistrate or other Court is exercising jurisdiction. (4) A person never arrested, and against whom no process had issued, is a competent witness, even if a principal offender. (5) So, where a complaint was made to a Magistrate against A and B, and process issued against A only, B was held a competent witness on his behalf. (6) When, during the course of a police-investigation, one of several persons, who were arrested by the Police, was illegally discharged by them, such person was held to be a competent witness. (7) In R. v. Ledodhar (8) the reasoning in R. v. Hanmantra is extended to the case of an accused person against whom the Magistrate illegally allowed the charge to be withdrawn; his subsequent evidence as a witness was held inadmissible. "There is no law or principle which prevents a person who has been suspected and charged with an offence, but discharged by the Magistrate for want of evidence, being afterwards admitted as a witness for the prosecution." (9) Where the public prosecutor with the consent of the Court withdrew from the prosecution of two out of several accused persons tried jointly for an offence and the two accused were thereupon discharged under s. 494 of the Criminal Procedure Code and then examined as witnesses for the prosecution it was held that the persons so discharged were competent witnesses. (10)

The Criminal Procedure Code provides for the examination as witnesses, of jurors and assessors. (11)

No person, by reason of interest in, or of his being an executor of, a will, is disqualified, as a witness, to prove the execution of the will, or to prove the validity or invalidity thereof. (12) As to parties, and the wives and husbands of parties, (13) dumb persons, (14) accomplices, (15) and Judges, (16) v. post. Though such a course is most strongly disapproved, a person may, in the same suit, be both advocate and witness. (17)

Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict., Ch. 36), an accused may elect to give evidence on his own behalf. See Jofl's Law of Evidence in Criminal cases.

(1) R. v. Ashraff Shaikh, 6 W. R., Cr., 91 (1886).
(2) R. v. Bradalough, 15 Cox, 217; Winnors v. R., L. R., 1 Q. B., 390; Steph. Dig., Art. 104.
(4) R. v. Mona Puna, 668, supra.
(7) R. v. Mona Puna, supra.
(11) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 290; see R. v. Ram Charn, 24 W. R., 26 Cr. (1858); a juror may not be disqualified by reason of his having given evidence from continuing to sit as juror, or taking part in delivering the verdict; see R. v. Mita Sing, 4 B. I. R., 15, 17 (1870); Taylor, Ev., § 1379; Best, Ev., § 187; In re Hurro Chawde, 20 W. R., Cr., 76 (1873); see also s. 121, note.
(12) Act X of 1865, s. 55 (Indian Succession); Act XXI of 1870, s. 2 (Hindu Wills).
(13) S. 120.
(14) S. 119.
(15) S. 133.
(16) See note to s. 121.
(17) Ramkesh Shaw v. Bosphorh Mandal, 5 B. L. R., App., 23 (1879); Cobett v. Hudson, 1 B. & B., 11; see remarks in R. v. Bruce, 2 B. & Ald. 606; "it is very usual that a person should be permitted to state, not upon oath facts which is afterwards to state on oath," and Best, Ev., §§ 184—187; Steph. Dig., note XI.II. Cases, however, might occur in which it might be absolutely 119. A witness who is unable to speak may give his evidence in any other manner in which he can make it intelligible, as by writing or by signs; but such writing must be written, and the signs made in open Court. Evidence so given shall be deemed to be oral evidence.

Principle.—See Introduction, ante.(1)

(1) 3 ("Evidence.")

s. 3 (Meaning of "Oral evidence.")

COMMENTARY.

A deaf-mute is taught to give ideas by signs which must be translated by an interpreter skilled and sworn.(2)

If the witness is able to communicate his ideas perfectly by writing, he will be required to adopt that as the more satisfactory method.(3)

120. In all civil proceedings the parties to the suit, and the husband or wife of any party to the suit, shall be competent witnesses. In criminal proceedings against any person, the husband or wife of such person, respectively, shall be a competent witness.

Principle.—See Introduction, ante.(4)

(2) Parties to civil suit, and their wives or husbands.

(3) Husband or wife of person under criminal trial.

(4) Parties to suit: husband and wife.

s. 118 (Competency.)

Cr. Pr. Code, s. 498; Act IV of 1869; ss. 51, 52 (Indian Divorce); Best, Ev., §§ 167—

169; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1348—1372; Steph. Dig., Arts. 106, 108, 108A Note XI; Stewart

Rapalje's Law of Witnesses, §§ 25—45; see also Index; Wharton, Ev., §§ 457—490, 421—433.

COMMENTARY.

The position of parties to a civil suit is (except when otherwise regulated by statute) in no wise different from that of other witnesses. Proceedings under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which provides for the passing of orders for the maintenance of wives and children, are in the nature of civil proceedings within the meaning of this section, and the person sought to be charged is a competent witness on his own behalf.(5) In criminal proceedings the prosecutor (though the Crown is always the nominal party prosecuting) necessary for the advocate to give evidence: see Best, Ev., § 134; Taylor, Ev., § 1891.

(1) See also Taylor, Ev., § 1376. See also Wharton, Ev., §§ 406, 407; Stewart Rapalje op. cit., § 6; as to evidence by an interpreter, see Ruston's case, 1 Lesch, C., 406.

(2) Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y., 478 (Am.err.).

(3) Morrison v. Lenard, 3 C. & P., 127; but this is denied in certain American cases where it is said the witness should be permitted the most fitment and natural mode. Wigmore, Ev., § 811, p. 913, n. 3 id. See also Wharton, Ev., §§ 406, 407; Stewart Rapalje op. cit., § 6; as to evidence by an interpreter, see Ruston's case, 1 Lesch, C., 406.

(4) And Best, Ev., § 133 et seq.; Taylor, Ev., § 1344 et seq.

(5) In re Tokke Ribee v. Abdool Khan, 5 C., 536 (1879); Nur Mohamed v. Birmulla Jan, 16 C., 781 (1889), followed in Rosario v. Inglis, post; Hira Lal v. Sahib Jan, 18 A., 107 (1895). As to examination of wife as to non-access of husband, see Rosario v. Inglis, 18 B., 468 (1894), and n. 112, ante; as to the corroboration of the mother's evidence, required by English law, see Cole v. Manning, L. R., 2 Q. B. D., 611; Lawrence v. Inghire, 20 L. T. N. S., 391, and note to s. 134 post. is competent, but the accused is not (v. ante ). The rule in matrimonial procceedings is that, upon a petition by a wife for dissolution of marriage on account of adultery coupled with cruelty or desertion the parties are competent and compellable to give evidence of, or relating to, such cruelty or desertion, but they cannot in this case be examined or cross-examined as to facts relating to acts of adultery, and cannot, in other cases, be examined at all, unless they offer themselves as witnesses or verify their cases by affidavit.(1) The co-respondent, in a suit by a husband for the dissolution of his marriage with his wife on the ground of adultery, was summoned by the petitioner in such suit as a witness. The Court did not explain to him before he was sworn, that it was not compulsory upon, but optional with, him to give evidence or not.
He did not object to be sworn, and replied to the questions asked him by the petitioner's counsel without hesitation, until he was asked whether he had had sexual intercourse with the respondent. He then asked the Court whether he was bound to answer such question. The Court told him he was bound to do so, and he accordingly answered such question, answering it in the affirmative.
Had the Court not told him that he was bound to answer such question, he would have declined to answer it. Held under such circumstances, that the co-respondent had not "offered" to give evidence, within the meaning of section 51 of the Divorce Act, and therefore his evidence was not admissible.(2)
As to evidence of communications during marriage, see section 122, post. In criminal proceedings it has been seen (v. ante) that the party accused, or any person jointly indicted and tried with the accused, is not a competent witness.
So much of the section as declares husbands and wives competent witnesses against each other in criminal proceedings differs from the English rule, according to which such persons are, in general, incompetent: (3) but is in accordance with the Full Bench decision in the case of R. v. Khuroollah.(4)

121. No Judge or Magistrate shall, except upon the special order of some Court to which he is subordinate, be compelled to answer any questions as to his own conduct in Court as such Judge or Magistrate, or as to anything which came to his knowledge in Court as such Judge or Magistrate; but he may be examined as to other matters which occurred in his presence whilst he was so acting.

Illustrations.

(a) A, on his trial before the Court of Session, says that a deposition was improperly taken by B, the Magistrate. B cannot be compelled to answer questions as to this, except upon the special order of a Superior Court.

(b) A is accused before the Court of Session of having given false evidence before B, a Magistrate. B cannot be asked what A said except upon the special order of the Superior Court.

(c) A is accused before the Court of Session of attempting to murder a Police-officer whilst on his trial before B, a Session Judge. B may be examined as to what occurred.

Principle.—The general grounds of convenience (e. g., the inconvenience of withdrawing a Judge from his own Court) and public policy.(5) This sec-

(1) Act IV of 1866, ss. 51, 52 (Indian Divorce), and see Kelly v. Kelly, 3 B. L. R., App. 6 (1866); DeBretton v. DeBretton, 4 A., 49 (1881); as to English rule, see Steph. Dig., Art. 109.
(2) DeBretton v. DeBretton, supra.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1371, 1372; Steph. Dig.,
Arts. 108, 108 A; Whitley Stokes, 381.
(4) 6 W. R., Cr., 21 (1866); s. c., B. L. R., Sup. Vol., F. R., App. 11, and see for a case under the earlier law, R. v. Gow Chand, 1 W. R. Cr., 17 (1864).
(5) See R. v. Gower, 8 C. & P., 505; Bosccleve v. Metropolitan Board of Works, L. R., 5
H. L., 418; Best, Ev., § 188, p. 176, note; Taylor
tion clears up a doubtful point of English law. It is hardly necessary to add that, with regard to things not coming to his knowledge in Court as Judge, a Judge is as competent and compellable a witness as any other person.(1)

s. 3 ("Court.") ss. 35—166 (Examination.)
s. 118 (Competency.) s. 185; Prov. 2 (Judge's power to put questions.)
Steph. Dig., Art. 111; Taylor, Ev., § 938; Phipson, Ev., 3rd, Ed., 164; Best, Ev., §§ 184, 188; Stewart Rapalje's Law of Witnesses, §§ 45, 68n, 275; Wharton, Ev., § 600.

COMMENTARY.

The privileges of the witness, i.e., of the Judge or Magistrate of whom the question is asked. If he waives such privilege, or does not object to answer the question, it does not lie in the mouth of any other person to assert the privilege. (2) No definition is given of "Judge" or "Magistrate," in the Act. (3) Arbitrators who are (but to a narrower extent) within the rule in England, appear from the terms of the section itself, not to be within it. (4)

A Judge cannot, without giving evidence as a witness in the usual way, import into a case his own knowledge of particular facts. (5) When he gives evidence, he should be sworn like other witnesses. (6) In a case tried by a Sessions Judge, with the aid of assessors, it was held that a Judge is a competent witness, and can give evidence in a case being tried before himself, even though he laid the complaint, acting as a public officer; provided that he has no personal or pecuniary interest (7) in the subject of the charge; and he is not precluded

Ev., § 938. As to illust. (c), see R. v. Lord Thanet, 27 St. Tr., 836; and for the law before the Act, Rama-rami v. Ramu, 3 Mad. H. C. R., 372 (1867) [evidence of subordinate Magistrate holding preliminary enquiry into a criminal charge].
(1) Steph. Dig., Art. 111 and Note XLI; Taylor, Ev., § 1379; Best, Ev., supra; Stewart Rapalje, op. cit., §§ 45, 68n, § 275; Wharton, Ev., § 690.

(2) R. v. Chaddi Khan, 3 A., 573 (1881). As to the meaning of the word "compelled" in the section, see R. v. Gopal Pass, 3 M., 277 (1881).
(3) Cf. definition given in Penal Code, s. 19, and Act I of 1866, 4, sub-section (13). See now Act X of 1897.

(4) Bucklech v. Metropolitan Board of Works, L. R., 5 H. L., 418; In re Whity, 1 Ch., 558 (1891); 64 L. T., 81; O’Bourke v. Commissioners for Railways, 15 App. Cas., 371; Ellis v. Saltau, 4 C. & P., 327 (n) a; Whitley Stokes, 351. In England, it has been also held that a barrister cannot be compelled to testify as to what he said in Court in his character of a barrister, Curry v. Walter, 1 Ex., 456; Steph. Dig., Art. 111. And a further rule exists against the competency of jurors to give evidence as to what passed between the jurymen, in the discharge of their duties. Steph. Dig., Art. 114; Best, Ev., §§ 573, 580; Taylor, Ev., §§ 942—945. The Act contains no similar provisions (see Whitley Stokes, 319). The competency of jurymen, as witnesses in a case which they are trying, is a wholly different question, for which see s. 118, ante.

(5) Harpurwad v. Sheo Dyal, 3 I. A., 259, 266 (1876); Ramasami v. Pinto, 7 W. R., 190 (1877); Morthan Baboo v. Bhusreer Khan, 1 Moo. I. A., 213, 211 (1867); Kalloose v. Gunga Gobind, 25 W. R., 121 (1876); Souri Raj v. Khondee Narain, 22 W. R., 8 (1874); R. v. Donnelly, 2 C., 406, 416 (1877); Ghish Chunder v. R., 20 C., 857 (1892); R. v. Patik Eisneec, 1 B. L. R., A. C., 13 (1886). As to the duty of the Judge to state to the accused the facts he himself observed, and the right of the accused to cross-examine thereon, see In re Hurro Chunder, 20 W. R., Cr., 76 (1873); Ghish Chunder v. R., supra, 866. It is extremely improper for a Magistrate in disposing of a case, to rely in any way on statements made to him out of Court. R. v. Sahadev, 14 R., 572 (1890). In Sri Baiuse v. Sri Baiuse, 22 M., 627 (1893), the Court says: 'the District Judge of Godavari says the people have settled down under the law enunciated in 1882.' He can hardly recollect the state of things prior to 1882, but his statement of the present state of things is founded on personal knowledge.'

(7) See R. v. Bholanath Sen, 2 C., 23, 27 (1870); R. v. Hira Lal, 8 B. L. R., 422, 130 (1871); In re Hurro Chunder, 20 W. R., Cr., 76 (1873); Ghish Chunder v. R., supra; R. v. Donnelly, ante; Wood v. Corporation of Calcutta, 7 C., 392 (1891); Loburi Domini v. Assam Railway Company, 10 C., 916 (1884); Swamirind Collector of Dharwar, 17 B., 299 (1892); Kasimthn Khasperlal v. Collector of Poona, 8 B., 553 (1894), and R. v. Meyer, 1 Q. B. D., 173; R. v. Phersnasa Pestoni, 18 B., 442 (1893); Also Nath v. Gaug-} thereby from dealing judicially with the evidence, of which his own forms a part. (1) Although a Magistrate is not disqualified from dealing with a case judicially, merely, because in his character of Magistrate it may have been his duty to initiate the proceedings, yet a Magistrate ought not to act judicially in a case, when there is no necessity for his doing so, and where he himself discovered the offence and initiated the prosecution, and where he is one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution. (2) Further, a Magistrate cannot himself be a witness in a case in which he is the sole judge of law and fact. A Judge who is a sole judge of law and fact cannot give his own evidence and then proceed to a decision of the case in which that evidence is given. (3) Where in such a case he has given his evidence and convicted the accused, his having so acted makes the conviction bad. (4) The conviction is not absolutely bad. It is open to the Court to uphold the conviction, if it is of opinion that, after rejecting the Magistrate’s evidence, there is other evidence sufficient, if believed, to support the conviction. (5) Quaere, whether the presence of assessors takes the case from without the operation of the last-mentioned rule. (6)

W, LE

Where a Magistrate in whose Court a complaint of rioting and mischief had been filed made a personal inspection of the locus in quo, which inspection was not made only for the purpose of better understanding evidence which had already been given, held, that by so doing he had made himself a witness in the case and had thereby rendered himself incompetent to try it; held, further that where a Judge is the sole judge of law and fact in a case tried before himself, he cannot give evidence before himself or import matters into his judgment not stated on oath before the Court in the presence of the accused. (7) When a Magistrate was present at a search made by the Police during investigation and in all probability he came to know of some facts in connection with the case, it was held to be expedient that the case should be tried by some other Magistrate. (8)

122. No person who is or has been married, shall be compelled to disclose any communication made to him during marriage by any person to whom he is or has been married; nor shall he be permitted to disclose any such

---

(1) R. v. Nadi Chand, 24 W. R., Cr., 1 (1876); R. v. Gungadehar Bhunje, 3 C., 629 (1876); R. v. Deoki Nandan, 2 A., 906 (1880); In re Hat Lal, 23 W. R., Cr., 75 (1874) [appeal]; Ghriph Chauder v. R., ante at p. 865, R. v. Bahadur, 14 B., 672 (1890). And a public prosecutor should be without personal interest, R. v. Kashinath Dikkar, 8 Bom. H. C. R., Cr. Ca., 126 (1871).

(3) R. v. Hotoman Ban, supra, 29; and see remarks of Phour, J., in In re Burro Chauder, 20 W. R., Cr., 76 (1873); and of Markby, J., in R. v. Donnelly, 2 C., 405, 414 (1877); Taylor, Ev., § 1379.

(4) R. v. Donnelly, supra, per curiam; Taylor, Ev., § 1379; Ghriph Chauder v. R., 20 C., 837, 865 (1892); Hari Kishore v. Abdul Baki, 21 C., 920 (1894); Scammon v. Collector of Dharwar, 17 B., 290 (1892). See also R. v. Patoo Chaud, 24 C., 469 (1897). The cases of Ghriph Chauder v. R., 20 C., 837 (1892); and Sudhama Upadhye v. R., 23 C., 228 (1895), were distinguished in In the matter of Ananda Chauder v. Bahu Mudd, 24 C., 167 (1896).

(5) R. v. Donnelly, supra, per Markby, J.

(6) R., per Prinsep, J.

(7) See R. v. Mukta Sing, supra, and R. v. Donnelly, supra, 414, in which latter case the correctness of the former decision, in so far as it proceeded upon the ground that the presence of assessors brought the case within the general rule laid down by it is doubted.

(9) In this section 'he', 'him' and 'his' include 'she', 'her' and 'hers': Act X of 1897 as to the meaning of the words "permitted" and "compelled" in this section, see R. v. Gopal Das, 3 M., 271 (1894).
communication, unless the person who made it, or his representative in interest, consents, except in suits between married persons, or proceedings in which one married person is prosecuted for any crime committed against the other.

Principle.—The protection given by this section has been said to rest upon the ground that the admission of such testimony would have powerful tendency to disturb the peace of families and to weaken, if not to destroy, the mutual confidence upon which the happiness of the married state depends. It has, however, been pointed out that no argument advanced for the privilege has ever risen to a higher level than an appeal to considerations of sentiment and the conclusion of the Commissioner of Common Law Procedure in their second report was that husband and wife should be competent and compellable to give evidence both for and against one another on matters of fact as to which either could be examined as a party in the cause.

s. 180 (Competency of Husband and Wife.) s. 185, Prov. 2 (Judge's power to question.)

COMMENTARY.

"The protection is not confined to cases where the communication sought to be given in evidence is of a strictly confidential character, but the seal of the law is placed upon all communications of whatever nature which pass between husband and wife. It extends also to cases in which the interests of strangers are solely involved, as well as those in which the husband or wife is a party on the record. It is, however, limited to such matters as have been communicated during the marriage, and, consequently, if a man were to make the most confidential statement to a woman before he married, and it was afterwards to become of importance in a civil suit to know what that statement was, the wife, on being called as a witness and interrogated with respect to the communication, would, as it seems, be bound to disclose what she knew of the matter." (5) The privilege extends only to persons who legally and technically are husband and wife, and therefore there is none where the marriage is void. (6) A document, even though it contains a communication from a husband to a wife or vice versa, in the hands of third persons, is admissible in evidence; for in producing it, there is no compulsion on or permission to the wife or husband to disclose any communication. The section protects the individuals and not the communication if it can be proved without putting into the box for that purpose the husband or the wife to whom the communication was made. So where

---

(1) E. g., such communications may be disclosed under s. 62, Act IV of 1869; v. s. 120, ante.

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 909; Best, Ev., § 586.

(3) Wigmore, Ev., p. 3041, Bentham says, "'Hardship', 'policy', 'peace of families', 'absolute necessity'—some such words as these are the vehicles by which the faint spark of reason that exhibits itself is conveyed. These are the leading terms, and these are all you are furnished with; and out of these you are to make applicable a distinct and intelligible proposition as you can." Rationale Book IX, Part IV, c. v.

(4) Ib.; O'Connor v. Marfori-Banks, 4 M. & Gr. 435.

(5) Taylor, Ev., § 909; see Wharton, Ev., §§ 427—432; Rapalje, op. cit., § 274.

(6) See Wigmore, Ev., p. 3043: "Their domestic peace may be shattered at any litigant's discretion. Again its (the rule's) benefits are not lost by the ingenuous wrong-doer who brings himself within its formal terms by marrying the witness after service of subpoenas and thus creating ad hoc a domestic peace which is to be jealously safeguarded."
on a trial for the offence of breach of trust by a public servant a letter was tendered in evidence for the prosecution which had been sent by the accused to his wife at Pondicherry and had been found on a search of his house made there by the police; it was held that the letter was admissible in evidence against the accused. (1) The privilege continues even after the marriage has been dissolved by death or divorce. (2) So, where a woman, who had been divorced and had married another person, was offered as a witness against her former husband to prove a contract which he had made during the coverture, Lord Alvanley rejected the evidence, adding: 'It can never be endured, that the confidence which the law has created while the parties remained in the most intimate of all relations, shall be broken whenever, by the misconduct of one party, the relation has been dissolved.' (3) The words 'has been married' in the above section give effect to this dictum. The rule being 'that nothing shall be extracted from the bosom of the wife which was confided there by the husband; she may yet be admitted to testify to facts which came to her knowledge by means equally accessible to any person not standing in that relation.' (4)

Evidence as to affairs of State.

123. No one shall be permitted to give any evidence (5) derived from unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State, except with the permission of the officer at the head of the department concerned, who shall give or withhold such permission as he thinks fit.

Official communications.

124. No public officer shall be compelled to disclose communications made to him in official confidence, when he considers that the public interests would suffer by the disclosure.

Principle.—Public policy; prejudice to the public interests by disclosure. (6) If it were not so it would be impossible to communicate freely. (7) If the giving of such evidence would be injurious to the public service the general public interest must be considered paramount to the individual interest of a suitor in a Court of Justice. The public officer concerned, and not the Judge, is to decide whether the evidence referred to in these sections shall be given or withheld, because the Judge would be unable to determine this question without ascertaining what the document or communication was, and why the publication or disclosure of it would be injurious to the public service—an enquiry which cannot take place in private and which, taking place in public, may do all the mischief which it is proposed to guard against. (8)

s. 3 ("Evidence.")

s. 162 (Production of document referring to matters of State.)

s. 165, Prov. 2 (Judge's power to put questions or order production.)

(3) Monroe v. Twieleton, supra.
(5) Oral or documentary; s. 3, ante.
(6) Wades v. East India Company, 8 D. C. M. & G., 191 [production does not depend on the question of the person, called on to produce, being a party to the suit or not]; Moodaley v. Morton, 1 B. C. C., 471.
(7) Smith v. East India Company, 1 Ph., 65; The Bellershouse, 44 L. J., Adm., 5; Hennaway v. Wright, post.
(8) Per Pollock, C. B., in Renton v. Black, 5 H. & N., 858, 953; as to the meaning of the word "compel!" in this section, see R. v. Cogal Dones, 277, supra.
PRIVILEGE.

Act XV of 1889 (Disclosure of Official Secrets); 21 Geo. III, cap. 70, s. 5 [Prosecutions against Governor-General or Member of Council; Production of Order in Council].

Taylor, Ev., §§ 946—948A; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 172, 173; Best, Ev., § 578; Steph. Dig., Art. 112; Bray on Discovery, 547—549; Powell, Ev., 146—149; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed. 102; Wharton, Ev., §§ 604A—606; Rapalje op. cit., § 276; Hageman’s Privileged Communication, §§ 301—317.

COMMENTARY.

Under this head have been held to come the deliberations of Parliament, the proceedings of the Privy Council when confidential State secrets and papers, communications between public officials in the discharge of their public duties, political communications and the like.(1) It has been doubted whether a Government Resolution relating to the conduct of a Deputy Collector can properly be described as relating to an affair of State, but it was held that if it could be so regarded the Government had in relying on it in their list of documents practically conceded permission.(2) Communications, though made to official persons, are not privileged when they are not made in the discharge of any public duty; and so letters by a private individual to the Postmaster-General, complaining of the conduct of a postal official, were held not to be protected.(3) Objection may be taken by the public officer, or by the party interested in excluding the evidence, or by the Judge himself. "No sound distinction can be drawn between the duty of the Judge when objection is taken by the responsible officer of the Crown or by the party or when no objection being taken by any one, it becomes apparent to him, that a rule of public policy prevents the disclosure of the documents or information."(4) The exclusion when allowed is absolute, so that in the case of documents no secondary evidence is admissible.(5) The latter section is confined to public officers, though who are such is not defined. The former embraces every one. Section 123 leaves the discretion with the head of the department; section 124 makes the officer himself the Judge of the propriety of waiving the privilege. In no case has the Court any authority to compel disclosures, if the objection is raised by the proper authority.(6) In the aforementioned case the accused was convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of three gold bangles. The evidence went to show that the accused insured a parcel in the post office containing these gold bangles, but shortly after delivery to the addressee, the parcel was found to contain only a piece of steel. One of the witnesses deposed to having sold the steel, to the accused. Accused’s counsel asked the Superintendent of Post Offices the name of the person who had informed him about the sale of the steel to the accused, but the Sessions Judge refused to allow the question to be put as he was of opinion that the Superintendent was protected by this section and the next, but it was held that neither section had any application.(7)

125. No Magistrate or Police-officer shall be compelled to say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence, and no Revenue-officer shall be compelled to say

(1) See Text-books cited above, et ibi casae.
(2) Jehangir v. Secretary of State, 6 Bom. L. R., 131, 160 (1903).
(3) Blake v. Pulford, 1 M. & Rob., 198.
(4) Per Wills, J., in Hennessy v. Wright, 21 Q. B. D., 509, in which all the authorities are reviewed; and it was held that an affidavit of objection by the Secretary of State to production sufficed to justify a refusal to give discovery.
See Jehangir v. Secretary of State, 6 Bom. L. R., 160 (1903).
(6) Norton, Ev., 309; Jehangir v. Secretary of State, 6 Bom., L. R., 190 (1903); see note to s. 162, post.
whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence against the public revenue.

Explanation.—‘Revenue-officer’ in this section means any officer employed in, or about, the business of any branch of the public revenue.(1)

Principle.—While it is perfectly right that all opportunities should be afforded to discuss the truth of the evidence given against a prisoner; on the other hand, it is absolutely essential to the public welfare, that the names of parties who give information should not be divulged; for otherwise,—be it from fear, or shame, or the dislike of being publicly mixed up in enquiries of this nature,—few men would choose to assume the disagreeable part of giving or receiving information respecting offences, and the consequences would be that many great crimes would pass unpunished.(2)

s. 118 (Competency.)

s. 27 (Information received from Accused.)

s. 165. Prov. 2 (Question by Judge.)

Act XV of 1887, s. 13 (see note (2), infra); Act V of 1892, s. 12 (ib.); Taylor, Ev., §§ 939–941; Best, Ev., § 578; Steph. Dig., Art. 113; Rosc. Cr., Ev., 104, 155; Phispen, Ev., 3rd Ed., 104; Ralpale’s op. cit., p. 276; Wharton, Ev., § 604; Hageman’s Privileged Communications, §§ 301–305.

COMMENTARY.

The section draws no distinction between public and private prosecution (3) Though the section does not, in express terms, prohibit the witness, if he be willing, from saying whence he got his information, it is submitted, upon the English authorities and upon a consideration of the foundation of the rule, that the protection does not depend upon a claim being made, and that it is the duty of the Judge, apart from objection taken, to exclude the evidence. (4) The rule applies not only upon the criminal trial, but upon any subsequent civil proceedings arising out of it. (5) The English rule protects not only the names of the persons by, or to, whom the disclosure was made, but the nature of the information given, and any other question as to the channel of communication, or what was done under it. (6) The Court has under this section apparently no discretion to compel an answer, (7) even if it consider disclosure necessary, to show the innocence of the accused. (8)

126. No barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil shall at any time be permitted, unless with his client’s express consent, to disclose any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such barrister,

(1) This section was substituted for the original s. 125 by Act III of 1887. By s. 13, Act XV of 1887, and Act V of 1892, s. 12, Commandants and Seconds in command of Military Police, in Burma and Bengal, are entitled to all the privileges conferred by this section on Police-officers. As to the meaning of the word “compelled” in this section, see R. v. Gopal Doss, 271, supra.
(3) A distinction which is made in the English rule, see R. v. Richardson 3 F. & F., 693.
(5) Marks v. Beyfus, supra; Hennasey v. Wright, 21 Q. P. D., 506, per Wills, J.
(6) Marks v. Beyfus, supra.
(7) Marks v. Beyfus, supra.
(8) According to the rule in Marks v. Beyfus, supra.
pleader, attorney or vakil, by or on behalf of his client, or to state the contents or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment,(1) or to disclose any advice given by him to his client in the course and for the purpose of such employment:

Provided that nothing in this section shall protect from disclosure—

(1) Any such communication made in furtherance of any [illegal] purpose ;(2)

(2) Any fact observed by any barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil, in the course of this employment as such, showing that any crime or fraud has been committed since the commencement of his employment.

It is immaterial whether the attention of such barrister, [pleader],(3) attorney or vakil was or was not directed to such facts by or on behalf of his client.(4)

Explanation.—The obligation stated in this section continues after the employment has ceased.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a client, says to B, an attorney:—'I have committed forgery, and I wish you to defend me.'

As the defence of a man known to be guilty is not a criminal purpose, this communication is protected from disclosure.

(b) A, client, says to B, an attorney:—'I wish to obtain possession of property by the use of a forged deed on which I request you to sue.'

This communication, being made in furtherance of a criminal purpose, is not protected from disclosure.

(c) A, being charged with embezzlement, retains B, an attorney, to defend him. In the course of the proceedings, B observes that an entry has been made in A's account-book charging A with the sum said to have been embezzled, which entry was not in the book at the commencement of his employment.

This being a fact observed by B in the course of his employment, showing that a fraud has been committed since the commencement of the proceedings, it is not protected from disclosure.(5)

127. The provisions of section 126 shall apply to interpreters, and the clerks or servants of barristers, pleaders, attorneys and vakils.(6)

(1) In R. v. Bala Dharma, 4 Bom. L. R., 480 (1902), the communication was held not to be "in the course," etc.

(2) The word within brackets was substituted for "criminal" by s. 10 of the Amending Act XVIII of 1872. This substitution carries the rule perhaps somewhat further than has been established in England (see Steph. Dig., Art. 115), but is in conformity with the opinion expressed by Turner, V. C., in Russell v. Jackson, 9 Hare, 392, and Rolfe, V. C., in Follett v. Jeffreys, 1 Sim. N. S., 17. It seems just and reasonable to include cases of fraud as well as criminality. See also Kelly v. Jackson, 13 Ir. Eq., Rep., 129, and R. v. Cox & Raiton, L. R., 14 Q. B. D., 103; Ramji Bhimaji v. Mahendra Dharsing, 18 B., 276, 280, 281, (1893).

(3) Added by s. 10, Act XVIII of 1872.

(4) See s. 23, Explanation, ante.

(5) See Brown v. Foster, 1 H. & N., 736.

(6) See Kameshur Pershad v. Sheik Amusat-
128. If any party to a suit gives evidence therein at his own instance or otherwise, he shall not be deemed to have consented thereby to such disclosure as is mentioned in section 126; and, if any party to a suit or proceeding calls any such barrister, [pleader],(1) attorney or vakil, as a witness, he shall be deemed to have consented to such disclosure only if he questions such barrister, attorney or vakil on matters which, for such question, he would not be at liberty to disclose.

129. No one shall be compelled to disclose to the Court any confidential communication which has taken place between him and his legal professional adviser, unless he offers himself as a witness, in which case he may be compelled to disclose any such communications as may appear to the Court necessary to be known in order to explain any evidence which he has given, but no others.

Principle.—The first two sections apply when the legal adviser or his clerk, &c., is interrogated as a witness. The professional adviser of a third party or stranger is privileged, or rather his client is, as well as the professional adviser of a party to the suit. The fourth section applies when the client himself is interrogated and whether such client be a party to the case or not; and by the terms of this latter section, it is only communications which have passed between a person and his legal professional adviser that are privileged (v. post). The rule is established for the protection not of the legal adviser but of the client, and the privilege, therefore, may only be waived by the latter; it is founded on the impossibility of conducting legal business without professional assistance and on the necessity, in order to render that assistance effectual of securing the fullest and most unreserved communication between the client and his legal adviser. Further, a compulsory disclosure of confidential communications is so opposed to the popular conscience that it would lead to frequent falsehoods as to what had really taken place. It is quite immaterial whether the communications relate to any litigation commenced or anticipated; it is sufficient if they pass as professional communications in a professional capacity; if the rule were so limited, no one could safely adopt such precautions as might eventually render any proceedings successful, or all proceedings superfluous.(2) The proviso in the first section prevent the privilege conferred from becoming the shield of crime or illegality. The rule does not apply to all which passes between a client and his legal adviser, but only to what passes between them in professional confidence; and the contriving of crime or illegality is no part of the professional occupation of a legal adviser; and it can as little be said that it is part of his duty to advise his client as to the means of evading the law.(3) The provisions of

(1) Added by s. 10 of the Amending Act XVIII of 1872.

(2) Greencough v. Gaskell, 1 M. & K., 103; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 189, Wigram, Ev., § 2201; Ryell v. Kennedy, 9 App. Cas., 96; Bolton v. Corporation of Liverpool, 1 M. & K., 98; Caldecy v. Richards, 19 Beav., 404; Ex-parte Campbell, 5 Ch. App., 706; cited in Framji Bhioji v. Mohanji Dhananj, supra, 272; Southward Co. v. Quick, 3 Q. B. D. 317; Ross v. Gibbs, L.R., 5 Eq. 522, 524; Whele v. LeMarchant, 17 Ch. D. 681, 682; Minat v. Morgan, L.R., 5 Ch., 361, 362; Taylor, Ev., § 911 et seq. See judgment of West, J., in Manchererow Bhore v. Nis Hurren,

(3) Russell v. Jackson, 9 Harr, 392; Pullett v. Jefferyes, 1 Sim. N. S., 17; see also Kelly v. Jackson, and E. v. Co. & Halkett, supra.
the first section are (in order that it may be the more effectual) made by the second to apply to the necessary organs of communications with the legal advisers, viz., interpreters, clerks and servants.

s. 32 Explanation (Admissions in Civil cases.)
Civil Procedure Code, Chapter X (Of Discovery and of the admission, Inspection, Production, Impounding, and Return of documents.)

COMMENTARY.

The law relating to professional communications between a solicitor and client is the same in India as in England, with the single exception relating to the substitution of “illegal purpose” for “criminal purpose” (v. ante); and, in interpreting section 126, the Court may rightly refer to English cases.(1)

“The rule of protection seems to me to be one which should be construed in a sense most favourable to bringing professional knowledge to bear effectively on the facts out of which legal rights and obligations arise.”(2)

Legal advisers alone are within the rule; and of these (as it would seem from the wording of the section) only barristers, attorneys, pleaders and vakils. It was decided under section 24, Act II of 1855, that mukhtars were not within the rule.(5) The protection does not extend to any matters communicated to other persons, e.g., priests and clergy men,(4) medical men,(5) clerks,(6) bankers,(7) stewards, and confidential friends(8) and the like though such communications were made under terms of the closest secrecy. No privilege even attaches to communications made to an attorney friend, consulted merely as a friend and not as an attorney;(9) nor to those passing before the relationship exists, or after it has ceased.(10) The rule does not require any regular retainer, or any particular form of application or engagement, or the payment of any fees; it is enough if the legal adviser be in any way consulted in his professional character;(11) and the protection exists notwithstanding bonâ fide mistake in supposing that the solicitor had consented to act;(12) or the latter’s subsequent refusal of the retainer.(13) So also under section 129, when the client is interrogated, a confidential communication, in order to be protected, must be one which has taken place between the client and his legal professional adviser. The mere circumstance that communications are confidential does not render them privileged. Thus confidential communications between principal and agent, relating to matters, in a suit, are not privileged. To be privileged, they must be "confidential communications with a professional adviser." (1) So also a letter written in answer to enquiries about the character of a servant is privileged in this sense only that although it contains defamatory statements, it will not support an action for libel unless malice is shown; but it is not privileged in the sense of being privileged from production, such privilege being confined to communications with the legal advisers of the party. (2) The communication is equally protected whether it is made by the client in person, or is made by an agent on behalf of the client, and whether it is made to the solicitor in person or to a clerk or subordinate of the solicitor who acts in his place and under his direction. (3) It is immaterial (under section 129, as under section 126) whether the communication relates to a litigation commenced or anticipated or not. (4) A communication with a solicitor for the purpose of obtaining legal advice is protected, though it relates to a dealing which is not the subject of litigation, provided it be a communication made to the solicitor in that character and for that purpose. (5)

No privilege attaches to "communications between solicitor and client as against persons having a joint interest with the client in the subject-matter of the communication—e.g., as between partners; (6) directors and shareholders; (7) trustee and cestui-que-trust; (8) lessor and lessee as to production of the lease; (9) reversioner and tenant for life as to common title; (10) two persons stating a case for their joint benefit; (11) or a husband and wife who are only exclusively in contest. (12) Nor does any privilege attach as between joint claimants under the same client—e.g., between claimants under a testator as to communications between the latter and his solicitor. (13) But where the communications relate to matters outside the joint interest, they are privileged, even against a person bearing the expense of the communication (14)—e.g., communications between a plaintiff corporation and its solicitors, as against a defendant rate-payer as to matters not connected with the rates; or between a trustee and his solicitor as against the cestui-que-trust, where the communication is not made for the former’s guidance in the trust, but to enable him to resist litigation by the latter;" (15) or where it concerns his character, not as trustee, but as mortgagee of the client." (16)

Employment by different parties of same attorney.

Where two parties employ the same attorney, the rule is "that communications passing between either of them and the legal adviser in his joint capacity,

(1) Wallace v. Jefferson, 2 B., 433 (1878), following Anderson v. Bank of Columbia, L. R., 2 Ch. D., 641, and Buelos v. White, L. R., 1 Q. B. D., 423; see also Goodall v. Little, 1 Sim. N. S., 153.

(5) Wheeler v. Le Marchant, supra, 682.

(7) Gouraud v. Edison, supra; Bray on Discovery, 290—297.

(8) Talbot v. Marshfield, 2 Dr. & S., 549; Re Mason, 22 Ch. D., 609; Re Portside Bank, 35 Ch. D., 722; even though the party resisting production has paid for the communication: Bacon v. Bacon, 34 L. T., 549.

(9) Doe v. Thomas, 9 B. & C., 288.

(10) Doe v. Date, 3 Q. B., 609; Bray, 378—383.

(12) Ford v. DePonte, 8 Jur. N. S., 693.

(13) Russell v. Jackson, 9 Hare, 387.

(14) Mayor and Corporation of Bristol v. Cox, L. R., 26 Ch. D., 678, 683.

(15) Thomas v. Secretary of State for India, 18 W. R., 312 (Eng.).

must be disclosed in favour of the other—e.g., a proposition made by one to be communicated to the other, or instructions given to the solicitor in presence of the other. (1) In all these cases the question would seem to be was the communication made by the party to the witness in the character of his own exclusive attorney? If it was, the bond of secrecy is imposed upon the witness: if it was not, the communication will not be privileged. (2)

A communication or document "once privileged is always privileged." (3) The obligation continues after the employment, in which the communication was made, has ceased; (4) nor is it affected by the party ceasing to employ the solicitor, and retaining another, nor by any other change of relation between them, nor by the solicitor's being struck off the rolls, (5) nor by his becoming personally interested in the property to the title, of which the communications related, (6) nor even by the death of the client.

The privilege may, however, be waived by the client himself (though not by the adviser) expressly under section 126, or impliedly under the second portion of section 128 (post); or perhaps in the event of the client's death by his personal representative. (7) The client does not waive his privilege by calling the legal adviser as a witness, unless he questions him on matters which, but for such question, he would not be at liberty to disclose, (8) and even in that case the cross-examination must be confined to the point upon which the witness has been examined-in-chief. (9) As to waiver in part, v. post. (10) Disclosures made under section 129 should not be enforced on any case except when they are plainly necessary. (11)

The communication must be of a private or confidential nature (as is expressly stated in section 129, and shown by the use of the word "disclose" in section 126), to be privileged. (12) It must be made to the adviser sub sigillo confessionis. (13) Section 126 has no application where the statement is made not as confidential but for the purpose of communication. (14) It is not every communication made by a client to an attorney that is brought from disclosure. The privilege only extends to communications made to him confidentially with a view to obtain professional advice. (15) Letters containing mere statements of fact are not privileged: they must be of a professional and confidential character. (16) Where defendants, at an interview at which the plaintiff was present, admitted their partnership to their attorney, who was then also acting as attorney for the plaintiff, it was held that the attorney was not precluded from giving evidence of this admission to him:—1st, because the defendants' statement, having been made in the presence and hearing of the plaintiff, could not be regarded as confidential or

---

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 928; Perry v. Smith; Rennell v. Smythe, supra, § 587.

(4) See Explanation to s. 129.

(6) Chant v. Brown, 7 Hare, 70.

(7) Bray on Discovery, 386; as to waiver by successor in title, or personal representative v. R., 365–367; and Taylor, Ev., § 927.

(8) S. 128; the rule was otherwise under s. 24, Act 11 of 1855.

(10) Kay v. Poornachand Poonalal, 4 B., 631 (1890); s. c., 5 Ind. Jur., 479.

(11) Munozheau Renuji v. New Dhurumnoo, etc., Co. 4, 683 (1880).

(13) Ex-partee Campbell; In re Caister, L. R., 5 Ch., App., 703, cited in Framji Bhioji v. Mohansingh Dhansingh, supra, 272.

(14) R. v. Rodriguez, 5 Bou. L. R., 122 (1903).

private; 2ndly, because those statements did not appear to have been made to the attorney exclusively in his character of attorney for the defendants, but to have been addressed to him also as attorney for the plaintiff. (1) The legal adviser must have learned the matter in question only as legal adviser and in no other way. If, therefore, he were a party, and especially to a fraud, that is, if he were acting for himself, though he might also be employed for another, he would not be protected from disclosing; for in such a case his knowledge would not be acquired solely by his being employed professionally. (2) There is no privilege where, in any correctness of speech, there is no communication; as where, for instance, a fact, that something was done, became known to him, from his having been brought to a certain place by the circumstance of his being the attorney, but of which fact any other man, if there would have been equally cognisant; (3) or where the thing disclosed had no reference to the professional employment, though disclosed while the relation of attorney and client subsisted; or where the attorney makes himself a subscribing witness, and thereby assumes another character for the occasion, and adopting the duties which it imposes, becomes bound to give evidence of all that a subscribing witness can be required to prove (v. post). But an attorney may not be called upon to disclose matters which he can be said to have learned by communication with his client, or on his client’s behalf, matters which were so committed to him in his capacity of attorney, and matters which in that capacity alone he had come to know. (4) The mere circumstance, however, that a solicitor or client obtains, by means of confidential communication, information about a fact, does not protect him from disclosing that he already knew about what fact. (5) But knowledge whether of adviser or client derived solely from privileged communications, is itself privileged. (6) The communication must be made by, or on behalf of, the client (section 126); when the adviser (or client) has his knowledge independently of any communication from the client (or adviser) or from collateral quarters, there is no privilege: (7) nor in respect of knowledge derived by the adviser from the employment, but not from the client, as to mere facts patent to the senses. (8) Where a solicitor claims privilege under section 126, he is bound to disclose the name of his client on whose behalf he claims the privilege. The mere fact that the client’s name had been communicated to him in the course, and for the purpose, of his employment as solicitor, by another client, affords no excuse, unless it was communicated to him confidentially, on the express understanding that it was not to be disclosed. (9) He may also be compelled to prove ‘mere collateral facts known without confidence,’ e.g., client’s address, if not confidentially disclosed; (10) mere matters of observation, such as handwriting; (11) identity, (12) as e.g., having sworn an affidavit, or put in a pleading; facts showing the client’s mental capacity; (13) the fact of the retainer; (14) but not, as it would seem, its character; (15) and the retaining of counsel comes within the rule respecting confidential communi

(1) Memon Haji v. Mouli Abdool, supra.
(2) Gough v. Gaskill, supra, 103, 104; Taylor, Er., § 910.
(3) ib., 104; Framji Bhaoci v. Mahomud Dhananagh, supra, 278, 276.
(10) Ex parte Campbell, in re Cathcart, L. R., 5 Ch. & App., 703, cited in Framji Bhoci v. Mahomud Dhananagh, supra, 272; Re Arnett, 60 L. T., 106; Ramabottom v. Senior, L. R., 8 Eq., 575.
(11) Ings v. Collins, 7 Eq., 646.
cations.(1) Communications which are not necessary for the purpose of the employment; e.g., a prosecutor’s remark that “he would give a large sum to have his adversary hanged.” (2) are not, but all necessary professional and confidential communications, legal opinions, drafts and the like, are privileged.(3) A solicitor is not at liberty, without his client’s express consent, to disclose the nature of his professional employment. Section 126 protects from publicity not merely the details of the business, but also its general purport, unless it be known, alwande, that such business, or the communications made in respect of it, fall within first or second proviso to the section. (4) If this be known, alwande, and a foundation be thus laid for asking the question and admitting the evidence; e.g., if in a particular case the facts proved make it probable that the visit to the adviser really was intended for a criminal or illegal purpose, the adviser may be rightly questioned as to the nature of his employment. (5) The legal adviser will not be permitted to state the contents or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted by virtue of professional confidence. (6) But he cannot withhold documents, unless his client is so entitled. (7) He may not state whether a document, while in his possession, was stamped, indorsed or bore erasures, for that is condition (8) nor the date when, or for purpose for which, it was entrusted to him; (9) but he may prove the fact that a particular document is in his possession, so as to let in secondary evidence, if it be not produced on notice: (10) but not in whose possession or custody it is, or when or where he saw the same, if he came to the knowledge of the fact inquired after in the course of confidential communication with his client in his professional capacity. (11) He may prove that his client put in a pleading, or swore an affidavit, for these are matters of publicity. (12) A solicitor employed to obtain the execution of a deed, and who is one of the witnesses, is not precluded, on the ground of a breach of professional confidence, from giving evidence as to what passed at the time of execution, by which the deed may be proved invalid. (13) “If an attorney puts his name to an instrument as a witness, he makes himself thereby a public man, and no longer clothed with the character of an attorney: his signature binds him to disclose all that passed at the time respecting the execution of the instrument; but not what took place in the concoction and preparation of the deed, or at any other time, and not connected with the execution of it.” (14)

Documents which the client intends others to see as well as the solicitor, documents of a public nature, documents entrusted to the solicitor for purposes outside the ordinary scope of professional employment—e.g., a

(1) Poste v. Hayne, 1 C. & P., 543.
(2) Annanley v. Angler, 17 St. Tr., 1223; see also Cobden v. Kendrick, 4 T. R., 431.
(4) Framji v. Dhanappr, supra, 276, 280, 281.
(7) Burrell v. Tanner, 16 Q. B. D., 1.
(8) Whitley v. Williams, 1 M. & W., 533; but see Brown v. Foster, 1 H. & N., 734, supra.
(9) Turquand v. Knight, 2 M. & W., 98; Framji Bhashoji v. Mohanlal Dhanappr, supra.
(11) Cotman v. Orion, 9 L. J., Ch., 288; see also Banner v. Jackson, 1 D. & S., 472; Robson v. Kemp, 5 Esp., 52 [destruction].
(14) Robson v. Kemp, 5 Esp., 52, per Lord Ellenborough.
book describing tithe lands and given him for the purpose of collecting the tithes, are not privileged. (1) Names of parties, witnesses merely as such, proofs of witnesses, whether disclosure be sought before, or at the trial, are privileged; (2) but not names of parties’ witnesses when constituting material facts in the action—e.g., those of persons in whose presence a slander was uttered. (3) Draft pleadings in the same or former action are privileged; but not pleadings when filed, for they then become publici juris. Similarly, in dorments on, or notes and observations in, counsel’s brief as to private matters; and solicitor’s instructions on, or in, the brief are privileged; and inorments on counsel’s brief of an order of Court, and any other matters publici juris contained therein—e.g., copy pleadings in former action, are not privileged; (4) communications between opposite parties merely as such, or between co-plaintiffs, or co-defendants simpliciter, are not, (5) but communications between co-plaintiffs or co-defendants when directed to be admitted to a joint solicitor, are privileged. (6) So also are letters written by the solicitor of two plaintiffs to the solicitor of a third plaintiff, as against the defendant claiming their production; and the fact that portions of them had been read to the defendant’s solicitor is no waiver of the privilege as regards the parts which were not read. (7) A person relying upon the privilege is undoubtedly bound to bring himself clearly and distinctly within it. (8)

The communication need not, as has been seen, relate to any actual or prospective litigation, but the matter of the communication must be within the ordinary scope of professional employment, (9) e.g., the sale, purchase and conveyance of estates (10) or negotiations for a loan, (11) but not communications to a solicitor acting merely as under-sheriff: (12) rent collector, (13) patent agent (14) or trustee; (15) nor communications in furtherance of a fraud or crime, whether the solicitor is a party to, or ignorant of the illegal object, (16) nor probably are forged documents, though entrusted to the solicitor in professional confidence, privileged. (17)
The exclusion of such evidence is for the general interest of the community; and, therefore, to say that, when a party refuses to permit professional confidence to be broken, everything must be taken most strongly against him, what is it but to deny him the protection, which for public purposes the law affords him, and utterly to take away a privilege which can thus only be asserted to his prejudice. (1) There is a distinction between such cases as these and those in which evidence is improperly kept out of the way. (2)

If the solicitor, in violation of his duty, should voluntarily communicate to a stranger the contents of an instrument with which he was confidentially intrusted, or should permit him to take a copy, the secondary evidence so obtained would, it seems, be admissible, provided that notice to produce the original were duly given, and the production were resisted on the grounds of privilege. (3)

"Indeed it has been more than once laid down, that the mere fact that papers and other subjects of evidence have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered, or otherwise unlawfully obtained, constitutes no valid objection to their admissibility, provided they be pertinent to the issue. For the Court will not notice whether they were obtained lawfully or unlawfully, nor will it raise an issue to determine that question. " (4)

Sections 126—129 refer to communications between clients and their legal advisers alone. As regards documents governed by these sections, they are absolutely privileged, and the Court has no power whatever to order production. (5) There are certain cases, however (for which the Act does not make specific provision, and in which the question of privilege generally arises on applications for discovery or inspection before trial), in which communications made for the purpose of litigation between third persons and the adviser, or third persons and the client for the purpose of submission to the adviser, are under the discretion given by s. 130 of the Civil Procedure Code, which discretion is exercised according to the practice of the Court, (6) protected from disclosure. Such communications are only protected when they have been made in contemplation of some litigation, or for the purpose of giving advice or obtaining evidence with reference to it. And this protection is given because the solicitor is then preparing for the defence or for bringing the action, and all communications he makes for that purpose and the communications made to him (directly or to the client for transmission to him) for the purpose of giving him the information are, in fact, the brief in the action. (7) The rule relating to the privilege may be summarised as follows:—The information may be called into existence or obtained either by (A) the client, or (B) the solicitor.

A:—(a) Information (oral or documentary) from third persons called into existence by the client, and given in relation to an intended action (whether at the request of a solicitor or not, and whether ultimately laid before the solicitor or not) is privileged, if it has been so called into existence for the purpose of submission to the solicitor, either for the purpose of giving advice or of enabling him to prosecute or defend an action; (8) e.g., shorthand notes of interviews held

---

(1) Per Lord Brougham in Bolton v. The Corporation of Liverpool, 1 M. & E., 88, 94.
(2) Wentworth v. Lloyd, 10 Jur. N. S., 961.
(3) Chester v. Jones, 21 L. J., Ex., 106; Lloyd v. Motton, 10 M. & W., 481, 482; Taylor, Ev., § 920; if the client sustains any injury from such improper disclosure being made, an action will lie against the solicitors: Taylor v. Blacklow, 3 Bing. N. C., 275.
(4) Taylor, Ev., § 920, and cases there cited.
(6) Id.
between a superior and subordinate employé of a plaintiff company or between the chairman of the same company and an employé, in order to obtain information on a subject of expected litigation for submission to the companies' solicitors were held to be privileged: (1) and so also were reports obtained by a party from his subordinates for a similar purpose. (2) But letters written by one of the defendants, servants to another, for the purpose of obtaining information with a view to possible future litigation with the intention that, in that case, they should be laid before a solicitor are not privileged. It is for the party claiming the privilege to show that the documents were prepared for the use of his solicitor; that they came into existence for the purpose of being communicated to the solicitor with the object of obtaining his advice, or of enabling him to prosecute or defend an action, as Cotton, L. J., or as Brett, L. J., says, "merely for the purpose of being laid before the solicitor for his advice or consideration." (3) If communications prepared to be laid before solicitors for the purpose of taking their advice are privileged, (4) it follows that, à fortiori, the advice given with reference to such communications must also be privileged, and it is immaterial that such communications pass from agent to principal, or vice versa, before or after they are communicated to the solicitor. The same rule must apply to the advice of the solicitor. (5) Documents which record the steps taken by the plaintiffs from time to time in prosecuting their claim against the defendant are not privileged. (6) (b) But information (oral or documentary) obtained by the client otherwise than for submission to the solicitor (e. g., reports and communications made by agents or servants in the ordinary course of their duty) is not privileged even though litigation be anticipated. (7) The rule has been thus stated by Brett, L. J.: "Any report or communication by an agent or servant to his master or principal, which is made for the purpose of assisting him to establish his claim or defence in an existing litigation, is privileged, and will not be ordered to be produced: but if the report or communication is made in the ordinary course of the duty of the agent or servant, whether before or after the commencement of the litigation, it is not privileged, and must not be produced. The time at which the communication is made is not the material matter, nor whether it is confidential, nor whether it contains facts or opinions. The question is whether it is made in the ordinary course of the duty of the servant or agent, or for the instruction of the master or principal as to whether he should maintain or resist litigation." (8) Accordingly an answer to a letter from a principal stating that certain claims had been made and asking the agent for information as to the facts; (9) or made to the principal to be submitted "in the event of litigation" to the latter's solicitor, have been held not to be privileged. (10)

B—(a) Information (oral or documentary) from third persons "which has been called into existence by the solicitor (or by his direction, even though obtained by the client) for the purposes of litigation—e. g., information to be embodied in proofs of witnesses; reports made by medical men at the request

(1) Southwark v. Quick, supra.
(4) Southwark v. Quick, supra.
(6) ib.
of the solicitors of Railway Company, as to the condition of a person threatening to sue the Company for injury from a collision; (1) and anonymous letter sent to solicitor and counsel (2) with reference to, and for the purpose of a trial, (3) are privileged. (4) But there is no privilege in respect of such information not called into existence by the solicitor, though obtained by him for purposes of litigation, e.g., copies of letters written before action by third persons to the client; (5) or called into existence by the solicitor, though not for the purposes of litigation—e.g., a report made by a surveyor at the solicitor’s request as to the state of a property upon which the client was about to lend money; (6) or as to matters in respect of which litigation was not at the time contemplated, although it afterwards arose.’’ (6) (See also preceding paragraph.)

130. No witness who is not a party to a suit shall be compelled to produce his title-deeds to any property, or any document in virtue of which he holds any property as pledgee or mortgagee, or any document the production of which might tend to criminate him, unless he has agreed in writing to produce them with the person seeking the production of such deeds or some person through whom he claims.

131. No one shall be compelled to produce documents in his possession, which any other person would be entitled to refuse to produce if they were in his possession, unless such last mentioned person consents to their production.

Principle.—A rule of legal policy, founded in English law upon a consideration of the great inconvenience and mischief to individuals which might, and would, result to them from compelling them to disclose their titles by the production of their title-deeds. (7) The object of the privilege, as to not producing title-deeds, is that the title may not be disclosed and examined. (8) The ethics of the rule has been said to be questionable. Nevertheless in England the law’s failure to protect titles adequately by registration and the inevitable risks which were thereby created for even bonâ fide titles furnished a sufficient explanation if not a justification. But under a system of compulsory public registration there is in such a privilege neither necessity nor utility. Those, and they are few, who do not register voluntarily take the risk of loss, and their situation does not justify special protection. Those who do register have no need of protection, for their title in general stands or falls by what is publicly recorded, not by what they privately possess. (9) As to section 131, see Commentary; and as to criminating documents, see Commentary and section 132, post.

(2) Be Halloway, 12 P. D., 167; but anonymous letters sent by stranger to client are not privileged (3), ‘‘when a solicitor is employed on behalf of his client, the information which he gets in reference to the litigation in which his client is concerned is protected.’’ 35.

W. LE

(1) Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed. 177.
(3) Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed. 177.
(5) Wheeler v. Le Marchant, supra.
(7) Stacke, Ev., 111; in Best, Ev., § 128; see also Taylor, Ev., § 1404.
(8) Phelps v. Pres, 3 E. & B., 441, per Erie, J.
(9) Wigmore, Ev., § 2211. In the United States there is no such privilege.
PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS. [SS. 130, 131.]

s. 3 ("Document.")
s. 139 (Cross-examination of persons called to produce document.)
s. 162. (Production of Documents.)
s. 165, Prov. 2 (Power of Judge to compel production of Document.)

Act XIX of 1833 s. 26; Act X of 1855, s. 10; Act XVIII of 1891, s. 5 (Bankers' Books) Steph. Dig., Arts. 118, 119; Starkie, Ev., 111; Best, Ev., § 129; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 154–156; Taylor, Ev., §§ 408, 916, 918, 1464; Bray's Discovery, 313, 233–235; Civ. Pr. Code, ss. 125, 130; Hageman op. cit., §§ 117, 118; Wigmore, Ev., § 2211.

COMMENTARY.

The rule enacted by these sections, in so far as they relate to witnesses not parties, and the class of persons contemplated by section 131, is in general accordance with that of the English law on the same subject. (1) The first section applies only in the case of a witness who is not a party to the suit in which he is called. But where discovery is sought under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, a witness, if a party, cannot be compelled to produce documents which he swears relate solely to his own title or case, and do not in any way tend to prove or support the title or case of his adversary. But the production of other relevant and material documents will ordinarily be compelled. (2) The privilege in the case of a party is not confined to title-deeds. "The word 'title' produces confusion, because in many cases it is not a question of title at all, and the proposition ought to be that a plaintiff is not entitled to see any document that does not tend to make out his case." (3) The oath of the witness is conclusive as to the nature of the document. (4) Quare whether a party can on an application for discovery be compelled to answer interrogatories, or to produce documents of a criminating character. In England (where, however, the rule relating to criminating evidence is different from that under this Act) he would not be so compelled. (5) No protection is given by this Act against such answer or production, which (section 1) does not apply to affidavits, and the party interrogated is not a witness and is therefore not entitled to the protection given by this section. The question must be decided under section 125 of the Civil Procedure Code. It has been said that probably the questions may be dealt with as if the party interrogated were in the witness-box, and that all questions will be allowed which the party interrogated would be bound to answer if he were a witness. (6) If this be so the defendant would be bound to answer. On the other hand, it is one of the inveterate principles of English law, that a party cannot be compelled to discover that which, if answered, would tend to subject him to punishment, (7) and this is so though there is not the faintest prospect of any criminal proceedings being taken against him. (8) It is therefore an open question whether a party interrogated who is apparently without the statutory protection given to a witness should or should not be protected by the application of the general principles above-mentioned. Where a witness is not compellable to produce a deed, he cannot be compelled to answer questions as to its contents, otherwise the protection would be perfectly illusory.

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 168, 918; Pickering v. Noyes, 1 B. & C., 263; Adams v. Lloyd, 3 H. & N., 351; Whinaker v. Izod, 2 Taunt., 115; and text-books cited ante.

(4) Morris v. Edwards, supra.

(5) Cf. ss. 125, 130, Civ. Pr. Code, ss. 130, ante, and 132, post; Hill v. Campbell, 1 R., 10 C. P. 222; Alderley v. Harvey, 2 Q. B. D., 324; Fisher v. Owen, 8 Ch. D., 665; Webb v. Kastie, 5 Ex. D., 108; Bray on Discovery, 313. As to discovery in criminal cases, see Mahomed Jachrieh v. Ahmed Mahomed, 15 C., 109 (1887).

(8) Odgers on Libel, 390.
PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

(1) Davies v. Waters, 3 M. W., 608, 612; Few v. Gappy, 13 Beav., 467; and this notwithstanding s. 132, post.

(2) R. v. Moss, 16 A., 88, 100 (1863).

(3) Burall v. Tanner, 16 Q. B. D., 1; Steph. Dig., Art. 119; Taylor, Ev., §§ 458, 919.

(6) Field, 603; Taylor, Ev., §§ 458, 919; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 156; Hubbard v. Knight, 2 Ex. R., 11; as to the giving of secondary evidence in the case of non-production, see note to s. 65, ante.

(7) Doe v. Date, 3 Q. B., 609; Taylor, Ev., §§ 440, 1464.

(8) S. 132, post; Davies v. Waters, supra.

(9) B. 165, post.

(10) B. 26 (in force in Bengal, N.W. P. and Oudh).

(11) S. 10 (in force in the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay).

(13) Hunter v. Leathley, 10 B. & C., 538; Lay v. Barlow, 1 Ex., 801; Taylor, Ev., § 458, and cases there cited.

(14) This is suggested in Brassington v. Brassington, 1 Sim. & St., 455, and acted upon in Kemp v. King, 2 M. & Rob., 437; see also Hope v. Liddell, 24 L. J., Ch., 693; Re Cameron's ctc., Co., 25 Beav., 4; Taylor, Ev., § 458; Bray's Discovery, 203--206; Wigmore, Ev., p. 3001. But it seems to be opposed to Hunter v. Leathley, supra, in which a broker, who had a lien on a policy for premiums advanced, was compelled to produce it in an action against the underwriter by the assured who had created the lien (Steph. Dig., Art. 118; see also Fowler v. Fowler, 29 W. R. (Eng.), 80). See Lockett v. Carey, 10 Jur. N. S., 144, where a solicitor was party to the action, and Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 171, 221. As to the objection there may be, the document itself must be brought to Court when the Judge will decide as to the validity of the objection. (9) As to the liability of a witness for damages in case of failure to give evidence, or to produce a document, see Acts XIX of 1853, and X of 1855 (11). A witness called on his sub rosa duces tecum, who objects to the production of documents, has no right to have the question of his liability to produce argued by his counsel retained for that purpose. (12) A witness cannot withhold production of a document called for as evidence, on the ground of any lien he may have upon it; (13) unless perhaps the party requiring the production be himself the person against whom the claim of lien is made, (14) for in such case the right to use the document... evidentially might, on the facts, practically annul the value of the lien, and there seems no reason why this should be permitted him. So though a solicitor, having a lien on a deed, may not be bound to produce it at the instance of the client against whom the lien exists, yet if the client is bound to produce it for the benefit of a third person, as e.g., under a subpoena ducem tecum, so too is the solicitor. (1) A banker is not compellable to produce his books in legal procedings to which the bank is not a party. (2)

Witness not excused from answering on ground that answer will criminiae.

Proviso:

132. A witness shall not be excused from answering any question as to any matter relevant to the matter in issue in any suit or in any civil or criminal proceeding, upon the ground that the answer to such question will criminate, or may tend directly or indirectly to criminate such witness, or that it will expose, or tend directly or indirectly to expose, such witness to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind:

Provided that no such answer, which a witness shall be compelled to give, shall subject him to any arrest or prosecution, or be proved against him in any criminal proceeding, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer. (3)

Principle.—The general rule is otherwise in England, where (with certain exceptions) a witness need not answer any question the tendency of which is to expose the witness, or the wife or husband of the witness, to any criminal charge, penalty or forfeiture; (4) the maxim being "Nemo tenetur seipsum proderit." (5)
The privilege is based on the principle of encouraging all persons to come forward with evidence, by protecting them, as far as possible, from injury or needless annoyance in consequence of so doing. (6) This privilege was repealed in India by section 32, Act II of 1855, which is reproduced in the present section.
The state of the law, while the privilege existed, tended in some cases to bring about a failure of justice, for the allowance of the excuse, when the matter to which the question related, was in the knowledge solely of the witness, deprived the Court of the information which was essential to its arriving at a right decision.
In order to avoid this inconvenience, and to obtain evidence which a witness refused to give, the witness was deprived of the privilege of claiming excuse; but, while subjecting him to compulsion, the Legislature, in order to remove any inducement to falsehood, declared that evidence so obtained should not be

(1) Cordery's Law relating to Solicitors, 2nd Ed., 301; Lush's Practice, 3rd Ed., 335, 336;
as to lien in insolvency, administration, and in winding up proceedings, see Bray's Discovery, 206.

(2) Act XVIII of 1891, s. 5, v. Appendix.

(3) See Howsin Bhata v. R., 6 C., 96 107 (1880), as also see R. v. Durant, 23, B., 213, 229, (1808), in which the accused called as witnesses persons charged with him and awaiting a separate trial for the same offence.

(4) See R. v. Gopal Dass, 3 M., 279—282 (1881); Best, Ev., §§ 126—129; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1450—1454; Bray on Discovery, §§ 311—349; Rosee, N. P. Ev., 166—168; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 181, 184; Powell, Ev., 116—123; Steph. Dig., Art. 120; R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S., 330; Ex parte Reynolds, L. R., 20 Ch. D., 298 (oath of the witness not conclusive: claim must be bond fare).

(5) For a criticism of this rule, see Bentham, Rationale Bl. IX, Part IV, Ch. 3 ; Stephen's History of the Criminal Law, 1, 342, 441, 533, 542, 565. Wigmire, Ev., § 2231, and at p. 3101 where he deals with the subject of judicial cust to crime and with what a wit has called "justice tampered with mercy."

(6) Best, Ev., § 126, a compromise has, however, been adopted in several modern statutes by compelling the disclosure, but indemnifying the witness from its results; see Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 181. used against him, except for the purpose in the Act declared. (1) The necessity under which the privileged witness formerly lay of explaining how the answer might criminate him amounted in some cases to a virtual denial of the privilege. This necessity for an enquiry as to how the answer to a particular question might criminate is now avoided. The rule enacted by this section thus secures the benefit of the witness’s answer to the cause of justice, and the benefit of the rule, that no one shall be compelled to criminate himself, to the witness (claiming his privilege), when a criminal proceeding is instituted against him. (2)

a. 130 (Criminating Documents.)

ss. 146—148 (Criminating Questions in cross-examination.)

COMMENTARY.

This section gives the Judge no option to disallow a question as to matter relevant to the matter in issue. Section 148 gives him an option to compel or excuse an answer to a question as to matter which is material to the suit only so far as it affects the credit of the witness. (3) As to interrogatories, see notes to s. 130, ante.

This section does not in terms deal with all criminating questions which may be addressed to a witness, but only with questions as to matters relevant to the matter in issue. Irrelevant questions should not be allowed, and it may be implied from the limitation in this section, that a witness should be excused from answering questions tending to criminate as to matters which are irrelevant. (4) On the very language of the section the witness can always claim to be excused on the ground of the irrelevancy of the question. (5)

Though the question does not so expressly provide, it follows, à fortiori, that a person is not excused from answering any question only because the answer may establish or tend to establish, that he owes a debt or is otherwise liable to a civil suit, either at the instance of the Crown or of another person. (6)

The section makes a distinction between those cases, in which a witness voluntarily answers a question, and those in which he is compelled to answer; and gives him a protection in the latter of these cases only. Protection is afforded only to answers which a witness has objected to give, or which he has asked to be excused from giving, and which then he has been compelled to give, and not to answers given voluntarily. “As these words stand they presuppose an objection by the witness, which has been overruled by the Judge, and a constraint put upon the witness to answer the particular question.” If, therefore, the witness wishes to prevent his statement from being thereafter used against him, he must object to reply, and only answer on being compelled by the Court. (7) The answer so given, unless it be false, cannot be ground for any subsequent criminal proceeding; apparently it might be made use of in a subsequent civil suit. The objection should in strictness come from the witness himself. (1) Quare however, whether the Judge ought not (though he is not bound) to advise the witness of his right. (2)

Persons examined by Police-officers investigating cases under the provisions of sections 161, 175, Criminal Procedure Code, are not bound to answer criminating questions put by such officers. (3) As to criminating documents, see section 130, ante; and as to the penalties for refusing to give evidence, and for perjury, and the protection afforded to witnesses in respect of what they may say whilst under examination, see pp. 721, et seq. post.

Accomplices.

188. An accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person; and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

Principle.—The testimony of accomplices who are usually interested, and nearly always infamous witnesses, is admitted from necessity, it being often impossible, without having recourse to such evidence, to bring the principal offenders to justice. (4) But the practice is to regard the statements of such persons as tainted because, from the position occupied by them, their statements are not entitled to the same weight as the evidence of an independent witness. (5) Accomplice evidence is held untrustworthy for three reasons: (a) because an accomplice is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the guilt from himself; (b) because an accomplice as a participant in crime, and consequently an immoral person, is likely to disregard the sanction of an oath; and (c) because he gives his evidence under promise of a pardon, or in the expectation of an implied pardon, if he discloses all he knows against those with whom he acted criminally: and this hope would lead him to favour the prosecution. (6) Therefore, as a general rule, confirmation of the evidence of an accomplice is required (v. post); yet as it is allowed that he is a competent witness the consequence is inevitable, that if credit is given to his evidence it requires no confirmation from another witness. (7)

Com. 114. Illust. (b) (Presumption as to accomplices’ evidence.)

Taylor, Ev., §§ 967—971; Best, Ev., §§ 170, 171; Foster’s Crown Law, 252; Roscoe, Cr. Ev., 121—127, 12th Ed., 113—115; Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 397—399 (Pardon to accomplice), s. 297 (Charge to jury); Stewart Raposo’s Law of Witnesses, §§ 226—228; Barron’s Criminal Ev., §§ 439—445. Wigmore, Ev., § 2056, et seq.

COMMENTS.

Accomplices.

An accomplice is one concerned with another or others in the commission of a crime. (8) The term “ accomplices” may include all participes criminis. (9)

---

(3) Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 161, 175.

(4) Taylor, Ev., § 967.

(5) R. v. Nepin Binas, 10 C., 970, 975 (1884).

(8) Wharton Law Lexicon, 8th Ed. The cooperation in the crime must be real and not merely apparent. Wharton, Cr. Ev., § 440.

(9) Foster’s Crown Cases, 541; thus in English law it includes both principals in the first and
An accomplice is a person who is a guilty associate in crime or who sustains such a relation to the criminal act that he can be jointly indicted with the defendant (principal). But it is not every participation in a crime which a party an accomplice in it, so as to require his testimony to be confirmed: much depends on the nature of the offence and the extent of the complicity of the witness in it. It is generally unsafe to convict a person on the evidence of accomplices unless corroborated in material particulars. But in considering whether this general maxim does or does not apply to a particular case, it is to be remembered that all persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot be treated as on precisely the same footing; the nature of the offence and the circumstances under which the accomplices make their statements must always be considered. No general rule on the subject can be laid down.

Where a witness admits that he was cognizant of the crime as to which he testifies, and took no means to prevent or disclose it, his evidence must be considered as no better than that of an accomplice.

A person who offers a bribe to a public officer is an accomplice in the offence of taking an illegal gratification.

Where certain persons accompanied another, who was entrusted with and carried the money intended to be given as a bribe to the head constable in the knowledge that it was to be so paid and in order to witness and assist in such payment, they were held to be accomplices.

While it is usually unsafe to convict a public servant of receiving bribes on the uncorroborated evidence of persons who say they have given them, the question as to the amount of corruption depends on the circumstances of each case.

The mere presence of a person on the occasion of the giving of a bribe and his omission to promptly inform the authorities do not constitute him an accomplice, unless it can be shown that he somehow co-operated in the payment of the bribe, or was instrumental in the negotiations for the payment.

There is nothing in the law, to justify the broad proposition that the evidence of witnesses, who admit that they were cognizant of a crime, that they made no attempt to prevent it, and that they did not disclose its commission, should only be relied on to the same extent as that of accomplices.

A person who has helped the accused to conceal the corpse of a person murdered or has omitted to give information of the murder is not an accomplice, although he may be guilty of an offence either under s. 201 or s. 202 of the Indian Penal Code.

"An accomplice witness is one who is either being jointly tried for the same offence and makes admissions which may be taken as evidence against a co-prisoner, and which make the confessing accused pro hac vice a sort of witness, or one who has received a conditional pardon on the understanding that he is to tell..."
all he knows, and who may at any time be relegated to the dock if he fails in his undertaking. (1) A witness is none the less an accomplice, because at the time of his giving evidence he has already been convicted on his own confession. (2) Though a great degree of disfavour may attach to a person for the part he has acted as an informer, yet his case is not treated as that of an accomplice. (3) The action of a spy and informer in suggesting and initiating a criminal offence is itself an offence, the act not being excused or justified by any exception in the Indian Penal Code, or by the doctrine which distinguishes the spy from the accomplice. But the act of a detective in supplying marked money for the detection of a crime cannot be treated as that of an accomplice. (4) Where an informer was upon his own statement cognisant of the commission of an offence, and omitted to disclose it for six days, the Court was not prepared to say that he was an accomplice; but held that his testimony was not such as to justify a conviction, except where it was corroborated. (5) "When the Judges speak of the danger of acting upon the uncorroborated evidence of accomplices, they refer to the evidence of accomplices who are admitted as evidence for the Crown in the hope or expectation of a pardon." (6)

The rule in this section and in section 114, illustration (b), are part of one subject, and neither section is to be ignored in the exercise of judicial discretion, (7) and they coincide with the rule observed in England, (8) and laid down in India prior to the passing of this Act. (9) "On the whole, the result" of these sections "appears to be that the legislature has laid it down as a maxim or rule of evidence resting on human experience that an accomplice is unworthy of credit against an accused person, i.e., so far as his testimony implicates an accused person, unless he is corroborated in material particulars in respect to that person; that it is the duty of the Court which in any particular case has to deal with an accomplice's testimony to consider whether this maxim applies to exclude that testimony or not; in other words, to consider whether the requisite corroboration is furnished by other evidence or facts proved in the case, though at the same time the Court may rightly in exceptional cases, notwithstanding the maxim, and in the absence of this corroboration, give credit to the accomplice’s testimony against the accused. if it sees good reason for doing so upon grounds other than, so to speak, the personal corroboration." (10) The rule that an accomplice must be corroborated in a material particular is a mere rule of general and usual practice, the application of which is for the discretion of the Judge by whom the case is tried.

---

(2) R. v. Rama Sdeo Charak-butty, supra.

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 971; Wharton Cr. Ev., § 440; Stewart Raper’s op. cit., § 228; R. v. Despard, 28 H. c. St. Tr., 469; R. v. Mullins, 3 Cox. C. C., 526; referred to and followed in R. v. Jarecharam, 19 B., 363 (1894); in which the distinction between a spy and an accomplice is pointed out. See also R. v. Mona Puma, 18 B., 661; R. v. Shankar, Cr. R., 91 (Bom.); 21 Dec. 1888, cited in 19 B., supra, at p. 396.

(4) R. v. Jarecharam, supra.

(5) Ishan Chandra v. R., 21 C., 328 (1893); R. v. Chando Chandaline, supra.

(7) R. v. Chagun Dayaram, 14 B., 331, 344 (1890); R. v. Mochiuddin Sahib, 25 M., 143, 147 (1901); [the section must be read with illust. (b) to s. 114].

(9) See the Full Bench case of R. v. Elahi Bux (R. L. R., Sup. Vol., F. B., 458, May, 1866; s. c., 5 W. R., Cr. 80), in which the law is the subject of these sections was fully discussed.

(10) Per Pher, J., in R. v. Sada Mundal, 21 W. R., Cr., 69, 70 (1874). See remarks in Abdul Karim v. R., 1 All. L. J., 110 (1901), where the Court was unable to regard a witness as an accomplice of such an exceptional kind as would justify the Court in dispensing with confirmatory evidence. Corroboration is required unless the Court can unhesitatingly believe it.
Thus the rule has no application in the case of an accomplice who is merely a youthful tool in the hands of one who stood to him in loco parentis.(1)

This section in unmistakable terms lays it down that a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and to hold that corroboration is necessary is to refuse to give effect to this provision.(2) And so a jury may, if they please, act upon the evidence of an accomplice, even in a capital case, without any confirmation of his statement.(3) And there may be cases of an exceptional character in which the accomplice’s evidence alone convinces a Judge of the facts required to be proved, and section 133 would support him, if he acted on that conviction without the corroboration usually insisted on.(4) Although, as a general rule, it would be most unsafe to convict an accused person on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, such evidence must, like that of any other witness, be considered and weighed by the Judge, who, in doing so, should not overlook the position in which the accomplice at the time of giving his evidence may stand, and the motives which he may have for stating what is false. If the Judge, after making due allowance for these considerations and the probabilities of the story, comes to the conclusion that the evidence of the accomplice, although uncorroborated, is true, and the evidence, if believed, establishes the guilt of the prisoner, it is his duty to convict.”(5) Before acting on the presumption mentioned in section 114, the Court or jury is required by the section and the sequel to the Illustrations to take into consideration certain facts with the view to ascertain the probability of the story told.(6) It is not wise or feasible to construct a fixed rule of law for all cases, though constant attempts have been and are still made to turn what was in its origin and is under the Act a cautionary practice into a rule of law.(7)

On the other hand, accomplices are not like ordinary witnesses in respect of credibility, but their evidence is tainted and should be carefully scrutinized before being accepted(8) and therefore, the presumption that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars, has become a rule of practice of almost universal application.(9) “Neither section 114, illust. (b), nor this section are to be ignored in the exercise of judicial discretion. The illust. (b) is, however, the rule, and when it is departed from, the Court should show or it should appear that the circumstances justify the exceptional treatment of the case. It is not enough for a Court to state the rule pro forma and merely as a reason to evade it; the Courts must act up to it. So long-established a rule of practice as that which makes it prudent, as a general rule, to require corroboration of accomplices, cannot without great danger to society be ignored simply because section 133 declares that a conviction is not illegal.

(1) Ramanuni Gounden v. R., 27 M., 271 (1863) per Sir B. Subramania Ayyar, Oflg. C. J.
(5) R. v. Godardhan, P., 528, 554, per Edge, C. J.
(6) R. v. Ramanuni Padayachi, supra; as to the character of an accomplice, see sequel to illust. (b), s. 111; and remarks of Peacock, C. J., in R. v. Elahi Bas, 488.
(7) See Wigmore, Ev., § 2050.
(8) Rajini Kanta v. Anna Mullick, 2 C. W. N., 672 (1893).
(9) R. v. Magan Iall, supra; Best, Ev., § 171; it is not a rule of law but of practice only; R. v. Amir Khan, 9 B. L. R., 36, 57 (1871); R. v. Stubbs, 22 L. J., M. C., 16; but it is a practice which deserves all the reverence of the law: R. v. Furlar, 8 C. & P., 107, per Lord Abinger. In the matter of Jogendra Nath v. Sanga Saro, 2 C. W. N., 55 (1897); Kamala Prasad v. Sitak Prasad, 28 C., 339, 343 (1901).
merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice." (1) The general result therefore is that in almost all cases the presumption mentioned in section 114, illust. (b), should be raised and corroboration in material particulars required. The bare existence of a principle is acknowledged in order to meet the requirements of very exceptional cases, but from the very fact of the exceptional character of these cases this principle is in practice constantly disapproved of and frequently violated. (2) There is no rule of law or practice that the self-incriminating portion of the evidence of an accomplice is unworthy of belief unless corroborated. The credibility of a witness who says that he and another joined in committing an offence stands per se, so far as his self-accusation is concerned, on the same footing as that of a witness who says that he alone committed an offence, though in the latter instance there would be a narrow basis for cross-examination to test his own self-accusation. If a witness is an accomplice, he is an accomplice and must own to being an accomplice if he tells the truth. It is therefore merely arguing in a circle to say that the self-incriminating statement of an accomplice requires corroboration because he is an accomplice. What must first be decided is, whether the witness in question is in truth an accomplice or is merely posing as an accomplice. When it is once established that he is an accomplice, then the next practical question arises who are the other accomplices, and it is at that stage, when his evidence implicating others has to be weighed, that there comes into application the maxim, that it is unsafe to convict upon the evidence of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated in material particulars, both as to the circumstances of the offence and the identity of the persons whom he implicates." (3)

The evidence of accomplices should not be left to the jury without such directions and observations from the Judge, as the circumstances of the case may require, pointing out to them the danger of trusting to such evidence when it is not corroborated by other evidence. (4) The omission to do so is an error in law, (5) in the summing up by the Judge, and is, on appeal, (6) a ground for setting aside the conviction when the Appellate Court thinks that the prisoner has been prejudiced by such omission, and that there has been a failure of justice. (7) Where a Judge charged the jury that they were not to convict upon the evidence of $G$, if satisfied that he was an accomplice and uncorroborated, but coupled the direction with a strong expression of opinion that $G$ was not an accomplice; held that this constituted a misdirection in fact, though not in form, calculated seriously to prejudice the prisoner's case. Where the only evidence of the payment of a bill to the accused apart from hearsay statements which were not admissible consisted of the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice which was further in itself improbable and to some extent inconsistent.

---

(1) Per Jardine, J., in R. v. Chagan Dayaram, 14 B., 331, 344 (1890); see also R. v. Imam, 3 Bom. H. C. R., 67, 59 C. C. (1887); R. v. Mohan Bunker, 22 W. R., Cr., 38 (1874); [whether evidence of approver alone, uncorroborated, was sufficient to justify the Court on calling upon the prisoner for his defence]; R. v. Luchmee Pershad, 10 W. R., Cr., 43 (1873).

(3) R. v. Hasmant, 6 Bom. L. R., 143, 450 (1904), per Aton, J.

With the story of the other accomplices the High Court set aside the conviction. (3) It has been recently held both that the conviction of an accused on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is perfectly legal; and that a direction to the jury that it will be their duty to convict the accused if they believed the accomplice and gave credit to his evidence is a perfectly legal direction; and that a direction to the jury that the evidence of an accomplice is not sufficient to find the accused guilty will be a misdirection; as also that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars.

Where there is no such corroboration it will be the duty of a Judge to direct the jury that there is no sufficient evidence before them upon which they will be justified in finding an accused guilty. A Judge who combines the functions of Judge and jury is equally bound to scrutinise accomplice-evidence with great care and to consider whether there is any corrobating evidence when the main evidence is of an accomplice character. Although it is not usual for the High Court to interfere in revision with the decision of the Lower Court, when it is based on a consideration of the evidence, yet where the Lower Courts have not considered the evidence from the point of view that the witnesses were accomplices and where hearsay evidence has been improperly admitted in important points, the Court will go into the facts of the case.

The corroboration must be on a point material to the issue; the testimony of the approver ought to be corroborated in some material circumstance, such circumstance connecting and identifying the prisoner with the offence. There is a great difference between confirmation of an accomplice as to the circumstances of the felony and those which apply to the individuals charged. The former only show that the accomplice was present at the commission of the offence, but the others show that the prisoner was connected with it. This distinction ought always to be attended to. The confirmation which I always advise juries to require, is a confirmation of the accomplice in some fact which goes to fix the guilt on the particular person charged. The "corroboration ought to consist of some circumstance that affects the identity of the person accused. A man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts

---

1. R. v. O'Hara, 17 C., 642 (1890).
2. It was held in the case cited that a statement by a witness that he heard a say in the absence of the accused, that he had paid a sum of money to the accused as a bribe was hearsay and not admissible.
3. Reoja Kani v. Ama Mullick, 2 C. W. N., 672 (1896). In R. v. Lakshminayak Pandaram, 22 M., 491 (1890), that accomplice's statement was not only not corroborated, but was distinctly contradicted by the evidence in the case.
4. Ramanuni Gourden v. R., 14 Mad. L. J., 225 (1903); s. c., 27 M., 271, per Bhashyam Aiyangar, J.
5. Ib., per Boddam, J.
6. Ib.
8. The "corroboration ought to consist of some circumstance that affects the identity of the person accused. A man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts of the case, and if the confirmation be only on the truth of that history, without identifying the persons, that is no corroboration at all." (1) It is an established rule of practice that the accomplice must be corroborated by independent evidence as to the identity of every person whom he impeaches. (2) The accomplice must be corrobated as to all of the persons affected by his evidence. If he is corrobated in his evidence as to one prisoner, there will still be need of corroboration of his testimony with respect to the other prisoners. (3) But "it is sufficient, if the evidence is confirmatory of some of the leading circumstances of the story of the approver as against the particular prisoner, so that the Court may be able to presume that he has told the truth as to the rest. The true rule on the subject of the corroboration of the evidence of approvers probably is that, if the Court is satisfied that the witness is speaking the truth in some material part of his testimony, in which it is seen that he is confirmed by unimpeachable evidence, there may be a just ground for believing that he also speaks truth in other parts as to which there may be no confirmation." (4) It is not necessary that an accomplice should be corrobated in every material particular, because if such evidence could be found, it would be unnecessary to call the accomplice; but he must be confirmed in such and so many material points as to satisfy the Court or jury of the truth of his story. (5) "Not only as to persons spoken of by an accomplice, must there be corroborative evidence, but, which is more important still, as to the corpus delicti there must be some primâ facie evidence pointing the same way to make the evidence of an accomplice satisfactory." (6) The corroboration must be independent of the accomplice or of a co-confessing prisoner. (7) The evidence of one accomplice does not corrobore the evidence of another: but the evidence of either requires corroboration before it can be acted upon. (8) The evidence of two or more accomplices requires confirmation equally with the testimony of one. (9) There may be circumstances, such as where previous concert by the informers is highly improbable, in which the agreement in their stories together with corroboration which is afforded by the circumstances that their stories cannot have been arranged between them beforehand must be taken into account. (10) Previous statements made by the accomplice himself, though consistent with the evidence given by him at the trial, are insufficient corroboration. His statement whether made at trial or before the trial, and in whatever shape it comes before the Court, is still only the statement of an accomplice, and does not at all improve in value by repetition. (11) Nor can the confession of one of the prisoners be used to corroborate the evidence of an accomplice against the others because such a confession cannot be put on a higher footing than the evidence
9. R. v. Elahi Bux, B. L. R., Sup. Vol., F. B., 459 (May 1866); s. c., 5 W. R., Cr., 80; R. v. Baisamtha Nath, 3 B. L. P., F. R., 2 note (1868); R. v. Ghatterbarre Singh, 5 W. R., 29 (1868); R. v. Michael Biswas, 10 B. L. R., 455 note (1873); R. v. Ummed Khan, 8 A., 129, 135 (1835); R. v. Setho Mandal, 12 W. R., Cr., 49 (1874); R. v. Douker, 5 W. R., Cr., 18 (1885); S. v. Islam, 3 Born. H. C., 57 C. C., 67 (1867); R. v. O'Hara, 17 C., 642 (1890); R. v. Sagol Samba, 21 C., 642, 657 (1893). In R. v. Mokhuddin Sakib, 26 M., 143 (1901), the evidence of the approver was held to be sufficiently corroborated. Stewart Rapajpe op. cit., p. 227; Wharton, Cr. Ev., §§ 441—442.

---

(1) R. v. Farler, 8 C. & P., 106, cited in P. v. Elahi Bux, 465, supra; Roscco, Cr. Ev., 124; and see R. v. Stubbs, 25 L. J. M. C., 16 per Crescent, J.: "You may take it for granted that the accomplice was at the comittal of the offence, and may be corrobated as to the facts; but that has no tendency to show that the parties accused were there." See also R. v. Ram Saran, 9 A., 306, 310 (1885).

(2) R. v. Krishnabhad, 10 B., 319 (1886); R. v. Budh Nanku, 1 B., 475 (1876); R. v. Malapa bin, 11 Pom. H. C., 196 (1874); R. v. Ram Saran, 8 A., 306 (1885), and cases cited, ante.

(3) Abdul Karim v. R., 1 All. L. J., 110 (1904).

(4) R. v. Kala Chandra, 11 W. R., Cr., 21 (1869), per Newman, J.

(6) R. v. Chatur Purushotam, 1 B., 478, note.

(7) Abdul Karim v. R., 1 All. L. J., 110 (1904).

(11) R. v. Malapa bin Kapura, 11 Bom. H. C., 196 (1874); R. v. Bezirb Beckore, 10 C., 971 (1884); and see note to v. 157, post. of an accomplice (which itself requires corroboration), and is moreover not given on oath or subject to the test of cross-examination, and is guaranteed by nothing except the peril into which it brings the speaker and which it is generally fashioned to lessen. Tainted evidence is not made better by being corroborated by other tainted evidence. (1) Where several persons are indicted and the evidence of the accomplice is confirmed as to some only and not as to others, the Court ought (and in trial by jury the latter ought to be advised) to acquit those against whom there is no corroboration. (2)

The extent of corroboration will depend much upon the nature of the crime, and the degree of moral guilt attached to its commission: and if the offence be one of a purely legal character or if it imply no great moral delinquency, the parties concerned, though in the eye of the law criminal, will not be considered such accomplices as to render necessary any confirmation of their evidence. (3) The application of the rule is for the discretion of the Judge by whom the case is tried: and in the application of the rule much depends on the nature of the offence, and the extent of the complicity of the witness in it. (4) Ordinarily speaking the evidence of an accomplice should be corroborated in material particulars. At the same time the amount of criminality is a matter for consideration; when a person is only an accomplice by implication or in a secondary sense his evidence does not require the same amount of corroboration as that of the person who is an actual participator with the principal offender. In dealing with the question what amount of corroboration is required in the case of testimony given by an accomplice, the Courts must exercise careful discrimination and look at the surrounding circumstances in order to arrive at a conclusion whether the fact deposed to by the person alleged to be an accomplice, are borne out by these circumstances, or whether the circumstances are of such a nature, that the evidence purporting to be given by the alleged accomplice should be supported in essential and material particulars by evidence aliunde as to the facts deposed to by that accomplice. (5)

134. No particular number of witnesses shall in any case be required for the proof of any fact.

Principle.—This section deals with the question of the quantity of legitimate evidence required for judicial decision. Cases now and then, though seldom occur, in which injustice is done by giving credence to the story of a single witness. On the other hand, however, as the requiring a plurality of witnesses, clearly imposes an obstacle to the administration of justice, specially where the act to be proved is of a casual nature; above all, where, being in violation of law, as much clandestinity as possible would be observed,—it ought not to be required without strong and just reason. (6)

(3) R. v. Boyes, 1 R. & S., 311, 320, 322; Taylor, Ev., § 988, and cases there cited: see first supplementary illustration to illust. (b), s. 114.

(4) R. v. Boyes, supra.

(5) Kamala Prasad v. Sitalk Prasad, 28 C., 339 (1901); s.c., 5 C. W. N., 517.

(6) Best, Ev., §§ 507, 598: as to the merits and demerits of the 'anas nulm' rule, see ib.; § 598, and generally §§ 506—622, 65—70 pamm.; see Kulam Mundul v. Bhowsampriyad, 22 W. R., Cr., 12 (1874), Taylor, Ev., §§ 902—906; Starkie, Ev., 827; see also remarks of Sir Section 28 of the repealed Act II of 1855, which was more directly and in terms in accord with the present English law on the subject than the present section, was as follows:—"Except in cases of treason the direct evidence of one witness, who is entitled to full credit, shall be sufficient for proof of any fact in any such Court or before any such person. But this provision shall not affect any rule or practice of any Court that requires corroborative evidence in support of the testimony of an accomplice (v. ante section 133), or of a single witness in the case of perjury." The effect of the present section is that in any case the testimony of a single witness (if believed by the Court or jury) is sufficient for the proof of any fact. Thus a conviction upon the statement of a complainant alone is lawful. (1) The evidence of one witness, if believed, is sufficient according to the law of this country to establish any fact to which the witness speaks directly. (2) A Magistrate is fully justified in believing one witness in preference to three others, if he sees reason to do so, and it is not legally necessary that he should detail his reasons. (3) The Act contains no provision corresponding to the English rule requiring corroboration in breach of promise of marriage (4) and affirmation cases, (5) or in claims on the estates of deceased persons, (6) or in prosecutions for perjury. (1) In regard to the giving of false evidence it was held by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (following the English rule) under section 28 of Act II of 1855, that a person cannot be convicted of giving false evidence upon the uncorroborated evidence of a single witness. (8) Though the present Act does not in terms require corroboration in any of the abovementioned cases, (9) leaving the Judge unlettered to determine in each case whether the evidence is sufficient; yet it is conceived that the Courts will, in coming to such a determination, follow as a general rule, but with such modifications as the law may here require (1) the practice in England, where it is not thought safe in such cases to accept the testimony of a single witness without some corroboration. (2) "The rule" (necessity of more than oath against oath on an indictment for perjury) "cannot be defended as a rule founded in all cases on reason, for it is easy to conceive cases, where the credit due to one person is so far beyond that which is due to another, as to leave no ground for reasonable doubt in acting on the testimony of a single witness, though directly in conflict with that of another. But though the rule be unwise as an inflexible rule of law, the principle, on which it rests, is of great value in the difficult task of weighing evidence." (3) Where direct testimony is opposed by conflicting evidence, or by ordinary experience, or by the probability supplied by the circumstances of the case, the consideration of the number of witnesses becomes most material. (4)

(1) Thus the law in India, as to contradictory statements is not the same as in England; Taylor, Ev., § 962; Field, Ev., 614, 615. It has been held by two Full Benches of the Calcutta High Court, that where no evidence for the prosecution is offered corroborative of either statement, and the giving intentionally of false evidence is charged on two contradictory depositions made, the one before the committing Magistrate, and the other before the Sessions Judge, a finding in the alternative is sufficient to maintain a conviction: R.
v. Zamirul, B. L. R., F. B., 521 (1866); s. c. 6
W. R., Cr., 65; R. v. Mahomet Hoomayoon, 13
B. L. R., F. R., 324 (1874); s. c., 21 W. R., Cr., 72; Habibullah v. R., 10 C., 937 (1884); Satku Sheikh v. R., 10 C., 405 (1884), followed by the Madras High Court, in R. v. Polany Chetty, 4
Mad. H. C. R., 51 (1868), R. v. Reas, 6 Mad. H.
C. R., 342 (1871); and Allahabad High Court in R. v. Ohulet, 7 A., 41 (1884) over-ruling R.
v. Niaz Ali, 5 A., 17 (1882); R. v. Matabadal, 15
A., 392 (1893); and see R. v. Kher, 22 A., 115
(1899), Bombay High Court; see R. v. Ramji
Najbarose, 10 B., 124 (1883); R. v. Bharma, 11
B., 702 (1886); R. v. Mungga bin, 18 B., 377 (1893). See also Field's Ev., 614—616. See also provisions in India relative to the necessity for such action for prosecution; s. 195, Cr. Pr. Code.

(2) v. Field, Ev., 617; Whitley Stokes, 923;
R. v. Bal Gangadhar, 6 Bom. L. R., 324 (1904)
[perjury], s. c., 28 B., 479.

(2) Per Sir Lawrence Peel, C. J., in his charge to the jury in R. v. Hedger (1862); see remarks in Best, Ev., §§ 605, 606; and s. 195, Cr. Pr. Code which provides in India, a safeguard in the necessity of obtaining a sanction to prosecute.

Hedger, supra at p. 13; see also Field, Ev., p. 461.
CHAPTER X.

OF THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

As the last Chapter dealt with the competency and compellability of witnesses, the present deals with the examination in Court of such witnesses as are rendered by the provisions of the last Chapter competent and compellable to give evidence. This Chapter consists of a reduction to express propositions of rules as to the examination of witnesses which are well established and understood in English law, the only provision which requires special notice being that contained in section 165, giving to the Judge power to put questions or to order the production of documents.(1) The sections of this Chapter assume that the witness is already before the Court. Process to compel attendance of witnesses or production of documents is provided by the Procedure Code. A short note is, however, here given with reference to this process and other kindred matters relating to witnesses.

The duty of citizens to appear and testify to such facts within their knowledge as may be necessary to the due administration of justice is one which has been recognised and enforced by the common law from an early period.(2) The right to compel the attendance of witnesses was an incident to the jurisdiction of the common law Courts, and statutes have extended the power to other officers, such as arbitrators. Every Court having power definitely to hear and determine any suit, h.s. by the common law, inherent power to call for all adequate proofs of the facts in controversy and to that end to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses before it.(3) By an early English statute witnesses were entitled to their "reasonable costs and charges."(4) The wilful neglect to attend or to testify after proper and reasonable service of the subpoena(5) and, in civil cases, after payment or tender of the witness's fee(6) or waiver of payment,(7) is a contempt of Court.(8) When it is necessary not only to secure the oral testimony of the witness, but also the production of documents in his possession, the subpoena contains in addition to the ordinary command to appear a requirement that the witness brings with him such document or documents designating the same. Such a subpoena is called a subpoena duces tecum.(9) It is an order of compulsory obligation which the witness must obey like other subpoenas. He has no more right to determine whether the documents shall be produced than whether he shall appear as a witness. It is his duty to attend and to bring with him the documents according to the exigency

---

(1) v. ante, pp. 682-684. Previous to examination the witnesses should be affirmed or sworn: see the Indian Oaths Act, Appendix.

(2) Amey v. Long, East., 494; Burr. Jones, § 797; the process by which attendance is enforced is the subpoena ad testificandum commonly called a subpoena which commands the witness to appear at the trial and give his testimony. Phil. & Arnold, Ev., ii, 424 et seq. Taylor, Ev., § 1232 et seq.

(3) Greenl., Ev., § 309.

(4) 5 Eliz., Ch. 9.

(8) Phil. & Arn., Ev., ii, 432.

(9) 2 Phil. & Arn., Ev., 425; 3 Bl. Comm. 282. Amey v. Long, 9 East., 483. In the High Court following the English practice a subpoena duces tecum is only issued when the person in possession of the document is not a party to the suit. When the writings are in possession of the adverse party or his attorney, notice to produce is given. See 2 Phil. & Arn., Ev., 425.
of the writ. It is for the Court to determine whether the documents are admissible, or whether they should be produced and exhibited.(1) A witness clearly cannot be compelled to produce documents by the subpoena unless they are under his control or possession. But a person having the actual custody of the document may be compelled to produce it though it be owned by others.(2) For public convenience sake, when documents are in the custody or control of public officers they are provable by certified copies. When the documents are produced in obedience to the subpoena, the person calling the witness is under no obligation to have the witness sworn.(3) From a very early period the common law recognised the privileges of parties and witnesses in judicial proceedings to go to the place of trial to remain so long as necessary and to return home free from arrest on civil process; this being an immunity considered to be a necessity in the administration of justice.(4)

All the matters abovementioned are in this country provided for by the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes and the Penal Code, viz., procedure for summoning and compelling the attendance of witnesses:(5) the production of documents and other things;(9) the expenses of witnesses;(7) the freedom of complainants and witnesses in criminal cases from police restraint;(8) recognition for the attendance of complainants and witnesses in criminal proceedings;(9) exemption from attendance in case of the person by reason of non-residence within certain limits;(10) or of the witness being a pardenashin lady or person of rank;(11) the

---

(1) S. 162, post; 2 Phil. & Arm., Eq., 425; Burr Jones, Eq., §§ 801, and cases there cited; Doe v. Kelly, 4 Dow., 273; R. v. Russell, 7 Dow., 693; R. v. Dixon, 3 Burr., 1857; Amev. v. Long, supra. The subpoena or notice should describe the papers to be produced with certainty and clearness, Civ. Pr. Code, s. 183.

(2) Amev. v. Long, 1 Camp., 17; Corson v. Debra, 1 Holt., 239.

(4) Civ. Pr. Code, s. 642; Burr Jones, Eq., §§ 806, 806; Bacon Abr. tit Privileges, 4, 17, 56; Machine v. Smith, 1 H. Black, 636; the privilege extends to cases where the attendance is voluntary: Wapole v. Alexander, 3 Doug., 45; Arling v. Flower, 3 T. R., 334; Spence v. Stuart, 3 East., 89: Ex-parte Byrne, 1 Ves. & B., 316.

A person who violates the privilege is guilty of contempt; Cole v. Hawkins, Andrews, 275;

Strange, 1094; Childs v. Barrett, 11 East., 439.

The immunity extends until the witness can return home: Strong v. Dickinson, 1 M. & W., 488;

(5) Civ. Pr. Code, ss. 159-163, 165-167, 171 (summoning of witnesses); 168-170, 175, (absenting witness); 174, 175, 177 (consequences of failure to comply with summons, or to give evidence or to produce documents); 178 (rules as to witnesses apply to parties); 172, 173 (duty of person summoned to give evidence or produce document); 64-94 (issue and service of summons); 117 (examination of parties); Criminal Pr. Code, ss. 68-74Y (summons); 75-86 (warrants of arrest); 87-99 (proclamation and attachment); 90-93 (other rules regarding processes), 328 (summons on juror or assessor); 495 (imprisonment or committal of person refusing to answer or produce document); 306 (production of further evidence in cases triable by Court of Session or High Court); 216 (summons to witnesses for defence when accused is committed); 219 (power to summon supplementary witnesses); 231 (recall of witness); 244 (issue of process in summons cases); 254, 256, 257 (warrant cases); 540 (power to summon material witness or examine person present). Penal Code, ss. 171, 175. As to the attendance of witnesses before Coroner, see Act IV of 1871: and before the Bengal and Bombay Councils; Acts III (B. C.), of 1886, XIII (Bom. C.) of 1886.

(6) Civ. Pr. Code, ss. 159, 164, 165, 166, 167, 171, 172, 173, 177, 178. See as to discovery, admission, inspection, production, impounding and return of documents, Civil Pr. Code, 121-145; Criminal Pr. Code, ss. 94, 96 (summons to produce document or other thing); 96-99 (search warrants); 495 (consequences of refusal to produce). See s. 162, post.

(7) Civ. Pr. Code, ss. 160-162; Criminal Pr. Code, ss. 244, 257.

(8) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 171.

(9) Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 217, 170.

(10) Civ. Pr. Code, s. 176.

(11) Ib., ss. 640, 641. There is no similar exemption from attendance before the Criminal Courts, but a pardenashin lady may claim to be examined sitting in a palanquin; Rookee Vans v. Roberts, 1 R. L. R., 8, 5 (1888); Misrat Bano v. Mohamed Bayeen, 18 W. R., 230 (1872); or on commission; In re Hiroo Scenery, 4 C.,

W, LE
exemption of witnesses from arrest under civil process. (1) Non-attendance may further render a witness liable to a civil action for damages. (2) Witness cannot be sued in a Civil Court for damages, nor prosecuted in a Criminal Court (except for perjury) in respect of evidence given by them in a judicial proceeding. (3) They are absolutely privileged as to anything they may say as witnesses having reference to the enquiry on which they are called as witnesses. (4) The ground of the protection is this, 'that it concerns the public and the administration of justice, that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of Justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by a suit for damages, but that the only penalty they should incur, if they give evidence falsely, should be an indictment for perjury. (5) If public policy requires that witnesses shall not be harassed by the fear of suits for damages, it must be conceded that it is equally undesirable that they should be liable to be prosecuted. (6) An action for defamation cannot be maintained against a Judge for words used by him whilst trying a cause in Court even though such words are alleged to be false, malicious, and without reasonable cause. (7)

Assuming that the witnesses are in attendance before the Court, certain other provisions are laid down for their examination and the general conduct of the suit or trial. In civil proceedings the witnesses must be examined orally and in open Court. (8) This general rule is qualified by the provisions which relate (a) to evidence given on commission; (9) (b) evidence given by direction of the Court on affidavit; (10) (c) examination before trial of witnesses about to leave the jurisdiction. (11) The order of production and examination of witnesses is regulated by sections 179, 180; (12) the right to begin and reply on appeal by section 555; (13) and the power to deal with evidence taken down by another Judge by section 191 of the Code.

In criminal proceedings, except as otherwise expressly provided, evidence must be taken in the presence of the accused or when his personal attendance is dispensed with (14) in presence of his pleader. (15) This general rule is qualified 20 (1878): In re Dintarini Debi, 15 C., 775 (1888), or to have special arrangements made for an examination in private; In re Banant Bibi, 12 A., 69 (1889); [a witness may be examined at some place other than the Court-house; Hm Coomaras v. R., 24 Cal., 551 (1877)]. A parda-nashin complainant must personally attend in Court, such arrangements being made as are necessary to secure her privacy. In re Farid-un-nissa, 5 A., 92 (1882).

(1) Civ. Pr. Code, s. 642; see Taylor, Ev., §§ 1320—1341; there is no protection given against criminal process.

(2) Under the provisions of s. 20, Act XIX of 1855, which is in force in the Bengal Presidency, or s. 10 of Act X of 1855, which is in force in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies; see Foj Dhunpat v. Prem Bib, 24 W. R., 72 (1879).

(3) Biahuram Ruba v. Ram Dhone, 11 W. R., 43 (1869); Gunwesh Dutt v. Mujumdar Chakder, 11 B. L. R., 328 (1872); Rikhunber Singh v. Becharam Sircar, 15 C., 264 (1888); Chidambaram v. Thirumani, 10 M., 87 (1890); Manjuya v. Bha Safeeti, 11 M., 477 (1898); Dusan Singh, v. Mahip Singh, 10 A., 428 (1885); R. v. Dalarji, 17 B., 127 (1892); R. v. Ballrishama 17 B. 873 (1893); Templeton v. Lawrie, 25 B., 230 (1900).

(4) Ramman v. Nathuram, L. R., 2 C. P. D., 63; Rikhunber Singh v. Becharam Sircar, ante.

(5) Gunwesh Dutt v. Mujumdar Chakder, supra.

(7) Ramman Nage v. Subramany Marjor, 17 M., 87 (1883).

(9) Ib., ss. 381—291, see s. 33, ante.

(10) Ib., ss. 192—197; see s. 1, ante.

(11) Ib., s. 192; and see Edwards v. Mulder, 5 B. L. R., 252 (1870).

(14) See Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 116, 205, ni. In the matter of Rahim Bibi, 6 A., 56 (1863) (parole). In a warrant case, the accused being a parda-nashin, the Magistrate can dispense with her attendance if he issues a summons in the first instance: Bsumati Adhirari v. Bhurun Kablo, 21 C., 538 (1894).

by the provisions relating (a) to the examination of witnesses on commission; (b) the case of an absconding accused; (c) the direction by an Appellate Court that additional evidence be taken by the Lower Court, and that such evidence be taken without the accused person or his pleader being present. (3) The order of production and examination of witnesses is regulated in the case of trials before High Courts and Sessions Courts by sections 286, 287, 342, 289, 290, 292. (4) As to the procedure in summons, (5) and warrant, (6) cases; the right of accused to be defended by pleader; (7) the procedure on revisions, (8) and on appeal; (9) and when Magistrate cannot pass sentence sufficiently severe; (10) the conviction or commitment on evidence partly recorded by one Magistrate and partly by another; (11) see the sections and chapters of the Code noted below.

In civil proceedings it is in the discretion of a Court of first instance after the plaintiff’s case is closed to allow him to call further witnesses, and there is no right of special appeal upon that point. (12) The Judge has a discretionary power of recalling witnesses at any stage of the trial. He will seldom, however, except under special circumstances, permit a plaintiff after his case is closed, to recall a witness to prove a material fact. A witness after cross-examination may also be recalled to be further cross-examined; and a question omitted in examination-in-chief may with permission (which is usually given) be put to the witness in re-examination either by the Judge or Counsel. (13) Cross-examination ordinarily gives notice to the other side of the line of defence. So where the defendant’s Counsel cross-examined as to certain misrepresentations made towards the defendant and deceptions practised on him: this was held to be considered as notice to the plaintiff’s Counsel of the line of defence; and, therefore, if he had letters of the defendant tending to show that he knew the real state of the facts, the plaintiff’s Counsel ought to have given them in evidence before the plaintiff’s case was closed, and he will not be allowed to put them in as evidence in reply. (14)

Whenever a prisoner is put upon his trial, he is entitled to have the witnesses examined de novo if they have previously given evidence on the trial of another prisoner; and it is not sufficient to require the witnesses to identify the prisoner and to read over to them their former examination, and require them to attest it. (15) It has been held that though to omit to do

(1) Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 503-507; v. a. 33, ante.
(2) Ib., s. 512, v. a. 23, ante.
(3) Ib., s. 422; see also s. 610, ib.
(5) Ib., Chap. XX, s. 451 A.
(6) Ib., Chap. XXI.
(7) Ib., s. 540. The Code makes no express provision for advocate addressing the Court in Magistrate’s cases or in the course of proceedings preliminary to commitment, but such cases will be covered by this section. Field, Ev., 619.
(8) Ib., ss. 439, 440. As to the right of prisoner’s Counsel to begin cases under s. 434; see R. v. Appu Sabhassan, 8 B., 200 (1884).
(9) Ib., s. 423.
(10) Ib., s. 349.
(11) Ib., s. 350; there is no similar provision as to cases tried by the Court of Session; the whole trial must take place before the same Judge; cf. Field, Ev., 630; R. v. Charoo, W. R., 1864, Cr., 32; R. v. Gopi Noshyo, 21 W. R., Cr., 47 (1874); R. v. Raghoonath, 23 W. R., Cr., 59 (1865).
(12) Raghunath Das v. Pratap Chunder, 12 W. R., 455 (1870); as to recall of witnesses in criminal cases, see Cr. Pr. Code, ss. 231, 256, 350.
(13) Taylor, Ev., § 1477, and cases there cited. See s. 138, post. The practice should not be encouraged of allowing either party after resting his case, to amend and add to his proof until they repeated experiments he conforms to the view of the Court: Burr, Jones, Ev., s. 809; see as to evidence in reply and fresh evidence after close of case: R. v. Hilditch, 5 C. & P., 299; Giles v. Powel, 2 C. & P., 289; Walls v. Atkinson, 2 C. & P., 268.
(14) H. Barton v. Lewis, 1 C. & P., 390.
this is illegal yet if it has not occasioned a failure of justice a new trial need not be ordered.(1)

It is not generally competent to the Court to refuse to examine any of the witnesses produced by the parties. The Judge is bound to receive all the evidence tendered, unless the object of summoning a large number of witnesses clearly appears to be to impede the adjudication of the case or otherwise to obstruct the ends of justice. Thus it was held not right for the lower Court to select five out of twenty witnesses tendered for examination.(2) It appears from the case first cited that a Civil Court has power to refuse to examine any excessive number of witnesses, if satisfied that the object of the person calling them is clearly to impede the adjudication of the case. The Code of Civil Procedure, however, contains no provision analogous to that contained in section 216 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which gives a Magistrate discretion to exclude from the list of witnesses to be summoned for the defence the names of persons whose evidence is not really relevant.(3) The fact of a witness not having been named in the plaintiff's list of witnesses is no ground for refusing to examine him when produced.(4) In the aforementioned case, the plaintiffs in the Court of first instance produced both documentary and oral evidence in support of their claim. The Court being satisfied with the documentary evidence produced by the plaintiff declined to record the evidence of the witnesses tendered by them. The defendants appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, but in its turn declined to allow the plaintiffs-respondents to produce fresh evidence before it. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court it was held that, though there was no section of the Code of Civil Procedure strictly applicable to the circumstances of the case, the Court was warranted ex debito justitiae in setting aside all proceedings of both Courts below and in directing the Court of first instance to retry the case, admitting all admissible evidence which had previously been tendered to the Court of first instance and which that Court had refused to record.(5)

Where a day has been fixed for hearing the witnesses the Court is not competent to decide the case without waiting for that day in the absence of the witnesses, on the ground that no amount of witnesses would be believed.(6) A

---

(1) Subba v. R., 9 M., 83 (1886); R. v. Nand Ram, 9 A., 609 (1887).
(2) Ramkan Mandal v. Rajbulla Paramanik, 6 B. L. R., App., 10 (1870); and to the same effect, see Wadam & Co. v. Nukeer Mandal, 6 W. R. (Act X), 83 (1896); Jaswant Singh v. Jai Singh, 3 M. I. A., 245; R. v. Isham Dutt, 6 B. L. R., App., 88 (1871); R. v. Bhaskar Isker, 2 W. R., 36 (1895); R. v. Abdoel Seer, 3 W. R., 6 (1885); Rance Ojulla v. Ghokam Motaia, 6 W. R., 8, 60 (1886); Nalini Subha v. Hoonia Latha, 6 W. R., 824 (objected taken in special appeal); Lookeo Sing v. Raj Rewa Laha, 6 W. R., 264 (1887) [a party is entitled to have all his witnesses examined whatever opinion the Court may form by anticipation as to the probable value of the evidence when it shall be given]; Mt. Shramakder v. Iskana, 2 W. R., 106 (1883) [The Court cannot put a party to elect which of several witnesses he will call, where all are material and their evidence bears upon different points in the case. Conviction reached the witnesses not having been summoned; R. v. Haar Thakoor, 6 W. R., 65 (1886); R. v. Shahuri v. Shukor Bakoor, 6 R. L. R., App., 65 (1871).
(3) Field, Ec., 4th Ed., 539, and when the Magistrate does not proceed under this section the accused is entitled to have the witnesses named in the list examined before the Court of Session.
(4) Ruchal Dose v. Rustom Chandor, 12 W. R., 455 (1870); as to criminal cases, see s. 291, Cr. Pr. Code.
(6) Rance Ojulla v. Ghokam Motaia, 6 W. R., 80 (1886). In re Mathai Chandu, 6 B. L. R., App., 78 (1871). [It is the Magistrate's duty to summon witnesses for the accused who can speak to the facts of the case, and he ought not to determine beforehand what credit he will give to their evidence; R. v. Sreenath Mohindra, 7 W. R., 45 (1887) [a Magistrate cannot decide the case of a prosecutor without examining his witnesses]; see Sreenath Mundle v. Sreenath Rajpur, 24 W. R., 62 (1875).
plaintiff who does not care to be present to support his own case when he knows it is tried, cannot be allowed to urge the plea that he had no opportunity of rebutting the defendant's evidence. (1)

The examination of a material witness of the plaintiff in the absence of the defendant, his vakil having been removed, and no other vakil then acting for him, is such an irregularity that if objected to at the proper time would be fatal to the reception of such evidence. But where no objection was urged during the trial or until an appeal was interposed the Judicial Committee held that the objection came too late, and could not be sustained, as notwithstanding such irregularity and miscarriage, the fact did not taint the whole proceeding so as to prevent the plaintiff recovering upon the other evidence which was sufficient to establish his case. (2)

By the procedure of the Courts in India the Courts are bound to proceed according to the facts alleged in the plaint and not to refuse to try issues of fact upon the merits on the ground of the legal effect of the facts alleged in the plaint. (3)

The Court may in its discretion direct the exclusion of witnesses from the Court room while the testimony of other witnesses is being given. When it appears essential for the elucidation of truth, the witnesses should be examined out of the hearing of each other, and an order for all the witnesses on both sides to withdraw, except the one under examination, should generally be made upon the motion of either party at any period of the trial. (4) If a witness remains in Court in contravention of the order to withdraw, it is a contempt for which he renders himself in England liable to fine and imprisonment. But the Judge has no right to reject his testimony on this ground. His disobedience ought, however, to be recorded and may materially lessen the value of his evidence. (5) In India even in the most true cases there is generally more or less concert between the witnesses on the same side. (6) It is also an useful practice to direct that witnesses shall be confronted. (8) In the aforementioned case (9) the plaintiff's Counsel called and examined a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, but he was not cross-examined by Counsel for the defendants. The latter for the defence proposed to recall him, as a matter of course, as a witness in chief. But the Judge refused to allow him to be recalled without leave of the Court, which, he observed, should have been asked for when the first examination was concluded.

The order, where there exist any provisions on the point, is regulated by the Procedure Codes, and in the absence of any such provision by the discretion of the Judge.

---

(1) Kassimohun Singh v. Collyesperoom Dutt, 8 W. R., 461 (1867).
(2) Ragh Ramnaraoo v. Ganagasoo Mudaly, 6 N. I. A., 262 (1865).
(3) Naunb Sudder v. Oooolkaroon Khan, 10 N. I. A., 540 (1866).
(4) Taylor, Ev., § 1400—1402, and cases there cited; Field, Ev., 53. It is usual not to exclude attorneys, vakils or members of the parties, nor the parties themselves since their presence is usually necessary to a proper management of their case. It is the practice of the High Court (and of the American Courts, Barr Jones, § 807), not to exclude an agent of the party when upon the statement of Counsel the presence of such agent from his familiarity with the facts is necessary for the proper management of the action of defence. The Supreme Court followed the Exchequer practice:
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 1101.
(7) Id., Field, Ev., 53. Although in practice the demand is seldom made, the reason of the rule would seem to require the exclusion of witnesses during the opening argument of Counsel, if requested: R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P., 297.
(8) Ibb., Field, Ev., 53. In the case of Ammeley v. Lord Anglesey, no less than four witnesses were for this purpose put in the box; see a (10).
(10) 8. 153, post.
ORDER OF EXAMINATION. [s. 135.]

before whom the cause is tried, it being from its nature susceptible of but few positive and stringent rules. (1) In the regular order of procedure the party having the affirmative ought to introduce all the evidence necessary to support the substance of the issue; then the party denying the affirmative allegations should produce his proof; and finally the proof, if any, in rebuttal is received. (2)

The order of examinations is laid down by section 138 of this Act. The rule with regard to the production of evidence in Civil cases as laid down by the Civil Procedure Code is as follows:—

On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit, or on any other day to which the hearing is adjourned, the party having the right to begin shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove. Explanation.— The plaintiff has the right to begin unless where the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff, and contends that either in point of law or on some additional facts alleged by the defendant, the plaintiff is not entitled to any part of the relief which he seeks in which case the defendant has the right to begin. (3) The other party shall then state his case and produce his evidence (if any). The party beginning is then entitled to reply. Where there are several issues, the burden of proving, some of which lies on the other party, the party beginning may, at his option, either produce his evidence on those issues or reserve it by way of answer to the evidence produced by the other party. In the latter case, the party beginning may produce evidence on those issues after the other party has produced all his evidence, and the other party may then reply specially on the evidence so produced by the party beginning; but the party beginning will then be entitled to reply generally on the whole case. (4)

Criminal proceedings being of a varying character, the Criminal Procedure Code lays down no such general rule as that reproduced above. Chapter XVII, however, of that Code deals with the procedure in the case of enquiries into cases triable by the Court of Sessions or High Court; and Chapters XX—XXIII deal with the procedure on the trial of summons-cases, warrant-cases, summary-trials, and trials before the High Court and Court of Session, respectively. Chapters XXXI, XXXII treat of the procedure on appeal, reference and revision.

The rules for examination are contained in sections 136—166, and are in general conformity with the English and American law upon the subject. The rules require but little explanation. Such elucidation as has been considered necessary is given in the Notes appended to these sections to which the reader is referred.

135. The order in which witnesses are produced and examined shall be regulated by the law and practice for the time being relating to civil and criminal procedure respectively, and, in the absence of any such law, by the discretion of the Court.

Taylor, Ev., §§ 1394, 1478; Burr Jones, Ev., § 797 et seq.; Greenleaf, Ev., § 431; Civ. Pr. Code, ss. 179—180; Cr. Pr. Code, Chs. XVIII, XX—XXIII, XXXI, XXXII, and cases and authorities cited in Introduction, ands.

(1) Greenl., Ev., § 421.
(2) v. note, pp. 534, et seq. The trial Judge is to determine what is evidence in rebuttal, and it lies within his discretion to receive or exclude such testimony, Marshall v. Davies, 78 N. Y., 414, 420 (Amer.); as to the nature of evidence in reply, see E. v. Hochst, 6 C. & P., 290; as to calling fresh evidence after close of case, see Miles v. Powell, 2 C. & P., 298; Wills v. Atkinson, 2 C. & P., 298, and as to rebutting evidence after close of case to impeach credit of witness, see Khadijah Khansam v. Abdal Kuresh, 17 C., 344 (1859).
(3) Civ. Pr. Code, s. 179.
JUDGE TO DECIDE ADMISSIBILITY.

COMMENTARY.

See the sections and chapters of the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes above cited and the Introduction, ante, dealing with the attendance of witnesses and production of documents, (1) and the order of production and examination of witnesses (2) in civil and criminal cases. In the undermentioned case (3) at the close of the examination-in-chief of the plaintiff's attorney, Counsel for the defendant asked that the cross-examination of the witness be deferred, until after the examination-in-chief of the plaintiff by his Counsel submitting that the word "examined" in this section included cross-examination and referring to section 138, and submitting that the plaintiff should have been first called and given his account of the transaction. The Court, however, stated that it was slow to interfere with the discretion of Counsel as to the order in which witnesses should be examined, and stated that it thought that in that case the ordinary practice should regulate the order of examination, and that the witness should be cross-examined at the conclusion of the examination-in-chief, which was done.

138. When either party proposes to give evidence of any fact, the Judge may ask the party proposing to give the evidence in what manner the alleged fact, if proved, would be relevant; and the Judge shall admit the evidence if he thinks that the fact, if proved, would be relevant, and not otherwise.

If the fact proposed to be proved is one of which evidence is admissible only upon proof of some other fact, such last-mentioned fact must be proved before evidence is given of the fact first mentioned, unless the party undertakes to give proof of such fact and the Court is satisfied with such undertaking.

If the relevancy of one alleged fact depends upon another alleged fact being first proved, the Judge may, in his discretion, either permit evidence of the first fact to be given before the second fact is proved, or require evidence to be given of the second fact before evidence is given of the first fact.

Illustrations.

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement about a relevant fact by a person alleged to be dead, which statement is relevant under section 32.

The fact that the person is dead must be proved by the person proposing to prove the statement, before evidence is given of the statement.

(b) It is proposed to prove, by a copy, the contents of a document said to be lost.

The fact that the original is lost must be proved by the person proposing to produce the copy, before the copy is produced.

(c) A is accused of receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen.

It is proposed to prove that he denied the possession of the property.

The relevancy of the denial depends on the identity of the property. The Court may in its discretion, either require the property to be identified before the denial of the possession is proved, or permit the denial of the possession to be proved before the property is identified.

(1) Ante, pp. 720—728.
(2) Ante, pp. 725, 728.
(d) It is proposed to prove a fact (A) which is said to have been the cause or effect of a fact in issue. There are several intermediate facts (B, C and D), which must be shown to exist before the fact (A) can be regarded as the cause or effect of the fact in issue. The Court may either permit A to be proved before B, C or D is proved, or may require proof of B, C and D before permitting proof of A.

Principle.—The necessity of confining the proof to those facts, which being relevant, can alone be given in evidence under the provisions of this Act. The ground of the last clause is general convenience, v. post.

s. 3 (“Evidences.”)
s. 3 (“Fact.”)
s. 3 (“Proved.”)
s. 3 (“Relevant.”)
s. 3 (“Court.”)
s. 104 (Burden of proving fact to be proved to make evidence admissible.)
Greenleaf, Ev., § 51 a; Burr Jones, Ev., §§ 812, 813; Norton, Ev., 319.

COMMENTARY.

In order that the proof may be confined to relevant facts and may not stray beyond the proper limits of the issue at trial, the Judge is empowered to ask in what manner the evidence tendered is relevant. The Judge must then decide as to its admissibility. In cases tried by jury it is the duty of the Judge to decide all questions of admissibility; and in his discretion to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties. (1) A Civil Court also should, irrespective of objections made by the parties compel observance of the provisions of this Act. (2) In the case of documents the Court must decide the validity of any objection there may be to their production or admissibility. (3) An erroneous omission to object to that which is not evidence does not make it admissible. (4) The Court must, at the time when the evidence is tendered, decide whether or not it is legally admissible. Questions as to the admissibility of evidence, oral or documentary, should be decided as they arise and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given. (5)

With the second clause read section 104, ante, which enacts that the burden of proving any fact necessary to be proved in order to enable any person to give evidence of any other fact is on the person who wishes to give such evidence. In other words no person shall be allowed to give evidence before he has shown that he is in a legal position to do so. It often (to take an example) happens that an agent to carry a message and bring back an answer, or to do some other act, is put into the box before his agency or authority is proved. Thereupon an objection is taken by the opposing Counsel that the evidence is not receivable because the agency or authority is not proved. An undertaking is usually then given that evidence to prove the agency will be forthcoming at a later period, whereupon the case proceeds. If the proof of agency should break down the whole of the alleged agent’s evidence is expunged from the Judge’s notes. It would often be highly inconvenient to interrupt the witness in his story, and call another witness in the middle of his examination, to prove agency. It is to meet such a state of things that this clause is provided. (6)

Subject to the general rule that each party should, in his turn, produce all the testimony tending to support his claim or defence, the order of time for the introduction of evidence to support the different parts of an action or defence should be generally left to the discretion of the party or his Counsel. These

(2) v. ante, p. 30.
(3) S. 163, post.
(5) Jada Rai v. Bhukataram Nundy, 17 C., 173 (1889); Gourachandra Sircar v. Ram Narain Choudhury, 9 W. P., 587 (1866), Ram Karan v. Mangal Sen, 1 All. L. J., 254 n. (1904), and documents which are not admissible should be returned when they are presented id., v. ante, p. 30. cannot be expected to show ability to establish the entire claim or defence in advance, and a reasonable latitude must be allowed as to the order in which the details of evidence shall be brought forward. When evidence is offered which proves or tends to prove any relevant fact, it is to be presumed that this will be followed by such other proof as is necessary to establish the proper connection. Hence it is of no consequence in what order the evidence is introduced, so far as its ultimate legitimacy is concerned, provided in its relation to the other evidence in the case, it is at the end pertinent to the issue. (1) It has often been declared that the relevancy of testimony need not always appear at the time when it is offered, since it is usual course to receive at any proper and convenient stage of the trial in the discretion of the Judge, any evidence which the Counsel shows will be rendered material by other evidence which he undertakes to produce. If it is not subsequently thus connected with the issue it is to be laid out of the case. (2) But before Counsel can claim the indulgence of the Court in this manner to introduce evidence, otherwise presumably incompetent, he should state what he expects to prove, or in some other way satisfy the Court that the evidence will be made competent. If Counsel fail to make the testimony relevant by other evidence it should be withdrawn from the consideration of the Court. Having, however, regard to the influence of the improper testimony upon the minds of the jury, it is clear that the Court should exercise great caution, in criminal cases, in admitting testimony of doubtful competency upon the promise of Counsel to show its materiality by subsequent proof. (3) The section accordingly gives the Court a wide discretion in this matter. It should be added that it is extremely desirable that, where possible, proofs should be offered in a connected sequence whether it be chronological or logical for the greater convenience of the Court and facility of apprehension.

A Judge who has suggested that further evidence need not be given should not then decide against the party on the point on which such suggestion was made when the party has acted on such suggestion without warning him and giving him an opportunity of calling witnesses whom he had been ready to adduce and whom he had refrained from calling at the suggestion of the Judge. (4)

137. The examination of a witness by the party who calls him shall be called his examination-in-chief.

The examination of a witness by the adverse party shall be called his cross-examination.

The examination of a witness, subsequent to the cross-examination by the party who called him, shall be called his re-examination.

138. Witnesses shall be first examined-in-chief then (if the adverse party so desires) cross-examined, then (if the party calling him so desires) re-examined.

The examination and cross-examination must relate to relevant facts, but the cross-examination need not be confined to the facts to which the witness testified on his examination-in-chief.

(2) Greaseaf, Ev., § 51 a. (5) Barr Jones, Ev., § 813.
The re-examination shall be directed to the explanation of matter referred to in cross-examination; and if new matter is, by permission of the Court, introduced in re-examination, the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter.

COMMENTARY.

The whole subject of the word "viva voce" examination of witnesses in open Court is confined of necessity to a very great extent to the sound judicial discretion of the Judge presiding at the trial; and but few positive and unbending rules have been laid down with regard to it. The control of the Court here referred to is that which it possesses over the manner and extent of an examination of a witness. The admissibility of testimony is another question. The time and manner, however, of examining a witness is in the discretion of the Judge before whom the trial is had. This discretion extends to determine the length of time and the extent to which the witness may be examined. So the Judge may interfere and protect the witness against irrelevant inquiries and overrule a question repeated after being several times substantially answered, and allow the witness to finish a proper answer to a proper question before permitting another to be put. The Judge has also an unlimited right in his discretion to interrogate the witness himself both in civil and criminal cases, even to the extent of asking leading questions.(1) But a Judge should not ordinarily interpose after the examination-in-chief has been finished, and question the witnesses on the points to which the cross-examination will properly be directed, as to do so may render their subsequent cross-examination ineffectual. It is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses, unless the pleaders on either side have omitted to put some material question or questions; and the Court should, as a general rule, leave the witnesses to the pleaders to deal with as laid down in section 138 of this Act.(2) The necessity for the Court's interposition was of course, formerly greater than at the present time though even now cases occur to which the following remarks of Sir Barnes Peacock are applicable. The Chief Justice, after referring to the observations of the Privy Council upon the misfortune of Hindu litigants in that their cases often fall in the earlier stages of litigation into the hands of incompetent advisers who by falsehood, suppression of abandonment of part of a case create impediments to its success, said "And I may add that it is another great misfortune of litigants in the mofussil in this country that the witnesses who are called to prove the facts of the case are not properly examined through the incompetency of those who have the management of the suits, and that the Judges do not make up for that incompetency by themselves examining the witnesses or exercising those powers for obtaining the truth with which they have been entrusted by the law of procedure."(3) Though where a witness is called by the parties and is questioned by the Court no cross-examination upon the answer given in reply is allowed without the leave of the Court;(4) yet if the witness be called by the Court he may be cross-examined in the same manner as if he had been produced by the adverse party.(5)

(1) Stewart Rapajee's Law of Witnesses, §§ 229, 234; 1 Greenleaf, Ev., § 431; Taylor, Ev., § 1390; Barlow v. Corbet, Ryan & Moody, 157; as to the Judge's questions, see s. 185, post.

(2) Noor Dukh v. R., 6 C., 279 (1880); s. c. 7 C. L. R., 335. "It is obvious that those privileges of the Court should be so exercised as not to prejudice the rights of the parties or to unduly interfere with the presentation of the cause of action of defence"—Burr Jones, Ev., § 814.

(3) Road Uoty v. Munderj Beebee, 10 W. K., 290 (1868).

(4) S. 185, post; R. v. Sakharam Mulamari.

(5) Numini Chavan v. Sarode Sundari, 3 B. L. R. A. C., 143, 148 (1869); E. v. Orish Chander, 5 C.
The order of examination is as follows:—When a witness has been sworn or affirmed he is first examined by the party calling him to testify; this is called the direct examination or examination-in-chief. When the direct examination is finished, the adverse party is at liberty to cross-examine; after which the party calling the witness may re-examine him. This usually closes the examination of the witness, though in many cases the adverse party is permitted to re-cross-examine at the close of the re-examination; but this is no more than a further cross-examination, permitted either because new matter is brought out in the re-examination, or because the Judge in his discretion sees proper, under the circumstances, to allow it. The party beginning then calls his next witness, who is examined in like manner. When all the witnesses of the party beginning have been thus examined, his case is closed. His opponent then opens his case and calls his witnesses, who are examined in the same way, first by himself then by his opponent, and then re-examined if necessary by himself. The close of his case is ordinarily followed by his summing up of the evidence and then be the speech in reply of the party who began. Sometimes, however, the latter at the close of his opponent’s evidence claims to adduce further evidence in reply to that which has been given on the other side. As to this rebutting evidence v. post. The object of the examination-in-chief is to lay before the Court and jury the whole of the information of the witness that is relevant and material; that of the cross-examination is to search and sift, to correct and supply omissions; that of the re-examination, to explain, to rectify, and put in order.(1)

The privilege to examine witnesses has also been extended to jurors and assessors.(2) A witness may not foist into his answer in any examination statements not in answer to questions put to him. This is called “volunteering evidence,” and the pleader of the opposite party should be on his guard to check its introduction by objection.(3) The trial Judge should upon motion strike out answers that are not responsive to the questions asked, that is, those answers that state facts not called for by the questions, or those which express an opinion as to the matter in question, unless the question calls for an opinion as in the case of experts. But where only a part of the answer is not responsive to the question, only that part will be stricken out which is objectionable for not being responsive.(4)

As to objections by the Court to the admissibility of particular questions v. ante, pp. 29, 30, and as to objections by parties, pp. 31-34 ante. As respects the form of objections they should be specific rather than general, that is, should show the ground or grounds of objection. Objections to questions should be made at the time they are put, or they will generally be regarded as waived.(5) A distinction, however, must be drawn between the effect of the admission without objection of wholly irrelevant evidence and relevant evidence presented in an improper form. Only in the latter case will want of objection cure the defect. For an erroneous omission to object to that which is not relevant at all will not render it relevant.(6) The failure to object to one improper question to which an unsatisfactory answer was given does not preclude objection to a substantial reiteration of the same question. Special objection may be taken to an answer as well as to a question. When several questions pertaining to the same point are asked in immediate succession, and an objection to the first one, which is merely preliminary to the others is improperly overruled, the objection will not be limited to the first question, but will be deemed to cover the others which sprang naturally from it. (1)

When evidence is rejected at the trial, the party proposing it should formally tender it to the Judge and request him to make a note of that fact. (2)
The moment a witness commences giving evidence which is inadmissible he should be stopped by the Court. (3)

The witness must be competent. If there be any doubt upon this point the modern practice is to interrogate the witness before swearing or affirming him or to elicit the facts upon the examination-in-chief, when, if his incompetency appears, he will be rejected. (4)

As to evidence in rebuttal see the Civil Procedure Code, section 180, and ante, p. 525. In addition to the case there mentioned the plaintiff is also generally entitled to give evidence in reply even though all the issues are upon himself, when the case made against him is one of which he has had no notice on the pleadings; (5) and in any case where a defendant does not lay a foundation for his own affirmative case by such a cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses as will give him fair notice of the points as to which they are going to be contradicted, the plaintiff will generally be allowed to give evidence in reply. (6)

As the demeanour of the witness while under examination is a most important test of his credibility, the Courts are empowered by the Codes to record their remarks relative thereto. (7)

Leading Counsel may interpose and take the examination out of a junior's hands. (8)

This is the first examination after the witness has been sworn or affirmed. (9)
It is the province of the party by whom the witness is called to examine him in chief for the purpose of eliciting from the witness all the material facts within his knowledge which tend to prove such a party's case.

Few general rules can be laid down as to this topic inasmuch as the propriety of the questions put by a party to his own witness in proof of his case must in the nature of things depend on a very great extent upon the particular circumstances to be proved. The object of the examination is to elicit the truth, to get at the facts, or such of them as bear upon the issue in favour of the party calling the witness. The issue must be kept in mind by the questioner, and only material and relevant facts, not those which are collateral and impertinent, may be inquired about. But it is not necessary that every question put to a witness shall be so broad and comprehensive that the answer shall be evidence of some issue in the case. If all the answers to a series of questions upon the same general subject, taken together, are competent, each is competent, and a question tending to elicit such an answer should be allowed. Each question should call for a fact and not a conclusion of law and should not embrace the whole merits of the case. It is no objection to a question that it assumes facts which are undisputed, but a question based upon the supposition of facts not proved is improper. (10) So also a compound question, one part being admissiable, and the remainder inadmissible, may be rightfully excluded as a whole-

(1) Stewart Rapalje's op. cit., § 244; see generally Taylor, Ev., §§ 1881—1882 B.
(2) Taylor, Ev., § 1882 A.
(3) H. v. Pittambar Sirkar, 7 W. R., Cr., 25
(1867); v. ante, p. 685 note 3, and cases there cited.
(4) v. ante, p. 685. The preliminary examination as to competency is technically called examination on the voir dire; see Taylor, Ev., § 1393;
Wigmore, Ev., § 486; see s. 118 ante; Stewart
Rapalje's op. cit., 222; Warner's Law of Evidence, 58—61.
(6) Bigby v. Dickinson, 4 Ch. D., 24; cf. Briggs
v. Aynsworth, 2 M. & R., 168; see Wills, Ev., 230.
(7) Crv. Pr. Code, s. 188; Criminal Procedure
Code, s. 363.
(8) Doc v. Ros, 2 Camp., 290.
(9) S. 138; as to oaths and affirmation, v.
Appendix.
(10) See notes to s. 138, post.
But Counsel are often allowed to ask apparently irrelevant and consequently inadmissible questions upon their promise to follow them up at the proper time by proof of other facts, which, if true, would make the question put legitimately operative. (1) The party examining a witness-in-chief is bound at his peril to ask all material questions in the first instance, and if he fail to do this, it cannot be done in reply. No new question can be put in reply unconnected with the subject of the cross-examination and which does not tend to explain it. If a question as to any material fact has been omitted upon the examination-in-chief, the usual course is to suggest the question to the Court, which will exercise its discretion in putting it to the witness. (2)

On the examination-in-chief a witness as a general rule can only give evidence of facts (3) within his own knowledge and recollection. In some cases hearsay and opinions are relevant. But in all cases the facts must be relevant, (4) and in all cases the answer must be upon a point of fact as opposed to a point of law. Ordinarily a witness cannot be asked as to a conclusion of law. Sometimes this has been so far pressed as to involve the assumption that a witness cannot be asked as to conclusions of fact. The error of such a contention consists in this that there are few statements of fact which are not conclusions of fact. (5) The conclusions of a witness as to the motives of other persons are inadmissible, motives being eminently inferences from conduct. (6) Yet, when a party is examined as to his own conduct, he may be asked as to his own intention or motive, his testimony to such intention or motive being based not on inference but on consciousness. But the right of a party to testify to his intent in drawing a contract or other document is limited by the rule that a party cannot be admitted to prove his intent so as to vary the terms of a document by which he is bound. (7)

As to opinion evidence and the distinction between "matters of fact" and "matter of opinion" see ante, pp. 294-296, and as to hearsay, p. 361, ante.

In the case of documents the witness may testify to their existence and identity, but not, unless secondary evidence be admissible, to their contents; (8) and he may explain but may not in general contradict or vary their terms. (9)

(1) Stewart Raplace’s op. cit., § 238 (as to the order of proof, v. 136, pp. 277-279 ante). “In direct examination, although mediority is more easily attainable, it may be a question whether the highest degree of excellence is not even still more rare” (i.e., than in cross-examination). “For it requires mental powers of no inferior order so to interrogate each witness whether learned or unlearned, intelligent, or dull, matter-of-fact or imaginative, single-minded or designing, as to bring his story before the tribunal in the most natural, comprehensible and effective form.” Best, Ev., § 683.

(2) Stewart Raplace’s op. cit., § 233.

(3) v. a. 3, ante, pp. 9-11.

(4) S. 138; for meaning of “relevant,” v. a. 3, ante, p. 11; as to belief and opinion, see Taylor Ev., § 1414, ef seq.; v. ante, pp. 293-312.

(5) Wharton, Ev., §§ 508, 482; further, ordinarily extrinsic evidence of intent is inadmissible in the case of the interpretation of documents, Bess Maharani v. Collector of Elumal, 17 A., 138, 209 (1894); v. ante, introd. to Ch. VI except in certain cases of ambiguity v. pp. 503-515 ante; Wharton, Ev., § 955. As to proof of intention and motive, v. ante a. 14 and cases there cited, and Stewart Raplace’s op. cit., 391, 392. A common instance of the admissibility of evidence of mental condition exists when a party is asked whether in entering into a contract on which the action is based, he relied upon the representations of the other party.

(6) v. ante, ss. 91, 90, 65, and notes to those sections; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 442 as to the interposition of questions for the purpose of ascertaining whether the matter spoken to was contained in a document, see a. 144, post.

(7) v. ante, introd. to Ch. VI and ss. 92, 99.
A witness may give the substance of conversations or writings, but he will not be permitted to say what is the impression left of him by a conversation unless he swears to such impressions as recollections and not inferences. As it is enough if a witness swears to events and objects according to the best of his recollection and belief(1). Further, in order to save time, a witness will be permitted to state the result of numerous or voluminous documents, subject to cross-examination as to particulars.(2) So he may state whether a party’s books showed his insolvency or the reverse; (3) or in what manner bills have been invariably drawn; (4) but he will not be allowed to give his impressions derived from unproduced documents, for these are matters of inference or construction which belong to the tribunal; (5) and production of the books themselves should be given if required.(6)

The witness will, while under examination, be permitted to refresh his memory by reference to documents.(7) Leading questions may not ordinarily be put in examination-in-chief.(8) In cases where the witness proves to be hostile he may be cross-examined by the party calling him.(9) Questions tending to corroborate evidence of a relevant fact are admissible;(10) and former statements of a witness may be proved to corroborate later testimony as to the same fact.(11) Whenever any statement relevant under sections 32, 33, ante is proved, all matters may be proved to corroborate it, or to confirm the credit of the person by whom it was made which might have been proved if that person had been called as a witness.(12) Where the prosecution declined to call in the Court of Session a witness for the Crown who had been examined in the Magistrate’s Court and such witness was therefore placed in the witness-box by Counsel for the defence, it was held that Counsel for the defence was not entitled to commence his examination of the witness by questioning him as to what he had doposed in the Magistrate’s Court. Questions as to his previous deposition were under the circumstances only admissible by way of cross-examination with the permission of the Court, if the witness proved himself a hostile witness.(13)

After the party calling a witness has concluded the examination-in-chief the opposite party has a right to cross-examine the witness as a matter of course. Cross-examination if properly conducted is one of the most useful and efficacious means of discovering the truth. Though certain rules have been laid down for the guidance of advocates in this respect(14) the faculty of interrogating

---

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 1415. Wharton, Ev., §§ 514, 618. If a witness called to prove the handwriting of a paper say that he believes it to be of the handwriting of the defendants from its contents and from other circumstances, he may be asked what those circumstances are; R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P., 297.

(2) S. 65, Cl. (g), ante, pp. Rowe v. Breston, 3 M. & R., 212; Roberta v. Deyos, Pex, N. P. C., 83.

(3) Mayor v. Sfton, 2 Stark, R., 274.

(7) Sa. 150—161, post.

(8) Sa. 141, 142, post.

(9) S. 154, post.

(10) S. 156, post.

(11) S. 157, post.

(12) S. 158, post.

(14) See Best, Ev., §§ 649—663 (in the last paragraph citing D. P. Brown’s ‘Golden Rules,’ pp. 814, 815) § 21 ‘Examination of witnesses; Hints for conducting a trial,’ Des Moines, Iowa, 1877; Harris’ Hints on Advocacy; Quintilian Inst. Orat., Bentham’s Judicial Evidence: Hints to witnesses in Courts of Justice by a barrister (Baron Field), London 1815; Stark, Ev., § 1428; Alinson’s Practice of the Criminal Law of Scotland, 546, 547; Evans on cross-examination in his Appendix to Pothier’s ‘Obligations,’ No. 16, Vol. II, pp. 233, 234; Field, Ev., 630, 631; 33—40 (tests of credibility and concert): 44—50, 50—54 (demeanour and other indications of truth or falsehood); 55—73 (ability, memory, descriptive powers); Stewart Rapalje’s op. cit., § 245 et seq.; Whately’s ‘Rhetoric’ and ‘Historic Doubts;’ Campbell’s Rhetoric; Glassford’s Principles of Evidence, Edinburgh, 1830; see observations of Norman, J., in Suryed Ali v. Kashinath Das, 6 W. R., 181; R. v. Rawahendra Gowind, 19 B., 789 (1890).
witnesses with effect is mainly the result either of natural acuteness or of long forensic practice. (1) It will, however, prove useful to recall here Mr. Norton’s observation (Law of Evidence, p. 320) that cross-examination is to be warily approached and the way carefully felt; that unless there is some very good ground for believing that the witness can be broken down it is rarely good policy to submit him to a severe cross-examination. Sometimes consequently a cross-examination is little more than affectation in order that the examiner may not seem to let the witness go without question, as if he were totally impregnable, and a few questions are asked to shake his credit or show the weakness of his memory. “The object and scope of cross-examination is twofold,—to weaken, qualify or destroy the case of the opponent; and to establish the party’s own case by means of his opponents’ witnesses. With this view the witness may be asked not only as to facts in issue or directly relevant thereto, but all questions (a) tending to test his means of knowledge, opportunities of observation, reasons for recollection and belief, and powers of memory, perception and judgment, or (b) tending to expose the errors, omissions, contradictions and improbabilities in his testimony; or (c) tending to impeach his credit by attacking his character, antecedents, associations and mode of life; (2) and in particular by eliciting (i) that he has made previous statements inconsistent with his present testimony; or (ii) that he is biased or partial in relation to the parties in the cause; (3) or (iii) that he has been convicted (4) of any criminal offence.” (5)

The cross-examination must as much as the examination-in-chief relate to relevant facts. (6) Therefore hearsay is always inadmissible as substantive evidence whether the evidence be elicited in examination-in-chief or cross-examination. (7) In so far however as the credibility of a witness is always in issue, (8) ‘relevancy’ is a term of a wider scope in cross-examination than in examination-in-chief embracing all those questions to credit which are the subject-matter of sections 146—153, post. Moreover, the cross-examination need not be confined to the facts to which the witness testified in his examination-in-chief. (9) This is in accordance with the English practice by which the cross-examination is not limited to the matters upon which the witness has already been examined-in-chief, but extends to the whole case, and therefore, if a plaintiff calls a witness to prove a single, even the simplest, fact connected with the case, the defendant is at liberty to cross-examine him on every issue, and by putting leading questions to establish, if he can, his entire defence. (10) In America, however, on the other hand, the rule which prevails in most of the States is quite different, and the cross-examination can only relate to facts and circumstances connected with the matter stated in the direct examination of the witness. If a party wishes to examine a witness as to other matters, he must do so by making the witness his own. (11)

A witness may be cross-examined as to all facts relevant to the issue and his answers thereon may be contradicted. He may also be cross-examined on all matters which affect his credit, but his answers thereon cannot, except in

---

(1) Best, Ev., §§ 650, 663.
(2) See n. 116, post.
(3) See n. 155 (2) and (3), which deal with the impeachment of the credit of the witness by calling other persons to testify to the facts therein mentioned if he denies the same on cross-examination. The impeachment of credit in the text refers to impeachment by cross-examination of the witness himself and not by means of independent testimony. As to the partiality of the witness, see n. 153, Exception (2).
(4) See n. 155, Exception (1).
(6) S. 138, see Observations in Willa, Ev., 226.
(7) Anr., p. 364.
(8) Best, Ev., § 263.
(9) S. 138, the same rule prevailed prior to this Act. R. v. Ishan Dutt, 6 B. L. R., App., 88 (1871); v. s. v., 13 W. R., Cr., 34.
(11) Burr Jones, Ev., § 1803.
two cases, be contradicted. (1) A witness cannot, however, be cross-examined as to any collateral independent fact irrelevant to the matter in issue, for the purpose of contradicting him, if his answer be one way, by another witness, in order to discredit the whole of his testimony. (2) So where, as in the case last cited, defendant's Counsel cross-examined a witness as to the nature of a contract made by him with Mr. S. (such contract not being the matter in suit nor Mr. S. a party thereto) intending if the witness gave an affirmative answer to his question to draw from thence a conclusion that he had made the same kind of contract with the defendant (which was suggested to be the fact), or if witness answered in the negative to call Mr. S, and then to prove the contrary and thereby destroy the witness's credit, it was held that the question could not be put.

Whether the right to cross-examine survives if the cross-examiner afterwards calls his opponent's witness to prove his own case, seems in England doubtful. But the better opinion is that it does not, and that the witness cannot be asked leading questions on his second examination, while he may afterwards be cross-examined by the party who originally called him. (3) This last opinion appears to have been adopted by this Act. The party who calls a witness—apparently at any stage of the case—examines him in chief. Such examination would naturally be directed to the support of his own case, upon which the adverse party would then have a right to cross-examine. If the adverse party again called the same witness, he could clearly only examine him in chief. (4)

Leading questions may be put in cross-examination. (5) As to evidence regarding matters in writing, (6) cross-examination as to previous statements in writing, (7) and the questions which generally may be put in cross-examination, (8) see the sections cited below. It is the right of every litigant, unless he waives it, to have the opportunity of cross-examining witnesses whose testimony is to be used against him, and even when circumstances require, to adduce evidence on his own behalf to meet the evidence which such cross-examination may have brought forward. He is also entitled himself to examine the witnesses who can give evidence in support of his case in order that he may bring out the necessary information as fully as he thinks possible, and in the form which he considers most favourable to himself. It follows that evidence given when the party never had the opportunity either to cross-examine, as the case may be, or to rebut by fresh evidence, is not legally admissible as evidence for or against him, unless he consents that it should be so used. (9) When a case decided ex parte in the absence of the defendant who had thus no opportunity of cross-examining the plaintiff's witnesses was re-admitted to the file and to a hearing; it was held, that the Court of first instance ought to have recalled the plaintiff's witnesses and allowed the defendant an opportunity of cross-examining them; and this not having been done, that their previous depositions could not be treated as evidence. (10) Where the witness dies or falls ill before cross-examination his evidence will be admissible though its weight may be slight. (11) When a witness has been intentionally called and sworn by either party, the opposite party has a right, if the examination-in-chief is waived or if the Counsel changes his mind and asks no questions, to cross-examine him. (12)

(1) S. 183, post.
(2) Spenneley v. De Willeto, 7 East., 109: in other words, no such question can be put for the mere purpose of impeaching the witness's credit by contradicting him; Taylor, Ev., § 1430.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1433.
(4) Field, Ev., 630.
(5) S. 143.
(6) S. 144.
(7) S. 145.
(8) S. 146—153.
(11) Taylor, Ev., § 1469; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 450 and cases there cited.
(12) R. v. Brooke, 2 Stark., R., 472; Phillips
Where a witness called by one of the parties is a competent witness, the opposite party has a right to cross-examine him, though the party calling him has declined to ask a single question.(1)

Examination of a witness by mistake does not give the other side a right to cross-examine. So where the plaintiff’s Counsel called “Captain S” and Captain Hugh S answered and was sworn, and the plaintiff’s Counsel after asking him a few questions ascertained that it was Captain Francis S whom they meant to examine, this was held not to give the other side a right to cross-examine Captain Hugh S, as he was only examined by mistake.(2) A witness called merely to produce a document under a subpoena duces tecum, need not be sworn if the document either requires no proof, or is to be proved by other means; and if not sworn he cannot be cross-examined.(3) Witnesses to character may be cross-examined.(4) An accused person has the right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution after their examination at the judicial enquiry before the Magistrate previous to commitment.(5) As a rule, the proper and convenient time for the purpose of cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution is at the commencement of the accused person’s defence: but it is in the discretion of the Criminal Court to allow the accused to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution at any period of defence, when the Court thinks that such a step is necessary for the purposes of justice.(6) After a charge has been drawn up the accused is entitled to have the witnesses for the prosecution recalled for the purpose of cross-examination. The fact that there has been already some cross-examination before the charge has been drawn up does not affect the privilege. It is only after the accused has entered upon his defence that the Magistrate is given a discretion to refuse such an application on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice.(7) As to cross-examination, by co-accused and co-defendants, v. post, p. 743.

A witness ought to be allowed on cross-examination to qualify or correct any statement which he has made in his examination-in-chief.(8) A witness is not always compellable to answer questions put to him in cross-examination; (9) and though he may be contradicted on all matters directly relevant to the issue he cannot [except in the cases mentioned in section 153, post(10)] be so contradicted on matters relevant merely as affecting his credit. A witness’s credit may be impeached either by cross-examination or by calling independent testimony to prove the facts mentioned in section 155, post.(12) Cross-examination is notice to the opposite party of the line of defence adopted and will therefore in some cases prevent evidence being given in reply.(11) The decisions on the question whether or not a party is entitled to

---

(1) C. W. G. 1 Esp., 257: I. T., March 15 (1890), per Stephen, J.; as to liability to cross-examination where an affidavit has been filed and withdrawn: see Re Quarts Hill Co., Ex parte Young, 21 Ch. D., 64.

(2) R. v. Takan Dunn, 15 W. R., Cr., 34 (1871).

(4) S. 139, post. It has been held in England that a witness whose examination has been stopped by the Judge before any material question has been put is not liable to cross-examination: Cressey v. Carr, 7 C. & P., 84.

(5) S. 140, post.

(6) R. v. Sagal Samba, 21 C., 643 (1883).

(8) Zamunia v. Ram Tashai, 27 C., 370 (1900).

(10) Ss. 147, 148, post.

(11) See s. 153, post, and see also s. 155, cl. (3).

(12) In this Act the term “impeaching credit” is confined to the latter of these modes. The English and American writers often use the term in a wider sense. It is obvious that a witness’s character may often be successfully impeached.
see a document, which has been shown to one of his witnesses while under cross-examination by his opponent, are somewhat conflicting. On the whole, however, the practice seems to be that if the cross-examining Counsel, after putting a paper into the hands of a witness, merely asks him some question as to its general nature or identity, his adversary will have no right to see the document; but that if the paper be used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness, or if any questions be put respecting its contents, or as to the handwriting in which it is written, a sight of it may then be demanded by the opposite Counsel. (2)

Cross-examination may be, and in this country, not unfrequently inordinately long. (3) Where the Court is satisfied that the cross-examination of any witness on commission is being unnecessarily prolonged, it will order such cross-examination to be concluded within a certain time. (4)

As to this Professor Wigmore remarks:—

"An intimidating manner in putting questions may so coerce or disconcert the witness that his answers do not represent his actual knowledge on the subject. So also questions which in form or subject cause shame or anger in the witness may unfairly lead him to such demeanour and utterance that the impression produced by his statements does not do justice to his real testimonial value. These are two of the notorious abuses of cross-examination, and always have been, both in the early period when it was still chiefly used by Judges only, and also since the time of its mature elaboration, more than a century ago, as the greatest weapon of truth ever forged. In two noted passages of fiction its inveterate abuse has been satirized." (Dickens, The Pickwick Club, Ch. XXIV: Anthony Trollope "The Three Clerks" Ch. XL).

"The remedy for such an abuse is in the hands of the judges. The disgrace of these occurrences is even more theirs than that of the offending Counsel; for the former have not the temptation of partisanship to sway them, and their duty to interfere is easier to fulfil than the counsel's duty to refrain. The slack sense of duty thus so often exhibited becomes the more blamable in contrast with the scrupulous sentimentality which will be exhibited in insisting on the tender quiddities of the law that favor guilty persons,—such as the rules for confessions and the privilege against self-crimination. For the probably guilty, when brought to book, there is often an abundance of protection, while for the unimplicated and innocent witness, coming to serve justice and truth, there is scanty assistance. The sport is of more interest than the victim. Such Judges, as well as Counsel, were justly pilloried by the great novelist (Dickens), and his pen expressed only the widespread feeling of dread and disgust among the laity for the abuses of the witness-box. Those abuses, it is true, are, as a whole, probably less to-day than they formerly were; but they are in many places still not uncommon. They are too frequent when they occur at all. The just denunciations of high-minded Judges have sometimes stigmatized these practices as they deserve; (5) and there can be no doubt that the law sanctions in cross-examination without recourse to independent testimony under the provisions of s. 155.

(1) Wharton v. Learie, 1 C. & P., 529; v. ante, pp. 723, 724.

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 1452, and cases there cited; where the document is used to refresh memory, see s. 161, post. The right should be exercised before or at the moment the witness uses the document: In re Jhobbo Mahon, 8 C., 739, 744 (1882).

(5) Mr. Baron Alderson once remarked to a Counsel of this type: 'Mr.— you seem to think that the art of cross-examination is to examine conversely' (Sergeant Ballantine's Experiences, 106).
the power and establishes the duty of the trial judge to use a proper discretion to prevent and rebuke them." (1) Mr. W. D. Evans, in his Notes on the French Jurist Pothier, says:—

"The abuses to which this procedure is liable are the subject of very frequent complaint, but it would be absolutely impossible, by any, but general rules, to apply a preventive to these abuses without destroying the liberty upon which the benefits above adverted to essentially depend; and all that can be effected by the interposition of the Court is a discouragement of any virulence towards the witnesses which is not justified by the nature of the cause, and a sedulous attention to remove from the minds of the jury the impressions which are rather to be imputed to the vehemence of the advocate than to the prevarication of the witness. Whatever can elicit the actual dispositions of the witness with respect to the event,—whatever can detect the operation of a concerted plan of testimony, or bring into light the incidental facts and circumstances that the witness may be supposed to have suppressed,—in short, whatever may be expected fairly to promote the real manifestation of the merits of the cause, is not only justifiable but meritorious. But I conceive that a client has no right to expect from his Counsel an endeavour to assist his cause, or what is a more frequent object, to gratify his passions, by unmerited abuse, by embarrassing or intimidating witnesses of whose veracity he has no real suspicion, or by conveying an impression of discredit which he does not actually feel; and that where such expectations are intimated, there is an imperious duty upon the advocate, who, while the protector of private right, is also the minister of public justice, which requires them to be repelled. Considering the subject merely as a matter of discretion, the adoption of an unfair conduct in cross-examination has often an effect repugnant to the interests which it professes to promote.... But, however, unfavourable an injudicious asperity of cross-examination may be to the advancement of a cause, it, for the most part, is congenial to the wishes of the party; the neglect of it is regarded as an indifference to his interests and a dereliction of duty; and the practice of it is one of the surest harbingers of professional success." (2)

On the same point Bentham remarks:—

"Under the name of brow-beating (a mode of oppression of which witnesses in the station of respondents are the more immediate objects) a practice is designated which has been the subject of a complaint too general to be likely to be altogether groundless. Oppression in this form has a particular propensity to alight upon those witnesses who have been called upon that side of the cause (whichever it may be) that has the right on its side; because the more clearly a side is in the right, the less need has it for any such assistance as it is in the nature of any such dishonest arts to administer to it.... Brow-beating is that sort of offence which never can be committed by any advocate who has not the Judge for his accomplice.... Rule 1. Every expression of reproach, as if for established mendacity: every such manifestation, however expressed—by language, gesture, countenance, tone of voice (especially at the outset of the examination)—ought to be abstained from by the examining advocate. If the tendency of such style of address were to promote the extraction of material truth, at the same time that the action of it could not be supplied to equal effect by any other plan of examination,—the vexation thus produced (how sharpsoever not being of any considerable duration, the liberty might be allowed,

(1) Wigmore, Ev., § 781, referring also to "Cross-examination—A Socratic Dialogue" by E. Manson (8 Law Quart. Rev. 190), and Smollett's letter of rebuke to a Counsel who had wantonly abused him. (Foss' Memories of Westminster Hall I, 235).

(2) W. D. Evan's in his Notes to Pothier II. 229 (1806), as regards, however, the last observation the date of it is to be observed, and it has not the same truth at the present day.
with preponderant advantage for the furtherance of justice. But, on a close investigation, no advantage, but rather a disadvantage, even in respect of furtherance of justice, seems to be the natural result of an assumption of this kind . . . . By reproachful and terrifying demeanour on the part of a person invested with, and acting under an authority thus formidable, it seems full as natural that an honest witness should be confounded, and thus deprived of recollection and due utterance, and even (through confusion of mind) betrayed into self-contradiction and involuntary falsehood, as that a dishonest witness should be detected and exposed. The quiet mode above described is not in any degree susceptible of this sort of abuse: the outrageous mode seems more likely to terminate in the abuse than in the use . . . . Rule 2. Such unwarranted manifestations, if not abstained from by the advocate, ought to be checked, with marks of disapprobation, by the Judge. In the presence of the Judge, any misbehaviour, which, being witnessed at the time by the Judge, is regarded by him without censure, becomes in effect the act, the misbehaviour, of the Judge. On him more particularly should the reproach of it lie; because for the connivance (which is in effect the authorization) of it, he cannot ever possess any of those excuses, which may ever and anon present themselves on the part of the advocate. The demand for the honest vigilance and occasional interference of the Judge will appear the stronger when due consideration is had of the strength of the temptation, to which on this occasion, the probity of the advocate is exposed. Sinister interests in considerable variety concur in instigating him to this improper practice.

. . . . Rule 3. When on the false supposition of a disposition to mendacity, an honest witness has been treated accordingly by the cross-examining advocate (the Judge having suffered the examination to be conducted in that manner for the sake of truth)—at the close of which examination all doubts respecting the probity of the witness have been dispelled,—it is a moral duty on the part of the Judge to do what depends on him towards soothing the irritation sustained by the witness’s mind; to wit, by expressing his own satisfaction respecting the probity of the witness, and the sympathy and regret excited by the irritation he has undergone. . . . . Under the spur of the provocation, I remember now and then to have observed the witness turn upon the advocate in the way of retaliation. On an occasion of this sort, I have also now and then observed the Judge to interpose, for the purpose of applying a check to the petulance of the witness. For one occasion in which, under the spur of the injury, the injured witness has presented himself to my conception as overstepping the limits of a just defence,—ten, twenty or twice twenty, have occurred, in which the witness has been suffering, without resistance and without remedy, as well as without just cause, under the torture inflicted on him by the oppression and insolence of an adverse advocate. Scarcely ever, I think, had I the satisfaction of observing the Judge interpose to afford his protection to the witness, either at the commencement of the persecution, for the purpose of staying or alleviating the injury, or at the conclusion, for the purpose of affording satisfaction for it,—such inadequate satisfaction as the nature of the case admits of.”(1)

Lord Langdale, M. R., said in _Johnstone v. Tod_: (2) “Witnesses and particularly illiterate witnesses must always be liable to give imperfect or erroneous evidence, even when orally examined in open Court. The novelty of the situation, the agitation and hurry which accompanies it, the cajolery or intimidation to which the witness may be subjected, the want of questions calculated to excite those recollections which might clear up every difficulty, and the confusion occasioned by cross-examination, as it is too often conducted, may give rise to important errors and omissions.”

---

(1) Jeremy Bentham, _Rationale of Judicial Evidence_, B. II, c. IX, B. III, c. 5.
(2) 5 _Beav._, 601 (1843).
Lowrie, J., in Elliott v. Boyles (1) said "It is entirely natural that in the public trial of causes the earnestness of counsel should often become unduly intense; and it is not possible to prevent this without such an attribution and exercise of power as would be entirely inconsistent with that freedom of thought that is necessary to all thorough investigation. The remedy for it is to be found in inner rather than outer discipline. Those who are zealously seeking the truth cannot always be watchful to measure their demeanour and expressions in accordance with the feelings or even with the rights of others. This zeal, even when inordinate, must be excused, because it is necessary in the search of truth; and generally it is not possible to condemn it as misguided or excessive until its fault has been proved by the discovery of the truth in the opposite direction; and possibly its very excess may have contributed to the discovery. When the presiding Judge is respected and prudent a hint kindly given is generally all that is needed to restrain such ardour, when it does not arise in any degree from habitual want of respect for the rights of others and for the order of public business. Witnesses often suffer very unjustly from this undue earnestness of Counsel, and they are entitled to the watchful protection of the Court. In the Court they stand as strangers, surrounded with unfamiliar circumstances, giving rise to an embarrassment known only to themselves; and in mere generosity and common humanity they are entitled to be treated, by those accustomed to such scenes, with great consideration,—at least until it becomes manifest that they are disposed to be disingenuous. The heart of the Court and jury, and all disinterested mankind, spontaneously recoil at a harsh and unfair treatment of them, and the cause that adopts such treatment is very apt to suffer by it. It is only where weakness sits in judgment that it can benefit any cause. Add to this that a mind rudely assailed naturally shuts itself against its assailant, and reluctantly communicates the truths that it possesses."

"There is another matter connected with cross-examination, in which there is no room for doubt as to the duty of Counsel and as to the duty incumbent upon Judges to enforce that duty stringently. The legitimate object of cross-examination is to bring to light relevant matters of fact which would otherwise pass unnoticed. It is not unfrequently converted into an occasion for the display of it, and for obliquely insulting witnesses. It is not uncommon to put a question in a form which is in itself an insult, or to prepare a question or receive an answer with an insulting observation. This naturally provokes retorts, and cross-examination so conducted ceases to fulfil its legitimate purpose, and becomes a trial of wit and presence of mind which may amuse the audience, but is inconsistent with the dignity of a Court of Justice and unfavourable to the object of ascertaining the truth. When such a scene takes place the Judge is the person principally to blame. He has a right on all occasions to exercise the power of reproving observations which are not questions at all, of preventing questions from being put in an improper form, and of stopping examinations which are not necessary for any legitimate purpose." (2) In Ings' Trial (3) (1820) Mr. Adolphus cross-examining an alleged accomplice: "I think you told us some things then (Monday, at another trial for the same plot) that did not come to your recollection to-day?"

A. "That may be. I will not pretend to say, that the next time I come up here I can communicate as I have done to-day." Q. "Certainly not; there are people that proverbially ought to have a good memory?" A. "Yes, certainly." Q. "You make your evidence a little longer or shorter, according as the occasion suits?" A. "Yes, I mention the circumstances as they come to my recollection." . . . Mr. Gurney: "That is observation, and not question." Mr. Adolphus: "I am asking him a question." L. C. J. Dallas: "You should not now observe on the evidence." Mr. Adolphus. "This about the digging entrenchments you did not state on Monday?" A. "No, I forgot that." Q. "The next time there will be a new story?" Mr. Gurney: "I must interpose, my lord. L. C. J. Dallas; 'All these observations are certainly incorrect.'" Mr. Adolphus: "He has said it himself; when next I come into the box, I shall recollect other things," and upon that I put the question, whether he would tell another story the next time he comes." L. C. J. Dallas; 'Ask him the question if you wish it." Mr. Adolphus: "Shall you tell us a new story the next time" (2) A. "No. If anything new occurs to my mind when I come to stand here, I will state it.'"

---

(2) 38 How. St. Cr., 957, 999 (1820).

In Hardy's Trial,(1) Mr. Erskine, cross-examining a witness to the proceedings of an alleged seditious meeting: "Then you were never at any of those meetings but in the character of a spy"? "As you call it so, I will take it so." "If you were not there as a spy take any title you choose for yourself, and I will give you that" L. C. J. Byre: "There should be no name given to a witness on his examination. He states what he went for, and in making observations on the evidence, you may give it any appellation you please." After a repetition of the practice, Mr. Gibbs: "I am sorry to interrupt you, but your questions ought not to be accompanied with those sort of comments; they are the proper subjects of observation when the defence is made. The business of a cross-examination is to ask all sorts of acts to prove a witness as closely as you can but it is not the object of a cross-examination to introduce that kind of periphrasis as you have just done," Mr. Erskine: "But, on a cross-examination—Counsel are not called upon to be so exact as in an original examination; you are permitted to lead a witness;" L. C. J. Byre: "I think, it is so clear that the questions that are put are not to be loaded with all the observations that arise upon all the previous parts of the case; they tend so to distract the attention of every body, they load us in point of time so much; and that that is not the time for observation upon the character and situation of a witness is so apparent that as a rule of evidence it ought never to be departed from."

"It is an established rule, as regards cross-examination, that a Counsel has no right, even in order to detect or catch a witness in a falsity, falsely to assume or pretend that the witness had previously sworn or stated differently to the fact, or that a matter had previously been proved when it had not. Indeed, if such attempts were tolerated, the English Bar would soon be debased below the most inferior of society."(2)

A question which assumes a fact that may be in controversy is leading, when put on direct examination because it affords the willing witness a suggestion of a fact which he might otherwise not have stated to the same effect. Similarly, such a question may become improper on cross-examination, because it may by implication put into the mouth of an unwilling witness, a statement which he never intended to make, and thus incorrectly attribute to him testimony which is not his.(3)

In the Parnell Commission's Proceeding,(4) the "Times" having charged the Irish Land League with complicity in crime and outrage, a constable testifying to outrages was cross-examined by the opponents as to his partisan employment by the "Times" in procuring its evidence: Mr. Lockwood: "How long have you been engaged in getting up the case for the 'Times' Sir H. James: "What I object to is that Mr. Lockwood, without having any foundation for it, should ask the witness How long have you been engaged in getting up the

---

(1) 24 How. St. Tr., 754 (1794).
(2) Wigmores, Ev., § 780.
(3) Joseph Chitty, Practice of the Law, 2nd Ed., iii, 901.
(4) 18th day, Times Rep., pt. 3, p. 231.
case for the 'Times.'?" Mr. Lockwood: "I will not argue with my learned friend as to the exact form of the question, but I submit that it is perfectly proper and regular. If the man has not been engaged in getting up the case for the 'Times' he can say so." Sir H. James: "I submit that my learned friend has no right to put this question without foundation. Counsel has no right to say 'When did you murder A. B.? ' unless there is some foundation for the question. In this same way he has no right to ask 'How long have you been engaged in getting up this case? ' for it assumes the fact." President Hannen. "I do not consider that Mr. Lockwood was entitled to put the question in that form and to assume that the evidence has been employed by the Times.'"

The Evidence Act gives a right to cross-examine witnesses called by the adverse party.(1) One accused person therefore may cross-examine a witness called by another co-accused for his defence when the case of the second accused is adverse to that of the first.(2) The section does not make special provision for the case of cross-examination by co-accused or by co-defendants. It is, however, well settled that the evidence of one party cannot be received as evidence against another party unless the latter has had an opportunity of testing it by cross-examination.(3) It has been further held that all evidence taken whether in examination-in-chief or cross-examination is common and open to all the parties.(4) It follows that if all evidence is common and that which is given by one party may be used for or against another party, the latter must have the right to cross-examine. The right therefore of a defendant (and a fortiori an accused) to cross-examine a co-defendant or co-accused is, according to the English cases, unconditional and not dependent upon the fact that the cases of the accused and co-accused are adverse, or that there is an issue between the defendant and his co-defendant.(5) If a defendant may cross-examine a co-defendant's witnesses a fortiori he may cross-examine his co-defendant if he gives evidence.(6)

The party who called the witness may, if he like, and if it be necessary, re-examine him. The re-examination must be confined to the explanation of matters arising in cross-examination. "The proper office of re-examination (which is often inartistically used as a sort of summary of all the things adverse to the cross-examining Counsel which may have been said by a witness during cross-examination) is by asking such questions as may be proper for that purpose, so as to draw forth an explanation of the meaning of the expression used by the witness in cross-examination, if they be in themselves doubtful; and also of the motive, or provocation which induced the witness to use those expressions; but, a re-examination may not go further and introduce matter new in itself and not suited to the purpose of explaining either the expressions or the motives of the witness."(7) So if the witness has admitted having made a former inconsistent statement, he may in re-examination explain his motives for so doing.(8) Even if inadmissible matters are introduced the right to re-examine upon them remains.(9) But as observed new facts or matters which are not properly explanatory cannot be introduced in re-examination. So where a certain conversation had been admitted in cross-examination distinct matters occurring in

---

(2) Ram Chand v. Hanif Sheikh, 21 C., 401 (1893).
(4) Lord v. Colvin, 3 Drewry, 222.
(5) ib., followed in Allen v. Allen, supra; the only other alternative which is, however, hardly practicable, is to declare the evidence given not to be common to all the parties; see R. v. Surroop Chander, 12 W. R., Cr., 75, supra.
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 1474; Greenleaf, Ev., § 487.
(9) Blinett v. Tregonning, 3 A. & E., 554.
the same conversation were not allowed to be proved in re-examination which, although connected with the subject-matter of the suit, were not connected with the assertions to which the cross-examination related. (1) If facts are called out on cross-examination which tend to impeach the integrity or character of the witness he may, in re-examination, make explanation showing that such facts are consistent with his credibility as a witness although such testimony would be otherwise irrelevant. (2) New matter may, however, be introduced by permission of the Court, in which case the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter. (3)

139. A person summoned to produce a document does not become a witness by the mere fact that he produces it, and cannot be cross-examined unless and until he is called as a witness.

COMMENTARY.

Any person may be summoned to produce a document without being summoned to give evidence; and any person summoned merely to produce a document shall be deemed to have complied with the summons if he cause such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same. (4) This section is in accordance with the English practice by which if the witness be called under a subpoena duces tecum merely for the purpose of producing a document, which either requires no proof or is to be identified by another witness, he need not be sworn, and, if unsworn, he cannot be cross-examined. (5)

When a person called only to produce a document is sworn as a witness by mistake, and a question is put to him, which he does not answer, the opposite party is not entitled to cross-examine him. (6) In the case undermentioned (7) a witness was summoned to produce a document in Court in connection with a certain suit. He attended the Court, but did not produce the document, stating on oath that it was not in his possession. But this statement was disbelieved, and the Court fined him Rs. 75, under section 174 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). Held, that the fine was illegally levied. The jurisdiction of the Court to punish under section 174 of the Civil Procedure Code exists only in the case of a witness, who, not having attended on summons, has been arrested and brought before the Court.

The case of a witness who having a document will not produce it, is provided for by section 175 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLI of 1860) and section 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898). Where a witness denies on oath, that he has the possession or means of producing a particular document, he can, if he has been guilty of falsehood, be prosecuted for giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding.

140. Witnesses to character may be cross-examined and re-examined.

---

(1) Prince v. Samo, 7 A. & E., 627; Burr Jones, Ex., 876.
(2) Burr Jones, Ex., § 875. So where a witness had stated that he came from jail it was held proper for the party calling him to ask on what charge he had been committed; State v. Estil, 41 Tex., 95 (Am. Er.)
(3) S. 138; see Taylor, Ex., § 1477.
(4) Civ. Pr. Code, s. 164; Cr. Pr. Code, s. 94; as to the subpoena duces tecum, v. ante, pp. 721, 722 et seq.
(6) Rush v. Smith, 1 C. M. & R., 94.
(7) In re Frencho Dollor, 10 B., 83 (1887).
COMMENTS.

According to English practice, it is not usual to cross-examine, except under special circumstances, witnesses called merely to speak to the character of a prisoner; but there is no rule which forbids the cross-examination of such witnesses. (1)

141. Any question suggesting the answer which the person putting it wishes or expects to receive is called a leading question.

142. Leading questions must not, if objected to by the adverse party, be asked in an examination-in-chief or in re-examination, except with the permission of the Court.

The Court shall permit leading questions as to matters which are introductory or undisputed, or which have, in its opinion, been already sufficiently proved.

143. Leading questions may be asked in cross-examination.

Principle.—Leading questions in examination or re-examination are generally improper as the witness is presumed to be biased in favour of the party examining him and might thus be prompted. In cross-examination as the reason generally ceases so does the rule. See notes post.

COMMENTS.

“A question,” says Bentham, “is a leading one, when it indicates to the witness the real or supposed fact which the examiner expects and desires to have confirmed by the answer. Is not your name so and so? Do you reside in such a place? Are you not in the service of such and such a person? Have you not lived so many years with him? It is clear that under this form every sort of information may be conveyed to the witness in disguise. It may be used to prepare him to give the desired answers to the questions about to be put to him; the examiner—while he pretends ignorance and is asking for information, is in reality giving instead of receiving it.” (2) It has often been declared that a question is objectionable as leading which embodies a material fact and admits of answer by a simple affirmative or negative. (3) While it is true that a question which may be answered by ‘Yes’ or ‘No’ is generally leading, there may be such questions which in no way suggest the answer desired and to which there is no real objection. On the other hand, leading questions are by no means limited to those which may be answered by ‘Yes’ or ‘No.’ A question

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 1429.
(2) Bentham’s Rationale of Judicial Evidence. Thus also a witness called to prove that A stole a watch from B’s shop, must not be asked, ‘Did you see A enter B’s shop and take a watch?’ The proper inquiry is, What he saw A do at the time and place in question; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 443. “A question shall not be so propped to a witness as to indicate the answer desired,” per McLean, J., in U. S. v. Dickinson, 2 McLean, 531 (Amer).
(3) See Taylor, Ev., § 1404; Greenleaf, Ev., § 434. proposed to a witness in the form whether or not, that is, in the alternative, is not necessarily leading. But it may be so, when proposed in that form, if it is so framed as to suggest to the witness the answer desired. (1) It would answer no practical purpose to cite the numerous decisions which determine whether particular questions are leading or not as each case as it arises must be determined with reference to its own particular circumstances and to the definition contained in this section, namely, that a question is leading which suggests to the witness the answer which he is to make, or which puts into his mouth words which he is to echo back. "Leading" is a relative not an absolute term. There is no such thing as "leading in the abstract—for the identical form of question which would be leading of the grossest kind in one case or state of facts, might be not only unobjectionable, but the very fittest mode of interrogation in another. (2) If a question merely suggests a subject without suggesting an answer or a specific thing it is not leading. A question is proper which merely directs the attention of the witness to the subject respecting which he is questioned. (3) It follows from the broad and flexible character of the controlling principle that its application is to be left to the discretion of the trial Court. (4)

Leading questions are here generally improper because a witness is presumed to be biased in favour of the party calling him, who, knowing exactly what the former can prove, might prompt him to give only favourable answers. Such evidence would obviously be open to suspicion as being rather the prearranged version of the party than the spontaneous narrative of the witness. (5) The section says "if not objected to by the adverse party." In practice leading questions are often allowed to pass without objection, sometimes by express, and sometimes by tacit consent. This latter occurs where the questions relate to matters which though strictly speaking in issue, the examiner is aware are not meant to be contested by the other side; or where the opposing Counsel does not think it worth his while to object. On the other hand, however, very unfounded objections are constantly taken on this ground. (6) If the objection is not taken at the time the answer will have been taken down in the Judge's notes, and it will be too late to object afterwards on the score of its having been elicited by a leading question. Sometimes the Judge himself will interfere to prevent leading question being put; but it is the duty of the opposing Counsel to take the objection, and (except in cases where as abovementioned the objection is advised not taken) it is only through want of practical skill that the omission occurs. At the same time it is to be observed that if the evidence is elicited by a series of leading questions unobjected to, the effect of evidence so obtained is very much weakened. It is advisable, therefore, except where permissible, not to put such questions, whether it be likely that objection be taken to them or not. (7) The proper way to exclude evidence obtained by leading questions is to disallow the questions. (8) A Judge is not bound to reject an interrogatory and answer merely because the question is a leading one, but may exercise a discretion as to excluding or admitting the whole or part of the answer obtained by the leading questions. (9) And the course followed

---

(1) Burr Jones, Ev., § 818; Best, Ev., § 641.
(2) Best, Ev., § 641.
(3) Ib.; Nicholls v. Dowding, 1 Stark, R., 81. "It is necessary to a certain extent to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of the enquiry," per Lord Ellenborough.
(4) Wigmore, Ev., § 770.
(6) Best, Ev., § 641; v. post.
(7) Norton, Ev., 325. It is often useful in place of pressing the objection or when the objection is overruled to ask that the question appear upon the notes when the value of the answer will become apparent to the Appellate Court before which the case may again come for trial.
(8) Tukaya Bai v. Tamse Kaur, 15 W., R., Cr., 23, 24 (1871); see observations in R. v. Bisokalath, 12 W. R., Cr., 3 (1869); a witness whose under examination-in-chief before the Court of Session should not have his attention directed to his deposition before the Magistrate; R. v. Rama Chunder, 18 W. R., Cr., 18 (1870).
in this case where the Judge caused part of the interrogatory and part of the answer to be suppressed and the remainder which appeared not affected by the contents, to be read in evidence, was held to be correct.

As, however, the rule is merely intended to prevent the examination from being conducted unfairly, the rule is subject to three specific exceptions mentioned in this section and in section 154. These exceptions are:

1. Introductory and undisputed or sufficiently established matter.—The rule must be enforced in a reasonable sense, and must therefore not be applied to that part of the examination which is introductory to that which is material. If indeed it were not allowed to approach the points at issue by leading questions, examinations would be most inconveniently protracted. To abbreviate the proceedings and bring the witness as soon as possible to the material points on which he is to speak, the examiner may lead him on to that point and may recapitulate to him the acknowledged facts of the case which have been already established.

2. Adverse witness.—A witness who proves to be adverse to the party calling him may, in the discretion of the Court, be led or rather cross-examined.

3. Leading questions may be asked with the permission of the Court.—The Court has a wide discretion with reference to this which is not controllable by the Court of Appeal; and the Judge will always relax the rule whenever he considers it necessary in the interests of justice, and it is always relaxed in the following cases:

(a). Identification.—For this purpose a witness may be directed to look at a particular person and say whether he is the man. Indeed, wherever from the nature of the case the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of enquiry without a particular specification of it, questions may be put in a leading form. Much, however, depends upon the circumstances of each particular case; and it is often advisable not to lead even where permissible. Thus in a criminal trial, where the question turns on identity, although it would be perfectly regular to point to the accused, and ask a witness if that is the person to whom his evidence relates yet if the witness can unassisted single out the accused, his testimony will have more weight.

(b). Contradiction.—Where one witness is called to contradict another as to the expressions used by the latter, but which he denies having used, he may be asked directly: "Did the other witness use such and such expressions?" The authorities are, however, stated to be not quite agreed as to the reason of this exception; and some contend that the memory of the second witness ought first to be exhausted by his being asked what the other said on the occasion in question. So a leading question may be put when it is necessary to contradict a witness on the other side as to the contents of a paper which has been destroyed. The case last cited was an action on a policy of insurance of goods on board of a ship. The defence was that the goods were not lost, and that the plaintiff himself had written a letter to his son stating that he had disposed of all his goods at a profit of 30 per cent. The son was called and cross-examined as to the contents of the letter. He swore it was lost, but it contained no intimation of the kind supposed, and only said that plaintiff might have disposed of his goods at a great profit as he had been offered £5 for a pair of cotton stockings he then wore. To contradict this testimony several witnesses were produced to whom

---

(1) See R. v. Abdullah, 7 A., 385, 397 (1883).
(2) "The objection to leading questions is not that they are absolutely illegal, but only that they are unfair, per Pethum, C. J.
(3) Taylor, Ev. § 1404, s. 142.
(4) *S. 154, post; Best, Ev., § 643.
(5) Taylor, Ev., § 1405.
(6) ib.
(7) Best, Ev., § 643; Field, Ev., 634.
(8) Best, Ev., § 642.
(9) Curtiss v. Touse, 1 Camp., 42.
the letter had been read when received in London. One of these having stated all that he recollected of it was asked "if it contained anything about the plaintiff having been offered 8s. for a pair of cotton stockings." This being objected to as a leading question, Lord Ellenborough ruled, that after exhausting the witness's memory as to the contents of the letter, he might be asked, if it contained a particular passage recited to him which had been sworn to on the other side; otherwise it would be impossible ever to come to a direct contradiction.

(o). Defective memory.—The rule will be relaxed where the inability of a witness to answer questions put in the regular way obviously arises from defective memory (1). It is common practice when a witness cannot recollect a circumstance to refresh his recollection by a leading question after the Court is satisfied that his memory has been exhausted by questions framed in the ordinary manner.(2) So where a witness stated that he could not remember the names of the members of a firm so as to repeat them without suggestion, but thought that he might recognise them if read to him, this was allowed to be done.(3) A question is not objectionable which merely directs the attention of the witness to a particular topic without suggesting the answer required. Thus to prove a slander imputing that "A was a bankrupt whose name was in the bankruptcy list and would appear in the next Gazette," a witness who had only proved the first two expressions was allowed to be asked, "Was anything said about the Gazette?"(4) Upon a similar principle the Court will sometimes allow a pointed or leading question to be put to a witness of tender years whose attention cannot otherwise be called to the matter under investigation.(5)

(d). Complicated matters.—The rule will also be relaxed where the inability of a witness to answer questions put in the regular way arises from the complicated nature of the matter as to which he is interrogated.(6)

The above instances are mentioned as those in which the rule is generally and commonly relaxed, but it will be remembered that the Court has a wide discretion to allow leading questions not only in these but in any other cases in which justice or convenience requires that they should be put. As already observed very unfounded objections are constantly taken on this ground. In the case undermentioned, in which it was held that prima facie evidence of a partnership having been given, the declaration of one partner is evidence against another partner; a witness called to prove that A and B were partners was asked whether A had interfered in the business of B, and it was held not to be a leading question, Lord Ellenborough observing as follows:—"I wish that objections to questions as leading might be a little better considered before they are made. It is necessary to a certain extent to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of enquiry. In general no objections are more frivolous than those which are made to questions as leading ones."(7)

As soon as the witness has been conducted to the material portion of his examination, as soon as the time and place of the scene of action have been fixed, "it is generally the easiest course, to desire the witness to give his own account of the matter, making him omit, as he goes along, an account of what he has heard from others, which he always supposes to be quite as material as that which he himself has seen. If a vulgar, ignorant witness be not allowed to tell his story in his own way, he becomes embarrassed and confused, and mixes up distinct branches of his testimony. He always takes it for granted that the Court and the Jury know as much of the matter as he does himself,

---

(1) Best, Ev., § 642.
(2) Norton, Ev., 325.
(3) Acerra v. Petroni, 1 Stark., 100; Taylor, Ev., § 1405.
(4) Nicholls v. Dowding, 1 Stark., 81; Best, Ev., § 641.
(5) Taylor, Ev., § 1405.
(6) Best, Ev., § 642.
because it has been the common topic of conversation in his own neighbourhood; and, therefore, his attention cannot easily be drawn so as to answer particular questions, without putting them in the most direct form. It is difficult, therefore, to extract the important parts of his evidence piecemeal; but if his attention be first drawn to the transaction by asking him when and where it happened, and he be told to describe it from the beginning, he will generally proceed in his own way to detail all the facts in the order of time. (1) So also Mr. Alison says (2)—"It is often a convenient way of examining to ask a witness whether such a thing was said or done, because the thing mentioned aids his recollection, and brings him to that state of the proceeding on which it is desired that he should dilate. But this is not always fair; and when any subject is approached, on which his evidence is expected to be really important, the proper course is to ask him what was done, or what was said, or to tell his own story. In this way, also, if the witness is at all intelligent, a more consistent and intelligible statement will generally be got than by putting separate questions; for the witnesses generally think over the subjects on which they are to be examined in criminal cases so often, or they have narrated them so frequently to others, that they go on much more fluently and distinctly, when allowed to follow the current of their own ideas, than when they are at every moment interrupted or diverted by the examining counsel."

It has always been an admitted rule that leading questions may in general be asked in cross-examination. But there are some circumstances in which leading questions ought not to be put even in cross-examination. For though leading questions may (perhaps in England and certainly under the terms of this section) be put in cross-examination, whether the witness be favourable to the cross-examiner or not, yet where a vehement desire is betrayed to serve the interrogator, it is certainly improper and greatly lessens the value of the evidence to put the very words into the mouth of the witness which he is expected to echo back. (3) It is also to be remembered that questions which assume facts to have been proved, which have not been proved, or that particular answers have been given, which have not been given, will not, as being an attempt to mislead the witness, be at any time, or on any examination, be permitted. (4)

144. Any witness may be asked, whilst under examination, whether any contract, grant or other disposition of property, as to which he is giving evidence was not contained in a document, and if he says that it was, or if he is about to make any statement as to the contents of any document, which, in the opinion of the Court, ought to be produced, the adverse party may object to such evidence being given until such document is produced, or until facts have been proved which entitle the party who called the witness to give secondary evidence of it.

Explanation.—A witness may give oral evidence of statements made by other persons about the contents of documents if such statements are in themselves relevant facts.

---

(1) Stark, Ev., 167.
(2) Practice of the Criminal Law, Scotland, 546.
750

PREVIOUS STATEMENTS IN WRITING.

Illustration.

The question is, whether A assaulted B.

C deposes that he heard A say to B—'B wrote a letter accusing me of theft, and I will be revenged on him.' This statement is relevant, as showing A's motive for the assault, and evidence may be given of it, though no other evidence is given about the letter.

Principle.—See Note, post.

s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 91, 92 (Exclusion of oral evidence in case of documents.)

COMMENTARY.

This section merely points out the manner in which the provisions of sections 91 and 92 ante, as to the exclusion of oral by documentary evidence may be enforced by the parties to the suit. (1) If the adverse party do not object it is the duty of the Judge in criminal trials, (2) to prevent [and he may also in civil cases, (3) prevent] the production of inadmissible evidence notwithstanding the absence of objection. (4)

145. A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing, and relevant to matters in question, (5) without such writing being shown to him, or being proved; but if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him.

Principle.—The furnishing of a test by which the memory and integrity of a witness can be tried. See Note, post.

s. 155, Cl. (3) (Previous verbal statements.)

Taylor, Ev., §§ 1446-1451; Wharton, Ev., §§ 531, 68.

COMMENTARY.

This rule is in the nature of an exception to the general principle forbidding all use of the contents of a written instrument until the instrument itself be produced. The section re-enacts the provisions of Act II of 1855, (6) and is nearly the same as section 24 of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, (7) which altered the rule laid down in The Queen's case. (8) namely, that the cross-examining party was obliged, when the statement was in writing, to show it to the witness and afterwards put it in as his own evidence; a rule which it has

---

(1) Cunningham, Ev., note to s. 144; see The Queen's Case, R. & B., 292.
(2) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 293.
(3) v. ante, pp. 32, 33.
(4) Field, Ev., 637.
(6) See R. v. Ram Chunder, 13 W. R., Cr., 18 (1870); Tukheyas Rai v. Tupssee Koor, 15 W. R., Cr., 23 (1871).
(7) 17 & 18 Vic., Cap., 125, which, however contained the following proviso, viz.: "Provided, always that it shall be competent for the Judge, at any time during the trial, to require the production of the writing for his inspection, and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as he shall think fit." This proviso is, however, substantially contained in s. 155, post: Field, Ev., 637.
(8) 2 B. & B., 286. been remarked(1) excluded one of the best tests by which the memory and integrity of a witness can be tried, it being clear that if the object of the cross-examination was to test the witness’s memory this would be entirely frustrated by reading out the document to him before asking him any question about it.

The section says—"may be cross-examined." A witness when under examination-in-chief before the Court of Session should not have his attention directed to his deposition before the Magistrate.(2) The section does not say that the writing must be shown before the cross-examination, but that if it is intended to put in such writing to contradict a witness his attention must be called to those parts which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. That is, not that he is to be allowed to study his former statement, and frame his answers accordingly, but that, if his answers have differed from his previous statements reduced to writing, and the contradiction is intended to be used as evidence in the case, the witness must be allowed an opportunity of explaining or reconciling his statements, if he can do so; and if this opportunity is not given to him the contradictory writing cannot be placed on the record as evidence.(3) The previous statements must be really those of the witness. So where A was employed by B to write up B’s account-books, B furnishing him with the necessary information either orally or from loose memoranda, it was held that the entries so made could not be given in evidence to contradict A as previous statements made by him in writing, the statements being really made not by A but by B under whose instructions A had written them.(4)

The section applies to both criminal and civil cases; and its provisions are therefore applicable at trials before the Court of Session to depositions taken before the committing Magistrate.(5) In the undermentioned case(6) one of the witnesses for the prosecution was asked, if he had made a certain statement before the Magistrate; but Wilson, J., held that it was unnecessary to ask this question as the depositions showed that the witness had said before the Magistrate and added that the attention of the Jury might be called to differences in the witness’s statement without putting in his previous deposition. But the correctness of this ruling has been doubted(7) and recently overruled,(8) it being held that if it is intended to contradict a witness by his previous depositions, such passages of it as are used for this purpose should be put to the witness and tendered in evidence, though this,(9) as has been already pointed out, was held by the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts under the Code of 1882 to give to the prosecutor no right of reply. The Judge himself should compare the statements of the witnesses recorded by the Magistrate with the evidence of the same witnesses at the Sessions with a view to put questions in cross-examination, the answers to which may perhaps clear up discrepancies or possibly elicit facts favourable to the prisoners.(10) A Judge is bound to put to the witnesses whom he proposes to contradict by their statements made before the committing Magistrate, the whole or such portion of their depositions as he intends to rely upon in his decision so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning or denying that they had made any such statements, and so forth.(11) "The depositions taken by the committing Magistrate are always sent up and are with the Sessions Judge during the trial. The accused

---

(1) Taylor, Ev., § 1447.
(2) R. v. Ram Chunder, 13 W. R., Cr., 18 (1870).
(5) Field, Ev., 639.
(7) Field, Ev., 640.
(8) R. v. Khawar Rahman, 31 C., 142; 6 C. W. N., celi (1902), F. B.
(9) Ante, p. 523.
(10) R. v. Finsabun Boree, 5 W. R., Cr., 84 (1886).
can, if he wishes, have a copy of these depositions. (1) He or his counsel or pleader can therefore inform himself of what the witnesses said before the Magistrate, and is in a position to question any witness who varies in the Court of Session from his former statement. The Sessions Judge ought, if asked, to allow the original deposition to be used for this purpose. Where the Sessions Judge himself noticed the discrepancy, and it was material there can be little doubt, that in using the original deposition for the same purpose himself he would be acting wholly within the scope of his duty as indicated by the provisions of the Evidence Act and of the Code of Criminal Procedure." (2) Although previous statements made by witnesses may be used under this section, for the purpose of contradicting statements made by them subsequently at the trial of an accused person, they cannot, if they have been made, in the absence of the accused, be treated as independent evidence of his guilt or innocence; nor will section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code avail anything for this purpose.

A police-officer cannot, by inserting in the special diary statements which can only have been made to him under section 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code, protect such statements from being used in the way that the law allows, e.g., under sections 145 and 159 of this Act. (4) "If a police-diary is used by the officer who made it to refresh his memory or if the Court uses it for the purpose of contradicting such police-officer, the provisions of section 161 or 145 of this Act, as the case may be, shall apply. (5)

If the special diary is used by the Court to contradict the police-officer who made it, the accused person or his agent has a right to see that portion of the diary which has been referred to for this purpose. That is to say, the particular entry which has been referred to and so much of the diary as is necessary to the full understanding of the particular entry so made but no more. (6)

The Act is silent upon the case where the document has been lost or destroyed, and upon the question whether in these or in any other cases a copy can be used instead of the originals. It has, however, been stated that in such a case the witness might be cross-examined as to the contents of the paper, notwithstanding its non-production; and that, if it were material to the issue, he might be afterwards contradicted by secondary evidence. In such a case the cross-examining party may interpose evidence out of his turn to prove the events such as loss, &c., relating to the document and to furnish secondary evidence thereof. (7)

The section only relates to previous statements made in, or reduced into, writing. If, however, the previous statement has been verbal and not reduced to writing, it may also be proved to impeach the witness's credit if such former statement be inconsistent with any part of the witness's evidence which is liable to be contradicted. (8) The Act makes no express provision to the effect that the witness's attention must first be drawn to the previous verbal statement and the witness asked whether he made such a statement before his credit can be impeached by independent evidence; but there can be little doubt that here also circumstances of such previous statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, ought to be mentioned to the witness and he ought to be asked whether or not he made such a statement. (9)

---

(1) See Cr. Pr. Code, s. 548.
(3) Alamuddin v. R., 23 C., 361 (1896).
(4) Shera Sha v. R., 20 C., 642, 648 (1893); contra, R. v. Masum, 10 A., 390 (1897); F. B., Bannerejee and Aikman, JJ., dissent.
(5) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 172.
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 1447.
(8) S. 165, cl. (3) post.
(9) Field, Ev., 641, 642; see Taylor, Ev.,
"The decisions upon the question, whether or not a party is entitled to see a document which has been shown to one of his witnesses while under cross-examination by his opponent, are somewhat conflicting. On the whole, however, the practice seems to be, that if the cross-examining Counsel after putting a paper into the hands of a witness merely asks him some question as to its general nature or identity, his adversary will have no right to see the document; but that if the paper be used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness, or if any questions be put respecting its contents, or as to the handwriting in which it is written, a sight of it may then be demanded by the opposite Counsel. But such opposing Counsel has no right to read such a document through, or to comment upon its contents, till so used or put in, by the cross-examining Counsel." (1)

146. When a witness is cross-examined he may, in addition to the questions hereinbefore referred to, be asked any questions which tend—

(1) to test his veracity;
(2) to discover who he is and what is his position in life; or
(3) to shake his credit, by injuring his character, although the answer to such questions might tend directly or indirectly to crimate him or might expose or tend directly or indirectly to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. (2)

147. If any such question relates to a matter relevant to the suit or proceeding, (3) the provisions of sections 132 shall apply thereto. (4)

148. If any such question relates to a matter not relevant to the suit or proceeding, except in so far as it affects the credit of the witness by injuring his character, the Court shall decide whether or not the witness shall be compelled (5) to answer it, and may, if it thinks fit, warn the witness that he is not obliged to answer it. In exercising its discretion, the Court shall have regard to the following considerations (6):

(1) such questions are proper if they are of such a nature that the truth of the imputation conveyed by them would seriously affect the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies:

§ 1451, and Carpenter v. Walk, 3 P. & D., 457, where Paterson, J., said, "I like the broad rule that when you mean to give evidence of a witness's declaration, for any purpose, you shall ask him whether he ever used such expressions." (1881).

(2) This means the same as relevant to a "matter in issue" in s. 132, ante, viii.

(4) See Gopal Dass, supra, at p. 278.
(2) such questions are improper if the imputation which they convey relates to matters so remote in time, or of such a character, that the truth of the imputation would not affect, or would affect in a slight degree, the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies:

(3) such questions are improper if there is a great disproportion between the importance of the imputation made against the witness's character and the importance of his evidence:

(4) the Court may, if it sees fit, draw, from the witness's refusal to answer, the inference that the answer if given would be unfavourable.

Principle.—The credibility of the witness is always in issue, it being necessary to ascertain the value and weight to be attached to the media through which the proof is presented to the Court. But at the same time it is necessary to protect the witness against improper cross-examination.

s. 137, 138 (Cross-examination.)
s. 132 (Incriminating questions.)
s. 165, Prov. 2 (These sections are binding upon Judge.)

O. R. 36, 38; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1426, 1427, 1426, 1427, 1445, 1459—1462; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 156-158; Markby, Ev., 100, 107; Norton, Ev., 328; Field, Ev., 644; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1460—1467.

COMMENTARY.

Sections 132, 146—148, together embrace the whole range of questions which can properly be addressed to a witness. (1) The words in section 146 "in addition to, &c.," refer to the second paragraph of section 138, ante. In addition then to the questions which may be asked in cross-examination under the provisions of section 138, a witness may be further asked the questions mentioned in section 146, which latter section extends the power of cross-examination far beyond the limits of section 138, which in terms confines the cross-examination to relevant facts, including, of course, facts in issue. The language of section 146, coupled with that of sections 138—147, makes it appear as if the "additional facts spoken of in section 146 were considered as not relevant. But of course this cannot be the case. As is indicated in section 148, these facts are relevant as tending to show how far the witness is trustworthy; and the only object of classing these facts apart from other relevant facts is in order that special rules may be laid down as to when they may be contradicted and when a witness may be compelled to answer them. (2) The questions which may be put under the provisions of section 146 may relate to matters which are either directly relevant to the suit or relevant only as affecting the credibility of the witness. As a general rule all questions as to facts relevant in the first-mentioned sense must be answered whether or not

---

(2) Markby, Ev., 106. None but relevant questions can be asked but relevancy is of the two-fold character; it may be directly relevant in its bearing on the very merits of the point in issue, or it may be relevant collaterally to the issue, as in the case of facts relating to the character of a witness, which are always relevant. Norton, Ev., 328.
the answer will criminate the witness (1) and evidence will be admissible to contradict his answers. If, on the other hand, the facts to which the questions relate are relevant only as tending to impeach the witness's credit, it lies in the discretion of the Court to compel the witness to answer or not, dealing with the matter not under the rule contained in section 132 but under the provisions of sections 148—152. Evidence in such a case will not be admissible to contradict the answer when given, unless in the case provided for by the exceptions to section 153, post.

No question respecting any fact irrelevant to the issue can be put to a witness for the mere purpose of contradicting him, it being only with regard to relevant matters that a witness can be contradicted by proof of previous statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence.(2) The provisions of sections 148—150, 153, are restricted to questions relating to facts which are relevant only in so far as they affect the credit of the witness by injuring his character, whereas some of the additional questions enumerated in section 146 do not necessarily suggest any imputation on the witness's character. Nevertheless, it is believed to have been the intention of the Act, as also the practice, to consider all the questions covered by section 146 to be governed by the provisions of sections 148—150 and 153.(3)

Section 148, together with sections 149—152, was designed to protect the itness against improper cross-examination (v. post). (4) Sections 148, 149, are as binding upon the Judge as upon the parties. (5) Under the first-mentioned section when a question is relevant only as affecting credit the Court has a discretion (for the exercise of which certain rules are laid down) as to compelling an answer; and section 153, post, enacts that where such a question has been answered, the usual rule as to the inadmissibility of evidence to contradict answers to irrelevant questions shall apply save and except in two cases; but that if the witness answers falsely he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence.

Under the first and second clauses of section 148, the fact asked must be such as if true would really and seriously affect the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies. The abuse of examination against which these clauses are directed is illustrated by the incident in the Tichborne case, where a witness, an elderly man who was called to disprove the identity of the claimant with the real Roger Tichborne, was most improperly asked in cross-examination whether in early life he had not had an intrigue with a married woman. Questions respecting alleged improprieties of conduct which furnish no real ground for assuming that a witness who could be guilty of them would not be a man of veracity should be checked. (6) "If a woman," says Sir J. F.
Stephen, in his General View of the Criminal Law of England, "prosecuted a man for picking her pocket, it would be monstrous to enquire whether she had not had an illegitimate child ten years before, though circumstances might exist which might render such an enquiry necessary." For instance she might owe a grudge to the person against whom the charge was brought on account of circumstances connected with such a transaction, and have invented the charge for that reason. (7) A Magistrate, it was held, should have disallowed upon the

(1) S. 132, 147.
(2) v. ante, notes upon "cross-examination" in s. 138, and post, s. 153, ol. (3).
(3) Markby, Ev., 107.
(4) In Field, Ev., 644, it is said with reference to s. 148, "If the witness either of his own accord or being compelled by the Court to answer a question which is irrelevant or which is relevant only in so far as it affects his credit, and if such question criminate him or expose him to a penalty or forfeiture, is he entitled to the protection afforded by s. 132, ante. It would appear that he is not. But it is submitted that the protection should be extended to such a case." See notes to s. 132, ante.
(5) S. 135, post, Prmr. (2).
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 1490.
(7) See Staines v. Stewart, 2 B. & T., 330, 352; principle embodied in this section, a question as to previous conviction thirty years old put to an intended surety on the ground that it related to matter so remote in time that it ought not to influence his decision as to the fitness of such surety.(1) "Where the facts which form the subject of the question are comparatively recent, they are more important as bearing upon the moral principles of the witness than when they are of remote date, because a man may reform and become in later years incapable of conduct to which in earlier life he was prone. The interest of justice can seldom require that the errors of a man's life long since repented of, and forgiven by the community should be recalled to remembrance at the pleasure of any future litigant."(2)

Third Clause declares it to be improper to make serious accusations against a witness who is called to prove some comparatively unimportant fact in the case. With reference to the fourth Clause, read Illustration (h), section 114, ante, and also the other matter which may be considered in connection with the same Illustration. It has been sometimes stated that, if a witness declines to answer, no inference of the truth of the fact can be drawn from this. But this general statement is open to question. It is going too far to say that the guilt of the witness must be implied from his silence, but it is in consonance with justice and reason that the Court should (as it indeed can scarcely help doing), consider that circumstance as well as every other when deciding on the credit due to the witness ? (3)

Where a party gave evidence in his own case it was held by a majority of two out of three Judges that he might be asked, on cross-examination, with a view of testing his credit, whether an action had not previously been brought against him in respect of a similar claim, upon which he had given evidence, and the verdict of the jury was notwithstanding against him, and this, without producing the record of the proceedings in the previous case.(4)

But though as was done in the case last mentioned, evidence may be given of facts as that the witness has brought or defended actions which have been dismissed or decreed against him; that the witness gave his evidence in such actions; that he made false charges and so forth; yet evidence of the particular opinion formed by a Judge in another case of the credit to be attached to the testimony of a witness who is cross-examined in a subsequent trial, is inadmissible.(5)

No weight ought to be attached to the evidence of a witness, who himself deposes to his own turpitude.(6)

149. No such question as is referred to in section 148 ought to be asked, unless the person asking it has reasonable grounds for thinking that the imputation which it conveys, is well founded.

Illustrations.

(a) A barrister is instructed by an attorney or vakil that an important witness is a dákātī. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dákātī.

(b) A pleader is informed by a person in Court that an important witness is a dákātī; the informant, on being questioned by the pleader, gives satisfactory reasons for his statement. This is reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dákātī.

want of chastity is not always a ground for discrediting a witness, per Sir C. Cresswell.

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 1460.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1467.
(6) Kali Chandru v. Shid Chandru, 6 B. L. R., 501, 507 (1870); a.c., 16 W. R., P. C., 12.
(c) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, is asked at random whether he is a dakait. There are here no reasonable grounds for the question.

(d) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, being questioned as to his mode of life and means of living, gives unsatisfactory answers. This may be a reasonable ground for asking him if he is a dakait.

150. If the Court is of opinion that any such question was asked without reasonable ground, it may, if it was asked by any barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney, report the circumstances of the case to the High Court or other authority to which such barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney is subject in the exercise of his profession.

151. The Court may forbid any questions or inquiries which it regards as indecent or scandalous, although such questions or inquiries may have some bearing on the questions before the Court, unless they relate to facts in issue, or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed.

152. The Court shall forbid any question which appears to it to be intended to insult or annoy, or which, though proper in itself, appears to the Court needlessly offensive in form.

Principle.—See Note, post.

s. 148 (Questions affecting credit.)

s. 3 (“Fact in issue.”)

s. 165 (Questions by Judge.)

Markby, Ev., 107; Steph. Dig., pp. 150, 160; Taylor, Ev., § 249; Powell, Ev., 155, 156:

and see authorities cited in last section, and in section 138, ante.

COMMENTARY.

Sections 149—152 together with section 148, ante, were intended to protect a witness against improper cross-examination—a protection which is often very much required. It has however been said that the protection afforded by section 148 is not very effectual, because an innocent man will be eager to answer the question, and one who is guilty will by a claim for protection nearly confess his guilt, and that the threat contained in sections 149, 150, do not carry the matter much further. (1) These latter sections were substituted while the bill was in committee for certain other sections in the original draft to which much objection was taken and the discussion with reference to which will be found in the Proceedings in Council. (2) Speaking of the substituted sections including sections 146—152, Sir J. F. Stephen said:—"The object of these sections is to lay down in the most distinct manner the duty of Counsel of all grades in examining witnesses with a view to shaking their credit by damaging their character. I trust that this explicit statement of

(1) Markby, Ev., 107.

(2) See Proceedings of the Legislative Council, Supplement to the Gazette of India, 30th March 1872, pp. 237, 238. With reference to ss. 149, 150, it may be observed that an advocate cannot be proceeded against either civilly or criminally for words uttered in his office as advocate. Selings v. Norton, 10 M., 28 (1886). As to the extent of the privilege of speech accorded to advocate, see R. v. Kashiwarnth Dinbar, 8 Bow. H. C. R., 142—146 (1871).
the principles, according to which such questions ought or ought not to be asked, will be found sufficient to prevent the growth, in this country, of that which in England has on many occasions been a grave scandal. I think that the sections, as far as their substance is concerned, speak for themselves, and that they will be admitted to be sound by all honourable advocates and by the public.’” Section 165, post, further prohibits the Judge himself from asking any question which it would be improper for any other person to ask under section 148 or 149. But whatever doubts there may be as to the efficacy of sections 148—150, sections 151 and 152 ought to prove effectual. For in cases where it will be, for the reasons mentioned, of little use for the witness to decline to answer, the Judge may at once interpose and stop the question.(1) With reference to section 151, it may be observed that ‘‘indecency of evidence is no objection to its being received where it is necessary to the decision of a civil or a criminal right.”(2) The Court cannot forbid indecent or scandalous questions if they relate to facts in issue,(3) or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed. If they have, however, merely some bearing on the questions before the Court, the latter has a discretion and may forbid them. Where a question is intended to insult or annoy or which, though proper in itself, appears to the Court needlessly offensive in form, the Court must interpose for the protection of the witness. See as to this, Notes to s. 138, ante.

153. When a witness has been asked and has answered any question which is relevant to the inquiry only in so far as it tends to shake his credit by injuring his character, no evidence shall be given to contradict him; but, if he answers falsely, he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence.

Exception 1.—If a witness is asked whether he has been previously convicted of any crime and denies it, evidence may be given of his previous conviction.(4)

Exception 2.—If a witness is asked any question tending to impeach his impartiality and answers it by denying the facts suggested, he may be contradicted.(5)

Illustrations.

(a) A claim against an underwriter is resisted on the ground of fraud.

The claimant is asked whether, in a former transaction, he had not made a fraudulent claim. He denies it.

Evidence is offered to show that he did make such a claim.

The evidence is inadmissible.

(b) A witness is asked whether he was not dismissed from a situation for dishonesty.

He denies it.

Evidence is offered to show that he was dismissed for dishonesty.

The evidence is inadmissible.

(c) A affirms that on a certain day he saw B at Lahore.

A is asked whether he himself was not on that day at Calcutta. He denies it.

Evidence is offered to show that A was on that day at Calcutta.

(1) Markby, Ev., 107.
(2) Du Cane v. Jones, Cwmp., 734; per Lord Mansfield, Steph. Dig., pp. 103, 160; Taylor, Ev., § 949; Powell, Ev., 156, 158.
(3) See Ramario v. Ingle, 18 B., 468, 470 (1893.)
(4) See 26 & 29 Vict., Cap. 18, § 1 ; Taylor, Ev., § 1437.
CONTRADICTION.

The evidence is admissible, not as contradicting A on a fact which affects his credit, but as contradicting the alleged fact that B was seen on the day in question in Labore. (1)

In each of those cases the witness might, if his denial was false, be charged with giving false evidence.

(d) A is asked whether his family has not had a blood feud with the family of B against whom he gives evidence. He denies it. He may be contradicted on the ground that the question tends to impeach his impartiality.

Principle.—The reason of this rule which restricts the right to give evidence in contradiction is that it is an object of primary importance to confine the attention of the Court as much as possible to the specific issues. Without some rule so many collateral questions of fact might be raised in the course of a long trial that the specific questions to be determined might be lost sight of and the trial itself inordinately lengthened. (2) The exceptions refer to two matters which are easily susceptible of proof and are so important as to strike at the very roof of the witness’s trustworthiness, while no great expenditure of time need be involved in ascertaining how the facts stand. (3)

s. 148 (Questions to credit.)

COMMENTARY.

Where a fact which is relevant as having a direct bearing on the issue is denied by a witness it may of course be proved altiusde, and his answer may thus be contradicted by independent evidence. (4) So the statement of a witness for the defence that a witness for the prosecution was at a particular place, at a particular time and consequently could not then have been at another place, where the latter states he was and saw the accused person is properly admissible in evidence, even though the witness for the prosecution may not himself have been cross-examined on the point. (5) But where the fact enquired after is only collaterally relevant to the issue, as is the case with the character of the witness, Counsel must be content with the answer which the witness chooses to give him. If he denies the imputation the answer is conclusive for the purposes of the suit; (6) the matter cannot be carried further at the trial except in the two cases provided by this section which, however, does not appear to be very accurately expressed, as there is at least one other common case where the witness may be contradicted (see section 155, post). The only redress which a party has, is to charge the witness with giving false evidence, and to try him for it. To this general rule there are, however, as already observed, two exceptions contained in the above section and taken from English Law.

The rule limiting the right to call evidence to contradict witnesses on collateral questions excludes all evidence of facts which are incapable of affording any

---

(3) Cunningham, Ev., § 153.
(4) See Illustration (c) and Taylor, Ev., § 1439, where the rule is stated to be that: “the question relates to relevant facts the answers may be contradicted; if too irrelevant they cannot, and enquiries respecting the previous conduct of a witness will almost invariably be regarded as irrelevant, if not connected with the cause or the parties.” In Field, Ev., 648, it is said, “The Act does not lay down this rule in so many words, but its provisions as to relevancy and other matters necessarily involve this rule.” The express provisions of s. 5, ante, however, render unnecessary this recourse to an implied rule; see s. 155, post.
(6) See Illustrations (a) and (b). reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal matter in dispute; the test being whether the fact is one which the party proposing to contradict would have been allowed himself to prove in evidence. (1) "The object of section 153 is to prevent trials being spun out to an unreasonable length. If every answer given by a witness upon the additional facts mentioned in section 146 could be made the subject of fresh enquiry a trial might never end. These matters are after all not of the first importance beyond what is comprised in the exceptions." (2)

Under the terms of the first Exception above referred to when a witness denies that he has been previously convicted his previous conviction may always be put in to refute him. (3) Section 511 of the Criminal Procedure Code declares the manner in which the previous conviction may be proved in an enquiry, trial or other proceeding under that Code. In the absence of any special provision the only medium of proof is the record of conviction. (4)

Whether the evidence referred to in the second Exception can be given has been the subject of doubt in England. The Legislature has here answered the question in the affirmative taking that view of the matter which was laid down by the Judges in the case of the Attorney-General v. Hitchcock. (5) Facts showing that the witness has been bribed, (6) has suborned other witnesses, has expressed hostility and the like can be shown, if the witness denies them. (7)

The distinction made between cases coming within the section and those within the second Exception is exemplified in the undermentioned case. (8) There a person named Yewin was indicted for stealing wheat. The principal witness against him was a boy of the name of Thomas, his apprentice. The Judge allowed the prisoner's Counsel to ask Thomas in cross-examination whether he had not been charged with robbing his master; and whether he had not afterwards said he would be revenged on him and would soon fix him in Monmouth gaol? He denied both. The prisoner's Counsel then proposed to prove that he had been charged with robbing his master and had spoken the words imputed to him. The Court ruled that his answer must be taken as to the former; but that as the words were material to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, evidence might be adduced that they were spoken by the witness.

Care must be taken to distinguish between that contradiction of answers touching credit only which is generally disallowed and contradiction of answers concerning facts directly relevant. In the latter case such answers may always be contradicted even if they have been given by the party's own witness, for the object is to show the true facts not merely to discredit the witness. "If a witness state facts in a cause which make against the party who called him, yet the party may call other witnesses to prove that these facts were otherwise; for such facts are evidence in the cause and the other witness is not called directly to discredit the first, but the impeachment of his credit is incidental and consequential only." (9) The rule is thus expressed in the American cases:

---

(2) Markby, Ev., 108.

(3) A similar rule prevails in England, see Taylor, Ev., § 1437; Att.-Gen. v. Hitchcock, supra.

(4) R. v. Watson, 2 Stark., 149: see ss. 76, 77, ada.

(5) 1 Ex., 93: see Taylor, Ev., §§ 1440—1442.

(6) Sae s. 155, cl. (2), post; Att.-Gen. v. Hitchcock, supra.

(7) Norton, Ev., 332; Taylor, Ev., § 1440; Stewart Naplje's op. cit., 346, 347; e. g., that the witness is the kept mistress of the party calling her (Thomas v. David, 7 C. & P., 360), or that the witness has suborned false witnesses against the opposite party (Queen's case, 2 B. & B., 11: Att.-Gen. v. Hitchcock, supra) or has had quarrels with or expressed hostility towards him (R. v. Shan, 10 Cox, 503); see Roscoe, N. P., Ev., 182: Steph. Dig., Art. 130; Roscoe, Cr. Ev., 12th Ed., 90, 91: Taylor, Ev., § 1400, et seq. Moreover, if a plaintiff's witness denies a material fact and states that persons connected with the plaintiff have offered him money to assert it, the plaintiff may call those persons, not only to prove the fact, but to improve the attempt to subornation: Mid-kwech v. Collier, 16 Q. B., 873.

(8) R. v. Yewin, 3 Camp., 638 n.

(9) B. N. P., 397.
Although a party may not discredit his own witness by testimony as to his general character, he may give evidence to contradict any particular and material fact to which the witness has testified. He may show that the witness is mistaken or that the facts are different from the version he gives of them, i.e., for the purpose of upholding his cause of action or defence (not for the purpose of impeaching the witness) he may show how the fact really is. If he calls a witness to prove a particular fact and fails in establishing it by him (or if he disproves it), the fact may nevertheless be proved by another witness, or the first one’s account shown to be incorrect. A party may always correct his own witness, even though by directly contradicting him. If such evidence were to be excluded, the consequences would be most injurious to the administration of justice as well in criminal as in civil cases.(1)

154 The Court may, in its discretion, permit the person who calls a witness to put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party.

Principle.—A party may therefore with the permission of the Court, put leading questions to the witness under the provisions of section 143 or cross-examine him as to the matters mentioned in sections 145, 146. The rule which excludes leading questions being chiefly founded on the assumption that a witness must be taken to have a bias in favour of the party by whom he is called, whenever circumstances show that this is not the case and he is either hostile to that party or unwilling to give evidence, the Judge may in his discretion allow the rule to be relaxed.(2) Further by offering a witness a party is held to recommend him as worthy of credence, and so it is not in general open to him to test his credit, or impeach his truthfulness. But there exist cases in which the rule should be relaxed at the discretion of the Court, as for instance, where there is a surprise, the witness unexpectedly turning hostile, in which and in other cases the right of examination ex adverso is given.(3) A witness whether of one or the other party ought not to receive more credit than he really deserves, and the power of cross-examination is therefore sometimes necessary for the purpose of placing the witness fairly and completely before the Court.(4)

s. 3 ("Court.")

s. 145-148 (Questions in cross-examination.)

COMMENTARY.

This section under which the party calling a witness may, with leave of the Courts cross-examine and put leading and pressing questions to him is one of great practical importance: it not unfrequently happening that a witness who has been called in the expectation that he will speak to the existence of a particular state of facts, pretends non-remembrance of those facts or deposes to an entirely different set of circumstances; in which case the question arises whether the witness has by his conduct entitled the party to cross-examine him. This question has in such cases generally been argued with reference to the English cases explaining the meaning of the term “adverse” used in the twenty-second section of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, as meaning either "hostile" or "unfavourable" respectively. It is, in fact, a statute marked in the first place that the English statute dealt with the question of the admissibility of evidence to contradict the party's own witness, a matter which is dealt with by the next section of this Act; and that the question whether a party can cross-examine his own witness as to (for example) whether he had not upon another occasion given a different account of transaction from that which he then deposed to, is not the same as the question whether, if the witness denies having done so, the party calling him is at liberty to call other witnesses to prove it. (1) Nextly, the statute mentioned is not in force in this country, and the section of this Act makes no mention either of the terms "hostile," "adverse" or "unfavourable," or of any others, but leaves the matter entirely to the discretion of the Court, which discretion must obviously be exercised with reference to the particular circumstances of each case. (2) It is much to be desired that the matter should, if possible, be set at rest by judicial decision more especially, as will hereafter be observed, the English cases lack unanimity. Some of the cases here cited dealt with the right to discredit the party's own witness by calling other testimony, but such as are authorities for this right are d fortis also authorities for the right to cross-examine one's own witness, though, as already observed, the converse may not be the case. The question of the right of a party to impeach and contradict his own witness is properly the subject-matter of the next section, but being closely allied to that of the present section it is here alone treated to avoid unnecessary repetition.

(1) Stewart Rapelje’s Law of Witnesses, 355, 366; see also Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Campb., 556; Friedlander v. London Assurance Co., & R. & Ad., 193; Bradley v. Ricardo, 8 Bing., 87; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 449; Best, Ev., § 645; Taylor,

Prior to the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, it had been held, with regard to cross-examination, that the party who calls a witness may cross-examine him if on the trial he shows any unfair bias; (3) or be unwilling, (4) or by his conduct in the box shows himself decidedly adverse; (6) or in the interest of the opposite party; (6) or if the witness be the party's opponent in the case. (7)

(1) See Greenough v. Eccles, 5 C. B., N. S., 796, arguendo.
(2) See Bastin v. Carec, R. & M., 177 (1824) when Abbott, L.D., C. J., said upon allowing cross-examination of an adverse witness: "I mean to decide this and no further. That in each particular case there must be some discretion in the presiding judge as to the mode in which the examination shall be conducted in order best to answer the purposes of justice," cited in Price v. Manning, L. P., 42 Ch. D., 372 (1897).
(3) R. v. Chapman, 5 C. & P., 558, 559 (1838); see also R. v. Murphy, 5 C. & G., 306 (1837).
(4) R. v. Ball, 5 C. & L., 715 (1839). The situation in which a witness stands towards either party does not give the party calling the witness a right to cross-examine him unless the witness's evidence be of such a nature as to make it appear that the witness is an unwilling one: Parkin v. Monn, 7 C. & P., 408, 409 (1836).
(6) Ph. & Arn., Ev., 462.
(7) Clarke v. Saftey, R. & M., 128 (1821); that is when the witness stands in a situation which naturally makes him adverse to the party who desires his testimony, as for example a defendant called as the plaintiff's witness: Radd v. Jocamb v. Taramouer Dossi, 12 Mon. L. A., 380, 393 (1860). It is, however, now settled law in England that a party when called by his opponent cannot as of right be treated as hostile, the matter being solely in the discretion of the Court; Price v. Manning, 42 Ch. D., 372 (1887): "Since which decision also it would seem that the older cases (see Bowman v. Bouman, 2 M. & R., 501; Jackson v. Thomsen, 1 B. & S., 745; Coke v. Coke, 1 P. & M., 71) holding that a necessary witness, i.e., one whom a party is compelled to call, and who may therefore be considered rather the witness of the Court than of the party, as an attesting witness to a will, can be discredited (as of right) by his own side are no longer law": Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 448. The same rule applies in India, see Subbaajv v. Nidddra, 26 B. 392, 395 (1901). Where, however, the accused applied for an adjournment to enable them to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, which was refused and subsequently had the witnesses summoned for the defence, it was held that the mere fact that the accused had been compelled to treat the witnesses for the prosecution as their own witnesses did not change their character and that they were entitled to cross-examine them; Shripadash Singh v. Bostina, 28 C., 504 (1894).
CROSS-EXAMINATION OF PARTY'S OWN WITNESS.

It was also held that a party's own witness who, having given one account of the matter to his attorney, when called on the trial, gives a different account, may be asked by the party calling him whether he had given a different account, stating it, to the attorney. (1) It not unfrequently happens as, in the cases last cited, that a witness has given one account to the party or his attorney or others and has thereby induced the party to call him; but when so called he gives a totally different version. Then when asked by the counsel of the party calling him whether he has not previously made a statement different from his present evidence, objection is commonly taken by the other side on the ground that the witness has not yet appeared adverse. A similar objection was taken in the case undermentioned, (2) upon which counsel seeking to cross-examine replied that it might not at present appear that the witness was adverse, but that he desired to prove that it was so, and it could only appear how it was, by the question which he proposed to ask, which in effect was whether the witness did not give a totally different account of the matter to the attorney, to prove which he called him. Lord Campbell, C. J., then said:—"The defendant's Counsel stating that, I will allow the question to be put; but it must be done to discredit the witness altogether, and not merely to get rid of part of his testimony. If that which is suggested shall be elicited, it will show that he is not trustworthy at all." (3)

Passing from the question of the cross-examination of the party's own witness (4) to the question of his impeachment, it was settled law in England (5) prior to the common Law Procedure Act, 1854, that a party could not impeach his witness's credit by general evidence of his bad character, (6) but he might contradict him by other evidence on points directly relevant to the issue. (7) It was, however, an unsettled point whether the witness could be discredited by proof that he had made inconsistent statements. The act mentioned settled the controversy on this last question by declaring that in case the witness

---

(1) McShiue v. Collier, 19 L. J., Q. B., 493; s.c., 15 Q. B., 878 (see this case cited on another point at 760, ante, note 7), where Eric, J., observed:--"There are treacherous witnesses who will hold out that they can prove facts on one side in a cause, and then, for a bribe, or from some other motive make statements in support of the opposite interest. In such cases the law undoubtedly ought to permit the party calling the witness to question him as to the former statement, and ascertain, if possible, what induces him to change it." And for similar cases subsequent to the Act of 1854, see Dear v. Knight, 1 F. & F., 433 (1860); where the prior statement was made to the party; Faulkner v. Brine, 1 F. & F., 254 (1858); where it was made to the party's attorney; Pound v. Wilson, 4 F. & F., 301 (1865); where the prior statement was made in the Bankruptcy Court; and R. v. Little, 15 Cox, 319 (1883), where the prior statement was made to the mother of the prosecutrix. In two recent cases in the Calcutta High Court Farlow v. Chuni Lal, Small Cause Court Transfer Suit No. 15 of 1899, 3rd Jan., 1901; McLeod v. Sirdarmull, Suit No. 833 of 1900, 13th Aug., 1901; the Court allowed cross-examination, it appearing that the witness had made a statement to the attorney of the party calling him.

(3) See also to the same effect, Armstrong v. Alexander, 16 L. T., N. S., 830 (1867); [A witness, called on behalf of the plaintiff, gave evidence quite different from the proof in brief of plaintiff's counsel and from the heads of evidence as taken down in writing by the plaintiff's attorney and alleged to have been read over by him to the witness. The witness was considered sufficiently adverse to be examined as to his previous statements to the plaintiff's attorney, and the Judge allowed the witness to be asked whether he did not say the several things stated in the paper containing the heads of his evidence as taken down by plaintiff's attorney.] See as to this case, post.

(4) As to which see further Taylor, Ev., §§ 1404; Starkie, Ev., 167, 168; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 447; Ph. & Arn., Ev., 462; Wharton, Ev., § 500; Stewart Rapalje's op. cit., §§ 242, 216; Best, Ev., § 642.

(5) See Greenough v. Eccles, 5 C. R., N. S., 802, per Williams, J.; and see generally Taylor, Ev., § 1426; Ph. & Arn., 524, 549; Stewart Rapalje's op. cit., §§ 211–216; Wharton, Ev., §§ 749, et seq.; Barr Jones, Ev., §§ 857–862; Best, Ev., § 545, and pp. 800, 801.

(6) This is not the law in India under sa. 154, 155, and post.

(7) v. ante, pp. 768-761.
should, in the opinion of the Judge, prove adverse, the party might, by leave of the Judge, prove that he had made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony. (1)

The question was then debated as to what was the meaning of the word adverse in the statute. Was it meant that the witness himself shall prove hostile to the party calling him, or that the testimony he gives shall be adverse? Upon this question there appears to have been conflicting decisions. In some cases (2) it has been held that a witness is adverse when, in the opinion of the Judge, he bears a hostile feeling to the party calling him (as indicated by his attitude and demeanour and mode of answer) and not merely when his testimony contradicts his proof; but the contrary view has been taken in several other recent cases. (4) It can therefore be hardly said in this state of the authorities (especially in India where the words of sections 154, 155, are alone to be considered) that it is a settled rule that it is only when a witness manifestly shows a hostile personal feeling by his conduct and demeanour that the Court ought to allow his cross-examination and impeachment. The testimony of a witness, if adverse, is only the more dangerous if he shows no hostile disposition; (5) and if he be astute as well as treacherous he will take care to conceal his true sentiments from the Court. In the language of Lord Denman, “it is impossible to conceive a more frightful iniquity than the triumph of falsehood and treachery in a witness who pledges himself to depose to the truth when brought into Court, and in the meantime is persuaded to swear, when he appears, to a completely inconsistent story.” (6) It is, however, easier in the matter of this and the following section to show objection against the existence of any rigid rule than to declare one which shall be of general application should such a declaration be possible or advisable. The Legislature has, however, given two indications that any rule upon this point should be of a liberal character: (a) It has placed no fetter on the discretion of the Court to allow cross-examination under the provisions of section 154; and (b) it has relaxed the rule of English law (7) that a party shall not in any case be allowed to impeach his witness’s credit by general evidence of his bad character. (8) For under the provisions of section 154 the party calling a witness may, with the consent of the Court, impeach his credit by cross-examination by putting all the questions mentioned in section 146 and may, under the provisions of section 155,

(1) See Taylor, Ev., § 1424; the section of the statute is, however, very confused. See the judgment in Greenough v. Eccles, 5 C. B., N. S., 902, supra.

(2) Greenough v. Eccles, 5 C. B., N. S., 786 (1859), per Williams and Wilks, J., Cockburn, C. J., not wholly concurring in the judgment; Reed v. King, 30 L. T., 290 (1858); see Taylor, Ev., p. 938 n. (11).

(3) In Coles v. Coles, L. R., 1 P. & D., 71 (1860). Widde, J. O., adopting counsel’s definition, said: “An adverse witness is one who does not give the evidence which the party calling him wished him to give. A hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court.” But as has been observed (Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 448), this definition, however, might in many cases apply to a favourable witness.

(4) R. v. Little, 15 Cox, 319 (1833); where the objection was expressly taken that there was nothing in the demeanour of the witness to show that she was hostile; yet the evidence was admitted per Day, J., in consultation with Cave, J., Amstell v. Alexander, 16 L. T., N. S., 830 (1867).

(5) In Greenough v. Eccles, 5 C. B., N. S., 786, it is laid down that to enable a party thus to contradict his own witness, the witness must appear not only unfavourable, but actually hostile. There must be some exhibition of animus which this witness does not seem to exhibit. He is, however, in my opinion, adverse, “per Bramwell, B.; Pound v. Wilson, 4 F. & F., 301 (1865), Erle, J. [In this case there were merely different statements and the witness was held adverse]: Dow v. Knight, 1 F. & F., 433 (1859) [a similar case].

(8) The meaning of this rule is that a party after producing a witness cannot prove him to be of such a general bad character as would render him unworthy of credit, Ph. & Arn., 536, 537.
impeach his credit by the independent testimony of persons who testify that they from their knowledge of the witness believe him to be unworthy of credit.
It is, of course, clear that the mere fact that a witness tells two different stories does not necessarily and in all cases show him to be hostile. So it has been held that the mere fact that at a Sessions trial a witness tells a different story from that told by him before the Magistrate does not necessarily make him hostile. The proper inference which may be drawn in such a case from contradictions going to the whole texture of the story being that the witness is neither hostile to this side nor that, but that the witness is one who ought not to be believed unless supported by other satisfactory evidence. (1) But it is also submitted to be clear that where these conflicting statements involve great disrecpeancies and contradictions and are the outcome of fraud, dishonesty and treachery on the part of the witness, the party calling him should be permitted to cross-examine him under this section as to the fact and cause of the discrepancies and contradictions, and if necessary to impeach his credit under section 155 by substantiating the facts contained in the questions put to him by inde-dependent testimony. "If a party, not acting himself a dishonest part, is deceived by his witness—or if a witness professing himself a friend, turns out an enemy, and after promising proof of one kind gives evidence directly contrary —is the party to be restrained from laying the true state of the case before the Court? The common sense of mankind might be expected to answer this proposition in the negative, and to decide that the true state of the case should be made known." (2)

The rules considered are applicable to both criminal (3) and civil cases.
And in England it seems to have been held that the opinion of the Judge as to whether a witness is adverse is final and not the subject of appeal, (4) but this last rule may be held not to have application in this country. A prior contrary statement, it is clear, cannot be admitted as proof of the facts therein asserted:
it can only be admitted for the purpose of neutralising or raising doubt and suspicion as to those parts of the witness's testimony with which the contrary statement is at variance. (5)

See further as to the impeachment of the witness the notes to the following section.

155. The credit of a witness may be impeached in the following ways by the adverse party, or, with the consent of the Court, by the party who calls him:—

(1) by the evidence of persons who testify that they,
from their knowledge of the witness, believe him to be unworthy of credit;

(2) by proof that the witness has been bribed, or has [accepted] (6) the offer of a bribe, or has received any other corrupt inducement to give his evidence;

(3) by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted;

(1) Kalachand S. v. R., 13 C., 53 (1888);
(2) Ph. & Arn., Ev., § 555; see ib., 528, 540.
(3) R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P., 297, 308; R. v.
Little, 15 Cox, 319.
(5) Ph. & Arn., 628; Wright v. Beckett, 1 Moo.
& R., 414.
(6) The word 'in brackets was substituted for 'had' by s. 11 of the Amending Act XVIII of 1872.
(4) when a man is prosecuted for rape or an attempt to ravish, it may be shown that the prosecutrix was of generally immoral character.

Explanation.—A witness declaring another witness to be unworthy of credit may not, upon his examination-in-chief, give reasons for his belief, but he may be asked his reasons in cross-examination, and the answers which he gives cannot be contradicted, though, if they are false, he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence.

Illustrations.

(a) A sues B for the price of goods sold and delivered to B, C says that A delivered the goods to B.

Evidence is offered to show that, on a previous occasion, he said that he had not delivered the goods to B.

The evidence is admissible.

(b) A is indicted for the murder of B.

C says that B, when dying, declared that A had given B the wound of which he died.

Evidence is offered to show that, on a previous occasion, C said that the wound was not given by A or in his presence.

The evidence is admissible.

Principle.—The witness being the medium through which the Court is to arrive at the truth or falsity of the claim or charge in litigation, it is always necessary to ascertain the trustworthiness of this medium. This is the common function of cross-examination which is, however, not in all cases adequate. It is necessary, therefore, that the parties should be empowered to give independent testimony as to the character of the witness with a view to showing that he is unworthy of belief by the Court which may be done in the four ways specified in the section.

s. 3 ("Court.")  s. 3 ("Evidence.")

s. 137 (Examination-in-chief and cross-examination.)

Commentary.

The credit of a witness may be impeached in the following ways: (a) by cross-examination, (1) that is, by eliciting from the witness himself facts disparaging to him; (b) by calling witnesses to disprove his testimony on material points. (2) The credit of a witness is of course indirectly impeached by evidence disproving the facts which he has asserted; (c) by eliciting in cross-examination, or if denied, independently proving the partiality or previous conviction of the witness; (3) or that he has been bribed, or made previous inconsistent statements, or the immoral character of the witness if she be the prosecutrix in a trial for rape; (4) (d) by independent proof that the witness bears such a reputation as to be unworthy of credit. (5)

This classification though corresponding with that generally given in the English text-books is not that adopted by the Act which deals with the above-

---

(1) See ss. 138, 140, 145, 146, 147—154.
(2) Under s. 5, ante, see Taylor, Ev., § 1470; Field, Ev., 657; and v. ante, pp. 761.
(3) 8. 165.
(4) 8. 155, clauses (2), (3), (4).
(5) 8. 166, clause (1).
mentioned matters under the classes of (a) cross-examination; (b) contradiction; (c) impeachment of credit. (3)

(a) Cross-examination may or may not have the effect of impeaching the credit of the witness; a result which depends upon the nature of the questions put to the witness and the answers which he gives to them. (b) A distinction also appears to be drawn between contradicting a witness and impeaching his credit. (4) Where the facts stated by the witness are relevant to the issue, evidence may always be given to contradict them under the provisions of the fifth section, ante. (5) If the fact be one which is not relevant to the suit or proceeding except in so far as it affects the credit of the witness no evidence is admissible in contradiction except in two specified cases. (6) (c) Lastly the impeachment of the credit of a witness is considered and set apart from both cross-examination and contradiction apparently because under the Act a witness's credit may be impeached upon a point upon which there has been no cross-examination and therefore no room for contradiction.

This question of classification is, however, of no great practical importance, as the provisions of this section are in substantial accordance with those of English law on the point, though it is useful to bear it in mind in order to avoid the confusion which is not unlikely to result from the novel view of the matter presented by this Act. The two main points upon which this section differs from English law are that under the first Clause a party may discredit his own witness by proof of such a reputation as renders him unworthy of belief, which may not be done in England; (7) and that apparently it is not necessary under the third Clause to lay a foundation by interrogation of the witness for subsequent evidence in proof of the previous inconsistent statements. (8) In England, further, a party may give proof of such statement by his own witness only where that witness is, in the opinion of the Judge, "adverse." (9) And though doubtless the English practice will be in a large number of cases followed in this respect yet it will be remembered that the Act has left the discretion of the Court wholly unfettered, either to allow or disallow such impeachment as the justice and the particular circumstances of each case may require. "The importance of the section lies in this that it by implication restricts the evidence which may be given (otherwise than in the exceptional cases mentioned in section 153) to impeach a witness's credit—to that specified in the section." (10)

---

(1) S. 138, 140, 145—152, 154.
(2) S. 5, 153.
(3) S. 155.
(4) See Field, Ev., 661.
(5) See Cunningham, Ev., 372. The Bombay High Court in R. v. Sathorban Mukundji, 11 Bom. H. C. R., 169 (1871), appear to consider that the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act for the contradiction of witnesses is less extensive than that of the English law. If, however, s. 5 be read with those sections, it will, I think, be seen that they are identical. And see Field, Ev., 651, where it is said, "the Evidence Act assumes that where the facts are relevant evidence may be given to contradict." The express provisions of s. 5, however, renders unnecessary this recourse to an implied rule. It is also to be observed that the questions whether contradicting evidence upon relevant points may be given is in part a question of procedure; see Field, Ev., 651, 652, and the Explanation to s. 5, ante.

(6) S. 153, v. ib., Exceptions (1) and (2). This section does not appear to be accurately expressed, for there is at least one other common case where the witness may be contradicted. If the witness be asked in cross-examination whether he made a previous inconsistent statement and denies having done so, independent evidence may be given to contradict that statement under s. 154, clause (3). In Field, Ev., 651, the following explanation is given: "In these two exceptional cases [those mentioned in s. 153], the evidence is allowed to contradict answers to questions actually put. The evidence allowed by s. 155 to impeach the witness's credit may apparently be given although the witness has not been questioned upon the point unless some other portion of the Act prohibit it—see e.g., s. 145."

(7) v. ante, p. 784.
(8) v. ante, s. 145.
(9) v. ante, pp. 783-785.
(10) Markby, Ev., 199.
The rules with regard to the impeachment of witnesses apply to both criminal and civil cases, and by the terms of the section, the same impeaching evidence may be given in the case both of the adversary's and the party's own witness. As to the cases in which a party may discredit his own witness, see the Notes to the preceding section.

Clause (1).

Independent evidence may be given that an adversary's (or with the leave of the Court a party's own) witness bears such a general reputation for untruthfulness, (1) or perhaps for moral turpitude generally, (2) that he is unworthy of credit. According to the theory of English law such evidence should relate to general reputation only and not express the mere opinion of the impeaching witness. It is not sufficient that the impeaching witness should profess merely to state what he has heard "others" say; for those others may be but few. He must be able to state what is generally said of the person by those among whom he dwells, or by those with whom he is chiefly conversant; for it is this only which constitutes his general reputation. Though as observed the English theory requires that the witness should not express his own opinion, yet in practice the regular mode of examining is to ask the witness whether he knows the general reputation among the person's neighbours and what that reputation is, and then whether from such knowledge he would believe the person whose veracity is impeached, upon his oath. (3) The Explanation to this section is in accordance with English law upon the point. The impeaching witness cannot in direct examination give particular instances of the other's falsehood, or dishonesty, but upon cross-examination he may be asked as to his means of knowledge of the other's witness, his feelings, if any, towards him and the like, and the answers to these questions cannot be contradicted. (4)
Where a witness's veracity has been attacked his credit may be re-established either by the cross-examination of the impeaching witness (v. ante), or by independent general evidence that the impeached witness is worthy of credit; (5) and the party whose witness has been attacked may re-criminate, that is, the im-peaching witness may in his turn be attacked either in cross-examination or by independent general evidence with a view to show that he is unworthy of credit, but no further re-crimination than this is probably allowable. (6) Where the general reputation of the witness for truth and veracity is proven to be bad, the Court may properly disregard his evidence except in so far as he is corroborated by other credible testimony. (7)

Clause (2).

This clause runs "has accepted the offer of a bribe," but was originally framed "has had the offer of a bribe." The substitution was probably grounded upon the ruling in the case of the Attorney-General v. Hutchcock, (8) where it was held that the fact that the witness has accepted a bribe to testify may, if denied, be proved, though a mere admission by the witness that he has been offered a bribe cannot; Pollock, C. B., remarking that it was no disarrangement to a man that a bribe is offered to him though it may be a disparagement to the person who makes the offer. (9)

(1) Taylor, Ev., §§ 1470—1473.
(2) Taylor, Ev., § 1471, where the view is expressed that the enquiry need not be restricted to reputation for veracity, but may involve the witness's entire moral character, the opposite party being at liberty to enquire whether in spite of bad character in other respects the impeached witness has not preserved his reputation for truth.
The weight of American authority confines the enquiry to the reputation of the witness for truth
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1470. In practice the question is generally shortened thus, "from your knowledge of the witness would you believe him on his oath?" R. v. Rivas, 1 C. C. R., 70. See the question of the propriety of this question discussed in Burr Jones, Ev., § 865.
(4) Steph. Dig., Art. 133; Taylor, Ev., § 1473; Norton, Ev., 334. There are peculiar reasons for allowing a searching cross-examination of the impeaching witnesses; see Burr Jones, Ev., § 864.
(5) Taylor, Ev., § 1473; 2 Ph. & Am., Ev., 804.
(6) Id., and see Wharton, Ev., §§ 568, 589.
(7) Burr Jones, Ev., § 866, and cases there cited.
(8) Ex. R., 91.
(9) See, however, criticism in Cunningham
The witness may be impeached by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted. See Illustrations (a) and (b). In the undermentioned case,(1) Wilson, J., said: "I am inclined to think that in the third clause of section 155 of the Evidence Act the words 'which is liable to be contradicted,' mean 'which is relevant to the issue.' Any statements verbal, as well as written, may be used for this purpose; but where the statement is in writing the provisions of section 145, ante, should be followed. In fact, though it is not so expressly laid down and required by the Act in the case of verbal statements,(2) the witness should always, if possible, be specifically asked whether he made such and such a statement before he is contradicted through another witness.

It is always relevant to put to a witness any question which, if answered in the affirmative, would qualify or contradict some previous part of his testimony given in the trial of the issue; and if such question be put and be answered in the negative, the opposite party may then contradict the witness, and for this simple reason that the contradiction would qualify or contradict the previous part of the witness's testimony and so neutralise its effect.(3) On the principle just pointed out if a case be such as to render evidence of opinion admissible and material, the witness may on cross-examination be asked whether he has not on some particular occasion expressed a different opinion upon the same subject, and if he deny the fact it may be proved by other evidence. But the previous opinion as to the merits of the cause of a witness who has simply testified to a fact cannot be regarded as relevant to the issue and cannot therefore be given in evidence.(4)

When it is intended to throw discredit upon the evidence of any witness nothing is more common in practice (especially in criminal cases) than for the Counsel for the defence to prove, if it can be proved, that that witness has previously made statements inconsistent with his evidence at the trial. When this fact is satisfactorily established, the Court cannot but regard the evidence of such witness with suspicion, and the fact is established by the evidence of any one to whom such statements were made, or in whose presence or hearing they were made.(5) A statement reduced to writing by a police-officer under section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be used as evidence.(6) But though it is not evidence, the police-officer to whom it was made may use it to refresh his memory under section 159 of this Act, and may be cross-examined upon it by the party against whom the testimony aided by it is given. The person making the statement may also be questioned about it; and with a view to impeach his credit, the police-officer, or any other person in whose hearing this statement was made can be examined on the point under this section.(7)

Ev., 372, 373, where it is said: "The alteration, like several of the amendments introduced by Act XVIII of 1872, appears to have been made without adequate regard to the consideration which led the original framers of the Act to word it as they did.""

(1) Kadijah Khinam v. Abdool Kurien, 17 C., 344, 346 (1889); reported to the authors to have been followed by Sale, J., in Rammuboh Sengupta v. V. L. Roy, suit No. 630 of 1893, Calcutta High Court, May 7th, 1893. Quoted, however, whether those words do not refer to any part of the witness's evidence "which relates to a fact in issue or relevant, or which falls within the exceptions to s. 153;" Cunningham, Ev., 373.

(2) In England the circumstances of the supposed statement must be put to the witness, Taylor, Ev., § 1445; see Fish, Ev., 683; Wharton, Ev., § 555, v. post.

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1446.
(4) ib.; and see Wharton, Ev., § 651.
(5) R. v. Uttamchand 11 Rom. H. C. R., 120, 121, 122 (1874), per Nanabhai Haridas, J.
(6) Under the preceding Code it was held that it could not be used as evidence for the accused. R. v. Siiram Vishal, 11 B., 657 (1887); that the statement itself cannot be used as direct evidence: R. v. Taj Khan, 17 A., 57, 60 (1894); nor against him, Cr. Pr. Code, s. 162.
(7) R. v. Siiram Vishal, supra; R. v. Uttamchand, 11 Rom. H. C. R., 120 (1874); R. v. Ismail Valad 11 B., 659 (1897); R. v. Madho, 15 A., 25 (1892); In re Kali Churn Where, however, it appeared that but for the principal witness for the defence having been discredited by means of proof of a previous inconsistent statement made by the said witness before the investigating officer, the accused would have been acquitted, it was held under the preceding Code that this amounted to a using of such statement as evidence against the accused within the meaning of section 162.(1)

Statements of witnesses recorded by a police-officer while making an investigation under section 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code form no portion of the police-diaries referred to in section 172, and an accused person on his trial has a right to call for and inspect such statements and cross-examine the wittnesses thereon(2) and a police-officer cannot by recording in his diary the depositions of witnesses taken down by him under section 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code protect them from being used by the accused according to the provisions of the law.(3)

Where the impeaching declarations were oral it is of course necessary to call the persons who heard them.(4) A statement by J to H was reported at the thana by the latter and there recorded: held that though the evidence of J could be contradicted by the evidence of H proving the statement made to him by J it could not under this clause be contradicted by what the police recorded as the first information (6) Generally, whenever on a former occasion, it was the duty of the witness to state the whole truth, it is admissible to show that the witness in his evidence omitted facts sworn to by him at the trial and that he now states fact which he then did not state.(6) To make the impeach-ing statement admissible, it must be in some point a contradictory opposite of the statement made by the witness on trial. If the two statements are recon-cilable, one cannot be received to contradict the other.(7) Impeaching evidence is admissible, even though the witness when cross-examined as to the contradicting expressions should say he is uncertain whether he made them or not.(8) According to the English statute,(9) it is required that before proof of such statement can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, should be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he had made such statement. In other words it is necessary before giving evidence for the purpose of contradicting a witness to lay a foundation for the evidence to be given by the interrogation of the witness himself and by obtaining his denial or non-admission This is not made necessary by the terms of the present section.(10) But it is both usual and advisable and just to the witness to first interrogate him wherever that be possible in order that he may be able to deny, admit or explain his statement.(11) The Act has made this necessary in the case of written statements,(12) (v. ante.) except where the witness is a party [in which case his previous statement may be relevant as an admission],(13) the previous contradictory statement is not admissible as proof of the facts therein asserted : it can

8 C., 154, 156 (1881); a. c., 10 C. L. R., 51; Rophami Singh v. R., 9 C., 465, 468 (1882);
62. C., 11 C. L. R., 671.
(2) Dinko Khan v. R., 16 C., 610 (1889); Maho-med Ali v. R., 16 C. 612n. (1889); Shenu Shaw
v. R., 920 C., 642 (1899); contra R. v. Mannu, 19 A., 390, F. S. (1867); Banerji and Alkman, J.; dissenting.
(3) Shenu Shaw v. R., 20 C., 642 (1893).
(4) Wharton, Ev., § 533.
(5) R. v. Dima Bodra,
9 C. W. N., 218 (1903)
at p. 221.
(6) Wharton, Ev., § 554.
(7) Wharton, Ev., § 555.
(9) 38 & 29 Vic., c. 18, s. 1; Taylor, Ev., § 1445.
(10) Cunningham, Ev., 372; Field, Ev., 693.
(11) Wharton, Ev., § 555; Burr Jones, Ev., § 849. This was laid down to be the proper course in R. v. Madho, 15 A., 25 (1892), and v. ante, last note to a. 146. When witnesses under examination make statements which are contrary to statements previously made by them, the Court ought to draw their attention to the contradiction.
(12) S. 146.
(13) See Burr Jones, Ev., § 654.
only be admitted to impeach the credit of the witness and for the purpose of neutralising or raising doubt or suspicion as to those parts of the witness's testimony with which the contrary statement is at variance. (1) So two persons made statements to the effect that C and another had robbed them and caused hurt while doing so. One statement was made to their employer and the other to the Head Constable. C was subsequently charged, and these two persons were called as witnesses for the prosecution, but they then denied that C was one of the men who had assaulted them. It was held that the former statements referred to and which implicated the accused could be used only under this clause for discrediting their evidence and not as substantive evidence against the accused. (2) It is not necessary in order to introduce such contradictory evidence that it should contradict statements made by the witness in his examination-in-chief. Ordinarily the process is to ask the witness on cross-examination whether on a former occasion he did not make a statement conflicting with that made by him on his examination-in-chief. But the conflict may take place as to matters originating in the cross-examination; and then, if such matters are material, contradiction by this process is equally permissible. (3) A statement to contradict the evidence of a witness may be contained in a series of documents, not one of which taken by itself would amount to a contradiction of his evidence. (4)

The Act as originally drafted contained the following additional section relating to the subject of character:—"In trials for rape or attempts to commit rape, the fact that the woman on whom the alleged offence was committed is a common prostitute or that her conduct was generally unchaste is relevant." It was, however, thought necessary to retain this as a separate section, and it was accordingly incorporated with the present one. In the case now mentioned evidence is receivable not so much to shake the credit of the witness as to show directly that the act in question has not been committed. In trials for rape or attempts to commit that crime not only is evidence of general bad character admissible under the first clause to show that the prosecutrix ought not to be believed upon her oath, but so also is proof that she is a reputed prostitute, for it goes far towards raising an inference that she yielded willingly. In such cases general evidence of this kind will on this ground be received though the woman be not called as a witness and though, if called, she be not asked, in cross-examination, any questions tending to impeach her character for chastity. Counsel for the defence cannot, however, prove specific immoral acts with the prisoner unless he has first given the prosecutrix an opportunity of denying or explaining them. Moreover, the prosecutrix if cross-examined as to particular acts of immorality with other men, may decline to answer such questions, while if she answers them in the negative, witnesses cannot be called to contradict her. (5)

The Act does not in terms provide for either of these: but as already observed, (6) according to English practice when a witness's character for truth and veracity has been directly impeached the party calling him may sustain his character by countervailing proof, and the character of the impeaching witness for truth and veracity may itself be attacked. Whether a collateral attack admits sustaining testimony, that is, such a course is open when the witness is attacked upon the other grounds mentioned in this section, or in sections 153, 146, is a matter upon which there has been conflict in the reported cases here. (1) v. ante, p. 709 they may be independently proved. R. v. Riley, 18 R. B. D., 481; Taylor, Ev., § 1441. (2) R. v. Cheraud Chery, 25 M., 191 (1802). (3) Wharton, Ev., § 582. (4) Jackson v. Thompson, 1 B. & S., 745. (5) Taylor, Ev., § 383. But to show consent she may be cross-examined as to other immoral acts with the prisoner, and if she denies them (6) v. ante, p. 709 and Wharton, Ev., §§ 588, 589; and as to the order of introduction of evidence which is at discretion of the Court, v. ante, § 571.
referred to. (1) It has been held in America that a witness’s character is so far impeached by putting in evidence his conviction of felony that evidence is admissible of his good reputation for truth. (2) It is a matter of doubt whether such testimony can be received merely upon proof of prior conflicting statements of the witness or upon the eliciting of answers disparaging to the witness in cross-examination. (3) On the other hand, it has been said that where the opposing case is that the witness testified under corrupt motives this being involved in the attack on his credibility, it is but proper that such evidence should be rebutted. (4) The arguments for the admission of rebutting testimony to good character in all cases is that since the object of the attack is to impeach the witness, the mode of such attack is immaterial, and that the same reasons exist for sustaining the witness as where witnesses are called to testify directly to his bad reputation; on the other hand, it is said that the admissibility of the evidence in all cases may lead to confusion and the multiplicity of collateral issues. (5) It is of course clear that in any case and as a general rule a party cannot fortify the credit of his witness by proving good character for truth until the credibility of the witness has been assailed. (6)

156. When a witness whom it is intended to corroborate gives evidence of any relevant fact, he may be questioned as to any other circumstances which he observed at or near to the time or place at which such relevant fact occurred, if the Court is of opinion that such circumstances, if proved, would corroborate the testimony of the witness as to the relevant fact which he testifies.

_Illustration._

A, an accomplice, gives an account of a robbery in which he took part. He describes various incidents unconnected with the robbery which occurred on his way to and from the place where it was committed.

Independent evidence of these facts may be given in order to corroborate his evidence as to the robbery itself.

_Principle._—See Note, _post._

s. 3 ("Fact.") s. 3 ("Court.") s. 3 ("Relevant.")

Markby Ev., 109, 110: Cunningham, Ev., 156.

COMMENTARY.

This section provides for the admission of evidence given for the purpose of proving a directly relevant fact but of testing the witness’s truthfulness. There is often no better way of doing this than by ascertaining the accuracy of contradictory statements or of other improper conduct on his part has been either elicited from a witness on cross-examination, or obtained from other witnesses with the view of impeaching his veracity—his general character for truth being thus in some sort put in issue, general evidence that he is a man of strict integrity and scrupulous regard for truth will be admitted.

(1) See the subject discussed in _Burr. Jones, Ev._ § 870.
(3) _Wharton, Ev._, p. 557, note (1) and cases there cited; _Burr. Jones, Ev._, § 870. It is said to be the better view that the evidence is not admissible though there are cases to the contrary: _Burr. Jones, Ev._, §§ 871, 870. In _Taylor, Ev._, § 1476, however, the rule is stated to be that "where evidence of of his evidence as to surrounding circumstances though they are not so immediately connected with the facts of the case as to be in themselves relevant. While on the one hand, important corroboration may be given in the case of a truthful witness, a valuable field for cross-examination and exposure is afforded in the case of a false witness. In order to prepare the ground for their corroboration, it is necessary to elicit these surrounding circumstances in the first instance from the witness himself, and for this the section makes provision.\(^{(1)}\) This section in effect declares evidence of certain facts to be admissible; and if it had not been inserted the Judge would have had to determine the relevancy of these facts by reference to the 7th and 11th sections; and he might perhaps have been influenced by the practice in England which has been against the admission of such evidence.\(^{(2)}\)

157. In order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, may be proved.

Principle.—The force of any corroboration by means of previous consistent statements depends upon the truth of the proposition that he who is consistent deserves to be believed. The corroborative value, however, of such previous statements is of a very varying character dependent upon the circumstances of each case, and a person may equally persistently adhere to falsehood once uttered, if there be a motive for it.\(^{(3)}\)

\(^{(1)}\) Cunningham, Ev., s. 156.
\(^{(2)}\) Markby, Ev., 100, 110.
\(^{(4)}\) Wharton, Ev., § 570; Taylor, Ev., § 1476; Starkie, Ev., 253; Best, Ev., p. 600. In certain cases previous similar statements are admissible see Phipson, Ev., 3rd ed., 149.
\(^{(5)}\) Best, Ev., p. 800.
\(^{(6)}\) Whart n, Ev., § 570.

COMMENTARY.

This section is not in accordance with English practice, according to which evidence of prior statements is not generally admissible to corroborate a witness.\(^{(4)}\) It is argued that by offering a witness a party is held to recommend him as worthy of credence, and warranting his veracity, corroboration is not permitted.\(^{(5)}\) That former statements are no proof that entirely different statements may not have been made at other times and are therefore no evidence of constancy; that if the sworn statements are of doubtful credibility those made without the sanction of an oath or its equivalent cannot corroborate them; (6) that a witness having given a contrary account although not upon oath necessarily impeaches either his veracity or his memory: but his having asserted the same thing does not in general carry his credibility further than nor so far as his oath.\(^{(7)}\) The section, however, proceeds upon the principle that consistency is a ground for belief in the witness’s veracity.\(^{(8)}\) So Chief Baron

\(^{(5)}\) Starkie, Ev., 253.
\(^{(6)}\) R. v. Manap bin, 11 Bom. H. C. R., 196, 198 (1874); R. v. Rupin Bines, 10 G., 970, 973 (1884). It had long been the practice in India to admit this evidence; see Act II of 1855, s. 31. The provisions of which have been simplified and reproduced in the above section. See R. v. Bishoowath Ful, 12 W. R., Cr., [9 (1869); R. v. Bisem Naid, 7 W. R., Cr., 31 (1867).
Gilbert was of opinion that the party who called a witness against whom contradictory statements had been proved (1) might show that he had affirmed the same thing before on other occasions and that he was therefore "consistent with himself." (2)

The section thus declares certain statements to be relevant which but for it might have been open to the objection of being hearsay; (3) the only condition being that this previous statement shall have been made (a) either about the time of the occurrence or (b) before a competent authority. This condition is to some extent, a safeguard against fictitious statements designedly made to support subsequent evidence; but it is obvious that the corroborative value of such previous statements depends entirely on the circumstances of each case, and that they may easily be altogether valueless. The mere fact of a man having on a previous occasion made the same assertion generally, though not always (4) adds but little to the chances of its truthfulness, and such evidence should be distinguished from that which is really corroborative. (5) One may persistently adhere to falsehood once uttered if there is a motive for it; and should the value of such a corroboration ever come to be rated higher than it is now, nothing would be easier than (to take an example) for designing and unscrupulous persons to procure the conviction of any innocent men who might be obnoxious to them, by first committing offences and afterwards making statements to different people and at different times and places, implicating those innocent men. (6) "The statement, which may be proved under the section in order to corroborate, may be a statement made either on oath or otherwise, and either in ordinary conversation or before some person who had authority to question the person who made it. It may also be verbal or in writing. If not made before any person legally competent to investigate the fact, it would seem that it must have been made at or about the time when the fact took place." (7) In India perhaps more particularly than in other countries the statements made by those who have knowledge of the circumstances connected with the commission of an offence, immediately after the occurrence and before they can be tampered with by the police or others, are important to the ascertainment of truth." (8) Where a person making a dying declaration chances to live, his statement cannot be admitted in evidence as a dying declaration under s. 32, but it may be relied on under this section to corroborate the testimony of the complainant when examined in the case. (9) This section which lays down the general rule must be taken subject to the exception contained in the special rule enacted by section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which makes statements to the police other than dying declarations inadmissible in evidence. (10)

The evidence is only admissible in corroboration. In the aforementioned case, (11) in which the prisoner had been tried and convicted of an offence the depositions of witnesses given in a previous trial of other persons charged with having been engaged in the same offence were used against him. The witnesses instead of being examined in the ordinary way were re-sworn and said, "I gave evidence before in this Court and that evidence is true." The irregularity and

---

(1) This is not necessary under the section.
(2) Gilbert, Ev., 135, 136.
(3) Markby, Ev., 110; in Gilbert Ev., 135, 136, those statements are treated as exceptions to the hearsay rule.
(4) An instance of the value of such evidence in this country is pointed out in the quotation from Field, Ev., 655, cited post.
(5) Cunningham, Ev., s. 157.
(8) Field, Ev., 655; and see Markby, Ev., 108.
(9) "There is no doubt that this kind of evidence is extremely useful in criminal cases where there is a suggestion that a witness is telling a made-up story."
injustice of this mode of proceeding were commented upon, and it was pointed out that the depositions containing the statements of a witness as to the commission of the offence in the earlier trial would have been admissible to corroborate his testimony given in the trial of the prisoner. The evidence of the witness whose testimony it was proposed to corroborate should have been first taken and after such witness had finished his evidence, and not before, the former deposition might have been put in, not to add to his testimony, but simply to corroborate it by showing that the statements made by him, while the facts were still fresh in his memory, correspond with those made by him in the Court of Session in the present case. In the case cited, at the time when each deposition was put in, the evidence of the witness not having been given in the Court of Session, there was nothing in the record which made it admissible. There was in fact nothing which was corroborated by it. In the aforementioned case(1) a witness was asked with a view to corroborating another person intended to be called as a witness whether or not the latter person had made any statement to him with respect to one of the matters in suit. It was held that as this section refers to the corroborative evidence of the testimony of a witness, ordinarily before corroborative evidence is admissible, the evidence sought to be corroborated must have been given. The Court had no doubt a discretion to allow evidence to be given under this section out of the regular order upon an undertaking by counsel to call the witness sought to be corroborated, though such a course will be found in most cases to be inconvenient. If necessary, a witness will be allowed to be recalled to give evidence under this section after the person sought to be corroborated has given his evidence.(2)

Such statements must also be regularly proved by the person who received them or by some one who heard them given.(3) When it is desired to corroborate a witness by a previous deposition, or by a first information report, recorded under section 184, Criminal Procedure Code, these documents must be produced, for they are documents required by law to be reduced to writing, and secondary evidence of their contents cannot be given.(4) The case of a statement by way of complaint against the commission of a crime has been already dealt with by the eighth section Illustrations (j) and (k), ante. As independent evidence of a fact statements are, by that section, relevant as conduct, if they accompany and explain facts other than statements.(5) The evidence requisite for the corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice must proceed from an independent and reliable source and previous statements made by the accomplice himself, though consistent with the evidence given by him at the trial, are insufficient for such corroboration. The statement of the accomplice, whether made at the trial, or before the trial, and in whatever shape comes before the Court, is still only the statement of an accomplice and does not at all improve in value by repetition.(6)

158. Whenever any statement, relevant under section 32 or 33, is proved, all matters may be proved either in order to contradict or to corroborate it, or in order to impeach or confirm the credit of the person by whom it was made, which might have been proved if that person had been

---

(1) Nisarini Dossee v. Nundo Lall, 5 C. W. N., xvi, (1900).
(2) Ib.
(3) B. v. Biswas Nath, 7 W. R., Cr., 31 (1867).
(4) Field, Ev., 665; see s. 91, ante, for an instance of the use of a deposition, in corroboration, see R. v. Labri Singh, 8 A., 672 (1880).
(5) v. ante, s. 8.
(6) R. v. Makaia Bis, 11 Bom. H. C. R., 196 (1874); R. v. Bejan Biswas, 10 C., 970, 973 (1863); nor can the confession of one of the prisoners be used to corroborate the evidence of an accomplice against the others; R. v. Makaia Bis, upra. called as a witness and had denied upon cross-examination the truth of the matter suggested.

Principle.—See Note, post.

s. 3 ("Relevant.")

s. 33, 33 (Statements by persons who cannot be called as witnesses.)

s. 153 (Evidence to contradict.)

COMMENTARY.

This section refers to certain statements made by persons, who from some unavoidable cause cannot be produced, and of which under sections 32 and 33 evidence may, in the circumstances there described, be given. The present section has the effect of exposing any such statement, when admitted, as far as may be, to all the scrutiny and giving it the advantage of all the corroboration, which it would have had on the cross-examination of the person making it. The statements admissible under section 32 and 33 are exceptional cases, and the evidence is only admitted from the impossibility, improbability or great inconvenience of producing the authors of the statements. It is only just, therefore, that all the same safeguards for veracity should be provided as if the authors of the statements were themselves before the Court and subjected to oath and cross-examination.(1) So with regard to the impeachment of witnesses the general rule applies where the witness whose testimony is attacked is deceased or absent. Thus where the testimony given on a former trial by a witness, since deceased, was read to the jury, it was held competent to show that such witness had stated since the trial that such statement was untrue.(2)

159. A witness may, while under examination, refresh his memory by referring to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards that the Court considers it likely that the transaction was at that time fresh in his memory.

The witness may also refer to any such writing made by any other person, and read by the witness within the time aforesaid, if when he read it he knew it to be correct.

Whenever a witness may refresh his memory by reference to any document, he may, with the permission of the Court, refer to a copy of such document: Provided the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient reason for the non-production of the original.

An expert may refresh his memory by reference to professional treatises.

---

(1) Norton, Ev. 335, 336; Cunningham, Ev., s. 158.

(2) Crafts v. Com., 44 Ky., 255 (Amer.), cited with other American cases in Burr. Jones Ev., § 849, where the passage read "incompetent," but this appears to be a mistake. For another instance of the application of this section, see the case of Foot Kinsey v. Nobis Chandler, cited ante, at p. 225, 235.
160. A witness may also testify to facts mentioned in any such document as is mentioned in section 159, although he has no specific recollection of the facts themselves, if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document.

Illustration.

A book-keeper may testify to facts recorded by him in books regularly kept in the course of business, if he knows that the books were correctly kept, although he has forgotten the particular transactions entered.

161. Any writing referred to under the provisions of the two last preceding sections must be produced and shown to the adverse party if he requires it; such party may, if he pleases, cross-examine the witness thereupon.

Principle.—Though there are some objections to such a course, (1) it is yet clear that an important aid to exactness would be neglected, if human memory and inaccuracy being what they are a witness were not at liberty to justify his recollection of facts by reference to written memoranda concerning them. (2) It is desirable to secure the full benefit of the witness’s recollection as to the whole of the facts, (3) and that a witness should not suffer from a mistake and may explain an inconsistency. (4) It is further to be observed that the committing of a statement to writing calls forth unavoidably a greater degree of attention than the exhibition of it {vivo voce} in the way of ordinary conversation. If this be done honestly at the time of the occurrence which forms the subject of the statement or so soon afterwards that the incidents must have been fresh in the writer’s memory, the writing is a most reliable means of preserving the truth, more reliable indeed than simple memory itself. (5) The law, however, here prescribes certain conditions with a view to securing that the memoranda so employed shall be trustworthy. These conditions are laid down by the sections above mentioned. (6) The witness may be cross-examined as to the paper in his hands since in no other way can the accuracy and recollection of the witness be ascertained; and it is only by the production and inspection of the document and by such cross-examination that it can be ascertained whether the memorandum does assist the memory or not. (7) The right of production, inspection and cross-examination is necessary to check the use of improper documents and to compare the witness’s oral testimony with his written statement. (8)

s. 3 ("Court.")

COMMENTARY.

A witness will be allowed to have his memory, respecting anything upon which he is questioned, refreshed by means of written memoranda. It is not

(1) See Goodeve, Ev., 207, citing Bentham. See also his Judicial Evidence, Ch., 11, "Note whether consultable."
(2) Cunningham, Ev., 377; for the grounds of admission where the document cannot be said strictly to refresh the memory, see Notes, post.
(3) In re Jhubbog Mahlon, 8 C., 739, 744, 745 (1882), per Field, J.
(4) Hollday v. Holody, 17 H. T., 0. S., 18.
(6) Cunningham, Ev. 377.
(7) Wharton, Ev., 825; Burr Jones, Ev., § 879.
(8) In re Jhubbog Mahlon, 8 C., 739, 745 (1882), per Field, J. necessary that the document referred to should be one which is admissible in evidence. So in an action for money lent, an insufficiently stamped promissory note purporting to be signed by the defendant and expressed to be given for money lent was put into the defendant's hands by the plaintiffs' counsel for the purpose of refreshing his memory and obtaining from him an admission of the loan:

held that the plaintiffs were entitled to use the note for that purpose notwithstanding the provision of the Stamp Act, that an instrument not duly stamped 'shall not be given in evidence or be available for any purpose, whatever.' (1) It has been said (2) that there are three classes of cases in which this may be allowed: — (a) Where the writing serves only to revive or assist the memory of the witness and to bring to his mind a recollection of the facts. This is the case referred to in section 159. Here the writing is in the stricter sense used to refresh the memory, that is, the witness has a present memory of the facts after the inspection of the writing. In this case the document is resorted to to revive a faded memory, and the witness swears from the actual recollection of the facts which the document evokes. (3) Memory is in other words restored. (b) Where the witness recollects having seen the writing before, and though he has no independent recollection of the facts mentioned in it, yet remembers that, at the time he saw it, he knew the contents to be correct, see section 160, Illustration. (4) In this case the witness has no present memory of the fact itself, but if the witness be correct in that which he does positively state from present recollection, viz., that at a prior time he had a perfect recollection and having that recollection, says, it was truly stated in the document produced, the writing though its contents are thus but mediately proved, must be true. (5) (c) Where it brings to the mind of the witness neither any recollection of the facts mentioned in it, nor any recollection of the writing itself, but which nevertheless enables him to swear to a particular fact from the conviction of his mind on seeing a writing which he knows to be genuine. In this case the testimony of the witness is admissible to prove a fact, although he has neither any recollection of the fact itself, nor mediate knowledge of the fact by means of a memorial of the truth of which he has a present recollection. This happens when the memorandum is such as to enable the witness to state with certainty that it would not have been made had not the fact in question been true. Here the truth of the evidence does not wholly depend on the contents of the document itself or on any recollection of the witness of the document itself, or of the circumstances under which it was made, but upon a conviction arising from the knowledge of his own habits and conduct sufficiently strong to make the existence of the document wholly irreconcilable with the non-existence of the fact, and so to convince him of the affirmative. (6) Thus, in proving the execution of an instrument (one of the most ordinary and cogent cases within this class) where a witness, called to prove the execution of a deed, sees his signature to the attestation, and says he is thereby sure that he saw the party execute the deed, that is a sufficient proof of the execution of the deed, although the witness should add that he has no recollection of the fact of the execution of the deed. (7) The admission of such evidence is, however, not confined to attestations of the execution of written instruments. (8)

(1) Birchall v. Bellough, 1 Q. B. (1898), 325.
(2) 2 Ph. & Arn., §§ 480, 481; followed in Greenleaf, Ev., § 437; Burr. Jones, Ev., §§ 878, 884; Stewart Rapalje's op. cit., 461, 462; Starkie, Ev., 177, 178; Taylor, Ev., § 1412; Powell, Ev., 406, 407; and other writers. These sections substantially follow the English rules in these matters.
(4) And cases cited in Taylor, Ev., § 1412.
(5) Starkie, Ev., 177, 178.
(6) Starkie, Ev., 178.
(7) Per Bayley, J., in Maugham v. Hubbard, 8 B. & C., 14; and see Stringer v. Goodson, 5 Bing. N. C., 738; see Taylor, Ev., § 1412.
(8) Maugham v. Hubbard, supra.
These last two classes, which may logically be considered together, are the subject-matter of section 160. (1) In the two latter classes of cases, it is of course essential that the witness should, on seeing the writing, be able to depose positively to the facts to which he is examined, although he may have no present recollection of them independently of the writing. (2) Section 159 deals with cases in which the witness really does refresh his memory. In the cases referred to by section 160 the document is resorted to, to "give a record of the past, the life of a present deposition by the witness's attestation of its truth, even where memory itself may wholly have vanished." (3) This is perhaps hardly logically termed "refreshing the memory," though undoubtedly it is so called in practice. (4) The witness, after referring to the writing, so as to the fact not because he remembers it, but because of his confidence in the correctness of the writing. (5) As to the use of a copy in the cases dealt with in section 160, v. post.

The section says, the witness may refer to any writing. It is immaterial therefore what the document is, whether it be a book of account, letter, bill of particulars of articles furnished including such items are dates, weights and prices, way-bills, notes made by the witness or any other document whatsoever which is effectual to assist the memory of the witness. (6) As to the significance of the words "while under examination," v. post, note to section 161. If the witness has become blind, the paper may be read over to him for the purpose of exciting his recollections. (7) And it has been held in America that where a paper is signed with the mark of a witness, who cannot read or write, it may be read over to him to the same purpose. (8)

A statement reduced to writing by a police-officer under section 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be used as evidence. But though it is not evidence, the police-officer to whom it was made may use it to refresh his memory under section 159 of this Act, and may be cross-examined upon it by the party against whom the testimony aided by it is given. (9) Statements of witnesses recorded by a police-officer while making an investigation under section 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code form no portion of the police-diaries referred to in section 172 of the same Code, and an accused person on his trial has a right to call for and inspect such statements and cross-examine the witnesses thereon; (10) and a police-officer cannot by entering statements of witnesses recorded by him under section 161 in his diary kept under section 172 protect them from such use as the law allows, e.g., under sections 145 and 150 of this Act. (11) The

---

(1) Field, Ev., 657. The want of recollection of the facts mentioned in the two latter classes, though it does not affect the admissibility of the evidence, must yet be considered in deciding upon the amount of value to be assigned to it; id., 657, 658.

(3) Good Eve, Ev., 290. In the first of the three classes memory is restored, and in the second history is verified, id., 213.

(4) So s. 160, speaks of "testify to facts" instead of "refresh his memory" as in s. 159. But the witness can only testify in the manner mentioned in the text; see Markby, Ev., 111, 112.

(5) Davis v. Field, 56 Vt. 426 (Amer.). It has also been said that the witness is allowed to testify to the matter so recorded because he knows he could not have made the entry unless the fact had been true: Costello v. Crowell, 133 Mass., 352 (Amer.).

(7) Taylor, Ev., § 1410.

(8) Commonwealth v. Fox, 7 Gray (Mass.), 586 (Amer.), cited in Stewart Ripalje's op. cit., § 285; it should not be read before the jury, but the witness should withdraw with one of the Counsel for each side and have it read to him by them without comment; id., and see Burr. Jones, Ev., § 883.

statement of a person recorded under section 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code is inadmissible under that section though it may be used by the Police- officer who recorded it to refresh his memory. (1)

The dying statement of a deceased person if not taken in the presence of the accused and as a formal deposition must, before it is admitted in evidence, be proved to have been made by the deceased. The statement may be proved in the ordinary way by the person who heard it, and the writing may be used for the purpose of refreshing the witness's memory. (2)

A medical man in giving evidence may refresh his memory by referring to a report which he has made of his post-mortem examination, but the report itself cannot be treated as evidence and no facts can be taken therefrom. (3) In Scotish law in the case of medical or other scientific reports or certificates which are lodged in process before the trial and libelled on as productions in the indictment, the witness is allowed to read the report as his deposition to the jury, confirming it at its close by a declaration on his oath that it is a true report. (4)

"In India the rule is slightly different, though similar in principle. Where a dead body is sent to the Civil Surgeon in order to the making of a post-mortem examination, a printed form is sent therewith, which the Civil Surgeon fills up on examining the body. The report is not itself legal evidence [v. ante.] but it is usually placed in the hands of the Civil Surgeon, who refreshes his memory from its contents, when giving his testimony. " (5)

In order to be useful for the purpose of refreshment a document need not be admissible itself as independent evidence. So though Jumma-vasil-bahi papers are not admissible as independent evidence of the amount of rent mentioned therein; yet it is right that a person who has prepared such papers on receiving payment of the rents should refresh his memory from such papers when giving evidence as to the amount of rent payable. (6) Nor does a writing used to refresh the memory thereby become evidence of itself. Consequently it is not necessary that it should even be admissible, and a document which cannot be read for want of a stamp may be referred to by the witness in giving his evidence. (7) The question sometimes arises whether memoranda used for refreshment are themselves to be admitted in evidence. When the witness, after reference, finds his memory so refreshed that he can testify recollection independently of the memorandum, there is no reason or necessity for the introduction of the paper or writing itself; and it is not admissible. But another rule prevails when the witness cannot testify to the existing knowledge of the fact independently of the memorandum, but can testify that, at or about the time the writing was made he knew of its contents and of their truth or accuracy. In such cases, both the testimony of the witness and the contents of the memoranda are held admissible. "The two are the equivalent of a present positive statement of the witness affirming the truth of the memorandum." (8)

Any Criminal Court may send for the police-diaries of a case under inquiry or trial and may use such diaries not as evidence in the case but to aid it in such inquiry

---

(1) R. v. Stewart, 31 C., 1090 (1904) at p. 1092.
(2) R. v. Samiruddin, 8 C., 211 (1882); s.c., 10 C. L. R., 11.
(3) Raghunath Singh v. R., 9 C., 455, 460, 461 (1882); s.c., 11 C. L. R., 589, see 2 W. R., Cr., Let., 14; 6 W. R., Cr. Let., 3; R. v. Jabad Das, 4 C. W. N., 129 (1899).
(4) Dickson’s Law of Evidence in Scotland, vol. ii, § 1779; Alison’s Criminal Law, 540—542, cited in Taylor, Ev., p. 928, note (2), where the reasons are given for the rule.
(5) Field, Ev., 661.
(6) Akhil Chandra v. Niju, 10 C., 248 (1883); and see as to collection papers, Mahomed Mah- mood v. Safar Ali, 11 C., 407, 409 (1885); so though neither statements under s. 161, Cr. Pr. Code (v. ante, p. 779), nor police-diaries (v. supra) are evidence in the case, they may still be used for the purpose of refreshing memory. See Wharton, Ev., § 519.
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 1411; Wharton, Ev., § 530; as to want of stamp, see Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed., 447 and ante, p. 1184.
or trial. Neither the accused nor his agent are entitled to call for such diary, nor is he or they entitled to see them, merely because they are referred to by the Court; but if they are used by the police-officer who made them to refresh his memory, (1) or if the Court uses them for the purpose of contradicting such police-officer, the provisions of this Act (section 161 or section 145, as the case may be) will apply. (2) The special diary may be used by the police-officer who made it, and by no witness other than such officer for the purpose of refreshing his memory. If the diary is used by the police-officer who made it to refresh his memory, the accused person or his agent has a right to see that portion of the diary which has been referred to, that is to say, the particular entry which has been referred to and so much of the diary as, in the opinion of the Court, is necessary in that particular matter to the full understanding of the particular entry so used, but no more. (3) An accused has no right to insist that a police-diary if not in Court, shall be sent for, or if it be in Court, that it be referred for the purpose of refreshing the memory of a police-officer; it being said that there is no authority for saying that a witness can be compelled to refresh his memory from any document unless the document is either in the possession of the party who desires to put it to the witness, or is at least such as he can insist on having produced. (4) With regard to these documents, however, the law has expressly declared that the accused is not entitled to call for them, nor to see them, except in a specified contingency, (5) and if it were in the power of the accused to bring about this contingency, he might in nearly every case procure inspection of the document. It has, however, been also held that a witness, who has the means of aiding his memory by a recourse to memoranda or papers in his power, can lawfully be required to look at such papers, to enable him to ascertain a fact with more precision, to verify a date, or to give more exact testimony than he otherwise could as to times, numbers, quantities, and the like. (6)

The writing may have been either made by himself or by any other person, provided the witness examined it and knew it to be correct when the facts were fresh in his mind. (7) It is not necessary that the writing should have been made by the witness; for it is the recollection and not the memorandum which is evidence. Thus a seaman has been allowed to refer to a logbook which, though not written by himself, had from time to time, and while the occurrences were recent, been examined by him. (8) So it has been said that a witness at Sessions might be shown his former deposition before the committing Magistrate in order to refresh his memory a couple of months after, if such first deposition were taken immediately after the occurrence. (9)

But it is clear that a witness should not be allowed to use any document to refresh his memory which was made by another person, unless he knows it to be correct.

Section 159 substantially follows the English rule as to the time when the writing must have been made, this rule being that a writing can be used to

---

(1) See R. v. Hurdut Surma, 8 W. R., Cr., 68, 69 (1867).
(4) In re Kali Churn, 8 C., 154, 155, 157 (1881); s.c., 10 C. L. R., 51. In re Jawbooj Mahlon, 8 C., 739, 745 (1882); s. c., 12 C. L. R., 333; it was also held that “the Sessions Judge was not bound to compel the witness to look at the so-called diary in order to refresh his memory, and that it was wholly within his discretion whether he should do so or not.”
(5) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 172.
(6) Chapin v. Lapham, 23 Pick., 467 (Amer.);
State v. Staton, 114 N. C., 813 (Amer.), cited in
(7) Taylor, Ev., § 1410; Wharton, Ev., § 822;
Burr. Jones, Ev., § 880, and numerous cases there cited.
(8) Burrough v. Martin, 2 Camp., 112.
(9) Field, Ev., 668; citing R. v. Williams, 6
Cox, 343. As to the use of depositions for refreshment, see Vaughan v. Martin, 1 Esp., 440; Wood v. Cooper, 1 C. & K., 645; Wharton, Ev., § 524.
refresh the memory of a witness only where it has been made, or its accuracy recognised at the time of the fact in question or at furthest so recently afterwards as to render it probable that the memory of the witness had not then become defective. (1) Its own peculiar circumstances and the discretion of the trial Judge must govern each case raising this question, which in part also depends on the mental character and capacity of the witness. It is clear that the memorandum must not be used to convey original information to the witness. It is, however, impossible to lay down any precise rule as to how nearly contemporaneous with the fact or facts recorded, the memorandum must be. (2) It has, however, been said, (3) that usually "If the witness swears positively that the notes, though made ex post facto, were taken down at a time when he had a distinct recollection of the facts there narrated, he will be allowed to use them, though drawn up a considerable time after the transaction had occurred." But if there are any circumstances casting suspicion upon the memoranda, the Court should hold otherwise, as when the subsequent memorandum is prepared by the witness at the instance of an interested party or his attorney, (4) or if the memorandum has been revised or corrected by such party or attorney. (5)

Use of copy.

With regard to the use of a copy of the document the section lays at rest a doubtful question of English law. (6) The Act treats the copy as primarily inadmissible, though it provides for its reception under the leave of the Court, in a case in which the non-production of the original is sufficiently accounted for. The copy should not be used so long as the original is in existence and its absence unexplained; (7) and it should appear that the copy was made by the witness himself, or by some person in his presence or at least in such a manner as to enable the witness to swear to its accuracy. (8) The words "such document" in section 160 might be thought to include "a copy of such document" to which reference is made in the last paragraph of section 159. But whatever may be held to be the rule in the second (9) of the three classes of cases abovementioned, (10) a copy is clearly inadmissible in the third class. (11) Where the witness neither recollects the fact, nor remembers to have recognised the written statement as true and the writing was not made by him, his testimony so far as it is founded upon the written paper, is but hearsay, and a witness can no more be permitted to give evidence of his inference from what a third person has written than from what a third person has said. (12)

The rule of exclusion on the ground of a document being a copy (and the original not being accounted for) does not apply when though in form a copy, the paper is, in reference to the question of refreshing, in the nature of an original or a duplicate. Thus in the case undermentioned, (13) which was one of a transcript from a waste-book kept by the clerk, copied thence into the ledger day by

(1) Ph. & Arn., Ev., § 484. For a criticism of this rule, see Wigmore, Ev., § 781.
(2) Recently is an expression of some latitude, see Greenleaf, Ev., § 438.
(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1407; and see Burr. Jones, Ev., § 882.
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 1408.
(7) ib.; Burton v. Plummer, 2 A. & E., 341. It has been held in America in some cases that the "best evidence" rule has here no application: Burr. Jones, § 881.
(8) Taylor, Ev., § 1408.
(9) v. ante. pp. 777, 778. "The English rule is that if the copy be an imperfect extract, or be not proved to be a correct copy, or if the witness have no independent recollection of the facts narrated therein, the original must be used;" Taylor, Ev., § 1408.
(10) v. ante, pp. 777, 778.
(11) v. ante, pp. 777, 778. See as to this question Markby, Ev., 112 (copy not allowed under a. 100); Cunningham, Ev., 378 (the same); Norton, Ev., 330 (a. 100 read with a. 100 would admit the copy); Field, Ev., 660 (Act is silent as to use of copy under a. 100).
(12) Greenleaf, Ev., § 436.
(13) Burton v. Plummer, 2 A. & E., 344; and see Horne v. Maddox, 6 C. & F., 628, 630, 645; Phipson, Ev., 3rd Ed. 448. day under his checking, the ledger was admitted without production of the waste-book. And though a mere extract from the original is insufficient, if the original is but a partial statement only, as for example, such a case as that of recording a speech, a conversation, or the like, where it failed to set out the whole verbatim, it might still be used to refresh, would the witness swear to its substantial correctness. (1) In the aforementioned case arbitration proceedings had been held some years prior to suit and at their close a draft minute of the proceedings was prepared by the arbitrators and then fair copied by their clerk. A witness who was present at the arbitration who had compared the draft and fair copy minutes made by the clerk and had found the latter to be correct, was allowed under s. 159 to refresh his memory as to what occurred at the arbitration by reference to the fair copy minutes made by the arbitration clerk.

Experts may refresh their memory by reference to professional treatises, tables, calculations, lists of prices and the like. (4) So an actuary may refer to "the Carlisle Tables" when called upon to give evidence respecting the value of an annuity on joint lives; an architect may refresh his memory with any price list of generally acknowledged correctness; a medical man may strengthen his recollection by referring to books which he considers to be works of authority; and so forth. (5)

This section awards to the adverse party a right to the production and inspection and cross-examination upon all that is made use of for the purpose of refreshment. The grounds upon which the right is given have been adverted to in the note dealing with the principle upon which these sections are founded. (6) According to English law the memory may be refreshed previously to the trial, without the production of the document there, however, much its absence might be matter of observation: (7) though if produced, the other side have a right to see it and cross-examine upon it. This Act, however, by the use of the words "while under examination" in section 159, apparently contemplates the use of the document in Court whether or not it has also been previously referred to; and section 161 enacts that the document referred to while under examination "must be produced and shown to the adverse party." It would seem therefore that in every case where a document is used to refresh the memory it must be produced at the trial. (8) The adverse party is apparently entitled under the section to cross-examine not only on the particular part referred to, but on the document generally. (9) As to cross-examination on matters other than those referred to, v. post.

The section says the document must be shown to the adverse party if he requires it: for if the object of the question be attained, it may be unnecessary for

---

(2) Nisarini Dossi v. Nundo Lall, 5 C. W. N., xvi (1900).
(3) S. 159. In this instance there is of course no condition attached as to the persons by whom or the time when the document must have been made.
(4) Taylor, Ev., §§ 1422, 1406.
(5) Id.; v. ante, p. 294.
(6) v. ante, pp. 776, 777.
(7) Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East., 275; Burton v. Plummer, 2 A. & E., 341; 2 Ph. & Arn., Ev., 481; it is however usual and reasonable to produce the document; Taylor, Ev., § 1413.
(8) See observations in Goodenoe, Ev., 212, on s. 46, Act II of 1855, which ran:—"A witness shall be allowed before any such Court or person aforesaid to refresh his memory." With regard to police-diaries, v. ante, pp. 780, 781.
(9) See Goodenoe, Ev., 212; and Taylor, Ev., § 1413 cited post; but in Ex Jeewu Macdon, 3 C., 739, 746 (1882) Field, J., said:—"The opposite party may look at the writing to see what kind of writing it is in order to check the use of improper documents; but I doubt whether he is entitled, except for this particular purpose, to question the witness as to other and independent matters contained in the same series of writings. The Court may limit the right of inspection to such portions of the paper as are relevant; Wharton, Ev., § 335.
the Counsel for the other side to ask to look at the document. (1) The opposite party has a right to look at any particular writing before or at the moment when the witness uses it to refresh his memory in order to answer a particular question: but if he then neglects to exercise his right he cannot continue to retain the right throughout the whole of the subsequent examination of the witness. (2) And it does not follow that because a party is entitled to see a writing which contains the statement of a witness taken down by the police that he is therefore entitled to see other writings which contain the statements of persons other than that witness and which have no connection with that witness's statement except that they were taken in the course of the same enquiry by the police. (3) It is not necessary for the adverse party to put in the document, as part of his evidence merely because he has looked at it or has cross-examined the witness respecting entries which have been previously referred to. (4) It has however been held in England that if he goes further and cross-examines as to other parts of the memorandum he thereby makes it his own evidence; (5) a matter as to which the section is silent.

It is to be observed that it is only when a document is used for purposes referred to in sections 159, 160, that the adverse party has a right to see and cross-examine upon it; and therefore, "if a paper be put into the hands of a witness, merely to prove handwriting, and not to refresh his memory, or if being given to the witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory, the questions founded upon it utterly fail, the opposite party is not entitled to see it, except sufficiently to enable him to recognise it, if it be subsequently offered in evidence, or to re-examine upon it, and may not comment upon its contents. Indeed, if under these circumstances he read it or comment on it, he may be required by his adversary to put it in. (6)

There are other modes of refreshing the memory of witnesses than the use of memoranda in writing. While a party cannot, as a rule, cross-examine his own witness, if a witness have given an ambiguous or indefinite answer, or if his memory is at fault, the Court, in the exercise of a proper discretion, may allow verbal enquiry as to statements, or circumstances, which may tend to enable the witness to recollect more clearly the fact sought to be proved. (7)

162 A witness summoned to produce a document shall, if it is in his possession or power, bring it to Court notwithstanding any objection which there may be to its production or to its admissibility. The validity of any such objection shall be decided on by the Court.

The Court, if it sees fit, may inspect the document, unless it refers to matters of State, or take other evidence to enable it to determine on its admissibility.

If for such a purpose it is necessary to cause any document to be translated, the Court may, if it thinks fit, direct the translator to keep the contents secret, unless the document is to be given in evidence: and, if the interpreter disobeys such direction, he shall be held to have committed an offence under section 166 of the Indian Penal Code.

(1) See for example, In re Jhubboc Mahon , 8 C., 730, 743 (1882).
(2) In re Jhubboc Mahon , 8 C., 730, 744 (1882).
(3) ib.
(4) Taylor, Ev., § 1413.
(5) ib.
(6) Taylor, Ev., § 1413, and cases there cited.
(7) Burr Jones, Ev., § 886, and v. case, a 145, "Defective Memory."
Principle.—The summons to produce a document is like the summons to appear as a witness, of compulsory obligation, and must be obeyed by the witness who has no more right to determine whether the documents shall be produced than whether he shall appear as a witness. It is his duty, therefore, to attend and bring with him the documents according to the exigency of the summons, it being for the Court alone to determine both as to the admissibility of the documents or whether they should be produced and exhibited.(1)

s. 3 ("Document.")
s. 121—131 {Privileges.}

s. 3 ("Court.")
s. 123 {Documents referring to matters of State.}

COMMENTARY.

The rule of English law is similar. For when a witness is served with a subpœna duces tecum he is bound to attend with the documents demanded therein, and he must leave the question of their actual production to the Judge, who will decide upon the validity of any excuse that may be offered for withholding them.(2) When so brought into Court the production of the documents in evidence will be excused where it has been declared to be privileged from disclosure under this Act as where it is the third party’s title-deed,(3) or a confidential communication professionally made between a legal adviser and his client(4) or the like. When the production is excused, secondary evidence is admissible,(5) and if the document be brought into Court by a witness, who says that he is instructed by the owner to object to the production of it, this is enough to justify secondary proof without subpoenaing the owner himself to make the objection in person.(6) It is obvious that a witness cannot be compelled to produce a document by a summons, unless such document is under his control or possession. So a mere clerk in a bank is under no obligation to produce its books when they are under the control of the cashier;(7) and it was so held as to the secretary of a railway company as he was only the employee of the directors;(8) nor are documents filed in a public office so in the possession of a clerk there, as to render it necessary, or even allowable for him to bring them into Court without the permission of the head of the office.(9) But one having the actual custody of documents may be compelled to produce them, although they are owned by others.(10) The validity of any objection made by the person producing the document will be decided by the Court.

The provision that the Court may, if it sees fit, inspect the document (unless it refers to matters of State) appears not to be in accordance with the rule

(2) Amey v. Long, 9 East., 473; Roeoe, N. P., Ev., 154—158; Taylor, Ev., § 1240; 2 Ph. & Arn., 425. An attachment will lie for contempt in case of disobedience even though it may be very questionable whether the person summoned would be bound to submit the document to examination in the event of his bringing it into Court. R. v. Groomanway, 7 Q. B., 129; R v. Carey, ib. as to the penalty for non-production, see Penal Code, s. 175.

(3) S. 130, ante.

(4) ss. 192—197, ante, and see generally ss. 121—131, ante.

(5) Doe v. Rose, 7 M. & W., 102; Marston v. Downes, 1 A. & E., 31; see ante, pp. 381—384 where this question is discussed.

(6) Phelps v. Pres, 3 E. & B., 430; it seems to be sufficient if one only of several interested parties object; Newton v. Chaplain, 19 L. J., C. P. 374; see also Keynes v. Phillips, 10 Q. B. D., 465; Roeoe, N. P., Ev., 156.

(8) Crouther v. Appleby, L. R., 9 C. P., 27.

(9) Thornhill v. Thornhill, 2 J. & W., 547; Austin v. Evans, 2 M. & Gr., 430.

(10) Amey v. Long, 1 Camp., 17; S. C., 9 East., 473; Coven v. Dabois, 1 Holt., 239.
as laid down in some English cases. For it has been held that when the witness declines to produce a document on the ground of professional confidence, the judge should not inspect it to see whether it was one which he ought to withhold; and it seems that the mere assertion on oath by the solicitor that it is a title-deed or other privileged document is conclusive. (1)

The Court may also in order to decide on the validity of the objection take other evidence to enable it to determine on its admissibility. "All questions as to the admissibility of evidence are for the Judge. It frequently happens that this depends on a disputed fact, in which case all the evidence adduced both to prove and disprove that fact must be received by the Judge,—and however complicated the facts or conflicting the evidence—must be adjudicated on by him alone." (2) Thus the Judge must equally (for example) decide whether a confession should be excluded by reason of some previous threat or promise, and whether a document is protected from disclosure as being a confidential communication or the like. (3)

Section 130 of the Civil Procedure Code empowers the Court during the pendency of the suit to order the production by any party thereto of such of the documents in his possession or power relating to any matter in question in such suit as the Court thinks right. Under the similar rule in England it has been held that the right to the production and inspection of documents does not apply to documents which are not in the sole possession or power of the party to the suit who is called upon to produce them, but are only in his possession or power jointly with some other person, who is not before the Court. (4)

The provision that the translator may be ordered to keep the contents of a document secret refers to cases where a document is claimed to be privileged from production in evidence, but its translation is necessary in order that the Court may ascertain whether the claim of privilege is well founded or not. Section 166 of the Penal Code deals with the case of a public servant, disobeying a direction of the law with intent to cause injury to any person. Of course secrecy is unnecessary, if the document is to be given in evidence. In connection with this subject it may be noted that when documents are put in for the purpose of formal proof, it is in the discretion of the Court in criminal proceedings to interpret as much thereof as appears necessary. (5)

Documents referring to matters of State stand upon a peculiar footing. Section 123 makes the giving of evidence derived from unpublished official records relating to affairs of State entirely dependent upon the discretion of the head of the department concerned. (6) It may be therefore perhaps said to be unnecessary for the Judge to have the right of inspecting any document of this character; (7) though he must necessarily have such right in the case of other

(1) Roscoe, N. P., Ev., 156, citing Doc v. James, 2 M. & Rob., 47; Vosani v. Soper, 13 C. R., 231. "There have, however, been cases in which the Judge has inspected documents in order to decide upon their admissibility. If it be objected on the one side that it is impossible for a Judge who discharges the functions of Judge and Jury, to avoid receiving some impression from the document if he do look at it, it may be urged on the other side that the rule of inspection provides a safeguard against futile or dishonest objections and effects a great saving of the time of the Court." Field, Ev. 662, 663.

(2) Taylor, Ev., § 23 A.

(3) ib.

(4) Kearsley v. Philips, 10 Q. B. D., 465 following Murray v. Walker, Cr., & Ph., 114. See the latter and kindred cases discussed with reference to the procedure to be adopted in this country in Haji Jakaria v. Haji Kasim, 1 B., 496 (1876), where it was held that one partner of a firm represents the other partners for the purposes of production of documents. See also Taylor v. Russell, Cr. & Ch., 104; 1 Philips, 222, 226; Kettell v. Barston, L. R., 7 Ch., App., 686; [the fact that persons not parties to the suit are interested in the document is no ground for resisting production]; London & Yorkshire Bank, Ltd. v. Cooper, 18 Q. B. D., 473 (custody of liquidator).

(5) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 361; see also R. v. Arndt, 7 B. L. R., 36, 71 (1871).

(6) Being in this in accordance with Barston v. Stetar, 5 H. N., 838.

(7) Cunningham, Ev., 360; In Remmey v. privileged documents in order that he may judge as to their admissibility and obligatory production in evidence. The person in custody of what he considers a privileged State document must bring it with him to Court, that the latter may decide whether it is a document of that character or not. The position of the words "unless it refers to matters of State" in the second paragraph of the section, appears to show that the Court although it may not inspect a document relating to matters of State may yet take other evidence to enable it to determine on its admissibility.(1) Apparently upon the objection and statements of the person appearing with the document, the Court will determine whether it is or is not a State document. If the Court decides that it is a State document then it is for the head of the department alone to determine whether evidence shall be given of it or not.(2)

It has been said that in the case of State proceedings the Court cannot inspect them for the purpose of seeing if they are privileged and must take their character upon the word of the public officer, who has them in his custody.(3) But by this, it is conceived is meant that the officer states those facts touching the document which in his opinion show that it is one coming within the purview of section 123, and the Court then (though bound by the officer's statement and forbidden to inspect the document) determines whether those facts do or do not give the document the character claimed for it. Otherwise it does not appear that there is any function assigned to the Court in the matter, or that there is any reason why such a document is required to be produced in Court unless it be that the officer may publicly and in the presence of the Judge claim privilege from production. The oath of secrecy which is taken by income-tax officers does not apply to cases in which they are summoned to give evidence in a Court of Justice.(4) Rule 16 of the rules made by the Local Government under s. 38 of the Income-tax (Act II of 1886) does not apply to the production of income-tax papers in a Court of Law in a suit between two partners.(5)

In the undermentioned case(6) the Magistrate of a district refused to produce a written report made to him by a Magistrate in charge of a division of a district as to the result of an enquiry made by the latter under the provisions of section 135 of the Criminal Procedure Code, into the cause of a sudden and unnatural death. When the case came before the High Court the District Magistrate appeared, through Counsel, with the report, ready to produce it, if the High Court held it not to be privileged, or to show it to the Judges if they desired to see it before making their order, but submitted, amongst other grounds, that the report was a communication privileged under section 124 of this Act: It was held that this report was not a judicial proceeding and that the District Magistrate was justified in refusing to produce it.

163. When a party calls for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce, and such document

Wright, 21 Q. B. D., 500, 515. Field, J., said that he should consider himself entitled privately to examine the document to see whether the fear of injury to the public service was the real motive for the objection:

(1) See Field, Ev., 579; where also other tentative interpretations of this section so far as it concerns State documents are to be found, which appear to the authors to be hardly supportable.

(2) Cunningham, Ev., 380; but there is no necessity as has been held in England (Kain v. Pearson, 37 L. T., N.S., 469; doubted in Hennessy v. Wright, 21 Q. B. D., 500, 523), for him to give his reasons for the non-production of the document (assuming that it is found to be in fact a document of State), and to come and say that he objects to the production on grounds of public policy. Ib., see s. 123, ante.

(3) Mayne's Criminal Law, 86.

(4) Ib., citing Lee v. Birrell, 3 Camp., 337, and stating that Scotland, C. J., in R. v. Yakub Khan, 2 Mad., Sessions 1863, compelled the production of income-tax schedules, though the objection was taken by the officer who appeared.

(6) In re Troylokanath Biswas, 3 C., 742 (1878).
is produced and inspected by the party calling for its production, he is bound to give it as evidence if the party producing it requires him to do so.

Principle.—See Note post.

[a. 3 ("Documents.")]

[as. 65, 66 (Notice to produce.)]

Taylor, Ev., § 1817; Wharton, Ev., § 156.

COMMENTARY.

The production of papers upon notice does not make them evidence in the cause, unless the party calling for them inspects them, so as to become acquainted with their contents; in which case he is obliged to use them as his evidence, at least if they be in any way material to the issue.(1) Where a party to a case calls for a document from the other party and inspects the same, he takes the risk of making it evidence for both parties. It rests, however, upon the party who calls for and inspects a paper to adduce evidence of its genuineness if that be not admitted.(2) The reason for this rule is that it would give an unconscionable advantage to a party to enable him to pry into the affairs of his adversary, without at the same time subjecting him to the risk of making whatever he inspects evidence for both parties.(3)

When A calls upon B to produce a document and B produces it, this prior facie avoids the necessity of proving such document on A’s part where it is relied on by B as part of his title.(4) Where notice has been given to the opponent to produce papers in his possession or power, the regular time for calling for their production is not until his case has been entered upon by the party who requires them; till which time the other party may, in strictness refuse to produce them, and no cross-examination as to their contents is then allowable. Still, it is considered rigorous to insist upon this rule, and as a due adherence to it would be productive of inconvenience, the Judges are very unwilling to enforce it.(5)

164. When a party refuses to produce a document which he has had notice to produce, he cannot afterwards use the document as evidence without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court.

Illustration.

A sues B on an agreement and gives B notice to produce it. At the trial A calls for the document and B refuses to produce it. A gives secondary evidence of its contents. B seeks to produce the document itself to contradict the secondary evidence given by A, or in order to show that the agreement is not stamped. He cannot do so.

---

(1) Taylor Ev., § 1817, and cases there cited. If the party giving the notice declines to use the papers when produced this, though matter of observation, will not make them evidence for the adverse party; Sayer v. Kitchen, 1 Esp., 210 [for if notice to produce invested the instrument called for with the attribute of evidence, testimony incapable of proof might be brought into a case by such notice: Wharton, Ev., § 156]; though it is otherwise, as the section says, if the papers are inspected by the party calling for them, see Norton, Ev., 262. A person is not obliged to put in evidence the papers called for by him; Wharton, Ev., § 156.

(2) Mahomed v. Abdul, 5 Bom. L. R., 289 (1903).

(3) Taylor, Ev., § 1817; in Wharton v. Routledge, 5 Esp., 235; Lord Ellenborough said: ‘‘You cannot ask for a book of the opposite party and be determined on the inspection of it whether you will use it or not. If you call for it you make it evidence for the other side, if they think fit to use it.’’

(4) Wharton, Ev., § 156.

(5) Taylor, Ev., § 1877.
Principle.—See Note, post,

s. 3 ("Document.")

s. 69 (Presumption as to documents no!

m. 65, 66 (Notice to produce.)

Taylor, Ev., § 1818; Wharton, Ev., § 157.

COMMENTARY.

A party is not permitted after declining to produce a paper, to put it in evidence after it has been proved by his opponent by parol. Should he be allowed to do so, he would be able to hold back the paper, until he saw whether its parol rendering would be favourable or unfavourable to him and thus to obtain an unjust advantage over his opponent. The same rule is applied when the party calling for the paper has proved a copy, in which case the holder of the paper cannot produce it and object to the reading of it without proof by an attesting witness. Nor can he after refusing to produce put the paper into the hands of his opponent’s witnesses for cross-examination or produce and prove it as part of his own case. (1) He is in effect bound by any legal and satisfactory evidence produced on the other side. (2)

It has been declared as the rule that the mere non-production of documents on notice has no other legal effect than to allow secondary evidence, but the weight of authority sustains the view that there may also be a presumption, that the evidence withheld would have operated unfavourably to the party refusing to produce it. (3) There is a presumption further that a document called for and not produced after notice was attested, stamped and executed in the manner required by law. (4)

165. The Judge may, in order to discover or to obtain proper proof of relevant facts, ask any question he pleases, in any form, at any time, of any witness, or of the parties about any fact relevant or irrelevant; and may order the production of any document or thing: and neither the parties nor their agents shall be entitled to make any objection to any such question or order, nor, without the leave of the Court, to cross-examine any witness upon any answer given in reply to any such question:

Provided that the judgment must be based upon facts declared by this Act to be relevant, and duly proved:

Provided also that this section shall not authorize any Judge to compel any witness to answer any question, or to produce any document which such witness would be entitled to refuse to answer or produce under sections 121 to 131, both inclusive, if the question were asked or the document were called for by the adverse party; nor shall the Judge ask any question which it would be improper for any other

---

(2) Norton, Ev., 252; where it is also stated that the document cannot be used to refresh the memory of a witness; citing Tull v. Ainsworth, Bristol, 1847; Wilde, C. J., MSS. As to the prevalence of a similar rule when a party determines upon keeping back a chattel; see Lewis v. Hartley, 7 C & P., 406; or refusing to give inspection, see Civ. Pr. Code, s. 131.

(4) S. 89, ante.
person to ask under section 148 or 149; nor shall he dispense with primary evidence of any document, except in the cases hereinbefore excepted.

Principle.—"This section is intended to arm the Judge with the most extensive power possible for the purpose of getting at the truth. The effect of this section is that in order to get to the bottom of the matter before it, the Court will be able to look at and enquire into every fact whatever;"(1) and thus possibly acquire valuable indicative evidence (v. post) which may lead to other evidence strictly relevant and admissible. The Court is not, however, permitted to find its judgment on any but relevant statements, because such a permission would lead to reliance on second-hand reports, would waste time, and open a wide door for fraud.(2) See further Notes, post.

s. 3 ("Relevant.")
s. 60, Prov. 2 (Production of chattel.)
s. 138, 145–154 (Cross-examination.)
s. 3 ("Document.")
s. 148, 149 (Questions to credit.)
s. 3 ("Fact.")
s. 3 ("Court.")
s. 3 ("Proved.")
s. 121–131 (Privilege.)
s. 61–66 (Primary evidence.)

COMMENTARY.

The Judge may question the witness either in the manner and with the object followed by the parties, or he may avail himself of the more extended power of interrogation which is given to him under the terms of this section. It has been a matter of juristic "dispute whether a Judge can, on his own motion, put to the witness questions independently of Counsel, so as to bring out points Counsel designedly or undesignedly overlook. On one side it has been urged in conformity with the scholastic view, that the Judge is confined to the proof adduced by the parties. On the other side, it is insisted that it is absurd for a Judge with a witness before him not to do what he can to elicit the truth. So far as concerns the abstract principle, writers on the English Common Law repeatedly affirm the scholastic view that the Judge must form his judgment exclusively on the proof brought forward by the parties. So far as concerns the practice, Judges both in England and in the United States, do not hesitate to interrogate a witness at their own discretion eliciting any facts they deem important to the case."(3) Again, "the Judge has a certain latitude allowed him with respect to the rules of forensic proof. He may ask any questions in any form and at any stage of the cause, and to a certain extent even allow parties or their advocates to do so. This, however, does not mean that he can receive illegal evidence at pleasure; for, if such be left to the jury, a new trial may be granted, even though the evidence were extracted by questions put from the bench, but it is a power necessary to prevent justice being defeated by technicality, to secure indicative evidence, and in criminal cases to assist in fixing the amount of punishment. And it should be exercised with due discretion."(4) It is this latter object (the securing of indicative

(1) Steph. Introduct., 162; and see Best, Ev., §§ 86, 93.
(2) Steph. Introduct., 162, 163.
(3) Wharton, Ev., § 281. See Taylor, Ev., § 1477; Roscoe, Cr. Ev., 12th Ed., 120; R. v. Bennani, R. & R., 136; Coulson v. Diborough, 2 Q. B. D., (1894), 316. "The Court always may and often does examine a witness at the close of his examination. The Court is not bound by the same rules as to leading questions, etc. The Court may put what questions it pleases and in what form it pleases: and most usefully so where the examination has not been scientifically or skilfully conducted." Norton, Ev., 323. As to the recall and examination of witnesses by the Court; see a. 193, Civ. Pr. Code; a. 540, Cr. Pr. Code.
(4) Best, Ev., § 88.
evidence) which is the main ground for the enactment of this section. "It may be objected, and indeed, Bentham's Treatise on Judicial Evidence is founded on the notion, that by exclusionary rules like the above [i.e., rules of evidence] much valuable evidence is wholly sacrificed. Were such even the fact, the evil would be far outweighed by the reasons already assigned for imposing a limit to the discretion of tribunals in declaring matters proved or disproved. But when the matter comes to be carefully examined it will be found that the evidence in question need seldom be lost to justice; for however dangerous and unsatisfactory it would be as the basis of final adjudication, it is often highly valuable as indicative evidence; (1) that is evidence not in itself receivable but which is 'indicative' of better. Take the case of derivative evidence; a witness offers to relate something told him by A: this would be stopped by the Court; but he has indicated a genuine source of testimony, A, who may be called or sent for. So a confession of guilt which has been made under promise of favour or threat of punishment is inadmissible by law; yet any facts discovered in consequence of that confession,—such, for instance, as the finding of stolen property—are good legal evidence. Again, no one would think of treating an anonymous letter as legal evidence against a party not suspected of being its author, yet the suggestions contained in such letters have occasionally led to disclosures of importance. In tracing the perpetrators of crimes, also conjectural evidence is often of the utmost importance, and leads to proofs of the most satisfactory kind, sometimes even amounting to demonstration. It is chiefly, however, on inquisitorial proceedings—such as coroner's inquests, inquiries by Justices of the Peace before whom persons are charged with offences and the like—that the use of 'indicative evidence' is most apparent, though even these tribunals cannot act on it.(2)

This therefore "is a most important section. Its provisions, though they may be in some respects not in accordance with English ideas, are wholly suited to the state of things which exists in India out of the Presidency-towns."(3) In his introduction to the Evidence Act,(4) Sir J. F. Stephen remarks:—"Where a man has to inquire into facts of which he receives in the first instance very confused accounts, it may and often will be extremely important for him to trace the most cursory and apparently futile report, and facts relevant in the highest degree to facts in issue may often be discovered in this manner. A policeman or a lawyer engaged in getting up a case criminal or civil, would neglect his duty altogether, if he shuts his ears to everything which was not relevant within the meaning of the Evidence Act. A Judge or Magistrate in India frequently has to perform duties which in England would be performed by police-officers or attorneys. He has to sift out the truth for himself as well as he can, and with little assistance of a professional kind. Section 165 is intended to arm the Judge with the most extensive power possible for the purpose of getting at the truth. The effect of this section is that, in order to get to the bottom of the matter before it, the Court will be able to look at and inquire into every fact whatever."

---

(1) In one place Bentham also calls it "Evidence of Evidence," 3 Jod. Ev., 554.
(2) Bent, Ev., § 93.
(3) Field, Ev., 665; In Norton, Ev., 342, it is said of this section that it "merely embodies the existing law as to the power of the Judge to put questions." Sir William Markby also in his edition of the Act (p. 118) is of opinion that on the construction of the section given in the text (v. post) every Magistrate in India possesses already all the powers of seeking after evidence which this section gives him, referring to Civ. Pr. Code, s. 171 [Court may of its own accord summon as witnesses strangers to suit and see s. 120, ib., by which the Court may direct any party to a suit to appear in person for examination, and s. 193 by which the Court may recall and examine a witness] and Cr. Pr. Code, s. 540 [power to summon witness and examine]. As to the examination of accused persons, see Gya Singh v. Mohamed Soliman, 5 C. W. N., 864 (1901).
(4) Pp. 161, 162.
And in the Select Committee the framer of the Act observed as follows:—

"That part of the law of evidence which relates to the manner in which witnesses are to be examined assumes the existence of a well-educated bar, co-operating with the Judge and relieving him practically of every other duty than that of deciding questions which may arise between them. I need hardly say that this state of things does not exist in India, and that it would be a great mistake to legislate, as if it did. In a great number of cases—probably the vast numerical majority—the Judge has to conduct the whole trial itself. In all cases he has to represent the interests of the public much more distinctly than he does in England. In many cases he has to get at the truth, or as near to it as he can by the aid of collateral inquiries, which may incidentally tend to something relevant; and it is most unlikely that he should ever wish to push an inquiry needlessly, or to go into matters not really connected with it. We have accordingly thought it right to arm Judges with a general power to ask any questions, upon any facts, of any witnesses, at any stage of the proceedings, irrespectively of the rules of evidence binding on the parties and their agents, and we have inserted in the Bill a distinct declaration that it is the duty of the Judge, especially in criminal cases, not merely to listen to the evidence put before him but to inquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter. (1) We do not think that the English theories, that the public have no interest in arriving at the truth, and that even criminal proceedings ought to be regarded mainly in the light of private questions between the prosecutor and the prisoner, are at all suited to India, if indeed they are the result of anything better than carelessness and apathy in England."

Under this section, which applies to both criminal and civil proceedings, the Judge may ask any question in any form: as for instance a leading question; (2) and he has equal liberty with regard to the substance of his question which may be about any fact relevant or irrelevant. But it is to be noted that the section only empowers the Judge to ask irregular questions "in order to discover or obtain proper proof of relevant facts," that is in order to discover or obtain regularly admissible evidence. (3) He may not introduce into the case any irregular evidence he pleases. This is indicated by the first proviso which requires that the judgment be based upon facts declared by the Act to be relevant and duly proved. So in a trial for murder, where the weapon had not been found, a witness might state in answer to the Judge that he had heard that the accused had secreted it in a certain ditch. This statement being hearsay would be inadmissible as evidence in the case itself, but the Judge by means of it might be able to direct an inquiry which would lead to the weapon being found. (4) If also a Judge should doubt as to the relevancy of a fact suggested, he can, if he thinks it will lead to anything, ask about it himself under this section. (5) There is accordingly no relaxation of the rules previously laid down as to relevancy. The section merely authorizes question the object of which is to ascertain whether the case is or is not [or may be] proved in accordance with those rules. (6)

(1) The bill was subsequently somewhat modified in this respect.
(2) Norton, Ev., 323.
(3) See R. v. Lakhman, 10 B., 185 (1885).
(4) Markby, Ev., 114, 115; where it is pointed out that the construction of this section is not free from difficulty. That the true construction is that given in the text appears to the authors to be indicated by the words of the first proviso. "But then," as Sir William Markby says, "it is not easy to see why the last clause of the second proviso was inserted. This clause would be quite intelligible if the section were intended as a general relaxation of the rules of evidence, but why should not a Judge who was merely hunting up evidence look at a copy in order to see whether it was worth while to endeavour to procure the original. It may further be observed that if that clause on the other hand refers to the evidence to be accepted in the case itself, it appears to be mere surplusage as the first proviso has already declared that the facts must be "duly proved," i.e., where the fact is contained in a document primary evidence of that document must as a general rule be given.
(5) Steph. Intro., 73.
(6) Cunningham, Ev., 361.
It has, however, been held that it is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses, unless the pleaders on either side have omitted to put some material question or questions; and the Court should, as a general rule, leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as laid down in section 138 of this Act. In the case, now cited, at a trial before Sessions Court, (1) the Judge, on the examination-in-chief of the witnesses for the prosecution being finished, questioned the witnesses at considerable length upon the points to which he must have known that the cross-examination would certainly and properly be directed: a course which it was observed must have rendered the greater part of the cross-examination ineffective.

The Judge is also empowered to order the production of any document or thing, but this is subject to the condition in the second proviso that the Judge is not hereby authorized to compel the production of any document which the witness would be entitled to refuse to produce under sections 121—131, ante, if the document were called for by the adverse party. As to the production of chattels, see also the second proviso of section 60, ante.

The parties have no power of cross-examination without the leave of the Court upon any answer given by the witness in reply to any question of the Judge put under this section, and it makes no difference whether the cross-examination be directed to the witness’s statement of fact or to circumstances touching his credibility. The principle that parties cannot, without the leave of Court, cross-examine a witness whom, the parties having already examined or declined to examine, the Court itself has examined, applies equally whether it is intended to direct the cross-examination to the witness’s statements of fact, or to circumstances touching his credibility, for any questions meant to impair his credit tends (or is designed) to get rid of the effect of each and every answer just as much as one that may bring out an inconsistency or contradiction. (2)

But the case dealt with by the section must be distinguished from that where the witness is called by the Court. When a party to the suit or a witness is summoned by the Court such witness is liable to be cross-examined by the parties. The provisions of this section only forbid the cross-examination without the leave of the Court of any witness upon any answer given in reply to a question asked by the Judge. They apply rather to particular questions put to a witness, already before the Court, than to the whole examination of a witness called by the Court. (3) His examination is not to be confined to such questions as the Court sees fit to put to him, but his knowledge as to the facts he states may be tested, as in the case of any other witness, by questions put by the parties. (4) There is nothing in this section which debarrs or disqualifies a party to a proceeding from cross-examining any witness called by the Court. All that the section says is that a party to a proceeding shall not be allowed to cross-

---

(1) Ameer Bux v. R., 6 C., 279 (1880); s. c. 7 C. L. R., 385.
(3) Field, Cr., 667, citing Tarini Charan v. Saroda Sundari, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 145, 158 (1869); R. v. Gresh Chunder, 5 C., 614 (1879); and see Gopal Lall v. Maskick Lall, 24 C., 288 (1897), in which both the abovementioned cases were followed. In England it has been held that at the trial of an action the Judge has power to call and examine a witness who has not been called by either of the parties, and when he does so, neither party has a right to cross-examine the witness without the Judge’s leave which should be given to either of the parties against whom the evidence should prove adverse; Coulson v. Disborough, 2 Q. B. D., (1894), 316. It has been also held that where after the examination of witnesses to facts on behalf of a prisoner the Judge (there being no Counsel for the prosecution) calls back and examines a witness for the prosecution, the prisoner’s Counsel has a right to cross-examine him again if he thinks it material; R. v. Watson, 6 C. & P., 653.
(4) Tarini Charan v. Saroda Sundari, 3 B. L. R., A. C., 145, 158 (1869); for the English rule see Coulson v. Disborough, 2 Q. B. D. (1894), 316 supra.
examine a witness upon an answer given by him to a question put by the Court without the permission of such Court. (1) Where a witness had been summoned, but was not called, by the defence and was thereupon called by the Court, it was held that the witness was not a witness for the defence and that the accused should have been given an opportunity to cross-examine him. (2)

The proviso declares that the judgment must be based upon facts declared by this Act to be relevant (v. ante, ss. 5—55) and duly proved (v. ante, ss. 56—100.) This proviso as already observed (ante p. 792) indicates the construction which should be placed on the first portion of the section. The answer to an irrelevant question may lead to the discovery of important relevant matter which may be the basis of a decree, though an answer to an irrelevant question could not be so. The Judge will not be permitted to found his judgment upon the class of statements to which he may resort as indicative evidence for the reason that it would tempt Judges to be satisfied with second-hand reports, would open a wide door to fraud, and would waste an incalculable amount of time.” (3) It may also be added that it would modify, if not entirely do away with, the admitted and declared rules of evidence to a very considerable extent. (4) And it is of course intolerable that the Court should decide rights upon suspicions unsupported by testimony. (5) In a trial held by a Sessions Judge he is exactly in the same position as the jury in dealing with the evidence properly given before him, and he is bound to confine his attention solely to such evidence. (6) It is improper for a Court to receive any information of any kind in reference to a case, whether it be relevant or not, other than such as comes before it in the way which the law recognises in the form of legal evidence. (7)

The functions of a Judge with regard to evidence have been declared (8) to be of a three-fold nature:—(a) to exclude everything that is not legitimately evidence, (9) and then when judgment is to be given (b) to ascertain clearly what the evidence is which he has before him; and (c) to estimate correctly the probative force of that evidence. (10)

However, even if the evidence on the record is in itself insufficient, the Judge may properly decide the case upon the evidence such as it is, if the defendant has waived his objection to its insufficiency and consented to its being taken as sufficient. (11)

(1) _Gopal Lall v. Manick Lall_, 24 C., 288 (1897).
(2) _Mokhendra Nath v. R._, 29 C., 387 (1902).
(3) Steph. Introd., 162, 163.
(4) If inadmissible evidence has been received (whether with or without objection) it is the duty of the Judge to reject it when giving judgment; and if he has not done so, it will be rejected on appeal, as it is the duty of Courts to arrive at their decisions upon legal evidence only; _Jack v. I. Co._, 5 Times L. R., 13.
(8) Norton, _Ev., 65_; see Taylor, _Ev._, ± 23—27. As to the duty of a Sessions Judge in criminal cases, see Cr. Pr. Code, s. 298.
(9) As is laid down in criminal trials by s. 298 of the Cr. Pr. Code. As to the existence of a similar duty in civil cases, v. _ante_, pp. 30, 31 and cases there cited; as to want of objection to admissibility, see the case of _Miller v. Madho Das_, 23 I. A., 108; s. _c._, 19 A., 78; where it was held that an erroneous omission to object to evidence does not make it admissible. "Under the old law, and almost as it were from the necessity of the thing, it was indicated on more than one occasion [see Circular No. 31 (Civil side), 13th October 1863] that the Courts had an active duty to perform in respect of the admission and rejection of evidence, and this wholly irrespective of objections emanating or rather failing to emanate from the parties or their pleaders." _Field, Ev._, 688: where it is also observed that when the manner in which cases are prepared for trial in the majority of Courts of original jurisdiction in the mofussil is considered, and when it is reflected that many of the practitioners in the lower Courts have little idea of what is or what is not relevant, it will be apparent that if the Courts be themselves passive, the utility of the Code of evidence will seriously be impaired.
(10) _v. ante_, pp. 353—359, 366—369, and cases there cited.
(11) _Snecha Pershad v. Junajogoy Mulick_, 12 W. R., 244, 245 (1889).
This proviso subjects the Judge in the exercise of the powers hereby given to the provisions contained in sections 121—131, 148 and 149, ante. Thus a Judge can no more compel a witness to disclose a confidential professional communication, (1) or question him to his credit without reasonable grounds, (2) or compel a third party to produce his title-deeds (3) than the parties or their agents can do. Of course it is the duty of the Judge to otherwise properly question and not to coerce the witness in any manner. So where in cross-examination before the Court of Session, a witness stated that, when she was before the committing Magistrate that officer addressing her, said "Recollect, or I will send you into custody," it was held that if the statements were correct, the conduct of that officer was not only most improper, but absolutely illegal, and that a repetition of it would involve very serious consequences. (4)

Under this section a Judge has the power of asking irrelevant questions of a witness, if he does so in order to obtain proof of relevant facts; but, if he asks questions with a view to criminal proceedings being taken against the witness, the witness is not bound to answer them, and cannot be punished for not answering them under section 179 of the Penal Code. (5)

As to the meaning of the last clause of the section prohibiting the Judge from dispensing with primary evidence of documents except in the cases hereinbefore excepted, see ante, p. 792 note (4).

166. In cases tried by jury or with assessors, the jury or assessors may put any questions to the witnesses, through or by leave of the Judge, which the Judge himself might put and which he considers proper.

COMMENTARY.

Further, whenever the Court thinks that the jury or assessors should view the place in which the offence charged is alleged to have been committed, or any other place in which any other transaction material to the trial is alleged to have occurred, the Court will make an order to that effect. (6) If a juror or assessor is personally acquainted with any relevant fact, it is his duty to inform the Judge that such is the case, whereupon he may be sworn, examined, cross-examined and re-examined in the same way as any other witness. (7)

---

(1) v. ante, ss. 126—129.
(2) v. ante, s. 149.
(3) v. ante, s. 130.
(4) R. v. Ishri Singh, 8 A., 672, 675, 677 (1886.)
(6) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 293, see Taylor, Ev., §§ 554—558; Wharton, Ev., §§ 345—347; as to view of the locality by a Magistrate see in the matter of petition of Lalji, 19 A., 302 (1897).
(7) IJb., 294; v. ante, s. 118.
CHAPTER XI.

ON IMPROPER ADMISSION AND REJECTION OF EVIDENCE.

In his Introduction(1) to this Act Sir James Fitzjames Stephen observes with reference to the sections concerning relevancy that "important as these sections are for purposes of study, and in order to make the whole body of law to which they belong easily intelligible to students and practitioners not trained in English Courts, they are not likely to give rise to litigation or to nice distinctions. The reason is that section 167 of the Evidence Act which was formerly section 57 of Act II of 1865 renders it practically a matter of little importance whether evidence of a particular fact is admitted or not. The extreme intricacy and minuteness of the law of England on the subject is principally due to the fact that the improper admission or rejection of a single question and answer would give a right to a new trial in a civil case, and would upon a criminal trial be sufficient ground for the quashing of a conviction before the Court for Crown Cases reserved. The improper admission or rejection of evidence in India has no effect at all, unless the Court thinks that the evidence improperly dealt with either turned or ought to have turned the scale. A Judge, moreover, if he doubts as to the relevancy of a fact suggested can, if he thinks it will lead to anything relevant, ask about it himself under section 165." (2)

Errors committed by the Court, either in matters of law or in admitting or rejecting evidence, and occasionally in matters of practice are corrected by application to a superior tribunal. Formerly in England where evidence had been improperly admitted or rejected, a new trial was granted unless it was clear that the result would not have been affected; but this rule is reversed by the present rules of the Supreme Court, which prescribe that a new trial shall not be granted on the ground of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, unless in the opinion of the Court to which the application is made some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the trial of the action. (3)

In England in civil cases whether in the case of trials by a Judge and Jury or by Judge alone, if admissible evidence has been rejected by the Judge, the injured party is entitled to a new trial provided he formally tendered such evidence to the Judge at the trial and requested the latter to make a note of the point. (4) So, also, if admissible evidence has been received provided it was formally objected to at the trial. But the grounds of objection must be distinctly stated and no others can afterwards be raised. (5) These cases are

---

(1) At p. 73.
(2) Sir William Markby (Ev., p. 117) observes "I think these words must have been written under some misconception. As the law stands an error in the reception or rejection of evidence may have the gravest consequences." The language is perhaps misleading, but doubtless Sir J. F. Stephen meant that it was practically a matter of little moment whether an error was made in the reception or rejection of some particular item of evidence which does not really affect the decision on the merits, but which item might under the earlier practice of the English Courts have been ground for a new trial or the quashing of a conviction. In other words, the section by curing the ill-result of slight and really immaterial errors makes their commission of no great importance and the raising of technical objections by reason of such commission ineffectual.
(3) Bent, Ev., § 82, v. post; and see also 2d, as to the misconduct of a jury so as to defeat justice.
(5) Ib., citing Williams v. Wilcox, 6 A. & E.
however subject to O. 39, R. 6, by the terms of which new trials cannot under any circumstances be granted for the improper admission or rejection of evidence unless the Court, to which the application is made, is of opinion that some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the trial. (1)

In England if in a criminal case evidence is improperly rejected or admitted, there is no remedy, unless the prisoner is convicted, and unless the Judge, in his discretion, acting under the Statute 11 and 12 Vict., § 78, states a case for the Court of Crown cases reserved; but if that Court is of opinion that any evidence was improperly admitted or rejected, it must set aside the conviction. (2)

In India there is no trial by Jury in civil cases, the Judge being in all cases judge both of law and of fact, and discharging the functions of both Judge and Jury. All criminal trials, however, before a Court of Session are either by Jury or with the aid of assessors. (3) Criminal cases in the Court of Sessions are tried by Jury in those districts in which the Local Government has under the provisions of section 269 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directed that the trial of all offences, or of any particular class of offences, shall be by Jury. (4)

Section 167 applies to both criminal as well as civil proceedings, (5) and is but one of the many applications of that principle which is at the root of modern legislation respecting judicial procedure, namely, that if legal technicalities cannot be wholly excluded, they shall at least be prevented from materially impeding the course of judicial proceedings, and the attainment of that substantial justice which should be their only aim. (6) Another application of the same principle is that contained in section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure which enact that no decree shall be reserved or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded in appeal on account of any error, defect or irregularity whether 314; Ferrand v. Milligan, 7 Q. B., 730; Bain v. Whitehouse, 3 H. L. C., 1; McDougall v. Knight, 14 App. Cas., 194; moreover, even if the specific objections prevail, yet should the evidence be admissible for any other purpose, a new trial will not be granted: Irish Society v. Kerry, 12 C. & F., 641; Mioine v. Leisler, 7 H. & N., 786. See also as to objections Barr. Jones, Ev., §§ 896—899.

(1) See Annual Practice, 1906; Notes and cases cited under Order XXXIX, Rules 1-8; Taylor, Ev., §§ 1881—1882B; Best, Ev., § 82; Chitty's Archbold, 730; Roscoe, N. P. Ev., 273, 274; Steph. Dig. Art. 143. It is open to a defeated party (1) to appeal in all cases; (2) to move for a new trial or to set aside the verdict, finding or judgment: Powell, Ev., 663. See also as to the granting of a new trial, Hughes v. Hughes, 15 M. & W., 701, 704 [will not be granted if, with the evidence rejected, a verdict for the party offering it would clearly be against the weight of evidence or if without the evidence received, there be enough to warrant the verdict]; Doe d. Tyler, 6 Bing., 661; [see Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E., 390; Cresson v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R., 919; Moore v. Tuckwell, 1 C. B., 607; Solomon v. Bitton, 8 Q. B. D., 176; the last case observed upon in Metropolitan Ry. Co. v. Wright, L. R., 11 App. Cas., 182 and Webster v. Friedberg, 17 Q. B. D., 796; Phillips v. Martin, L. R., 15 App. Cas., 192; R. v. Grant, 5 B. & Ad., 1081 it is only where the evidence in question is deemed by the Court to have been admissible for the purpose for which it was tendered at the trial that its rejection forms a sufficient ground for a new trial.] Lord Eldon said in Walker v. Froebisher, 6 Ves., 72, that "a judge must not take it upon himself to say whether evidence improperly admitted had or had not an effect upon his mind."

(3) Cr. Pr. Code, s. 288.

(4) See ib., s. 269.

(5) v. post, p. 798.

(6) See Goelain Tota v. Richardson Bullab, 13 Moo. I. A., 77; 83; s. c, 12 W. R., P. C., 32. (The Judicial Committee will not determine an appeal against a decree upon the mere fact that some evidence has been improperly admitted by the Court below. It is the rule of this tribunal to do substantial justice between the parties, and to see if there is not sufficient evidence on the whole record to justify the conclusion to which the Court below came); and as to substantial justice, see also Baree Biddorawar v. Onnoo Singh, 13 Moo. I. A., 519; s. c., 15 W. R., P. C., 1 (1870).
in the decision or in any order passed in the suit, or otherwise, not affecting the merits of the case, or the jurisdiction of the Court. Similar provisions are contained in section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. But the disregard of an express provision of law as to the mode of trial is not a mere irregularity such as can be remedied by this section.(1)

167. The improper admission or rejection of evidence (2) shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient (3) evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision.

Principle.—See Introduction, ante.

s. 3 (“Evidence.”) s. 3 (“Court.”)

COMMENTARY.

The principle of this section is in accordance with that upon which the Courts in England now act, and the section itself is a re-enactment of the provisions of section 57 of the earlier Act II of 1855. The grounds upon which it is based, as also the provisions of the English law with which it is in accordance have been already referred to in the Introduction to this Chapter to which reference should be made. The section applies to criminal cases as well as civil cases whether or not the trial has been had before a jury ;(4) and the principle enacted by it has been applied in numerous cases both prior and subsequent to the passing of this Act. In so far, however, as every case must depend upon its own peculiar facts and can therefore generally afford no precedent to be followed in another, it would serve no practical purpose to analyse in detail the cases decided under this section, or section 57, Act II of 1855, but reference may be made to the undermentioned cases,(5) as illustrations of the manner in which these sections have been applied. In one of these cases(1) in which evidence had been improperly admitted and objections taken thereto, the Privy Council observed as follows:—"It seems to their Lordships that giving full weight to all these objections, there is still sufficient and more than sufficient proof in the unsuspected evidence given in the cause to support the decrees against which the appeal is brought. Their Lordships, of course, do not give to a decree founded upon evidence which has been so impeached, the same weight which they would give to the finding of an Indian Court upon evidence against which no such objection can be alleged. But they are not in the position of a Court of Law in this country—before which, on a motion for a new trial, it is shown that evidence improper to be admitted has been admitted before the jury. The Court in that case are not Judges of fact and are unable to say what weight the jury may have given to the evidence that ought not to have been admitted. But it is the duty of their Lordships who are Judges of the fact in such a case as this to consider whether, throwing aside the evidence which ought not to have been admitted, there still remains sufficient evidence to support the decrees. Their Lordships must nevertheless express their regret that the Court of first instance in the case before them should have been as lax as it has been in the admission of evidence. The improper reception of evidence is always to be deprecated, if only from its tendency to provoke an appeal."(2)

(2) Opinion of an assessor is not: R. v. Tirumalai, L. R., 24 Mad., 541 (1901).
(3) See ib. at p. 91.
(4) R. v. Hurriddle Chunder, 1 C., 207 (1876); R. v. Navroji Dadabhai, 9 Bom. H. C. R., 374 (1872); R. v. Pitamber Jina, 2 B., 61, 65 (1877); R. v. Nand Ram, 9 A., 609 (1887); Subrahmanya Ayyar v. R., 25 M., 61, 75 (1901); R. v. Rama Sathy, 4 Bom., L. R., 434 (1902); R. v. Allooomimga, 28 B., 129, 165 (1902). The words of this section are identical with those of s 57 of Act II of 1855, but the latter Act contained no express words making it applicable to all Courts whatever see section (1), ante, and it might have been doubted whether all its provisions were intended to be enforced in all proceedings criminal as well as civil: R. v. Navroji Dadabhai, 9 Bom. H. C. R., 374 (1872); it was, however, held to be applicable in criminal cases in R. v. Ramrani Muddar, 6 Bom. H. C. R., Cr. Ca., 47 (1869).

Evidence cannot be said to have been improperly admitted merely because it was admitted at an improper stage of the case, unless indeed the other party has been prejudiced by this course.(3)

The words "reversal of any decision" indicate the applicability of the section to appeals inasmuch as Courts of Appeal have power to reverse the decisions in respect of which appeals are preferred.(4) The Code of Civil Procedure does not provide for a new trial in civil cases. But sections 629—630 of this Code provide for a review of judgment; and section 630 enacts that when an application for a review of judgment is granted, the Court may at once re-hear the case or make such order in regard to the re-hearing as it thinks fit. By such re-hearing is meant according to the practice of the Courts, a re-arguing and re-consideration of the case after receiving the additional evidence, the discovery of which since the former trial was the ground of admitting the review. A review is distinct from an appeal in that the primary intention of granting a review is a re-consideration of the same question by the same Judge, as distinct from an appeal which is a hearing before another tribunal.(5) In the aforementioned case(6) Farran, C. J., said, with reference to the powers of

---

(1) Mohur Singh v. Ghurda, 6 B. L. R., 495, 496, 498; s. c., 15 W. R., P. C., 8 (1870).

(2) See also Raja Boromarou v. Gangasamy Muddy, 6 Moo. L. A., 221 (1855); Lala Banshikar v. Government of Bengal, 9 B. L. R., 371; 11 Moo. I. A., 89; 16 W. R., P. C., 11; Goshain Tota v. Rickmanee Bullub, 13 Moo. I. A., 77, s. c., 12 W. R., P. C., 32 (1869). The Judicial Committee will not determine an appeal against a decree upon the mere fact that some evidence has been improperly admitted by the Court below. It is the rule of this tribunal to do substantial justice between the parties, and to see if there is sufficient evidence on the whole record to justify the conclusion to which the Court below arrived.

(4) Field, Ev., 675.

(5) See as to Review Gin. Pr. Code, §§ 623—630, and the cases cited in O'Kinsay's Gin. Pr. Code (in the notes to those sections) and in Field, Ev., 675, 676.

revision: "I am myself strongly inclined to the view that when Courts in the exercise of their judicial functions decide that a document is inadmissible in evidence, having exercised their judgment upon the question of its admissibility or inadmissibility, we have no jurisdiction to interfere in the matter under section 622. What the Courts do in such a case assuming the document tendered to be erroneously rejected is to make a mistake upon a question of law, and it does not appear to me to be material whether the mistake in law is made during the hearing of the case or in the final decision. A mere error in law is not, I think, an illegality or a material irregularity within the meaning of section 622 of the Code." A new trial is provided for by section 37 of Act XV of 1882 in the case of Presidency Small Cause Courts. Under the provisions of sections 38 and 39 of the latter Act a suit decided by the Small Cause Court, and in which the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 1,000 can in certain cases be re-heard by the High Court. Under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act IX of 1887, a review of judgment can be applied for, but not a new trial. As to re-trials in criminal cases v. post.

Appeals in civil cases are of three kinds: (a) appeals from original decrees, or first or "regular" appeals as to which see Chapter XLI of the Civil Procedure Code; (b) appeals from appellate decrees or second or "special" appeals dealt with by Chapter XLII of the same Code,(1) and (c) appeals to the Privy Council regulated by Chapter XLV of the Code. Appeals are also permitted from certain classes of orders (ss. 588—591). In addition to the power of appeal conferred on suitors the Courts themselves are possessed of certain discretionary powers by way of "revision" (sections 617—622) and "review" (sections 623—630) at their own instance or that of suitors.(2)

In the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mohur Sing v. Ghurida,(3) cited ante, "is indicated very clearly what is the duty of a Court sitting in first appeal, or under the old Code, 'regular appeal' and therefore competent to deal with both facts and law when evidence has been improperly admitted by the Court of first instance. It should throw aside the evidence which ought not to have been admitted, and then consider whether there still remains sufficient evidence to support the decree. Where the evidence which is to be so thrown aside is wholly irrelevant the case is sufficiently clear. The decree can be supported upon relevant evidence only; and if after all that is irrelevant has been thrown aside, there does not remain enough that is relevant to support it, the decision must be reversed. The party who is thus defeated may say that, if he had known that the evidence given would have been insufficient for the purpose, he could have produced other evidence that would have been sufficient. The answer to this objection is to be found in the following observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of (4) Maharajah Koowar v. Nund Lall Singh."(5) "The learned Counsel for the appellant have not strongly contended that the proper order to be made on this appeal is one remanding the case for re-trial. They have rather insisted that on the materials now before their Lordships, he is entitled to have the decree made in his favour by the Principal Sudder Ameen affirmed. Their Lordships, however, desire to observe that in their judgment the majority of the Sudder Court was right in treating the cause as ripe for final decision. The appellant

---

(1) The term "special appeal" is not used in the present Code, which speaks of "second appeals" and "appeals from appellate decree." See s. 372 of the old and s. 584 of the present Code. And as to the origin and history of second appeals, see Field's Bengal Regulations, Introduction. 178—181.

(2) As to the Civil Appellate Courts other than High Courts in Bengal, (Act XII of 1887, ss. 20, 21), Madras (Act III of 1873, s. 13), and Bombay (Act XIV of 1869, ss. 8, 14, 17, 36) Presidencies see the Acts and sections noted in the preceding brackets.

(3) 8 R.I., 495 496, 499 (1870), v. ante, p. 788.

(4) Field, Ev., 671, 672.

had, at all events from the note of the settlement of the issues, clear notice of what he had to prove. He had been called upon to adduce further evidence on these issues, if he had any to give. He advisedly declined to do so, and called for the judgment of the Court upon the evidence already given. If this manner of trial were irregular it is not for him to complain of an irregularity committed at his instance or with his consent. And the suspicion, however probable, of the Judge that a party, who has failed to prove his case, may be more successful on a second and fuller investigation is no sufficient ground for directing a new trial" (1)

"But there is another class of cases, namely, those in which a fact relevant in itself has been erroneously allowed to be proved in a manner not permitted by law, as for example, where secondary evidence of the contents of a document has been admitted without the absence of the original having been accounted for. The rule in England is that, unless the opposite party objected to this evidence at the time that it was offered, he cannot object afterwards; and in accordance with this it has been held more than once by the Calcutta High Court, that it is not competent to an appellate Court sitting in regular appeal to reject the copy of a document to the admission of which by the lower Court no objection was made by any of the parties, although the original was not produced or its non-production not accounted for." (2)

If the Appellate Court is of opinion that the rejected evidence if received, ought to have varied the decision, it does not follow that such Court should in every case proceed at once to reverse the decision of the lower Court. It is competent for the superior Court, and in most cases it would be proper, to proceed in the manner provided for by section 568 of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the production of additional evidence in the Appellate Court. (3)

The wrongful reception or rejection of evidence is an error of law, and as such may be made the ground of second appeal. But it has been said (4) that there is great difficulty in applying the provisions of this section to the generality of cases which come before the High Court on second appeal. For on second appeal the Court has no power to deal with the sufficiency of the evidence; it has only a right to entertain questions of law. And its duty being thus confined, it seems that when evidence has been wrongly admitted by the Court below, the High Court has, generally speaking, no right to decide, whether the remaining evidence in the case, other than that which has been improperly admitted, is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below. It seems that the High Court cannot decide that question, without examining in detail that other evidence, and determining as a question of fact, whether it is sufficient of itself to warrant the lower Court’s finding. The only cases in which the High Court may with propriety dispose of under such circumstances without a remand, are those where, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, the lower Court has apparently arrived at its conclusion upon other grounds. Where this appears pretty clearly from the judgment a remand is unnecessary.

1. See also R. v. Madhab Chandra, 21 W. R., Cr., 13 (1874); where the High Court decline on appeal, to receive evidence which was available at the trial below, when the prisoner deliberately elected not to give evidence in reply to the case made against him; and as to the admission of additional evidence in the Appellate Court, see Civ. Pr. Code, s. 568; Ram Das v. The Official Liquidator, 9 A., 386 (1887); Morgan v. Morgan, 4 A., 305 (1882); Upender Mohan v. Gopal Chandra, 21 C., 484 (1894), v. post.

2. Field, Ev., 672, 673, v. ante, s. 5, and cases there cited. As to the inadmissibility of documents by reason of want of registration, v. Appendix. In the case of the Stamp law, where a document has been wrongly admitted in evidence no objection can be taken to the decree in appeal on that account, See Appendix, and cases there cited.

3. Field, Ev., 675. See the case cited, ante, note 1, and in the notes to s. 568 in O’Kinealy’s Civ. Pr. Code.

because then the error committed by the lower Court has not affected the decision upon the merits (Civil Procedure Code, section 578). The Court may, upon the hearing of a second appeal, remand the case for reconsideration and a fresh decision by the lower Court.(1)

The rule of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is never to disturb the concurrent decisions of the Courts below upon a mere question of fact, unless it very clearly appears that there has been some miscarriage of justice, or that the conclusion drawn by the Courts below is plainly erroneous. Where evidence, such as hearsay, is improperly admitted, the question for the Judicial Committee is whether, rejecting that evidence, enough remains to support the finding.(2)

By the constitution of the High Courts in India the Judges for the purpose of the trial of an action, sit as a jury as well as Judges, and the same weight is to be given to a decision of the Judges in such circumstances as to the verdict of a jury in England, in which the Judge who tries the cause makes no objection. The Privy Council, therefore, will not disturb a judgment of an Indian Court upon a question of the credibility of witnesses; unless it is manifestly clear from the probabilities attached to certain circumstances in the case that the Court below was wrong in the conclusion drawn from such evidence.(3) And in the aforementioned case(5) the Council observed as follows:- "This Board never heard of an appeal being instituted on the ground that witnesses had been discredited; the Court below were aware of the character of those witnesses, and besides the knowledge of their character had the advantage of seeing their demeanour and behaviour of which we, on written evidence, have no power of judging. We feel it our duty, therefore, to decide this case on the general principle that no appeal will lie from the judgment of a Court below on the ground that the Court discredited the witnesses produced to them by either party."

As already observed it has been held that this section applies to criminal as well as civil cases.(6) In criminal cases an Appellate Court may, if it sees fit, order the appellant to be re-tried (Civil Procedure Code, section 423); and the High Court in the exercise of its powers of revision may exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of appeal, including the power of ordering a new trial (ib., section 439). With reference to appeals in criminal cases, see the Criminal Procedure Code, sections 404, 418, 430, 407, 408, 410-414, 417, 427, 419, 431, and as to reference and revision, Chapter XXXII of the same Code. Section 537 contains the important provision based on the same principle which underlies section 167 of this Act that no finding, sentence or order is reversible or alterable unless the error, omission, irregularity, want of sanction or misdirection has occasioned a failure of justice. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court,(7) following the decision of the Privy Council in Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales,(8) that an accused in a trial by jury is entitled to

(1) Naseem Khan v. Raghoonath Doss, 20 W. R., 474 (1873); Ratnabati Nag v. Mudhoonooden Roy, 20 W. R., 385 (1873); see further as to second appeals, cases cited in Field, Ev., 678—678; and in O'Kinealy's Civil Procedure Code, notes to ss. 584—587.

(2) Gosain Tota v. Rickmunnos Bullab, 13 Moo. I. A., 77 (1860); where also the rule of the P. C., as to the improper admission of evidence is laid down, v. ante, p. 799 note (2).

(3) Maker Sing v. Ghurika, 6 B. L. R., P. C., 496 (1870).

(6) v. ante, p. 796, and note (4).

(8) L. R. (1894), A. C., 87. the verdict of the jury on questions of fact, and where a verdict is vitiated owing to misdirection by the Judge, or the improper admission or rejection of evidence(1) the appeal Court has no option but to set aside the verdict and direct a re-trial.
Were the Appeal Court (it was said) to go into the facts in such a case, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the jury, who have the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords. Section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not warrant an appeal Court, in a case where there has been misdirection in a charge to a jury, going into the evidence with a view to decide whether there is sufficient evidence to justify a conviction.
Under section 418 an appeal in a case tried by a jury lies on matters of law only, and the Appeal Court has no power to try the accused on matters of fact.
The word "erroneous" in clause (d) of section 423, it was held, must not be read as "wrong on the facts" but must be read in connection with the words that follow as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law.

However in Bombay it has been held to the contrary, following the practice of that Court,(2) that, when part of the evidence which has been allowed to go to the jury, is found to be irrelevant and inadmissible, it is open to the High Court in appeal either to uphold the verdict upon the remaining evidence on the record under section 167 of this Act, or to quash the verdict and order a re-trial; and that the law as settled in England by the R. v. Gibson,(3) and as stated by the Privy Council in Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales(4) with reference to the granting of new trials where evidence has been improperly admitted, does not apply to India. Similarly the High Court at Madras have recently held in the case of an appeal from an acquittal that it was not obligatory on the High Court to order further inquiry or a re-trial and that the High Court could consider the evidence, and if, after so doing, it formed the opinion that the evidence could not, in any proper view of the case, support a conviction, it would not alter or reverse the order of acquittal.(5)

Improper advice given by the Judge to the jury upon a question of fact, or the omission of the Judge to give that advice which a Judge, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, ought to give the jury upon questions of fact amounts to such an error in law in summing up as to justify the High Court, on appeal or revision, in setting aside a verdict of guilty. The power of setting aside convictions and ordering new trials for any error or defect in the summing up will be exercised by the High Court only when the Court is satisfied that the accused person has been prejudiced by the error or defect, or that a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby.(6)

The nature and extent of the powers of the High Court under section 26 of the Letters Patent has proved to be a question of considerable difficulty. It has been held that section 167 of the Evidence Act applies to criminal trials by jury in the High Court (7) and that the High Court on a point of law as to the admissibility of evidence reserved under clause 25 of the charter, and section 101 of the High Court Criminal Procedure Act (X of 1875) has power to review the whole case and determine whether the admission of the rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial, and a conviction should not be reversed unless the admission of the rejected evidence ought to have varied the

(1) Makin v. Attorney-General for N. S. Wales, supra.
(2) R. v. Ramchandra Govind, 19 B., 749, 761 (1896); all the cases will be found here collected. As to the effect of the admission of inadmissible evidence see R. v. Woman, 27 B., 420 (1890).
(3) L. R., 18 Q. B. D., 537.
(4) L. R., 1894, Append. Cases, 57, 69, 70.
(6) In re Elaloo Bakhsh, 5 W. R., Cr., 60 (1866.)
(7) R. v. Nasrul Dada dozen, 9 Bow. H. C. R., 338 (1872); R. v. Hurribale Chander, 1 C., 207
(1876); R. v. Pilander Jina, 2 B., 61, 65 (1877).
result of the trial, and that the same rule applies where evidence has been improperly admitted.(1) Where however there was a misjoinder of charges, making the whole trial initially bad and the objection to the conviction was not limited to improper reception of evidence, it was held by the Privy Council that the course pursued which was illegal could not be amended by the High Court arranging afterwards what might or might not have been properly submitted to the jury. Upon the assumption that the trial was illegally conducted it could not be suggested that there was enough left upon the indictment upon which a conviction might have been supported if the accused had been properly tried; the mischief had been done. The effect of the misjoinder of charges which was not curable under section 537 could not be averted by disseccting the verdict afterwards and appropriating the finding of guilty only to such parts of the charge as ought to have been submitted to the jury. To do so would be to leave to the Court the functions of the jury, and the accused would never have really been tried at all upon the charge arranged afterwards by the Court.(2)

Though there is a prerogative right in the Crown to entertain an appeal in criminal cases, there is no absolute right of appeal to the Privy Council inherent in the person convicted, and the Council will only entertain such an appeal upon the certificate of the High Court or in very exceptional cases. (3) "Her Majesty will not review, or interfere with, the course of criminal proceedings unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done."(4)

(1) R. v. Piamber Jina, 2 B., 61, 65 (1877); following R. v. Navroji, 9 Bom. H. C. R., 35, (1872); R. v. Burnibole Chunder, 1 C., 207 (1876); a. c., 25 W. R., Cr., 36. (Apart from s. 167 of the Evidence Act the Court has power in a case under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent to review the whole case on the merits, and affirm or quash the conviction.) R. v. O'Hara, 17 C., 642 (1880). In these cases it was argued for the Crown that for the Full Court to go into the merits of the case would be practically the same as sitting as Judge and Jury, but it was held that the Court had power to deal with the case on the merits as it appeared from the notes of the trial Judge and in the last case quashed, and in the others upheld, the conviction. In the recent case of R. v. McGuire, 4 C. W. N., 433 (1900), it was held that this section applied to cases heard by the High Court when exercising its powers under clause 26 of the Letters Patent. See also Subrahmania Ayyar v. R., 25 M., 61, 77 (1901).

(2) Subrahmania Ayyar v. R., 25 M., 61, 96, 97 (1901).

(4) Experte Corea, 1897, App. Cas., 719, 721; Re Dilleji, 12 App. Cas., 459, 457 (1887); cited arguendo in Bal Gangadhur v. R., 22 B., 529 (1897), in which leave to appeal was refused. In the case of Subrahmania Ayyar v. R., 4 C. W. N., ex n. (1900), 25 M., 61 (1901), leave to appeal was granted and the conviction set aside. (1) Act X of 1897 repeals so much of the Indian Evidence Act as relates to Act I of 1868.
SCHEDULE.

Enactments Repealed.

[See section 2.]

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Number and year.</th>
<th>Title.</th>
<th>Extent of repeal.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Stat. 26 Geo. III, cap. 57.</td>
<td>For the further regulation of the trial of persons accused of certain offences committed in the East Indies; for repealing so much of an Act, made in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of his present Majesty (intituled 'an Act for the better regulation and management of the affairs of the East India Company, and of the British possession in India, and for establishing a Court of Judicature for the more speedy and effectual trial of persons accused of offences committed in the East Indies,' as requires the servants of the East India Company to deliver inventories of their estates and effects; for rendering the laws more effectual against persons unlawfully resorting to the East Indies; and for the more easy proof, in certain cases, of deeds and writings executed in Great Britain or India.</td>
<td>Section 38 so far as it relates to Courts of Justice in the East Indies.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stat. 14 and 15 Vict., cap. 98.</td>
<td>To amend the Law of Evidence</td>
<td>Section 11 and so much of section 19 as relates to British India.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act XV of 1852</td>
<td>To amend the Law of Evidence</td>
<td>So much as has not been heretofore repealed.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act XIX of 1853</td>
<td>To amend the Law of Evidence in the Civil Courts of the East India Company in the Bengal Presidency.</td>
<td>Section 19.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act II of 1855</td>
<td>For the further improvement of the Law of Evidence.</td>
<td>So much as have not been heretofore repealed.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act XXV of 1861</td>
<td>For simplifying the procedure of the Courts of Criminal Judicature not established by Royal Charter.</td>
<td>Section 237.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act I of 1863 (1)</td>
<td>The General Clauses Act, 1888</td>
<td>Sections 7 and 8.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(1) Act X of 1857 repeals so much of the Indian Evidence Act as relates to Act I of 1858.
APPENDICES.
APPENDIX

A.

(REvised by Legislative Department up to 15th December, 1906.)

1A.—PLACES TO WHICH THE ACT HAS BEEN SPECIFICALLY APPLIED.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Names of places</th>
<th>Notification or other authority.</th>
<th>Where published</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>SOUTHERN INDIA.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1. Bangalore</td>
<td>No. 2252-I., dated the 7th August, 1888, and No. 3066-I., dated the 31st August, 1893.(1)</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Southern India (Madras and Mysore), Ed. 1899, pp. 104 and 111.(2)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. Lands occupied by the Nizam’s Guaranteed State Railways Company, the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, the Dhond and Manmad Railway, the Madras Railway and the Hyderabad-Godavari Valley Railway in the Hyderabad State.</td>
<td>Ditto.</td>
<td>Ditto.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NORTHERN INDIA.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6. Manipur [For purposes of cases in which British subjects are defendants.]</td>
<td>No. 413-E., dated the 3rd March, 1891.</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Northern India, Ed., 1900, p. 56.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10. Jammu and Kashmir [For purposes of cases in which the Governor-General in Council has jurisdiction.]</td>
<td>No. 933-E., dated the 8th May, 1901.</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Northern India, Ed. 1900, p. 182.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(1) The two amending Acts of 1897 and 1898 were applied by this notification.

(2) The volumes referred to are Macpherson’s British Enactments in force in Native States, 2nd Edition, by A. Williams, R.C.S.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Names of Places</th>
<th>Notification or Other Authority</th>
<th>Where Published</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>NORTHERN INDIA. (contd.)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CENTRAL INDIA AND RAJPUTANA.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13. Lands occupied by the Indian Midland Railway in the Dholpur State in the Rajputana Agency and in the States in the Central India Agency including the Bhopal-Ujjain, the Goonas-Bina and the Goonas-Baran Railways, but excluding the Saugor-Katni section in the Panna State.</td>
<td>No. 1830-I.B., dated the 5th June 1904, and No. 1180-I.B., dated the 7th March, 1900.</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Rajputana and Central India, Ed. 1900, pp. 109 and 306 respectively, and Gazette of India, 1900, Part I, p. 156.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WESTERN INDIA.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22. Deesa Cantonment (Pahlanpur State, Bombay) [except the 3rd paragraph of section 1].</td>
<td>No. 5227-I., dated the 30th July, 1906.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Appendix A.

1A.—Places to which the Act has been specifically applied—(contd.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Names of places.</th>
<th>Notification or other authority.</th>
<th>Where published.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Western India.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(contd.)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25. Lands occupied by the following Railways in States in the Bombay Presidency:—</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(1) Bhavnagar-Gondal-Junagad-Forbandar Railway.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(b) Dhirajli Forbandar section.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Jetalpur-Rajkot section.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(2) Bombay-Baroda and Central India Railway.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(3) Dharangadhra Railway.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(4) Jamnagar Railway.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(5) Morvi State Railway.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(6) Rajputana-Malwa (Western Rajputana State) Railway.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1B.—Places to which the Act has been generally applied in common with other enactments in force in neighbouring British districts or places under British jurisdiction.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>SOUTHERN INDIA.</th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ramandurg (in respect to criminal jurisdiction over all persons not being subjects of the Rajas of Sandur.)</td>
<td>No. 1018-I., dated the 5th March, 1891.</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Southern India (Madras and Mysore), Ed. 1890, p. 30. Gazette of India, 1900, Part I, p. 731.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. (a) Lands occupied by the Bangalore Branch of the Madras Railway.</td>
<td>No. 507-I., dated the 6th February, 1896.</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Southern India (Madras and Mysore), Ed. 1899, p. 239.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(b) Lands occupied by the Mysore State Railway from and inclusive of the Haribar Ry. Station to and inclusive of the Bangalore Ry. Station.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Lands occupied by the Mysore State Railway from and inclusive of the Yeawathpur Junction Ry. Station to the frontier of the State on the Bangalore-Hindupur section of the Mysore State Ry.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(d) Lands occupied by the Kolar Gold Fields Railway.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. Lands occupied by the Mysore section of the Southern Mahratte Railway.</td>
<td>No. 3713-I., dated the 19th September, 1896.</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Southern India (Madras and Mysore), Ed. 1899, p. 239.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
APPENDIX A.

1B.—PLACES TO WHICH THE ACT HAS BEEN GENERALLY APPLIED IN CONJUNCTION WITH OTHER ENACTMENTS IN FORCE IN NEIGHBOURING BRITISH DISTRICTS OR PLACES UNDER BRITISH JURISDICTION—(contd.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Names of places</th>
<th>Notification or other authority</th>
<th>Where published</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>SOUTHERN INDIA— (contd.)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. Lands occupied by the Southern Mahratta Railway in the Hyderabad State.</td>
<td>No. 4564-I., dated the 18th November, 1891.</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Southern India (Hyderabad), Ed. 1890, p. 687.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NORTHERN INDIA.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
APPENDIX A.

1B.—PLACES TO WHICH THE ACT HAS BEEN GENERALLY APPLIED IN COMMON WITH OTHER ENACTMENTS IN FORCE IN NEIGHBOURING BRITISH DISTRICTS OR PLACES UNDER BRITISH JURISDICTION—(contd.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Names of places.</th>
<th>Notification or other authority.</th>
<th>Where published.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>NORTHERN INDIA—&lt;br&gt; (contd.).</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CENTRAL INDIA AND RAJPUTANA.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28. Lands occupied by the Indore section of the Rajputana-Malwa Railway to the south of the River Nerbudda.</td>
<td>No. 1007-I., dated the 21st March, 1894.</td>
<td>Ditto, p. 318,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WESTERN INDIA.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>32. Lands occupied by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway in the Kurundiwar State (Bombay Presidency).</td>
<td>Ditto.</td>
<td>Ditto.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Appendix A.

1B—Places to which the Act has been Generally Applied in Common with other enactments in force in neighbouring British districts or places under British Jurisdiction—(contd.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Western India—(contd.)</th>
<th>Notification or other authority.</th>
<th>Where published.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>35. Lands occupied by the Mahsana-Virasgam Railway in the Baroda State and in the Kismen and Ipura Estates of the Makhankha Agency (Bombay Presidency).</td>
<td>Ditto.</td>
<td>Ditto.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2.—Place beyond the limits of India to which the Act has been Made Applicable by his Majesty in Council for Purposes of Cases in which His Majesty has Jurisdiction.

1. Zanzibar ... | Zanzibar Order in Council, dated the 7th July 1897, Art. II(b) and Schedule 1. | British Enactments, Native States, Western India, Ed. 1900, pp. 515 and 530. |
2. Persian Coast and Islands ... | Persian Coast and Islands Order in Council, dated the 13th December 1889, Arts. 7, 8, & 23. | Ditto, pp. 478, 479 and 481. |
3. Somali Land Protectorate ... | Somali Order in Council, dated the 7th October, 1899, Art. 7. | Ditto, p. 496. |
4. East Africa Protectorate ... | The East Africa Orders in Council, 1897, dated the 7th July, 1897, Art. 11 (b) and Schedule. | Gazette of India, 1897, Part I, p. 791. |

(1) This list only contains such information as has been collected up to date and does not profess to be exhaustive.
Appendix A.

3.—A List of Some Native States in India Which Have Adopted the Act as Their Law.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Names of places</th>
<th>Notification or other authority</th>
<th>Where published</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Western India—continued.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1. Puddukottai (Madras Presidency).</td>
<td>Puddukottai Regulation II of 1882.</td>
<td>See note in Native States Lists, Southern India (Madras and Mysore), Ed. 1888, p. 20.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. Sandur (Madras Presidency). Mysore ...</td>
<td>Introduced by the Raja Schedule attached to the Instrument, dated 1st March 1881, transferring the Government to the Maharaja.</td>
<td>British Enactments, Native States, Southern India (Madras and Mysore), Ed. 1890, p. 57.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. Janjira (Bombay Presidency).</td>
<td>Notification by the Nawab of Janjira.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6. Jath (Bombay Presidency).</td>
<td>Notification by the Chief of Jath, dated the 5th May, 1888.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8. Miraj (Junior): (Bombay Presidency).</td>
<td>Notification by the Joint Administrators on behalf of the Minor Chief, dated the 10th August, 1888.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9. Ramdurg (Bombay Presidency).</td>
<td>Ditto, ditto, dated the 17th December, 1888.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11. Sawantwadi (Bombay Presidency).</td>
<td>Notification No. 540, dated the 10th March 1888, by the Political Superintendent of the State (on behalf of the Government of the Chief).</td>
<td>Not known.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12. Savanur.</td>
<td>Notification dated the 21st May, 1897, by the Administrator of the State (on behalf of the Minor Nawab of S ava n u r).</td>
<td>Published in the Savanur State on 25th July 1897.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

(1) In addition to the Native States that have adopted the Act, it may be mentioned that in the Kathiawar agency, rules based on the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) have been brought into force by Notification No. 1, dated the 6th January, 1874. See Kathiawar Agency Gazette, 1874, Supplement, p. 20.
(2) The Act was introduced by the Governor of Bombay in Council when the State was under British management.
APPENDIX

FIFTH REPORT OF HER MAJESTY'S COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO PREPARE A BODY OF SUBSTANTIVE LAW FOR INDIA.

REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

We, Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to prepare a body of Substantive Law for India, now humbly submit to your Majesty rules of law which we have prepared on the subject of evidence.

India does not at present possess an uniform law upon this subject. Within the Presidency-towns the English law of Evidence is in force, modified by certain Acts of the Indian Legislature, of which Act II of 1855 is the most important.

This Act contains many valuable provisions. It extends the range of judicial notice and facilitates the proof of documents, of foreign systems of law and of matters of public history. It removes incompetency to testify by reason of interest or relationship; renders parties to suits liable to be called as witnesses, and makes husband and wife competent witnesses for or against each other in civil proceedings; renders dying declarations admissible though the declarant may have entertained hopes of recovery; provides that witnesses may be cross-examined by the party who called them, and that they shall not be excused from answering questions because they may thereby criminate themselves. Declarations which were against the pecuniary interest of the persons who made them, and entries according to the usual course of business, both of which kinds of evidence the English law admits only in case of death, are under this Act admissible if the person who made the declaration or the entry has become incapable of giving evidence or if his testimony cannot be procured. The Act also gives to books regularly kept, and to certain commercial documents, the character of corroborative though not of independent evidence, and makes entries in such books independent evidence of certain formal matters; it extends the class of persons whose declarations are admissible in case of pedigree, and provides in effect that mistakes committed in the rejection or reception of evidence shall not lead to a new trial or to the reversal of a decision unless a substantial failure of justice has been caused thereby. The Act, however, bears reference in many places to the existing law, and it appears to have been designed, not as a complete body of rules, but as supplementary to, and corrective of, the English law, and also of the customary law of evidence prevailing in those parts of British India where the English law is not administered.

This customary law has not assumed any definite form; the Mahomedan law, since the enactment of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, has ceased to have any validity in the Country Courts, even in criminal matters; and those Courts have in fact no fixed rules of evidence except those contained in Act II of 1855. They are not required to follow the English law as such, although they are not debarred from following it where they regard it as the most equitable.

In laying down uniform rules for the guidance of the Indian judges in general, as well in the Courts just mentioned as in those in which the English law of Evidence has hitherto prevailed, we do not think that it would be advisable to adopt a system so artificial as that which has grown up in this country.

The English practice has been moulded in a great degree by our social and legal institutions and our forms of procedure; and much of it is admitted to be unsuited to the various states of society and the different forms of property which are to be met with in India. In England the aim has been to avoid presenting to the consideration of the jury whatever it was thought could not safely be presented to an unprofessional tribunal. In order to obtain this end, various kinds of evidence, which were deemed little worthy of credit, were pronounced inadmissible, and a great deal of evidence which, if duly weighed and dispassionately considered, would tend to the elucidation of truth, is absolutely excluded. On the other hand, evidence is admitted which is at least as dangerous as that which is shut out. Thus parent and child cannot refuse to bear testimony for or against each other in criminal cases, while a wife cannot be asked a question on the trial of her husband unless the trial be for an offence committed against herself. In matrimonial cases the inconsistencies of the law as to the competency of the married persons to give evidence cause frequent embarrassment, and even occasional failure of justice.

In a country like India, where the task of judicial investigation is attended with peculiar difficulties, and where it is the duty of the judge in all civil, and in some criminal, cases, to decide without a jury, there is greater danger of miscarriage from the mind of the Court being influenced than from being influenced by the information laid before it. It seems, therefore, better to afford every facility for the admission of truth although with some risk that falsehood or error may be mixed with it, than to narrow, with a view to the exclusion of falsehood, the channels by which truth is admitted. It is of course impossible to admit all evidence that may be offered, for this would lead to excessive waste of time; but we have provided that all relevant evidence not expressly excluded by our rules shall be admissible, and that except in those few cases where the law itself attaches a special importance or effect to particular evidence, the Court shall decide for itself whether any weight, and what weight, shall be assigned to each piece of evidence that is submitted to it. The judge must, of course, form his own opinion regarding the relevancy of any evidence which the parties desire to submit to him; but it is often difficult, especially in the early stage of a trial, to show the exact bearing of each piece of evidence upon the issues. It is by no means our desire that our rules should be understood as imposing upon the judges the use of excessive strictness in excluding evidence of which the applicability cannot be fully shown at the moment when the evidence is tendered. We have, however, inserted provisions intended to guard against the trial of collateral issues arising out of questions asked with a view to impugn the credit of witnesses.

It will be seen that we have discarded, for the most part, the rules which limit the discretion of the Court in drawing its conclusions from the whole of the evidence. While we do not interfere with those provisions of the Act for the registration of assurances or of the Code of Criminal procedure which recognise certain things as prima facie evidence, that is to say, as conclusive unless met by counter-evidence yet we do not by our own rules attach this character to evidence of any class, nor,—except where the testimony of a witness has been attacked,—do we recognise anything as corroborative though not independent evidence. We have provided that a Court may act upon the testimony of a single witness, even in the case of the gravest offences against the State, or of perjury, or of criminal charges supported by the evidence of accomplices alone.

An attempt to define all the cases in which, and the purposes for which, particular evidence may be received, would in our opinion impede instead of aid the investigation of truth. We hope that the course which we have adopted will render it easier for those who administer the law to avoid the errors so often committed in practice where a strict standard of admissibility exists—that of supposing that whatever evidence is admissible comes in some degree accredited to the Court.

The exclusion even of relevant evidence may be desirable, when the evidence is such that people are naturally inclined to attach undue importance to it; when it is such as cannot be admitted without the danger of encouraging forgery; or when it is such as cannot be received, or at least cannot be extorted, without injury to interests which are even more important than the judicial investigation of truth.

Although we have laid it down generally that all relevant evidence shall be admissible, we have thought it necessary to make certain exceptions from this rule. These exceptions relate chiefly to that kind of evidence which is described in the English books under the title "hearsay." We have, however, abstained from making use of the word "hearsay" from the uncertainty and vagueness of the meaning usually attributed to that word. What a witness says as to what some other person has said or written may be called "hearsay" in some sense of that word, and that the widest or popular sense; but the statements by a witness of what he has heard another person say may be, in fact (as in cases of slander), the very matter in issue; or in other cases may be part of the circumstances which it is essential to ascertain. On the other hand, "hearsay" may be defined to be that which a witness does not say as of his own knowledge, but says that another has said or signified to him. This is probably a more strict and accurate definition of the word "hearsay" as used in the English law: but it does not include all that is known in that law as hearsay.

After much considering this subject, we have thought that it would promote a more accurate apprehension of our meaning, and be of more practical utility in the Indian Courts, if we were to exclude the word altogether. We have, therefore, without attempting any definition of the word "hearsay," endeavoured to lay down rules for the exclusion of that class of evidence in the cases in which we think it ought to be excluded, and for the admission, as laid down in the Act, which is thought to be admissible. We have accordingly gone through the various classes of evidence in which arises the question of admissibility or exclusion of what is called in the English law "hearsay," and have endeavoured to state the rule applicable to each class.
Most of the rules for the admissibility of this kind of evidence are recognized by the English law, others are in accordance with the Indian Act II of 1855, above referred to, or are intended to relax the English rules still further than was done by that enactment.

We have, for instance, made admissible in evidence, that which has been spoken, written, or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence or whose presence cannot be procured; and we have admitted entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business. We have also made admissible written acknowledgments of the receipt of money, goods, securities, or property of any kind, and documents used in commerce. Declarations which under the English law are only admitted because they have been made against interest will, by the effect of our rules, be excluded, unless they have been made in the ordinary course of business. The test of pecuniary interest is exceedingly difficult of application, and appears to us to be of little value as a test of truth.

We have admitted statements as to matters of reputation and of pedigree made by persons since dead or incapacitated, or whose presence cannot be procured; adding in the case of pedigrees a proviso that the person who made the statement shall have had special means of knowledge. We have discarded the condition of the English law which requires that the statement shall have been made before the controversy had arisen, as we think that this circumstance affects rather the weight than the admissibility of the statement. We have allowed a limited effect, as evidence, to newspaper reports of public meetings.

The indulgence afforded to witnesses by the existing law in permitting them to refer to contemporaneous memoranda appears to us to be carried too far when copies of such memoranda are allowed to be used for the purpose; and our rules do not permit the use of copies.

Another clause of exclusion applies to documentary evidence. Unless some degree of caution were observed with regard to the authentication of writings, great facilities would be afforded for the fabrication of documents. We have, therefore, laid down rules for the evidence to be required of the proper execution of documents, and, retaining the distinction between primary and secondary evidence, have provided against the admission of the latter where the former is procurable. We hope that these rules will, in combination with the laws lately passed by the Indian legislature for the registration of assurances, tend to the improvement of Indian documentary evidence.

The third case in which we have excluded testimony is, where its admission would be dangerous to the public service or inconsistent with decency or morality, with the confidence of married life, or with the freedom of intercourse between a client and his legal adviser.

We have provided that questions of a criminal tendency shall not be asked merely in order to test the credit of a witness. We have not adopted section 19 of Act XIX of 1855, which excuses witnesses from producing their own title-deeds—a provision which must, under an improved system of registration, become even less useful to India. Judges will, no doubt, protect witnesses from the production of their title-deeds when they are not relevant and material to the cause. We have not adopted in all respects the doctrines of the English law on the subject of the effect of previous decisions when advanced as evidence.

To those judgments, which are admitted by the laws of all other countries as conclusive evidence not only between the parties but as against strangers, we have affixed the same character in India; in all other cases we have provided that the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly in issue shall be admissible as evidence between the same parties upon the same matter directly in issue in another cause, but that it shall not be conclusive. As regards strangers, we have provided that it shall be admissible merely as evidence that such a judgment was pronounced between the parties.

We have thought that the Court will arrive at the truth more accurately if left to draw their inference from the evidence given, than if fettered by rules of presumption, which are, in our opinion, incapable of being laid down so as to be universally applicable. It may perhaps be made a question how far the subject of evidence falls under the head of Substantive Law, and some of the sections of the Draft now submitted certainly border closely on Procedure. Those sections, however, have not found a place in either of the Codes of Procedure. We have therefore inserted them (with some modifications), as it appears to us that the law of evidence ought not to be left to be gleaned from many different enactments, but that so much of it as is not to be found in the Codes of Procedure should be, as far as possible, comprised in the rules of law now submitted by us, and that the enactments which will thus be rendered unnecessary should be repealed.

(1) By the Indian Registration Act XX of 1866, it is provided that instruments creating important interests in immovable property must, in order to be registered, be presented in evidence or to affect property, be registered; that other documents may be registered, and that all registered documents shall possess certain advantages.
We recommend the repeal of so much of Acts II of 1855 and XIX of 1853 as remains unrepealed, except section 26 of the latter enactment, which does not form part of the law of evidence.

The Council met at Simla on Wednesday, the 28th October 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, presiding.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.

The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor. The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.

The Hon'ble H. S. Maine. The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B.

The Hon'ble John Strachey. The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerill.

The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, Bart., C.B.

EVIDENCE BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. Maine moved for leave to introduce a Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence. He said it would probably be sufficient to state that the Bill embodied the draft rules of law which the Indian Law Commissioners had recently prepared on the subject of evidence. There was probably no subject in which a codified law was more wanted in India, and the Commissioners had fully stated in the report which had been circulated to Hon'ble Members, the reasons for all the changes which the Bill proposed to introduce. If he got leave to introduce the Bill, he proposed to ask His Excellency the President to suspend the rules for the conduct of business, and, on their suspension, to introduce the Bill with a view to its publication in the Gazette. There was no use in now dilating to any length on the technical subjects comprised in the Bill.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Maine then asked the President to suspend the Rules for the Conduct of Business.

The President declared the Rules suspended.

The Hon'ble Mr. Maine then introduced the Bill.

WHITLEY STOKES,

Asst. Secy., to the Govt. of India,

Home Department (Legislative).

SIMLA,

The 28th October 1868.

The Council met at Government House, on Friday, the 4th December 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, presiding.

The Hon'ble G. Noble Taylor. The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, Bart., C.B.

The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B. The Hon'ble Gordon S. Forbes.

The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerill. The Hon'ble D. Cowie.

The Hon'ble M. J. Shaw Stewart.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shaw Stewart took the oath of allegiance, and the oath that he would faithfully discharge the duties of his office.
APPENDIX AA.

EVIDENCE BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. Maine moved that the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence referred to a Select Committee with instructions to report in two months. He said that the Council were no doubt aware that, in referring a Bill to a Select Committee, what was affirmed was the principle of the measure or the expediency of legislation within the general principles of the measure. This being understood, Mr. Maine did not suppose that the Council would ever seriously think of refusing to refer to a Select Committee a Bill prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners, and therefore he should say very little in commending it to the Council. The consideration of the measure was essentially a consideration of its detail, and to that detail the Select Committee would doubtless give the most careful attention, not, as Mr. Maine hoped, for the purpose of setting its judgment against the judgment of the Commissioners in matters which lay legitimately within the sphere of their great judicial and forensic experience, but for the purpose of seeing whether their specific proposals were made in any way restriction or extension with regard to the special circumstances and facts of this country.

On the general expediency of obtaining a codified law of evidence for India, Mr. Maine did not suppose that there could be two opinions. He ventured to think that the Commissioners had, if anything, rather understated the grounds upon which such a law was desirable. They observed that India did not possess any uniform law on the subject. After stating that within the Presidency-towns the English law of evidence was in force, modified by certain Acts of the Indian Legislature of which Act II of 1855 was the most important, they went on to say that a customary law of evidence prevailed in those parts of British India where English law was not administered. "This customary law," they added:—

"Has not assumed any definite form; the Mahomedan law, since the enactment of the new Code of Criminal Procedure has ceased to have any validity in the country courts, even in criminal matters; and those courts have in fact no fixed rules of evidence except those contained in Act II of 1855. They are not required to follow the English law as such, although they are not debarred from following it where they regard it as the most equitable."

On looking, however, at the two Indian Evidence Acts, it would seem that they implied that the English law of evidence, except where they modified it, was in force in the bulk of India, the Mofussil. During the last ten or fifteen years the doctrine that the English law of evidence was, vi propriis, in force throughout the whole of the country had certainly gained strength, and the habit of applying that law with increasing strictness was gaining ground. No doubt much evidence was received by the Mofussil Courts which the English Courts would not regard as strictly admissible. But Mr. Maine would appeal to Members of Council who had more experience in the Mofussil than he had, his honourable friends, Sir George Couper and Mr. Cockerell, whether the Judges of those Courts did not, as a matter of fact, believe that it was their duty to administer the English law of evidence as modified by the Evidence Acts. In particular, Mr. Maine was informed that when a case was argued by a barrister before a Mofussil Judge, and when the English rules of Evidence were pressed on his attention, he did practically accept those rules, and admit or reject evidence according to his construction of them.

Mr. Maine could not help regarding this state of things as eminently unsatisfactory. He entirely agreed with the Commissioners that there were parts of the English law of evidence which were not suited to this country. They heard much of the laxity with which evidence was admitted in the Mofussil Courts, but the truth was that this laxity was to a considerable extent justifiable. The evil, it appeared to Mr. Maine, lay less in admitting evidence which under strict rules of admissibility should be rejected, than in admitting and rejecting evidence without fixed rules to govern admission and rejection. Anything like a capricious administration of the law of evidence was an evil, but it would be an equal, or perhaps even a greater, evil that such strict rules of evidence should be enforced as practically to leave the Court without the materials for a decision. Mr. Maine would venture to state his impression that the fault of substance ordinarily committed by the Mofussil Courts consisted less in lax admission of evidence, than in avertting their attention from the evidence really before them, and in conjecturing the facts of the case upon probabilities derived from a consideration of what the natives of the country would be likely to do under given circumstances. Another objection lay in the necessity which the Mofussil Judges were thus placed of depending upon English text-books. There were excellent text-books of the English law of evidence, but their usefulness consisted more in refreshing knowledge which had been gained by forensic experience than in teaching knowledge. The Commissioners would appear to be right in supposing that what was wanted for the greatest part of India was a liberalized version of the English law of evidence enacted with authority and thus excluding caprice, and superseding the use of text-books by compactness and precision.

Another objection which Mr. Maine entertained to the present state of the law might appear to be speculative, but was really of some practical moment. The doctrine that the English law of evidence without authoritative enactment prevailed vi propriis and of its own virtue, was calculated to encourage the notion that rules of evidence constituted a scientific machinery by which truth as to facts and as to men's actions could be ascertained somewhat as physical truths could be ascertained by the processes in use among men of science. There were certain continental systems of evidence which did make a pretension to include a process of the kind. And perhaps some such theory did pervade the rules of the English law with regard to presumptions, which he was happy to see the Commissioners had discarded. But the English law of evidence as a whole made no claim to be such a system. It was justly regarded by English lawyers as a model of good sense; but it would probably have never come into existence but for one peculiarity of the English judicial administration,—the separation of the judge of law from the judge of fact, of the Judge from the jury. It consisted mainly of rules of exclusion, that is, of rules for keeping certain kinds of evidence out of sight of the judge of fact. Such a system, Mr. Maine apprehended, could only be justified on two grounds. First of all, some evidence must be excluded. If all evidence were admitted, nay, even if all relevant evidence were admitted, if everything were let in which tended to throw light on the matters in issue, the Courts would be overwhelmed. Even in England they would break down, and it would be quite impossible for the Courts to discharge their functions in this country with the notorious habit of its Natives of attempting to help on the proof by accumulating everything which has even the remotest bearing on it. It being then, assumed that, under the actual conditions of judicial enquiry, some sorts of evidence must necessarily be shut out, the English law excluded those descriptions of evidence which were found practically to affect the minds of all men, except those of the most sagacious judgment, out of all proportion to the real value of such evidence. This was the case of the great department known to English lawyers as 'hearsay.' It was not at all meant that hearsay evidence was not incidentally valuable, and Mr. Maine could well imagine a great Indian Statesman conducted in an emergency to a most important conclusion by evidence which a Court of Justice would reject as absolutely inadmissible. But, taking men as you found them, and taking the average of judicial ability, it was really true that some kinds of evidence did produce an impression on the mind far deeper than was consistent with their real weight. The good sense to which the English law laid claim was evinced by the tests which it laid down for distinguishing those kinds of evidence from those which remained. It would be presumptuous in Mr. Maine to praise the Commissioners' proposals, but he ventured to say that, in his humble opinion, they had wisely availed themselves of the results of English experience but had wisely modified those results upon two considerations, which, they stated as follows:

"The English practice has been moulded in a great degree by our social and legal institutions and our forms of procedure; and much of it is admitted to be unsuited to the various states of society and the different forms of property which are to be met with in India."

"In a country like India where the task of judicial investigation is attended with peculiar difficulties, and where it is the duty of the Judge in all civil and in some criminal cases to decide without a jury, there is greater danger of miscarriage from the mind of the Court being uninformed than from its being unduly influenced by the information laid before it."

Mr. Maine had said that he would not comment on the details of the measure, but there was one point of detail which it was necessary to notice, because, as it involved a financial question, the Select Committee would probably not like to deal with it without knowing the opinion of the Executive Government. The Commissioners' Draft and the Bill based upon it saved the Registration Act; but it would be observed that they did not refer to the Stamp Act. The omission in the Bill was explained by its being doubtful whether the Stamp Bill now in the hands of Mr. Cockerell would or would not receive the assent of the Governor-General before the present measure. If the Stamp Bill was passed last, it was not the present measure. But another reason must probably be assigned for the omission in the Commissioners' Draft, which appeared to be deliberate. Mr. Maine found that the last paragraph of their Third Report, on the Law of Negotiable Instruments, was to the following effect:

"Negotiable instruments have recently been subjected to a stamp-duty in British India by an Act which, like the English Stamp Act, renders instruments invalid if its regulations are not observed. This provision of the English Stamp Act has led to the establishment of several rules and distinctions not unattended with inconvenience, and we would suggest that a law which merely imposed a penalty in case of infringement would be more conducive to the public interest. For the present, we have thought it our best course to frame our rules irrespectively of the stamp law."

Now from the Commissioners' point of view, which was the purely juridical point of view, there was no doubt that simplicity would be attained by the course proposed. But what would be the practical effect? His hon'ble friend, Mr. Cockerell, had had a vast mass of papers before him relating to the operation of the stamp law. Mr. Maine appealed to him whether the following was not a fair inference from those papers. If effect were given to the Commissioners' suggestion either there would be an enormous evasion of the law, or that evasion would be prevented by recourse to the Criminal Courts for the enforcement of penalties to an extent which would itself be a greater evil than the sacrifice of any branch of revenue. Under these circumstances, the point had been considered by the Executive Government, and Mr. Maine had to state that, having regard to the fact that the stamp-duties on commercial instruments were easily levied, and did not press hardly on the people, the Government was not prepared to give up that portion of the public receipts.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The following Select Committee was named:—

On the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence—The Hon’ble Mr. Cockrell, the Hon’ble Sir George Couper, and the Hon’ble Messrs. Gordon Forbes, Shaw Stewart and the Mover.

The Council adjourned till the 11th December 1868.

CALCUTTA,

The 4th December 1868.

WHITLEY STOKES,

Ass. Secy. to the Govt. of India,

Home Department (Legislative).

The Council met at Simla on Tuesday, the 6th September, 1870.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, K.P., G.C.R., presiding.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.B., G.C.R.

The Hon’ble John Strachey.

The Hon’ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.

The Hon’ble J. Fitzjames Stephen, Q.C.

The Hon’ble B. H. Ellis.

Major-Genl. the Hon’ble H. W. Norman, C.B.

The Hon’ble F. R. Cockrell.

His Highness the Hon’ble Surendre Rajahd Chhatradra Singh Dhanraj Sirdar Ram Singh Bahadur of Joypur, G.C.R.

EVIDENCE BILL.

The Hon’ble Mr. Stephen moved that the Hon’ble Mr. Strachey be added to the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence. He said that the motion afforded him an opportunity of saying a few words on a measure of the very highest importance. The Evidence Act was drafted by the Indian Law Commissioners, and sent out to this country two years ago. It was introduced by Mr. Maine, referred to a Committee, several of the members of which had now ceased to belong to the Council, and published in the Gazette for general information. Objections of great weight had been taken to it by many of the most distinguished lawyers in India, and, no doubt, the subject was one which required the most careful handling. It was impossible to exaggerate the practical importance of the Bill, as it would regulate the most important part of the procedure of every Court of justice throughout the Empire. Such a measure would, of course, require the most careful consideration in each of its parts, and it appeared to him (Mr. Stephen) that the great question which the Committee would have to consider was, what was likely to be practically useful in the various Courts, and, in particular, in the Courts of the Mofussil. The English Law of Evidence had been gradually constructed by the decisions of successive generations of Judges and by Acts of Parliament, and it assumed throughout that the Court had the assistance of a highly-qualified bar, that the facts in dispute were decided by a jury, and that the Judge was to act as an umpire between two litigants, and not as an independent inquirer into facts. The result had been that the object of many of the rules of evidence was rather to bring the proceedings to a point than to aid inquiry into truth. It was not so much a guide to the Judge as a set of conditions imposed upon the parties. He (Mr. Stephen) felt doubts whether such a system could be advantageously introduced into this country without great modifications.

At the same time it was necessary to take some steps. The law was in a state of great uncertainty. No one could say precisely how far the English Law of Evidence did, and how far it did not, prevail in the Mofussil, and the consequence was that the subject caused great difficulty and uncertainty. As a proof of this he (Mr. Stephen) might observe that in Messrs. Cowell and Woodburn’s Indian Digest, which contained notes of cases decided in about eight years, the title ‘Evidence’ filled no less than twenty-three royal octavo pages in small print and double columns. There were probably from four to five hundred decisions noted upon the subject. This was the state of things for which the Committee would have, if possible, to provide a remedy. It was one which in justice to exceedingly hard-worked officials ought not to be permitted to continue.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned to the 20th September, 1870.

WHITLEY STOKES,
Secy. to the Council of the Govt.-Genl. for making Laws and Regulations.

SIMLA,
The 6th September 1870.

The Council met at Government House, on Friday, the 18th November, 1870.

P R E S E N T:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, K.P., G.C.B., preparing.
The Hon'ble John Strachey,
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.B.,
The Hon'ble J. Fitzjames Stephen, Q.C.
The Hon'ble B. H. Ellis.

Maj.-Genl. the Hon. H. W. Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble D. Cowie.
The Hon'ble Francis Steward Chapman.
The Hon'ble P. R. Cockerell.

---

E V I D E N C E A N D C O R O N E R S' B I L L S.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen also moved that the Hon'ble Mr. Chapman be added to the Select Committee on the Bills to define and amend the Law of Evidence, and to consolidate the laws relating to Coroners.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council adjourned to Friday, the 25th November, 1870.

WHITLEY STOKES,
Secy. to the Govt. of India.

CALCUTTA,
The 18th November 1870.

The Council met at Government House on Friday, the 2nd December, 1870.

P R E S E N T:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, K.P., G.C.B., preparing.
The Hon'ble John Strachey,
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.B.,
The Hon'ble J. Fitzjames Stephen, Q.C.
The Hon'ble B. H. Ellis.
Maj.-Genl. the Hon. H. W. Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble Francis Steward Chapman.
The Hon'ble J. R. Bullen Smith.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerill.
The Hon'ble J. F. D. Inglis.
The Hon'ble D. Cowie.
APPENDIX AA.

EVIDENCE AND INSOLVENCY BILLS.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen moved that the Hon'ble Mr. Inglis be added to the Select Committees on the following Bills:—

To define and amend the Law of Evidence:
To amend the Law of Insolvency.
The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council adjourned to Friday, the 9th December, 1870.

WHITLEY STOKES,
Secy. to the Govt. of India.

CALCUTTA,
The 9th December 1870.

The Council met at Government House on Friday, the 9th December, 1870.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, K.P., G.C.S.I., presiding.

The Hon'ble John Strochey,
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble J. Fitzjames Stephens, Q.C.
The Hon'ble H. H. Ellis.
Maj.-Genl. The Hon. H. W. Norman, C.B.

The Hon'ble Francis Steuart Chapman.
The Hon'ble J. R. Bullen Smith.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockrell.
The Hon'ble J. F. D. Inglis.
The Hon'ble D. Cowie.
The Hon'ble W. Robinson, C.S.I.

SUNDARY BILLS.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen moved that the Hon'ble Mr. Robinson be added to the Select Committees on the following Bills:—

To define and amend the Law of Evidence:
To amend the Law of Insolvency:
For the Limitation of suits.
The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council adjourned to Friday, the 16th December, 1870.

WHITLEY STOKES,
Secy. to the Govt. of India.

CALCUTTA,
The 9th December 1870.

DRAFT REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

(The Gazette of India, July 1, 1871, Part V., p. 273).

The following Draft Report of a Select Committee together with the Bill as settled by them, was presented to the Council of the Governor-General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 31st March, 1871:—
APPENDIX AA.

We, the members of the Select Committee to which the Evidence Bill has been referred, have the honour to report that we have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the margin.

After a very careful consideration of the draft prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners, we have arrived at the conclusion that it is not suited to the wants of this country.

We have recorded in a separate report the grounds on which this conclusion is based. They are in a few words that the Commissioners' draft is not sufficiently elementary for the officers for whose use it is designed, and that it can give no assistance on their part with the law of England, which can scarcely be expected from them. Our draft, however, though arranged on a different principle from theirs, embodies most of its provisions. In general, it as been our object to reproduce the English Law of Evidence with certain modifications, most of which have been suggested by the Commissioners, though with some this is not the case. The English Law of Evidence appears to us to be totally destitute of arrangement. This arises partly from the circumstance that its leading terms are continually used in different senses, and partly from the circumstance that the Law of Evidence was formed by degrees out of various elements, and in particular out of the English system of pleading and the habitual practice of the Courts of Common Law. For instance, the rule that evidence must be confined to points in issue is founded on the system of pleading. The rule that hearsay is no evidence is part of the practice of the Courts; but the two sets of rules run into each other in such an irregular way as to produce between them a result which no one can possibly understand systematically, unless he is both acquainted with the principles of a system of pleading which is being rapidly abolished, and with the every-day practice of the Common Law Courts, which can be acquired and understood only by those who habitually take part in it. This knowledge, moreover, must be qualified by a study of text-books which are seldom systematically arranged.

Many other circumstances, to which we need not refer, have contributed largely to the general result: but we may illustrate the extreme intricacy of the law, and the total absence of anything like system which pervades every part of it, by a single instance. In Mr. Pitt Taylor's work on Evidence it is stated that "ancient documents" when tendered in support of ancient possession, form the third exception to the rule which excludes hearsay. The question is whether A is entitled to a fishery. He produces a royal grant of the fishery to his ancestor. This fact the law describes as a peculiar kind of hearsay admissible by special exception. Surely this is using language in a most un-instructive manner.

This being the case, we have discarded altogether the phraseology in which the English text-writers usually express themselves, and have attempted first to ascertain, and then to arrange in their natural order, the principles which underlie the numerous cases and fragmentary rules which they have collected together. The result is as follows:—

Every judicial proceeding whatever has for its purpose the ascertaining of some right or liability. If the proceeding is criminal, the object is to ascertain the liability to punishment of the person accused; if the proceeding is civil, the object is to ascertain some right of property or of status, or the right of one party, and the liability of the other, to some form of relief.

All rights and liabilities are dependent upon and arise out of facts, and facts fall into two classes, those which can, and those which cannot, be perceived by the senses. Of facts, which can be perceived by the senses, it is superfluous to give examples. Of facts which cannot be perceived by the senses, intention, fraud, good faith, and knowledge may be given as examples. But each class of facts has, in common, one element which entitles them to the name of facts—they can be directly perceived either with or without the intervention of the senses. A man can testify to the fact that, at a certain time, he had a certain intention, on the same ground as that on which he can testify that, at a certain time and place, he saw a particular man. He has, in each case, a present recollection of a past direct perception. Moreover, it is equally necessary to ascertain facts of each class in judicial proceedings, and they must in most cases be ascertained in precisely the same way.

Facts may be related to rights and liabilities in one of two different ways:

1. They may by themselves, or in connection with other facts, constitute such a state of things that the existence of the disputed right or liability would be a legal inference from them. From the fact that A is the eldest son of B, there arises of necessity the inference that A is by the law of England the heir-at-law of B, and that he has such rights as that status involves. From the fact that A caused the death of B under certain circumstances, and with a certain intention or knowledge there arises of necessity the inference that A murdered B, and is liable to the punishment provided by the law for murder.

Facts thus related to a proceeding may be called facts in issue unless, indeed, their existence is undisputed.

2. Facts, which are not themselves in issue in the sense above explained, may affect the probability of the existence of facts in issue, and these may be called collateral facts.

It appears to us that these two classes comprise all the facts with which it can in any event be necessary for Courts of Justice to concern themselves, so that this classification exhausts all facts considered in their relation to the proceeding in which they are to be proved.

This introduces the question of proof. It is obvious that, whether an alleged fact is a fact in issue, or a collateral fact, the Court can draw no inference from its existence till it believes it to exist; and it is also obvious that the belief of the Court in the existence of a given fact ought to proceed upon grounds altogether independent of the relation of the fact to the object and nature of the proceeding in which its existence is to be determined. The question is whether A wrote a letter. The letter may have contained the terms of a contract. It may have been a libel. It may have constituted the motive for the commission of a crime by B. It may supply proof of an abjuration in favour of A. It may be an admission or a confession of crime; but whatever may be the relation of the fact to the proceeding, the Court cannot act upon it unless it believes that A did write the letter, and that belief must obviously be produced, in each of the cases mentioned, by the same or similar means. If, for instance, the Court requires the production of the original when the writing of the letter is a crime, there can be no reason why it should be satisfied with a copy when the writing of the letter is a motive for a crime. In short, the way, in which a fact should be proved depends on the nature of the fact, and not on the relation of the fact to the proceeding.

The instrument by which the Court is convinced of a fact is evidence. It is often classified as being either direct or circumstantial. We have not adopted this classification.

If the distinction in that direct evidence establishes a fact in issue, whereas circumstantial evidence, establishes a collateral fact, evidence is classified, not with reference to its essential qualities but with reference to the use to which it is put; as if paper were to be defined not by reference to its component elements, but as being used for writing or for printing. We have shown that the mode in which a fact must be proved depends on its nature, and not on the use to be made of it. Evidence, therefore, should be defined, not with reference to the nature of the fact which it is to prove, but with reference to its own nature.

Sometimes the distinction is stated thus: Direct evidence is a statement of what a man has actually seen or heard. Circumstantial evidence is something from which facts in issue are to be inferred. If the phrase is thus used, the word evidence, in the two phrases (direct evidence and circumstantial evidence) has two different meanings. In the first, it means testimony; in the second, it means a fact which is to serve as the foundation for an inference. It would indeed be quite correct, if this view is taken to say 'circumstantial evidence must be proved by direct evidence.' This would be a most clumsy mode of expression. But it shows the ambiguity of the word "evidence," which means either—

1. words spoken or things produced in order to convince the Court of the existence of facts; or
2. facts of which the Court is so convinced which suggest some inference as to other facts.

We use the word 'evidence' in the first of these senses only, and so used it may be reduced to three heads—1. oral evidence; 2. documentary evidence; 3. material evidence.

Finally, the evidence by which facts are to be proved must be brought to the notice of the Court and submitted to its judgment and the Court must form its judgment respecting them.

These general considerations appear to us to supply the groundwork for a systematic and complete distribution of the subject as follows:

I. Preliminary.

II. The relevancy of facts to the issue.

III. The proof of facts according to their nature by oral, documentary or material evidence.
IV.—The production of evidence.
V.—Procedure.
We have accordingly distributed the subject under these heads, in the manner which we now proceed to describe somewhat more fully.

I.—PRELIMINARY.

Under this head we have defined "facts," "facts in issue," "collateral facts," "a document," "evidence," "proof" and "proved," "necessary inference" and "presume." We have also laid down in general terms the duty of the Court.

Of our definitions of "fact," "facts in issue" "collateral facts," and "evidence," we need say no more than that they reframed in accordance with the principles already stated. We may, however, shortly illustrate the effect of the definition of evidence.

It will make perfectly clear several matters over which the ambiguity of the word as used in English law has thrown much confusion. The subject of circumstantial evidence will be distributed into its elements, and will be dealt with thus: The question is whether a committed a crime. The facts are—that he had a motive, displayed by statements of his own, for it; that the scene of the crime shows footmarks which correspond with his feet; that he was in possession of property which might have been procured by it; and that he wrote a letter indicating his guilt. On turning to Chapter II, it will be found that all these are relevant facts, either as motive, incidents of facts in issue, effects of facts in issue, or conduct influenced by facts in issue. On turning to Chapter III, it will be seen how each of these facts must be proved, namely, the statements displaying motives, by the direct oral evidence of some one who says he heard them; the footmarks, by the direct oral evidence of some one who says he saw them; the possession of the property by the production of the property in Court, and by the direct oral evidence of some one who had seen it in the prisoner's possession and the latter, by the production of the latter itself, or secondary evidence of it, if the case allows of secondary evidence.

So the phrase "hearsay evidence" which, as the Commissioners observe, is used by English writers in so vague and unsatisfactory a manner, finds no place in our draft, and we hope we have avoided the possibility of any confusion in connection with it. Chapter II provides specifically, and in a manner which corresponds on the whole (though with some modifications), with the English law, in what cases the statements and opinions of third persons as to relevant facts shall, and in what cases they shall not, be themselves relevant; and Chapter V, on proof by oral evidence, provides that oral evidence shall in all cases be direct, on whatever ground the fact which it is to establish may be relevant to the issue; that is to say, if the fact is one which could be seen, it must be established by a witness who says he saw it; if it could be heard, by a witness who says he heard it: whether it is a fact in issue, or a collateral fact. These provisions distribute the different things described by the phrase "hearsay evidence" in the same way in which the different things described by the phrase "circumstantial evidence" are distributed by the other provisions.

So, our definition does away with a confusion, which arises out of the double meaning of the word evidence in the phrases "primary" and "secondary evidence." "Primary evidence" sometimes means a relevant fact, and at other times the proof of a document by its productions as opposed to proof by a copy. In our draft, "primary" and "secondary" are distinctly defined, and confined to an unambiguous meaning "Evidence" in each case means words spoken or things (documents or not) shown to the Court.

Finally, we have substituted, for the word "conclusive evidence," the phrase "necessary inference." The phrase "conclusive evidence" is not open to objection on the ground of obscurity or ambiguity, but the word "evidence" in it means, not what we understand by evidence, but a fact established by evidence from which a particular inference necessarily follows. Our phrase, therefore, harmonizes with the rest of our draft, whereas "conclusive evidence" would not.

The definitions of "proof," "proved" and "moral certainty" require some comment. The definition of "proof" is subordinate to that of "proved" which is, that a fact is said to be proved in two cases, that is to say, when the Court after hearing the evidence respecting it.—

(1) believes in its existence; or
(2) thinks its existence so probable that a reasonable man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists.

This degree of probability we describe as "moral certainty," and we provide that no fact shall be regarded as morally certain unless the evidence is such as to render its non-existence improbable. This is as near an approach as we have been able to make to a distinct equivalent for the phrase "reasonable doubt," which is usually employed by English Judges in leaving questions of fact to a jury. The question "when is doubt reasonable," is one which cannot be completely answered: for at bottom it is a question, not of science, but of prudence, and our definition of the word "proved" is meant to make this plain. We have, however, attached to it the negative condition that a reasonable man ought not to be morally certain of a conclusion, merely because it is probable, if other conclusions are also probable. It is easier to illustrate this principle than to state, without a prolonged abstract discussion, which would be out of place on the present occasion, the general grounds on which it rests. Our illustrations are meant to point out to Judges that they are not to convict A of an offence which must have been committed either by him or by B, unless circumstances exist which make it improbable that the offence was committed by B. We have not attempted to carry the matter further. We believe that in all countries, and in this country more than in any other, it is absolutely necessary to leave to Judges a wide discretion as to the risk of error which they choose to incur in coming to a decision, and that this is a matter of prudence and practice, as to which rules ought to be laid down rather with a view of guiding, than with a view of fettering, discretion.

The last provision, in the preliminary part, to which we would call attention, defines in very general terms the duty of the Court in deciding questions of fact. Its generality appeared to us to render the preliminary, rather than the concluding chapter, the proper place for it. This section declares that the duty of the Court is to determine question of fact by drawing inferences—

1. from the evidence given to the facts alleged to exist;
2. from facts proved to facts not proved;
3. from the absence of evidence which might have been given;
4. from the admissions and conduct of the parties, and generally from the circumstances of the case.

We have said nothing of the principle on which these inferences are to be drawn, as that is a matter of logic, and does not belong specially to the subject of judicial evidence, but we wish to point out and put distinctly upon record the fact, that to infer, and not merely to accept or register evidence, is in all cases the duty of the Court. One of the many fallacies which owe their origin to the ambiguity of the word "evidence," and the looseness with which it is used, is the common assertion that direct evidence leaves no room for inference, whereas indirect or circumstantial evidence does. In fact, all evidence whatever is useful only as the groundwork for inferences, of which the inference that the facts which the witness alleges to exist do or did actually exist, is very often the most difficult to draw. The truth is, that to infer in one or other of the different shapes which we have stated is the great duty of the Judge in every case whatever, and we have thought it desirable to point this out in the plainest and broadest way.

We have added two qualifications only to this general rule: (1) that, when the law declares an inference to be necessary, the Court shall draw it, and shall not allow its truth to be contradicted; (2) that, when the law directs the Court to presume a fact, it shall infer its existence till the contrary appears. We have treated in detail of necessary inference and presumptions in other parts of the Bill.

II.—THE RELEVANCY OF FACTS.

We have already pointed out the place which, in our opinion, belongs to this subject in the law of evidence. The question, what facts may you prove, obviously lies at the root of the whole matter, and unless a plain and full answer is given to the question, it is impossible to state the law systematically. The answer to the question is, we think, to be founded in several of the wide exceptions which are made by English text-writers to the wide exclusive rules—that evidence must be confined to the point in issue, that hearsay is no evidence, and that the best evidence must be given, though other parts of the same exceptions are to be found in different branches of the law. We think, however, that by a comparison and collection of these exceptions we think have succeeded in forming a collection of positive rules as to the relevancy of facts to the issue, which will admit every fact which a rational man could wish to have before him in investigating any question of fact.

These rules declare to be relevant—

1. all facts in issue;
2. all collateral facts, which
   a. form part of the same transaction;
   b. are to the immediate occasion, cause or effect of facts in issue;
   c. show motive, preparation, or conduct affected by a fact in issue;
   d. are necessary to be known in order to introduce or explain relevant facts;
   e. are done or said by a conspirator in furtherance of a common design;
   f. are either inconsistent with any fact in issue; or inconsistent with it, except upon a supposition which should be proved by the other side; or render its existence or non-existence morally certain, according to the definition of moral certainty given above;
   g. affect the amount of damages in cases where damages are claimed;
   h. show the origin or existence of a disputed right or custom;
   i. show the existence of a relevant state of mind and body;
APPENDIX AA.

829

(j) show the existence of a series of which a relevant fact forms a part; or

(2) show (in certain cases) the existence of a given course of business.

The remainder of the chapter throws into a positive shape what in English law forms the exceptions to the rule, excluding the various matters described as hearsay. They relate to—the conduct of the parties on previous occasions;

the statement of the parties on previous occasions;

previous judgments;

statements of third persons;

opinions of third persons.

1. In reference to the conduct of the parties on previous occasions, we embody in three sections the existing law of England as to evidence of character, with some modifications.
We include, under the word, character, both reputation and disposition, and we permit evidence to be given of previous convictions against a prisoner for the purpose of prejudicing him. We do not see why he should not be prejudiced by such evidence, if it is true.

2. Under the head of the statement of the parties on other occasions, we deal with the question of admissions, as to which we have not materially altered the existing law.

We have not thought it necessary to transfer from their present position in the Code of Criminal Procedure the rules as to confessions made to the Police. This appears to us to be a special matter relating rather to the discipline of the Police than to the principles of evidence.

3. Previous judgments appear to follow naturally upon previous statements. Under this head, we deal with the question of res judicata.

We have not attempted to deal with the question of the bar of suits by previous judgments between the same parties. This is a question of procedure rather than of evidence and will be properly dealt with whenever the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure are re-enacted. We have, on the other hand, dealt in substantial accordance with the principles of the law of England with the question of relevancy of judgment between strangers. For the sake of simplicity, and in order to avoid the difficulty of defining or enumerating judgments in rem, we have adopted the statement of the law of Sir Barnes Peacock in Kusia

4. As to statement by third persons. We have made one considerable alteration in the existing law by admitting, generally, statements made by third persons about relevant facts, if attended by conduct which confirms their truth, or if they refer to facts independently proved, provided that the person making them appears to the Court to have special means of knowledge. We have given several illustrations of this, the strongest of which is suggestated by Mr. Pitt Taylor. A captain about to sail on a voyage carefully examines the ship, declares his belief that she is seaworthy, and embarks on her with his family and property insured. Statements of this sort are surely most unlikely to be false. Evidence of such statements will be admissible under this section, whether the person who makes them is living or dead, producible or not. Some of them would probably be admissible under the English rule which admits statements explanatory of conduct, but as the conduct explained must be relevant, and as no clear definition of relevancy is given by the law of England, it is very difficult to say how far this rule extends.

The next exception refers to statements made by a person who is dead or cannot be found or produced without unreasonable delay or expense. We declare such statements to be relevant if they relate to the cause of the person’s death, or are made in the ordinary course of business, or express an opinion as to the existence of the public right, or state the existence of any relationship as to which the party had special means of knowledge, or when they are made in family pedigrees, titles, deeds, &c. We have omitted the restrictions placed by the law of England on the admission of dying declarations and statements about relationship, and as to the necessity that statements should be opposed to the pecuniary interest of the party making them, on the ground that they ought to affect the weight rather than the admissibility of what is, at best, to use Bentham’s expression, “make-shift evidence.”

We also provide for the admissibility of statements in public or official books (and in some cases) of evidence given in previous judicial proceedings.

5. The cases in which the opinions of third persons are relevant are dealt with in secctions forty-four to fifty.

They declare to be relevant, the opinions of experts, opinions as to handwriting, opini-ions as to usages, and opinions as to relationship and the grounds of such opinions.

This completes that part of the Bill which relates to the relevancy of facts. In the par-icular stated and in some others of minor importance, which for the sake of brevity we have not noticed, it modifies the law of England; but we believe that, substantially, it represents that part of the law which is contained in (amongst others) the rules, together with the exceptions to the rules, that evidence must be confined to points in issue; that the best evidence must be given, and that hearsay is no evidence, though these rules include other matters which we treat of under other heads.
APPENDIX AA.

III.—PROOF.

The second Chapter having decided what facts are relevant we proceed to show how a relevant fact is to be proved.

In the first place, the fact to be proved may be one of so much notoriety that the Court will take judicial notice of it, or it may be admitted by the parties. In either of these cases no evidence of its existence be given. Chapter III. which relates to judicial notice, disposes of this subject. It is taken in part from Act II of 1855, in part from the Commissioners’ Draft Bill, and in part from the law of England.

If evidence has to be given of any fact, that evidence must be either oral, documentary, or material, and we proceed in the following chapters to deal with the peculiarities of each of these three kinds of evidence. There is, however, one topic which applies to all of them of which we treat in Chapter IV. This is the distinction between primary and secondary evidence. As we have already shown, the phrase is ambiguous. We regard it as a legal way of recognizing the obvious principle that the best way of finding out the contents of a document is to read it yourself, and we have accordingly defined primary and secondary evidence thus: in the case of documents or other material things, the document or thing itself is primary evidence. A copy, model, or oral description is secondary evidence. In all other cases oral evidence is primary.

We next proceed (Chapters V, VI, VII and VIII) to the question of proof by the various kinds of evidence successively, namely, oral, documentary, and material. With regard to oral evidence, we provide that it must in all cases whatever, whether it is primary or secondary, and whether the fact to be proved is a fact in issue or collateral, be direct. That is to say, if the fact to be proved is one that could be seen, it must be proved by some one who says he saw it. If it could be heard, by some one who says he heard it, and so with the other senses. We also provide that, if the fact to be proved is the opinion of a living and producible person, or the grounds on which such opinion is held, it must be proved by the person who holds that opinion on those grounds.

We have, however, provided that if the fact to be proved is the opinion of an expert who cannot be called (which is the case in the majority of cases in this country), and if such opinion has been expressed in any published treatise, it may be proved by the production of the treatise.

This provision, taken in connection with the provisions on relevancy contained in Chapter II., will, we hope, set the whole doctrine of hearsay in a perfectly plain light, for their joint effect is this—

1) the sayings and doings of third persons are, as a rule, irrelevant, so that no proof of them can be admitted;
2) in some excepted cases they are relevant;
3) every act done or word spoken, which is relevant on any ground, must (if proved by oral evidence) be proved by some one who saw it with his own eyes or heard it with his own ears.

With regard to the chapters which relate to the proof of facts by documentary evidence and the cases in which secondary evidence may be admitted, we have followed, with few alterations, the existing law. We may observe that Chapter VII contains most of the few presumptions which we have thought it right to introduce into the Bill. They are presumptions which in almost every instance will be true—as to the genuineness of certified copies, gazettes, books purporting to be published at particular places, copies of depositions, &c.

We have inserted a few provisions in Chapter VIII as to material evidence. They reproduce the practice and, as we believe, the law of England upon this subject, though not distinct provisions about it and few judicial decisions upon it are, so far as we are aware, to be found in English law-books.

On the subject of the exclusion of oral evidence of a contract, &c., reduced to writing we have (in Chapter IX) simply followed the law of England and the Commissioners’ draft.

IV.—THE PRODUCTION OF PROOF.

From the question of the proof of facts, we pass to the question of the manner in which the proof is to be produced, and this we treat under the following heads—:

The burden of proof (Chapter X):
Witness (Chapter XI):
The administration of oaths (Chapter XII):
Examination of witnesses (Chapter XIII).

With regard to the burden of proof, we lay down the broad rules that the general burden of proof is on the party who, if no evidence at all were given, would fail, and that the burden of proving any particular fact is on the party who affirms it. These are the well-established English rules, and appear to us reasonable in themselves. We have not followed the precedent of the New York Code in laying down a long list of presumptions, agreeing with the Indian Law Commissioners in the opinion that it is better not to let the discretion of the Judges. We have, however, admitted one or two such presumptions to a place in the Code, as in the absence of an express rule, the Judges might feel embarrassed. These are—the presumption of death from seven years' disappearance, and the presumption of partnership from the fact of acting as partners.

We may observe that we have disposed, in an illustration, of a matter in which the laws of several countries contain elaborate, and we think somewhat arbitrary, provisions to be made in the case of the death of several persons in a common catastrophe. We treat it as an instance of the rule as to the burden of proof. The person who affirms that A died before B must prove it. This is the principle adopted by the English Court.

We follow the English law as to legitimacy being a necessary inference from marriage and cohabitation, and we adopt one or two of the rules of English law as to estoppel.

In the chapter as to the examination of witnesses, we have been careful to interfere as little as possible with the existing practice of the Courts which in the Mogfussil Courts and under the Code of Civil Procedure is of necessity very loose and much guised by circumstances; but we have put into propositions the rules of English law as to the examination and cross-examination of witnesses.

We have also considered it necessary, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this country, to put into the hands of the Judge an amount of discretion as to the admission of evidence which, if it exists by law, is at all events rarely or never exercised in England. We expressly empower him to ask any questions upon any facts relevant or irrelevant, at any period of the trial, and we expressly declare that it is his duty in criminal cases, if he thinks that the public interest requires it, not merely to receive and adjudicate upon the evidence submitted to him by the parties, but also "to enquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter before him." The object of these provisions is to define simply and clearly the duties and the position of the Judges and those who practise before them. The English system, under which the Bench and the Bar act together and play their respective parts independently, and the professional organization on which it rests, have no doubt great advantages; but in this country such a system does not as yet exist, and will not for a very long course of time be introduced. In the Mogfussil, generally speaking, the great mass of cases are conducted without the assistance of a Bar, and when advocates are employed there they are usually brought from a distance, and have to appear before Judges who have not had the same professional training as English Judges, and are liable to be intimidated by advocates whose technical knowledge of law is greater than their own, and to whom the extremely intricate system of appeal which prevails in this country gives a power over the Judges unlike anything which exists in England. For this reason we have thought it necessary to strengthen the hands of the Judges and to enable them to act efficiently and promptly as the representatives of the public interest.

In connection with this subject, we may refer to some provisions which we have inserted in order to prevent the abuse of the power of cross-examination to credit. We believe the existence of that power to be essential to the administration of justice, and we believe it to be liable to great abuses. The need for the power and danger of its abuse are proved by English experience, but in this country litigation of various kinds, and criminal prosecutions in particular, are the great engines of malignity, and it is accordingly even more necessary here than in England, both to permit the exposure of corrupt motives and to prevent the use of the power of exposure as a means of gratifying malice. We have accordingly provided as follows:

Such questions may relate either to matters relevant to the case, or to matters not relevant to the case. If they relate to matters relevant to the case, we think that the witness ought to be compelled to answer, but that his answer should not afterwards be used against him.

If they relate to matters not relevant to the case, except in so far as they affect the credit of the witness, we think that the witness ought not to be compelled to answer. His refusal to do so would, in most cases, serve the purpose of discrediting him, as well as an express admission that the imputation conveyed by the question was true.

In order to protect witnesses against needless questions of this kind, we enact that any advocate who asks such questions without written instructions (which the Court may call upon him to produce, and may impound when produced) shall be guilty of a contempt of Court, and that the Court may record any such question, if asked by a party to the proceedings. The record of the question or the written instructions are to be admissible as evidence of the publication of an imputation intended to harm the reputation of the person affected, and such imputations are not to be regarded as privileged communications, or as falling under any of the exceptions to section four hundred and ninety-nine of the Indian Penal Code, merely because they were made in the manner stated. Upon a trial for defamation, it would of course be open to the person accused to show, either that the imputation was true, and that it was for the public good that the imputation should be made (Ex. 1, section 449, I. P. C.), or that it was made in good faith for the protection of the Interest of the person making it or of any other person (Ex. 9). This is the only method which occurs to us of providing at once for the interests of a bond fide questioner and an innocent witness.

In the same spirit, we have empowered the Court, in general terms, to forbid indecent and scandalous inquiries, unless they relate to facts in issue as defined above, or to matters absolutely necessary to be known in order to determine whether the facts in issue existed; and also to forbid questions intended to insult or annoy.

We prefer this general power to the sections drawn by the Commissioners, which forbids questions to married persons "which substantially amount to inquiring whether that person has had sexual intercourse forbidden to him or her by the law to which he or she is subject," and "questions regarding the occurrence of sexual intercourse between a husband and wife, except in the case of Christians, where the suit is for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of bodily incapacity. We should regard these rules as dangerous. It is possible to imagine numerous cases in which it might be highly important to show that a married person was living with some one who was not her husband or his wife. A woman brings a false accusation against her servant. The motive is revenge for the discovery by the servant of an intrigue by the mistress. A married man comes to prove an alibi on behalf of his mistress. A woman sues a married man on a bond. He pleads that the consideration was adultery. In all these cases, and so in many others which might be suggested, it appears to us that it would be absolutely necessary to admit such evidence as is referred to. As to questions relating to sexual intercourse between husband and wife we think it better to forbid indecent and scandalous inquiries in general terms, than to lay down a positive rule which in possible cases might produce hardship.

Finally, we deal (Chapter XV) with the question of the improper admission or rejection of evidence.

We provide in substance that in regular appeal each Court successively shall decide for itself what evidence it will have regard. As for special appeals, we provide that if evidence is said to be improperly admitted, the objection must be taken before the inferior Appellate Court, and the Court called upon to say what its decision would be if the evidence objected to were rejected. If evidence is improperly rejected, we would permit the High Court either to look into the facts and deliver final judgment, or to remand the case.

Finally, we recommend that the Draft Bill, together with this report, should be circulated for the opinion of the Local Governments.

J. F. STEPHEN.
J. STRACHEY.
F. S. CHAPMAN.
F. R. COCKERELL.
J. F. P. D. INGLIS.
W. ROBINSON.

The 31st March 1871.

The Council met at Government House on Friday, the 31st March 1871.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, K.P., G.M.B., presiding.
His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.B., G.C.S.I.

The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble J. Fitzjames Stephen, Q.C.
The Hon'ble B. H. Ellis.
Maj.-Genl. The Hon'ble H. W. Norman, c.B.

Colonel the Hon'ble R. Strachey, c.B.
The Hon'ble F. S. Chapman.
The Hon'ble J. R. Bullen Smith.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble J. F. D. Inglis.

The Hon'ble W. Robinson, c.B.
The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence. He said:—

"I feel that I owe an apology to your Lordship and the Council for requesting their attention to a second speech upon a purely legal subject after the one which I delivered a week ago upon the Limitation Act. On this occasion, however, I have to explain the position of a measure perhaps as important as any that has been passed of late years by the Indian Legislature, inasmuch as if it becomes law, it will affect the daily administration of both civil and criminal procedure throughout the whole country. Moreover, the subject-matter to which the Bill refers is one of deep and wide general interest, for a Law of Evidence properly constructed would be nothing less than an application of the practical experience acquired in Courts of law to the problem of inquiring into the truth as to controverted questions of fact, however imperfectly it may have been attained.

"This is the object which has been kept in view in framing the Bill which the Committee append to their report, and which I am now to describe in a general way to your Lordship and the Council.

"I will state, in the first place, the history of the measure down to the present time. So far back as the year 1868, the Indian Law Commissioners drew a Draft Evidence Act, which was sent out to this country and introduced and referred to a Select Committee by my friend and predecessor, Mr. Maine. The Bill was circulated for opinion to the Local Governments, and was pronounced by every legal authority to which it was submitted to be unsuitable to the wants of this country. In this view the Committee concur for reasons which I need not state in detail on the present occasion, as they are fully stated in the report which I present to-day. I may observe in general, however, that the principal reasons were that the Bill was not sufficiently elementary; that it was in several respects incomplete, and that, if it became law, it would not supersede the necessity under which judicial officers in this country are at present placed of acquainting themselves by means of English hand-books with the English law upon this subject.

"The Commissioners' draft, indeed, would hardly be intelligible to a person who did not enter upon the study of it with a considerable knowledge of the English law. Under these circumstances, a new draft was framed, which we now propose to print, and circulate, and on which I hope to receive the opinions of the Local Governments and High Courts in the course of the summer, say, by next September, so that their criticisms may be deliberately weighed, and the measure may be finally disposed of by this time next year.

"The report of the Committee explains very fully the scheme of the Bill, which of course is of considerable, though not, I hope, unwieldy, length, and enters fully into the reasons which have led us to adopt its leading provisions. I will not weary the Council by going into all these questions on the present occasion. I will confine myself to saying that I trust that those who will have to criticise the Bill will begin by studying the report, which has been drawn up with great care, and which, as well as the Bill itself, forms a connected and systematic whole. The general object kept in view in framing the Bill has been to produce something from which a student might derive a clear, comprehensive and distinct knowledge of the subject, without unnecessary labour, but not, of course, without that degree of careful and sustained attention which is necessary in order to master any important and intricate matter. It is by this standard that the Committee in general, and I in particular as the member in charge of the Bill, desire that it may be tried.

"With this reference to the Bill and the report of the Committee I proceed to discuss the general question connected with the subject, and to mention a few of the leading features of the measure.

"I suppose that I may assume as generally admitted the necessity which exists for legislation on the subject of evidence in British India. It would be exceedingly difficult to say precisely what, at the present moment, the law upon the subject certainly is. To some extent—it is far from being clear to what extent—and in some parts of the country—though questions might be raised as to the particular parts of the country—the English law of Evidence appears to be in force in British India. Whatever may be the theory, it both is and will continue to be so in practice; for if the English law of evidence has not been introduced into this country, English lawyers and quasi-lawyers have, and they have been directed to decide according to the law of justice, equity, and good conscience. Practically speaking, these attractive words mean little more than an imperfect understanding of imperfect collections of not very recent editions of English text-books. It is difficult to imagine anything much less satisfactory than such a state of the law as this. A good deal may be said for an elaborate legal system, well understood and strictly administered. A good deal may be said for unaided mother-wit and natural shrewdness; but a half-and-half system, in which a vast body of half-understood law, totally destitute of arrangement and of uncertain authority maintains a dead-alive existence, is a state of things which it is by no means easy to praise.

"Legislation thus being necessary, in what direction is legislation to proceed? A gentleman, for whose opinion upon all subjects connected with Indian law and legislation I, in common with most other people, have a profound respect said, to me the other day in discussing this subject: my Evidence Bill would be a very short one. It would consist of one rule to the 432. All the rules of evidence are thereby abolished. I believe that rules of evidence are of very great value in all inquiries into matters of fact, and in particular in inquiries for judicial purposes; and that it is practically impossible to investigate difficult subjects without regard to them.

"It is worth while to illustrate this point a little, because the necessity for rules of evidence rests upon it; but strong proof of it is to be found in the fact that in all ages and countries there have been rules of evidence. In rude times, and amongst primitive people, the task of arriving at the truth as to matters of fact was regarded as so hopeless and difficult, that rude arbitrary substitutes for any sort of rational procedure were provided in the shape of oracles and judicial combats. Where people began to obtain glimpses of the true methods of investigation, they seem to have considered as almost supernatural skill what in our days would fall within the scope of average police-officers or attorneys' clerks. The delighted wonder which was displayed by the Jews, according to the apocryphal story of Susannah and the Elders, at what a legal friend of mine used to call 'that very free cross-examination of Daniel's about the trees', is a good instance of this. At a later period, arbitrary rules of evidence began to be formed, and the fact must be proved by two witnesses: such another by four: such another by seven. To say nothing of European systems, in which such rules were in force, the Hediya is full of them. These rules were never introduced in their full force into England, but the system which was adopted, or rather which grew up by degrees, was of a very mixed and exceedingly singular character. Part of it consisted of rules declaring large classes of witnesses to be incompetent. Part was intimately connected with the English system of special pleading, which was so contrived as to define with extreme precision the facts upon which the parties differed, or were, as the phrase goes, at issue. Part were the result of the practical experience of the Courts, and these were by far the most valuable portion, in my opinion of the English law of Evidence. Most of the other rules have indeed been cut away by legislation, and the rules which still remain may fairly be taken to be the net result of English judicial experience in modern times. In the most general terms, these rules are:

1. that evidence must be confined to the issue;
2. that hearsay is no evidence;
3. that the best evidence must be given;
4. rules as to confessions and admissions:
5. rules as to documentary evidence.

"I have two general remarks to make upon them. The first is that they are sound in substance and eminently useful in practice, and that, when properly understood, they are calculated to afford invaluable assistance to all who have to take part in the administration of justice.

"The second is that I believe that no body of rules upon any important subject were ever expressed too loosely, in such an intricate manner, or at such intolerable length.

It is necessary to prove the first of these propositions, in order to justify the recommendation of the Committee that the substance of the rules in question should be introduced in the form of express law into this country. It is necessary to prove the second proposition, in order to justify the attempt made in the Bill to reduce the rules to order and system. First, then, as to the proposition that the rules in question are substantially sound and do far more good than harm, even in their present confused condition. The proof of this is, I think, to be found, in a comparison between the proceedings of English Courts of Justice and those of countries which have no such rules, and between the proceedings of English Courts in which these rules are, and those in which they are not, understood and acted upon. As a preliminary remark, I think I ought to observe that the knowledge of these rules possessed by English lawyers is derived far more from the Courts than from theoretical study. Many English lawyers know by habit, almost instinctively, whether this or that (to use the common phrase) is or is not evidence, although they have hardly given the theory of the matter a thought. Practice, therefore, and not theory, affords the true test of the value of these rules. In fact, the clumsy, intricate, ambiguous, and in many instances absurd, theory by which the rules of evidence are connected together came after the eminently sagacious practice which they were intended to justify and explain. What is the practical effect of these rules? I may perhaps be permitted to answer this by referring to a book which I published in 1863 on the criminal laws of England, and which contains, amongst other things, an analysis of several celebrated trials. An Englishman of French. One object of that analysis was to contrast the effect of the presence and absence of rules of evidence; and I think that any one who would take the trouble to compare those trials together carefully would agree with me in the conclusion that the practical effect of the English rules of evidence in those cases was to shorten the proceedings enormously, and at the same time to consolidate and strengthen them, keeping out nothing that a reasonable person would have wished to have before him as materials for his judgment. The French system, on the other hand, which dispenses with all rules of evidence got, at least in those cases, no other result than that of flooding the court with a flood of gossips and collateral questions enough to confuse and bewilder the strongest head. Again, compare the proceedings of an ordinary Court of criminal justice with the proceedings of a court-martial, in which the rules of evidence are far less strictly enforced and less clearly understood. An ordinary Court of Criminal never gets very far from the point, but a court-martial continually wanders into questions far remote from those which it was assembled to try. Nothing, for instance, is more common than to see the prosecutor change places, as it were, with the prisoner, or to find collateral issues pursued till the Court finds itself engaged in determining, not whether A was guilty of a military offense, but whether Z told a falsehood one point at why irrelevant subject. In a case which I well recollect, B testified against A, B being cross-examined to his credit stated a fact not otherwise relevant to the inquiry. Z denied the fact, which B affirmed, and made further statements which were contradicted by intermediate letters of the alphabet. No Judge can possibly be expected, by the mere light of nature, to know how to set limits to the inquiries in which he is engaged; yet, if he does not, an inestimable waste of time and energy, and a great weakening of the authority of his Court, is sure to follow. Active and zealous advocates, who have no rules of evidence to restrain their zeal, would have it in their power to pervert the administration of justice to the basest purposes, and to inflict immense injury on every one connected with it, directly or remotely, that might, and often would, in such hands, be made the excuse for tearing open old quarrels and reviving questions laid at rest; and giving fresh animus to scandals long since exploded; and the main question would frequently be lost sight of in a cloud of irritating and useless collateral issues. I may be excused for referring to my own experience at the Bar in illustration of this. Appeals against orders of affiliation used invariably to produce an amount of perjury and counter-perjury which I should think it would be difficult to exceed in any country. In certain parts of the country it was a point of honour for the friends of the putative father and of the mother, respectively 'to go to session to swear for him, or her,' as they used to say. No one who did not take part in such cases could imagine the strange ramifications of falsehood and contradiction into which a hotly-contested case of this kind would spread, or the number of imputations thrown on the honesty and chastity of the different witnesses, male and female. If it had not been for the rules of evidence the reputations of half the population of the village would have been torn in pieces. The rules of evidence kept matters to a point, and so minimized the evil; but the parties, the witnesses, and the attorneys all appeared to me to be, one more anxious than another, to fight the matter out till the very last rag of character had been stripped of the back of every man, woman, and child, whose name was in any way brought into the discussion. The French Courts display this evil in an aggravated form. In the work to which I have already referred will be found an account of the trial of a monk named Lecotadie for murder. If disposed of under the English rules of evidence, it could hardly have taken more than a day or two at the most. In the French Court, it lasted for, I think, about three weeks, and branched out into all sorts of subjects. One witness, in particular, was discovered to have seduced a girl seven years before, and letters from her to him were read to throw light on his character. He naturally wished to give his own account of the transactions, but was stopped on the ground that a line must be drawn somehow, and that the Court chose to draw it between the point at which an irrelevant slur had been thrown on his character and the point at which, had he been permitted to do so, he might have given an equally irrelevant explanation.

"It is not, however, merely for the purpose of confining judicial proceedings within reasonable limits that rules of evidence are useful. They are also of pre-eminent importance for the purpose of protecting and guiding the Judge in the discharge of his duty. There is a sense in which it may be said with perfect truth that even legislative power is unequal to the task of abolishing rules of evidence. No doubt, it is competent to the Legislature to provide that no rules of evidence shall have the force of law; but unless they expressly forbid all Courts and Judges to act upon any rules at all, or to listen to any arguments as to the manner in which they shall exercise the discretion with which they are invested (propositions too absurd to state or to discuss), the Judges infallibly will hear, and will be guided by, arguments upon the subject, and these arguments will be drawn from the practice of English Courts. The Judges will exercise their own discretion, and the system would grow up again in the most cumbrous, chaotic, and inconvenient of all conceivable shapes. The plain truth is, that there is only one possible way of getting rid of the law of evidence, and that is by getting rid of the administration of justice by lawyers and returning to the system of mere personal discretion.

"It may be that some persons would like this policy, but I suppose it is one which I need not discuss.

"So far I have considered the rules of evidence merely as they conduce to the important practical objects of keeping proceedings to the point, and of protecting and supporting the Judges. I must now say a few words on their value as furnishing the Judge with solid tests of truth. I fully admit that their value in this respect is often exaggerated and misconceived; but I think that, when the matter is fairly stated, it will be found that they have a real, though it may not be described as a positive, value for this purpose. There are two great problems, the one on which the rules of evidence throw no light at all, and on which they are not intended to throw any light; and it must be admitted that these problems are by far the most important of any which a Judge has to solve. No rule of evidence that ever was framed will assist a Judge in the very smallest degree in determining the master question of the whole subject—whether and how far he ought to believe what the witnesses say? Again, rules of evidence are not, and do not, profess to be rules of logic. They throw no light at all on a further question of equal importance to the one just stated. What inference ought the Judge to draw from the facts in which after considering the statements made in evidence, he believes? In every case, is this true, and, if it is true, what then?—ought to be constantly present the mind of the Judge; and it must be admitted, both that the rules of evidence do not throw the smallest portion of light upon them and that persons who are absolutely ignorant of those rules may give a much better answer to each of these questions than men to whom every rule of evidence is perfectly familiar. I think that a more or less distinct perception of this, coupled with impatience of the exaggerated pretensions which have sometimes been made on behalf of the rules of evidence, are the principal reasons for the distrust and dislike with which they are at times regarded. This dislike, I think merely a particular application of the vulgar error which in so many instances leads people to depreciate art in comparison with nature, as if there were an opposition between the two, and as if art in all cases did not pre-suppose and depend upon nature. The best shoes in the world will not make a man walk, nor will the best glasses make him see; and in just the same way, the best rules of evidence will not supply the place of natural sagacity or of a taste for and training in logic; but it no more follows that rules of evidence are useless as guides to truth, than that shoes or glasses are useless as assistance to the feet and to the eyes. The real use of rules of evidence in ascertaining the truth consists in the fact that they supply negative tests warranted by very long and varied experience, as to two great points, the relevancy of facts to the question to be decided by the Court and the sort of evidence by which particular facts ought to be proved. They may in the broadest and most popular form be stated thus:—

"If you want to arrive at the truth as to any matter of fact of serious importance, observe the following maxims:

"First, if your belief in the principal fact which you wish to ascertain is to be, after all, an inference from other facts, let these facts at all events be closely connected with the principal fact in some one of certain specific modes. Secondly, never believe in any fact whatever, whether it is the fact which you principally wish to determine, or whether it is a fact from which you propose to infer the existence of the principal fact, until you have before you the best evidence that is to be had; that is to say, if the facts is a thing done, have before you some one who saw it done with his own eyes; if it was a thing said, have before you some one who heard it said with his own ears; if it was a written paper, have the paper before you and read it for yourself. This exception—qualifications and explanations apart —is the true essence of the rules of evidence, and I think that no one will deny, either that these rules are in themselves eminently wise, or that they are by no means so obvious and self-evident that the mere unassisted natural sagacity of judicial officers can be trusted to grasp their full meaning and to apply them to the practical questions which arise in the administration of justice, with no assistance from any express law. I do not wish to exaggerate, but I must add, that I attach considerable moral and speculative value to these rules. If they are firmly grasped by Courts of Justice, and rigidly insisted upon in all practical matters which come before the Courts, they will gradually work their way amongst the people at large, and furnish them with tests by which to distinguish between credulity and rational belief upon a great variety of matters which will be of vast importance. I ought to add that the good which they are calculated to effect can be obtained only by erecting them into laws and rigorously enforcing them. When this is done, I feel confident that experience will be continually adding to the proof of their value.

"So far I have tried to prove the proposition that the English rules of evidence are of real solid value, and that they are not a mere collection of arbitrary subtleties which shackle, instead of guiding, natural sagacity. I pass now to the next proposition, which is, that these rules are expressed in a form so confused, intricate and lengthy, that it is hardly possible for any one to learn their true meaning otherwise than by practice, an inconvenience which may be altogether avoided by a careful and systematic distribution. For the proof of this proposition, if indeed it is disputed, I can only refer in general to the English text-books on the subject. They form a mass of confusion which no one can understand until, by the aid of long practice, he learns the intention of the different rules, of which they heap together innumerable and often incoherent illustrations. I am far from wishing to impeach this as a fault of the industrious, and in many cases distinguished, authors of these compilations.
They, like all other hand-books, are intended for immediate practical purposes, and are mere collections of enormous masses of isolated rulings, generally relating to some very minute point. It was necessary, therefore, that they should be arranged, rather than reference to vague catch-words with which the ears of lawyers are familiar, than with reference to theoretical principles which it has never been worth any lawyers while to investigate.

The condition of the law of evidence, as well as the condition of many other branches of the law of England, affords continual illustrations of the extraordinary intricacy and difficulty which arises from the combination of the very greatest practical sagacity with an absence of sound theory, or, what is still worse, with the presence of unsound theory. No one who has not seen it could possibly imagine how obscure the meaning of a clever man may become when he is forced to squeeze it into the terms of a theory which does not fit it and is not true. I will give one or two illustrations of my meaning. The expression 'hearsay' has no evidence early obtained considerable currency in the English Courts. In a general way its meaning is clear enough, and, what is more, is true; but, when considered as the scientific expression of a general truth, from which rules can be deduced in particular cases, it is inaccurate, faulty, and obscure to the last degree. The objections to it are, that both 'hearsay' and 'evidence' are words of the most uncertain kind, each of which may mean several different things. For instance, hearsay may mean what you have heard a man say, and this is its most obvious meaning; but it is difficult to imagine a grosser absurdity than the assertion that no one is ever to prove, in a judicial proceeding, anything said by any other person. 'Hearsay' again, may be taken to mean that which a person did not perceive with his own organs of perception; but this is not the natural sense of the word, and it is almost impossible in practice to divest a word of its natural meaning.

The word 'evidence' is also exceedingly ambiguous. It may mean that which a witness says in Court. It may mean the fact to which he testifies, regarded as a groundwork for further inference. Notwithstanding this, the phrase 'hearsay is no evidence,' being emphatic and easy to recollect, struck in the ears and in the minds of lawyers, and has been taken by many text-writers as the principle on which their statement of the most important branch of the law should be arranged. They accordingly took to describing as hearsay every fact of which evidence was by law excluded; in short, they turned 'hearsay is no evidence' into 'hearsay.' They did not by this means, or expressly, did they it by describing as exceptions to the rule, excluding hearsay, all cases in which evidence was admitted of anything which would have been excluded but for such exceptions. This is so intricate a statement that I can hardly expect the Council to follow me, but I will give an illustration of what I mean. The question is, whether a piece of land belongs to A or B. A says that it belongs to him, because his father C bought it from D, who bought it from E, and he produces the deeds by which E conveyed the land to D and D conveyed it to C. Now, as D and E are not parties to the suit between A and B, and as A cannot, of his own knowledge, know anything of the transaction between them, English text-writers would declare the deeds between D and E 'hearsay'; and, according to Mr. Pitt Taylor, the rule which permits such deeds to be given in evidence is the third exception to the rule which excludes hearsay. One of the judges, if I am not mistaken, called such evidence 'written hearsay,' and so indifferent are English lawyers in general to the abuse of language for the sake of momentary convenience that it probably never struck him that this was a contradiction in terms. I think, however, that it is hard to expect people to understand, bear in mind, and follow out in all its ramifications a system which employs language in such a peculiar manner as to call ancient deeds written 'hearsay.' To talk of hearing a document is like talking of seeing a sound.

"I now turn to the ambiguity of the word 'evidence,' to which I have already referred. As I have just said, 'evidence' sometimes means a fact which suggests an inference. For instance, it is common to say,—'Recent possession of stolen goods is evidence of theft; that is, the fact of such possession suggests the inference of theft. At other times, and I think more frequently, 'evidence' means what a witness actually says in Court, or that which he produces. For instance, we say the evidence which he gave was true. I might occupy, I will not say the attention, but the time of your Lordship and the Council for hours if I were to attempt to describe the amount of confusion and obscurity which the neglect of this simple and obvious distinction has thrown over the whole subject. I will content myself with observing that it produces the effect of giving a double meaning to every expression into which the word 'evidence' is introduced. 'Circumstantial evidence,' 'hearsay evidence,' 'direct evidence,' 'primary evidence': 'best evidence,' have each two sets of meanings, and the result is, that it is not possible to arrive at a clear and undeniable knowledge of the whole subject, or see how its various parts are related to each other, without an amount of study, thought, and practical acquaintance with the actual working of the rules of evidence which few people are in a position to bestow upon the subject.

"I may appear to be detaining the Council unduly upon merely verbal questions, but I think that it is a common fault to underrate the importance of accurate language, particularly in regard to the fundamental terms of any particular branch of knowledge. In regard to law, I have not the least doubt that a very large proportion of the intricacy and difficulty which attach to it is due to the fact that proper pains have never been bestowed on the definition of its fundamental terms. What could be made of Euclid if we were not quite sure of our meaning when we spoke of a point, a line, a circle, parallels, and perpendiculars? Such a defect would render geometry impossible, and the defect which makes large parts of the law almost unintelligible, and beyond all measure cumbrous and unwieldy, is precisely analogous to it in principle. I believe that, if its fundamental terms were defined as clearly as the term 'law' was defined by the late Mr. Austin, the study of law would become comparatively easy, and in many cases attractive for its own sake; that its bulk might be diminished to a degree of which people in general have hardly any conception; that the expense of its administration might be greatly diminished and that comparative certainty might do away with a very large amount of needless and harassing litigation.

"I shall now proceed to describe shortly the principles on which the Draft Bill of the Committee has been framed. In the first place, we thought it necessary to fix the sense in which the fundamental terms of the subject should be understood, and for that purpose we define 'fact,' 'evidence,' 'proof,' 'proved,' and some others as to which I will content myself with a reference to the report. It seemed to us that the remainder of the subject would fall under the following general heads:

1. the relevancy of fact to the issues to be proved;
2. the proof of facts according to their virtue by oral, documentary, or material evidence;
3. the production of evidence in Court;
4. the duties of the Court, and the effect of mistaken admission or rejection of evidence.

These heads would, we think, be found to embrace, and to arrange in their natural order, all the subjects treated of by English text-writers and judges under the general head of the Law of Evidence. I will say a few words on their relation to each other, and of each of them in turn.

The main feature of the Bill consists in the distinction drawn by it between the relevancy of facts and the mode of proving relevant facts. The neglect of this distinction by English text-writers, no doubt, arises from the ambiguity to the word 'evidence' to which I have already referred, and is the main cause of the extreme difficulty of understanding the English law of evidence systematically. I will shortly illustrate by meaning. A says, 'Z committed murder.' First of all, this is a fact—something which could be directly perceived by the sense of hearing and distinctly remembered afterwards. Now, whether this fact is or is not relevant in a particular case depends upon a variety of circumstances. If the question is, whether A was guilty of defaming Z by accusing him of murder; or whether Z had a motive for assaulting A, because A said that he had committed murder; or if Z is accused of murder, and the object is to show that, when A charged him with it, he behaved as if he were guilty, and in many other instances which might be put, the fact that A spoke those words is clearly relevant. But if the question is, whether Z actually did commit murder, the fact that A thought so or said so, generally speaking, is not relevant. Supposing, however, that the fact is relevant on some one of the grounds just mentioned, or on any other ground, whatever be the ground on which the words are relevant to the matter under inquiry, it is obvious that the words themselves ought to be satisfactorily proved, and the rule of English law—and we think it is a wise rule—is that they must be proved by the assertion of some witness that he heard them said with his own ears. English text-writers throw together these two classes of rules under the head of 'Hearsay.' They lay down the general rule that hearsay is no evidence, meaning by it that certain classes of facts called hearsay are to be treated as irrelevant to the determination of particular questions, and it is necessary to look through a long list of exceptions to that rule in order to see whether, in a particular case, A's statement may or may not be proved. If you find that it can be proved, the question is, how can it be proved? and you propose to prove it by a witness who says that B told him that he heard A say so. Again you are told, 'hearsay is no evidence'; but this time the expression means not that the fact is irrelevant, but that the testimony by which it is proposed to prove the fact is improper. One extreme inconvenience of this is that the most important part of the English Law of Evidence is thrown into the most intricate and inconvenient of all possible forms, that of a very wide negative, of most uncertain meaning, qualified by a long string of exceedingly intricate exceptions.

No one who has not gone through the process of learning the law by mere rule-of-thumb practice can imagine the degree of needless obscurity and difficulty upon this point, of the existence of which he becomes gradually conscious. It would be perfectly fair to say to almost any English text-writer, 'you tell me, at enormous length, what is not evidence; but you do not tell me what evidence, except, indeed, in large compilations, which point out what has to be proved upon particular issues, and which it is as impossible to read or remember, as it is to read or remember any other mere works of reference.'

I hope that we have been able to avoid this, and that the second chapter of the Bill will be found to state specifically, and in a positive form, what sorts of facts are relevant as being sufficiently connected with the facts in issue to afford grounds for an inference as to their existence or non-existence. I will not weary the Council by mentioning those rules, and I will content myself by referring to the Bill and to the report. But I may shortly illustrate them by reference to a passage from a modern historian, which will relieve the dulness of a very technical speech. The passage to which I refer is a short summary by Mr. Pride of the grounds on which he believes that Mary, Queen of Scots, murdered her husband.
"As Mr. Froude not a lawyer, he certainly wrote what I am about to read without reference to rules of evidence. I think the fact that he did, in fact, unconsciously observe them illustrates very strongly the truth of my assertion that they are no more than the result of experience and practical sagacity thrown into a categorical shape. I need hardly say that I use the passage merely as an illustration, and without any notion of adopting Mr. Froude's opinions, or asserting the truth of his facts. I am concerned merely with their relevance.

"'She (Mary) was known to have been weary of her husband, and anxious to get rid of him."

"'(By our draft, facts which show motive are relevant.)'"

"'The difficulty and the means of dispos ing of him had been discussed in her presence and she had herself suggested to Sir James Balfour to kill him.'"

"'(Facts which show preparation for a fact in issue are relevant.)'"

"'She brought him to the house where he was destroyed; she was with him two hours before his death':"

"'(Facts so connected with the facts in issue as to form part of the same transaction are relevant.)'"

"'And afterwards threw every difficulty in the way of any examination into the circumstances of his end.'"

"'(Subsequent conduct influenced by any fact in issue is relevant.)'"

"'The Earl of Bothwell was publicly accused of the murder.'"

"'(Facts necessary to be known in order to introduce relevant facts are relevant.)'"

"'She kept him close at her side; she would not allow him to be arrested; she went openly to Seton with him before her widowhood was a fortnight old. When at last, unwillingly, she consented to his trial, Edinburgh was occupied by his retainers. He presented himself at the Tolbooth surrounded by the Royal Guard, and the charge fell to the ground, because the Crown did not prosecute, and the Earl of Lennox had been prevented from appearing.'"

"'(Subsequent conduct influenced by any fact in issue is relevant.)'"

"'A few weeks later, she married Bothwell, though he had a wife already, and when her subjects rose in arms against her and took her prisoner, she refused to allow herself to be divorced from him.'"

"'(Subsequent conduct. Motive.)'"

"'A large part of the evidence consisted of certain letters which the Queen was said to have written. Mr. Froude, in passages which I need not read, alleges facts which go to show that she tried to prevent the production, and to secure the destruction, of these letters. An illustration as to subsequent conduct meets the case of a person who destroys or conceals evidence.

"'Finally, Mr. Froude observes: 'In her own correspondence, though she denies the crime, there is nowhere the clear ring of innocence which makes its weight felt even when the evidence is weak which supports the words.'"

"'The letters would be evidence under the section relating to admissions, and Mr. Froude's remark is in nature of a criticism on them by a prosecuting counsel.

"'In English text-books, so far as my experience goes, these rules and others of the same sort are now here presented in a compact substantive form. They come in for the most part, as exceptions to the rule that evidence must be confined to the points in issue. In fact, they can be learned only by the practices of the Courts, though they are as natural and lax as any rules need be, if they are properly stated.

"'From the rules which state what facts may be proved, we pass to those which prescribe the manner in which a relevant fact must be proved. Passing over technical matters—such as the law relating to judicial notice, questions relating to public documents, and the like—these rules may be said to be three in number, though, of course, numerous introductory rules are required to adopt for practice (sic.). They are these—"

"'1. If a fact is proved by oral evidence, it must be direct; that is to say, things seen must be deposed to by some one who says he saw them with his own eyes. Things heard by some one who says he heard them with his own ears."

"'2. Original documents must be produced or accounted for before any other evidence can be given of their contents."

"'3. When a contract has been reduced to writing, it must not be varied by oral evidence.

"These rules, as I have said, are subject to certain exceptions and require certain practical adjustments; but I do not think that any one who has had practical experience of the working of Courts of Justice will deny their substantial soundness, or indeed the absolute practical necessity for enforcing them."
"Passing over certain matters which are explained at length in the Bill and report, I come to two matters to which the Committee attach the greatest importance as having peculiar reference to the administration of justice in India. The first of these rules refers to the part taken by the Judge in the examination of witnesses, the second to the effect of the improper admission or rejection of evidence upon the proceedings in case of appeal.

That part of the law of evidence which relates to the manner in which witnesses are to be examined assumes the existence of a well-educated Bar, co-operating with the Judge and relieving him practically of every other duty than that of deciding questions which may arise between them. I need hardly say that this state of things does not exist in India, and that it would be a great mistake to legislate as if it did. In a great number of cases—probably the vast numerical majority—the Judge has to conduct the whole trial himself. In all cases he has to represent the interests of the public much more distinctly than he does in England. In many cases he has to get at the truth, or as near to it as he can, by the aid of collateral inquiries, which may incidentally tend to something relevant; and it is most unlikely that he should ever wish to push an inquiry needlessly, or to go into matters not really connected with it. We have accordingly thought it right to arm Judges with a general power to ask any questions, upon any facts, of any witnesses, at any stage of the proceedings irrespectively of the rules of evidence binding on the parties and their agents, and we have inserted in the Bill a distinct declaration that it is the duty of the Judge, especially in criminal cases, not merely to listen to the evidence put before him, but to inquire into the utmost into the truth of the matter. We do not think that the English theories, that the public have no interest in ascertaining the truth and that it is for the accused alone to prove it, and the view, generally in the light of private questions between the prosecutor and the prisoner, are at all suited to India, if indeed they are the result of anything better than carelessness and apathy in England.

"With respect to the question of appeals, we have drawn a series of provisions, the object of which is to prevent mere mistakes in procedure from destroying the value of work properly done, as far as it goes. We have gone through the various cases in which, as appears to us, the question of the improper admission or rejection or omission of evidence can arise; and have provided that, whenever any appellate Court discovers the occurrence of any mistake, it shall not reverse the decision of the inferior Court, but shall either strike out what is redundant, or supply what is defective, as the case may be, and give judgment accordingly.

"I have addressed your Lordship and the Council at great length, but not, I think, at greater length than the importance of the matter requires. I have only to add that I propose to proceed with the Bill when the Government returns to Calcutta, and that I hope before that time to receive the criticisms of the Local Governments upon the measure."

The Hon'ble Mr. Strachey said that, although it was not customary, he should like to say a few words on this occasion. The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen, in introducing a measure not long ago for which he was virtually responsible, said that he might be allowed to say that it was an admirable measure, because he was not the author. So Mr. Strachey might say, for all the non-legal members of the Committee on this Bill who signed the report, that this was an admirable report, and the Bill was an admirable Bill, because we had nothing to do with their preparation. The general feeling of the Committee—he could at least answer for himself—had been that, being allowed to put their signatures to this report was something for which they had to be thankful. As the man who made no pretensions, who knew nothing, he learned in the law, he should not attempt, under any circumstances, to criticise the details of the Bill; but he thought the very fact of being unlearned in the law made one rather more than less able to appreciate and testify to the value of this measure. Like most members of the service to which he belonged, the greater part of his Indian life had been passed in administering justice in Courts of one sort or another. He therefore felt that he could speak with some experience as to the probable operation of such a measure as this; and it was simple and solely from this practical point of view that he could venture in any way to criticise Mr. Stephen’s Bill. He believed the truth was that, although a learned Judge might get on perfectly without common evidence, the unlearned code of evidence wants of it at every step. No doubt, if the law of evidence, as applied to the administration of justice, consisted in the observance of certain forms—a doctrine which was most sedulously practised by Sadr Courts that he could name—it would be worse than having none. But he felt convinced that what the Hon’ble Mr. Stephen had said was most true, that a rational form of the law of evidence was the greatest possible help that we could afford to a Judge unlearned in the technical language of the law. When Mr. Strachey looked at this Bill, and thought of and remembered his own work in former times, when he began his service as an Assistant Magistrate and Collector, till he turned a sort of sheik High Court Judge, he felt how thankful he and others would have been for a Bill of this kind. For anything he knew to the contrary, Mr. Stephen’s Bill would be picked to pieces, as he had picked to pieces the work of the Law Commissioners. But, speaking generally, without entering into details, he believed that this Bill would commend itself practically to men accustomed to administer justice in Indian Courts, as a measure thoroughly adapted to the circumstances of the country.
In a recent speech on the Income Tax Bill, Mr. Stephen referred to the great codes of a law which of late years had been introduced into India, and in regard to some of which we need not fear comparison with any country in the world, which had been given to us by the labour and intellect, not of our Indian officers, who had had no training and learning for such studies, but by certain eminent men, selected in England for the special purpose. This Bill, Mr. Strachey thought, was another of those important measures, and was the work of some of those eminent men; and when Mr. Stephen had passed this Bill, he would have performed for the administration of justice a work which would be the most valuable service that could possibly have been rendered to this country.

The Hon’ble Mr. Robinson said that, after the very full exposition of the Bill before the Council, which had been given by learned and Hon’ble Members, it was not possible that any useful remarks should be made by one whose knowledge of this intricate part of the science of the law was as limited as his.

He merely endorsed all that the Hon’ble Mr. Strachey had said of the probable benefit which would be conferred by the Bill on the administrators of the law.

But he would venture to state here, in respect to a matter with which he was more familiar, that as the head of the Police for one of the Presidencies for many years, he had long been fully conscious of the very great want that existed of a set of simple authoritative and instructive rules for conducting, before Courts of justice, criminal cases such as fell to the lot of public officers in the course of their daily work.

To his mind the Bill before the Council promised to provide very effectually for this want, and he thought it would be very heartily welcomed by many of the working men in the country, as likely to become a simple and instructive, as well as a very useful, manual for their own instruction and guidance, and for the assistance of their subordinates.

The Hon’ble Mr. Inglis wished to say, briefly, that he thought the Evidence Bill introduced by the Hon’ble Mr. Stephen would be of the very greatest benefit to the country.

He did not intend to go into the question as to whether any of its provisions were opposed to the technical rules of evidence observed in the Courts in England. He did not feel competent to give an opinion about this. The principle of the proposed Bill, as he understood it, was that the object of a trial was to get at the truth in the best and shortest way possible; not to give an opportunity to contending Counsel to display their ingenuity in twisting the rules of evidence for the benefit of their respective clients. If, in following out this sound principle, it had been found necessary to put aside any of the technical rules of Evidence observed in the English Courts, it was a step in the right direction.

In the majority of the Mofussil Courts there was nothing deserving of the name of a Bar, and if a Judge were to rely on the Counsel employed by the parties to bring out all the points at issue in a case, or for the examination of the witnesses, he would be guilty of a very serious neglect of his duty. He had in the majority of cases to act as Counsel for both parties, as well as to be judge between them. He thought that the authoritative acknowledgment of this fact, by the provisions of the proposed Bill, which empowered a Judge to ask any questions upon any facts, relevant or irrelevant, at any period of the trial, would be most useful.

He thought, also, that the Bill would be of much assistance to the Subordinate Judges of the Mofussil Courts, when one of the parties to a suit had brought up a clever barrister to conduct his case, who, relying on the slight knowledge the Judge might have been able to acquire of the English law of evidence, was inclined to take undue advantage of this by raising questions as to the admissibility of the evidence produced by the other side. This Act would enable the Judge to decide all questions of the kind at once, by a reference to a short Act at his elbow, instead of having, as now, to wade through volumes of decisions, many of which might not be in his library.

At the present time, we had no law of Evidence for India. Some Judges admitted all kinds of evidence; others tried to regulate their proceedings by so much of the English law as they had been able to pick up by a study of some of the many voluminous treatises published on the subject. The result was a general diversity of practice, and the want of some fixed principles which should guide all the Courts had long been felt.

He believed that this Bill, if it became law, would supply this want; it gave a complete, authoritative, and concise manual of the law of evidence, easily understood, and capable of being applied to all questions which might arise in the course of a trial, even by a man sitting for the first time as a Judge.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor said that, at this stage of the proceedings and at this time of day, he would confine himself to testifying to the reality of the evils which had been described by the Hon’ble members who preceded him: he would content himself by simply saying that, in this respect, there was no doubt that the present state of things was one of the greatest confusion, and there was clearly a necessity to provide against the base bastard caricature of English law which the lawyers were inclined to impose on the Court in this country. He thought that, if we must choose between a new Code of Evidence and abolishing the lawyers, he should vote for abolishing the lawyers, always excepting, of course his hon'ble and learned friend. But as that could not be done, it might be necessary to see whether we could not make an intelligible and simple Law of Evidence. Mr. Stephen said that the ancient Law of Evidence was of the most technical and artificial character. The direction to which all improvement had tended was to cut away those technicalities to introduce free-trade in evidence, and to give only common-sense rules for the guidance of the Judges. But still all men were not sensible, and all Indian Judges were not sensible, and it might therefore be necessary to supply a Code of Evidence. If, then, we must have a Code of Evidence, His Honour believed that no man was more competent to draw it out than Mr. Stephen, and His Honour was gratified that at the end of the Bill were inserted one or two sections to the effect that whatever the Judge did should not vitiate the proceedings. In that sense he thought a Code of Evidence would be very valuable. But he would venture also to suggest that if we could not altogether abolish the lawyers, there should be a section to the effect that no lawyer should open his mouth with respect to the question of the admissibility or inadmissibility of evidence. Then he thought this Code would be of the very highest importance and of the greatest use for the guidance of the judges.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen felt very much gratified at the terms in which Hon'ble Members had been pleased to speak of the merit of this Bill. He could hardly suppose that His Honour was serious in the suggestions he had made at the conclusion of his speech.

-------------------------------

The Council adjourned to Thursday, the 6th April 1871.

WHITLEY STOKES,

Srv. to the Govt. of India.

CALCUTTA,

The 31st March 1871.

-------------------------------

The Council met at Government House on Friday, the 8th December 1871.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, K.P., G.M.S.I., presiding.

The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble J. F. D. Inglis.
The Hon'ble J. Fitzjames Stephen, Q.C.
The Hon'ble W. Robinson, C.M.I.
The Hon'ble F. R. Ellis.
The Hon'ble W. Robinson, C.M.I.
The Hon'ble F. S. Chapman.
The Hon'ble R. Stewart.
The Hon'ble J. R. Bullen Smith.
The Hon'ble R. Stewart.

SUNDARY BILLS.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen also moved that the Hon'ble Messrs. Chapman, Stewart and Bullen Smith, be added to the Select Committees on the following Bills:

To define and amend the Law of Evidence.

Mr. Stephen proposed to take the opportunity afforded by this motion not to raise a discussion in regard to these Bills, but to make a few observations as to the stages at which they had arrived, and in regard to certain points connected with them to which he wished to give as much publicity as he could at the present time.
APPENDIX Aa.

The next Bill, to which he had to refer, was the Evidence Bill. He need not say anything more about it than that it was under the consideration of the Committee. He, however, wished to make one or two remarks. In the first place, although the matter had excited a great deal of public attention and much discussion, and although the Bill had been sent for the opinion of the Local Governments some time in June last, with a request that their opinion on the subject might be forwarded in the course of the autumn, many of the Local Governments had not yet sent in any opinions whatever on the subject. He earnestly hoped that these opinions might be received in order that they might be fully considered. Some memorials had been received on the subject from individuals, specially from certain members of the Bar. He did not wish to discuss them. But he wished to say that he thought that the opinion of some persons, that the Council in general, and Mr. Stephen in particular, were animated by some feeling of hostility against the Bar, was perfectly unfounded, and was almost as unnatural and absurd as that His Lordship, the President, should be accused of a strong prejudice against Irishmen, or that any other of Mr. Stephen’s colleagues should be accused of prejudice and dislike against the Civil Service. He was the last person in British India who had any right or any wish to make an attack upon the members of the Bar. Everything that had been said upon the subject of this Bill would receive most earnest and careful attention in a perfectly fair and friendly spirit, without the slightest notion of making any attack upon the independence or position generally of the honourable profession in question.

The Council adjourned to Friday, the 15th December 1871.

H. S. CUNNINGHAM,

Calcutta,

Offg. Secy. to the Council of the Govr.-Gent.

The 8th December 1871.

for making Laws and Regulations.

SECOND REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

(The Gazette of India, February 17th, 1872, Part V, p. 94).

The following Report of a Select Committee, together with the Bill as settled by them was presented to the Council of the Governor-General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 30th January 1872:

We, the undersigned, the Members of the Select Committee of the Council of the Governor-General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations, to which the Indian Evidence Bill was referred, have the honour to report that we have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the margin.

1. We have made some alterations in the arrangement of the Bill.

2. We have omitted the definitions of “proof” and “moral certainty” and the sections relating to inferences to be drawn by the Court as being suitable rather for a treatise than an Act.

3. We have omitted the provisions relating to material evidence and have given a new and simpler definition of the difference between primary and secondary evidence.

4. We have provided that the Act shall apply to all judicial proceedings, but not to affidavits presented to any Court or officer, nor to proceedings in arbitration.

5. As to the effect of an admission by one of several persons jointly tried for an offence, we have omitted sections 120 and 121 of the Original Bill. Instead of these, we have provided that when two or more persons are on their trial for the same offence at the same time, and an admis-
From Secretary to Government, Punjab No. 1745, dated 19th December 1871, and enclosure.

From Official Registrar, High Court, Calcutta, No. 2958, dated 18th December 1871.

From Official Secretary to Chief Commissioner, Oudh, No. 8719, dated 22nd December 1871, and enclosure.

6. We have redrawn Chapter VI, as to the exclusion of oral by documentary evidence, so as to make the sections more distinct and complete. We believe that they now represent the English law on the subject freed from certain refinements which would not be suitable for this country.

7. Exception was taken to the Bill in several quarters on the ground that it did not sufficiently dispose of the matter of presumptions. We have reconsidered this subject with attention, and have provided for it as follows:

Some presumptions have the effect of laying the burden of proof on particular persons in particular cases. These we have dealt with in sections 103 to 111 of the new Bill.

A conclusive presumption is a direction by the law that the existence of one fact shall, in all cases, be inferred from proof of another. This we have provided for in sections 112 and 113.

We have substituted the term 'conclusive proof' in these instances for that of 'necessary inference,' which was employed for the same purpose in the first draft of the Bill.

Other presumptions are in substance mere maxims by which the Court ought to be guided in the interpretation of facts. Theoretically they are regarded in English law in a different light, that is to say, as artificial rules which the Court is bound to follow as to the inferences to be drawn from facts. Practically, however, so many exceptions are made that the difference between a presumption of law and a presumption of fact is hardly traceable. The distinction appears to us altogether unsuitable for this country and likely to produce great inconvenience if it were introduced. We have accordingly, by section 114, put all such presumptions in the position of mere presumptions of fact with which the Court can deal at its discretion.

We have provided in the Chapter on the Burden of Proof that a Notification in the Gazette that a territory has been ceded to a Native State shall be conclusive proof of a valid cession at the date mentioned in the notification. The object of this section is to set at rest questions which, as we are informed, have arisen on this subject.

The subject of presumptions as to documents is a very special matter, and appears to us to belong to the subject of documentary evidence, under which head we have placed it in Chapter V.

Lastly, many subjects are treated by English writers under the head of presumptions which appear to us to belong rather to different branches of the substantial law, e.g., the presumption that every one knows the law is in reality a branch of the substantive criminal law. We have omitted such presumptions as these from the law of evidence, because they do not belong to the subject and because many of them are notorious.

8. The Chapter on Oaths has been omitted, as they form the subject of a separate Bill now under discussion.

9. We also recommend the omission of sections 141 to 145 of the old draft, as to questions to credit asked by barristers or pleaders, and the substitution of provisions showing the principles by which the asking of such questions, should be regulated, and empowering the Court, if any such question is improperly asked, to report the circumstance to the authority to which the person asking it is subject.

10. We have amended the wording of section 166 as to the Judge's power to ask questions. The section as originally drawn might have been taken to authorize him to found his judgment upon irrelevant matter, such as loose rumours. The intention of the section was to give him the fullest possible power of inquiry for the discovery of relevant matter. Section 164 as now drawn makes this clear.

11. We have omitted the chapter as to the duties of Judges and Juries, which will, we think, be more properly placed in the Code of Criminal Procedure. We have also omitted the provisions as to appeal in the first draft, and have substituted for them section 57 of Act II of 1855, which provides for the cases in which the improper admission or rejection of evidence shall be ground for a new trial or reversal of a decision.

12. Subject to these amendments we recommend that the Bill be passed, but we also recommend that the amended Bill be published in the Gazette, and that this report be not taken into consideration for a month from the date of its publication.

J. F. STEPHEN.
J. STRACHEY.
J. F. D. INGLIS.
W. ROBINSON.
F. S. CHAPMAN.
R. STEWART.
J. R. BULLEN SMITH.
F. R. COCKERELL.

The 30th January 1872.
INDIAN EVIDENCE BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen then presented the second Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence. He hoped that the Report of the Committee would be published in the Gazette next Saturday. This Bill had been very fully discussed in connection with the papers received on the subject from all parts of the country. He might observe that there were various points which had been the subject of criticism and amendments had been made in the Bill to meet those criticisms. He, however, was able to say that, as far as he knew, there was a considerable concurrence of opinion that a law on this subject was wanted, and that this Bill should be passed substantially in its present form. Experience would show what further amendments would be required. He had the authority of many of the Judges of the High Courts to the fact that they considered it desirable that a Bill on this subject should be passed, although there were a great variety of suggestions as to particular amendments of the law. The amendments which had attracted most attention were certain sections of the Bill relating to the cross-examination of witnesses by barristers and advocates. The provisions in the Bill on this subject had been considerably altered, but he would not at present enter into any of the questions which were dealt with in the Report of the Committee. The alterations which the Committee recommended would be seen when the Report was published. He proposed that the Bill should lie before the Committee for a reasonable time, and that it should be finally submitted to the Council four or five weeks after the publication of the Report.

The Council adjourned to Tuesday, the 13th February 1872.

H. S. CUNNINGHAM,

Calcutta.

The 30th January 1872.
INDIAN EVIDENCE BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen also moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence be taken into consideration. He said: "My Lord,—Just a year ago, in submitting the Report of the Committee to the Council, I explained at very considerable length the general design and scope of the Bill which they proposed, and which is now before the Council for its final decision. I need not revert to what I then said upon the general principles of the subject. My best course, I think, will be to inform the Council of what has taken place in relation to the Bill since I last addressed them on the subject.

"After a very full and careful reconsideration of its various details, the Bill was published in the Gazette: and forwarded to the Local Governments for opinion. It was carefully reconsidered in Committee after the return of the Government to Calcutta. It was published in the Gazette upwards of a month ago, with a report giving an account of the various alterations which had been made in it; and it is now finally submitted for the consideration of the Council. The Committee has fully considered all the papers with which it was favoured; but with one or two exceptions, I cannot say that it has received any very considerable assistance from its critics. The Bengal Government made some important observations, and so did the Madras Government, which favoured us with two peculiarly valuable papers; one by the then Advocate-General, Mr. Norton, and the other in the form of a letter by the Government itself, which had obviously been prepared with the advice and assistance of a very able professional lawyer. We have received no public expression of opinion from any one of the High Courts, except the High Court of Bombay, which approved generally of the Bill, but took exception to two of its provisions on minor points. The High Court of Calcutta announced its intention to say nothing at all on the matter. The High Courts of Madras and Allahabad have, as a fact, said nothing; and as the Bill has been before them for many months I presume that they do not intend to do so. I have, however, the satisfaction of being able to say that most of the Barrister Judges of the High Courts, and three out of the four Chief Justices have informed me that they approve generally of the Bill, and regard it as an important improvement on the existing state of things. The Local Governments, I think, are unanimous in regarding the measure as one which is much needed, and which is so far suited to its purpose as to be both intelligible to persons not legally trained and complete in essential respects.

'Upon this point, I would specially refer to the valuable papers already referred to which have been received from Madras. It is impossible, in reading them, not to see that their authors do not like the Bill. They find every fault they can with it, sometimes coming to very minute criticism. I do not in the least complain of this. I only wish the Bill had been criticised more fully in the same spirit, and I readily admit that the critics in question have pointed out many defects which have been, I think, removed. I am entitled to say that such other defects as may still be latent in it have escaped the detection of at least two highly competent and by no means favourable critics, who have given the matter careful consideration. Upon some of these criticisms, I will make a few remarks as I go on. I refer to them now for the sake of showing the importance of the opinions which I am about to read.

"The letter of the Madras Government says:—

'It is both advisable and possible so to codify the Law of Evidence as to present within the limits of a single enactment a treatise upon that law practically sufficient for ordinary purposes,' and it then adds:—

'The Draft Bill in its scheme and general arrangement appears to furnish an adequate outline of such a Code;'

but it is observed that the Bill 'in its present state is far from complete.'

'Mr. Norton expresses the same opinion at greater length, and each of these authorities agrees in the statement that the Bill is only a skeleton, which will have to be completed by a greater number of judicial decisions.

'Mr. Norton criticises the Bill, section by section, and in order to show how fully he has done so, he observes—

'I have, however, compared it, section by section, with Taylor, Roscoe, Best, and other text-writers; with the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes so far as they apply to the subject of evidence; with some of the existing Acts which regulate judicial evidence, and such judicial decisions as I have access to, illustrating the principles which at present are generally supposed by the profession to obtain in the Courts of India.'

'He could hardly, I think, have submitted it to a more searching test. Further on he observes—

'The process by which this Bill has been, in the main, built up, appears to me to have been by following Mr. Pitt Taylor's work on Evidence, and arbitrarily selecting certain sections or portions of section.'
Appendix Aa.

He then criticises the Bill in detail, and concludes by saying—

"Such are the observations that have occurred to me in the most careful study I can give the Bill; and I think, that, with some omissions, a little rearrangement here and there, and considerable extension and enlargement, it promises to prove a great step in advance, and improvement in the present unmodified law of evidence, and likely to afford very valuable aid and facilities to the Mofussil Judges, and all concerned, in the practice of the law in the Mofussil."

"The general result of these criticisms is, that the Bill is good as far as it goes, but it is very incomplete, and is composed of scraps of Taylor on Evidence 'arbitrary,' and much too sparingly, selected. I think, I owe to the Council and to the public some observations on this matter. I assert that they do Bill an injustice; that it is very much more complete than its critics allow it to be; and that their own writings prove it. I will not do Mr. Norton the injustice of supposing that he has intentionally kept back anything of importance which has occurred to him on the Bill. I am therefore, entitled to assume that his paper which contains 103 paragraphs and extends over 14 folio pages, refers to all the facts and omissions which his careful study of the subject has brought in his notice. Passing over criticisms of detail, many of which are no doubt just and have been adopted, I find that the only sins of omission with which he charges the Bill, are the following:—

1. Its provisions as to the effect of judgments are 'meagre.'
2. It does not deal fully enough with the subject of presumptions.
3. He also suggest slight additions to, or enlargements upon, four sections of every subordinate importance, which I will not trouble the Council by referring to.
4. The letter from the Madras Government which describes the Bill as 'far from complete,' specifies no omission whatever, except in reference to the subject of presumptions, more of which it affirms, should be included in a Code aiming at completeness."

"The charge of incompletion, then, comes to this, that the Bill does not deal fully enough with the two subjects of judgments and presumptions. I will refer to those points hereafter; but I will first, with your Lordship's permission, say a few words on the positive grounds on which I assert that the Bill does form a complete Code, and does deal with every subject which has been dealt with by English text-writers on Evidence or by English legislation. This leads me, in the first place, to notice the remark, that it consists of bits of Taylor on Evidence arbitrarily chosen. There is a certain amount of truth in this charge, about as much truth, and truth of the same kind, as there would be in saying that the speech which I am now making is composed of words arbitrarily chosen out of the dictionary. I could hardly mention any English law-book in common use, which is, or even pretends to be, much more than a large index, made up of extracts from cases strung together with little regard to any other than a very superficial functionary arrangement of the subject-matter. There is always some one book which is in possession of the field at a given moment, because it is more complete than its rivals, and has the latest cases and statutes entered up in it. This position at present is occupied by Mr. Taylor's book as it was occupied before his time by Gilbert, Phillips, Starkie and others; and as analogous positions are occupied, in relation to other subjects, by Russell on Crimes, Bullen on Pleading, and other works known to all lawyers. To say, however, that the Bill now before the Council consists of bits taken from Taylor, and especially of bits taken 'arbitrarily,' is altogether incorrect. In the first place, the arrangement of the Bill, and the general conception of the subject on which that arrangement is based, are altogether unlike anything in Taylor or in any other text-books on the subject with which I am acquainted. Nowhere in Taylor, nor in Mr. Norton's own book on the subject, will be found any recognition of the distinction between rel. act of facts and proof of facts, or any, even the faintest perception of the extreme ambiguity and uncertainty which, as I show in the observations which I addressed to the Council a year ago, have been thrown over the whole subject by the absence of anything like an attempt to define with precision the fundamental terms of the subject, and specially the words 'fact' and 'evidence.' As to the notion that bits of Taylor have been 'arbitrarily' put together in the Bill, I will only say that, at a proper time and place, I would undertake to assign the reason why every section stands where it does. Upon the question of completeness, however, I will make this remark: I assert that every principle applicable to the circumstances of British India which is contained in the 1598 royal octavo pages of Taylor on Evidence, is contained in the 167 sections of this Bill; I also assert that the Bill has been carefully compared section by section with the last edition of Mr. Norton's work upon Evidence, and that it disposes fully of every subject of which Mr. Norton treats.

"As to the specific instances of incompleteness which are alleged against the Bill, two only are of any importance, and upon each of them I will say a few words.

"The first is that the Chapter on Judgments is meagre. My answer is, that it may appear meagre to those who take their notions of the Law of Evidence from works like Mr. Taylor's; but that it contains everything which properly belongs to the subject. Its utter absence of arrangement and classification on every subject is the great reproach of the Law of England, and one of the strongest instances of it is to be found in the way in which provisions of an essentially different character are frequently comprised under the same head. I might give many illustrations of this; but the Law of Evidence, I think, supplies more glaring illustrations than any other department of law.

Many English writers have treated the subject in such a manner as to make it comprise the whole body of the law. Thus, for instance, Starkie's Law of Evidence deals with the whole range of the criminal law and of actions for contracts and wrongs. His book contains, not merely rules about hearsay and secondary evidence and the like, but a specification of the sort of facts, which it is permissible to prove on a charge of murder, or in an action for libel, in order to show malice, or under the plea of not guilty in such an action. It is obvious that the Law of Evidence thus conceived would include nearly the whole of the substantive law, and it follows I think, that it is a great importance to draw the line distinctly between what properly belongs to the subject and what does not. It is for this reason that the sections about judgments are drawn in their present form, and that certain topics connected with judgments which are often dealt with by writers on evidence, are omitted from the Bill. The subject is very technical; but I will endeavour to explain it in a few words.

The second section of the Code of Civil Procedure enacts that:—

'The Civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit brought on a cause of action which shall have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they claim.'

The Code of Criminal Procedure enacts that a man shall not be tried again after he has once been acquitted or convicted. It is a matter of great difficulty and intricacy to describe the precise effect of these provisions, and to show how they apply to a variety of cases which may arise. Mr. Brougham's edition of the Code of Civil Procedure contains ten large pages, in very small print, of notes of the cases which have been decided on the second section of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a certain number of decisions have been given on the corresponding sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and it is because this Bill does not codify those decisions that it is described as meagre. My answer to the criticism is, that the authors of the two Codes in question were quite right in considering the matter as essentially a matter of procedure. It no more belongs to the Law of Evidence than the thousand other questions which are sometimes connected with it. There are, for instance, cases in which insanity excuses an act which, but for its existence, would be a crime. If a man depend himself on the ground of insanity, he must give evidence of it: just as he must prove the existence of a judgment, to the value which he relies on the rights being so barred; but it appears to me that it would be as reasonable to treat the question of the effect of insanity on responsibility as a part of the Law of Evidence, because in particular cases it may be necessary to give evidence of insanity, as to treat the law as to the effect of a previous judgment on a right to sue as part of the Law of Evidence, because, in certain cases, it may be necessary to give evidence of the existence of a previous judgment.

The only questions connected with judgments, which do appear to me to form part of the Law of Evidence properly so called, are dealt with in sections 40—44 of the Bill. These sections provide for the cases in which the fact that a Court has decided as to a given matter of fact relevant to the issue may be proved for the purpose of showing that that fact exists. This, no doubt, is a branch of the Law of Evidence, and the provisions referred to dispose of it fully.

As to the subject of Presumptions, my answer to the critics of the Bill is partly to the same effect, though their criticisms were perhaps better founded. I must admit that the Bill as introduced dealt less fully with the subject than was thought desirable on further consideration, and some additions to it have accordingly been introduced, though the general principle on which the matter was dealt with is maintained. The subject of presumptions is one of some degree of general interest. It was a favourite enterprise on the part of Continental lawyers to try to frame systems as to the effect of presumptions which would spare Judges the trouble of judging of facts for themselves by the light of their own experience. A presumption was an artificial rule as to the value and import of a particular proved fact. These presumptions were almost infinite in number and were arranged in a variety of ways. There were rebuttable presumptions, and presumptions which were irrebuttable: Presumptiones juris et de jure, Presumptiones juris, and Presumptiones facti. There were also an infinite variety of rules for weighing evidence; so much in the way of presumption and so much evidence was full proof, a little less was half-full, and so on. Scraps of this theory have found their way into English law, where they produce a very incongruous and unfortunate effect, and give rise to a good deal of needless intricacy. Another use to which presumptions have been put is that of engrafting upon the Law of Evidence many subjects which in no way belong to it. For instance, there is said to be a conclusive presumption that every one knows the law, and this is regarded as necessary in order to indicate the further proposition that no one is to be punished for breaking a law of which he was ignorant. To my mind this is simply expressing one truth in the shape of two falsehoods. The plain doctrine that ignorance of the law is no excuse for breaking it, dispenses with the presumption, and hands the subject over, from the Law of Evidence with which it is accidentally connected, to criminal law to which it properly belongs.
"I will not weary the Council by going into all the details of the subject, though I could with perfect ease, if it would not take too long, answer specifically the remark of the Madras Government on this matter. That Government says—

'Sections 102—4 contain three instances of presumptions, selected from a chapter of the Law of Evidence which in Taylor's fills 111 sections. It is difficult to see why any should be inserted when so few are chosen.'

"In general terms the answer is this: large parts of Mr. Taylor's chapter relate to topics which have nothing to do with the Law of Evidence. Those which are of practical importance are all included in the Bill as it stands (a few were no doubt omitted in the first draft, and they fall under these heads);—there are a few cases in which it is expedient to provide that one fact shall be conclusive proof of another for various obvious reasons—the inference of legitimacy from marriage is a good instance. 2ndly—There are several cases in which Courts would be at a loss as to the course which they ought to take under certain circumstances without a distinct rule of guidance. After what length of absence unaccounted for, for instance, may it be presumed that a man is dead? The rule is that seven years is sufficient for the purpose. Obviously, six or eight would do equally well; but it is also obvious that to have a distinct rule is a great convenience. All cases of this kind fall properly under the head of the Burden of Proof, and I think it will be found that the provisions contained in Chapter VII of the Bill provide for all of them. A new section (114) has been added to this chapter which deserves special notice. Its substance was, I think, implied in the original draft of the Bill; but it has been inserted in order to put the matter beyond all possibility of doubt. It is in the following words:—

'114. The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case.'

Illustrations.

The Court may presume—

(a) that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession;
(b) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars;
(c) that a bill of exchange, accepted or endorsed was accepted or endorsed for good consideration;
(d) that a thing or state of things which has been shown to be in existence within a period shorter than that within which such things or states of things usually cease to exist, is still in existence;
(e) that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed;
(f) that the common course of business has been followed in particular cases;
(g) that evidence which could be, and is not, produced, would, if produced, be unfavorable to the person who withholds it;
(h) that if a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled to answer by law, the answer, if given, would be unfavorable to him;
(i) that when a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor, the obligation has been discharged.

But the Court shall also have regard to such facts as the following, in considering whether such maxims do or do not apply to the particular case before them:—

As to Illustration (a)—A shop-keeper has in his till a marked rupee soon after it was stolen and cannot account for its possession specifically, but is continually receiving rupees in the course of his business:

As to Illustration (b)—A, a person of the highest character, is tried for causing a man's death by an act of negligence in arranging certain machinery. B, a person of equally good character who also took part in the arrangement, describes precisely what was done, and admits and explains the common carelessness of A and himself:

As to Illustration (c)—A crime is committed by several persons. A, B and C, three of the criminals, are captured on the spot and kept apart from each other. Each gives an account of the crime implicating D, and the accounts corroborate each other in such a manner as to render previous concert highly improbable:

As to Illustration (d)—A, the drawer of a bill of exchange, was a man of business. B, the acceptor, was a young and ignorant person, completely under A's influence:

As to Illustration (e)—It is proved that a river ran in a certain course five years ago, but it is known that there have been floods since that time which might change its course:

As to Illustration (f)—A judicial act, the regularity of which is in question, was performed under exceptional circumstances:

As to Illustration (g)—The question is, whether a letter was received. It is shown to have been posted, but the usual course of the post was interrupted by disturbances:

As to Illustration (h)—A man refused to produce a document which would bear on a contract of small importance on which he is sued, but which might also injure the feelings and reputation of his family:
APPENDIX AA.

As to Illustration (4)—A man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled by law to answer, but the answer to it might cause loss to him in matters unconnected with the matter in relation to which it is asked:

As to Illustration (5)—A bond is in possession of the obligor, but the circumstances of the case are such that he may have stolen it.

"The effect of this provision, coupled with the general repealing clause at the beginning of the Bill, is to make it perfectly clear that Courts of Justice are to use their own common sense and experience in judging of the effect of particular facts, and that they are to be subject to no technical rules whatever on the subject. The illustrations given are, for the most part, cases of what in English law are called presumptions of law; artificial rules as to the effect of evidence by which the Court is bound to guide its decision, subject, however, to certain limitations which it is difficult either to understand or to apply, but which will be swept away by the section in question. I am not quite sure whether, in strictness of speech, the rule that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is confirmed, can be called a presumption of law, though, according to a very elaborate judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock's, it has, at all events, some of the most important characteristics of such a presumption. Be this how it may, the indefinite position in which it stands is a cause of endless perplexity and frequent failures of justice. On the one hand, it is clear law that a conviction is not illegal because it proceeds on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice; on the other hand, it seems to be also law that, in cases tried by a jury, the Judge is bound by law to tell them that they ought not to convict on such evidence, though they can if they choose. How a Session Judge (sitting without a jury) is to give himself a direction in that effect, and how a High Court is to deal with a case in which he has convicted, although he told himself that he ought not to convict, I do not quite understand. At all events, it seems to me quite clear that he ought to be at liberty to use his discretion on the subject. Of course, the fact that a man is an accomplice forms a strong objection, in most cases, to his evidence; but every one, I think, must have met with instances in which it is practically impossible to doubt the truth of such evidence, although it may not be corroborated, or although the evidence by which it is corroborated is itself suspicious.

"As I have already observed, I do not wish to trouble the Council with technicalities; but I hope this explanation will show that this part of the Bill, at all events, is not incomplete.

"I may observe that many topics closely connected with the subject of evidence are incapable of being satisfactorily dealt with by express law. It would be easy to dilate upon the theory on which the whole subject rests, and the manner in which an Act of this kind should be used in practice. I think, however, that it would not be proper to do so on the present occasion. I have therefore put into writing what I have to say on these subjects, and I propose to publish what I have written, by way of a commentary upon, or introduction to, the Act itself. I hope that this may be of some use to the Civil Servants who are preparing for their Indian career, and to the law students in Indian Universities. The subject is one which reaches far beyond law; for the law of Evidence is nothing unless it is founded upon a rational conception of the manner in which truth as to all matters of fact whatever ought to be investigated.

"I now turn to a criticism made on the Bill by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, who appears to be somewhat dissatisfied with the manner in which the Bill deals with the question of relevancy, which, as he says, is a question of degree.

"The Lieutenant-Governor has no doubt that the law, clearing up the obscurity now prevailing as to rules of evidence, protecting our Courts from the intrusion of a foreign law of evidence in no way applicable, and rendering the Judges in some degree masters in their own Courts, will be highly beneficial. His principal doubt is, whether it is possible to frame a law which evidence is relevant and what is not, its difficulty is to think that relevancy is a question of degree; that the relevant shades off into the irrelevant by imperceptible degrees. It may be that it is easier to decide, in each case, what is substantially material to the issue, or so remote in its relevancy that the time of the Court should not be occupied, than to lay down by rule of law what is to be considered relevant and what not. Some rules must necessarily be somewhat refined, and, as it were, metaphorical. If we were allowed to argue the question whether any piece of evidence is, or is not, admissible under such rules, the Lieutenant-Governor would fear that the Court might be lost in disquisitions. If, however, the rules regarding relevancy were treated as merely an authoritative treatise on evidence for the guidance of Judges, which they are to study and follow as well as any case, but that they are not bound to hear objections and arguments based upon it, the Lieutenant-Governor has no doubt that the relevancy rules are admirably suited to the purpose, and would be extremely useful. It does not seem to him very clear in the draft whether or no counsel are to be entitled to take objection to evidence at every turn and to argue the question as to whether it is or is not admissible under the evidence rules. It seems of great importance that this should be made clear; for if counsel may object and argue, the Lieutenant-Governor certainly has great fear that the arguments regarding relevancy will be endless.

"I cannot altogether agree with these remarks. As to the arguments of counsel, I do not feel that horror of them which His Honour appears to feel. It is, I think, abundantly clear that counsel will be permitted to argue as to the relevancy of evidence, and as to the propriety of proof, and I do not see how a law can be laid down at all upon which counsel are never to argue. No one, I think, will seriously assert that lawyers, as a class, are an impediment to the administration of justice, or otherwise than an all-but-indispensable assistance to it; but if they are to exist at all, they must argue as well on evidence as on other subjects. I must, however, observe that every precaution has been taken to prevent useless and trifling argument. In the first place, if the Judge wishes to know about any fact, the relevancy of which is under debate, he can cut the matter short by asking about it himself under section 185. In the second place, the mere admission or rejection of improper evidence is not to be a ground for a new trial or the reversal of a decision. The fact that the opposite is the case in England is the great cause of the enormous intricacy and technicality of English law on this point. If, in the Tichborne case, one single question had been permitted after being objected to, and if the Court had afterwards been of opinion that it had been wrongly permitted then, however trifling the matter might have been, the party whose objection had been wrongly overruled would have been by law entitled to a new trial and the whole enormous expense of the first trial would have been thrown away. This never was the law in India, nor will it be so now. The result is, that the provisions about relevancy will be useful principally as guides to the Judges and the parties, and, in particular, as rules which will enable the Judge to shut out masses of irrelevant matter which the parties are very likely to wish to introduce. As to the more general question, I think that it is possible to give the true theory of the relevancy of facts, and if I thought it desirable to enter upon a very abstract matter in this place, I think I could show what this theory is, and how this Bill is founded upon it. Be this, however, as it may, and taking a view, not indeed less practical, but more immediately and obviously practical, I would make the following observations:—I am quite aware that relevancy is, as His Honour observes, a matter of degree, and for that reason the Bill gives definitions of it so wide and various, that I think they will be found to include every sort of fact which has any direct or indirect, or even remote connection with the matter in issue. The sections which define relevancy are, indeed, enabling sections. Any fact which fulfils any one of the many conditions which they declare to constitute relevancy will be relevant, and most facts which have any real connection with the matter to be proved would fulfil several of them. Take, for instance, this fact—A man is charged with theft, and it is proved that he was seen running away immediately after the theft with the stolen goods in his hand. This is (1) a fact so connected with a fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction, and is therefore relevant under section 6; (2) it is the effect of a fact in issue, and is therefore relevant under section 7; (3) it is the conduct of a party to the proceeding subsequent to a fact in issue, and is therefore relevant under section 8; (4) it is a fact which in itself renders a fact in issue highly probable, and is therefore relevant under section 11. This fact, therefore, is relevant under no less than four sections, each of which would admit a great number of facts which would not be admitted by the other sections. Indeed, the latitude of the definition of relevancy will be best appreciated by negating the conditions which the Act imposes. Suppose that you are able to assert of a fact that it is neither itself in issue, nor forms part of the same transaction, nor is its occasion, cause or effect, immediate or otherwise, that it shows, no motive or preparation for it; that it is no part of the previous or subsequent conduct of any person connected with the matter in question; that it does not explain or introduce any fact which is so connected with that previous or subsequent conduct as to rebut or support any inference, or by, or establish the identity of any person or thing connected with it, or fix the time or any event the time of which is important; that it is not inconsistent with any relevant fact or facts in issue; and that, neither by itself, nor in connection with other facts, does it make any such fact highly probable—if all these negatives can be affirmed, I think we may say, without much risk of error, that the one fact has nothing to do with the other, and may be regarded as irrelevant.

"I now come to a matter which has excited a good deal of discussion, though it relates to a subordinate and not very important part of the Bill—that which concerns the examination of witnesses by counsel. The Bill as originally drawn provided, in substance, that no person should be asked a question which reflected on his character, as to matters irrelevant to the case before the Court without written instructions; that if the Court considered the question whether the examination of the witness was for the purpose of the instructions; and that the giving of such instructions should be an act of defamation, subject, of course, to the various rules about defamation laid down in the Penal Code. To ask such questions without instructions was to be a contempt of Court in the person asking them, but was not to be defamation.

"This proposal caused a great deal of criticism, and in particular produced memorials from the bars of the three Presidencies. It was also objected to by most of the Local Governments to whom the Bill was referred for opinion. Some of the objections made to the proposal were, I thought, well founded. It was pointed out, in the first place, that the difficulty of obtaining the written instructions would be practically insuperable; in the next place, that the Native Bar throughout the country were already subject to forms of discipline which were practically sufficient; and, in the third place—and perhaps this was the most important argument of all—that, in this country, the administration of justice is carried on under so many difficulties and is so frequently abused to purposes of the worst kind, that it is of the greatest importance that the characters of witnesses should be open to full inquiry. These reasons satisfied the committee, and myself amongst the rest, that the sections proposed would be inexpedient, and others have accordingly been substituted for them which I think will in practice be found sufficient. The substituted sections are as follows:—

146. When a witness is cross-examined, he may, in addition to the questions hereinbefore referred to, be asked any questions which tend

(1) to test his veracity;
(2) to discover who he is and what is his position in life, or
(3) to shake his credit by injuring his character, although the answer to such questions might tend directly or indirectly to criminate him, or might expose, or tend directly or indirectly to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture.

147. If any such question relates to a matter relevant to the suit or proceeding, the provisions of section 132 shall apply thereto.

148. If any such question relates to a matter not relevant to the suit or proceeding, except in so far as it affects the credit of the witness by injuring his character, the Court shall decide whether or not the witness shall be compelled to answer it, may, if it thinks fit, warn the witness that he is not obliged to answer it. In exercising its discretion, the Court shall have regard to the following considerations:

(1) Such questions are proper if they are of such a nature that the truth of the imputation conveyed by them would seriously affect the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies.
(2) Such questions are improper if the imputation which they convey relates to matters so remote in time, or of such a character that the truth of the imputation would not affect, or would affect in a slight degree, the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies.
(3) Such questions are improper if there is a great disproportion between the importance of the imputation made against the witness's character and the importance of his evidence.
(4) The Court may, if it sees fit, draw, from the witness's refusal to answer, the reference that the answer, if given, would be unfavourable.

149. No such question as is referred to in section 148 ought to be asked, unless the person asking it has reasonable grounds for thinking that the imputation which it conveys is well-founded.

Illustrations.

(a) A Barrister is instructed by an attorney or vakil that an important witness is a dacoit. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dacoit.

(b) A pleader is informed by a person in Court that an important witness is a dacoit. The informant, on being questioned by the pleader, gives satisfactory reasons for his statement. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dacoit.

(c) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, is asked at random whether he is a dacoit. There are here no reasonable grounds for the question.

(d) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, being questioned as to his mode of life and means of living, gives unsatisfactory answers. This may be a reasonable ground for asking him if he is a dacoit.

150. If the Court is of opinion that any such question was asked without reasonable grounds, it may, if it was asked by any barrister, pleader, vakil, or attorney, report the circumstances of the case to the High Court or other authority to which such barrister, pleader, vakil, or attorney is subject in the exercise of his profession.

151. The Court may forbid any questions or inquiries which it regards as indecent or scandalous, although such questions or inquiries may have some bearing on the questions before the Court, unless they relate to facts in issue, or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed.

152. The Court shall forbid any question which appears to it to be intended to insult or annoy, or which, although proper in itself, appears to the Court needlessly offensive in form.

"The object of these sections is to lay down, in the most distinct manner, the duty of counsel of all grades in examining witnesses with a view to shaking their credit by damaging their character. I trust that this explicit statement of the principles according to which such questions ought or ought not to be asked will be found sufficient to prevent the growth, in this country, of that which in England has on many occasions been a grave scandal. I think that the sections, as far as their substance is concerned, speak for themselves, and that they will be admitted to be sound by all honourable advocates and by the public. I cannot leave the subject without a few remarks on the memorials which the sections originally proposed have called forth from the Bar in various parts of the country. As none of the bodies in question have made any further remarks on the Bill, since it appeared in the Gazette, in its amended form about a month ago, I suppose that the alterations made in the Bill have removed the main objections which they felt to it. I need not therefore notice those parts of their memorials which were directed against the consequences which they apprehended from the sections which have been given up. They contain, however, other matter which I feel compelled to notice. I need not refer to all the memorials. The one sent in by the Calcutta Bar was for the most part proper, though it contained passages which I think might as well have been omitted. The memorial of the Bombay Barristers contains similar passages, expressed more fully and less temperately, and I shall accordingly confine myself to noticing such of their remarks as appear to me to deserve notice.

"I may observe, in the first place, in general, that I have read in the newspapers and in these memorials much that can only mean that I individually was actuated in drawing up and presenting the Bill to hostility to the Bar; indeed, the Bombay memorial says, in so many words, that remarks made by one member (meaning, I suppose, me) in Council 'appear to contemplate the extinction of the profession of Barrister-at-Law in India.' In support of this surprising statement, they quote, as being 'open to no other construction,' the following words from the report of the Select Committee:

""The English system, under which the Bench and Bar act together and play their respective parts independently, and the professional organization on which it rests, does not as yet exist in this country, and will not for a very long course of time be introduced."

"Before I made the remarks which this suggests, let me ask your Lordship and the Council whether a charge that I, of all people, wish for the extinction of the profession of Barrister-at-Law in India, is not upon the face of it absurd? I am myself a Barrister of eighteen years' standing, and a Queen's Counsel of four years' standing. I believe, that there is no Barrister in British India of whom I should not be entitled to take precedence, professionally, if I choose to practise here, and so strong is my connection with my profession, that I am at this moment on the point of resigning one of the most responsible offices which a Barrister can hold, for the purpose of returning to the ordinary routine of professional practice. How is it possible to imagine I should be hostile to the profession? When this Bill was introduced I was—as I still am—anxious to do whatever lies in my power to preserve the honour and dignity of my profession, and to prevent its good name from being discredited. For this reason, I devised what I regarded as an appropriate remedy for a great and crying evil—one with which I have been much impressed by my own observations in England and which is likely to extend in India as the habit of cross-examination becomes more general, and when the rights which a cross-examining advocate has are explicitly defined. The remedy, I will admit, was to some extent inappropriate, but for merely proposing it, for merely recognizing the existence of the evil against which it was directed, I am charged with wishing to extinguish my own profession.

"The real meaning of the expressions in the report (for which I am fully responsible) was, I think, so plain, that I cannot understand how the memorialists can have ascribed to them a sense which I think they could never suggest to any fair mind. The report said:

""The English system, under which the Bench and the Bar act together and play their respective parts independently, and the professional organization on which it rests, does not as yet exist in this country, and will not for a very long course of time be introduced."

"Yes, say the memorialists; it does exist, to wit, in the Presidency towns.' This is as much as if the water-works of Calcutta were referred to, to contradict a statement that India is wretchedly supplied with drinking-water. I make a statement about an Empire as large as Europe without Russia, and am told that it is incorrect, because there are three English Courts, and three knots of, perhaps, a dozen or so English Barristers, to be found at towns which are in the nature of English settlements. The reason why the statement complained of was not qualified by excepting these towns and Courts was simply that the exception was not important enough to be stated. It would, indeed, have been matter of great indifference to me, personally, whether the Bill extended to the High Courts sitting on the original side or not. It is a mistake to make exceptions without a necessity for them; but the question, what rules of evidence should apply in the Presidency towns is one of very little real importance. The great and vital importance of the matter lies in the effect which it will have on the administration of justice throughout the country at large. It is framed in order to meet the wants, and lighten the labours, of district officers, by giving them a short and clear view of a subject which has been converted into a sort of professional mystery, the knowledge of which was confined to a knot of persons specially initiated in it. Not, as regards the Mofussil, I repeat the expression, and still less the place of. I assert that they are absolutely true, and state a fact notorious to every one. I say that, throughout India generally, nothing like the English system under which the Bench and Bar act together and play their respective parts independently, does now exist, or can for a length of time be expected to exist. Let me just recall for a moment the nature of that system. In the first place the Bench and the Bar in England form substantially one body. The Judges have all been Barristers, and the great prize to which the Barristers look forward is to become Judges.

"That is not the case in India, nor anything like it. The great mass of Indian Judges are not, and never have been, lawyers at all; the great mass of Indian lawyers have no chance or expectation of becoming Judges, and many of them have no wish to do so. Even in the Presidency towns, the whole organization of the profession differs from that of England in ways which I do not think it necessary to refer to, but which are of great importance. I may, however, observe that the position of an English Barrister who practises in the Mofussil, whether he is habitually resident in the Presidency town or not, is altogether different from that of an English Barrister in his ordinary practice in England. An English Barrister on circuit, and even at the Quarter Sessions, is subject to a whole series of professional restraints and professional rules which do not, and cannot, apply to practice in the Mofussil in this country. He acts under the eyes of a public which takes great interest in his proceedings, and puts a powerful check upon him. He practises in important cases before Judges whom he feels and knows to be his professional superiors, and to whom he is accustomed to defer. No one of these remarks applies to a Barrister from a Presidency practising in the Mofussil. The result of this state of things must be matter of opinion. It is impossible to discuss the subject in detail. The Bombay and Calcutta memorialists consider it eminently satisfactory: let us hope they are right. My opinion, of course, is formed upon grounds which it is not very easy to assign, and, as it can be of little importance, I shall not express it. In any case this Bill can do no harm.

"Passing, however, from the case of English Barristers to the case of pleaders and vakils and the Courts before which they practise, I would appeal to every one who has experience of the subject, whether the observations referred to are not strictly true, and whether the main provision founded upon it there—the provision which empowers the Court to ask what questions it pleases—is not essential to the administration of justice here. In saying that the Bench and Bar in England play their respective parts independently, what I mean is that, in England, cases are fully prepared for trial before they come into Court, so that the Judge has nothing to do but to sit still and weigh the evidence produced before him. In India, in an enormous mass of cases, this neither is nor can be. It is absolutely necessary that the Judge should not only hear what is put before him by others, but that he should ascertain by his own inquiries how the facts actually stand. In order to do this it will frequently be necessary for him to go into matters which are not themselves relevant to the matter in issue, but may lead to something that is, and it is in order to arm Judges with express authority to do this that section 195, which has been so much objected to, has been framed.

"I have now referred to the main points in the Bill which have been attacked, and as I fully explain the principles on which it was founded more than a year ago, I have only to move that it may be taken into consideration."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen then moved the following amendments:

That, in section 8, instead of the second paragraph, the following be substituted:

"The conduct of any party, or of any agent to any party, to any suit or proceeding in reference to such suit or proceeding, or in reference to any fact in issue therein or relevant thereto, and the conduct of any person an officer against whom is the subject of any proceeding, is relevant, if such conduct influences or is influenced by any fact in issue or relevant fact, and whether it was previous or subsequent thereto."

That, in section 9, line 3, after the word "which," insert the words "support or."

That, in the explanation to section 57, instead of the words "the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, of England, of Scotland, and of Ireland," the following be substituted:

"(1) The Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland;
(2) The Parliament of Great Britain;
(3) The Parliament of England;
(4) The Parliament of Scotland; and
(5) The Parliament of Ireland."

That the words "or in any other case in which the Court thinks fit to dispense with it" be added to the proviso in section 66.

That the following new section be inserted after section 157:

"158. Whenever any statement, relevant under section 32 or 33, is proved, all matters may be proved, either in order to contradict or corroborate it, or in order to impeach or confirm the credit of the person by whom it was made, which might have been proved if that person had been called as a witness and had denied upon cross-examination the truth of the matter suggested."

And that the numbers of the subsequent sections be altered accordingly.

The motion was put and agreed to.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor would ask the permission of His Excellency the President to move an amendment of which he had not given notice. He would observe that the Council had had very short notice of this Bill being brought forward and passed to-day. The amendment which His Honour intended to propose was not of much importance: it was simply to lop off a dead branch of the Bill, namely, section 160.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen said that the section to which His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor referred was one of considerable importance, to which great weight was attached.
He might say that the Council ought to have had notice of such an amendment. It was, moreover, a matter which would give rise to a great deal of discussion.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor believed he was correct in saying that the Council had not had notice until yesterday or the day before that the Bill was to be brought forward. He would not have asked, at this stage, for leave to move a substantive amendment; his amendment was merely to lop off a dead branch.

His Excellency the President thought that this was a question of great importance, and that notice should have been given of the intention to move the amendment.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor said that, as His Excellency the President was of opinion that the notice of the amendment should have been given. His Honour did not think that his amendment was of sufficient importance to delay the passing of the Bill.

The Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell felt very much inclined to support His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor in his attempt to have an amendment in the sense which His Honour had indicated brought forward, and thought that there were probably other members who were of the same opinion. The section which it was proposed to omit was a very broad one which it would be very well to get rid off. Mr. Cockerell had proposed a similar amendment in committee, but had been overruled.

His Excellency the President observed that there seemed to be a strong feeling in favour of the amendment; and although he was sorry that any further delay should occur to the inconvenience of business, he thought that an adjournment of this Bill might, under the circumstances, be advisable.

The Hon'ble Mr. Stephen said that, looking to the great pressure of business before the Council, he would much rather consent to the amendment being brought on at once than that there should be an adjournment.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor would express a strong opinion that his amendment was not of sufficient importance to call for an adjournment.

His Excellency the President had not had an opportunity of considering the nature of the amendment which His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor wished to propose, but he would be happy to act according to the prevailing opinion of the Council. The Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill had himself expressed a desire that the amendment should be brought on and settled to-day.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor then moved the omission of section 150. He had already stated, in regard to the amendment nearly all that he had to say, namely, that the section was really a dead branch, without any effect or practical meaning whatever. It would not be necessary for him, therefore, to detain the Council with many words upon the subject. It seemed to him that this section was the shadow of a real provision which had been struck out of the Bill, and which was past and gone. The Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill had explained at considerable length, and in an extremely lucid manner, the circumstances under which a group of sections found place in the Bill, namely, sections 146 to 150. His Honour might say, broadly, that the effect of these sections, down to section 149, was to prescribe that certain questions affecting the character of witnesses might, under certain circumstances, be admitted, and that, under certain other circumstances such questions ought not to be admitted. Well, as the Bill was originally drawn, it not only laid down what questions should be admitted and what questions should not be admitted, but another section prescribed penalties for the improper putting of such questions by advocates or other persons engaged in a case. After a great deal of discussion, he believed, these penal provisions were struck out of the Bill. The consequence was that advocates engaged in a case were subject, with regard to the putting, or not putting of such questions, to no special penalties, but only to those rules which guided and governed an advocate's professional conduct in regard to these as to all other matters. Well, then, if it be, as he said, that this section provided no penalty at all, and provided no course of proceedings which the Court was not competent to take without it, it was in fact a fiction and a sham, a weak and defective compromise of a matter which had been disposed of. His Lordship and the Council were aware that, in this country, Courts of all descriptions, from the higher to the lower, were subject to the control of the highest Court: each was subject to the direct control of the Court under which it acted and by which it was supervised. No law was necessary to enable an inferior Court to report to the superior Court any matter affecting any advocate who held his license from that Court. It seemed to His Honour that this provision was much more in the nature of a section to enable a teacher to report a boy to his parents or to one who held a moral or legal control over him. The section was of no practical effect, but to some extent disfigured the Bill, as being a fictitious shadow of a reality which had passed away, and His Honour therefore proposed to omit it.

The Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell entirely agreed with what had fallen from His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor; and, in his opinion, if any provision of this kind could properly find a place in a legal enactment, it should rather be in a Bill relating to pleaders, such as the Bill on that subject, which was already before the Council. It seemed to him (Mr. Cockerell) entirely out of place in a Bill of this kind. He had always entertained this opinion, and pressed it in Committee, and he thought His Honour had correctly described the clause referred to as a dead branch. But, as it was one which could do no harm, Mr. Cockerell had not thought it necessary to repeat his opinion on the subject and press his views upon the Council. As, however, the matter had been taken up, he was exceedingly glad to have this opportunity of expressing his full concurrence in the Lieutenant-Governor’s suggestion.

The Hon’ble Mr. Chapman could not help thinking that the provision which His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor proposed to omit was not a dead branch, but a branch which had some vitality in it. If advocates practising in the Mofussil knew that their conduct could be liable to be reported to the High Court, and thus brought to the notice of the profession, he thought this knowledge might act as a salutary check against those who were likely to abuse the liberty of the Bar.

The Hon’ble Mr. Robinson joined entirely in the view taken by his hon’ble friend Mr. Chapman. He thought that the provision of section 150 would act as a very wholesome check upon vakils who practised in up-country Courts. They aspired to rise to the judicial service, and it was desirable that the High Court should know something of the character of the men practising in the Lower Courts, and more especially have their shortcomings brought before them. Mr. Robinson thought that the provision which it was proposed to omit was a very good one, and he would therefore vote against the amendment.

Major-General the Hon’ble H. W. Norman thought, on the whole, that the section should be retained; it might be the means of doing some good, and he thought it could not do any harm.

The amendment was then put and negatived.

The Hon’ble Mr. Stephen then moved that the Bill as amended be passed. He would not trouble the Council with any further remarks.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor said he would not like to let this motion pass without saying a few words; he had passed so long a portion of his life in dealing with evidence, that he hardly liked to say he was at the last moment compelled to take this Bill upon trust; but he might say that he had placed his trust in a quarter in which it could be very well placed. It was a Bill that, he believed, had received thorough consideration and thorough sitting in a most thorough and systematic manner.

It was in the hands of a man who was so extremely free from antiquated prejudices and antiquated notions, that he hoped the Bill had been made as good as a Bill of this kind could be expected to be made in the hands of any man. His Honour had on a former occasion expressed his opinion against any law of evidence for this country. He had doubts whether any legal law of evidence, as distinguished from moral and metaphysical laws, were really a good thing. But at the same time he felt that things had taken that course, and the circumstances were now such that it was hopeless to avoid some law of evidence; and he hoped and believed that a law of evidence, freed from intricacies and technicalities, had this very great advantage to the Courts of the country, that it at least put them, in respect of the law, on an equal footing with the Advocates practising before them. It enabled the Judge to say to the Advocate, “I am as good a man as you; if you raise a question of evidence, there is the law by which your question can be decided.” It would put a stop to the practice, hitherto prevalent, of an Advocate shaking in the face of the Court a mysterious law of evidence, which was not to be found codified anywhere as substantive law, or otherwise, in any shape admitting of its being easily referred to by our Judges and judicial officers of all grades. His Honour could have wished that the Hon’ble Member in charge of the Bill had not found it necessary to tell the Council that the Bill was to a considerable extent based on Taylor on Evidence; because His Honour’s view was that it was not desirable to take any dictionary of English law as the basis of a law of evidence in this country. If he could find any ground for objecting to any part of the Bill, it was that, in some parts, it somewhat smelt of the English law of evidence; but he hoped that most of the sting of Taylor had been taken out of him by the Hon’ble Member in charge of the Bill, and by the Committee, in the course of their manipulations of the Bill. His Honour was also in one respect glad to observe that the Bill had been reconsidered, and that the result of that consideration was that it had come out of the hands of the Select Committee very much reduced in point of the metaphysics which were somewhat conspicuous in the first draft. That being so, and the Act being, as the Hon’ble Member had explained, made large and wide, and constructed in such a manner as, by many meshes, to bring into its scope almost every possible fact, he might say that he looked upon the passing of this Bill as hopefully as he would look upon the passing of any law of evidence; that he hoped for the best, and should look to the great wideness of its provisions as a means of enabling the Courts to make the best of the law. For himself, in that view, he accepted it and thanked the Hon’ble Member for it.

The Hon’ble Mr. Strachey expressed, in a few words, his feeling, in which he was sure the Council would agree, that India owed to his hon’ble and learned friend a great debt of gratitude for this Bill, which was now about to be passed. Mr. Strachey was confident that his hon'ble and learned friend had by this Bill conferred upon the country an important benefit, of which they would see the result hereafter in a really great improvement in the administration of justice in India.
APPENDIX AA.

The Council had to thank Mr. Stephen for a very great deal of admirable work; and Mr. Strachey was sure that his name would long be remembered in India through this work in particular, which was now about to be completed.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council adjourned to Tuesday, the 19th March 1872.

H. S. CUNNINGHAM,

Offg. Secy. to the Council of the Govr.-Genl.

for making Laws and Regulations.

CALCUTTA;

The 12th March 1872.

---

The Council met at Simla on Thursday, the 16th August 1872.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble Sir John Strachey, K.C.S.I., presiding.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.B., G.C.S.I.

The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I. | The Hon'ble Arthur Hobhouse, Q.C.

The Hon'ble R. E. Egerton.

---

EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. Hobhouse moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. He said that the object of this Bill was to amend some defects to which attention had been called by the Legislative Department, and which were owing to a very common incident attending the passing of new Acts, namely, the total repeal of prior Acts of which it was intended to re-enact large portions, and the omission of some of those portions from the new Act. He would only mention in detail the most important point. This related to the power of administering an oath. Act I of 1872 repealed the whole of Act XV of 1852. One of the sections of the Act of 1852 contained the authority on which most of the High Courts in India and Commissioners, Arbitrators, and other persons acting in suits depending before them, administered oaths to witnesses. By an accident the section had not been re-enacted. Mr. Hobhouse had no such knowledge of the Indian Statute-book as would enable him to say of his own authority that such a power to administer oaths did not somewhere exist. But the Secretary had assured him that he could not find any such, so far at least as regarded Commissioners, and Arbitrators, and Mr. Hobhouse thought that the Council might rely on this assurance. If such a power of administering oaths to witnesses was suspended for a single day, it might cause great disturbance of the course of justice. And even if doubt hung over such a point, it might be very embarrassing.

The opportunity had been taken to make corrections of few other errors, being clerical, or typographical, or mere slips in drafting, but he would not now enlarge upon them, as the Bill, he hoped, would be published with a full statement of Objects and Reasons, and would, he trusted, be referred to a Select Committee.

The Hon'ble Mr. Hobhouse then applied to the President to suspend the Rules for the Conduct of Business.
The President declared the rules suspended.

The Hon’ble Mr. Hobhouse then introduced the Bill, and moved that it be referred to Select Committee with instructions to report in a week.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The following Select Committee was named: On the Bill to amend the Indian Evidence Act, 1872—The Hon’ble Sir John Strachey, the Hon’ble Mears, Bayley and Egerton and the Mover.

The Council then adjourned till the 29th August 1872.

WHITLEY STOKES,
Secretary to the Government of India.

The 15th August 1872.

The Council met at Simla on Thursday, the 29th August 1872.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, G.M.A.I., presiding.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.B., G.C.S.I.

The Hon’ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I. The Hon’ble Arthur Hobhouse, Q.C.

The Hon’ble R. E. Egerton.

INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon’ble Mr. Hobhouse also presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. He said that in considering the Bill the Committee had proceeded on the principle that under the circumstances it was no part of their duty to alter any part of the Act on the score of principle, but only to effect such alterations as they believed the draftsman would have made, if his attention had been called to them.

The principal reason for passing the present Bill into law before the 1st September was this—Act I of 1872 repealed in toto a prior Act, XV of 1852; and one of the sections of that Act was as follows:

"XII—A Her Majesty's Courts within the British territories under the Government of the East India Company, and every Judge and Justice of such Courts, and every officer, Commissioner, Arbitrator or other person now or hereafter having, by law or consent of parties, authority to hear, receive and examine evidence, with respect to or concerning any suit, action, or other proceeding in any of such Courts, is hereby empowered to administer an oath to all such witnesses as are legally called before them respectively."

"Now, that was a positive enactment, in the clearest possible terms, purporting to confer upon certain tribunals and officers power to administer oaths. Prima facie, if that power were removed from the Statute-book, and nothing put in its place, it would cease to exist. The question then was, whether the power could be derived from any other quarter. For the purpose of determining this question, it had been necessary to read five Acts of Parliament and ten Charters, and to read some of these documents very carefully, since they were framed on the most perplexing of all principles, the principles of declaring void all previous inconsistent provisions. So that you had to read through the whole document to see what was and what was not inconsistent. The result was, as well as he (Mr. Hobhouse) could make out, that the power of administering an oath would remain with the High Courts, but would not remain with the Commissioners and Arbitrators therein mentioned. It was, therefore, important to leave upon the Statute-book as clear and extensive an authority as that which was taken out of it; and the simplest way of doing that in the present emergency was by continuing the existence of that section. When the time came for dealing with that matter finally, the proper place for it would be found in an Act relating to the subject of oaths and affirmations, rather than in one relating to the general subject of evidence.

Mr. Hobhouse thought it right to mention to the Council that he had received a telegram from Mr. H. S. Cunningham, desiring that the passing of the present Bill might be postponed, until some further communication was received from him. Mr. Cunningham intimated that he did not think it necessary to continue the section just discussed, and that there were other defects in the Bill. Mr. Hobhouse thought it right that the Council should decide for themselves in this matter after hearing the reasons for passing the present Bill. Unquestionably the assistance of the gentleman who had had a great share in preparing the Act, would be most valuable in any amendment of it. He probably understood the Act far better than any of the Council, and was aware of many things to which attention had not been called. Mr. Hobhouse most sincerely regretted that in his judgment, pressure of time prevented their receiving Mr. Cunningham's assistance. He (Mr. Hobhouse) had previously shewn the kind of embarrassment which might arise from the present condition of things. He would now try and explain the degree of it. Previously to this year, the incapacity to administer an oath would have vitiated many legal proceedings. But in the present year, an Act (No VI of 1872) was passed, which had two objects—one was to respect and bind the conscience of witnesses, and the other, to prevent the entire vitiation of legal proceedings by omissions and irregularities in the administration of oaths. The first object had nothing to do with the present question. An oath was an oath, whatever might be the form of it; and the person who administered it must be duly qualified to do so. The second object was important, because it diminished the mischief which might arise from the incapacity of the Judge to administer an oath. But it did not prevent the administration of an oath by such incapable person from being an irregularity. Nor was it easy to say how a judge, upon being pressed with such irregularity, would deal with the case. Certainly, many a Commissioner and Arbitrator would say, "Inasmuch as no objection is made by the witness, and as an oath is the regular form of proceeding, and as I have, by express legislation, been made incapable to administer one, I decline to go on with the case." Besides this, the Act in question did not affix the penalties of perjury to the giving of false testimony under such circumstances. On this point, sections 178 and 171 of the Penal Code shewed the importance attached to the legal administration of an oath by duly authorized persons.

For the foregoing reasons, Mr. Hobhouse could not help thinking that we should be running some appreciable risk of disturbance of judicial proceedings if we did not pass this Bill into law by the 1st September, on which day Act I of 1872 was to come into force, whereas no possible injury would be done by continuing the section in question the only suggestion against it being that it was useless.

With regard to the other amendments, he would not remark upon them in detail. They would all speak for themselves, and were intended to cover obvious defects and slips either of writing, or of printing, or of drafting. We had now received several criticisms on Act I of 1872, and there was little doubt that, after it had been tested in actual practice, it would like most laws of great magnitude and difficulty, and especially those passed on subjects new to legislation, require amendment in several particulars. Probably, in the course of a couple of years, it would be necessary to pass another amending Act, and the suggestions of Mr. Cunningham would be most valuable for that purpose. Mr. Hobhouse, therefore, thought proper that the better plan would be, not to have any further delay at present, but to keep a careful record of all suggestions sent in and to use them when the time was ripe.

He also applied to His Excellency the President to suspend the Rules for the Conduct of Business.

The President said that, in his opinion, Mr. Hobhouse had shewn sufficient cause for suspending the Rules in the present case. His Excellency accordingly declared the Rules suspended.

The Hon'ble Mr. Hobhouse then moved that the report be taken into consideration.
The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Hobhouse then moved that the Bill be passed.
The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned till the 5th September 1872.

WHITLEY STOKES,
Secretary to the Government of India.

SIMLA,
The 28th August 1872.
APPENDIX.

B.

STAMPS.(1)

Certain documents are required to be stamped: (2) and rules exist as to the admission in evidence of such in both the Civil and Criminal Courts. No instrument(3) chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose by any person having by law or consent of parties, authority to receive evidence, or shall be noted upon, registered or authenticated by any such person or by any public officer, unless such instrument is duly stamped:

Provided that

(1) Any such instrument, not being an instrument chargeable with a duty of one anna only, or a bill of exchange or promissory note(4) shall subject to all just exceptions, be admitted in evidence on payment of the duty with which the same is chargeable, or (in the case of an instrument insufficiently stamped) of the amount required to make up such duty, together with a penalty of five rupees, or, when ten times the amount of the proper duty or deficient portion thereof exceeds five rupees, of a sum equal to ten times such duty or portion;

(2) Where any person from whom a stamped receipt could have been demanded, has given an unstamped receipt and such receipt is stamped, would be admissible in evidence against him, then such receipt shall be admitted in evidence against him on payment of a penalty of one rupee by the person tendering it;

(3) Where a contract or agreement of any kind is effected by correspondence consisting of two or more letters, and any one of the letters bears the proper stamp, the contract or agreement shall be deemed to be duly stamped;

(4) Nothing herein contained shall prevent the admission of any instrument in evidence in any proceeding in a Criminal Court other than a proceeding under Chapter XII, or Chapter XXXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898;

(5) Nothing herein contained shall prevent the admission of any instrument in any Court when such instrument has been executed by, or on behalf of Government or where it bears the certificate of the Collector as provided by section 32 or any other provision of this Act;

When an instrument has been admitted in evidence, such admission shall not, except as provided in section 61, be called in question at any stage of the same suit or proceeding, on the ground that the instrument has not been duly stamped.(6) So where a document has been admitted in evidence though contrary to law, by a lower Court, no objection can be taken to the decree in appeal upon that account.(7) In this respect there is no difference between the cases where a document has been stamped, but has not been duly stamped, or those in which it has not been stamped at all, or between cases in which the document is

(1) This appendix does not purport to be a complete résumé either of the Stamp Act or the cases decided thereunder, but deals only with those provisions of and cases decided under the Act which have an immediate bearing on the law of evidence.

(2) See Act II of 1899; and the previous Act I of 1879 (General Stamp Act).

(3) As to the meaning of this term, see Joharmal v. Tejram Jagrup, 17 B., 235, 240, 256 (1892); a. 2 (14), Act II, 1899.

(4) But as to promissory notes executed out of British India, see Mahomed Rowthan v. Husain Rowthan, 22 M., 337 (1899).

(5) Act II of 1899, s. 35.

(6) Ib., s. 36.

(7) Ramaesam Chetti v. Ramasam Chetti, 5 M., 220 (1882); Devarchand v. Hirachand Kamawaj, 13 B., 449 (1899); Joharmal v. Tejram Jagrup, 17 B., 235, 236, 240 (1892); Skidrapa v. IruJa, 18 B., 737 (1903); see also following cases to the same effect under the former acts: Khoob Lai v. Junglee Singh, 3 C, 797 (1878); Lalji Singh v. Syed Abran Ser, 3 B. L. R., 236 A. C. J. (1899); Amlal un-nisat v. Tej Ban, 1 A., 726 (1885), and Editor's Note on that page where the cases are collected Girdhar Nagjihesht v. Gujpat Moroba, 11 Bom. H. C. R., 129, 131 (1874); Mark Ridded v. Multaram Chetty, 3 B. L. R., 126, A. C. J. (1899). But see Tai Tai Abom v. Bajaw Gura, 3 B.L.R. App., 30 (1899); and Field, Ev., 673, 674.
one which is, or is not, admissible on payment of a penalty. So where a letter of allotment which required a one-anna stamp but which was not stamped was admitted in evidence, it was held that no objection to the admissibility of the document could be taken in appeal. (1) Moreover, the objection is one which does not affect the merits of the decision. The effect of these rulings is (a) the improper rejection of a document is a good ground for appeal, if the duty and penalty have been tendered; (2) (b) the improper admission of a document cannot be called in question in appeal; (c) the improper levy of a penalty or stamp-duty cannot be remedied in appeal; the only remedy lies under section 39 or 45. Any omission in levying duty or penalty in case (b) may be notified under section 61. (3)

The Stamp Act is a taxing Act, and all taxing Acts must be construed strictly; (4) and an authority on the Stamp law is not an authority on the Registration law. (5) The present Stamp Act in India ought to be construed according to the same principles of construction as the Stamp Act in England and the earlier Stamp Acts in this country. (6)

It was held under the Stamp Act of 1869 that when a document which under the stamp laws requires to be stamped is tendered in evidence, the only question for the Court is whether it bears a proper stamp at the time when it is tendered. The Court is not bound, nor is it at liberty to allow the parties to go into evidence to show at what time the document was stamped. For if that were permitted, as much time and cost might be expended in trying that question, as in trying the whole case upon its merits. (7) But in the aforementioned case, (8) during the examination of the plaintiff, a book was produced containing a receipt with a one-anna receipt stamp attached. Plaintiff's counsel having proved the receipt tendered it in evidence. Counsel for the defendant desired to cross-examine the plaintiff as to the date when the stamp was affixed. The earlier cases were cited, and it was objected that upon these cases such questions were irrelevant, but it was held that the cases cited were decisions under the Stamp Act of 1869; that the wording of the present Act was different; that it was the duty of the Court to ascertain whether or not the instrument was stamped before or at the time of execution and that the questions were allowable. The witness was then examined on the subject; and, on the evidence the Court, finding that the document had not been stamped at or before the time of execution, refused to admit it in evidence. (9)

The term "stamped" in s. 17 of the stamp Act (II of 1899) means stamped not only with a stamp of the amount required by law but also in the manner prescribed by law. The expression "duly stamped" in s. 35 of the same Act refers to the time when the document is tendered in evidence. In determining whether a document is sufficiently stamped

(1) Mohun Lall v. Cotton Mills Company, 4 C. W. N. 369 (1899) following Surjo Narain v. Protob Narain, 26 C., 955, 959 (1899). The decision appealed from in so far as it held that the letter of allotment was admissible to establish notice of the allotment, notwithstanding the words of the Act "No instrument: ...... shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose" is, it is respectfully submitted, erroneous. The decision in In re Whitley Partners, 49 L. J. Ch., 176 (1879) under the English statute was, if applicable, at all obiter.

(2) See Civ. Pr Code, s. 578, and cases cited in last note; as to the Appellate Court's authority to direct the reception of an unstamped document, see Champatay v. Bibs Jibnu, 2 C., 213 (1878).

(3) Donough's Indian Stamp Law, 2nd Ed., 117 (1899).

(6) Ramen Chetty v. Mahomed Ghose, 16 C., 432, 435 (1889).

(8) Jethbhai v. Ramchandra Narottam, 13 B., 484 (1889).

(9) Ib., but see Ramen Chetty v. Mahomed Ghose, 16 C., 432 (1889), post, as to the exclusion of evidence of collateral circumstances. The words on the present Act and in Act I of 1879 "unless such instrument is duly stamped" were substituted for "unless such instrument bears a stamp" in Act XVIII of 1899, under which it was held that it was no business of the Court to enquire at what time the stamp was affixed, provided the stamp was affixed, provided the instrument bore the proper stamp. But now the words "duly stamped" [s. 2 (11)] would not only mean bearing a stamp of not less than the proper value but also stamped at the right time (ss. 17, 18, 19), in the proper manner (ss. 13, 14) with the requisite description of stamp (ss. 10, 11) in accordance with the Stamp Rules and duly cancelled (ss. 12, 13). Donough, op. cit. 209.
for the purpose of deciding upon its admissibility in evidence, the document itself as it stands and not any collateral circumstances which may be shown in evidence, must be looked at. So where a cheque bearing a stamp of one-anna was dated the 25th September, and the evidence showed it to have been actually drawn on the 8th September and therefore to have been post-dated, and it was contended that the cheque was really a bill of exchange, payable 17 days after date, and therefore inadmissible in evidence as being insufficiently stamped; it was held in a suit to recover the amount of the cheque, on its being dishonoured, that it was admissible in evidence. (1) If at the time of delivery, which completes its legal character a document was stamped, and if the cancellation take place at that time as part of the same transaction it is sufficient. A deed is duly stamped if the stamp is affixed and cancelled at the time of execution. or if having been at any time previously affixed, it is cancelled at the time of execution. When applied to a document the term ' execution means the last act or series of acts which completes it. It might be defined as formal completion. The contract on a negotiable instrument until delivery is incomplete and revocable. Until delivery a hundis is not clothed with the essential characteristics of a negotiable instrument. (2) So where a hundis was written by the defendant and stamped by him with a one-anna stamp which was left uncancelled, and the hundis was subsequently taken by him to the plaintiff's son who received it from him, and at the time of receiving it cancelled the stamp by writing the date across it; it was held that the hundis was duly stamped and was admissible in evidence. (3)

Secondary evidence is inadmissible when the original document cannot be received in evidence because it is not duly stamped. (4) The Stamp Act declares not only that a document not duly stamped shall not be admitted in evidence but also that it shall not be acted upon. Therefore an admission of the contents of such a document rendering it unnecessary for the party to put in evidence does not avail the party, the document being itself inadmissible in evidence from want of a stamp. A document is 'acted upon' (within the meaning of the Stamp Act) where a decree is passed on it, whether proved or admitted, and owing to the language of the Act the Court cannot give effect to it. In either case, (5) it has been held that though an unstamped acknowledgment cannot be 'acted upon' as an acknowledgment of a particular sum being due, still it may be used for the collateral purpose of showing an acknowledgment of an existing liability. (6) But in a subsequent case it was pointed out that the words 'for any purpose' exclude even a collateral purpose, and that an acknowledgment of a debt coming under Article 1, Schedule i of the Stamp Act cannot, if unstamped, be given in evidence for any purpose including the purpose of saving limitation. (7) The mere fact of a document being an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act would not make it liable to a stamp-duty under Schedule 1, Article 1. There are other conditions required to be fulfilled, one of which being that it should be intended to supply evidence of a debt. (8) Though secondary evidence may be inadmissible, yet where the cause of action exists independently of the unstamped document, independent evidence of the original consideration may be given. (9) When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold, or for money lent, or for any other claim and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he has not endorsed or lost or parted with the bill or note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person. In such cases the bill or note is said to be taken by the creditor on account of the debt, and if it is not paid at maturity, the creditor may disregard the bill or note and sue for the original consideration. (1) But when the original cause of action is the bill or note itself, and does not exist independently of it, as for instance when, in consideration of $A$ depositing money with $B$, $B$ contracts by a promissory note to repay it with interest at six months' date, here there is no cause of action for money lent, or otherwise than upon the note itself, because the deposit is made upon the terms contained in the note, and no other. In such a case the note is the only contract between the parties, and if for want of a proper stamp or some other reason the note is not admissible in evidence the creditor must lose his money. (2) There is no doubt as to the principle of these authorities. The difficulty often is to ascertain as a matter of fact, to which class any particular case belongs. (3) Secondary evidence tendered to prove the contents of an instrument which is retained by the opposite party after notice to produce it, can only be admitted in the absence of evidence to show that it was unstamped when last seen. (4) Payment of penalty will not render oral evidence of a lost or destroyed un-stamped document admissible, for payment of penalty is leviable only on an unstamped or insufficiently stamped document actually produced in Court under the Stamp law, and it does not provide for the levying of any such on lost documents. (5)

(1) Ramen Chetty v. Mahomed Ohooeh, 16 C., 432 (1889); [referring to Bull v. O'Sullivan, L. R., 6 Q. B., 299; Gatty v. Fry, L. R., 2 Ex., 265; Chandra Kanti v. Kartick Chunder, 5 B. L. R., 103 ]; Surji Mul v. Hudson, 24 M., 259, 261 (1900); Sakharam Shankar v. Ram Chandra, 27 B., 279 (1902); Motilal v. Jagmohundas, 6 Bom. L. R., 699, 701 (1904).

(2) Bhawani Hari v. Debi Punja, 19 B., 635 (1894), as to the meaning of ' stamped at the time of execution,' see Surji Mul v. Hudson, 24 M., 259 (1900).

(3) Ib.

(1) "See James v. Williams, 13 M. & W., 828, and other cases mentioned in Addison on Contracts, 3rd Ed., p. 1204; the cases of Clay v. Crown, 8 Exch., 296; Wain v. Bailey, 10 A. & E., 616, were of this nature;" per Garth, C. J., Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan, 7 C., 266, 260, post; other cases are Krishnasami Pillai v. Kangasami Chetti, 7 M., 112, 114 (1883); Ballabhador Pownad v. Maharajah of Bettia, 9 A., 351 (1887); Hira Lal v. Datadin, 4 A., 135 (1881); and see Benarsi Das v. Bhikhari Das, 3 A., 717 (1881). When there is an independent admission of a loan the holder of a hundi, bill, or note, which is defective and inadmissible in evidence for want of a stamp, may still sue upon the consideration the person to whom he gave it, though he cannot use the bill in support of his suit, Krishnasami v. Rajmal, 24 B., 360 (1899).

(2) "Of this nature where the cases: Amuk Chunder v. Madhub Chunder, 21 W. R., 1; Promon Nath v. Triporna Sondwure, 24 W. R., 88; the case decided by Kesnedy, J. [Golap Chand v. Thakurani Mohkoom, 3 C., 314 (1878); 2 C. L. R., 412] apparently belongs to the former class; and in Furr v. Price, 1 East, 55, all that Lord Kenyon ruled was, that if, on the new trial, the plaintiff could prove his claim under the common counts that is to say, independently of the note, he might recover." Per Garth, C. J., in Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan, supra at p. 260. And see Sirdar Kuar v. Chandrasami, 4 A., 330 (1882); Vallahappa Ravikan v. Mahomed Khasim 5 M., 166 (1881). The facts are very shortly stated in the report of Golap Chand v. Thakurani Mohkoom supra; but it seems difficult to distinguish it from later rulings to an apparently contrary effect; and see Mothooran Mohan v. Peer Mohan, 2 C. L. R., 409 (1878); 4 C. 259.

(3) Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan, 7 C., 266, 269 (1881); 8 C. L. R., 533; one test is on whom does the onus lie; ib., 260; and see Raddhakuri Shaka v. Abhaychurn Millar, 8 C., 721, 723, 724 (1882); Pothi Reddi v. Velayussevrian, 10 M., 94 (1886); Krishnasami Pillai v. Kangasami Chetti, 7 M., 112, 114 (1883) Damodar Jagannath v. Atmaram Babaji, 12 B., 443, 446 (1888); Chenbasaup v. Lakeman, 18 B., 369, 372 (1893).

(4) Sennancan v. Kollakiron, 2 M., 208 (1880); Kopasan v. Shamu, 7 M., 440 (1884).

(5) Raja of Bobbili v. Mugasari Chinna, 23 M., 49 (1899); s. c., 4 C. W. N., 117; Kopasan v. Shamu, 7 M. 440 (1884); Ranga Rau v. Bhawugami, 17 M., 437 (1894) see under the old Act, Haran Chunder v. Russick Chunder, 20 W. R., 63 (1873).
APPENDIX.

C.

REGISTRATION(1).

The Indian Registration Act (III of 1877) declares the registration of certain documents to be compulsory such as instruments of gift of immovable property; certain other non-testamentary instruments dealing with immovable property; leases of immovable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent; and authorities to adopt a son not conferred by will.(3) It further declares that no document which is required to be registered shall affect any immovable property comprised therein or confer any power to adopt, or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property(4) or conferring such power unless it has been registered in accordance with the provisions of this Act.(5) The words "or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property," mean "or be received as evidence of any transaction so far as it affects such property."(6) An unregistered document the registration of which is compulsory, is admissible in evidence for a collateral purpose. So an unregistered bond, containing a personal undertaking to repay money borrowed, and also a hypothecation of land above Rs. 100 in value as security may be used in evidence to enforce the personal obligation.(7) And an unregistered document, the registration of which is compulsory, may be admissible in evidence for a collateral purpose, e.g., to prove admission of liability on part of the executant sufficient to prevent a claim from being barred by the Limitation Act.(8) The effect of the abovementioned words therefore is that documents, the registration of which is compulsory although inadmissible, unless registered, as evidence of any transaction affecting immovable property or conferring a power to adopt will yet be admissible for other purposes.(9) By the terms of section 3, Act III of 1885, sections 64 (paragraphs 2 and 3), 69, 107 and 123 of the Transfer of property Act (IV of 1882) are to be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act. The Transfer of Property Act requires the registration of certain sales; (10) mortgages; (11) leases; (12) gifts.(13) Further, a transfer of property in completion of an exchange can be made only in manner provided for the transfer of such property by sale.(14) The effect of the combined Acts is that the registration of deeds of sale or of mortgage of immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, of leases year by year or for a term exceeding a year and of deeds of gift of immovable property of any value, is compulsory. Deeds of sale or mortgage of immovable property of less than Rs. 100 in value, and deeds of gift of immovable property, must also be registered. unless there is delivery of possession, when the transfer is effected without a deed. In the case of a simple mortgage, there can be no delivery of possession; so all

---

(1) This Appendix does not purport to be a complete resume either of the Registration Act or of the cases decided thereunder but deals only with those provisions of, and cases decided under the Act which have an immediate bearing in the law of evidence.

(2) As to the meaning of the term "instrument," see Somu Gurukkal v. Rangammal, 7 Mad. H. C. R., 13 (1871).

(3) Act III of 1877, s. 17; the registration of certain other documents is optional; ib., s. 18.

(4) It may, however, be used in evidence in support of a claim for movable property; Thanda- van v. Vattiamma, 15 M., 386 (1892); but see also Lakshamma v. Kamalvaru, 12 M., 281 (1889).

(5) Act III of 1877, s. 49.

(6) Ujjaini v. Hossein Khan, 9 C., 520, 525, F. B., (1882); 12 C. L. R., 209; and see Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertich, 10 C., 315, 322 (1883); Thandan v. Vattiamma, 15 M., 336, 340 (1892).

(7) Ujjaini v. Hossein Khan, supra; see cases there collected and in Field, Ev., 451—453; see last note and Gomaji v. Subbarayar, 15 M., 283 (1891); Madras Puducherry Society v. Commanais Ammal, 18 M., 29 (1894). So also though an agreement may not be admissible in evidence as creating an interest in land, still it may be used for the purpose of obtaining specific performance; Adakalam v. Theekhan, 12 M., 506 (1888); Nagappa v. Derra, 14 M., 55 (1890). See Anilaj v. Dalvaj, 19 B., 36 (1892).

(10) Act IV of 1882, s. 54, §§ 2, 3.

(11) ib., s. 89.

(12) ib. s. 107.

(13) ib., s. 123.

(14) ib., s. 118.
such deeds must be registered. (1) It has been held that it was not necessary that a deed of compromise of a suit should be registered in order to make it admissible in evidence. (2)

Documents which require registration under the compulsory provisions of the Registration Act are (except for collateral purposes) inadmissible in evidence when not registered. (3) Documents which do not require registration under those provisions are admissible in evidence, for all purposes even though not registered. (4) Section 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) should not be construed as requiring a document to be registered which would not have required registration when it was executed. So an instrument which did not require registration under Act XX of 1866 is not inadmissible in evidence by reason of Act III of 1877. (5) As an unregistered document which requires registration is inadmissible as evidence of any transaction affecting immovable property or conferring a power to adopt, (6) oral or other secondary evidence of the transaction embodied in the document will be excluded by sections 91 and 65 of this Act. The result is that transaction committed to writing if not registered, when registration is necessary, are incapable of proof and wholly inoperative, as indeed was held to be the result of the Registration Act even before the present Act came into operation. (7) "Where a party comes into Court resting his claim on a written title which the law requires to be registered, he cannot when he has failed to register, and is, in consequence, unable to use his title-deed, turn around and say I can prove my title by secondary evidence. It would be useless to have a compulsory Registration Act if such a course were open to suitors." (8) Where the instrument inadmissible for want of registration was a receipt, oral evidence of the payment was admitted on the principle embodied in illustration (e) to section 91, ante. (9) Secondary evidence may be admissible in the case of a document which is unregistered through no fault of the plaintiff. (10) In the amentioned case the defendant's title-deed was inadmissible in evidence as it was not registered; but it was held that though the defendant could not prove a title by purchase, it was open to him to establish his title without the aid of the deed of sale; that his possession of the premises in question for more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit was adverse to the predecessors of the plaintiff whose claim as assignee of his interests, was consequently barred. (11) Where the defendants purchased land from the plaintiff, and gave bonds for the purchase-money and these bonds were not registered and were, therefore, not admissible in evidence; it was held that the plaintiff, as vendor, was under no necessity to rely on the bonds in order to establish a charge on the property sold in respect of the unpaid purchase-money. (12) If a contract of lease is, for want of registration, ineffectual, the landlord is not debarred from giving other evidence of a tenancy and requiring the Court to adjudicate on his right to eject. (13)

When the fact is admitted to prove which it would be necessary to use in evidence a document which has not been registered, although registration thereof is by law compulsory, the non-registration cannot affect the decision of the case. The question of registra-

(1) Field, Ev., 446, 447.
(2) Gupta Narain v. Biboya Sundari, 2 C. W. N., 683 (1871).
(3) Act III of 1877, s. 49; v. ante; and as to documents which have been held to require registration, s. s cases collected in Field, Ev., 447, 448; Gurunath Shrinivas v. Chenbassapa, 18 B., 745 (1893).
(4) S. v. cases collected in Field, Ev., 448, 449.
(6) Act III of 1877, s. 49.
(9) Soorjo Coomar v. Bhugun Chunder, 24 W. R., 328 (1875); Dulip Singh v. Durga Prasad, 1 A., 412 (1877); Waman Ramachandra v. Dhondiba Kri-hurji, 4 B., 126 (1879); Venkoyar v. Venkatauboyar, 3 M., 53 (1881).
(11) Samborshone Karandass v. Shivalalasada Sadasividassas, 4 B., 89 (1879).
(13) Venkatosfiri v. Ragham, 9 M., 142 (1889); disapproving of dictum in Nagalai v. Raman, 7 M., 226; see Lokkhamma v. Kemanara, 13 M., 251, 264 (1890).
A document becomes material only when it is sought to use the document in evidence. (1) So where the existence of the agreement was not disputed and its production was not necessary, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to whatever relief the effect of the plain and written statement taken together would entitle him on the admission of the defendant. (2) It has, however, been said to be doubtful whether, if the document itself is tendered in evidence, any admission of its execution could make up for the want of registration; that there is a difference between admitting the document to prove which the document is sought to be used and admitting the document itself when offered as evidence and rejected for want of registration. Where, in consequence of the admission, it becomes unnecessary to use the document at all, the fact of non-registration may be immaterial; but the case is different when the existence of the document is disclosed and the document itself produced. (3) Where a sub-registrar in disregard of the provisions of section 36 of the Registration Act registered a document as against a person denying execution thereof, it was held that his action ultra vires and without jurisdiction and that the document could not be admitted in evidence as against the party denying execution. (4) The provisions of the Registration Act will not be permitted to be used to subserve fraud. (5)

An agreement made without consideration on account of natural love and affection between parties standing in a near relation to each other is void unless it is expressed in writing and registered. (6)

(3) Field, Ev., 453, 454.
(5) See cases cited, ib., 459; and see generally as to the Registration Act and cases thereunder; Field, Ev., 443—459; Rivaz, Indian Registration Act.
(6) Act IX of 1872 (Contract), s. 25, cl. (1).
APPENDIX

D.

INDIAN OATHS ACT.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate the law relating to judicial oaths, affirmations and declarations, and to repeal the law relating to official oaths, affirmations and declarations; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

I. Preliminary.

1. This Act may be called "The Indian Oaths Act, 1873."

It extends to the whole of British India,(1) and, so far as regards subjects of Her Majesty, to the territories of Native Princes and States in alliance with Her Majesty;

[Commencement.] Repealed by Act XII of 1876.

2. [Repeal of enactments.] Repealed by Act XII of 1873.

3. Nothing herein contained applies to proceedings before Courts-Martial, or to oaths, affirmations or declarations prescribed by any law which, under the provisions of the Indian Councils Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict., c. 97) the Governor-General in Council has not power to repeal.

II.—Authority to administer Oaths and Affirmations.

4. The following Courts and persons are authorized to administer, by themselves or by an officer empowered by them in this behalf, oaths and affirmations in discharge of the duties or in exercise of the powers imposed or conferred upon them respectively by law:—

(a) all Courts and persons having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence;(2)

(b) the Commanding Officer of any military station occupied by troops in the service of Her Majesty:

Provided—

(1) that the oath or affirmation be administered within the limits of the station, and

(2) that the oath or affirmation be such as a Justice of the Peace is competent to administer in British India.

III.—Persons by whom Oaths or Affirmations must be made.

5. Oaths and affirmations shall be made by the following persons:—

(a) all witnesses, that is to say, all persons who may lawfully be examined, or give or be required to give, evidence by or before any Court or person having

---

(1) Act X of 1873 has been declared in force in the Southal Parganas by Reg. III of 1872, s. 3, as amended by Reg. III of 1896, s. 3; the Arakan Hill District by Reg. IX of 1874, s. 3; Upper Burma generally (except the Shan States) by Act XIII of 1896, s. 4; British Baluchistan by Reg. I of 1896, s. 3; Angul and the Khondmals (with an exception) by Reg. I of 1894, s. 3. It has further been declared by notification under the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), to be in force in the following Scheduled Districts, namely:—The Districts of Hazaribagh, Lohardaga and Manbhum, and Pargana Dhaibhum and the Kolhan in the district of Singbum. See Gazette of India, 1881, Pt. I, p. 504. The North-Western Provinces Tarai: see Gazette of India, 1876, Pt. I, p. 505. It has been extended, under the same Act, to the Scheduled District of Coorg—See Gazette of India, 1876, Pt. I, p. 417. As to oaths taken in commissions executed in foreign territory, see Kanambini Dassi v. Kumudini Dassi, 30 C., 934 (1903) and Appendix.

(2) R. v. Aloku Kone, 16 M., 421 (1892); R. v. Chini Ram, 8 A., 103 (1881) and cases in next note.
APPENDIX D.

by law or consent of parties authority to examine such persons or to receive evidence; (1)
(b) interpreters of questions put to, and evidence given by, witness; and
(c) jurors.

Nothing herein contained shall render it lawful to administer, in a criminal proceeding an oath or affirmation to the accused person, (2) or necessary to administer to the official interpreter of any Court, after he has entered on the execution of the duties of his office, an oath or affirmation that he will faithfully discharge those duties. (3)

6. Where the witness, interpreter or juror is a Hindu or Muhammadan.
or has an objection to making an oath,
he shall, instead of making an oath, make an affirmation.
In every other case the witness, interpreter or juror shall make an oath. (4)

IV.—Forms of Oaths and Affirmations.

7. All oaths and affirmations made under section 5 shall be administered according to such forms as the High Court may from time to time prescribe.

And until any such forms are prescribed by the High Court, such oaths and affirmations shall be administered according to the forms now in use.

[Explanation.—Repealed by the Lower Burma Courts Act (VI of 1900), s. 48 & Sch. II.]

8. If any party to, or witness in, any judicial proceeding (5) offers to give evidence, on oath or solemn affirmation in any form common amongst, or held binding by, persons of the race or persuasion to which he belongs, and not repugnant to justice or decency, and not purporting to affect any third person, (6) the Court, (7) may, if it thinks fit notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, tender such oath or affirmation to him. (8)

9. If any party to any judicial proceeding offers to be bound by any such oath or solemn affirmation as is mentioned in section 8, if such oath or affirmation, is made by the other party to or by any witness in, such proceeding, the Court may, if it thinks fit, ask such party or witness, or cause him to be asked, whether or not he will make the oath or affirmation:

Provided that no party or witness shall be compelled to attend personally in Court solely for the purpose of answering such question. (9)

(2) See s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code and notes to s. 118, post.
(3) In Nistariny Dasi v. Nundo Lall, 3 C. W. N., 694 (1899), the Court said it would accept a statement from counsel from his place at the bar without burdening him with an oath, but in the same case in appeal [4 C. W. N., 169; 27 C., 428 (1900)] the Court said that though it had been the practice in Courts in England to accept the statements of counsel, it entertained great doubt whether, if that course be objected to by the opposite side, the party putting forward such statement could insist upon its being made without the sanctity of an oath.
(5) The expression "party to judicial proceeding" does not include either the complainant or the accused in a criminal case; the provisions of ss. 8—11 do not apply to criminal proceedings;
(7) As to whether arbitrators have power to proceed under this section, see Wali-ul-la v. Ghol-am Afi, 1 A., 535 (1877).
(8) Ram Narain v. Babu Singh, 18 A., 46 (1896). As to the applicability of the provisions to a case in which the parties agreed that the matters in difference between them should be decided according to the oath of a third person, see Lekhraj Singh v. Dukhmee Kuar, 4 A., 302 (1880).
(9) Where a case involves questions of law and fact the record of the Court must show what questions are to be decided in accordance with the oath; Ram Lal v. Saltanat Beg, 8 Oudh Cases 11 (1905). The consent of a guardian to an agreement under this and the following section will bind a minor, even though not sanctioned by the Court under s. 462 of the Civ. Pr. Code: Chau-pal Reddi v. Venkata Reddi, 12 M., 483 (1889); followed in Sdeo Nath v. Sukh Lall 4 C. W.
N., 327 (1899); s. c., 27 C., 229. There is nothing in ss. 9—11 which allows a party who has agreed to the administration of an oath under these sections to retract after the opponent has accepted the proposal. The Act gives the Court a discretion to administer the oath or not and though it should not administer it if good grounds be shown for retracting, it is justified in so doing, notwithstanding the retraction if the grounds are frivolous. Thopi Aman v. Subbaraya Mudali, 23 M., 234 (1899).
APPENDIX D.

0. If such party or witness agrees to make such oath or affirmation, the Court may proceed to administer it or, if it is of such a nature that it may be more conveniently made out of Court, the Court may issue a commission to any person to administer it, and authorise him to take the evidence of the person to be sworn or affirmed and return it to the Court.

11. The evidence so given shall as against the person who offered to be bound as aforesaid, be conclusive proof of the matter stated. (1)

12. If the party or witness refuses to make the oath or solemn affirmation referred to in section 8, he shall not be compelled to make it, but the Court shall record, as part of the proceedings, the nature of the oath or affirmation proposed, the facts that he was asked whether he would make it and that he refused it, together with any reason which he may assign for his refusal. (2)

V.—Miscellaneous.

13. No omission (3) to take any oath or make any affirmation, no substitution (4) of any one for any other of them, and no irregularity whatever in the form in which any one of them is administered, shall invalidate any proceeding or render inadmissible any evidence whatever, in or in respect of which such omission, substitution or irregularity took place or shall affect the obligation of a witness to state the truth. (5)

14. Every person giving evidence on any subject before any Court or person hereby authorized to administer oaths and affirmations shall be bound to state the truth on such subject. (6)

15. The Indian Penal Code, sections 178 and 181, shall be construed as if, after the word "oath," the words "or affirmation" were inserted.

16. Subject to the provisions of sections 3 and 5 no person appointed to any office shall, before entering on the execution of the duties of his office, be required to take any oath or to make or subscribe any affirmation or declaration whatever.

SCHEDULE.

[Repealed by Act XII of 1873.]

(2) A presumption adverse to the party refusing to take the oath may be raised: Isen Miah v. Kalaram Chunder, 2 C. L. R., 476 (1878).

(3) See R. v. Tarinee Churn, 21 W. R., Cr., 31 (1874); R. v. Ramsooy Chukerbity, 20 W. R., Cr., 19 (1873) (omission to swear jury.)

(5) Compare Act XLV of 1860, s. 191. For Act XLV of 1860, see the revised edition, as modified up to 1st May 1866, published by the Legislative Department. It has been held that the word "omission" in this section includes any omission such as a wilful omission, and is not limited to accidental or negligent omissions: R. v. Sesa Bhopta, 23 W. R., Cr., 12 (1874); s. c., 14 B. L. R., F. B., 294; R. v. Nuneemut Itumay, 22 W. R., Cr., 14 (1874); s. c., 14 B. L. R., 54; R. v. Shako, 16 B., 309 (1891); (In this case Parsons, J., declined to deal with the question). See, however contra, the cases of R. v. Anantoo Chuckerbutiy, 22 W. R., Cr., 1 (1874); R. v. Maru, 10 A., 287 (1888); R. v. Lal Sahay, 11 A., 183 (1888). See also R. v. Viperperumal, 16 M., 105 (1892), in which case quare whether the omission to affirm the child having been intentional the case came within the provisions of this section. And see Nundo Lal v. Nistarini Dassi, 27 C., 428, 435, 440 (1800), where the argument was characterised as at once novel and startling, s. c., 4 C. W. N., 169.

(6) See under preceding law: In re Vedamutta, 4 Mad. H. C. R., 186 (1868).
APPENDIX

E.

BANKERS' BOOKS.

As already observed the general rule is that witnesses who are competent to give evidence are compellable to do so. An important qualification of the rule is enacted by the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, the provisions of which are of frequent application and are as follows:

Act No. XVIII of 1891.

PASSED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

(Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 1st October, 1891.)

An Act to amend the Law of Evidence with respect to Bankers' Books.(1)

Whereas it is expedient to amend the Law of Evidence with respect to Bankers' Books; it is hereby enacted as follows:

1. (1) This Act may be called "The Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891."
   (2) It extends to the whole of British India; and
   (3) It shall come into force at once.

2. In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,

   (1) "company" means a company registered under any of the enactments relating to companies [for the time being in force in the United Kingdom or any of the Colonies or Dependencies thereof or] in British India, or incorporated by an Act of Parliament or of the Governor-General in Council, or by Royal Charter or Letters Patent;
   (2) "bank" and "banker" mean—
      (a) any company carrying on the business of bankers.
      (b) any partnership or individual to whose books the provisions of this Act shall have been extended as hereinafter provided:
      [(c) any post office savings bank or money-order office.(3)]
   (3) "bankers' books" include ledgers, day-books, cash-books, account-books and all other books used in the ordinary business of a bank;
   (4) "legal proceeding" means any proceeding or inquiry in which evidence is or may be given, and includes an arbitration;
   (5) "the Court" means the person or persons before whom a legal proceeding is held or taken;
   (6) "Judge" means a Judge of the High Court;
   (7) "trial" means any hearing before the Court at which evidence is taken; and
   (8) "certified copy" means a copy of any entry in the books of a bank together with a certificate written at the foot of such copy that it is a true copy of such entry, that such entry is contained in one of the ordinary books of the bank and was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that such book is still in the custody of the bank, such

(1) In the statement of Objects and Reasons of the Bill of this Act it was stated that the object of the Bill was to apply to British India the provisions of the English Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vic., c. 11.) See Harding v. Williams, L. R., 14 Ch. D., 197. The provisions of the Act were extended to books of savings bank and money-order offices of the Post Office by Act I of 1893.
(2) Amended by Act XII of 1900. Under the section as it originally stood it was held that copies of entries in the books of a Bank which did not come within the definition of a "Company" as given in sub-section (1) though certified in accordance with the form prescribed by that Act were not admissible in evidence under the provisions of the Act. R. v. McGuire, 4 C. W. N., 433 (1900). See 4 C. W. N., 300, 3xxvii, 3xxiv, 3xxxiv.
(3) Added by Act I of 1893.
certificate being dated and subscribed by the principal accountant or manager of the bank with his name and official title.

3. The Local Government may, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, extend the provisions of this Act to the books of any partnership or individual carrying on the business of bankers within the territories under its administration, and keeping a set of not less than three ordinary account books, namely, a cash-book, a day-book or journal, and a ledger, and may in like manner rescind any such notification.

4. Subject to the provisions of this Act, a certified copy of any entry in a banker’s book shall in all legal proceedings be received as prima facie evidence of the existence of such entry, and shall be admitted as evidence of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded in every case where, and to the same extent as, the original entry itself is now by law admissible, but not further or otherwise.(1)

5. No officer of a bank shall in any legal proceeding to which the bank is not a party be compelled to produce any banker’s book the contents of which can be proved under this Act, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded, unless by order of the Court or a Judge made for special cause.

6. (1) On the application of any party to a legal proceeding the Court or a Judge may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker’s book for any of the purposes of such proceeding, or may order the bank to prepare and produce, within a time to be specified in the order, certified copies of all such entries, accompanied by a further certificate that no other entries are to be found in the books of the bank relevant to the matters in issue in such proceeding, and such further certificate shall be dated and subscribed in manner hereinbefore directed in reference to certified copies.(2)

(2) An order under this or the preceding section may be made either with or without summoning the bank, and shall be served on the bank three clear days (exclusive of bank holidays) before the same is to be obeyed, unless the Court or Judge shall otherwise direct.

(3) The bank may at any time before the time limited for obedience to any such order as aforesaid either offer to produce their books at the trial or give notice of their intention to show cause against such order, and thereupon the same shall not be enforced without further order.

7. (1) The costs of any application to the Court or a Judge under or for the purposes of this Act and the costs of anything done or to be done under an order of the Court or a Judge made under or for the purposes of this Act shall be in the discretion of the Court or Judge, who may further order such costs or any part thereof to be paid to any party by the bank if they have been incurred in consequence of any fault or improper delay on the part of the bank.

(2) Any order made under this section for the payment of costs to or by a bank may be enforced as if the bank were a party to the proceeding.

(3) Any order under this section awarding costs may, on application to any Court of Civil Judicature designated in the order, be executed by such Court as if the order were a decree for money passed by itself:

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall be construed to derogate from any power which the Court or Judge making the order may possess for the enforcement of its or his directions with respect to the payment of costs.

(1) See Duanka Das v. Santi Dutta, 18 A., 94 (1895). Where before the Act a party had a right to issue a subpoena duces tecum to compel bankers to produce their books he can now obtain an order under the Act; Re Marshfield, 32 C. B., 498. This has nothing to do with the law of discovery and cannot be utilised before trial to obtain inspection which cannot be obtained by means of discovery: Parnell v. Wood, 1892, p. 137, see however, Perry v. Phosphor Bronze to 71 L. T., 854.

(2) It has been held under the English Act that though the section is not in terms confined to entries in the account of a party to the action, yet if the Court is asked for an order to inspect and take copies of the banking account of persons not connected with the litigation, it ought, if it can make such order at all, to exercise the greatest caution in doing so. Pollock v. Garth, 1898, 1 Ch., 1. See Annual Practice. Notes to s. 37, R. 7. It may do so where the banking account though nominally that of a person not a party is really that of a party or if the party is so closely connected with it that items in it would be evidence against him at the trial. But the order ought to be on notice to the person. Staffordshire Tramways Co. v. Ebbesmith (1896), 2 L. B., 669.
APPENDIX
F.
(See Section 13, p. 79, ante.)

Judgment and Decree of the Subordinate Judge of Benares referred to by the Privy Council in Bhitto Kunwar v. Kesho Parshad Misser, 24 I. A., 10 s.c., 1 C. W. N. 265 (1897).

No. 184.

Judgment of Baboo Mirtunjoy Mukerji, Subordinate Judge of Benares, dated 10th December 1887.

Surr No. 30 or 1887.

Kesho Parshad...       ..       ..       ..       ..       .. Plaintiff.

versus

Sheodial Tewari alias Bacha Tewari and Rajah Ajit Singh        .. Defendants.

The defendant Sheo Dial is the son of one Hemnath Tewari. Kaulapat Tewari, brother of Hemnath, had two sons, Debi Parshad and Bhawani Parshad, and a daughter, Mussammam Lachho Kuar. Debi Parshad, pre-deceased, Bhawani Parshad, Mussammam Rani Kuar and Mussammam Dharma Kuar were the widows of Debi Parshad. Mussammam Lachho Kuar had a daughter, named Sadha Kuar, who was married to one Bajjnath Misser, father of Ramkissen Misser. Bhawani Parshad died a bachelor.

Kesho Parshad, the plaintiff to this suit, claims to be the son of Bhoudu Misser, who is alleged to have been a brother of Bajjnath Misser.

The subject-matter in dispute in this suit is one moiety of the estate, which originally belonged to Debi Parshad and Bhawani Parshad, which devolved on the latter, by right of survivorship, on the death of the former. On the death of Bhawani Parshad, it came into the possession of the widows of Debi Parshad,—Dharma Kuar and Rani Kuar. On the death of Mussammam Dharma Kuar, the name of Ramkissen Misser was recorded in the revenue papers in place of the name of Dharma Kuar.

On the 4th January 1860, an agreement was entered into between Rani Kuar, Ramkissen Misser and Bacha Tewari whereby one moiety of the estate aforesaid was, according to the allegation of the plaintiff, declared to be the property of Ramkissen, who had been in proprietary possession of it up to the time of his death, which occurred on the 1st January 1873. On his death his widow, Mitho Kuar, got possession of it, and she had been in possession of it up to the time of her death, which happened on the 26th September, 1884.

The plaintiff claims to recover possession of it on the death of the widow of Ramkissen as his heir under the Hindu law, setting aside a deed-of-sale executed by Sheo Dial Tewari in respect of five villages forming part of the estate of Ramkissen, in favour of the other defendant.

The following is the substance of the defence made by the defendants in their written statement:—

The plaintiff is not the son of the brother of the father of Ramkissen.

He cannot also be his heir, as Ramkissen was adopted by Bhawani Tewari as his son.

The suit is barred by limitation, as Sheo Dial Tewari has been in adverse possession of the estate for more than twelve years next preceding the date of this suit.

Ramkissen Misser had been in possession of the estate as a trustee under the agreement of 1880, and the plaintiff therefore can have no right to claim it as his heir.
ISSUES.

1. What, if any, relation to the plaintiff bore to Ramkishen Misser?

2. Since when, and of which right, have the defendants been in possession of the property in dispute, and what was the nature of their possession?

3. When, if ever, had Mussammat Mitho Kuar been in possession of it, and what was the nature of her possession?

4. Of what right had Ramkishen Misser been in possession of?

5. Did Bhawani Parshad Tewari revoke the will he had made during his lifetime, and was it acted upon after his death?

6. Does limitation bar this suit?

7. Has the plaintiff a better right to the property in dispute than the defendants?

8. What sort of decree, if any, ought to be granted to the plaintiff?

JUDGMENT.

On the 6th issue the Court holds that the suit of the plaintiff is not barred by limitation as it has been brought within twelve years from the death of Mitho Kuar, widow of Ramkishen Misser, the time prescribed by Article 141 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. It is not also barred by limitation, as Mitho Kuar had been in possession of the property in dispute up to 1286 Fasli (1879), as would appear from the record-of-rights, wherein her name was all along as pattadar until the time of the recent settlement, when her name was expunged.

On the 1st issue the Court holds it proved by the evidence of the plaintiff himself, of Pahoon Misser, brother-in-law of Ramkishen, of Anandi Kuar, his sister, and of Thakura Kuar, his stepmother, that he (the plaintiff) is the son of Bhondu Misser, brother of Baljnth Misser, father of Ramkishen Misser.

On the 2nd issue the Court finds that the defendant Sheo Dial Tewari has been in possession of the estate of Bhawani Parshad jointly with Ramkishen, under the agreement of the 4th January 1850, as proprietor of one moiety of it. It is evident from the records of the litigation, 1876, that Bacha Tewari and Ramkishen Misser have been dealing with it as if it was their own property. On the 4th September 1877, Bacha Tewari mortgage a portion of the estate to Balgobind Das. This mortgage was upheld by the Hon'ble High Court, by its decision of the 10th March, 1884, which was upheld by the Full Bench on the 31st January 1885. It must be held, therefore, that the defendant Bacha Tewari has been in possession of the share of Ramkishen in the estate aforesaid since 1879, when the name of Mitho Kuar was expunged from the revenue records.

On the 3rd issue I find that Mitho Kuar had been in possession of Ramkishen's share of the estate as its proprietor till 1879 up to which time she was recorded its pattadar.

On the 4th issue the Court finds that Ramkishen Misser had been in possession of it as its proprietor by virtue of the agreement of the 4th January 1850. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the agreement which recognised the will of Bhawani Parshad, dated the 27th August 1842, constituted Ramkishen a trustee of the property for certain trusts created by the will, and in support of this contention they rely on a decision of a Division Bench of the High Court, dated the 27th February 1878, which they maintain estops the plaintiff from averring in this suit, that it was Ramkishen's own property in which he could have a personal proprietary right. This Court, after carefully considering the arguments of the learned pleaders for the defendants, and the authority quoted by them in support of their argument, is unable to come to the conclusion that that decision is a res judicata to the present suit. The suit in which the decision was passed was brought by Bacha Tewari to set aside an auction-sale of certain properties in execution of a decree obtained on certain mortgages made by Mussammat Mitho Kuar, widow of Ramkishen. It set aside the auction-sale, holding that Mitho Kuar was not competent to mortgage them. It did not directly decide the question as to whether the will of Bhawani Parshad was revoked by him during his lifetime, nor did the Court of First Instance in appeal from whose decision it was passed directly, finally pass any adjudication on that point. On the other hand, the Full Bench decision noticed above distinctly finds that the will was revoked. This decision was passed in a case in which an outsider tried to have it declared that the estate was in the possession of Bacha Tewari as a trustee under the will. This decision, in the opinion of the Court, is admissible in evidence against Bacha Tewari, although the plaintiff was not a party to it, as showing the character of the possession of Ramkishen and Bacha Tewari over the estate in respect of which the agreement of 1850 was made. The will of Bhawani Parshad, the defendant, admits in his mortgage-deed, dated the 4th September 1877, was revoked, and the Court is not prepared to rule in the teeth of this express admission that the decision of the 27th February, 1878, constitutes conclusive evidence that the will was not revoked. The copy of the will now forthcoming shows that Avadh Behari Lal was appointed executor by the will, but there is not a little of evidence in any shape whatever to show that he ever accepted his position as such executor, or made any attempt to carry out its provisions. On the other hand, the terms of the agreement seems to the Court to be utterly subversive of the provisions of the will, which makes no provision whereby Ramkishen or Bacha Tewari could have had any pretence for obtaining possession of any portion of the estate of the testator. Had the will been acted upon, they could have no right to the possession of the estate under it, and the fact that they got possession of it under the agreement constitutes almost conclusive evidence that it was never acted upon.

On the 5th issue the Court finds for the reasons given in its decision on the 4th issue that the will of Bhawani Pershad was revoked by him during his lifetime, and that, granting it for the sake of argument that it was not so revoked, it was never acted upon, and that Ramkishen and Bacha Tewari have been in proprietary possession of the estate under the agreement of 1850, adversely to the trusts, if any, created by the will.

On the 7th issue the Court holds that the plaintiff, as son of the uncle of Ramkishen, is entitled to the property in dispute in preference to the defendants, there being no evidence to show that he was adopted by Bhawani Pershad Tewari.

On the 8th issue the Court holds that the plaintiff, as heir of Ramkishen Misser, is entitled to the reliefs sought.

Order.

The suit is decreed with costs.

Dated 10th December 1887. (Sd.) MIRJUNJOY MUKERJI, Subordinate Judge.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>INDEX.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abbreviations—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abscinding—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inferences to be drawn from</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statements made at the time of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>accused : evidence taken against</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acceptor—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of bill-of-exchange : estoppel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Access—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to document raising presump-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tion of knowledge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>absence of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of sexual</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>non-evidence of parent to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>prove</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accession—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of sovereign ; judicial notice,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to office of public officer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accident—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>facts showing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof that act was or was not</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>an</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>raising presumption of negli-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>injury by : onus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence negativing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accidental—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>or intentional : determina-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tion of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accomplice—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>confession of co-accused</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>spy, informer, detective not</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>charge of jury in respect of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>competent witness</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>why untrustworthy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1093, 1094</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>corroboration of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>previous statements of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accord satisfaction —</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of: onus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Account-books—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relevant as admission</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Books of Account.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Account rendered—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when regarded as allowed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accounts—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>secondary evidence of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accused—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot be examined as witness</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>co: cross-examination by</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not calling evidence no infer-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ence against, if no prima</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>facie case</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acknowledgment—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of debt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mahomedan law</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acquiescence—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of agents</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissions inferred from</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel from</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acquittal—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>barring subsequent trial</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>mode of proving previous,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel by</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>extent of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relation of the, to English law of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>importance of sections (6.11) of the</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>38 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect of section 165 of the</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>general observation on the</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>scheme of part II of the</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>criticism on the</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act of Parliament—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>private ; presumption</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relevancy of statement in an</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial notice of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Adding to&quot;—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>terms of document</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Admiralty—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Admission—(contd.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by prosecutor ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>time when, and persons to whom, may be made ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by referee ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by strangers ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by debtor against sheriff ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by suitor in representative character ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by surveyor ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by waywarden ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by shopman ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by tenant-in-common ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by co-tenant ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by ryot ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by vakil ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by solicitor ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by counsel ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by wife ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by agent in criminal cases ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in matrimonial causes ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by zamindar ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by assignor ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>consisting of hearsay ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by director or agent of company ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dispensing with proof 128, 129, 334, 336 documents and testimony when an ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect and circumstances of ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect of ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rebuttable evidence only ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in Court ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>founded on hearsay ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>consisting of declarant’s opinion. belief ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>general rules with regard to 107—118 exception to rule of, against hearsay ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in arbitration-proceeding ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in civil cases when relevant, 145—147 inferred from conduct ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>involving erroneous conditions of law ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inferred from silence or acquiescence ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in pleadings ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>or in answer to interrogatory ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>invalid document operating as ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgment considered as ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made before arbitrator ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by parties engaged in joint tort or joint-crime ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made on condition that evidence of it is not to be given ...</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Admission—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>general rule with regard to ...</td>
<td>74Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in reference to crime ...</td>
<td>74Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acknowledgment of debt ...</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in respect of privity ...</td>
<td>133—139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by agent ...</td>
<td>120a, 123—129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by agent or director of company ...</td>
<td>125n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by bank manager ...</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by arbitrator for purpose of setting aside award ...</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by bankrupt ...</td>
<td>138, 139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of ...</td>
<td>139, 140—144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by co-defendants ...</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by conduct ...</td>
<td>45, 107, 140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>binds parties, privies and not strangers ...</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>definition of ...</td>
<td>107, 108, 118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by coparcener ...</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by joint-tenant ...</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of intestate against administrator ...</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by executor ...</td>
<td>121, 122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by administrator ...</td>
<td>121, 122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by prosecutor ...</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by guardian of ward ...</td>
<td>129, 130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by jagirdar ...</td>
<td>121</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by trustee ...</td>
<td>121, 122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by respondent ...</td>
<td>123</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by joint contractor ...</td>
<td>120, 120a, 130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by partner ...</td>
<td>120, 120a, 130, 138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by assignee of bankrupt ...</td>
<td>121</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by manager of property ...</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by manager of Hindu family ...</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by minor ...</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made to stranger ...</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to contents of documents 307, 376</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by agreement ...</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no notice ...</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by nominal party ...</td>
<td>121, 123, 133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by guardian ad litem 111—140, 132, 133, 138</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by next friend ...</td>
<td>132, 133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by officers of companies ...</td>
<td>26a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by agents ...</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by party adopting another 133, 134</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by patnidar ...</td>
<td>134a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by party interested in subject-matter ...</td>
<td>119, 130—133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by person from whom interest derived ...</td>
<td>119, 133, 138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by party to proceeding or agent ...</td>
<td>119—123</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by persons whose position must be proved as against party to suit ...</td>
<td>119, 138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Index</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Admission—(contd.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made to legal adviser</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made in soliloquy or sleep</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>for purpose of trial</td>
<td>348, 349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in deposition</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of fact or law by advocate</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made in course of judicial proceedings</td>
<td>640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made to police</td>
<td>159, 160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made with fraudulent purpose</td>
<td>188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>founded on mistake</td>
<td>189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made without prejudice</td>
<td>146, 147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matters provable by</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>may shift burden of proof</td>
<td>189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>value of</td>
<td>189a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nature and form of</td>
<td>112—114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>stamp and registration</td>
<td>112a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>none where right acquired before</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>withdrawal of</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not conclusive proof</td>
<td>114, 187—189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>may operate as estoppel, 114, 187—189</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>obtained by compulsion</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>without prejudice</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of evidence. See Evidence.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of execution dispensing with proof</td>
<td>397, 402, 537</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of fact dispensing with proof</td>
<td>348, 353</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>oral, as to contents of documents</td>
<td>115, 144, 145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of execution of document</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>party not bound by admission in point of law</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>person by whom, may be made</td>
<td>110, 111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of guilty, evidence of</td>
<td>284a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>principal and surety</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, against persons making them</td>
<td>140—144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relevant against whom</td>
<td>119</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sales in execution and for arrears of revenue</td>
<td>135—137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statements by party interested in subject-matter and from whom interest derived must be made during continuance of interest</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>use of account-book as</td>
<td>240</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>weight to be given to</td>
<td>117, 118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when conclusive</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by pleading</td>
<td>350, 351, 352</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by conduct of suit</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when may be proved by person making it</td>
<td>140—144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>which is mere inference drawn from facts</td>
<td>189a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>whole must be considered</td>
<td>115—117</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>why admitted</td>
<td>107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Admission—(contd.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relevant against whom</td>
<td>107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>with respect to unstamped or unregistered document</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>representation operating as, not estoppel</td>
<td>644</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Administration—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect of letters of: do not touch questions of title</td>
<td>276n., 277</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Administrator—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by intestate against 134, 135</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel against</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Admissibilty—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>a question for the judge, 28, 727—729</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rule in favour of</td>
<td>28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>should be decided at once</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of fact</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>question of, should be decided as they arise</td>
<td>728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proving fact to be proved to make evidence admissible</td>
<td>528</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adoption—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by party adopting</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgment declaring validity of</td>
<td>274</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion expressed by conduct on relationship by</td>
<td>317</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>invalid; acted upon; estoppel</td>
<td>659</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>549, 550</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptions as to</td>
<td>609, 610</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adultery—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>19a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of subsequent, to latest date charged in petition</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>action for, damages</td>
<td>62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ante-nuptial incontinence: evidence of</td>
<td>39a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission receivable to prove</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>decree of divorce how far conclusive</td>
<td>274a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of character</td>
<td>330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption</td>
<td>620</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adverse possession—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>558</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adverse witness—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>764a., 764, 765</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advocate—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission of fact or law by</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial notice of</td>
<td>340, 344</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>may be also witness</td>
<td>688</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affairs of State—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>privileged</td>
<td>692, 693</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affect—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of word</td>
<td>520</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affiliation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cases: corroboration</td>
<td>718</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Term</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agreement—(cont'd.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when method of, a case of method of difference</td>
<td>34 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>application of the method of</td>
<td>48 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agriculturalist—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion of</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alibi—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>defence of</td>
<td>37, 56n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alienation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>546, 553</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Almanac—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>reference to</td>
<td>344</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alteration—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document</td>
<td>443</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ambiguity—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to confining evidence to issue</td>
<td>11 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to excluding hearsay</td>
<td>12 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of the word evidence</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effects of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document cleared by acts done under it</td>
<td>451, 452</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document</td>
<td>451, 733a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>patent</td>
<td>451, 503—508, 509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>latent</td>
<td>451, 505, 510—515</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>construction of instrument: good faith</td>
<td>584</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in document: surrounding circumstanes</td>
<td>661</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American decisions—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>authority of</td>
<td>643a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ancient document—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of possession</td>
<td>70a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>alteration</td>
<td>443</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>corroboration of</td>
<td>443, 444</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>comparison of</td>
<td>404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no presumption of executants' authority</td>
<td>443, 444</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relating to right and custom</td>
<td>222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rules as to</td>
<td>441—446</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>secondary evidence of</td>
<td>386, 443</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>calculation of period 30 years</td>
<td>443</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>value of</td>
<td>443, 444</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ancient possession—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>222, 223</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Animal—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence as to propensities of</td>
<td>38, 39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>injury by: proof of scienter</td>
<td>88a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acts in conformity with nature</td>
<td>619</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appeals—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>civil and criminal</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dealing in, with admissibility</td>
<td>32</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>objection in, to admission of secondary evidence</td>
<td>379</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in criminal: onus</td>
<td>528, 529</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>civil: onus</td>
<td>528, 529</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel from varying case in</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel from instituting</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aggravation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of damages</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agreement—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>method of, and difference</td>
<td>20 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>where inconclusive</td>
<td>20 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>illustration as to method of, and difference</td>
<td>21 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>difficulties as to method of, where several causes producing same effect</td>
<td>21 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>weakness of the method of, how cured</td>
<td>21 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agmdavits—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>act not applicable to</td>
<td>6, 7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of witness not receivable against party in subsequent proceedings</td>
<td>140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission in</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence given on</td>
<td>722</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>filed and withdrawn: liability to cross-examination</td>
<td>737a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affirmation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence on: use of deposition in former trial</td>
<td>226</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>omission to administer</td>
<td>684</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affirmative burden on party stating</td>
<td>524</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>legal, not necessarily grammatical</td>
<td>525</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in substance and form</td>
<td>525</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agency—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in contract, tort and crime: similar facts admissible to prove</td>
<td>564—567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof</td>
<td>530</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinction between, and estoppel</td>
<td>647, 648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agent—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>notice to</td>
<td>98, 98a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>110, 118, 120, 123—129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>report of: admissibility against principal</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by, in criminal cases</td>
<td>127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of: onus</td>
<td>536</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>authority of</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>misrepresentation and fraud of,</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot set up fud tertii</td>
<td>681</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel against, in favour of principal</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel by, statement of</td>
<td>647, 648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of corporations</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence to show person contract ed as</td>
<td>484</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>principal and, relationship: onus</td>
<td>574, 575</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>continuance of relationship</td>
<td>574</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

Arbitration—admissions made in ..................................... 7, 8 See "Arbitrator."
no presumption against party from refusal to submit to ..................................... 147, 631

Arbitrator—act not applicable to proceedings before ..................................... 6, 7 duties of .......................................................... 7, 8 not included in term "Court" ..................................... 9 admission made before ..................................... 121 admission of, for purpose of setting aside award ..................................... 142 admission 'without prejudice, evidence given before ..................................... 226 as witness .......................................................... 689 regularity of proceedings of presumptions ..................................... 624

Argument—on the method of agreement 20, 21 Int. on the method of difference 20, 21 Int.

Army—
Articles of War for ..................................... 338, 342

Art—
meaning of .......................................................... 300 opinion on points of ..................................... 297, 301 matters: reference to ..................................... 339, 340, 344

Articles of War—judicial notice of ..................................... 338, 342

Artist—opinion of .......................................................... 301

Artisan—opinion of .......................................................... 301

Assault—damages in action for ..................................... 61

Assessor—view by ................................................................. 13, 795 examination of witness by ..................................... 731 witness ................................................................. 686 questions by .......................................................... 785

Assertion—one direct, outweighing many ..................................... 33 Int.

Assignee—of bankrupt: declarations of ..................................... 121 admission of plaintiff's title ..................................... 121 suit against: onus to prove date of deposit of title-deeds ..................................... 143

Assignor—
admission by ..................................... 134, 135

Attachment—
burden of proof ..................................... 530

Attendance—
of witnesses ..................................... 721 exemption from ..................................... 721

Attestation—proof of execution of document ..................................... 115

Attestation—(contd.)
does not imply knowledge of contents of document ..................................... 97, 621 admission dispensing with proof of ..................................... 537 as formality of execution ..................................... 395
meaning of ..................................... 398, 399
summary of rules with regard to ..................................... 399—401 want of: whether document admissible for any purpose ..................................... 399 of documents ..................................... 397—402
onus ..................................... 571, 572 persons who may attest ..................................... 398, 399 presumption in case of ancient document ..................................... 440, 441 presumption of, when document called for and not produced ..................................... 435, 441 does not necessarily import concurrence ..................................... 602

Attesting witness—repudiating will ..................................... 567
See "Attestation," "Witness."

Attorney—of tenant ..................................... 673

Attorney—
admission by ..................................... 128, 129
proof of admission made to ..................................... 145 compromise of suit by ..................................... 352 judicial notice of ..................................... 339, 343 cannot disclose professional communication ..................................... 694

Auction-purchaser—
burden of proof ..................................... 531 presumption in favour of ..................................... 629

Authority—continuance of: presumption ..................................... 600

Avoidance—of incumbrance: onus ..................................... 531

Awargha—
papers ..................................... 243, 244

Bad Character—
previous ..................................... 325—328
See "Character."

Bad Faith—fact showing ..................................... 24n., 98
See "Good Faith."
onus of proving ..................................... 541, 584

Bailor—
 presumption of negligence ..................................... 614 estoppel of ..................................... 679, 680 setting up title of another ..................................... 681 suit of interpleader by ..................................... 68

B

Bad Character—
previous ..................................... 325—328
See "Character."

Bad Faith—fact showing ..................................... 24n., 98
See "Good Faith."
onus of proving ..................................... 541, 584

Bailor—
 presumption of negligence ..................................... 614
estoppel of ..................................... 679, 680
setting up title of another ..................................... 681 suit of interpleader by ..................................... 68

B INDEX.

Page

Ballment—law as to ..... 681

Bank—admission by manager of ..... 125 custom of ..... 316 officer of, not compellable ..... 683

Banker—books of ..... 241n.
opinion of ..... 301
not compellable to produce book ..... 871

Bankers—evidence concerning ..... 871

Bankers' Books—certified copy of ..... 389

Bankrupt—admission by assignee of ..... 121 declaration of, before and after bankruptcy ..... 138 leaving dwelling: evidence of intention ..... 51n.

Bankruptcy—proof of knowledge of ..... 94 sever joint interest ..... 138 enquiries in, guarding against fraud ..... 274n.

Baptism—register of ..... 250

Barrister—See "Counsel."

"Behert"— papers ..... 244

Belief—admission consisting of ..... 114 as to identity ..... 50n.

Benami—parol evidence to show burden of proof ..... 485 fraud against creditors ..... 531-533 tenant ..... 671 transaction: estoppel arising from ..... 666-668 transaction: presumption ..... 627, 628

Bengal Land Registration Act.— entry in register made under ..... 249

Best evidence—rules as to ..... 12 Int.

Bible—statement in family ..... 217

Bigamy—prosecution for: proof of marriage ..... 318n.

Bill of Exchange—drawn in set ..... 453, 464 presumption of consideration ..... 595, 599

Bill of Exchange—(cont'd.)
acceptor of: estopped ..... 679
See 'Negotiable Instrument.'

Birth—member of family ..... 218 date and place of ..... 218
register of ..... 250 register of, public servant ..... 244 entry of, in India ..... 246n.
during marriage conclusive proof of legitimacy ..... 588-593
proof of ..... 465

Bodily Feeling—complaint, evidence ..... 42n. fact showing statement of ..... 87, 90n., 94n., 96

Body—admission as to existence of state of ..... 140, 143 fact showing state of ..... 87, 94n.

Bond—in possession of obligor ..... 607 stipulation for endorsement of payment on back of ..... 661 burden of proof ..... 533 execution of ..... 533

Book—
kept in ordinary course of business ..... 195, 202 how much of, to be proved, 263, 264 law—statements in ..... 261, 262 of broker ..... 462 of public offices ..... 406 of reference: presumption ..... 438 public or official. See "Public Record."

Books of Account—evidence ..... 50
exception to rule that party cannot make evidence in his favour ..... 107n.
admissions in ..... 112, 113 corroborative evidence only ..... 237, 238 inference from absence of entry ..... 239 court must look at whole of entries ..... 240 hash-chitta book ..... 240 distinct entries should not be read ..... 263 entries kept in course of business ..... 236-243 weight to be given to ..... 236n.
jama-wasiti-baki jamabandi and other papers ..... 240-244 must have been kept in regular course of business ..... 260
INDEX

Books of Account—(contd.)
meaning of "kept in the regular course of business" 240 numerous and bulky 241a.
commissions to examine 241a.
production of, in evidence 241a.
furnishing copies of entries 241
proof of 241
personal knowledge of facts stated 241 proof that regularly kept 238, 238a, 241 test of genuineness of 336a.
admissibility of 237 used to refresh memory 238, 239 and as admissions 238, 239 and under s. 34, cl. (2) 240 Books of reference—resort by court to 339, 344—347 Bought and sold notes—constituting contract 462 Boundary—proof of 255a.
demarcation of, by survey 256 between lakhiraj tenure and zamindar's masi land 553, 554
burden of proof 533, 534
presumption 628 road: presumption of ownership 630 Breach of promise—evidence of character 330 necessity of corroborating 718 Bribery—evidence of conduct 45
of witness 765, 768
British India—
meaning of 6
British Territories—See "Territories."
Broker—books of 462
Burden of proof—to show date of deposit of title deeds in suit against official assignee 143 that confession is voluntary 148—154 admission may shift 189 affected by presumptions 238a, 536, 581
as to statements under ss. 32, 33, 190 in case of allegation of custom 85a use of deposition in former trial 237 accounts 530 agency 530 attachments 530

Burden of proof—(contd.)
affected by capacity of parties 569 austion-purchaser 531 avoidance of encumbrance 531 settlement 531 bonds 533 boundaries 533, 534
Civil Procedure 534, 535 consideration 535, 536
contract 536, 537
conveyance 536, 537 considered generally, 524—527, 528—530
custom 338, 339
defamation 539 death 572, 573
life 572, 573 casements 539 fraud 539—541 good and bad faith 541, 584—588
Hindu law: alienation by widow 546 by manager of guardian 547
by sebaits 548
Hindu law: joint property 541—543
partition 544
Hindu law: inheritance, adoption 549, 550 alienation by father 550
Hindu law: self-acquisition 544, 545 stridhan 545 in appeal 529 proviso and exception 529 majority 560 mortgage 560
in case of fact especially within knowledge 569—572 as to ownership 575—584 as to relationship in case of partners 574, 575 landlord and tenant 574, 575 principal and agent 574, 575 in criminal law 537, 538 in sense of introducing evidence 528 in solvency 552 insurance 552 inventions 553 lakhirs 553 landlord and tenant 554—557 legitimacy 557 life and death 557 limitation 557—559 malicious prosecution 559 notices 560, 561 ownership 561

W, LF
| Burden of proof—(contd.) | 524—527 |
| mean of | 524 |
| general rule as to | 527 |
| on whom lies | 527 |
| as to particular fact | 527 |
| of fact in order to give evidence of other fact | 528, 728 |
| partnership | 561 |
| payment | 561 |
| pre-emption | 561 |
| perpetual or permanent settlement | 629, 630 |
| plea in confession and avoidance | 528 |
| provisions as to | 528 |
| recitals | 562 |
| rent-free land | 562, 563 |
| test as to | 525 |
| trust | 531 |
| Bencasiu transaction | 531—533 |
| title | 563 |
| tort | 564 |
| will | 564—567 |
| to show case comes within exceptions of penal Code | 567—569 |

| Burial— | 250 |
| register of | 250 |

| Bye-laws— | 539 |
| judicial notice of | 539 |

| Bystanders— | 48 |
| exclamations of | 48 |

| C |  |
| Can't be found— |  |
| statement by person who, 194, 224, 229 |  |
| Capacity— |  |
| want of, in contracting party, evidence of | 467, 488 |
| Caricature— | 11 |
| a document | 11 |
| recognition by spectators of | 224 |
| Carrier— | 66 |
| negligence of | 614 |
| of passengers | 614 |
| of goods | 614 |
| Caste— |  |
| custom | 66 |
| Cause— | 36 |
| fact the, of fact in issue or relevant facts | 36 |

| Causation— |  |
| cases of well known and regular | 38 |
| evidence of | 37 |

| Celibacy— | 218 |
| of member of family | 218 |

| Census— |  |
| records of, not admissible | 2458 |
| officer, public servant | 245 |
| Certificate of guardianship— | 247 |
| not a public record | 247 |
| no evidence of minority | 247 |
| Certified copy— | 234 |
| of deposition | 234 |
| of marriage and other registers | 250 |
| given by Registrar-General of Births, | 250 |
| Death and Marriages | 250 |
| given under Registration Act | 250 |
| of register of copyright | 251 |
| of proceedings under Insolvency Act | 251 |
| of map | 263 |
| of public document | 407, 410, 411, 412 |
| of public register | 412 |
| difference between, and examined copy | 416, 417 |
| presumption as to | 419, 420 |
| of public document | 427 |
| secondary evidence by | 388 |
| of document of which such copy can be given in England | 924 |

| Cession— | 344, 594 |
| of territory | 344, 594 |

| Character— | 75 Int. |
| evidence of, when important opinion to prove | 296 |
| as affecting damages | 322, 329—332 |
| in criminal proceedings | 321, 324—329 |
| when relevant | 322—332 |
| of witnesses and parties | 322 |
| in civil proceedings | 322—324 |
| of prosecutor | 322 |
| bad | 324 |
| previous conviction: evidence of | 324 |
| showing intention | 325 |
| meaning of | 322, 329, 330 |
| in mitigation and aggravation of damages | 329 |
| in cases of breach of promise: defamation: adultery | 329, 330 |
| presumption | 602 |
| witness to | 744 |
| of prosecutrix | 765 |

| Charge— | 714, 715 |
| to jury in case of accomplice evidence | 714, 715 |

| Charitable Foundation— | 315 |
| constitution and government of | 315 |

| Charitable Society— | 251 |
| documents of | 251 |
INDEX.

PAGE.

Chart—relevancy of statement in ... 252—258
presumption as to ... 438

Chattel—no necessity for production of ... 355, 364, 365

Chemical Examiner—report of ... 301a.

Chittha—of revenue-survey public record ... 247 nature of survey ... 257, 258 is a public record ... 257 other chittahs ... 258

Circumstantial Evidence—
meaning of ... 14
admissibility of ... 14
value of ... 14
conviction on ... 14a.
disregard of: by mofussil juries ... 14 distributed into its elements ... 26a.
meaning of ... 13, 30 Int.
and direct evidence distinguished ... 13 Int.
in proof of fraud ... 98

Civil Procedure—
Code controls Act ... 27

Claims on estates of deceased persons—corroboration ... 718

Clerk—of professional adviser: communications ... 785

Client—communications made by ... 785

Co-accused—confession of ... 175—187 cross-examination by ... 743

Co-defendant—
admission by ... 122
cross-examination of ... 123a.
cross-examination by ... 743

Coffin plate—statement on ... 217

Collateral issue—when judge bound to try ... 31

Collector—kept for purposes of revenue ... 249 register of: under Bengal Land Registration Act ... 249

Collusion—negligence: onus ... 564

collusion—decree re-opened on ground of 277 judgment obtained by 286, 289, 291
meaning of ... 290

Colonial Law—
proof of ... 262

Commerce—document used in: statement in ... 195, 202

Commission—documents attached to: objection to ... 33 to ascertain amount of damage 62 evidence taken on ... 226n.
returned before witness fully cross-examined ... 233 evidence given on ... 722, 723

Commissioner—evidence given before ... 226

Common course of business—
presumption ... 595, 603

Common course of human conduct—
presumption ... 596

Common Course of natural events—
presumption ... 596

Communication—professional ... 765—777

Company—liability of ... 26
admissions by officers of ... 26n.
document served by post on ... 106 admission by agent or director of ... 124 by servant of ... 125 register of members of ... 250 certificate of shares or stock of ... 250 report of inspectors of ... 250 minutes of resolution of ... 250 winding up: documents of company and liquidators ... 250 doctrine of estoppel applicable to ... 646, 647

Comparison—proof of handwriting by ... 313 direction to write for purpose of ... 402 of signature, writing or seal 402—405 of writings: meaning of ... 402 of ancient documents ... 404 of writings: cross-examination ... 405

Competency—
of witness 682, 683, 720, 732
of witness: privilege distinguished 683 who are competent ... 684—686 lunatic ... 684 understanding test of ... 684

Compellability—of witness ... 682, 683, 720

Complaint—
evidence of ... 41, 48 dismissal of: not acquittal ... 272

Composition—of offence: onus ... 538
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Compromise—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>power of counsel and pleader to</td>
<td>352</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>attorney’s evidence of</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>decree made in pursuance of:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of custom</td>
<td>279s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of suit</td>
<td>352</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel arising out of</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not superseding decree</td>
<td>638, 639</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Compulston—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission obtained by</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Concealment—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of evidence</td>
<td>40, 41, 45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusive proof—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of legitimacy</td>
<td>588-594</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of cession of territory</td>
<td>594</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission not</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conduct—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>course of, as to one’s being innocent or not</td>
<td>34 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>39, 43-45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>does not include statement</td>
<td>40, 46</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement affecting, made in presence</td>
<td>40, 48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissions inferred from</td>
<td>41s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing intention of parties to an instrument</td>
<td>45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of family showing family arrangements</td>
<td>46s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>107, 108s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion on relationship expressed by</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>family</td>
<td>318</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>character in proof of</td>
<td>318</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>explaining</td>
<td>325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of, as affecting interpretation of document</td>
<td>451</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of, as affecting document</td>
<td>473, 482-496</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptions from</td>
<td>622</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel by</td>
<td>940</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Confession—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>an admission in reference to crime 74 Int.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inferred from conduct of prisoner 108s.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>definition of</td>
<td>108, 109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinction between admission and judicial and extra judicial</td>
<td>109, 110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>principle upon which reception of, depends</td>
<td>109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>value of</td>
<td>109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>conviction upon uncorroborated 109, 110</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>retracted</td>
<td>110, 1147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>corroboration of retracted</td>
<td>153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>general rule that accused affected only by his own confession</td>
<td>110, 111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Confession—(cont.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>recorded by Magistrate</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>irregularity recorded</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when irrelevant</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>whole must be considered</td>
<td>117, 283</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>weight to be given to</td>
<td>117, 118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>false</td>
<td>118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>irrelevant if caused by inducement, threat or promise</td>
<td>147, 159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ground upon which received</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus of proving voluntary character of</td>
<td>147-154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumed to be voluntary</td>
<td>149</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not necessary that Sessions Judge should read to prisoner</td>
<td>151s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>promise or inducement to make</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relevancy of, to be determined by Court</td>
<td>154, 155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>obtained by undue influence meaning of “person in authority”</td>
<td>155, 156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not necessary that promise or threat should be actually uttered by person in authority</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inducement to confess must have reference to the charge</td>
<td>156, 157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inducement: advantage to be gained or not to be avoided</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inducement meaning of “sufficient to give the accused grounds”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to police cannot be proved</td>
<td>157, 158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made while in police custody</td>
<td>163-165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>while in police custody: information leading to discovery 165-172</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made after removal of impression caused by inducement</td>
<td>172, 174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>leading to discovery: meaning of “discovered”</td>
<td>167-169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>leading to discovery: meaning of “in consequence of information”</td>
<td>169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>leading to discovery: how much information may be found</td>
<td>170-172</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>accused overheard muttering</td>
<td>173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made in answer to questions</td>
<td>173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made without warning</td>
<td>173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>promise of secrecy</td>
<td>173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>deception to obtain</td>
<td>173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made when drunk</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of co-accused</td>
<td>175-187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of co-accused: “tried jointly”</td>
<td>177, 178</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of co-accused: “for the same offence”</td>
<td>178, 179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of co-accused: meaning of term “confession”</td>
<td>179</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

Confession—(contd.)
of co-accused: affecting himself and some other'... 180, 181 of co-accused: 'made'... 181 of co-accused: 'proved'... 181, 181a. of co-accused: meaning of term 'Court'... 182 of co-accused: 'may take into consideration'... 182-186 of co-accused: corroboration 183-186 of co-accused: 'as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession'... 186 record of: public document... 408 presumption as to record of evidence of contents... 421, 458, 459 Confession and avoidance—onus... 536 Confidence—person in position of: good faith 584-588 Confidential Communication—with legal adviser 696, 697, 699, 702 Confirmation—of testimony: similar facts admissible for... 39 facts supporting inference... 50 Confrontation—of witness... 725 Consent—to abide by testimony does not bind to hearsay... 30a.
See 'Contract'. to evidence being taken as sufficient 31a.
to reception of inadmissible evidence... 31a.
Court bound to decide without reference to previous arrangement between parties... 33 Consent Decree—setting aside of... 286a.
Consideration—evidence to show want of 467, 489, 490 non-receipt of: onus... 533, 535, 536 onus of proving... 535, 536 failure of: onus... 107 recital of... 562
proof of... 562
presumption of... 923
Conspiracy—in tort of crime... 28 declarations of conspirators... 47 things said or done by conspirator in reference to common design 54-56
proof of... 55
evidence in proof of... 323 Construction—of Act... 3-5 document... 450, 506a. of foreign writing, opinion, as to 517 document consistent with good faith... 548, 622 Consul—certificate of... 413 power-of-attorney executed before... 434 Continuance—presumption in favour of... 575 of life... 572, 573 Continuity—presumption... 597, 599, 608
presumption of, not retrospective... 600 future not presumed... 600 Contract—document made proof of... 28, 29 to abide by evidence of witness... 30a. breach of: damages... 62 construction: notice of contents... 98 evidence of terms of... 452-456
variance of... 466-503 want of capacity... 467, 488 oral evidence to show time when document becomes... 473 by agent... 484
burden of proof... 536
estoppel resting on... 639 boundary between breach of, and estoppel... 641, 642 Contradiction—
of statement made under ss. 32, 33... 190, 194
deposition in former trial 228, 229 of witness; judgment admissible for... 283 of answers tending to shake credit... 299a.
of terms of document... 466, 483
of witness... 737, 754
by previous statement in writing... 750 exclusion of evidence to contradict... 758-761 Conversation—how much to be proved... 263, 264 Conversion—from one religion to another... 631 Convert—to Mahomedanism... 589
Native Christian... 589
Conveyance—in reality mortgage... 474 burden of proof... 536
INDEX

| Conviction— barring subsequent trial | 271, 272 | Page |
| mode of proving previous | 272n. |
| judgment of, no evidence of its truth in civil cases | 284 |
| evidence of bad character | 324, 326 |
| to prove guilty knowledge | 324 |
| proof of | 416, 460 |
| obtained upon evidence of accomplice | 710, 711 |
| upon statement of single witness | 718 |
| previous, of witness: evidence of | 758 |
| Co-respondent— admission by | 123 |
| Copy— of copy not admissible | 373 |
| of copy kept in registration-office | 373 |
| use of, to refresh memory | 782 |
| Copyright— certified copy of entry in book of registry | 250 |
| Co-responder— admission of respondent | 123 |
| Coroner— evidence given before | 226 |
| Corporation— admission by surveyor of | 125 |
| doctrine of estoppel applicable to | 646 |
| Corpes— finding of, not essential to conviction | 152n. |
| Corpus delicti— meaning of | 18 |
| proof of | 18 |
| rule as to | 35 Int. |
| existency of, wrongly inferred 35, 36 Int. |
| Corroboration— evidence given | 59 |
| afforded by decree | 75 |
| two sets of evidence neither of which alone can be accepted without | 184n. |
| of confession of co-accused | 183-186 |
| of statement made under ss. 32, 33 | 190, 194 |
| deposition in former trial | 177 |
| of deposition | 235 |
| afforded by books of account | 238 |
| of expert experience | 294, 308 |
| of ancient document | 444 |
| of accomplice | 718-717 |
| in breach of promise cases | 718 |
| in affiliation cases | 718 |
| in maintenance cases | 718n. |
| Corroboration— (contd.) in claims on estates of deceased persons | 718 |
| in prosecution for perjury | 718 |
| of witness | 734, 772-775 |
| Co-tenant— admission by | 131 |
| Councils— proceedings of: judicial notice 338, 340 |
| Counsel— prisoner leaving defence to | 96a. |
| admission by | 128, 129 |
| proof of admission made to | 145 |
| notes of, as to what occurs at trial | 360 |
| compromise of suit by | 352 |
| senior, may take case out of junior hands | 738 |
| called as witness: privilege | 689 |
| cannot disclose professional communication | 694 |
| for witness called on subpoena | 707 |
| discretion of, as to introduction of evidence | 729 |
| Counterpart— document executed in | 369, 371,374 |
| Course of business— proof of particular instances | 39 |
| evidence to contradict | 103s. |
| proof of | 103-106 |
| meaning of | 104, 203, 204 |
| private and public | 104 |
| statement made in | 125, 201-206 |
| See "Statement made in the course of business." books kept in: statement in 202, 204
entries in books of account kept in | 237-244 | kept in regular: meaning of | 240 |
preemption as to | 625 |
| Course of dealing— as explanatory of intention of document | 439a. |
| evidence of interpretation of document | 451 |
| Course of nature— judicial notice of | 340 |
| Court— application of Act to proceedings in | 6 |
| does not include arbitrator | 9 |
| meaning of | 9 |
| meaning of, in a 30 | 182 |
| seals of: judicial notice | 338, 339, 341, 342 |
| officers: judicial notice | 339, 343 |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>INDEX.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| Court—(cond.) | 340 |
| judicial notice by, of matters appearing in its own proceedings | 340 |
| Court-Martial— | 6, 7 |
| evidence in | 6, 7 |
| Court of Wards— | 130a. |
| admission by | 130a. |
| manager employed by: public servant | 245a. |
| Credit— | 299a. |
| of expert | 299a. |
| distinction between competency and | 299a. |
| of experts | 309 |
| of witness | 753—761 |
| re-establishing | 771, 772 |
| Crime— | 537, 638 |
| burden of proof | 537, 638 |
| no professional privilege in respect of | 638 |
| Criminal Law— | 127 |
| admission by agent in | 127 |
| burden of proof | 537, 538 |
| Criminal Trial— | 17 |
| certain rules of evidence peculiar to | 17 |
| otherwise same as in civil cases | 17—30 |
| effect of evidence in | 17—19 |
| had unless conducted in manner prescribed by law | 18 |
| general rules with regard to proof in | 19 |
| waiver in | 33 |
| election in | 36 |
| character in | 322, 324—329 |
| admissions dispensing with proof in | 353 |
| a proceeding between prosecutor and accused | 225 |
| King prosecutor in | 234 |
| previous judgment barring | 271 |
| proof of marriage in | 317, 318, 320 |
| improper admission and rejection of evidence in | 802, 803 |
| Cross-examination— | 364, 734 |
| right and opportunity of: use of deposition | 225—233 |
| presumption of opportunity of | 223 |
| partial and not complete | 233 |
| should take place at end of each examination | 233 |
| proof of conversation | 264 |
| want of qualification of expert shown by | 299 |
| of expert | 308 |
| Cross-examination—(cond.) | 405 |
| hearsay in | 405 |
| of witness called to prove handwriting | 405 |
| of co-defendant | 123a. |
| inculminating question | 708, 710 |
| recall for further | 723 |
| giving notice of line of defence | 724 |
| upon new matter introduced in re-examination | 730, 731 |
| rules as to | 730, 734—746 |
| what is | 730 |
| none upon questions put by the Court | 730 |
| of witness called by the Court | 730 |
| object of | 730 |
| to what it must relate | 730 |
| inordinately lengthy | 730 |
| must relate to relevant facts | 735, 736 |
| need not be confused to facts testified to, in examination | 735, 736 |
| survival of right to, when opponent's witness called | 736 |
| liability to, where affidavit filed and withdrawn | 736 |
| right and opportunity of | 736 |
| right of, though no question asked by party calling witness | 737 |
| witness dying or falling ill before | 737 |
| none where witness examined by mistake | 737 |
| document shown to witness in: whether other party may see | 737 |
| by accused | 737 |
| inordinately long | 738 |
| insulting observations during | 741 |
| notice of line of defence by co-defendant and co-accused | 737 |
| of person called to produce document | 743, 744 |
| of witness to character | 744 |
| as to previous statements in writing | 750—753 |
| questions lawful in | 753—758 |
| of party's own witness | 761—766 |
| none on questions put by Judge | 789—794 |
| Crowd— | 647 |
| expression of feeling or impressions of, see "Expressions of feelings or impressions." |
| Crown— | 647 |
| estoppel against | 647 |
| See "Sovereign." | 647 |
INDEX.

Custody—confession made while in police 163, 164 proper: meaning of .. 426

Custom—manorial .. 38a, 215a.
trade .. 38a.
existence of: relevant facts 62—87 public or general judgments, proof of .. 63 opinion in proof of .. 63 requisites of .. 65, 66 kinds of: private, general, public .. 66 family: local: caste: trade 66, 85, 86
proof of .. 84–86
statement giving opinion as to public .. 213–216 statement in document relating to transaction under s. 13 222, 224 declaration as to public .. 215 presentation of customary courts 215a. family .. 225a.
proof of, by entry in Wajib-ul-aziz .. 246 judgment as to general or public .. 279–281 opinion on .. 297, 313–315
judicial notice of .. 340 annexed to contract: evidence 467, 496–499 proof .. 496
family: presumption .. 610 of trade: presumption of knowledge .. 621 statement in document relating to .. 215–216
See "Document relating to Right and Custom."

D

Deasity—belonging to gang: previous commissions of .. 327, 328

Damages—
meaning of .. 61
measure of .. 61, 62 mitigation and aggravation of .. 61 local investigation as to amount of .. 62 statement exposing party to suit for .. 196, 206–213 character as affecting .. 322, 329–332 liability for, on failure to give evidence .. 381
onus .. 536

Date—of document .. 195, 196
and place of birth .. 218a.
of ancient writing .. 302

Death—joint contract severed by: effect of .. 131, 132, 138 statement as to cause of, in dying declaration 191, 192, 194, 198–201 statement by person who is dead .. 194, 225
of member of family .. 218 registrar of, public servant .. 245 entry of, in India .. 246a.
register of .. 250
proof of .. 465, 572, 573
onus .. 556

F no presumption as to time of .. 573

Decease—onus .. 564

Deception—confession obtained by .. 175

Declaration—as proof of intention .. 92a, 94 accompanying act .. 96a.
F estoppel by .. 649–669

Decree—admissibility of, as a "transaction" or "instance" under s. 13 .. 71–84 evidence in corroboration .. 73 evidence of dispossession .. 73 evidence of possession .. 73 relating to matter of a public nature .. 84 admissibility of, as public record when relevant .. 266–285 See "Judgment."
reading of, in connection with judgment .. 279a.
evidence of necessity of alienation .. 285 obtained by fraud: setting aside of .. 286a. consent. See "Consent Decree."
certified copy of .. 410, 415
evidence of contents .. 458

Dedication—register of .. 250

Deduction—and Induction .. 19 Int. method of .. 22 Int.
steps for complete method of .. 22 Int.

Deed—statement as to relationship contained in .. 194, 218
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Deed—(contd.)</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>statement in, as to transaction under s. 13</td>
<td>196, 222-224</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel</td>
<td>634, 635, 660</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissions in, always evidence</td>
<td>628</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Defamation—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>evidence of character</td>
<td>330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>529</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>action for, in respect of word said in Court</td>
<td>722</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Delay—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>statement of person whose attendance cannot be procured without</td>
<td>194, 225, 230</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption from</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Demeanour—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of witness</td>
<td>12, 15, 20, 732</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of party</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of prisoner when charged with crime</td>
<td>45</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Deposition—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission in</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in former trial</td>
<td>190, 225-235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Depositions in former trials.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of deceased person relating to custom, prescription, pedigree</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>taken in absence of and read over to prisoner</td>
<td>233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>certified copy of</td>
<td>234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>corroboration of</td>
<td>235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission in</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of witness a public document</td>
<td>410, 437</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of contents</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>informal</td>
<td>459, 460</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Depositions in former trials—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of</td>
<td>229-235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grounds of admissibility</td>
<td>225, 226, 227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissible for what purpose</td>
<td>227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>oral evidence of</td>
<td>227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>informally recorded</td>
<td>228</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>use of previous statements</td>
<td>228, 229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>contradiction</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>corroboration</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>open to same objection as viva voce testimony</td>
<td>228, 229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>illegal questions</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof that witness is dead</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof that witness cannot be found</td>
<td>222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, incapacity to give evidence</td>
<td>230</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witness kept out of the way</td>
<td>230</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admitted on grounds of delay and expense</td>
<td>230</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proceeding must have been between same parties</td>
<td>231</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Depositions in former trial—(contd.)</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>necessity of right and opportunity to cross-examine</td>
<td>232, 233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>question in issue must have been the same</td>
<td>233, 234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>partial cross-examination</td>
<td>233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>criminal trial or inquiry is proceeding between prosecutor and accused</td>
<td>234, 235</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Desenchar—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion on</td>
<td>317</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>imperfect</td>
<td>511</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>partly correct, partly incorrect</td>
<td>512</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>part of, applying to one subject, part to another</td>
<td>513</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Destruction—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of evidence</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Discretion, Judicial—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>5 Int.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Disease—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of body or mind rendering witness incompetent</td>
<td>685</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Designs—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>register of</td>
<td>251</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Detective—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>not accomplice</td>
<td>712</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Dhara—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>land adjudged to be</td>
<td>271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dharepatrak—</td>
<td>Page.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statements made in</td>
<td>247, 251</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Diary—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>police</td>
<td>159n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>police: how much of, asked may see</td>
<td>264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>insertion in, of statement made under s. 181, Cr. Pr. Code</td>
<td>752</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>used to refresh memory or to contradict police-officer</td>
<td>752, 781</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Director—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of company: admission by</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Discovery—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>information leading to confession</td>
<td>105-172</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production of documents</td>
<td>705-708</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Dishonesty—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>presumption against</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Disproved—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Dispossession—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>decree, evidence of</td>
<td>74</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Disposition—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>329, 331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>329, 331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>general</td>
<td>331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Page</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disposition of property— evidence of terms of</td>
<td>452—466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>variance of</td>
<td>466—503</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Divorce— decree of, how conclusive</td>
<td>272, 274, 276, 277</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>use of decree in previous suit</td>
<td>277n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proceeding: proof of marriage in</td>
<td>318, 320</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proceedings— witness in</td>
<td>320, 321</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>privilege as to communications continues after</td>
<td>691</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Domicile— proof of intentions</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Document— meaning of</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>conduct showing intention of parties to</td>
<td>46</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>course of dealing showing intention of</td>
<td>45n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>found in possession of party evidence</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>access to, raising presumption of knowledge</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>attestation does not imply knowledge of contents</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>execution of, implies knowledge of contents</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>execution of: admission</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>oral admission as to contents of</td>
<td>115, 144, 145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>used in judicial proceeding may be used as admission</td>
<td>140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>genuineness in question: oral admission</td>
<td>144, 145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>used in commerce</td>
<td>195, 202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>date of</td>
<td>195, 202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement in relation to transaction mentioned in s. 13</td>
<td>196, 222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>containing statement as to relationship</td>
<td>195, 217</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relating to right and custom, admissibility of</td>
<td>222—224</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of ancient possession</td>
<td>223</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of modern possession</td>
<td>223</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>contents of registered: certified copy</td>
<td>250, 251</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production of: procedure</td>
<td>720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>how much of, to be proved</td>
<td>263, 264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>foreign: construction of</td>
<td>301n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of mark on</td>
<td>310, 311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of 76 Int., 354, 355, 359, 369—375 forged, effect of production of</td>
<td>357</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>public and private</td>
<td>368, 409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial and non-judicial</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Document—(cont'd.) of record</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>executed in several parts</td>
<td>369, 371, 465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>executed in counterpart</td>
<td>369, 371</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>definition of</td>
<td>370</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, by secondary evidence</td>
<td>378, 390</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>search for</td>
<td>385, 388</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of signature and handwriting</td>
<td>394, 396</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>execution of</td>
<td>396, 397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>attestation of</td>
<td>397—402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>public</td>
<td>406—417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to</td>
<td>418—446</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissible in England or Ireland</td>
<td>432, 454</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>provable in England by certified copy</td>
<td>429</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not produced when called for: presumption</td>
<td>439, 440</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30 years old</td>
<td>440—446</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of extrinsic evidence to affect</td>
<td>447—452</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dispositive and non-dispositive 447 extrinsic evidence inadmissible to supersede</td>
<td>449, 454</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>construction of</td>
<td>450</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence in aid, explanation and interpretation of</td>
<td>450</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ambiguity of</td>
<td>451</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of terms of contracts, grants and other dispositions of property</td>
<td>452—466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matter required by law to be reduced to form of</td>
<td>452—466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>force of documentary proof</td>
<td>455n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of separate oral agreement</td>
<td>466, 467, 491, 492, 494</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>variance of</td>
<td>466—503</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence invalidating</td>
<td>487, 486</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinct subsequent oral agreement</td>
<td>467, 494—496</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence showing relation of, to existing facts</td>
<td>467, 499</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inadmissibility of extrinsic evidence to control</td>
<td>469—473</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of conduct as affecting</td>
<td>473—482</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence to point operation of</td>
<td>499</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>patent ambiguity</td>
<td>503—509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>variance of, who may give evidence</td>
<td>519, 520</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of formalities</td>
<td>537</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>alteration of onus</td>
<td>571, 572</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea that, not read</td>
<td>588n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>non-production of: inference</td>
<td>603</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Document (cont.d.)</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>presumption in favour of honesty of</td>
<td>613</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to knowledge of contents of</td>
<td>621</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptions as to</td>
<td>625, 626</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>professional adviser stating contents of</td>
<td>694</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production of, which another person could refuse to produce</td>
<td>705</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production of, of witness, not party</td>
<td>705</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>liability for failure to produce</td>
<td>707</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>objection to production of</td>
<td>728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>interpretation, extrinsic evidence shown to witness on cross-examination: whether party entitled to see</td>
<td>738</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production of: cross-examination</td>
<td>744</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>non-production: punishment</td>
<td>744</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>oral evidence of statements of contents of</td>
<td>749</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>shown to witness: inspection</td>
<td>753</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production: inspection: translation of</td>
<td>784, 785</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not produced after notice</td>
<td>789</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Documentary Evidence

- meaning of | 12, 366
- procedure with regard to admission of | 29n, 30
- proof of facts by | 335
- considered generally | 366-369
- value of | 366-369
- excluding oral evidence | 447-452

Donatio mortis causa

- presumption | 610

Drunkenness

- considered in estimating intention | 96
- confession made during | 175
- opinion admissible to prove | 296

Dumb

- witness | 687

Duresse

- plea of: onus | 536

Dying declaration

- ground of admissibility | 191
- difference between law of England and British India | 191, 198
- not to be regarded as if made in England | 319
- value of | 191, 198, 199
- expectation of death unnecessary | 195, 199
- subject-matter of | 199
- competency of declarant | 199

Dying declaration (cont.d.)

- impeachment of declarant | 199
- confirmation of declarant | 199
- restricted to res gestae | 199n
- previous statement of deceased | 199n
- form of statement | 200
- use of, as deposition | 200
- admissibility to be decided by Judge | 201
- burden of proof | 201
- record and proof of | 200, 201
- made to police-officer | 201
- deposition used as | 228
- proof of death | 727

- Basement: onus | 539

Effect

- fact which is the, of fact in issue or relevant facts | 36
- production and, of evidence | 522, 523

Ejectment

- evidence in suit for | 576

Election

- in criminal trials | 36

Elements of Law

- technical and general | 10 Int.

Encroachment

- presumption | 628

Encumbrance

- avoidance of: onus | 331

Endowment

- presumption as to | 610

English Decisions

- not binding authorities but valuable guides | 8 Int.
- no reference to, made in the Act 76 Int.

English Law of Evidence

- how formed | 10 Int.
- relation of the Act to | 10 Int.
- fundamental rules of | 11 Int.
- merits of | 13 Int.

Enquiry

- answer to, by patients | 93
- criminal, a proceeding between prosecutor and accused | 224
- when answer to, admissible | 362n

Entry

- in books of account. See "Books of Account" | 244-252
- in public record | 510

Escrow

- deed operating as | 492
INDEX.

Estoppel—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Subject</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>in cases of objection to evidence</td>
<td>32</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>purchaser at sale in execution</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>binds parties, privies and not strangers</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>doctrine of, will not be extended, binds only parties and privies</td>
<td>187, 188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission may operate as</td>
<td>187—189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>none against person not party to making of public record</td>
<td>248</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by judgment</td>
<td>268, 270</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by judgment: stranger</td>
<td>284</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by pleading</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and doctrine of part-performance</td>
<td>477</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>provisions as to</td>
<td>522</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by record</td>
<td>633, 634</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>res judicata</td>
<td>634</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>633, 641</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>is only matter of proof</td>
<td>633</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>generally</td>
<td>633, 669</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinction between, and presumption</td>
<td>78 Int., 633</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by deed</td>
<td>634—635, 660</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>resting on contract</td>
<td>634, 638, 637</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by conduct</td>
<td>634, 636, 637</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by pleading</td>
<td>635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by partition</td>
<td>635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by acceptance of rent</td>
<td>635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act does not contain all rules of</td>
<td>637</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of tenant and licensee</td>
<td>636a, 669</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of bailee</td>
<td>636a, 679</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in respect of negotiable instruments</td>
<td>636a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from varying case in appeal</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from appealing</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>arising out of compromise of claim</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>against pleading want of jurisdiction</td>
<td>639</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>against inconsistent positions</td>
<td>639</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from asserting rights: waiver</td>
<td>640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>none where truth of matter appears</td>
<td>640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>none from ignorance of law</td>
<td>640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>person cannot approse and reprobate</td>
<td>639</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>boundary between, and breach of contract</td>
<td>641</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>action cannot be founded on as</td>
<td>642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>a defence</td>
<td>642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>definition of an act</td>
<td>642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>principle on which rule depends</td>
<td>642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>scope of the rule in the Act</td>
<td>643, 644</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by representation</td>
<td>643</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>motive as state of knowledge</td>
<td>643</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>immaterial</td>
<td>643</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot be applied to Act of Legislature</td>
<td>644</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>persons bound by</td>
<td>644—649</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in case of minor</td>
<td>645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>applies to corroborations and companies</td>
<td>646, 647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>against Crown</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>against administrator or executor</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by reason of agents' statements</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinction between agency and 647</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in case of partners</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in case of trustee</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>against tenant</td>
<td>648, 649</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;declaration, act or omission&quot;</td>
<td>649—669</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must be clearly established</td>
<td>649</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by negligence</td>
<td>651, 652</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>modes in which estoppel in pari arise</td>
<td>651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from acquiescence</td>
<td>651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>arising from benami transactions</td>
<td>654</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by conduct: family arrangement</td>
<td>656</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>where invalid adoption has been acted upon</td>
<td>659</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>form of misrepresentation immaterial</td>
<td>660</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>recitals</td>
<td>661</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must be made out clearly</td>
<td>661</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>title by</td>
<td>662</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement or conduct should be intentional</td>
<td>663</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>representation and action must be connected as cause and effect</td>
<td>664</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>representation must be voluntarily</td>
<td>664</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>none if party does not believe statement to be true</td>
<td>665</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the representation must be a material statement of fact</td>
<td>666</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>foundation of doctrine is changed</td>
<td>667</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>essential that the other party has been induced to do or forbear</td>
<td>666—668</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>binding representative</td>
<td>668</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>necessity for privacy</td>
<td>668</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;between himself and such person or his representative&quot;</td>
<td>669</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>denial of representation</td>
<td>669</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when mutual</td>
<td>669</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>necessity of pleading</td>
<td>669a</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Estoppel—(contd.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not office of, to pass title</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; to deny the truth of that thing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of tenant</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot; Tenent. &quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>mortgage : trust : vendor and purchaser : licensee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of licensee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of acceptor of bill</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of bailee and licensee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evasive or false response—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption from</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Event—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Events—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>connection of, how traced</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>traceable influence of causes and effects as to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rule as to cause and effect of 37, 38 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>caution for inference as to cause and effect of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evidence—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>affirmative better than negative</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>English system of Judicial progress of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ambiguity as to confining, to issue</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ambiguity as to excluding hearsay</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ambiguity of word</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rule as to best</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>how law of relative to general theories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>what the law of, determines</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Huxley’s remark applied to law of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in judicial inquiries</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in scientific inquiries</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witnesses conspiring to give false 33 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect of improper admission or rejection of, in india</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in palmer’s case</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nature of expert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>exclusion of, as to unconnected transaction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to opinion, exclusion of 73, 75 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on previous occasion how to be proved</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of character only a make weight 75 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of fact by oral</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cases where secondary, of contents of document admissible</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>writings when exclusive</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>theories as to weight of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production and effect of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>instruments of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evidence—(contd.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>personal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>original or immediate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>hearsay or mediate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>oral</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>real</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>material</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>direct</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>circumstantial</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptive</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>primary</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>secondary</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>documentary</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of what may be given</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>value of, cannot affect admissibility</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>reception of, depending upon preliminary question of fact</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>weight</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>destruction, concealment, subornation of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>a party cannot make, for himself</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>exception to this rule</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>self-regarding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>self-serving</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>erroneous omission to object to, does not make it admissible</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>confession by co-accused not</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>given in former judicial proceeding.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Depositions in former trial&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>given in Court without jurisdiction taken on commission 226, 226, 227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof that given in judicial proceeding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>failure to give : liability to damages</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>record of : presumption 420–425</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>improper admission and rejection of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production and effect of 522, 523</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>withheld : presumption</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>spoliation : fabrication : suppression of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptions as to giving and recording</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>quantity of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>taken on commission de bene esse or on affidavit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>order of production</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in rebuttal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of : Judge to decide</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evidence—(contd.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of, should be decid-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ed at once</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>order of introduction of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>volunteering</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to matters in writing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>improper admission and rejection</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>parol or oral. See &quot;Oral Evi-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dence.&quot;</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| Evidence Act— | |
| Title of | 1 |
| preamble of | 1 |
| construction of | 1–5 |
| headings of sections in | 2 |
| interpretation clauses of | 2, 9 |
| illustrations to | 2, 3 |
| marginal notes of | 3 |
| commencement of | 6 |
| extent of | 6, 7 |
| repeal of enactments by | 8 |

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Examination—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>oral</td>
<td>722</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>order of</td>
<td>725, 726, 729</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of witness: Judge's discretion</td>
<td>729</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of witnesses</td>
<td>729–744</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Examinations—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>party cannot repudiate answer</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>given to illegal questions put by</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>him</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of witnesses, provisions as to</td>
<td>522, 523</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of witnesses considered generally</td>
<td>720–726</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Examined Copy—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of document</td>
<td>408, 408a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>difference between, and certified copy</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof by</td>
<td>427</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Examination de bene esse—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>evidence given on</td>
<td>722</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Examination-in-chief—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of expert</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rules as to</td>
<td>729, 732–734</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>what is</td>
<td>729</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>object of</td>
<td>732</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>what facts may be proved on</td>
<td>732, 733</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>leading questions in</td>
<td>734</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witness hostile</td>
<td>734</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Exception—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>529</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in Penal Code: onus</td>
<td>567</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Exemptions—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of by-standers</td>
<td>48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of mob</td>
<td>52, 224</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of guilty intention</td>
<td>92a,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expert—(contd.)</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>competency of</td>
<td>299, 300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion of one, on another</td>
<td>299 nn.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinction between competency and credit of</td>
<td>299 nn.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>testimony: subjects of</td>
<td>300, 301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on handwriting</td>
<td>302—304</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>examination of</td>
<td>304, 305</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>scope of opinion of</td>
<td>305—308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cross-examination of</td>
<td>308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grounds of and corroboration and rebuttal of opinion</td>
<td>308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>refreshing memory</td>
<td>309, 776, 783</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>credit of</td>
<td>309</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not called as witness: opinion of 309</td>
<td>321</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grounds of opinion of</td>
<td>321</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion of, expressed in treatise</td>
<td>360, 364</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>comparison of writing by</td>
<td>402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence as to laws of nature</td>
<td>591</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Explanatory Facts—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>47, 47 nn.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Expressions of feelings or impressions—admissibility of</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>by individual</td>
<td>224</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| F | |
| Fabrication—of evidence | 603 |

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Fact—meaning of</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>18 Int., 9—11</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>external and internal</td>
<td>17, 18 Int., 10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>physical and psychological</td>
<td>10, 91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matter of</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>principal</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidentiary</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relevant</td>
<td>37 Int., 10, 25—27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13 Int., 10</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>issue of</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relation of, to right and liabilities</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when said to be proved</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>12—14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>15 Int., 15—19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when opposed to theory</td>
<td>18 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>observation and recording of</td>
<td>19 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mills' theory of logic as to</td>
<td>19 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>mere observation of, insufficient</td>
<td>30 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>supposed to be proved must fulfill list of method of difference</td>
<td>34, 44 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no decision upon, a precedent for any other decision</td>
<td>44 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cases where impossible to draw line between relevant and irrelevant</td>
<td>51 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>apparently relevant</td>
<td>72 Int.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Fact—(contd.)</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>that requires no proof</td>
<td>76 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to be proved by oral evidence 76 Int. &quot;verbal&quot; meaning of</td>
<td>362 nn.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>similar but unconnected</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>collateral</td>
<td>27 nn.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>forming part of same transaction</td>
<td>34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>constituting state of things under which relevant fact or fact in issue happened</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>occasion, cause or effect of fact in issue or relevant facts</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing motive, preparation and conduct</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>explaining or introducing relevant fact</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fixing time or place</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing relation of parties</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>necessary to explain or introduce</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>supporting or rebutting inference</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>establishing identity</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing conspiracy</td>
<td>54—56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inconsistent with fact in issue or relevant fact</td>
<td>56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>making existence of fact in issue or relevant fact highly probable or improbable</td>
<td>56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing amount of damages</td>
<td>61</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relevant when right or custom is in question</td>
<td>62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing existence of state of mind or body or bodily feeling</td>
<td>87—101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bearing on question whether act, accidental or intentional</td>
<td>101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing existence of course of business</td>
<td>103—106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>stated by person not witness</td>
<td>190—235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>that man holds an opinion, a which need not be proved</td>
<td>336, 337</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial notice of</td>
<td>338—344</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admitted need not be proved</td>
<td>348—353</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, by oral evidence 76 Int.</td>
<td>354, 359</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>oral evidence as to, must be direct</td>
<td>360—365</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Fact in issue—meaning of</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>10, 11</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence may be given of</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>existence of judgment, order or decree, a</td>
<td>268, 281—285</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>False imprisonment—</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>damages in action for</td>
<td>618</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

"Public Record."
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Family—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- custom</td>
<td>66, 85</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- joint Hindu: admission of, by manager</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- portrait</td>
<td>195, 217</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- bible</td>
<td>217</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- will or deed relating to affairs of</td>
<td>195, 217</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- pedigree</td>
<td>195, 218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- evidence as to state of</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- succession</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- relationship</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- legitimacy</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- celibacy of member of</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- occupation of member of</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- residence of member of</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- history</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- birth, marriage death of members of age</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- issue of members of</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- usage of: opinion as to conduct</td>
<td>315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Family arrangement—evidence of estoppel</td>
<td>46a, 658</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Farmer—</td>
<td>222a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- custom</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- opinion of</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Facts—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- judicial notice of</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feeling—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- statement by crowd expressing.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Expressions of feelings or impressions.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ferrotyp e—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- identification by</td>
<td>51a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Festivals—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- judicial notice of</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fiduciary relation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Good faith: onus</td>
<td>584-588</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Field book—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- of survey</td>
<td>257</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Filiation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- presumption of</td>
<td>588</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Finger-impressions—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- opinion on</td>
<td>297, 304, 306, 406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- thumb-impression</td>
<td>297a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Flag—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- judicial notice of</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foot-marks—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- proof from</td>
<td>36a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foreign—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court: meaning of</td>
<td>269a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgment: presumption: evidence of jurisdiction</td>
<td>271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foreign—(contd.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>custom and usage</td>
<td>300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document: construction of</td>
<td>301a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial record, proof of</td>
<td>417, 438, 437</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foreign Country—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acts of executive: proceedings of legislature: proof</td>
<td>413</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>other documents of: proof</td>
<td>413</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foreign Court—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>definition of</td>
<td>262a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foreign Expressions—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning</td>
<td>515</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foreign Judgment—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of jurisdiction</td>
<td>271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>operating as bar to suit in British India</td>
<td>271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in rem</td>
<td>273, 275a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matrimonial</td>
<td>277</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>obtained by fraud</td>
<td>289a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foreign Law—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>261, 262</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion on</td>
<td>297, 300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Forfeiture—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>answer exposing witness to</td>
<td>708</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Forger y—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document</td>
<td>357</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of documents in this country</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>signature of drawer a</td>
<td>679, 680</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Formality—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to due performance of</td>
<td>624</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fraud—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>assumption of systematic proof of</td>
<td>34 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission made with fraudulent purpose</td>
<td>188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>foreign judgment obtained by</td>
<td>271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>degree re-opened on ground of</td>
<td>277</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgment obtained by 285, 287—290 charges of, cannot be properly tried on affidavit</td>
<td>286a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>setting aside of decree obtained by</td>
<td>286a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nature of, which must be proved to set aside judgment</td>
<td>286</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of document obtained by secondary evidence</td>
<td>359</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>invalidation of document on ground of</td>
<td>467, 473, 486</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of: onus</td>
<td>536, 539—541, 564</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in case of will</td>
<td>565</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not to be presumed</td>
<td>565</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption against</td>
<td>613</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of intent to defraud</td>
<td>630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of minor: relief against</td>
<td>644, 645</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

Fraud—(cont'd.)
against creditors: benami 657, 658 whether party to, can show truth of transaction 662 on professional privilege in respect of 696

G Gazette—publication in, fixing party with notice 97 notification in 258-261 evidence of various matters 260 medium to prove notice 260 presumption as regards 342, 425, 426

Genealogical purpose—
meaning of 218

General custom of right—
See "Statement as to matter of public and general interest."
meaning of 313
See "Custom," "Right."

Geography—divisions of: judicial notice 339, 343

Gift—attestation of 398

Good Character—previous 325, 326
See "Character."

Good faith—
facts showing 37, 87, 89n., 91, 94n., 96, 98 relative position of parties considered in determining, or bad faith 99 burden of proving 541, 584-588
presumption of 584, 622

Good-will—fact showing 87, 90n.

Government—proof of: Acts, orders and notifications of 413 proclamations of 413 map or plan made by authority of 432 revenue: onus 541

Grant—evidence of terms of 452-466
variance of 466-482

Grounds—of opinion when relevant 321

Guardian—and ward: admission 129, 130 power of 129 alienation by 547

Guardian ad litem—
admission by 111, 138

Habeas corpus—write of 631

Habits—presumption 601

Handwriting—in public register: proof of 251 opinion as to 295, 297, 309-313 identification of 297 expert on 302-304
peculiarity of 302, 302n. meaning of, to be acquainted with 309-313 proof of 213n., 310, 312, 394 comparison of 313 of attesting witnesses 400 presumption of, in case of an ancient document 441-443

Hastabud—papers 244

Hatchment—statement on 217

Hath Chitta—book 240

Headings—of sections 2

Hearsay—meaning of 11, 12 Int., 12n., 382, 382n. reason for exclusion of 72 Int.
objection to such reason 72, 73 Int.
not receivable 361
why excluded 361, 362 exceptions to rule against 361 witness giving, should be at once stopped 30 should not be taken down 30 consent to abide by testimony does not bind to hearsay 30n.
admission founded on 114, 126n.
statement by person who cannot be called as witness 190-235 statements against interest based on 212, 212n. on upon hearsay 220, 221 as to matter of general interest 222 as to public and private rights 222, 223 opinion based on 317 doctrine of 334 rule against 362, 363 in cross-examination 364 definition of 361
evidence of answers given on search 386
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hearsay — (cont’d.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>offered to prove estoppel</td>
<td>663a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement in absence of accused</td>
<td>775a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>exclusion of</td>
<td>733</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inadmissible in cross-examination</td>
<td>735</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Highway Board -</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by way-warden of</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hindu Law —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>family: admission by manager of</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>custom of usage in</td>
<td>67</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>powers or guardian under</td>
<td>129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to joint family</td>
<td>532</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>purchaser from Hindu wife</td>
<td>532</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>joint properties</td>
<td>541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>partition</td>
<td>544</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>self-acquisition</td>
<td>544</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stridhan</td>
<td>545</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>alienation by widow</td>
<td>546</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by manager or guardian</td>
<td>547</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by sasht</td>
<td>548</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inheritance: adoption</td>
<td>549</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>alienation by father</td>
<td>550</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption: manager: suit by</td>
<td>612</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>reversioner</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption: custom: acquisition</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by widow adoption: donatio mortis causa:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>endowment custom: joint property</td>
<td>609</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>History</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matters of public: reference to</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>family</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Holding of office —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Holidays</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial notice of</td>
<td>339</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Horoscope</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission in</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement in</td>
<td>217</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hostilities</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial notice of</td>
<td>339</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Husband</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect of admissions of wife as against</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of party to suit competent</td>
<td>687</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>competency of, in criminal action</td>
<td>687</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>communications during marriage</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hypothetical question —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>305</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Identification —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>production of privileged document for purpose of</td>
<td>707</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See “Identity.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Identity —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of evidence of</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witnesses’ belief as to</td>
<td>50a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of individual: incidents of domestic history</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>necessary for</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of parties named in public record, proof of</td>
<td>251</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion as to</td>
<td>252</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of persons, things and writings</td>
<td>295</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, by photo, engraving, portrait</td>
<td>295a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of party who gave evidence</td>
<td>425</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>parol evidence: descriptions of</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, by name</td>
<td>619</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>727</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ignorance of law —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no estoppel</td>
<td>640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Illegality —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document: evidence to show</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of: onus</td>
<td>466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Illegible characters —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence as to</td>
<td>536</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Illegitimacy —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement by person as to his own</td>
<td>219a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See “Legitimacy.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Illustrations —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to sections</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ill-will —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fact showing</td>
<td>87, 89a, 90a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Impartiality —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>want of, in witness</td>
<td>758</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Impartibility —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>53a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Impreachment —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of credit 737a., 737, 763, 764, 765—772</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Imperfect description —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in document</td>
<td>511</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Impression —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statements by crowd expressing.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See “‘Expressions of feelings or impressions.’”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Incapable of giving evidence” —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement by person</td>
<td>194</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witness: use of deposition</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Incapacity —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot be set up in bar of action</td>
<td>644</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Incompetency —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>want of jurisdiction. See “’Jurisdiction’”’</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Witness.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inconsistency —</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>facts showing</td>
<td>57</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Digitized by Google
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Incriminating document - production of</td>
<td>705</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Incriminating question - answer to</td>
<td>707</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witness not excused from answering</td>
<td>708–710</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inducement - to confess</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>removal of impression caused by 172</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Induction - deduction and</td>
<td>19 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proceeding of</td>
<td>20 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>different kinds of method of</td>
<td>20½ Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>application of the method of</td>
<td>20 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>steps for complete method of</td>
<td>20 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Infancy - presumption</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Infant - See &quot;Minor.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inference - from assertion to matter asserted</td>
<td>31, 33 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>its difficulties</td>
<td>31 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from facts proved to fact not otherwise proved</td>
<td>33 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>uncertainty of, assertion to matter asserted</td>
<td>33 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from assertion to truth</td>
<td>33 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to cause and effect of event:</td>
<td>38 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>caution</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion formed by</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to presumption</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admisssibility of fact, supporting or rebutting</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement suggesting: admission</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>drawn from fact: admission which is mere</td>
<td>189a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Information - as to commission of offence</td>
<td>693, 694</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>obtained for purpose of litigation</td>
<td>703–705</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Information and Belief - admissibility of</td>
<td>7, 7s</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Informant - not accomplice</td>
<td>712</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inheritance - onus</td>
<td>549, 550</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Injury - accidental: onus</td>
<td>536</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocence - presumption of</td>
<td>19, 323, 537, 538, 597, 612, 614–616</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of, affected by rule</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to onus in case of special knowledge</td>
<td>569</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>other presumptions yield to that of 612</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocence - (contd.) presumptions in disfavour of</td>
<td>616</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptions of, in civil actions</td>
<td>613</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innendo - evidence to prove</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inquiries - judicial and scientific, compared</td>
<td>23 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>their resemblances</td>
<td>23 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>their differences</td>
<td>23 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>unlimited in scientific</td>
<td>23 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>but limited in judicial</td>
<td>24 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>object of scientific</td>
<td>24 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>object of judicial</td>
<td>24 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence in judicial</td>
<td>25 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence in scientific</td>
<td>25 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>advantages of judicial over scientific</td>
<td>25 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opportunities of parties in judicial</td>
<td>27 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>summary of results as to</td>
<td>27 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>complexity of relevant facts in judicial</td>
<td>27, 28 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>leading differences between judicial investigation and physical</td>
<td>27, 28 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>summary of the results of</td>
<td>26 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>approximate generalization is more useful in judicial than in scientific</td>
<td>28 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>degrees of liabilities in judicial</td>
<td>28 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>their moral certainty</td>
<td>28 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>classes of inference in judicial</td>
<td>29 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Insanity - feigning</td>
<td>45a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>medical evidence as to</td>
<td>294</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inadmissibility of non-expert testimony and general reputation</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption</td>
<td>601, 620</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inscription - in banner: parol evidence of</td>
<td>355a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>388</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In rem - judgment. See &quot;Judgment.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Insolvent - Debtor's Act: certified copies of proceedings</td>
<td>251</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Bankrupt.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Insolvency - jurisdiction: judgment</td>
<td>272, 278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>552</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Bankruptcy&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inspection - by Court</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof effected by</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of public document</td>
<td>406, 415</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Inspection— (concluded.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of privileged document</td>
<td>683</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document shown to witness</td>
<td>753</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document by Court</td>
<td>784</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Instances—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of right or custom</td>
<td>62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof by</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in which right claimed : judgment 280.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Insurance—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>552</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Intention—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>facts showing</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inferred from subsequent conduct of accused</td>
<td>41.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of parties to instrument expressed by conduct</td>
<td>45.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of bankrupt leaving dwelling-house</td>
<td>51n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fact showing</td>
<td>87, 88n, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 94n, 96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof of</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not to be inferred from antecedent declaration</td>
<td>96.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of character to show</td>
<td>325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as deducible from conduct</td>
<td>451n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of testator</td>
<td>501, 502</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of guilty</td>
<td>537</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of</td>
<td>620</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>criminal</td>
<td>620, 621</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>615, 733</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interest—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement against 192, 195, 206—213</td>
<td>See &quot;Statement against interest.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matters of public and general 192, 195, 213—216</td>
<td>See &quot;Statement as to matter of public and general interest.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>evidence as to, due 492</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interlineation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion as to</td>
<td>302—304</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interpleader—suit</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>681</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interposition—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of questions in examination 733n.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interpretation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document, evidence in aid of 450</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interpretation clauses of Act</td>
<td>2, 9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interpreter—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statements of agents 125n.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court : examination of 518</td>
<td>professional communication made through 696</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interrogation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>confession obtained upon</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interrogatory—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to damage sustained</td>
<td>62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>answer to : admissions</td>
<td>112, 114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>answer to, of co-defendant</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cross : opportunity to cross-examine 233</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission in answer to 349</td>
<td>when not compilable 607n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>discriminating questions</td>
<td>706, 709</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Intimidation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>invalidation of document on ground of 467, 488</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Investigation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>leading differences between judicial, and physical inquiries 27, 28 Int.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Irrelevancy—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of judgments 281, 285</td>
<td>See &quot;Relevancy.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Irrelevant Facts—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>what are 72, 75 Int.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ism-navisi—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>papers 243</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Issue of fact—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>recording of 11</td>
<td>ambiguity as to confining evidence to 11 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>facts in 13 Int.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Issue—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>or failure of issue 218</td>
<td>judgments barring trial of 270, 271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Invalidation—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document 467, 486</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inventions—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>register of 251</td>
<td>onus 553</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

J

- Jaghirdar—
  - admission by 121
- Jal baki—
  - papers 243
- Jamabandi—
  - papers 243
  - when public document 409
- Jama-vasil-baki—
  - papers 241, 242
  - value of 242
- Joint contractor—
  - effect of death of 131, 132, 138
    - admission by 132n, 126
    - acknowledgment barring limitation 120, 130, 133
- Joint crime—
  - admission of parties engaged in 123
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>INDEX.</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Joint property—</td>
<td>Page.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption</td>
<td>611</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joint tenant—</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joint tort—</td>
<td>123</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission of parties engaged in</td>
<td>123</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Judge—</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>included in &quot;Court&quot;</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must not import his own knowledge</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>should abstain from looking at</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>what is not evidence</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>answers to questions by</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>questions by</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when bound to try collateral issue</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>protected by judgment</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>refreshing memory of</td>
<td>347, 348</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>note of, sufficient record of fact</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumed to do duty</td>
<td>614</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>called as witness</td>
<td>688—690</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must not rely on statements made to him out of Court</td>
<td>689a. competency of, in case tried by himself</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must be without interest</td>
<td>689</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to decide as to admissibility</td>
<td>727—795</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>discretion of, as to examination of witness</td>
<td>730</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cross-examination upon question put by</td>
<td>730</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>questions by</td>
<td>789—790</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>order of production by</td>
<td>789</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>JUDGMENT—</td>
<td>74, 75 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect of, in other cases</td>
<td>74, 75 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>basis of</td>
<td>11, 17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of</td>
<td>45, 71</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in proof of public or general rights or customs</td>
<td>63, 71n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissible as res judicata</td>
<td>71</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in rem</td>
<td>71, 72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relating to matters of a public nature</td>
<td>71, 72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of, as a &quot;transaction&quot; or &quot;instance&quot; under s. 13</td>
<td>71—84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing motive</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relating to matter of a public nature</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>operating as admission</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on matter of public and general interest</td>
<td>222n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>for or against remainderman</td>
<td>223n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>public record</td>
<td>246, 247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>conclusive of its existence distinguished from its truth</td>
<td>266, 271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>domestic</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Judgment—(void.)</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>foreign</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when relevant</td>
<td>266—292</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in personam</td>
<td>266, 267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in rem</td>
<td>266, 267, 268—272, 273—275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility and effect of, tendered as evidence of its truth</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>conclusive of its truth in favour of the Judge</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not generally evidence between strangers or party and stranger</td>
<td>267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>probate, matrimonial, admiralty, insolvency</td>
<td>267, 272—278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>barring suit showing ipsa pendentia</td>
<td>267, 268, 272—278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>barring suit where remedy might have been used for, in former action</td>
<td>267, 272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>barring suit showing res judicata</td>
<td>267, 268, 272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when conclusive</td>
<td>267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relating to matter of a public nature</td>
<td>267, 278—281</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>existence of fact in issue or relevant fact</td>
<td>267, 281—285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel by</td>
<td>267, 268, 269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>foreign</td>
<td>267, 271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in criminal case</td>
<td>271, 272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>declaring validity of adoption</td>
<td>274</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>declaring partibility of property and rule of descent</td>
<td>274n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in rem: history of</td>
<td>274n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>upon question of legitimacy</td>
<td>274n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>reading of, in connection with decree</td>
<td>279n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>irrelevant</td>
<td>281—285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>conclusive of its existence, date and legal consequences</td>
<td>283</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>where record is matter of inducement</td>
<td>284</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in criminal not receivable in civil action and vice versa</td>
<td>284</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by Court without jurisdiction</td>
<td>285, 286</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>obtained by fraud</td>
<td>285, 287—290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>obtained by collusion</td>
<td>285, 290, 291</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>certified copy of</td>
<td>410</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of contents</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Judicial decision—</td>
<td>25 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>error of, how cured</td>
<td>25 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Judicial evidence—</td>
<td>17 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>general theory of</td>
<td>17 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Judicial inquiry—</td>
<td>See Inquiries</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Judicial notice—</th>
<th>76 Int.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of what facts court takes</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof effected by</td>
<td>265</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of law of the land</td>
<td>334, 336, 337, 341</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dispenses with proof</td>
<td>338, 340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of accession and sign manual of Sovereign</td>
<td>339, 342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of laws</td>
<td>338, 341</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of Statutes</td>
<td>338, 342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of articles of war</td>
<td>339, 342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of proceedings of parliament</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of seals</td>
<td>339, 344</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in respect of public officers</td>
<td>339, 344</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of existence of State and Sovereign</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of proceedings of councils</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of public festivals</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of facts</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of holidays</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of British territories</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of hostilities</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of flag</td>
<td>340, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of divisions of time</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of geographical divisions</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>lists of facts given, not complete</td>
<td>340, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of Court officers</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of advocates, attorneys, pleaders</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of necessity for production of book or document</td>
<td>340, 347—348</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of course of nature</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of English words</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of custom</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of facts of which English Courts take notice</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of lists of land-holders</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of bye-laws</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of matters appearing in the proceedings</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of matters directed to be noticed by the other Acts</td>
<td>304</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of notifications in gazette</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of list of Talukdars</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Judicial proceeding—

| application of Act to | 6 |
| states made in parties’ presence during | 49s |
| proof that evidence was given in | 226, 623, 624 |
| presumption as to regularity of | 226, 624 |

Judicial record—

| foreign : presumption | 436—438 |

Jurisdiction—

| evidence given in Court without | 226, 227 |
| judgment without | 285, 286 |
| presumption of | 602, 613, 623, 624 |

Jurisdiction—(contd.)

| consent cannot give | 639 |
| estoppel against pleading want of | 639 |

Juror—

| witness | 686 |
| competency of | 689s. |

Jury—

| view by | 13 |
| province of, to judge of intention | 92s. |
| charge to, in case of accomplice | 714, 715 |
| evidence | 731, 795 |
| examination of witness by | 795 |
| personally acquainted with fact | 795 |

Just tertii—

| agent cannot set up | 681 |

K

Kanungo—

| papers | 244 |

"Kept out of the way"—

| witness : use of deposition | 225, 230 |

Khasra—

| plan | 253s., 256 |

Khoti—

| lands | 271 |

Knowledge—

| what it is composed of | 18 Int. |
| fact showing, 87, 88s, 90s, 91, 94. | 94s, 96—98 |
| guilty : proof | 537 |
| facts specially within : onus | 569—572 |
| proof of | 615 |
| presumption of | 520 |
| presumption of estoppel | 665 |

Kulachar—

| meaning of | 66 |
| proof of | 85, 86 |
| opinion on | 317 |

Kurta—

| admission by | 126 |
| relation of, to members of family | 126s. |

L

Lakhiraj—

| onus | 553, 554 |
| different classes of | 553, 554 |
| onus | 562, 563 |
| inquiry into validity of : date of acquisition of territories | 594 |
| onus on claimant to | 629 |

Land—

| presumptions as to holding of | 626—631 |

See "Landlord and Tenant."
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Landlord—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>and tenant: proof by parol of relation</td>
<td>455n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and tenant: onus</td>
<td>554, 555</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>enhancement of rent</td>
<td>555</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>remission</td>
<td>556</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ejectment</td>
<td>556</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>intermediate tenure</td>
<td>557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fractional portion of rent</td>
<td>557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of part-possession</td>
<td>557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and tenant: rent-free and</td>
<td>562, 563</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and tenant: relationship: onus</td>
<td>574, 575</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>continuance of relationship</td>
<td>574</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and tenant: encroachment</td>
<td>628</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptions as to holding of land</td>
<td>628—631</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| Latent Ambiguity—                                                        |       |
| See "Ambiguity."                                                        |       |

| Law—                                                                   |       |
| technical and general elements of 10 Int. of the land: judicial notice of | 261 |
| foreign and colonial                                                   | 262 |
| judicial notice of                                                      | 338, 340, 341 |
| book containing: presumption                                           | 409 |
| presumption of knowledge                                               | 622 |

| Law Books—                                                              |       |
| relevancy of statements in                                              | 286, 289 |
| presumption of genuineness of                                            | 261 |

| Law Report—                                                            |       |
| relevancy of statement in                                              | 261, 262 |

| Law of Evidence—                                                       |       |
| lex fori                                                                | 1 |
| applicable to British India                                            | 1 |
| English law of                                                         | 2 |
| See English Law of Evidence                                             |       |

| Laws of Nature—                                                        |       |
| expert evidence as to                                                  | 591 |

| Leading question—                                                      |       |
| in deposition in former trial                                          | 229 |
| in examination-in-chief                                               | 734 |
| in cross-examination                                                  | 734 |

| Lease—                                                                |       |
| See "Landlord;" "Tenant."                                             |       |

| Legal adviser—                                                        |       |
| admission made to                                                      | 112 |
| confidential communication with                                        | 696 |
| refusing to produce document                                          | 707 |

| Legal representative—                                                  |       |
| meaning of                                                             | 134 |

| Legislature—                                                          |       |
| proceedings of: proof                                                 | 413 |

| Legitimacy—                                                            |       |
| questions of                                                           | 218, 219n. |
| judgments in question                                                 | 274n. |
| proof of: by treatment                                                | 318, 319 |
| onus                                                                    | 557 |

| Legitimacy— (contd)                                                     |       |
| presumption of                                                         | 588, 613 |
| birth during marriage conclusive                                      | 588—594 |
| Mahomedan law                                                          | 616 |

| Letter—                                                                |       |
| admissibility of, found after arrest                                   | 45n. |
| previous, showing intention of latter                                  | 90n. |
| in course of transmission                                              | 97n. |
| refusal to receive: knowledge of contents                             | 98n. |
| presumption of receipt of                                              | 105 |
| none that properly addressed                                          | 105n. |
| left with servant of addressee                                        | 105 |
| sending to post office                                                | 105 |
| registered: refusal of addressee to receive                            | 105n. |
| postmark on                                                            | 106 |
| presumption as to date of arrival                                     | 106n. |
| containing admission: stamp                                           | 112n. |
| written "without prejudice"                                           | 146, 147 |
| date of                                                                | 196, 206 |
| connected series of letters: how much of, to be proved                 | 263, 264, 265 |
| contract contained in several                                          | 453, 461 |

| Letters of administration—                                             |       |
| See "Administration" and "Judgment."                                  |       |

| Lex fori—                                                              |       |
| evidence applicable is that of                                         | 1 |

| Libel—                                                                |       |
| proof that, referred to plaintiff                                     | 224 |
| meaning of word in action for                                          | 515 |
| action for: damages                                                   | 62n. |
| evidence of animus                                                    | 89n. |
| opinion to prove innuendoes of                                        | 296 |

| Licensee—                                                             |       |
| estoppel of                                                            | 636n., 672, 679, 681 |

| Lien—                                                                 |       |
| resistance to subpoena on ground of                                   | 381 |
| document withheld on ground of                                        | 708 |

| Life—                                                                 |       |
| onus                                                                   | 557, 572, 573 |
| love of: presumptions                                                 | 573 |

| Limitation—                                                            |       |
| acknowledgments extending                                             | 480 |
| onus                                                                   | 557, 569, 587 |
| in suits for possession                                               | 583 |
| acknowledgment: secondary evidence                                    | 379 |

| Lis mota—                                                              |       |
| meaning of                                                             | 215 |
| statements as to relationship made before                              | 221 |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>INDEX.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Page.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lis mota (contd.) conditions as to, do not apply to judgments</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lis pendens See &quot;Judgment.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Literary Society documents of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Literature matters of: reference to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lithograph a document</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lithography documents made by</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Litigation presumptions relating to information obtained for purpose of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Local custom opinion as to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Local expressions meaning of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Local investigation is oral evidence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof afforded by</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Local usage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Logic Mill's theory of, as to facts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lunatic not necessarily incompetent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manager of a property: admission by, as to title</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of joint Hindu family: admission</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of Hindu family, cannot revive barred debt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>alienation by</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>loan contracted by: presumption</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map a document</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement in, as to public or general rights</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Government survey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Survey Map.&quot; certified copy of presumption as to ancient</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>thak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to 432–434 made for purpose of cause 433, 438 presumption as to 438 order for possession referring to order for possession referring to map</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>published: made by Government authority: relevancy of statement in</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marginal notes of Act</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marine Courts Aot applicable to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mark on document; opinion as to 310, 311 proof of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by attesting witness</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Market value meaning of See &quot;Value.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Markman See &quot;Mark.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marriage breach of promise, damages</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of member of family</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>shown by conduct</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>shown by repute</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>entry of, in India</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>register</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>certificate of, from India Office</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion not sufficient to prove 318–320 general reputation as to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dissolution of earlier, onus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magistrate included in Court</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>confession in presence of, while in police custody</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>called as witness</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>information received by, as to offence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mahomedan Law presumptions</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maintenance cases, corroboration</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malice proof of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fact showing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malicious prosecution conduct of party in case of action for: damages</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>suit for: admissibility of judgment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>intention of defendant</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inference of malice</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table> Marriage—(contd.)
birth during, conclusive proof of legitimacy .. 588-504 evidence that person unmarried, premption as to continuance of state .. 601n.
preservation in favour of .. 613
Mahomedan law .. 616
presumptions relating to .. 617-618 communications during .. 690-692

Matrimonial Jurisdiction—judgment in .. 272, 277

Matrimonial proceeding—competency of witness .. 808

Material of fact—definition of .. 10 admission receivable to prove .. 115 distinguished from matter of opinion .. 294
meaning of .. 733

Material of law—
meaning of .. 10 admission receivable to prove .. 115 party not bound by admission on .. 128

Material of opinion—distinguished from matter of fact 294 See "Opinion."
meaning of .. 733

Material required by law to be reduced to form of document—variance of .. 486-503
evidence of .. 452-462

Maxims—as to human conduct .. 25, 26 Int.
their application .. 25 Int.
their limitation .. 25 Int. judicial, simpler than scientific .. 26 Int.

Quod ex facto oritur ambiguam verificatione facti tollitur .. 503

Res inter alios judicata nullum inter alios prejudicium facit .. 281 Fraus et jus nunquam cohabitant .. 286

Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta .. 104, 418, 419, 420, 422, 432
439, 602, 623, 627

Contemporanea exposito est optima et fortissima in lege .. 451

Nihil tam conveniens est natur-ali aquilati quam unum quodque dissolvit eo ligamine quo ligatum est .. 404

In judicio non creditur nisi juratio .. 523

Actori incumebit probatio .. 524

Maxims—(contd.)

"A negative is incapable of proof" .. 524

Esi incumebit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat .. 524

Per rerum naturam factum negantis probatio nulla est .. 525
Poli or est Considio defendentis .. 524

Reus excipiendo fl actor .. 524

Pater est quem nuptiae demonstrat .. 589
Omnia praesumuntur contra spolitorem .. 606

Odioea et inhonestas non sunt in lege praesumenda .. 613
Ignorantia juris hand excusat .. 621
Res ipa loquitur .. 614
Debitor non praesumitur donare .. 622

Qui sentit commodum sentire debit et onus .. 608

Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere .. 708

Ponderantur testes non numeran-tur .. 718n.

"Better that ten guilty men should escape than that one innocent man should suffer" 17n.

Frustra probatur quod probatum non relevat .. 27

Omnis consensu toluit errorem .. 30n.

Fateur facinus qui judicium fugi .. 44n.

Optimus interpretes rerum usus .. 45
qui tacet consentire videtur .. 49

Habemus optimum testem con-stantem reum .. 109

Qui tacit per alium facit per se .. 120

Nemo moriturus praesumitur mentiri .. 191

Quod per recordum probatum, non debet esse negatum .. 266

Res inter alios acta vel judicata alteri nocere non debet .. 267, 281

Interest rei publicae ut sit fuis litium .. 272

Nemo debet bis puniri pro uno delicto .. 272

Nemo debet bis vexari pro una eadem causa .. 272

Cuilibet in arte sua credendum est .. 293

Vox audita perit; litera scripsit manet .. 306

'May presume'— meaning of .. 20

Meaning—of words .. 515-519
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>INDEX.</th>
<th>PAGE.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Measurement papers—</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>prepared by butwara amin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mechanic—</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mechanical agencies—</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of similar facts admissible</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medical certificate—</td>
<td>300n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inadmissibility of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medical man—</td>
<td>301, 301a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>post-mortem examination by</td>
<td>307</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Memory, refreshing—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Refreshing Memory.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mental condition—</td>
<td>48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>declarations as evidence of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>person may testify to his own</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mental disease—</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence as to</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mental feeling—</td>
<td>42n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>complaint evidence of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Merchants—</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>accounts tendered by</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mesne profits—</td>
<td>535</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mind—</td>
<td>87, 94, 100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fact showing state of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission as to existence of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>state of</td>
<td>140, 143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minor—</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>death of: cessation of representation</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>power of guardian</td>
<td>129, 130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by guardian of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissions by guardian ad litem and next friend</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nature of certificate of guardianship of</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof of minority</td>
<td>560</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>falsely representing himself to be of age</td>
<td>645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel in case of</td>
<td>644–646</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relief against fraud of</td>
<td>645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>liability for tort</td>
<td>645, 646</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>obligation to restore</td>
<td>645, 646</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acquiescence of, after majority</td>
<td>660, 660n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minority—</td>
<td>535</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of: onus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mistake—</td>
<td>188, 189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission founded on</td>
<td>467, 490, 491</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence to show</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>examinamion of witness by</td>
<td>737, 744</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mitigation—</td>
<td>330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of damages</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>characters</td>
<td>330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money Order Office—</td>
<td>241n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>books of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moral Certainty—</td>
<td>28 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>a question of prudence and not of calculation</td>
<td>28 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moral conviction—</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>does not exclude departure from rules of evidence</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mortgage—</td>
<td>396, 399</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>attestation of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document apparently conveyance but really</td>
<td>474</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof</td>
<td>560</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>extinction of: presumption</td>
<td>630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption: keeping alive prior</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>apparent deed of sale really a</td>
<td>635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>liability of fraudulent minor to decree for sale</td>
<td>646</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>mortgagee permitting property to be sold: estoppel</td>
<td>654</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel against mortgagee</td>
<td>655</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>redemption: estoppel</td>
<td>660</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>mortgagor acknowledging receipt of mortgage-money</td>
<td>661n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel in case of</td>
<td>672</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>property held in; production of document</td>
<td>705</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mortgages—</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acknowledgment barring limitation</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>purchase by, at sale in execution</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>accounts of: income-tax papers inadmissible in favour of</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motive—</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgment showing</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>39, 42–44</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of similar facts to prove</td>
<td>39n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>absence of</td>
<td>43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>affecting probabilities</td>
<td>43n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>adequacy of</td>
<td>43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>for parting with goods: false pretences</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>615, 733</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Municipality—</td>
<td>413</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>record of proceedings, public document</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Municipal—</td>
<td>251</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>registers</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>committees: proceeding of</td>
<td>251</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

| Mural tablet—  | 217 |
| statement on  | 17  |
| secondary evidence of  | N  |
| Naming—  | 250 |
| register of  | 539 |
| Native Christian—  | 161, 164 |
| usages  | 619 |
| Native State—  | 336, 342 |
| police officer of: confession  | Negative—  | 524, 525 |
| presumptions as to  | 564 |
| Navy—  | 100 |
| articles of war for  | 614 |
| Negative—  | 87, 91 |
| incapable of proof  | 614 |
| party stating: burden of proof  | 603, 604 |
| when necessary to prove  | 106, 133 |
| proof of  | 599, 625, 626, 680 |
| negligence—  | 679, 680 |
| contributory: evidence of  | 15 |
| fact showing  | 376, 382, 383 |
| onus  | 390, 393 |
| negligent raising presumption of  | 394 |
| not to be presumed  | 391 |
| estoppel by  | Court may dispense with  |
| Negotiable instrument—  | 439, 440 |
| notice of dishonour  | 721 |
| miscarriage of notice sent by  | 787, 798 |
| post  | 717—719 |
| admission by assignor  | 724 |
| presumption as to  | Number—  |
| negotiable in case of  | of fact supporting inference of  |
| Newspaper—  | 97 |
| publication in fixing party with  | 97 |
| notice  | 342, 425, 426 |
| presumption as to  | 133 |
| Next friend—  | 603, 604 |
| admission of  | Non-production—  |
| of documents: inference  | 603, 604 |
| Notary public—  | 339, 342 |
| seal of: judicial notice  | 399 |
| protest  | 413 |
| certificate of  | 417 |
| certificate of, authenticating de-  |
| clarations  | 432 |
| power-of-attorney executed be-  | 435 |
| fore  | 384 |
| credit given to  | 731 |
| foreign  | 731 |
| in King’s dominions  | 19 Int. |
| Not commonly intelligible characters—  | 515, 517 |
| evidence as to  | O  |
| Notice—  | 96—98 |
| proof of  | 97 |
| statutory definition of  | 98 |
| imputed  | 98 |
| constructive  | 98n. |
| from registration  | 259, 260 |
| through gazettes  | 336, 337, 349 |
| to admit fact  | 336 |
| to admit document  | 500 |
| onus of showing  | Notice to produce—  |
| document  | 376, 382, 383 |
| when not required  | 390, 393 |
| document, rules as to  | 391 |
| required in case of adversary  | 392 |
| contents of  | 393 |
| inspection of document produced  | 393 |
| refusal to produce  | 394 |
| Court may dispense with  | 390 |
| document: not produced: pre-  |
| sumption  | 439, 440 |
| document: when given  | 721 |
| document not produced after  | 787, 788, 789 |
| Notification—  | Notoriosity—  |
| relevancy—  | 259, 260 |
| of statement in  | 97 |
| Oath—  | 523 |
| evidence of: use of deposition in  |
| former trial  | 523, 684, 685 |
| examination of witness on  | 685 |
| judicial: nature of: history of  |
| legislation  | 795 |
| omission to administer  | 28, 29, 728 |
| Objection—  | 31 |
| to evidence by Court  | 31 |
| to evidence by parties  | 31 |
| proper time to make  | 31 |
| withdrawal of  | 31 |
| erroneous omission to take, does not  |
| make evidence admissible  | 143, 728 |
| to evidence: effect of absence  | 384 |
| of  | 731 |
| evidence: form of  | 731 |
| when should be made  | Observation—  |
| lesson from, of the world  | 19 Int. |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Obsolete expressions—</td>
<td>515, 517</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Occasion—</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fact the, of fact in issue or relevant facts</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Occupation—</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>showing identity</td>
<td>50, 51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of member of family</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Offence—</td>
<td>693, 694</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>information as to commission</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of official Communications—</td>
<td>692, 693</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>privileged</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Omission—</td>
<td>642, 649-669</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel by</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onus probandi—</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See “Burden of Proof.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Opening—</td>
<td>351</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of case by counsel</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Opinion—</td>
<td>46</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in relationship</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to identity</td>
<td>50n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of right and custom</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission, consisting of</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissible independently of its correctness as such</td>
<td>293</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grounds of admissibility of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of skilled witnesses when admissible</td>
<td>294</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of third persons when relevant</td>
<td>293-297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grounds of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matter of, distinguished from matter</td>
<td>294</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of fact</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from necessity</td>
<td>295n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to prove innuendo of libel</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to prove insanity</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to prove drunkenness</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to prove mental and physical condition</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to prove value</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to prove character</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on customs, rights, usages, tenents, relationship</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on foreign law</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on science</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on art</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of experts</td>
<td>297-309</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on handwriting</td>
<td>297, 302-305, 309, 313</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on finger-impressions</td>
<td>297-305</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of one expert upon another</td>
<td>299n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of scientific men</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of farmer and agriculturists</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of mechanics, artisans, workmen</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of banker</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Opinion—(contd.)</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of shop-keeper</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grounds of: corroboration</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rebuttal</td>
<td>308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of expert not called as witness</td>
<td>309</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to existence of general right</td>
<td>313 - 315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and custom</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to meaning of words or terms</td>
<td>316</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to usages, tenets etc.</td>
<td>315-317</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on relationship</td>
<td>317-320</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grounds of; when relevant</td>
<td>321</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence must be direct</td>
<td>360</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of experts in treatise</td>
<td>360, 364, 365</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement of; estoppel</td>
<td>666</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Opportunity—</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oral agreement—</td>
<td>466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>exclusion of evidence of</td>
<td>403</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinct subsequent</td>
<td>486, 494-496</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>existence of separate</td>
<td>487, 491, 492-494</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oral evidence—</td>
<td>76 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>facts to be proved by</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of irregularly recorded confession</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission as to contents of documents</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>oral admission as to contents of document</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must be direct; exception to rule</td>
<td>190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of deposition in former trial</td>
<td>227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to prove boundary</td>
<td>253n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must be direct</td>
<td>334, 335.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>what facts may be proved by</td>
<td>336-365</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>considered generally</td>
<td>334-359</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>value of</td>
<td>356</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of facts by</td>
<td>359, 360</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>exclusion of, by documentary evidence</td>
<td>447-452</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when not excluded by document</td>
<td>453</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>includes in case of dumb witness</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>writing and signs</td>
<td>687</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of statements concerning contents of documents</td>
<td>749</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Order—</td>
<td>266-292</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when relevant</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See “Judgment.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relating to matter of a public nature</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ownership—</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acts of, showing title</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>shown by possession</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acts of, ancient document</td>
<td>70w.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Topic</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ownership (contd.)</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>223, 256n., 280n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>act of</td>
<td>561</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>575–584</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof as to</td>
<td>630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of, where road boundary</td>
<td>630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>indicia of, left by owner with</td>
<td>655</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>third party; estoppel</td>
<td>655</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>P</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pals</td>
<td>651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>modes in which estoppel in, arise</td>
<td>635–642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel in</td>
<td>635–642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from what it sprang</td>
<td>636</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>modern sense of term</td>
<td>636</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panchayet</td>
<td>217n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>report of, as evidence of pedigree</td>
<td>217n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pardon</td>
<td>710, 712</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence given in hope of</td>
<td>710, 712</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parent</td>
<td>593, 594</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of, to prove non-access</td>
<td>593, 594</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parliament</td>
<td>338, 339</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of word</td>
<td>338, 342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proceedings of: judicial notice</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parol evidence</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See “Oral Evidence.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Partition</td>
<td>544</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>635, 636</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel by</td>
<td>635, 636</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proceedings: conclusiveness of</td>
<td>636</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Partner</td>
<td>119, 120n., 139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acknowledgment barring limitation</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by, before partnership</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ship or after dissolution</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel in case of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Partnership</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>liability of members of</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, by parol evidence</td>
<td>457, 465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>561</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relation of: onus</td>
<td>574</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>continuance of</td>
<td>574</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Part performance doctrine of</td>
<td>447, 478</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patent</td>
<td>672</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>licensor of</td>
<td>672</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patent ambiguity</td>
<td>134n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See “Ambiguity.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patniadar</td>
<td>536, 561</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>607, 608 631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Payment</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of: onus</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>indorsement</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made through ignorance, fraud, misrepre-</td>
<td>673</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sentation</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pedigree</td>
<td>195, 216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement in family</td>
<td>216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matters of</td>
<td>217n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>report of punchayet as evidence of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Penal Code</td>
<td>567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proving case within exceptions</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Penalty</td>
<td>708</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>answer exposing witness to</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pending suit</td>
<td>267, 269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>for same relief</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perjury</td>
<td>358</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no presumption of</td>
<td>295</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>prosecution for: corroboration</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Photography</td>
<td>718, 719</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>a document</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>identification by</td>
<td>51n., 295n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to identify party named in public register</td>
<td>251</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion as to execution</td>
<td>295</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Photography</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document named by</td>
<td>360, 370, 373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>copy made by comparison</td>
<td>404, 405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>value of</td>
<td>404, 405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Physical agencies</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of similar facts admissible</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Physical condition</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>declarations as evidence of</td>
<td>48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>person may testify to his own</td>
<td>295</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Physical Inquiries</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See Inquiries</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Physical Science</td>
<td>23Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>great object of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>advantage of inquirer of, over those</td>
<td>25 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of judicial</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Place</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of evidence as to</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Plan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission in</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not public document</td>
<td>410</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>a document</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relevancy of statement in</td>
<td>252–253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to</td>
<td>432, 438</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>made for purpose of cause</td>
<td>433, 438</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INDEX.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----------------</td>
<td>-----------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pleader—</td>
<td>admission by .</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of admission made to .</td>
<td>145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial notice ...</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>compromise of suit by .</td>
<td>352</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot disclose professional communication ...</td>
<td>694, 695</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>right of accused to be defended by . .</td>
<td>723</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pleading—</td>
<td>admission in 113n., 114, 337, 349,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel by . .</td>
<td>349n., 635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Plea of guilt—</td>
<td>evidence of admission ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect of . .</td>
<td>353</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pledge—</td>
<td>property held in: production of document ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Police—</td>
<td>undue influence by, to procure confession 164, 155, 156, 163, 165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statements made to officer while investigating case ...</td>
<td>159n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>reports, diaries and statements made before ...</td>
<td>159n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissions made to ...</td>
<td>162, 163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>confession to, cannot be proved ...</td>
<td>163—163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>confession made while in custody of ...</td>
<td>163—165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>custody: confession: information leading to discovery ...</td>
<td>166—172</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissions obtained by questions by . .</td>
<td>175n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dying declaration made to ...</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>diary: how much of, accused may see . .</td>
<td>264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Police-officer—</td>
<td>meaning of ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Police.&quot; collecting number of statements: evidence of ...</td>
<td>224</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement of witness to, not public record ...</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>report made by, not public document ...</td>
<td>411</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statements made to, during investigation ...</td>
<td>460</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witness sent by ...</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>information received by, as to offence ...</td>
<td>693, 694</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>examination by: incriminating question ...</td>
<td>710</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>restraint: complainant witness 721 diary of ...</td>
<td>752</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polygar—</td>
<td>position of: compared with manager of Hindu family ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Possession—</td>
<td>as proof of ownership ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of: ancient document ...</td>
<td>70n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence to show character of ...</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>decree, evidence of ...</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ancient ...</td>
<td>223</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>modern ...</td>
<td>223</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>whether Bengal Land Registration registers evidence of ...</td>
<td>249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>survey maps as evidence of ...</td>
<td>253—255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of title ...</td>
<td>254, 827</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of statement that party in ...</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, by parol ...</td>
<td>466, 578, 579</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>part, by tenant ...</td>
<td>557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptive evidence of ownership ...</td>
<td>575</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of title ...</td>
<td>576, 597</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>police order for: effect of ...</td>
<td>578</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>other evidence of, than parol 578—580 possessor suit under Specific Relief Act ...</td>
<td>580</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when force does not interrupt ...</td>
<td>580</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>limitations in suits for ...</td>
<td>583, 584</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of property evidence of crime 597, 598 presumption as to continuance of 600 not necessarily same as user ...</td>
<td>600</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>will prevail until title shown ...</td>
<td>630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Portrait—</td>
<td>family ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Post-mortem Examination—</td>
<td>by medical man ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Postmark—</td>
<td>on letter: evidence that letter in post ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of date of despatch ...</td>
<td>106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Post Office—</td>
<td>course of business of ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to posting ...</td>
<td>626</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Post Office Savings Banks—</td>
<td>books of ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Power of Attorney—</td>
<td>certified copy of ...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>declaration as to execution of 430—432 presumption as to ...</td>
<td>434—435</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of ...</td>
<td>435</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>execution of ...</td>
<td>436, 436</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>registered ...</td>
<td>436, 436</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Power of man—</td>
<td>to speak truth on what it depends 32 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preamble—</td>
<td>of Act ...</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

Pre-emption—
onus .......... 561

Preparation—evidence of ..... 39, 42, 43-46

Presence—statements made in party’s .......... 107

Press Copy—of documents .......... 370, 371

Presumption—meaning and history of the word 77 Int. ..... 77, 78 in criminal cases .......... 19a.
proof by .......... 15
of innocence .......... 19a, 328, 537, 538, 597, 612, 615-620 of law .......... 21 of fact .......... 22 conclusive .......... 21
rebutable .......... 21, 22 affecting burden of proof .......... 22a, 96 of knowledge of the law .......... 23 that person intends natural consequences of his own acts .......... 23 regularity .......... 38, 597, 602
from conduct .......... 44 of guilt: non-accounting for proerty .......... 88a.
of intention .......... 92a.
none that director knows contents of books of company .......... 97 of knowledge from access to ..
document .......... 97
of knowledge from constructive notice .......... 98 against fraud .......... 98 and dishonesty .......... 98a. of regularity of course of business .......... 104, 104a.
of receipt of letters .......... 105 one that letter properly addressed .......... 105a.
that letter sent to post office .......... 105 of delivery of telegram .......... 106 as to date of arrival of letter 106a.
of truth of that which party admits 144 none against party from refusal to submit to arbitration .......... 147 that party will not make statement against his interest unless true .......... 148 that person on point of death speaks truly .......... 191 in favour of regularity, use of deposition in former trial 227, 228 that party had opportunity of cross-examination .......... 232, 233

Presumption—cont’d
of truth in case of books of account 236 afforded by public record .......... 248 as to map .......... 253 of title from possession .......... 255 of genuineness of law-books .......... 261 with regard to foreign judgment .......... 261 gazettes, newspapers, private acts .......... 342 as to documents .......... 418, 419
as to genuineness of certified copy 419, 420 as to documents produced as record of evidence .......... 420-425 as to gazettes, newspapers, private acts and other documents .......... 426, 426 as to document admissible in England or Ireland without proof of seal or signature 426-432 as to maps or plans .......... 432-434 as to collection of laws and reports .......... 434 as to powers-of-attorney .......... 434-439 as to certified copies of foreign e judicial record .......... 430-438 as to books, maps and charts .......... 438 as to telegraphic messages 438, 439 as to due execution of document called for and not produced 439, 440 contra spoliatorum .......... 440 as to documents 30 years old burden of proof determined by .......... 522, 526 against apparent ownership .......... 531 as to jointness .......... 532 as to due execution .......... 537 in favour of continuance .......... 572 as to life and death .......... 572, 573 as to love of life and against suicide .......... 573a.

arising from possession .......... 575, 577 stands only till overcome by fact 577a. of good faith .......... 584 of marriage .......... 589 of filiation .......... 589 as to facts likely to have happened .......... 695-632 as to due performance of judicial and official acts .......... 695 evidence withheld .......... 595 refusal to answer .......... 595
bill of exchange .......... 595
continuance .......... 595, 608
common course of business 596, 595a, 603

of theft or receiving .......... 595, 597, 598 as to accomplice .......... 595, 598
INDEX.

Page.

Presumption—(contd.)

consideration for bill 596, 599 when events occur in the far past 598 none when evidence is all in 602
jurisdiction 602,603 of payment 607 conflicting 602
under Hindu law 609-612 strength of various kinds 612 rebuted by contrary and stronger presumption 614
conflicting 615 of guilt 615
under Mahomedan law 616 relating to marriage 617-619 physical 619 intention: knowledge 620-623 psychological 619 knowledge of law 621 of trade custom 621

as to knowledge of contents of a document 621 as to facts within witness's special means of knowledge 622 that person knows what he does 622 that man acts according to his interest 622
from conduct 622
regularity of judicial proceedings 623 regularity of official acts 624 as to adoption of usual course of business 625 as to negotiable instruments 625
as to documents 625

benami transaction 627,628
encroachment 628
as to giving and recording evidence 628 as to permanent tenancy 630 as to holding of land 628, 631 that grant is of permanent character 629 extinction of mortgage 630 of payments 631 in case of possession 631 litigation: procedure 631 partnership 631

mortgage 631
religion 631

distinction between, and estoppel 78 Int., 633

in case of negotiable instrument 680

Presumption of law—meaning of 596
See "Presumption"

Presumption of fact—See "Presumption."

Previous attempts—evidence of 44

Previous conviction—where relevant 87,101, 326, 327, 328 mode of proving 272

Previous statement—to corroborate witness 228 use of, as admission 228 use of 228,229 as evidence-in-chief 228 to discredit witness 228 in writing: cross-examination as to 750-753 inconsistent with evidence used to corroborate witness 765

Price—market 773
See "Value"

Primary evidence—meaning of 13 Int., 14, 369, 371 applicable to documents only 359 proof by 369,375

Principal—and surety: admission 133 acknowledgment of debt 133, 133a. and agent: relationship: onus 574, 575 continuance of relationship 574
estoppel against 647
estoppel in favour of 647

Principality—of estimating probability 29 Int. its identity with Mill's theory 30 Int.

Print—document in 369, 372

Private document—
meaning of 406

Privilege—distinguished from incompetency 634 of Judges and Magistrates 689, 690 of counsel against being called as witness 689a.
communications during marriage 690-692
evidence as to affairs of state 692, 693 official communication 692, 693 information as to commission of offence 693,694 professional communications 694,695 professional: not waived by volunteering evidence 696, 699 production of documents: subject of 705-706 of witnesses from suit or prosecution 722 INDEX.

Page.

Privy—admissions in respect of 133—139 meaning of 133a. necessity of estoppel 668

Privy—meaning of 133a.
See "Privy"

Privy Council—orders of regulations of: proof 412

Prize—cause: judgment of admiralty court in 275, 278

Probability—principle of estimating 29 Int.
its identity with Mill's theory 30 Int.
of statement 32 Int.
inference from cases of separate, independent and converging 34, 44 Int.
of truth of testimony 16, 16s.
preponderance of 17 affected by question of motive 43s.
facts showing 57—61
in favour of transaction 356 of case: number of witnesses 719

Probate—judgment 273—275
judgment, effect of 276a. judgment of Court refusing 276 no discretion to refuse 277 upon application for, only question is factum of will, not title 277a.
of will 412, 462, 461

Procedure—
burden of proof 534, 535
presumptions relating to 631

Proclamations—of Sovereign: proof 413

Production—of document 720, 784, 785, 793 of chattel 364, 365 and effect of evidence 522, 523 of title-deeds of witness not party 705 of document which another person could refuse to produce 705 of evidence: order of 725, 726 of document: objection to 728 of document: cross-examination 744
Judge's power to order 789

Professional—communications 694—705

Promissory Note—
See "Negotiable Instrument"

Proof—of relevant facts 16 Int. production of 16 Int.

Proof—(contd.)
nature of 15 in civil and criminal cases 17 in criminal cases 19 conclusive 21
of marriage 320 of custom and right 84—86 of ownership 86 of mental condition 93 admission made for purpose of dispensing with 128, 129 of dying declaration 200, 201 by public record 248 of foreign colonial law 261 of previous conviction or acquittal 272a. of handwriting and signature 310—313 considered generally 333—335
summary of rules with regard to 334 facts which require no 76 Int., 336, 337 waiver of 337
none required where facts admitted 348—353 admission dispensing with, in criminal cases 353 by oral evidence 354—359 by documentary evidence 360—369 of document 76 Int. 368—375 by secondary evidence 376—390 of signature and handwriting 394, 395 of execution 396, 397 of document required to be attested 397—402 of public document 406, 407, 408, 412—417 force of written 454 facts requiring no 524 conclusive of legitimacy 588—594 estoppel is only matter of 633 no particular number of witnesses required 717—719 of fact only admissible upon proof of other fact 727

Proper custody—
meaning of 441, 444—446

Propositions—
meaning of 18 Int.
what are true, and how framed 19 Int.

Prosecution—statement exposing party to 195 burden of proof on 537 contrast between evidence for, and course followed by prisoner 605 duty of, to produce all available evidence 605

W, LE
INDEX.

Prosecutor—

admission by . . . . 111, 121—140

criminal trial a proceeding between, and accused . . . . 225

King is, in all criminal proceedings . . . . 234, 235 character of . . . . 322, 329 duty of, in calling evidence . . . . 538 person should not be Judge and . . . . 689, 690

Prosecutrix—immoral character of . . . . 766

Protest—

before notary public . . . . 399

Proved—

meaning of . . . . 15

how much of statement is to be . . . . 203

Provincial expressions—

meaning of . . . . 517

Prvscio—

meaning of . . . . 529

Public—interest, statements as to matter of

See " Statements as to matters of Public and General Interest" book, entry in . . . . 244—252

See " Public Record"

Public documents—

entries in . . . . 236—244

why entitled to credit . . . . 236

meaning of . . . . 245, 246, 406, 408

secondary evidence of . . . . 388

proof of . . . . 368

considered generally . . . . 406—408

inspection of . . . . 406

proof of . . . . 406, 408, 416, 417, 427

what is a . . . . 407, 408, 409, 412

plaint, written statements are not, judgments and decrees are . . . . 410, 411 deposition, report by police-officer . . . . 410 municipal proceedings . . . . 411, 413, 413a.

proof of other official documents . . . . 413—419 public record of private document . . . . 414

Public officer—accession and functions of: judicial notice . . . . 339, 343

definition of . . . . 409

document forming act of . . . . 406, 409 presumption as to official character . . . . 419 writing by which, appointed . . . . 452, 461 presumption as to acts of . . . . 602, 603 presumed to do duty . . . . 613 presumption as to regularity of acts of . . . . (623, 624

Public officer—(contd.)

not to be compelled to disclose communications . . . . 692

Public record—

relevancy of entry in . . . . 244—252 principle upon which, admitted . . . . 244 errors and alteration in . . . . 246, 246a.

documents held admissible or not . . . . 246, 247 meaning of public document . . . . 245 delay and irregularity in making . . . . 246 statement to police-officer not . . . . 247 reports of public officers . . . . 247

proof by . . . . 248 presumption afforded by . . . . 248

no estoppel . . . . 248 absence of entry in . . . . 248 facts of which, is evidence . . . . 248—252

Bengal Land Registration Register 249

Collector's book . . . . 249 birth, baptism, naming, marriage deed and burial registers . . . . 250 proof of incidental particulars . . . . 251 proof of identity of parties named in . . . . 251, 252

Public servant—

entry made by . . . . 244

See " Public Record"

definition of . . . . 245

registrar of births and deaths . . . . 245

census officer . . . . 245 registering officer . . . . 245 manager of court of wards . 245a.

Purdanashin—

statements filed in Court in name of . . . . 112a, transaction with . . . . 587, 588 exemption from attendance . . . . 721

Q

Quantity—of evidence . . . . 717—719

Question—hypothetical . . . . 305a, 306

Quinquennial—papers . . . . 247

R

Rashness—

facts showing . . . . 87

Rasm-wa Riwaːj-i-khandan—

meaning of . . . . 66

Real evidence—

meaning of . . . . 12, 13

marks on ground . . . . 36

Digitized by Google
INDEX.

Page.

Rebuttal—fact which rebuts inference . . . 50 evidence in . . . 726n., 731, 732

Recall—of witness for cross-examination 737 of witness . . . . 723

Receipt—nature of: not a release 122n.
  for money, goods, security and other property . . . . 196, 202 oral evidence admissible notwithstanding . . . 453, 465 affecting onus . . . . 562 not conclusive . . . . 661

Receiving stolen goods—presumption of . . . 595, 597, 598

Recital—in Acts and Notifications 259, 260 as affecting burden of proof . . . . 562
  estoppel . . . . 660, 661

Records—estoppel by . . . . 633, 634
  See "Public Records"

Record of Court—obtaining copy of . . . . 415

Record of evidence—presumption as to what is 420–425 in judicial proceeding . . . . 421 taken in accordance with law . . . . 421 proof of identity of party giving evidence . . . . 425

Re-crimination—
  when allowed . . . . 771, 772

Re-examination—as to conversation cross-examined to . . . . 284 introduction of new matter . . . 729–744 rules as to . . . . 729–744 direction of . . . . 729 object of . . . . 731, 743, 744

Referee—admission by . . . . 111

Refreshing memory—reporter or shorthand writer, notes of evidence . . . . 228 by book of account . . . . 240 by copy of statute . . . . 261n.
  expert . . . . 294, 309 of Judge . . . . 347, 348
  in examination-in-chief . . . . 734 rules as to . . . . 776, 784

Refusal to answer—inference . . . . 595, 607

Register—public See "Public Record" under Bengal Land Registration Act 249

Register—(contd.)
  marriage . . . . 249, 250 of members of company . . . . 250 birth and death . . . . 250 baptism, naming, dedication, burial . . . . 250 of lands: village . . . . 251 public: certified copy . . . . 413

Registration—operating as notice . . . . 98n.
  of document containing admission . . . 112, 113 officer public servant . . . . 244, 245
  Act: copies given under . . . . 250 not proof of execution . . . . 343 document inadmissible for want of . . . . 384 Act: certified copy under . . . . 388, 389 want of; secondary evidence . . . 455, 456 evidence of subsequent oral agreement . . . . 467, 494, 495
  proof of . . . . 536, 537
  priority . . . . 630 notice of title . . . . 653n., 655

Regularity—presumption . . . . 597, 602

Rejection—of evidence . . . . 522, 523

Relation of parties—evidence as to relation of . . . . 51

Relationship—opinion on . . . . 46
  statements as to . . . 194, 195, 216–221 See "Statements as to Relation ship"

  by blood, marriage, adoption . . 195, 216–221
  opinion on . . . . 297 opinion, expressed by conduct . . . 297, 317–320

Relative—statement by . . . . 219

Relevancy—logical . . . . 25 legal . . . . 25 of facts . . . . 13 Int., 25–27 theory of . . . . 37 Int., 25 proof of . . . . 14 Int.
  definition of . . . . 25
  meaning of . . . . 37 Int.
  limit of . . . . 37 Int.
  illustrative cases on the subject of . . . . 39–71 Int.
  mode of describing . . . . 38 Int.
  obscurity of the definition of . . . 38 Int.
  of facts forming part of same trans.
  section . . . . 34
INDEX.

Relevancy—(cont'd.)

of facts constituting state of things under which facts in issue or relevant facts happened 34 of facts, the occasion, cause or effect of facts in issue or relevant facts 36 of motive, preparation and conduct 39, 40 of facts necessary to explain or introduce relevant facts 50 of facts showing conspiracy 54 of facts not previously dealt with as relevant 56 of fact showing amount of damage 61 of facts when right or custom is in question 62 of fact showing existence of state of mind or body or bodily feeling 87-101 of fact to show accident or intention 101 of existence of course of business 103-106 of admissions 140-144 of oral admissions as to contents of documents 144, 145 of admission in civil cases 145-147 of confession caused by inducement irrelevant 147-159 of confession to be determined by Court not jury 164 of confession made under promise of secrecy, etc. 163, 164 of facts stated by persons not witnesses 190-224 of certain evidence for proving, in subsequent proceeding, the truth of facts therein stated 225-235 of books of account 237-243 of entry in public record 244-252 of statements in maps, charts and plans 252-258 of statements as to fact of public nature in Acts and Notifications 258-261 of statements in law-books 261, 272 of judgments 263-292 of judgments in probate, matrimonial, admiralty, insolvency jurisdiction 272-278 of judgments relating to matters of a public nature 278-281 existence of judgment, order, decree, a relevant fact 281, 281-285

Relevancy (cont'd.)

of opinion evidence 293-301 of opinion as to handwriting 309-313 of opinion as to usages, tenets, etc. 315-317 of opinion on relationship 317-329 of ground of opinion 321 of character 322-332 of previous conviction 326, 327 and mode of proof: distinction 333 of fact depending upon proof of other fact 727
Judge may ask how question relevant 727

Relevant—as meaning admissible 237a.

Relevant fact—fact 9, 11 evidence may be given of 27

Religion—tenets of 317
presumption as to 631, 632 religious belief not required in witness 684

Religious foundation—constitution and government of 315-317

Remainderman—judgment for or against 232a.

Rent—enhancement and remission of See "Landlord." fractional portion of 557 free land 562, 563 enhancement of 563 payment of: presumption 631 estoppel by acceptance of 635 payment of, by mistake 673

Repeal—of enactments by Act 8

Reply—speech in 731 evidence in 731

Report—
of agent: admissibility of 125 of director: confidential 125 of surveyor to corporation 125 police 159a. of public officer: of what evidence 247 of inspector of company 250 Indian Law 341 law: presumption 434 admissible as hearsay evidence of reputed possession 578

Reporter—

note of evidence by 228
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>INDEX</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Representative in interest—meaning of</td>
<td>143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reputation—statement as to meaning of</td>
<td>213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in proof of private right</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to marriage</td>
<td>221n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in proof of right and custom</td>
<td>222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgments relating to matters of a public nature</td>
<td>279</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inadmissible to prove insanity</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>general as to marriage</td>
<td>320</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>328, 331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>328, 331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>general</td>
<td>331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of witness</td>
<td>708</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Repute—evidence of general</td>
<td>328n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Res gestae—statements part of evidence of</td>
<td>362n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>34n, 35, 35n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statements accompanying and explaining acts</td>
<td>46—48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of conspiracy</td>
<td>56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in proof of mental and physical condition</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of agency</td>
<td>123, 124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>principal and surety</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>self-serving evidence not to be confined with</td>
<td>143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dying declaration</td>
<td>199, 199n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>separate crime forming part of</td>
<td>615</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Residence—presumption</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Res judicata—See &quot;Judgment&quot; 267, 268—272</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>principle on which rule based</td>
<td>272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel by</td>
<td>634</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Respondent—admission or confession of admissibility of evidence of, against co-respondent</td>
<td>123n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resumption—right of</td>
<td>553</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retracted confession—See &quot;Confession&quot; 110, 147, 148</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Revenue—sale for arrears of registers</td>
<td>135—137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>survey: chittah</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Revenue officer—information received by, as to offence</td>
<td>693, 694</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reversioner—suit by: presumption</td>
<td>612</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Right—statement in document relating to See &quot;Document relating to Right and Custom&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>existence of: relevant facts 62—87</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kinds of: public, general, private 64</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>public or general: judgment, proof of</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion in proof of</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>84—86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement giving opinion as to public</td>
<td>213—216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement in document relating to transaction under s. 13 222—224</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>declaration by deceased person as to private</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>declaration as to public and general</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgment as to general or public</td>
<td>278—281</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion on</td>
<td>297, 313—315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>private opinion not admissible to prove</td>
<td>315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ring—statement on</td>
<td>217</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Road cess return—evidence</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot be used as evidence in favour of person submitting 203, 210</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ryot—admission by</td>
<td>131</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rule of Road—judicial notice of</td>
<td>339, 344</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>what is the</td>
<td>344</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>S</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Sale—in execution and for arrears of revenue</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>private</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>irregularity: onus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>apparent deed, really a mortgage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sale for arrears of Revenue—rights of purchaser</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sanity—presumption</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schedule—of Act</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Science—general object of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>great object of Physical</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion on points of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matters of: reference to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>conclusions of: judicial notice</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scientific Inquiries—</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See: Inquiry.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Scientific instruments—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>presumption of regularity in case of</td>
<td>38n</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Scientific Society—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>documents of</td>
<td>251</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Scientific man—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>opinion of</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Scientific expression—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>515</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Seal—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>opinion as to proof of</td>
<td>311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of Courts and persons: judicial notice</td>
<td>339, 342, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>comparison of documents admissible without proof of</td>
<td>402—405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judicial notice of</td>
<td>432</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Search—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>for document hearsay answers given on</td>
<td>395</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>for attesting witness</td>
<td>386</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>400</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sebait—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>alienation by</td>
<td>548</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of cases when, of contents of document admissible oral admission</td>
<td>14, 370, 371, 372 76, 77 Int. 144, 145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by counsel admitting proof by</td>
<td>351 399, 372, 376—390</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no degrees of</td>
<td>374</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when document in possession or power of other party</td>
<td>376</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when, may be given</td>
<td>376—390</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission of contents</td>
<td>377, 384</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>loss or destruction of document</td>
<td>376, 385</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>original not easily provable</td>
<td>376, 388</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>original public document</td>
<td>377, 388</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>where certified copy admissible</td>
<td>377, 389</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>original consisting of numerous accounts, etc</td>
<td>377, 389</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Limitation Act: acknowledgment on ancient document</td>
<td>379 443</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>where communication in violation of duty.</td>
<td>703</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Seduction—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>damages in action for</td>
<td>61, 62</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Self-acquisition—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>544, 545</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Series—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>fact forming part of: intention or accident</td>
<td>1 01</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Settlement—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof</td>
<td>531</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>&quot;Shall presume&quot;—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sheriff—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission by debtor against admissions of under-sheriff or bailiff against</td>
<td>139 139n</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Shopkeeper—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>opinion of</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Shopman—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Shorthand writer—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>note of evidence by notes of, as to what occurs at trial</td>
<td>228 350</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Signature—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>310—313, 394, 395, 396</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinction between mark and 311n</td>
<td>311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>definition of meaning of</td>
<td>401</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>comparison of</td>
<td>403—405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document admissible without proof of</td>
<td>421—432</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption in case of ancient document</td>
<td>440, 441, 443</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sign manual—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of Sovereign: judicial notice of</td>
<td>339, 342</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Signs—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>questions and, amount to verbal statement testimony by</td>
<td>200 360, 667</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Silence—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>presumption from admission by</td>
<td>45, 48, 49 653</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Similar—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>facts: evidence of, if unconnect ed excluded</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acts: evidence of, to show intent</td>
<td>94</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sleep—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission made in</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Solicitor—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Attorney.&quot; admission by</td>
<td>128, 129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot disclose professional communication</td>
<td>694</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Soliloquy—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission made in</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Loss of document—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>727</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sovereign—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>accession and sign manual of</td>
<td>339, 342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>foreign: judicial notice</td>
<td>339, 340a. 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>demise of</td>
<td>342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document forming act of author ity</td>
<td>406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of orders of</td>
<td>413</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INDEX</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Specific Relief Act—possessory suit under</td>
<td>580</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spoliation—evidence</td>
<td>603–607</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spy—not accomplice</td>
<td>712</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stamp—not required for letter containing admission</td>
<td>112n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission: invalid instrument</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document inadmissible for want of presumption as to when document</td>
<td>385</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>called for and not produced</td>
<td>439, 440</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption relating to, in case of lost document</td>
<td>440</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>want of: secondary evidence</td>
<td>456, 457n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document without: suit on consideration</td>
<td>453a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>State—proof of</td>
<td>537</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>affairs, privileged</td>
<td>692, 693</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document referring to matters of</td>
<td>784</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>State of things—meaning of</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>under which facts happened</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statement—previous. See &quot;Previous Statement.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>probability of</td>
<td>32 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by witness who cannot be called</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to, being true</td>
<td>74 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by persons not witnesses</td>
<td>190–235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as to cause of death</td>
<td>191, 194, 198–201</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Dying Declaration.&quot; made under special circumstances</td>
<td>74 Int., 236, 237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>how much of, is to be proved</td>
<td>263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statements accompanying and explaining acts—admissibility of</td>
<td>46</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statement against interest—ground of reception of</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>extension of English rule</td>
<td>193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of</td>
<td>195, 206–208</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>difference between law of India and England</td>
<td>208</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nature of the interest</td>
<td>206–210</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of entry against interest</td>
<td>208</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement must be against interest when made</td>
<td>208, 209</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement partially against</td>
<td>209</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement against pecuniary interest</td>
<td>210</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statement against interest—(contd.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement against proprietary interest</td>
<td>210, 211</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>interest in escaping criminal prosecution or suit for damages</td>
<td>211</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>whether evidence of collateral facts</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>personal knowledge unnecessary</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>need not be contemporaneous</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof</td>
<td>213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statement made in course of business—ground of reception</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of</td>
<td>201, 202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of &quot;course of business&quot;</td>
<td>203, 204</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>personal knowledge unnecessary</td>
<td>204</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>contemporaneouess not required</td>
<td>206</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>whether evidence of collateral matters</td>
<td>205</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof</td>
<td>206</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statement as to matter of public and general interest—admissibility of</td>
<td>213–216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nature of the opinion</td>
<td>213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>reputation as to particular facts</td>
<td>213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of terms, &quot;public&quot; and &quot;general&quot;</td>
<td>214</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>form of the declaration</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Lis Mota and interest&quot;</td>
<td>215, 216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statement as to relationship—must be made ante litem motam</td>
<td>216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>persons from whom receivable</td>
<td>219</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>personal knowledge unnecessary</td>
<td>220</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>need not refer to contemporaneous event</td>
<td>221</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissible as to particular facts</td>
<td>221</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Lis Mota&quot;</td>
<td>221</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Status—judgment declaring</td>
<td>267, 273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statute—public and private</td>
<td>341</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as regards</td>
<td>341</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stridhan—onus</td>
<td>545</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subject—natural distribution of</td>
<td>13 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tabular scheme of such distribution</td>
<td>16 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subornation—of evidence</td>
<td>40, 45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subnomens duces tecum—</td>
<td>T</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------------</td>
<td>---</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when necessary</td>
<td>380</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>resistance to, on ground of lien</td>
<td>381</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>required in case of strangers</td>
<td>391</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witness called on: right of counsel to appear for</td>
<td>707, 708</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning and effect of</td>
<td>720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witness attending on: cross-examination</td>
<td>744</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Succession—</td>
<td>Page.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>family</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suicide—</td>
<td>573a, 622</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption against</td>
<td>573a, 622</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suit—</td>
<td>267, 269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pending</td>
<td>269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must include whole of claim</td>
<td>269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Summons—</td>
<td>534</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>service of: onus</td>
<td>534</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to produce document</td>
<td>382</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suppression</td>
<td>603</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of evidence</td>
<td>603</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Surety—</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and principal: admission</td>
<td>133a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acknowledgment of debt</td>
<td>133a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>judgment against debtor not binding on</td>
<td>285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Surrounding circumstances—</td>
<td>450, 500, 502</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>450, 500, 502</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ambiguous document</td>
<td>661</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Secrecy—</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>promise of: confusion</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Survey—</td>
<td>222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement, on, as to public or general right</td>
<td>222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>revenue: chittah</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>officer: opinion of dharepairak</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Government map</td>
<td>253, 432</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Survey map—</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission in</td>
<td>252, 253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of</td>
<td>252, 253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>certified copy of</td>
<td>253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as evidence of possession</td>
<td>253—255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as evidence of title</td>
<td>255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidential value of chittahs</td>
<td>257, 258</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Survey officer—</td>
<td>256</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proceedings of</td>
<td>256</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Surveyor—</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of corporation: admission by report of</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Survivorship—</td>
<td>608, 619</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption</td>
<td>608, 619</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>System—</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>facts showing</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fact showing, or accident</td>
<td>101, 102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Technical expressions—</td>
<td>515, 517</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>515, 517</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Teis Khana—</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>register</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Telegram—</td>
<td>106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of, delivery of</td>
<td>106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of, contents of</td>
<td>464</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptions as to</td>
<td>626</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Telegraph—</td>
<td>438</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>message by: delivery</td>
<td>438, 439</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>contents of message</td>
<td>438, 439</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>message by: presumption</td>
<td>438, 439</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Telephone—</td>
<td>626</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>communications by</td>
<td>626</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tenancy—</td>
<td>672, 673</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>672, 673</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tenant in common—</td>
<td>131</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>131</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tenant— and landlord: proof by parol of relation</td>
<td>455, 457</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and landlord: onus</td>
<td>554—557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>enhancement of rent</td>
<td>555</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>remission</td>
<td>556</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ejectment</td>
<td>556</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>intermediate tenure</td>
<td>557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fractional portion of rent</td>
<td>557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plea of part possession</td>
<td>557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and landlord: rent-free land</td>
<td>562, 563</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and landlord: relationship: onus</td>
<td>574, 575</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>continuance of relationship</td>
<td>574</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and landlord: encroachment</td>
<td>628</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>permanent</td>
<td>629</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumptions as to holding of land</td>
<td>628—631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>holding over</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel of</td>
<td>630a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel against</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of permanent holding</td>
<td>654, 654a</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel of</td>
<td>669—679</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the relation of, with landlord 672—675</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>possession of, cannot be adverse</td>
<td>674</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel: person claiming through such tenant</td>
<td>675</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel: &quot;person claiming through landlord&quot;</td>
<td>675—677</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel: &quot;continuance of the tenancy&quot;</td>
<td>677, 678</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel: &quot;at the beginning of the tenancy&quot;</td>
<td>678</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tenente—</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion on</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of any body of men or family: opinion as to</td>
<td>315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Term</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>used in particular place or by particular people</td>
<td>316</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Territory</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>British judicial notice</td>
<td>339, 343, 594</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cession of</td>
<td>343, 594</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Testator</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>evidence of habits of</td>
<td>519n.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Testimony</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>See ‘‘Witness;’’ ‘‘Evidence.’’</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Theft</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>presumption of</td>
<td>595, 597, 598</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Thak</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>map</td>
<td>256</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>accuracy of</td>
<td>256</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>map</td>
<td>432, 473</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Thak bust</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>burden of proof</td>
<td>531</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of Act</td>
<td>1, 4, 5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>acts of ownership showing</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>assertion of : decree, evidence of</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>predecessor in, admission by</td>
<td>110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission as to, by manager of property</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>whether Bengal Land Registration register evidence of</td>
<td>249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>survey may as evidence of</td>
<td>254</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>563, 564</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>possession : evidence of</td>
<td>627</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by estoppel</td>
<td>662</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not office of estoppel to pass</td>
<td>668n.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title-deeds</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>production of, of witness not party</td>
<td>705</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Time</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of evidence as to</td>
<td>50, 51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>divisions of : judicial notice</td>
<td>339, 343</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>To begin</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>right and duty</td>
<td>525</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Tombstone</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>statements upon</td>
<td>195, 216, 217</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Tort</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>onus</td>
<td>564</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not presumed</td>
<td>613</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Torture</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>for purpose of extracting confession</td>
<td>154, 159, 159n, 160</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Trade</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>expert evidence as to matters of</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Trade-mark</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>right to use</td>
<td>672</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Trade-term</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>516, 519</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Transactions</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>statement in documents relating to : right and custom. See ‘‘Document relating to Right and Custom’’ meaning of</td>
<td>34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>facts forming part of same</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>series of</td>
<td>35, 36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>link in chain of</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>offences constituting part of same</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>touching rights and customs</td>
<td>62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>67, 68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>exclusion of evidence of unconnected</td>
<td>73 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>exception to the rule</td>
<td>73, 74 Int.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Translation</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>517, 518</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court, whether conclusive of document ordered by Court</td>
<td>784</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Treatise</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>opinion of expert expressed in</td>
<td>309</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Trespass</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>damages in action for</td>
<td>61n</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Trial</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>statements made in party’s presence during</td>
<td>49n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement of Judge as to what occurs at</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Trover</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>damages in action for</td>
<td>61n</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Trust</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>estoppel in case of</td>
<td>672</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Trustees</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>121, 133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel in case of</td>
<td>648, 649</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot set up adverse title</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| See ‘‘Fiduciary relation’’ |

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Undue influence</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>in proving confession</td>
<td>154, 155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in case of wills</td>
<td>588</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinction between, and incapacity</td>
<td>588n</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Usage</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>affecting contract</td>
<td>45n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>long, best exponent of right</td>
<td>63n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>requisites of</td>
<td>65, 66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of trade</td>
<td>66, 86, 87</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion on</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>foreign</td>
<td>300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>distinction between custom and</td>
<td>314n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion as to</td>
<td>315n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of body of men or family, opinion as to</td>
<td>315</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>U</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Usage—(cont'd.)</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>proof of</td>
<td>316, 496n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of, to affect document</td>
<td>450</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>annexed to contract: evidence</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>467, 496—499, 518</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Usage of trade—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>evidence of</td>
<td>66, 86, 87</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>resques of</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Uttering—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>counterfeit coin and forged instruments</td>
<td>88, 88n., 92n., 94, 95n., 96</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vakil—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>128, 129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>functions of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot disclose professional communication</td>
<td>694</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Pleader&quot;’s</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Value—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>opinion, evidence of</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>market, or rate</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Variance—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of document</td>
<td>466—503</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document: &quot;as between the parties&quot;</td>
<td>482</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of document: who may give evidence</td>
<td>519, 520</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vendor and purchaser—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>estoppel in case of</td>
<td>672</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Verbal acts—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>47</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>View—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>by jury, assessors and magistrate</td>
<td>795</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Village rights—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>opinion as to</td>
<td>315n.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Voire dire—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>examination on the</td>
<td>732n.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Volunteering evidence—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>striking out</td>
<td>731</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

W

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Waiver—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>in criminal cases</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See &quot;Consent;&quot; &quot;Contract&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of proof</td>
<td>337</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of objection to evidence</td>
<td>731</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Wajib-ul-Ars—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admissibility of entry in</td>
<td>246—248</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ward—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission of guardian</td>
<td>129, 130</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Warning—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>want of, does not invalidate confession</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Way-warden—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>admission by</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Weight—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>to be given to admissions and confessions</td>
<td>117, 118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of evidence of character</td>
<td>325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>due to altered document</td>
<td>572</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Wife—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>examination of, as to non-access</td>
<td>593</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>effect of admissions of, as against husband</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hindu, purchaser from representation of, as affecting husband</td>
<td>647n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of party to suit: competent</td>
<td>687</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>competency of, in criminal action</td>
<td>687</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>communications during marriage</td>
<td>590—692</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Will—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>of man to speak the truth on what it depends</td>
<td>32 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of disposing mind</td>
<td>40, 40a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>relating to affairs of family, statement in relation to transaction</td>
<td>195, 217, 196, 222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>under sec. 13</td>
<td>222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement in, as to public or general right</td>
<td>222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>certified copy, of not public record</td>
<td>248</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hindu executor</td>
<td>276</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of mark to</td>
<td>311n., 312a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>secondary evidence of</td>
<td>386</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>attestation of</td>
<td>397, 398, 399</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proved by probate</td>
<td>412, 452, 464</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>construction of</td>
<td>452, 520</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of surrounding circumstances</td>
<td>501, 502</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ambiguity in</td>
<td>508</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>latent ambiguity</td>
<td>515</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence of, habits of testator</td>
<td>519</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>onus of proving</td>
<td>564—567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>quantum of evidence to prove</td>
<td>564</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inofficious</td>
<td>565a.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>revocation of</td>
<td>566</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>impeaching onus</td>
<td>566</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>attesting witness repudiating</td>
<td>567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of due execution</td>
<td>565</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof of execution of</td>
<td>565</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>proof in solemn form</td>
<td>567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>interest to contest</td>
<td>567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>probate proceedings do not determine title</td>
<td>567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>void for fraud, coercion, improbability</td>
<td>588</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption of knowledge of contents</td>
<td>582</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bequest in satisfaction of debt</td>
<td>622</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>estoppel from disputing</td>
<td>660</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Withdrawal of witnesses—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Court directing</td>
<td>725</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Without prejudice—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>communication</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admissions</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission without</td>
<td>146, 147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of</td>
<td>146a.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Witness—</th>
<th>Page.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>weighed not numbered</td>
<td>5 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grounds for believing</td>
<td>32 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and disbelieving</td>
<td>32 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>experience the only quide on the subject</td>
<td>32</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>conspiring to give false evidence</td>
<td>33 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement by, who can't be called</td>
<td>74 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rules as to examination of statement of</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>demeanour of</td>
<td>12, 15, 20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>giving hearsay should be stopped</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence, of, or affidavit ordinarily not receivable against party in subsequent proceedings</td>
<td>110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement by persons who cannot be called as</td>
<td>190—235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dead</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cannot be found</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>incapable of giving evidence</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kept out of the way</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>whose attendance cannot be procured without delay or expense</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>statement of, to police-officer not public record</td>
<td>247</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>must generally speak only to facts</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion of</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>expert not called as: opinion of character of</td>
<td>322</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>atesting</td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>who is competent to attest</td>
<td>399</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>comparison of writing by</td>
<td>404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>deposition of, public document</td>
<td>410</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>presumption as to accuracy of record of what, said</td>
<td>424</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>provisions as to, and examination</td>
<td>523</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>examination of, on oath</td>
<td>523</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cited, and not examined, presumption of</td>
<td>604</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sent by police presumably under restraint</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of</td>
<td>682—684</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>competency and compellability of</td>
<td>682, 683, 684, 720, 732</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>who may testify</td>
<td>684—686</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>diseased in body or mind</td>
<td>685</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>drunken</td>
<td>685</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>accused cannot be examined as</td>
<td>685</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Witness—(cont'd.)</td>
<td>Page.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>juror, assessor</td>
<td>686</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>executor</td>
<td>686</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>advocate and</td>
<td>686</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dumb</td>
<td>687</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>party to civil suit</td>
<td>687, 688</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>matrimonial proceedings</td>
<td>687, 688</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not party, production of title deeds</td>
<td>705</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>liability of, for failure to give evidence</td>
<td>707</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>inculminating question</td>
<td>710</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>number of witnesses</td>
<td>717, 719</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>attendance of, procedure</td>
<td>720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>examination of, considered generally</td>
<td>726</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>freedom from arrest</td>
<td>721, 722</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>non-attendance: liability to damages</td>
<td>722</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>recognisance taken from</td>
<td>721</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>freedom from police-restrain</td>
<td>721</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>privilege in respect of evidence given by</td>
<td>722</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>calling after close of case</td>
<td>723</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>recalling</td>
<td>723</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>right of accused to have witness examined de novo</td>
<td>723</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court cannot refuse to examine</td>
<td>724</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>exclusion of, from Court room</td>
<td>725</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>confrontation of</td>
<td>725</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>order of production and examination of</td>
<td>725, 726, 729—744</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>examination-in-chief of</td>
<td>732</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cross-examination of</td>
<td>734</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>corroboration of</td>
<td>734</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dying or falling ill before cross-examination</td>
<td>736</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>re-examination of</td>
<td>743</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>examination of, by mistake 737—738 to character</td>
<td>744</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>while being examined may be asked whether contract, etc., in writing</td>
<td>749</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>document shown to: inspection</td>
<td>753</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when compelled to answer</td>
<td>753—756</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>question as to credit of</td>
<td>753—758</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cross-examination of own</td>
<td>761—765</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>impeachment of</td>
<td>763—765</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>convicted of crime</td>
<td>768</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not impartial</td>
<td>768</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>unworthy of credit</td>
<td>765</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bribed</td>
<td>765</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>corroboration of</td>
<td>772—776</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>called by Court</td>
<td>783</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>questions put to, by Judge</td>
<td>789</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Word</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion as to meaning of</td>
<td>316</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of: judicial notice</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>meaning of, used in peculiar sense</td>
<td>515—519</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Workman—</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion of</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>World—</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>lesson from observation of the</td>
<td>19 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>geographical division of</td>
<td>330, 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Writing—</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when exclusive evidence</td>
<td>76, 77 Int.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>opinion of Native Judge on native writing</td>
<td>404n.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>comparison of</td>
<td>402—406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Writing—(contd.)</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>when required for agreements and conveyances</td>
<td>460</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence given in</td>
<td>687</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>evidence as to matters in</td>
<td>749, 750</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cross-examination as to previous statements in</td>
<td>750—753</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Written statement—</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>admission in</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>not public document</td>
<td>410</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Zemindar—
admission by | 135

See "Landlord;" "Tenant;" "Land"